Adam was like him when he became a living soul; Jesus was like him when on earth, and at his right hand; and all that fall asleep in Jesus with all that have fallen asleep in him in ages past, and those who are faithful and living when he comes will "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," to be like him and be with him forever more.

SOUTH-WESTERN IOWA CAMP MEETING.

According to previous appointment, the Saints of south-western Iowa began to assemble at Wheelers Grove, Pottawattamie Co, Iowa, as early as Thursday, Sept.,

29th, to begin the 31st.

On the evening of the 30th a good number assembled at their large tent and enjoyed a season of prayer and testimony. At 10 o'clock a. m. Saturday, August 31st, the meeting was called to order by Bro. D. Hougas, and by prevailing motions the following appointments were made: Presidents, Brn. H. Kemp and H. N. Hansen; secretary and chorister, Bro. T. A. Hougas; organists, Srs. N. Shields and W. L. Andrews. After this, short and encouraging talks were given by Brn. Blair, Lambert and others.

At 2:30 p. m. Bro. H. O. Smith spoke on "Efficiency of work by co-operation," followed by Bro. D. Hougas. At 7:45 p. m. Bro. R. M. Elvin spoke on "The truth revealed to His servants the prophets."

On Sunday morning, Sept. 1st, a season of prayer and testimony was enjoyed in charge of Bro. H. N. Hansen, and at 10: 45 Bro. J. R. Lambert spoke enthusiastically to a large and attentive audience on the subject "The gospel as a means of salvation." At 2: 30 p. m. Bro. W. W. Blair spoke on, "Why we are here," or, "The apostacy of the church and the restoration of the gospel." At 7:45 Bro. R. M. Elvin spoke on the subject "Christ the light of the world." A peaceful, quiet spirit prevailed and good audience was given throughout the day. Thus closed a beautiful, profitable and enjoyable Sabbath for the Saints; one which will not be soon forgotten, and one whose influence will not be unfelt.

On Monday the 2d the morning social services were conducted till nearly noon. A portion of the Spirit was here enjoyed and all departed feeling the better for having been there. At 2:30 p. m. Bro. H. O. Smlth occupied the stand, speaking on "What shall I do to be saved." At 7: 45 p. m. Bro. W. W. Blair spoke on "What is there for the righteous, both in this world and in the word to come."

Tuesday 3d: At 9 a. m. prayer and testimony meeting in charge of Bro. H. Kemp; at 10:45 Bro. H. N. Hansen spoke on "The gospel of the kingdom preached as a sign of the end;" 2:30 p. m. Bro. H. Kemp spoke on "Nevertheless the foundation standeth sure," and at 7:45 Bro. J. R. Lambert occupied the stand; subject, "The necessity of obedience to God."

Wednesday 4th: Prayer service in charge of Bro. H. Kemp; afternoon preaching by Bro. R. M. Elvin on "Spiritual blindness." Afternoon: at 2: 30 Bro. J. R. Lambert spoke on "Faithful works." Evening 7:45 Bro. H. O. Smith spoke on "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Friday 6th: Prayer service in charge of Bro. H. Kemp, followed at 10:45 by Bro. H. O. Smith on "the Christian re-At 2: 30 Bro. H. N. Hansen spoke on "testimony of the birth of Christ;" and at 8:30 p. m. Bro. R. M. Elvin spoke on "the true church an apostolic church."

Saturday 7th: Prayer service in charge of H, Kemp. At 10:45 Bro. R. M. Elvin spoke on "the necessity and continuation of revelation;" and at 2:30 Bro. H. O. Smith spoke on "Infidelity, reality of miracles, etc.," followed at 7:45 by Bro. J. R. Lambert on "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God."

Sunday 8th: Another beautiful Sabbath dawned and bade fair to be the "biggest" day of all; and it was. Before nine o'clock people began to pour in and by noon the grove was well nigh filled. The crowd kept unusually quiet for its size, but the inevitable noise, as is always the case, detracted more or less from the usual good order. At nine o'clock a season of prayer and testimony was enjoyed in charge of Bro. M. W. Gaylord. At 11 Bro. J. R. Lambert spoke from Acts 4: 11, 12. Subject, "salvation." At 2:30 p. m. Bro. R. M. Elvin spoke from John 10:16. "There shall be one fold and one shepherd." At 7:45 Bro. J. R. Lambert gave a mild but very positive defense of the history and faith of the church. The choir in charge of Bro. Hougas then arose and sang "God be with you till we meet again," and after the closing announcements were made all sang "Going home to-morrow," and were dismissed. Thus closed not only a good day but also a good session of nine days of heavenly feasting. All enjoyed the meeting very much, and many regretted that the close had come.

Five united with the church and others are almost persuaded. The preaching generally was very satisfactory, and, though in one or two instances it was as harsh as it was vindictive, it is hoped and believed that ultimately great good will come of the meetings.

On Monday morning the "cotton village" was razed and the parting hand was shaken to meet again, if not in this world, in the world where there are no more "good byes."

THERE IS A GOD.

In this age of reason when the religious thoughts of men are ofttimes in a mist of doubts and fears because of the theories had among men as to the existence of an Allwise, Almighty power, called God, it may be well worth our while to consider this question, for if we can establish in our minds the idea that there is a great, allwise Father, who is the Creator and sustainer of all things, then we have a sure foundation for our faith and hopes to build upon.

Let us consider this question with an eye single to truth, laying aside all foolish notions and prejudice: What is truth? Things just as they have been, as they are, or will be. The plain facts of anything are truth in its simplicity; and the more we are free from prejudice and bigotry, the more brightly will the truth of all things shine in on our understanding.

It is true that there are but few men who are entirely free from all taint of bigotry, but lest some may think otherwise, let them try this test: Can you listen to an argument against your faith with no more feeling of offense than when your faith is advocated? Can you hear your own doctrines, opinions, theories and creeds discussed as freely as those of your neighbors, without the least feeling of resentment? If so you are not a bigot.

The men and women of this world may be divided on this question, as are the believers and unbelievers. Those who believe there is no God say that things always were and will so remain; that we come to this earth through the agency of our progenitors, live as best we can until we die, and that is the last there is of us.

Those who believe there is a God say he has a watchful eye over all; that he gave unto men the right to live, to choose to do good or evil as it best pleases themselves while life remains, and that each and all of us will have to give an account to God for our acts, and will have a reward or punishment in a life beyond the grave. But belief is of no use-except to the believer unless he can produce proof of the correctness of his belief which would be satisfactory to the understanding of others; so it is that each and all have a perfect right to believe or disbelieve as they please, but a belief for or against, never changes the facts in the case.

Then the question is, how do men learn there is a God? We answer: first by tradition. Away in the dim and distant past there has come to us the tradition that once upon a time there were men that talked with God; and they have told their children, and so on it has been told from parent to children, until we have heard it in our day and age; and it is said to be had among all tribes and nation of men that there is a Great Spirit who has power over all things. And there is an inborn feeling that prompts them to worship in some way or manner, and the rude Barbarians and Indians have traditions of this Great Spirit; that in a land beyond the sunset there is a happy hunting ground for the good and brave. And we may also believe it; but to our minds it is so vague and indistinct that we again ask, How do men learn there is a God? and again we answer, Men by reason learn that there is a God.

We look around and see and learn of this wonderful earth, and of the many strange, useful and beautiful things thereon for the good of living beings and creatures that dwell upon it, and we say those things never came by chance! Nay, here is understanding and a design, and the wisdom of an All-wise, bountiful Father made plainly manifest unto us all; for we know that all we have and possess does not come by chance; the houses we live in, the food we eat, the clothing we wear, the tools we work with; in short, all and everything that man has and does make for good, shows his skill and intelligence in its construction.

On the banks of the river stands a large building. We enter and we see many wheels, belts and machines in motion. We see men moving to and fro, busy at work. They are covered with a white dust, and all the place has a dusty appearance. What kind of a place is it? We say it is a flour mill, and although we have not known the builder or him who has drawn the plans, yet we will not say such a place as this came by chance, for we can see that it was designed with an end in view; and that end was to grind wheat into flour that mankind may have the wherewith to make bread to eat and live. We also see that it can not run by chance; that skill and wisdom are needed to keep it in order, that the end in view may be accomplished.

And so we reason about our beautiful Mother Earth; that there must be a great All-wise, almight power who upholds and sustains; for there is the regular return of the seasons—Spring with its mantle of green the fields adorning, the leaves and blossoms on the trees, the flowers o'er vale and woodland, the birds of song, and many other things untold. Then there is Summer with its many beauties; Autumn with its golden grains and many useful fruits; Winter with its beautiful snows and hoary frosts, telling us of a surety that there is One who cares for all.

What wonderful wisdom is there revealed to us in what is known as the "balance" of nature; that the animal kingdom gives of that which goes to sustain the vegetable, while the vegetable returns to the air or water that which restores or purifies, so that life can be sustained. What wonders in the sciences of geology, chemistry and astronomy, which truly tell us there is a God; yet all this but declares his glory, his almighty power, and showeth his handiwork.

But it reveals not God, nay, man can not reveal God; tradition and reason may and do surely tell us of God, but of that God none can learn, unless God does reveal himself. Then again we may ask, how do men learn there is a God? and we must reply, God reveals himself to man!

Yes, it has been so, all down through the ages, that whatever man has known or learned of God it was so in the days of Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Samuel, and of all the other men of Bible history who were called of God to declare His mind and will unto the children of men. So it was in Book of Mormon history; God revealed himself to Lehi, Nephi, Jacob, Benjamin, Mosiah, Alma, Helaman, Samuel, and many others; always giving them commandments, which, if they would obey, would give them peace and comfort in this life, and life eternal in that world which is to come.

Men say that God did reveal himself over eighteen hundred years ago, but that now he does not. If he does not now, how do they know he revealed himself at any time or in any age in the past? Surely, if he did give revelations in the past, he can to-day. "Nay," say the wise men of the world, "not to-day; revelations from God are no longer needed, so we do not believe it." Ah! that is the keynote-you do not believe it-but does a belief for or against ever change the facts of the declaration, no matter how strange, foolish or inconsistent they may appear to us? We will give one illustration from nature: Let us, in supposition, go to the tropical parts of the earth, on the banks of the river, and tell the hoary-headed sire who has lived and dwelt thereon all his life-time, that in our country at certain times of the year the water of our rivers become hard and solid on its surface, and so strong that at times a horse and wagon can travel over it in safety. Should he reply, "I have lived here all my life and I am old and gray, but I never saw water solid; such a story I won't believe; it is too much against the laws of nature, as I have learned." Yet we who live in another zone know that water sometimes becomes solid in winter, no matter how ridiculous that fact may appear to one who lives in a tropical region.

Again let us illustrate: See that orb of day, the sun. Men say that it is a great gaseous body, far distant in space ninetyfive millions of miles; that it is five hundred times larger than the earth and all the planetary system in connection with it. They also tell us that the lamp of night, the moon, is a burned out cinder, two hundred and forty thousand miles away; that it reflects a borrowed light. They say those starry lights are worlds much like our own, though some are smaller, others larger; while some are distant suns around which are supposed to revolve other planetary systems. Ask any man of common sense if he believes all this to be true, and he will be likely to answer "yes." and would laugh to scorn any one who says he does not so believe. Does he know it? Nay, he can not even give any good reason why he believes it, but he is willing to believe the word of the astronomers, and would send an unbeliever to them, in full confidence that they could tell him of their ways of learning the truth of what they teach; yet it is not very long since they who first taught the present system or astronomy were considered as false teachers, and were made to recant because it did not please the religious teachers, who seemingly had set themselves to destroy truth from the knowledge of mankind, no matter wherein found, that they might better deceive and hold the people in subjection to their foolish creeds and notions; but the science of astronomy has stood the test so well, and men have come to such great knowledge therein, that they can say, with the psalmist, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork." And this has led men to seek after a better knowledge of God; yes, men have desired to learn of God for themselves; and there are many men who claim the knowledge of God, through revelation, in this day and age.

The claims of three of them we will consider. Two by the name of Gardner and Finney desired to know and learn of God for themselves, that they might know of a surety that there was a God. And their testimony is that they did learn of God through revelation, and that he gave them much peace and comfort of soul, so that they turned from ways of infidelity and became good, moral living men and teachers of righteousness. The third was that most remarkable character, by name Joseph Smith. He says he was disturbed about religious matters and the divisions among Christians, all claiming to be the Church of Christ, yet all denying each other as the true church. He desired to know of God which of all the churches was right. And he said that God appeared unto him and said that the churches had all gone astray, that their teachers were false, that his laws had been broken, and that they were teaching for doctrine the commandments of men; but that he would appoint him, and sent an angel to teach and instruct him in the gospel of Christ, and that he was authorized to set in order the Church of Christ as it was in days of old. But men are not so willing to believe such claims as they are to believe the astronomers; nay, not even religious men; yet we may ask, should it be thought a thing so strange? And while we are very willing to take the word of the astronomers, what good reason have we to reject the word of those who say that they have seen and communed with God? Is it not a matter of much more importance than the science of astronomy inasmuch as the claim is made that the mind and will of the great Eternal has been revealed to the children of men, even in this day and age of the world?

But says the doubter and unbeliever, "How did they do or act to obtain such knowledge?" They all testify that they went to the woods and prayed to God in faith, believing that He would hear and answer their prayers. The idea! As if a man could learn anything by talking among the trees! Yes, to the natural man this is a strange thing, yet not so strange as it seems, for men do just as strange things every day. For who is he that should wish to at once communicate with a friend at a distance but what will go the nearest telegraph office and instruct the operator what he desires to say to his friend; and when the answer is received, though it may not be what he would expect, he will not doubt in the least the answer or words of the operator.

Men doubt the existence of a God, because they see him not. Whoever sees the air? and yet what power it has in a storm, hurling hither and thither, oftimes to destruction that which was considered strong and substantial. We see our own acts; we know there is a power that moves our bodies at our will, and herein we must admit that the unseen is the real. There is also a power that upholds and sustains all things. This is admitted to be the great Unseen, and if mankind is His offspring, is it not reasonable to suppose that there would be some means of communication with Him, if men so desired?

We see the smiling and productive fields of the farm, though we may not know nor see the farmer; yet because we saw him not we would not say that no one owned, or had caused those fields to be seeded, or cultivated. We may go to the capital city of the state and see and know many men, and yet not see and know the governor of the state; but we would not say there was not such a man. It would be so should we visit the cities of Washington or London; we could live therein for days and years, and yet never see President nor Queen unless we wished to visit or had business with them; and then we would have to visit in the order of the establishment, and observe all the manners and customs necessary to obtain admission to their presence. So then it must be with God; and since men have learned of God, it should not be a matter of denial, but of interst to all mankind, that all may learn of Him and come to a knowledge of God for themselves. For when we consider the conflict of opinions that are to-day among the children of men, it is really most needful that men should know of a surety that there is a God who is indeed the same yesterday, today and forever. And since the ways and means are so simple, who is he who may not know and learn of God, if he so will, that the truth be established without a doubt. There is a God, and the only true way to learn of Him is by revelation.

RAPID TRANSIT.

In studying the prophecies of the old testament and in presenting the gospel, the caption of this article is frequently considered. One of the promises of what God will do is: "And he [God] will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth; and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly."—Isa. 5: 26.

The mode of travel at the time that

Isaiah gave this prophecy, was for the people to walk, and to ride animals such as the camel, horse and ass, or upon the water in boats propelled by either the oar or the wind; therefore to increase a day's travel would necessitate an extra tax upon man or beast. Speed conveys the idea of more than a common or usual day's journey, and when we compound "speed" with "swiftly," it at once indicates some other means of transit than was known at the time of the prophecy. Nahum tells us when we may expect this transit with "speed swiftly;" namely, "in the day of his [God's] preparation." Then shall the means of transit—"the chariots—run like the lightnings."

The fastest time claimed to have been made by any railroad train is one hundred miles in one hour, and that only for a short distance. Here is a late account of eighty-five miles in eighty-two minutes: "The New York delegation of the Ancient Order of Foresters lately arrived at Minneapolis to attend the National convention there. They traveled in a special train and on one part of the journey made the remarkable speed of eighty-five miles in eighty-two minutes, or at the rate of over sixty-two miles per hour."—Scientific American, August 24th, 1889, p. 116.

Here is another account of rapid transit, from the same paper: "A quick trip from Japan. A consignment of silk and first-crop teas, occupying sixteen cars, arrived in New York on July 29th, from Yokohama, via steamship to Vancouver, B. C., and trans-continental rail route to New York. The total distance was nearly eight thousand miles, and it took twenty-one days to accomplished it, including a delay of about one day in loading on the cars on Vancouver."—Ibid, p. 117.

Latter Day Saints believe and preach that when John the Baptist appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, in May, 1829, and commissioned them to preach the gospel, that was the setting up of the ensign foretold by Isaiah. In 1829 the opportunities of going with "speed swiftly," were no improvement upon the times of Isaiah, save a limited and undeveloped transit upon the water. But consider in the light of facts and figures the astounding and gigantic development and success that has been accomplished since the baptism of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cow-

"Sixty years ago railroads were unknown in this country, and the population of the United States consisted of 12,000,-000 people. To-day we operate upwards of 165,000 miles of railroad, and our population has increased to 60,000,000. Sixty years ago the aggregate wealth of the United States was less than $1,000,000,000; at present it is estimated at $56,000,000,000. Over our 165,000 miles of railroad there was carried last year 475,000,000 people, and 600,000,000 tons of freight were transported. Upon these lines are engaged 1,000,000 employes. Their equipment consists of 30,000 locomotives, 21,000 passenger cars, 7,000 baggage cars, and one million freight cars. The capital invested in construction and equipment amounts to $8,000,000,000, and the yearly disbursements for labor and supplies exceeds $600,000,000."—Scientific American.

These stupendous figures daze the mind, for had we all the locomotives and cars coupled together, it would make a continuous train of about 3,306 miles.

In connection with this read the blessings of Joseph in Genesis 49: 22-46; Deut. 33: 13-17. Accepting America as Joseph's portion of the earth, we have much to make us rejoice, and a clear evidence of why the United States is fast becoming the first nation of the earth. Let Ephram's sons be glad and go with "speed swiftly" to proclaim in all the world the gladsome news of what the wonder-working God is doing, that His purposes may ripen fast, and the "rest" of the earth and of His people be obtained.

THE WORDS OF THE MOUTH.

"O GENERATION of vipers, how can ye being evil, speak good things. For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."—Matt. 12: 34.

According to this principle uttered by Christ, the words of the mouth tell what is in the heart. If your words express fear and hesitation about committing yourself and your ways fully to God, then your heart is fearful and doubt is in your hearts. If your words are the utterance of complaint and murmuring, if you are continually or frequently talking about your troubles and trials, and your miserable lot; then the thoughts of the heart are fixed on these subjects. If you are talking about yourself, your friends, your families, your business, or about such trifling nothings as continually fall on the ears, in society and even on the way to and from religious exercises, then self is uppermost in your hearts, save when the thoughts wander from one vain thing to another.

The heart must be thoroughly changed to have the words of the mouth helpful to your fellow-men and good in the ears of When it is thoroughly changed, Jesus is in the thoughts, God's word is the subject of meditation, the thoughts do not wander; and then you will talk without fear and to edification.

The prayer of David was hence a very practical one, when he said: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer." When it is the prayer of faith, as that is our privilege, then speedily you will speak words acceptable to God; and they will be easily spoken because the meditations of the heart have been on Him, His Word and ways. Just stop and think what the use is of going on to pray such a prayer if it be not the prayer of faith. If you do not wish your meditations and words to be acceptable to God, why ask it? and if you really desire it why not realize it? for "If ye, then, being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that

Many hesitate about confining their, speech to lines of usefulness and wisdom lest their friends consider them peculiar or too religious, or it may be, call them a little daft from too much study of the Bible. If so, remember how Paul answered such an accusation: "I am not mad most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness." None know so well as those who thus know the Lord, that such words are the words of truth and soberness or soundness of mind. Praise God for the consciousness He gives us that He gives the inclination to speak and love for just such words.

For we can not but speak the things that we have seen and heard." The Lord has opened our mental vision to the meaning of his word, and we see Jesus as we read and yield obedience to it. Then we can not but speak of it. We have heard the still small voice, and His stately steppings, and we know the voice was His, for "My sheep know my voice." And it is so sweet, so soothing, so tender, so comforting, so heavenly; we must mention what we heard. Have you seen and heard Him? Glory to God that you have.

"Be thou an example of the believers in word." It is your privilege to speak such words as will always be helpful to somebody, cheering, comforting, uplifting, and without any self commendation. It is the Spirit of God that has possession and full control of all the thoughts, and out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh. A minister of the gospel, an ambas-sador from the court of heaven, was not commissioned to talk any gossip or foolishness. Those things are not spoken from a heart filled with Jesus. "When I was a child, or babe, I spake as a babe, I understood as a babe; but when I became a man, I put away the things of a babe." We may well ask the question in these days-When do we become men and women in Christ, judging from the words of the mouths of professing Christians? "Quit ve like men."

"Wherefore I give you to understand that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."

"Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost?" If the Holy Ghost be in you, you have the Divine nature, and your tongue is controlled by it. Then you speak out of the abundance of your hearts, and say "Jesus! My Lord! Abba Father! Glory to God in the highest." It is the province of the Spirit to testify of Jesus, and He never produces hesitation and fear in so addressing Him, and speaking of Him. "For God has not given us the spirit of fear, but of power and of love, and of a sound mind." Hallelujah! Dear reader! Unless you are able to say, "Jesus is my Lord" with all the affection of your heart, soul, mind and strength, and with the consciousness that you are body, soul and spirit, tongue, time, property, reputation, all His; there is something more yet, to know concerning Him. When you know him to such an extent that the spirit will constrain you willingly to call him Lord, you will not be ashamed of being called a fanatic, or peculiar for His name's sake. Hallelujah

And when the Holy Spirit is in you, filling you full with Himself and His fruit, you will, like Paul and Barnabas at Iconium, so speak out of the abundance of the heart that a multitude will believe. Oh! Glory to God for the freedom of utterance that comes through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. Then "we believe, and therefore speak." What are you thinking about most these days. It is known by the subjects concerning which you are most ready to converse.

How glad I am that my tongue and pen belong wholly to Jesus! Bless the Lord! Oh my soul, and all that is within me bless

His holy name.—Sel.

TICKETS TO RE-UNION.

CHICAGO, Sept. 17, 1889.

Rev. G. A. Blakeslee, Galien, Mich.

Dear Sir:-In regard to your application for reduction in fare in favor of persons attending the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints' Reunion Camp Meeting, to be held in Council Bluffs, [Missouri Valley,—ED] Iowa, on October 4-20 I have pleasure in advising you that the and one-third for the round trip, rate of a fare upon the certificate plan, from Association points has been agreed upon by the [following] railways: Chicago & Alton Railroad, Chicago & North-Western, Chicago, Burlington & Northern, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, Chicago, Milwau-kee & St. Paul, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago St. Paul, Minn. & Omaha, Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City. Chicago, Santa Fe & California, Green Bay, Winona & St. Paul Hannibal & St. Joseph, Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs, Illinois Central, Milwaukee & Northern, Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western, Minneapolis & St. Louis, Missouri Pacific, Rock Island & Peoria, Sioux City & Pacific, St. Louis, Keokuk & North-Western, Wabash Railroad, and Wisconsin Central Lines.

Certificates to be signed by yourself. act information as to the manner in which the business will be transacted by each line designated by check mark, and particularly as to the junction points via. which it will arrange to grant the reduction, please communicate with the General Ticket or Passenger Agent.

On the certificate plan, as in use on most of the roads in the territory of this Association, the passenger pays full fare in going to the meet ing, and secures a certificate (or receipt) therefor from the ticket agent, by request, at the time of purchase, and this certificate (or receipt), when countersigned by the proper official at the meeting, becomes authority for the sale of a return ticket over the same road, between same points, at one-third fare, thus making one fare and a third for the round trip. Where the journey is made over more than one line, it is frequetly necessary for the passenger to purchase separate local ticket, and procure certificate thereof for each of the lines in this territory over which he travels in going to the meeting, as many of these lines do not honor the certificate of any other line. Passengers should therefore ascertain from the ticket agent what portion of their journey can be covered by the certificate procurable of him, and purchase tickets and secure certificates filled in accordingly.

Failure to procure or present certificate invalidates any claim for reduction in return fare.

The tickets purchased for going passage may be either unlimited or limited, according to rate paid or regulations in effect on the line over which it reads; but the return tickets sold at the reduced fare will, in all cases, be limited to continuous passage.

Certificates will not be honored for return tickets at reduced rates unless presented within three days after the date of adjournment of the meeting (Sunday not being accounted a day), nor will cer tificates be honored in cases where going tickets were purchased more than three days prior to the commencement of the meeting.

Respectfully, F. THOMPSON, Secretary.

BORN.

Schenck.—Near Macedonia, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, August 13th, 1889, to Bro. Robert S. and Sr. Eliza B. Schenck, a son; blessed at the Wheeler's Grove camp meeting, September 6th, 1889, under the hands of Elders Robert M. Elvin and Henry Kemp, and named Robert Orval.

CLARK.—Near Henderson, Mills county, Iowa, December 23d, 1887, to John T. and Orpha I. Clark, a son; blessed at the Wheeler's Grove camp meeting, September 8th, 1889, under the hands of Elders Robert M. Elvin and Henry Kemp, and named John Perry. Parents baptized September 9th.

Nanny.—To Bro. John and Mrs. Sarah Nanny, of Coal Hill, Arkansas, September 7th, 1889, a son, named Benjamin Edgar.

DIED

SEVILLE.—At his home, Birmingham, England, Elder John Seville, aged 73 years and 8 months, of natural decay. He died May 29th, 1889, and was buried at Wilton cemetery, Birmingham. Bro. Seville was baptized in the Brighamite Church by a Robert Jones, at Bag-hill, North Wales, November 12th, 1848, and was ordained an elder in that body August 12th, 1849. He proved himself a dauntless expositor of the gospel of Jesus, and in consequence met with much persecution. Like many others of that day he caught the spirit of gathering, and set out for Utah on board the "John Bright," in the spring of 1866. He did not accomplish the full journey by reason of falling sick, and stayed at Nebraska City, at which place he heard of the Reorganized church. He hailed the new light and on the 8th of July, 1866 was led again into the waters of baptism by Bro. C. Elvin, and was ordained an elder by J. M. Rush on the same date. He left America for his home in England in September, 1866, having been absent therefrom about five months. As a minister of Christ he has ever been earnest and devoted, showing by example the renovating power of the gospel. In 1868 at a conference of the English mission, presided over by Bro. J. W. Briggs, he was appointed to labor in Stafford. In 1870, the late Bro. Josiah Ells appointed him to labor in South Wales, and after a short time he returned to Stafford. His labors in the latter place at length bore fruit and he had the pleasure of seeing a branch of the church organized there in the early part of 1874, he being chosen president of the same. He removed from Stafford to Birmingham in April, 1879, where he resided up to the time of his death. Bro. John Seville was a noble saint, a good brother, a kind father, a loving husband, a true citizen, and an example in the Church of God. By virtue of his faith, and the word of his testimony he proved himself an example in life and faithful in death, leaving a character untarnished by wilful sin, and an exemplary reputation. His body was borne to the grave by six of the brethren who had loved him in life for his noble qualities. The funeral service was conducted by Elder C. H. Caton both in the cemetery chapel and at the grave side, where about fifty brethren and sisters had assembled to pay their last respects to our brother. Funeral sermon was preached in the saints meeting-room, Temple Row, Birmingham, June 16th, 1889, by Elder C. H. Caton.

y Elder C. H. Caton.
A righteous man, a man of worth,
A father and a friend,
Has left the narrow sphere of earth,
His upward course to trend.
With dignity he filled the sphere
Allotted him below—
His presence seemed an influence here,
To wisdom's genial flow.
But now his noble form must lie,
And slumber in the dust,
While he with honor joins the high Assemblies of the just.

E. A. WEBB.

SPRUCE.—At Denver, Colorado, September 10th, 1889, Evelyn, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. Benjamin Spruce, aged 7 months and 27 days -their only child.

eir only child.

Mourn not, dear parents, for your child,
So pure, so gentle, undefiled.

Though hard it was from her to part,
Her's is by far the happier lot,
From sin and suffering now set free,
Her portion with the Lord to be;
Though great thy love for her had grown,
His love exceedeth far thine own.
Then rest assured the Lord knew best,
Your little one is greatly blest.
Then let this thought your anguish still,
That he who chasteneth loves you still.
If the Master could not perfect be Except through suffering, how can we?
Then, let us, like unto the Son,
Say Father, may thy will be done!

VOYCE.—At Gravois, Missouri, August 29th, Sr. Ann Voyce, aged 85 years. She joined the church in Gloucestershire, England, in 1840, and came to this country and joined the Reorganized Church in 1874. She died as she had lived, a faithful Latter Day Saint, and now awaits the resurrection morn. Services at the house and grave by Elder Noah N. Cooke.

He is an heir, a child of God.

IMMORTALITY OF ANIMALS.

Nor is this belief in the future existence of dumb animals confined to savage and barbarous peoples, but has been taught and believed among the best and most enlightened of mankind in all nations and all ages. We find it in the writings nations and all ages. of the immortal Homer and the later Greeks, the Romans and other enlightened people; we read of the faithful hound of the wandering king Ulysses, the famous charger of Alexander; the historic horse of Caligula, and various other dumb animals who have been the companions, friends and benefactors of man, and some of whom in ages past have been almost deified by grateful and admiring multitudes.

Not a few of the early Christians believed in a future existence for dumb animals, as shown by the great historian, Gibbon. The belief was quite common in the early ages of the Church that God sent angels in the form of birds to aid and console those who suffered for the faith. is related in Holy Writ that Elisha was fed by ravens sent from God, and Peter, the great Christian hermit who preceded Anthony in the desert, is said to have been sustained for years by the same means. Instances of this belief among the early Christians can be multiplied.

It is well known that St. Francis at a later date gathered beasts and birds about him and called them his brothers. The great Dr. Johnson bethem his brothers. The great Dr. Johnson believed in a future existence for dumb animals; also the poets Wordsworth, and Shelley, and Coleridge, as shown in his celebrated poem, the "Ancient Mariner." #### OUR TRIP TO ILLINOIS.

HAVING made a two-weeks' trip into western Illinois, attending conferences at Buffalo Prairie, Mercer county, and Adrian, Hancock county, we take pleasure in assuring the Saints that the Lord is blessing his people in those localities and moving their neighbors to inquire after the doctrine and history of their church.

The business meetings of both conferences were marked with unity and christian love. The attendance at preaching services was large, and at times overflowing. The best of attention was paid to the ministers' efforts, and a goodly number accepted the glad tidings and united with the church. The ministry, generally, gave evidence of renewed determination to magnify their callings and work so far as they can find opportunity.

The financial condition of these districts needs prompt improvement, for the Lord has ordained that the gospel "laborer is worthy of his hire," (Jesus, in Luke 10: 7); and Paul the apostle says, I Corinthians 9: 9-14:

"For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written: that he that plougheth should plough in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope. If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things? If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless we have not used this power: but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ. Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple, and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

He further says:

"Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine. For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And the laborer is worthy of his reward."-1 Tim. 5: 17, 18.

Those in charge of branches, districts, and missions, should see that proper steps are taken at once to carry into effect the letter and spirit of these essential teachings that the work of the Lord be not hindered but helped promptly and steadily forward. It ought to be esteemed not only a pleasant duty, but a highly prized privilege to assist financially in sending abroad the gospel of Christ and building up his church in its power, dominion and glory. Christ has said, "It is your Father's good pleasure to give unto you the kingdom;" and having such an important and sacred trust committed unto them, the Saints should be vigilant and dutiful, seeking ev ery lawful, honorable, proper means to forward its interests in all its departments. And among the first things to be looked after are the proper needs and wants of "those who labor in word and doctrine" in the missionary field, and also those of their dependent families, and all this as wisdom, economy and good order shall di-These are matters in which there should be neither delays, carelessness, nor slackness. Timely, prompt, thorough action will secure speedy and best results to all. There should be no hesitancy, no dawdling, no deferring till to-morrow what needs to be done now and to-day. This life is too short, the Lord's work too important, and human affairs too uncertain to admit of either slackness, neglect or trifling in anything that pertains to gospel work at home or abroad. "The King's errand is urgent," and strict attention must must be paid to his will and his work. Therefore all should "seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness," and this requires diligent, active, cheerful and faithful compliance with all their requirements and interests. This applies to the Saints everywhere, as well as to the districts above mentioned. All should joyfully do what they reasonably can to forward every interest of the Church of God in all the world. And this can be done in no other proper way than by observing the commandments of Christ to the church, including the rules and usages adopted by the church in its regular conferences and councils.

The Saints everywhere should prayerfully study the nature and importance and greatness of the work of redemption, both for themselves and all others, and then examine themselves and see if, as compared with the demands and needs and privileges of that work, they have not "slumbered and slept" (Matt. 25:5) instead of being up and doing "while the day lasts."
They need to watch themselves and "the signs of the times." Jesus says, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and the cares of this life." All should profit by this and similar admonitions.

POSTMASTER JAMES.

THE Kansas City, Missouri, Star, seems to be exercised about the appointment of Capt. Thomas James to be Postmaster at Independence, Missouri. In the issue of that paper for September 6th the following appears, the first being an editorial comment, the other an item of news:

"Thus far no successful arguments have been advanced to prove that a Latter Day Saint can not be a reasonably good postmaster; but if the political advancement of one Latter Day Saint should lead to the political advancement of other Latter Day Saints, and if by this step the Latter Day Saints should grow in numbers and audacity, causing the re-establishment of a powerful Mormon dynasty and the overthrow of Presbyterianism and Methodism, not to mention Congregationalism and other useful isms-why, the consequences would be fearful. And such seems to be the critical state of affairs in Independence."

"A CHURCH AND THE POSTMASTERSHIP.

"Considerable oppostion is manifested at Indedendence to the nomination of Thomas James as postmaster on account of his membership in the Church of the Latter Day Saints or anti-polygamous Mormons. Colonel A. W. Jones, who was instrumental in securing the appointment for James, is a member of the same church, a large majority of whose members is Republican. Ladies, moved by their opposition to the church, are also joining in the protest against the appointment."

Capt. James has been a citizen of the state of Illinois for many years, and served in the volunteer service of the United States among the forces of the state. He has been for some years a citizen of Independence, in which place the Star may, if it so chooses, very easily ascertain what sort of a citizen he has been.

We are not aware that Col. A. W. Jones is or ever was a member of the same church as Capt. James, but if he is, and his endorsement of the latter for the position of postmaster is a matter of political or personal preferment with him, what has the church to do with that? Does the Star wish its readers to understand that a citizen of the state, no matter what may be his standing in community as a citizen, or his talents and qualifications for office as a man, is not to be permitted to aspire to any position or office unless he makes no profession of religion, or is a member of "Presbyterianism, Methodism," or some other "useful ism"? Have these religions a mortgage on the offices of the state because of their faith?

If Capt. James is a good citizen of the city, county and state, whose talents and habits are such that he is qualified to perform the duties of postmaster to the satisfaction of the public, what possible crime against community has Col. A. W. Jones been guilty of in endorsing him for that place; and what wrong has the Captain done in being religiously a Latter Day Saint, the religion of a man being the matter of his own judgment and choice rather than the act or compulsion of the state.

The Star seems to be fearful that Capt. James, a Latter Day Saint, being permitted to be postmaster at Independence, may make room for the political advancement of other Latter Day Saints, which might cause the "overthrow of Presbyterianism, and Methodism, not to mention Congregationalism and other useful isms." existence and perpetuation of the religions named are to depend upon the political protection of the state, what shall be said of their claim to divine origin, and of the rule of constitutional government which affirms that the state shall neither prescribe nor proscribe the forms of worship, or prevent the free exercise of the liberty of conscience?

Capt. James served as a soldier in the armies of his country; he bears with him the marks of service and carries an honorable discharge from the service. This entitles him to the consideration of the American people so far as such things can or ought to do. He is a Republican in politics, thus entitling him to the recognition of his political party, as being a Democrat would were that party in power. He is a good businesss man, identified with the business interests of Independence and of Jackson county. What more could be asked of any man who might be selected and appointed postmaster there?

We sincerely hope that for his own sake, the good of community where he dwells, and for the allaying the fears expressed by the Star, Capt. Thomas James will prove to be an honest and capable administrator in the duties of the office to which he is appointed. And we hope that the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches will deem themselves capable of maintaining their spiritual standing and supremacy without the intervention of religious persecution, mob violence or political interference and protection against Latter Day Saints.

"Mrs. Mather has made the Latter Day Saints' Church a present of chairs enough to seat it comfortably. We are informed that there will be services held there next Sunday at the usual hour."

PAYING TITHING PAYS.

THE following is but one among many testimonies in favor of good rewards following those who pay tithes and offerings for the work of the Lord. And why not? inasmuch as the Lord commanded Israel, saying, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of And all nations shall call you hosts. blessed."—Mal. 3: 10-12.

Jesus, after his resurrection, quoted Malachi, including these texts, to the Nephites, and said of them, "These scriptures which ye had not with you, the Father commanded that I should give unto you, for it was wisdom in him that they should be given unto future generations."—Book of Nephi 11:7.

In this Jesus does not intimate that paying ithes should end with the law of Moses, but in fact enjoins its continuance after his resurrection. We find no place in the scriptures where he repealed the law of tithing, but we do find where he honored and taught it when he said to the Jews they should not leave it "undone."—Luke

Paul said to the Hebrew Christians, A. D. 64, or about thirty years after the ascension of Christ, "And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth."—Heb. 7: 8.

Here is the brother's letter:

Bro. Blakeslee:—You will find in the enclosed letter a draft for $70 tithing.

This is the last of my tithing, the tenth of all up to the present time, as near as I can get it. I was poor and in debt considerably when I commenced, but I said I would follow the Bishop's instructions in the Herald—that was to pay one-tenth as much each year tithing as I did of my debts, and I have done so, and so I increased every year until out of debt, and now here is the balance of tithing of which the total is $225.65.

I think the Lord has truly blessed us in our effort, and I feel to and do thank God for his blessings. To him may be ascribed all the honor and praise, for I know he could soon take from us all we have in this world. Then why not try to obey his commands, and then trust to him to fulfill his promises. I know if we trust in Him He will not leave nor forsake us. I consider this as much binding as the command to be born again. I feel like pressing on in this glorious work of the last days."

SAYINGS OF JOSEPH THE PROPHET. In Pres. Wilford Woodruff's sermon in the Desert News for the 17th inst., we find the following statement:

"I will repeat here what I have often remarked as the words and sentiments of the Prophet Joseph who once declared it in my hearing. Said he, 'If I were ruler or emperor of the world, and I had power over the whole human family, I would make every man, woman and child free in the enjoyment of his or her religion, be that religion whatever it may.' These are my sentiments."

There is a wide contrast between the above "sentiments" and the treatment the elders of the Reorganized Church have for the past thirty years, till late, received at the hands of Brigham Young and some of his fellow ministers; for it is a fact patent to thousands that from as early as 1850 Brigham or some of his ministers persistently denied the use of houses of any kind to the elders of the Reorganized Church, and in 1863 and after, coarsely and violently threatened those elders, notably elder E. C. Briggs when he went in 1863 to Utah as a missionary, and called, personally on Pres. Young in his office, stating the nature of his mission and seeking a house of some kind in which to preach, but was rudely told by Brigham that, with his consent, no house should be given him, also that he (Brigham) would not be responsible for the young missionary's life! Such is the manner in which Brigham and some of his co-religionists would make "every man, woman and child free in the enjoyment of his or her religion"! And yet "a hundredth part" of that sort of Brighamite freedom and liberality has not been told, as many who read these lines can testify from their own experience in Utah and elsewhere.

But if Pres. Woodruff truly voices the sincere sentiments of himself and followers in the words he quotes from the sayings of Joseph the Prophet, then we note with gladness another evidence that a new era has dawned upon Utah Mormonism which may serve to redeem the past in some measure and reflect the original and true faith of the church as founded and builded by Joseph the Seer and his faithful coworkers. We have not now, and never have had, any other than good wishes for the Utah Mormons, and every indication of their return to the original church foundation and principles we hail with joy.

ELDER CAFFALL'S REJOINDER.

In this issue will be found a lengthy article from Elder James Caffall in which he assumes that his articles on the Sheep and Goat question "seem distasteful" to us, and charges us with seeking "to prejudice" the HERALD readers "against the sentiments" of said articles and "to impress" them "with the belief that Elder Caffall and other elders were wallowing in the mire of tradition," also that we (W. W. Blair) make "claim to a towering gospel rectitude;" and he then says, "I think, with sober thinkers, that your efforts to berate an opponent will add nothing to your gigantic efforts to gain coveted prominence in the discussion, or detract from mine;" and he says further, "you will hardly claim, I think, that such a procedeure is evincive of an honorable journalist; or indulge the thought of its being compatible with the genius of Christ's religion." He continues and charges us with "indirect accusation," and "an attack" on him, also asks "if contributors to the Her-ALD are expected to duplicate the Associate Editor's views, or be brought under his lash for daring to advance an adverse thought;" etc., etc., etc.

Since reading Elder Caffall's grave accusations, we have carefully re-read our replies to his articles, also our replies to the articles of others on the mooted question, thinking it barely possible that, in the midst of a multitude of duties, editorial and otherwise, we might have written something from which it would be proper, or at least possible, for our readers to infer, suspect, or surmise what he charges us with, but after such examination we fail to find even one sentence, clause, or word, that justifies his charges; and we deny that there are any just grounds for them, or that there are or were any causes given or intended that in the least justifies said charges.

We welcomed the questions and replies touching the entire matter in issue and ever sought to treat each writer with due courtesy, and we fail to find where, even in one instance, anything but kind, brotherly treatment was given all these writers, Elder Caffall included.

As a journalist and controversialist, we have never descended to the low level of inuendoes, crimination and recrimination, and we have never been accused of it in past years except by the notorious John N. Burton and two who were once of the quorum of the Twelve, whose names need not be mentioned. On the contrary, we have ever advocated, and sought to practice fairness, justness and kindness, however plain and sharply drawn our methods and persistent our arguments. We seek directness and plainness, and shun dawdling, wordy, round-about methods, and if any construe this to be unjust, dishonest, or discourteous, we are not to blame.

In HERALD, pages 259 and 374, current volume, questions were asked us, and we answered editorially, as it was our privilege and duty to do; and in our issue for July 13th, page 443, Elder Caffall opposed and controverted our answers and sought to expose what he, probably, supposed were our errors. To this we replied uncomplainingly, citing and quoting largely texts from our standards of evidence in support of positions taken. In our issue for July 27th, page 466, Elder A. H. Parsons gave his views on matters in question, to which we replied in order. And in the August 10th number, pages 519-20, Elder Caffall renewed his opposition and controversy, unrestricted, in a nearly fivecolumn article, and to this we replied, quoting and citing a host of Scripture texts in defense of our position and methods of interpretation and application. Afterwards we had articles discussing the questions involved which may be found on pages 549, 558, 566, and in no place do we find one coarse, bitter, discourteous, or unchristian word used by the editor; but, on the contrary, in explanation of our persistency, and in view of the gravity of matters under discussion, we said on page 566, "We need to examine all sides and everything pertaining to a subject, lest we be found of that class who 'jump to conclusions' instead of reaching them by all 'the law and the testimony' which relates to a given case; and this requires us [the Editor to 'dig deep' and labor patiently." In this no reference whatever was made to Elder Caffall; and christian charity, that which "Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil," demands that a similar construction be put on our words when we said in HERALD, page 519, "We are more than ever satisfied that the subjects in issue need to be thoroughly investigated and solid facts obtained, so that the truth of God shall govern the faith and teaching of the Saints rather than the tradition of the elders," all of which applies to all "elders"—the elders in the HERALD office included.

Passing over some other defective statements in Elder Caffall's rejoinder, we reassert what we have stated before, (and to which the elder objects), that "the goats [Matt. 25: 31, 41, 46], will not go into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels for merely failing to perform or exhibit such benevolence," as ministering food, drink, clothing, visiting in prison and in sickness, to the needy saints; for on that point we have the plain word of God, which says: "Thus saith the Lord concerning all those that know my power, and have been partakers thereof, and have suffered themselves, through the power of the devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the devil and his angels in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come, having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power."-D. C. 76:4.

This text shows what grievous sins men must commit, what depravity they must sink to, ere heaven will consign them to eternal perdition. The goats of Matt. 25: 41 are consigned to this punishment, for Christ, "the Son of man," will say to them, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. .. . And these shall go away into everlasting punishment."-Vs.

The Book of Mormon locates the time when this doom will be pronounced, that it is after the last resurrection: "And it shall come to pass, that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life, insomuch as they have become immortal, they must appear before the judgment seat of the Holy One of Israel, and then cometh the judgment, and then must they be judged according to the holy judgment of God. And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which can not pass away, that they who are righteous, shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy, shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flame ascendeth up forever and forever, and has no end."-2 Nephi 6:6; see also Alma 9:3, 9, and Mormon 4: 5, 6, and Revelation 20: 15. And to this agree the following from the Doctrine & Covenants, 28: 7, "But, behold, verily I say unto you, before the earth shall pass away, Michael, mine arch-angel, shall sound his trump, and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all: and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father; wherefore I wil say unto them, depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." This is precisely what is said to the goats of Matthew 25: 41, 46, and the time is located after the last resurrection, and just before the ushering in of "a new heaven and a new earth," as is also taught in Rev. 20: 11-15 with 21: 1, etc. This is the last judgment mentioned in all the Scriptures, and the final doom or judgment of the finally wicked, "the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof; nevertheless, I, the Lord, show it by vision unto many; but straightway shut it up again; wherefore the end, the width, the height, the depth and the misery thereof, they understand not; neither any man except them who are ordained unto this condemnation."—D. C. 76: 4.

And in the days of Joseph the Seer it was decided, by the First Presidency, both unwise and unlawful to teach that there ever would be redemption of any who suffer such doom. See Times and Seasons, vol. 6: 801, and Millennial Star, 14: 450. From all this we should learn of the gravity of these matters.

And in respect to Christ's "sheep," (not "Matthew's"), Christ's "righteous" and "blessed" ones, of Matt. 25: 33, 34; the "Holy One," "the Son of Man," says they have "life eternal." (See verse 46). This being true, we should learn how, and the means God has ordained by which men must attain that exalted condition if they ever gain it. Can they attain it by any other means than through "the faith" and "good works" ordained in the gospel! What saith the word of God on the point? What saith Christ in all the sacred books as to the means by which men may gain "life eternal," "everlasting life"? This is a matter of infinite importance, and it should not be treated hastily, nor superficially.

The Lord warned David Whitmer, through Joseph the Seer, in 1829, saying: "Seek to bring forth and establish my Zion. Keep my commandments in all things; and if you keep my commandments and endure unto the end, you shall have eternal life, which is the greatest of all the gifts of God."—D. C., 12: 3.

Here are the conditions upon which

Here are the conditions upon which David could secure "eternal life." To this we add what the Lord said to Joseph the Seer: "Be firm in keeping the commandments wherewith I have commanded you, and if you do this, behold I grant unto you eternal life, even if you should be slain."—D. C. 4: 4.

The righteous Nephites prayed that

The righteous Nephites prayed that "whosoever should believe the gospel, in this land [America], might have eternal life."—D. C. 9: 11.

Again: "As many as shall come to a knowledge of this [gospel] work, and . . received it in faith and work righteousness, shall receive a crown of eternal life; but those who harden their hearts and reject it, it shall turn to their own condemnation."—D. C. 17:3. Here is displayed the greatness of "eternal life," also the conditions upon which it may be attained, also the result of its rejection. Our Lord teaches in John 3:15, 16, and elsewhere, "That whosoever believeth" in the Son of Man, "should not perish, but have everlasting life;" and Paul says God will give to "them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life."—Rom. 2:7.

Similar doctrine is taught by the Son of Man in Mark 10: 17; John 6: 54; and 10: 28. And in 17: 3, he says: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Will "the sheep," "the righteous," the "blessed" of God, of Matthew 25: 33, 34, attain "life eternal" by any other conditions than those set forth in the words of Christ and his intelligent, faithful representatives! We think not; for it is an eternal law, that "the gospel of Christ . . is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth: ... for therein is the righteousness of God revealed." And the fact that "the sheep" of Christ attain to "life eternal," (Matt. 25: 33, 46) as he promised in John 10: 27, 28, ("My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I will give unto them eternal life"), is conclusive proof that they had accepted the means and complied with the conditions by which eternal life may be gained, and that these means were very much more than the benevolent, humane acts mentioned in Matt. 25: 33-40, and this we learn by "comparing spiritual things with spiritual," and "not pre-ferring one thing" in the gospel plan to the exclusion of others.

In view of the tremendous issues of the "eternal judgment" to be pronounced "at the last day" by Christ the righteous Judge; in view of the blessings and glories of eternal life to be given the righteous, and the dreadful, awful doom of those who go "into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels"—in view of these vast and everlasting concerns, is it politic, expedient, safe, or in any way lawful to teach, that for the mere giving of a cup of drink alone, or food alone, or clothing alone, or visiting, only, the sick and imprisoned of Christ's people or ministersthat for these acts only—men become Christ's "sheep," "the righteous," the "blessed" of the Father, and by these acts, separate or combined, attain unto "life eternal"! And on the other hand, is it expedient, is it just, is it lawful, is it in harmony with the love, the wisdom, the justice and the mercy of God, that men shall be consigned "to everlasting punishment," and "into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels," (the doom of the goats-Matt. 25:46, and 41), unless they become as incorrigibly and irredeemably wicked as are the devil and his angels? And to become wicked to that extent, must not their sins be vastly more than mere neglect or refusal to minister kind deeds to Christ's "brethren"? We have already seen what must be done in order to secure "eternal life"; also the base and persistently wicked deeds men must do ere they are consigned to punishment with the devil and his angels; also the time when that punishment is to be pronounced and inflicted.

Matt. 35:31-46 was manifestly designed of Christ to teach the fact of "a judgment to come"; the fact of a final, eternal separation of the righteous from the wicked; the fact of final rewards for righteous deeds the fact of punishment for unrepented, unforgiven evil deeds; the fact that humane, benevolent deeds will distinguish and commend His "sheep" and be an essential element to their credit when final awards and final conditions are fixed by the accomplished facts of the "eternal" judgment," "at the last day," when the redemptive work of Christ is finished, and complete, and "the kingdom" is "delivered up"... "to God, even the Father;" and it reveals the further fact that both "the sheep" and "the goats" were conversant with, and were in close contact, therefore knew, and were known by, the "brethren" of Christ; also that the sheep received and ministered to the "brethren," while the goats finally and ultimately rejected them; also that the only surprise of both these parties was in the fact that doing the good deeds or bad deeds to the "brethren" was reckoned as doing them to Christ in person! But it nowhere reveals "profound ignorance," on the part of the sheep or goats, as to either Christ, his "brethren," his redemptive work, or the value of kind, humane, brotherly deeds. Just the reverse of this is true, for Christ holds both responsible for their conduct towards him and the "brethren," and this on the ground that they knew their duties toward both them and him. "Sin is the transgression of law." "If I had not come and spoken unto you, ye would have had no sin.

In all these matters it is wisdom to take the safe side, and not risk theories unless clearly, fully sustained by the accepted word of God; but preach, teach, and believe what is practical, what perishing souls need now, what things tend to convert, purify, build up, unite, and lead into the love and present salvation of God.

In conclusion, it will be well for all who are afflicted with "morbid sensitiveness" to lay it aside; for, like blue-green spectacles, it tinges everything seen through it to the possible harm of many, but especially to those so afflicted. Let us think and speak and act charitably, and keep free from evil surmisings and groundless fears. Let us be slow to judge others' motives, but rather judge ourselves lest this be said of us, "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant?"

Controversy on persons' motives and presumed intentions, are out of place in our church organ, as all should know.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In the communication department will be found a lengthy, cogent article by Pres. Joseph Smith, reviewing a production of Franklin D. Richards in "What the World Believes," published by Gay Bros. & Co. of New York. Those interested in studying the "Twin Relic" and its foundations will do well to give it a patient, careful perusal, and learn the false, contradictory and corrupting basis on which that system is built.

We learn that Bro. D. S. Crawley is booked for a discussion with a Campbellite minister at Prairie City, Indian Territory, to commence Saturday, September 28th. A good attendance is expected.

Bro. E. Carlton, of Petrolia, Ontario, says in a late letter that his wife has been blessed of God with returning health since she united with the church; also that Elder Samuel Brown recently, in a debate there with a Mr. Bowner, won a decided wictory for the truth.

Bro. John F. Thomas wrote us of late that Bro. I. M. Smith, of the South-Eastern Illinois district and Rev. Throckmorton of the Baptist Church will hold a discussion at Parrish, Franklin county, Illinois, commencing October 22nd.

Bro. R. B. Jones of Middletown, Ohio, wrote us September 23rd, that while absent from home his dwelling house took fire on Wednesday the 18th. His wife and boy were at the barn, and had it not been for the timely aid of a young girl living with them, some of his children would have lost their lives. We mention it by request. We regret Bro. Jones' loss.

This is the last week of the great Exposition at St. Joseph, Missouri. It closes Oct. 5th. And, without doubt, it is the finest thing of the kind ever seen in the west. The vim and enterprise of its projectors and managers are worthy of all praise.

Under date of 24th ult., Bro. J. J. Cornish wrote from Reed City, Michigan: "Six more were baptized in Brinton yesterday."

THE "Utah Enquirer" for the 3d inst. has this to say of the procedures of a late conference of the Provo (Utah) Stake. Comment is not needed:

"Elder Frederick R. Lyman, a son of Amasa Lyman, and brother to Apostle Lyman, was called from the congregation to occupy the stand. He remarked, that there were so many important principles connected with the gospel, that were so profitable to talk upon, that a speaker hardly knew where to begin. He alluded to his recent mission to the southern states, and of the good that he had accomplished through the blessings of God, both to himself and those among whom he associated. Many whom he had preached to and who had embraced the gospel, had never seen an elder before, and they gladly received the word of God, and had come to Zion. He had visited some of these during the last few months, and had found that while they were glad and thankful that they were here, yet they admitted that they were disappointed at what they had found in Utah. When they left their homes they thought they were leaving Babylon behind them, but when they got here they discovered that Zion was not what they expected. This is too true. But the time is coming when this condition will change. He asked the people here to be charitable to those who were continually coming to Zion, and encourage them all that they possibly could."

Here is another significant item:

"Another subject of vital importance touched upon was the injurious habit of going into debt, a habit practiced by the Latter-day Saints to an alarming extent. The statement was made that three hundred thousand dollars would not liquidate the debts of the people of this Stake. This is an enormous amount, but still we think it at least thirty per cent. below the real indebtedness. The evils of the credit system were vividly portrayed by the speaker, and we sincerely trust some little good may result from the advice given.

It is to be regretted that the Tabernacle was not filled with people to receive the good counsel given during conference. Out of a total of nearly twenty thousand souls in this Stake, not two thousand people at any time were in attendance. It is to be hoped that by the time the December Conference is held that the majority of the people will see the folly of staying away at such seasons of profit."

And here is another, from a late Utah paper, giving some of the inside views of the Brighamite Church as to the changes it is suffering, their supposed causes, and the remedy therefor. It is found in the report of a Stake priesthood meeting:

"President Smoot hoped the bishops would report faithfully the true condition of the Saints. Without these reports we would be at sea regarding our strength. It was desired that the priesthood meet together and talk upon the financial and general condition of the people. For some reason the tithes were falling off throughout the Territory, notwithstanding the fact that the Saints were increasing in wealth and numbers. It was also known that some of those professing to be Saints of God were voting with, and for our enemies. It is certainly evident that there is wrong existing among the Saints when the tithes decrease and our strength at the polls grows less. It was the duty of the bishops and lesser priesthood to know the spirit of the people and see that their duty towards the kingdom of God was performed. The speaker alluded to the evils of tattling and scandal among the Latter-day Saints, and said it was the duty of the priesthood to frown down such things, that a spirit of peace and union might reign in the habitations of the Several of the brethren spoke in relation to the financial and political situation of the people. The reports of the bishops showed a great falling off in the crops throughout the state.

Bishop Wm. Price realized the importance of the saying that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and felt to urge the fact upon the people.

Bishop Halliday showed how many professing to be Latter-day Saints were contributing of their means to support our enemies in our midst, by patronizing their various business institutions.

Elder C. D. Evans spoke of the evil and inconsistency of the Saints patronizing the avowed enemies of the people to the exclusion of our own institutions."

"The Mennonites of the Hammer Creek district, Lancaster county, held a special meeting a few days ago to select a minister according to the usual custom. Twenty-one Bibles were placed upon a table in the meeting-house, one containing a piece of paper. Twenty-one eligible members of the congregation then passed around the table, each taking one of the Bibles. The one that contained the slip of paper fell to Jonas Hess of Lititz, and he was accordingly declared called to the ministry and endowed with the ministerial authority."

The above is from the Chicago Times of recent date. It serves to illustrate some of the methods of "calling" to the ministry which are peculiar to the present age. It may be claimed that such is in harmony with the acts of the apostles in the selection of Matthias, but it is entirely dissimilar, as a careful study of all the incidents mentioned in that connection will clearly show.

CREEDISM.

"The Rev. Dr. Henry VanDyke asks in the Presbyterian: 'Why should we retain in our creed what none of us believe, what all our teachers of theology reject, and what serves only to bring reproach upon our doctrine among them that are without?'"

In connection with the above from the "religious" column of the Chicago Times of Sunday, September 8th, we remember an incident which is said to have occurred at the quadrennial general conference or session of the Presbyterian Church, of 1885. The question under discussion was the validity of Catholic baptism. Many of the delegates warmly argued against its validity until, finally, an aged brother advised the brethren to hold on, and asked, in substance, "If Catholic baptism is not valid what becomes of our baptism?" The question was "laid on the table" shortly afterwards, and we have not yet heard that the subject was revived. It is not likely to be. The clipping is interesting. The "stone" of Daniel 2:35 still pounds at the creeds and the "winds" bear away the "chaff." The "stone" is founded on the "rock."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., writes from Cheetham, Manchester, England, September 9th:

"The church is making fair progress in the Manchester district. Our meetings are fairly well attended. Our Lord honors the ministrations of his servants with the signs following, comforting his people, and extending the influence of the church, and, I trust also, her usefulness. Our progress may seem slow to some, but I believe it will be sure, for we are seeking to build with the right material, upon the proper foundation, the Lord helping us."

Bro. I. N. Roberts lately wrote from Rogers, Arkansas, as follows:

"I am happy to say that my health is improving fast since I came to this place. I am satisfied the Lord has heard and answered the prayers in my behalf. I am very much reduced in flesh since the first of July. I then weighed two hundred and sixteen pounds, now but one hundred and eighty-four pounds. I am to speak here on Sunday if all is well, then I shall rest a few days, when I think I will be able to fully go ahead with a series of meetings."

Bro. Gilbert Johnson Weller of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, wrote us from the steamer San Jose, off the Mexican coast, in which he was enroute for Panama and New York, whence he sails for England. He is, accompanied by his family, in quest of better health. Among other things mentioned he thus expresses himself:

"I am at present going to England, my native land for health's sake but hope to be back in Honolulu next spring. I wrote Bro. T. W. Smith at Tahiti, while in Oakland, California, giving what information I thought might be of use to him when he goes there which he intends to do next November. I intend to remain most of the time in England during my stay in Europe and I may perhaps go as far as Palestine and also to France, Belgium and Germany, and shall be glad of any address of Saints in any of those countries, and if I can do anything for you while I am there, I will be glad to do so. I have not as yet paid my tithes, but will do so immediately on my return to Honolulu, which place I left in order to get well, and have thrown all business aside until I return. I avail myself of every opportunity to bring the glorious latter day truths before the honest hearted, and hope to bring some English friends into the church. I hope to be able to return to Honolulu early next year to help Bro. T. W. Smith carry on this glorious latter day work. I ask for your prayers for a speedy recovery and a safe and ealry return to Honolulu."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it proper to have a presiding priest, and teacher, and deacon, where there is more than one of each of those officers regularly chosen by the branch? If so, which of the other priests or teachers or deacons would have the prior right when the presiding elder, priest, teacher, or deacon is absent?

Ans.—Yes, it is proper enough. While there is nothing in the law specifying that there shall be "presiding" priests, teachers or deacons, expediency and experience seem to justify such appointments. All things being equal, the first appointed should preside; otherwise as the branch officers may agree, or as the branch itself may specify. See Rules of Order, chapter 1.

Q.—In the event that we should have an elder, priest, teacher and deacon, would it be proper, if they should need assistance, for those four officers to choose them, or should the branch appoint them?

A.—The branch should choose them. "All things shall be done by common consent" is the language of the law.—See D. & C., pages 111, 114, 208; see also Sec. 17: 16, and Rules of Order, chapter 1.

Q.—How often should the priest visit the house of each member, as the law directs?

A.—As often as occasion requires. We think that will be the happy medium between being obtrusive and neglectful. The faithful, prayerful branch officer who strives to wisely comprehend his duties will understand the spiritual status or condition of every member of the branch, and will be so interested in them that he will do his best to visit, and in a spirit of brotherly kindness, talk and pray with the members when necessary.

2-What does John refer to in John 3: 30?

A.—Read the contexts. He referred to the superiority of Jesus Christ and his extensive mission, and also to the fact that his own mission was drawing to a close, while the Savior's was but just commencing.

JOSEPH THE SEER.

THE revised edition of this valuable work has been received, and we are prepared to promptly fill all orders. The new edition far surpasses the old in every respect. It has been enlarged, and contains many new features, besides retaining all the subjects of the old edition, carefully revised. Much new matter has been added, and the mechanical work of the new book is excellent.

The Nebraska City, Nebraska, News of Saturday, September 21st, reaches us and contains the following item:

"A telegram was received here this morning from Dr. R. C. Elvin stating that his son Walter died last night at Kearney, and that the remains would be interred there. Walter was a young man, some twenty-five years old, and was born and raised in this city, where he had a large circle of acquaintances. He was employed in the News office for several years and learned to be one of the best pressmen in the west. He leaves a young wife."

We regret to learn of this sudden death. We sympathize with the family.

THE ANNUAL REUNION.

NEXT Friday, Oct. 4th, this important meeting begins at Garner's Grove, ten miles north of Missouri Valley and four miles east of Mondamin, Iowa. Prospects indicate a large and joyful gathering then to wait upon the Lord, learn His ways and honor Him in all His appointments. The grounds are finely located; no pains will be spared to make all who attend contented and happy; good boarding arrangements will be supplied; superior conveniences will be furnished campers; able ministers will preach the word; the song service will be of the best, and a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord is hoped for.

The year has been most abundant in all crops, the land abounds with plenty of all food supplies, and it is most becoming that Saints and lovers of good things meet and spend a time together serving God and contemplating the things that make for purity, peace and salvation. The people need seasons of rest and reflection, and it pays well in every proper way, for such seasons build up, bless and happify.

Let all who can do so consistently, attend this annual meeting. Such as do so with right desires and purposes will be richly repaid therefor. Come, and come early, to stay till its close.

Mothers' Kome Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"O man! let purpose thy life control,
And thou shalt kindle from soul to soul;
Shalt waken thy brother's faint desire,
And fan into flame a living fire.

Oh, be it mine, with deed or song, To kindle some life to purpose strong;
To light some lamp on the shore of time,
That shall shine forever with beam sublime!"

COMFORT FOR TIRED FEET.

THE close of every day finds a great many persons with feet tired and sore. There are some people whose duties require them to walk all day. There are the men who patrol the city's streets, the guardians of our homes; there are the postmen who bring the letters to our doors; there are the messengers who are always hurrying to and fro on their errands; there are the pilgrims who travel on foot along the hard dusty highways; there are those who follow the plow, or perform other parts of the farmer's work; then there are those whose duties require them to be on their feet most of the day, either standing or walking about. Salespeople in great busy stores are scarcely ever allowed to sit down; the same is true of those employed in many factories and mills. Indeed, the larger portion of all working people, in all branches of industry, stand the greater part of the day. Thousands of women in their home work rarely ever sit down, during the long days, to rest. Up stairs and down again, from kitchen to nursery, out to the market and to the store, in and out from early morning till late at night, these busy women are ever plodding in their housewifely duties.

No wonder, then, that there are many sore and tired feet at the ending of each day. How welcome night is to the armies of weary whopeople, then drop their tools, or their yardsticks, or their other implements of toil, and hurry homeward! How good it is to sit down and rest when the day's tasks are done!

What message of comfort is there for such? For one thing, there is the thought of duty done. It is always a comfort, when one is tired, to reflect that one has grown tired in doing one's proper work. A squandered day, a day spent in idleness, may not leave such tired feet in the evening, but neither does it give the sweet pleasure that a busy day gives, even with its blistered or aching feet.

There is a great deal of useless standing or walking about that gets none of this comfort. There are young men who stand on the street corners all the day, and ofttimes far into the night, who must have weary feet when at last they turn homeward; yet they have in their hearts no such sweet compensating satisfaction as have those who have toiled all the long hours in some honest and honorable calling. Idleness brings only shame and self-contempt. Then there are certain kinds of occupation which give to weariness no sweetening comfort. A day spent in sinful work may make tired feet, but it has no soothing for them in the evening's rest.

But all duty well done has its restful peace of heart when the tasks are finished and laid down. Conscience whispers, "You were faithful to-day. You did all that was given to you to do; you did not shirk nor skimp." And conscience is the whisper of God. When we know that God in heaven has noticed our toil, and has approved it, accepting it as holy service to himself, we are ready to toil another day.

Another comfort for tired feet is in the coming of night, when one can rest. The day's tasks are finished, the rounds are all made, the store is closed, the horses are put away, the children are in bed, the housework is done, and the tired people can sit down. The tight shoes are taken off, loose slippers are substituted, and the evening's quiet begins. Who can tell the blessings that the night brings to earth's weary toilers? Suppose there were no night, no rest,-that the heavy sandals could never be laid off, that one could never sit down, that there could be no pause in the toil,-how terrible would life be! Night is a holy time, because it brings rest. The rest is all the sweeter, too, because the feet are tired and sore. Those who never have been weary do not realize the blessings which come with the night.

Wonderful is the work of repair in life that goes on while we sleep. Men bring the great ships to dock after they have plowed the waves or battled with the storms, and are battered and strained and damaged; and there they are repaired and made ready to go again to sea. At night our jaded and exhausted bodies are drydocked after the day's conflicts and toils, and while we sleep the mysterious process of restoration and reinvigoration goes on; and when mornting comes, we are ready to begin a new day of toil and care. We lie down tired, feeling sometimes that we can never do another day's work; but the morning comes again, we rise renewed in body and spirit, full of enthusiasm, and strong and brave for the hardest duties.

What a blessing is sleep! It charms away the weariness from the aching limbs. It brushes the clouds from the sky. It refills life's drained fountains. One rendering of the old psalm-verse is, "So he giveth to his beloved in sleep." Surely God does give us many rich blessings in our sleep. Angels come with noiseless tread into our chambers, and leave their holy gifts, and steal away unheard. God himself comes, and touches us with his benedictions, while our eyes are closed in slumber. He shuts our ears to earth's noises, and holds us apart from its strifes and turmoils while he builds up again in us all that the day had torn down. He makes us forget our griefs and cares, and sends sweet dreams to restore the brightness and the gladness to our tired spirits.

"The human seems to fade away,
And down the starred and shadowed skies
The heavenly comes, as memories come
Of home to hearts afar from home,
And through the darkness after day
Many a winged angel files"

Another comfort for tired feet is in the thought that Jesus understands the weariness. We know that his feet were tired at the end of many a day. Once, we are expressly told that, being wearied with his long journey, he sat down on a well-curb to rest. He had come far through the dust and the noontide heat, and his feet were sore. All his days were busy days; for he was ever going about on errands of love. Many a day he had scarcely time to eat. Though never weary of, he was ofttimes weary in, his Father's business.

When our feet are tired, after the day's tasks and journeys, it ought to be a very precious comfort to remember that our blessed Master had like experience, and therefore is able to sympathize with us. It is one of the chief sadnesses of many lives that people do not understand them, -do not sympathize with them. They move about us,-our neighbors and companions, even our closest friends,-and laugh and jest, and are happy and light-hearted; while we, close beside them, are suffering. They are not aware of our pain; and if they were, they could not give us real sympathy, because they have never had any experience of their own that would interpret to them our experience. Only those who have suffered in some way can truly sympathize with those who suffer. One who is physically strong, and has never felt the pain of weariness, can not understand the weakness of another whom the the least exertion tires. The man of athletic frame, who can walk all day without fatigue, has small sympathy with the man of feeble health, who is exhausted in a mile.

When we think of the glory of Christ, it would seem to us at first that he can not care for our little ills and sufferings; but when we remember that he lived on earth, and knows our common life by personal experience, and that he is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," we know that he understands us and sympathizes with us in every pain. When we think of him sitting weary on the well-curb, after his long, hard journey, we are sure that, even in heaven, he knows what tired feet mean to us after our day of toil. The comfort even of human sympathy, without any real relief, puts new strength and courage into the heart of one who suffers. The assurance of the sympathy of Christ ought to lift the weary one above all weakness, above all faintness, into victorious joy.

We should remember, too, that Christ's sacred feet were wounded that our feet may be soothed in their pain and weariness, and at last may stand on the golden streets of heaven. There is a legend of Christ which tells of his walking by the sea, beautiful in form, wearing brown sandals upon his feet. A poet puts it thus:

"He walked beside the sea; he took his sandals off
To bathe his weary feet in the pure, cool wave,—
For he had walked across the desert sands
All day long,—and as he bathed his feet
He murmured to himself, 'Three years! three years!
And then, poor feet, the cruel nails will come
And make you bleed; but that blood will lave
All weary feet on all their thorny ways.'"

There is still another comfort for tired feet in the hope of the rest that is waiting. This incessant toil is not to go on forever. We are going to a land where the longest journey will produce no weariness, where "tired feet with sandals loose may rest" from all that tires. The hope of heaven, shining in glory such a little way before, ought to give us courage and strength to endure whatever of pain, conflict and suffering, may come to us in these short days.—Sel.

SUBMISSION.

"Is this the path, my Father? this the duty?

Is there for me no higher, broader way?

This road where fades all life's fresh morning beauty,

And comes no glowing day?"

"This path, my child, leads to the Eternal City, E'en though it darkening still and cheerless be,
But dost thou now forget my love and pity,
And turn, oh, child, from me?"

"But look, my Father, at my feet all bruised and weary, weary,

At me, alas! so faltering and weak.
The path behind was rough, before is dreary,
The end is far to seek."

"The end, my child, thou knowest not its nearness.

For thee it may be strangely, sweetly soon.

The morning's rosy rays which lost their clearness,

May turn to brightest noon."

"But see these walk, my Father. Dark and frowning They rise around me in this strange and barren land

They hold me sternly back from glory's crowning,
As by an iron hand."

"I know, my child. The dreams of earth's ambition
Can find their fair fulfillment never here.
But holier far is this thy Heaven-sent mission,
And thou to me more near."

"Then take my hand, Oh, Father. Gently guide me In this the way that thou hast chosen in love. Beneath the refuge of thy wings thou'lt hide me, And lead me safe above."

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

We once more solicit your earnest faith and prayers in behalf of Sr. Louisa Wyatt, of Elwood, Iowa, that God may, if it is his righteous will, restore her sight.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel like penning a few lines to the sisters of the Home Column. Our district conference has just closed and again my soul has been filled with joy to meet with so many of God's people in the house of the Lord, and with some of whom I have enjoyed such feasts twenty years ago. The same bright smile and the same warm clasping of hands, going to show plainly to me that the Spirit of Christ has no shadow of turning, but pressing onward to the mark. O God, may I be faithful to the end! How many of the dear sisters know as well as I, of the joy that I speak of, and also to stand at the brink of the water and see a young ambassador of Christ with his hand raised to heaven, about to bury those wishing to follow Him in the watery grave. To me this sight is particularly grand, for I am one of those anxious mothers who have prayed for years that I might live to see my sons instruments in God's hands of helping to build up his kingdom, but up to this I have not been gratified. I have not given up the hope, however, for in prayer I have faith, for I have proved its power many a time. God does answer prayers, but he knows best when to answer. The youth who did the baptizing was Bro. Thomas Williams, who is laboring under Bro. G. T. Griffith's direction, May God speed all like he! What is there on earth that brings such peace to the soul of a mother as when she sees her children growing up before the Lord in wisdom's ways.

To the silvery-haired sisters let me say, I for one am hungry in my soul. Then let us mothers continued in prayer to God in behalf of our children that evil may have no power over them. God bless you all to this end is the prayer of your weak sister, in the one faith,

MARY GILLESPIE.

BELL AIR, Ills., Aug. 5th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:-I desire to do all the good I can for the cause of Christ, and often think if I could express my thoughts in writing I would write and try to encourage others. How can we expect to do so unless we try? I know that we receive just what we live for. Let us all strive and pray for wisdom that we may obtain knowledge in the gospel of Christ. As for myself I am trying to live worthy of the name I bear; although a name held in derision by many, I here testify that I am proud of the name of Latter Day Saint. We have a small branch here of eleven members, and meet together every other Sunday and have prayer and testimony meeting, and although few in number, the Lord often meets with us. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be kept faithful, and if I can be the means of bringing any one to see the light of Christ how great will be my joy. Let us each live so that when we are called away we will be ready to go and dwell in the home prepared for the faithful, is the prayer of your LIZZIE WICKISER. sister, OMAHA, Mebraska, Sept. 18th. Sr. Walker:—The sisters of the Omaha branch of Latter Day Saints met in the chapel on September the 8th, and organized a Prayer Union, and elected Sr. A. Brown secretary and treasurer of North Side, and Sr. A. E. Sprague secretary and treasurer of South Side.

A. BROWN, Sec'y and Tres'r.

For the benefit of those wishing to organize like associations, we publish the rules and regulations of this one:

1. The officers shall be President, Secretary and Treasurer, to be elected every six months.

- 2. There shall be two divisions of the Union. The dividing line shall be Dodge street. The president shall appoint some one to preside over the respective divisions in her absence.
- 3. The time of meeting shall be three p. m., each Thursday. Those in the North Divisions shall meet in the chapel and those of the South Side at such place, as they may agree upon from time to time.
- 4. Every member who can, should bring a freewill offering, such an amount as in their hearts, they feel disposed to give, to be paid to the Bishop or agent each quarter.
- 5. Members of the Prayer Union detained at home should try to observe the time by holding private devotion.
- 6. On the first Sunday of the first month of each quarter a general meeting of both branches of "the Union" shall be held in the chapel at three p. m.
- 7. These rules can be changed at any regular meeting called for that purpose.

TEMPLE, Mo., Sept. 7th.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union:-I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be healed as I have been suffering for some time with catarrh of the head and stomach, and if it is God's holy will. I desire to be restored to health. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be able by the help of God to overcome all evil, and not be overcome by the evil one. That I may be worthy of receiving the blessing of health. I have been suffering this afternoon - was not really able to write when I commenced to write but as I was studying about my condition of health, these words came to me: "Write to the sisters of the Prayer Union and in writing to the Saints of the Prayer Union thou shalt be healed, saith the Spirit of the living God unto you."

Brothers and sisters, I ask an interest in your prayers that I may by the help of God do my duty that I may be worthy of receiving the blessings of heaven, and that my faith in God and his promises may never cease, but ever increase until Christ our Redeemer shall come.

Truly this is the work of God and I desire to bear my testimony to this latter day work. The voice of the Spirit at my confirmation was, that this church should never be thrown down.

Saints be firm, be steadfast and faithful and thou shalt receive a home in heaven.

Your sister,

VIOLET JORDAN.

LEBEC, Mo., Sept. 10th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Over two years ago I was baptized by Bro. I. N. White and just as much as a person can rejoice who feels their soul lighted up by the true Spirit of God, I have rejoiced.

I first heard the gospel preached by Bro. White and while he was speaking I heard a voice telling me, "This is a true servant of God." I and my husband were soon after baptized, and since then my only child old enough, and how we have rejoiced together I can not now tell you.

A little over a year ago my husband was called to the ministry and it brings many tears to our eyes to separate now after God has brought such a spirit of love to brighten our home and gave us such bright hope of the future; but when

I stop to think of this happiness being carried to others I realize what a grand mission a true servant of God has and I willingly make the sacrifice. Jesus has caused me to feel some of the joy that will be ours when we will all be united in that glorious kingdom and reign with Him a thousand years.

It has been my happy lot to be associated with a branch of true and loving Saints where time after time we have been cheered by the voice of the Comforter and only last Sunday I know you would have rejoiced to hear the testimony of an aged brother who has moved with his children and grand children from Minnesota last spring. It has been here as elsewhere—some have opposed the divinity of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants-but it seems to cause investigation and prayer to God for wisdom which has resulted in many blessings. Evidence abundant has been given me by my heavenly Father of the truthfulness of that book. It seems strange to me that some will throw away all the light that God has given them and separate themselves from a people that God owns and grants blessings such as he does to the Reorganization. I can testify like many of my sisters have testified through the Home Column, that God has healed me of diseases of long standing, and also my family have been healed many times. These are blessings that cheer me and give me courage to make many sacrifices that this gospel may be

One thing the sisters of our branch have not yet done, is to organize a Prayer Union, but I hope it will not be neglected long.

The money you see opposite my name in the Home Column Missionary Fund I earned by raising and selling sweet potatoes.

With love to all the sisters, from one who is full of hope in the redemption of Zion.

"Rome," says a writer in the Contemporary Review, "is now a mere provincial town in an out-of-the-way corner of a small inland sea. The headquarters of the church in the days when she was a living reality gravitated by a natural law to the center of empire. If she is still to be a living reality, presiding over the development of our civilization and mothering the children of men, then she will be true to the law of her being and establish the seat of her sovereign pontiff in the center where sovereignty resides. Rome is of the old world, archaic, moribund, and passing away. The center, the capital, and the mother city of the new world which Catholicism must conquer or perish is not to be found on the banks of the Tiber, but on the Thames."

Correspondence.

NORTH FREEDOM, Wis., Sept. 22d. Bro. Blair: -- I am truly thankful that the Lord has not withdrawn his Spirit from your humble servant. But when he is called on to administer in the house of the Lord, or in his ordinances, the desired blessing has been attained. I have been telegraphed to come to Valley Junction three times in a very severe case of sickness; and thank the Lord, they have been healed by the power of God. Praise his holy name! I feel that the Lord is working with his people, and I think there will yet be a great work done in Wisconsin. Still, prejudice is very high in some places. The last time I was at Valley Junction I solemnized one marriage—that of Bro. Francis L. Sawley and Sr. Elizabeth Shaw, of the same place.

As there has been no notice of our next district conference, I wish it published, that it will be at North Freedom, October 16th and 20th. We would be pleased to have any of the traveling ministry attend that can do so, especially Bro. A. H. Smith.

Frank Hackett.

KILMANAGH, Mich., Sept. 14th.

Bro. Dancer:—We had a most glorious meeting in our branch last Wednesday evening. The Spirit of God was with us in power and I was blessed with the gift of tongues and the Saints were led to rejoice, and the Lord said if his saints were faithful that they were to receive great blessings. I feel encouraged in the great work of the Master and love to see it roll on until it wends its way to earth's remotest bounds, until every creature has heard the joyful news—the gospel of their salvation.

I feel my weakness very much. Aid me by your prayers, for I need them.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb.

Dear Herald:-After writing I came here to rest, and to recuperate from a severe cold contracted at the Wheeler's Grove camp meeting. Spent last week at Brownville, and through the kindness of Mr. W. T. Moore, was permitted the use of the Baptist church. The attendance was three-fold better than when I was there last June, and those who came out appeared much more friendly, and manitested a spirit of investigation. And while I do not look for an immediate or large ingathering, I believe that our work may be planted there by wise, patient and continuous efforts. Three months ago I sold a gentleman there a "Manuscript Found" and made some statement in regard to the same. Rev. Hicks, a Congregationalist minister, but "pastor" of the M. E. Church, and a graduate of Oberlin College, read the Spaulding Romance and wrote to Prof. Fairchild to enquire relative to the facts set forth in the printed copy we are selling. As I was informed, the reply was of such a character as to satisfy the "Rev." that the "Romance" was not the basis or foundation of the Book of Mormon. But, of course, this will not convert him to the truth, but like many others he will seek some other invention to avoid the revelation of the restored gospel in its simplicity, as Paul wrote to the Corinthians that "the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtility." What would Paul say or write if he were with us now? Perhaps the "hired preachers" might hear this: "Ye stiffnecked and unchristianized in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye."—Acts 7:51.

I would like to be charitable to the learned ministers of sectarianism, but when they speak lightly and evil of God's work, I feel that I should be recreant to a God-appointed duty, if I fail to speak in plainness, and with a warning voice call upon the people to "prove all things; hold fast that which is good,"—I Thess. 5:21; as also, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ."—Col. 2:8.

Our family has met with sad loss in the death of my youngest brother, who passed from the conflict of life to the record and reward of the future last Friday evening. Young, strong and promising, but gone! Sad, but hopeful.

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Sept. 20th.

Mr. David Dancer: — Will you please say through th Herald to those sisters who wish to help the Sisters Aid Society in their work for the new church here, that my address is, Mrs B. C. Smith, Box 270, Independence, Missouri. Anything sent us will be very thankfully received, and should be sent by the 10th of October. We have decided to hold our bazaar with the young ladies who are working for the organ.

Yours very truly,

MRS. B. C. SMITH.

Addison, Maine, Sept. 12th.

Brethren Joseph and William: - Because I haven't written to the Herald for some time you must not think J. C. Foss has been lying idle. Since I reached my old field of labor I have preached in Kennebec, Mason's Bay, Jonesport, Green's Landing, and Addison. Baptized five: others near the kingdom. I found many of my children in the glorious gospel to whom I once labored hard to point out the way, strong in the faith, and they feel like staying on board of the good old ship, Zion, till she lands them safe in the harbor of an endless rest; and others that had grown cold. But I see a few sparks of gospel fire left in them; and as I blow the gospel bellows I see the fire kindles anew on the altar of their hearts. There is a good class of people in Maine, and like Saints in all other parts of the world, they want to be looked after and need help to cheer them up on the onward march.

I received of the governor of the state yesterday, a commission authorizing and empowering me to solemnize marriages within the state.

There are several more points in the Eastern Maine district which I shall visit as soon as possible. I am looking for the president of my mission to be here soon and help me.

Some of our professed Christian ministers who have been trying to pull down the latter day work, have taken a fall themselves. "Cursings, like chickens, come home to roost."

Some have tried to drive members out of our church, but in doing so it only made them stronger in the faith, and drove them nearer the Lord.

My little Mamie was taken very sick last week; throat very sore, and some pronounced it diphtheria. I called upon brethren Aaron W. Kelley and Josiah Steel and we administered to her several times. She seemed to grow worse. I stayed by her day and night and on Tuesday morning I made up my mind that unless God by his power did interpose, her time had come to depart this life. I again anointed her and bowed in prayer over her; and of course I felt to weep over my only child and plead with the God of heaven once more. On Wednesday morning the sore throat was nearly well and the fever gone, and my darling girl up, dressed, and played around the house, and has been to meeting with us all right again, for which I feel to thank my God.

Address Jonesport, Maise.

Maise. Yours truly, J. C. Foss.

POMONA, Cal., Sept. 11th.

W. W. Blair; dear sir:—Is it customary for professed teachers of the law of salvation to ignore entirely questions addressed them for information on the plan of salvation?

I enclose a letter, a copy of which I enclosed with stamp for reply to the Captain of the Salvation Army at Pasadena, California, nearly two weeks ago, and as yet have no reply, though only twenty-five miles intervene. I think if these questions, or any other, came to me from one professedly seeking light, and I did not do what I could to answer them, I might possibly be called upon at the last day for a plain Christian duty, and perhaps for the loss of a soul which I had allowed to wander in darkness. I am forced to think that if people had the light as they profess, they would gladly let it shine when they have occasion, and not hide it under a bushel. I ask you for an answer to these questions, as you have before stood ready and willing to answer according to your understanding.

Yours truly, T. S. Brown.

Captain Willis; dear sir: Being considerably interested in the salvation of souls, I write you for light on one or two points. I brought them before the Salvation Army here, but found them somewhat divided in opinion, and as I did not wish to sow discord I did not press my inquiries. In the first place, you know in Christ's last command before ascension there are three elements, first, Baptism (Matthew 28:19 and Mark 16: 16); second, Faith or belief (Mark 16: 16), and, thirdly, Repentance (Luke 24:47). I give them as they come in the several gospels, though for our reception they would be different. Now, what we can not agree upon is this,-must we obey all three elements? or in other words, can we be saved by baptism and faith without repentance? or baptism and repentance without faith? or repentance and faith without baptism? or by accepting any one element and neglecting the other two? Since all were given in one command, and either element seems equally binding, are we safe in allowing conscience to dictate whether we obey fully, or in part? Another phase of the question, Was water baptism here intended? It would seem to me that it must be, since Christ never authorized any man to baptize with his Spirit; and Peter's first sermon also to make it clear where he does not request, but commands them to be baptized and then they should receive the Holy Ghost (see Acts 2: 38), also in Acts 8: 12 many were baptized, but the baptism of the Holy Ghost was not given till some time after (Acts 8: 16, 17), also in Acts 17: 45 the Holy Ghost was given as a sign to the Jews; after this Peter commanded them to be baptized in water.

Again, Paul says in Heb. 6: 2 (New Translation), the first principles of the docrrine of Christ are baptism, laying on of hands, etc. Now if we stand before the people and teach simple belief as saving us, are we coming short of teaching the first principles of doctrine; also, where have we dropped the laying on of hands? We claim the canon of scripture is full and revelation closed to us, yet I think it must have been closed too soon, or it would inform us that revelation direct from God through his messengers was taken away; also the officers in the primitive church which we are informed God set in the church for certain purposes (see Eph. 4: 12), and to remain till we attain to certain things (see Eph. 4:13), which we certainly have not done, especially come to a unity of faith; besides, we are promised certain gifts in Mark 16: 17 and 1 Cor. 12: 28. Peter's sermon says to as many as God shall call these things shall be given (see Acts 2: 39), and these things are not yet passed unless "the last days" are passed, which from the nature of things can not be. And we can not say those things were promised to the people of that day alone, for St. Paul expressly says, "To all that call upon the name of the Lord, in every place." -I Cor. 1:2. Besides this, the Spirit told St. John in A.D. 96, "That the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy."-Rev. 19: 10; John 3:

Do we have the Spirit of prophecy in these days? If not, have we the testimony of Jesus!

It can do us little good to overlook these things or underestimate this importance; for it will be wholly useless to be without them if intended for our day; and I must confess the language left us all points to this as the very day they were intended for. I have tried to slip over these things and to think them not worth looking after; but what we want is truth. Nothing else will save us; and if we blind our own eyes we are alone responsible for our soul's condemnation.

Hoping to hear from you soon, and that, looking at these things from different positions we may know the truth.

I am yours for the truth.

T. S. Brown.

[Our answer to the foregoing questions of Bro. Brown is simply to say, the texts he quotes and cites should forever settle those questions on the side of Bible Christianity and against the mystified and bewildering creeds and theories of manmade systems of religion. God's word is right; His system of salvation is right; and we may safely say of those who rely on the words of men and their religious systems, thereby ignoring or rejecting the Lord's ways, "Shall their unbelief make the faith of God of none effect? God forbid: yea, let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, that thou mightest be justified in thy saying, and mightest overcome when thou art judged."—Rom. 3: 3, 4.—ED.]

HAMBURG, Iowa, Sept, 25th.

Bro. Blair:—I shall labor here, or east of here, till our conference, and possibly reach Shenandoah. I am having good attentive audiences and expect to baptize some shortly.

KEMPNER, Texas, Sept. 16th.

Dear Herald: We are few in number, though firm in the faith. We have had no preaching since last winter. We had a debate between an Elder Gibson and Brother Ezzell. Brother I. N. Roberts wrote to me since the debate, wanting to know how it came out. The Campbellites say they beat him bad, but there were a good many people here who were almost ready to be baptized into the Church of Christ. They are still reading. Elder Gibson told me he wanted to meet one of our best elders here at the same place, and there are many of our friends that would be glad to hear an elder debate with him. I hope that one of our elders will come and meet him, and preach for us. Yours in Christ,

F. M. OLDHAM.

EAST DELAVAN, Wis., Sept. 16th.

Bro. Blair:-The work in the southern part of this state progresses very slowly; but still it advances, notwithstanding a heavy opposition. There is a strong disposition to keep us from reaching the ears of the people. In some instances this is caused by ignorance of our faith; in others, it is perverse willfulness.

In the early part of July, associated with Elder M. T. Short, I arrived in Walworth county. Our efforts were confined to Springfield, Lyons, Elkhorn, Geneva and Delavan; as also a few rural districts. This work excited comment from the press, which was unreliable and misleading. In the end it was quite generally corrected, the Milwaukee Sentinel giving the Saints fair representation. On September 1st Elder F. M. Cooper was in our midst. After he had done some local work, we repaired to Johnstown, near which place he conducted a short, but I believe successful campaign. We began operatious by attending a yaung people's prayer meeting over which Mr. Alma Woodstock presided. He is a young man of sterling worth. After three discourses, he and his sister, Miss Effie, both of whom have been commendably studying the work for some time, were baptized by Bro. Cooper. Mr and Mrs. Willard Woodstock, their parents, were baptized in June by Elder Henry Southwick. Their grandparent, Willard Woodstock, was an elder in the first organization. Although they were firm in another faith, yet they loved and followed the gospel's glad sound. "Behold I send you Elijah the prophet, . . . and he shall turn the hearts of fathers to their children and the hearts of the children to their fathers." What a noble cause! Who would impede its progress, or stand idly by?

On August 31st I baptized Misses Mamie and Jennie Cooper, who had been taught the way of the Lord by kind and prudent parents. The branch here is increasing slowly in numbers and steadily in unity and spirituality. So let it be.

W. S. PENDER.

EAST DELAVAN, Wis., Sept. 18th.

Bro. Blair: - Six have been baptized into the church during my present trip through the northern part of the district, and the spiritual condition of the Saints is generally good.

At some points in Wisconsin where preaching has been done, threats have been made of pefsonal violence to the preachers; but thus far all appointments have been serious outbreak. Respectfully, F. M. Cooper. appointments have been filled without any

WAYS THAT ARE DOUBTFUL.

BY PRES. JOSEPH SMITH.

FRANKLIN D. RICHARDS, one of the apostles and associate historian of the Utah Mormon Church, has furnished Mr. George J. Hagar, editor of a work entitled, "What the World Believes, The False and the true," published in New York by Gay Brothers and Company, and copyrighted in 1888, a chapter on the history and doctrines of the church of which he is a member and an officer.

On page 600 of that work Mr. Richards gives the following:

"On the 12th of July, 1843, about one year before his death, Joseph Smith received a revelation from God on the eternity of the Marriage covenant, including plurality of wives, wherein the Lord explained the principle and doctrine of men of God having more wives than one; also imposing it upon the church, and commanding its observance, under strict and righteous regulations. In consequence of the prevailing prejudice and opposition to this doctrine, it was not considered prudent to make it public at the time, more especially as it was not applicable to persons not members of the church. Consequently it was not made public until about eight years after Joseph Smith's death, when it was publicly read to the church in special conference at Salt Lake City, and was accepted by the conference August 29th, 1852. It is well understood among Latter Day Saints that Joseph Smith and many other prominent members of the church married, or had sealed to them, several wives. Joseph Smith's first wife was Emma Hale, who was marto him January 18th, 1827. Of the names or number of his other wives, as also the dates of their marriage to him, we are not informed. After the publication of this doctrine the custom of having several wives prevailed to an increased extent in the church. These several wives have always been considered as honorable and their children as legitimate in the sight of God and of the accepted members of the church, as any other wives and children, and have been treated as such."

On pages 601-2 Mr. Richards puts on record the declaration of the doctrines of the church written by Joseph Smith in 1842. It is the same as given by George Q. Cannon in his "Life of Joseph Smith," and the same as published by Joseph Smith himself in Times and Seasons, the official paper of the church from 1840 to

"The establishment of the plural marriage system among the Mormons has been a work of years. It was no sudden social revolution, but has been a steady growth. The 'Revelation on Celestial Marriage' was made known at first to but a few and to them in secret."

"The tragic death of the prophet and patriarch and the exodus from Nauvoo, with the subsequent toilsome march across the wilderness to the vales in the Rocky Mountains somewhat retarded the increase of plural marriage, but at the same time spread a knowledge as to the doctrine and the relations existing under it, because everybody became acquainted with his neighbor's affairs."

"In 1852 the revelation was made public both to the Saints and to the world. The example of men and women, recognized as good citizens and worthy and leading members of the church, who lived in harmony and advocated the system, aided the exposition of the doctrine by the preaching of the elders in establishing the practice among the general community. Only those considered worthy were permitted to engage in it, the ceremony of sealing in each case, whether of a first wife or a plural wife, being exactly the same and solemnized in the name of the Deity for time and all eternity, thus laying hold upon the world to come, it came to be viewed as a mark of distinction and a sacred privilege to be practically connected with what was called the Eternal Order of Patriarchal Marriage,' in which were the 'blessings of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The term polygamy is not considered by the Mormons as properly applied to their marriage system. They call it celestial marriage, because it is an eternal contract under divine regulation; and think that 'Plural Marriage' is more appropriate to them than 'Polygamy.'"

"Each wife usually has her own home. Often it is her own property, held in her own right; for the laws of Utah are very liberal as to the property rights of women, married or single. If circumstances render this impossible, or inexpedient, she lives in her own apartments, with the control of her own children and affairs. Nowhere is the home principle cherished more than among the Mormons; for the family is considered as the present and future heaven. And as the woman is the glory of the man, so the children are the glory of the mother and the basis of her kingdom with her 'love' in the world to come. Thoughtful young women, looking to eternity as well as time, believing that their happiness forever is involved in the choice of a husband, in many instances prefer to trust their destiny to an honorable, God-fearing, industrious man who has proven his integrity in the family relation, both to his wife and his children, rather than chance the risks of an untried and possibly unstable youth who may turn out a blank in that which some call the lottery of wedlock.

"The support of plural families is a puzzle to inquirers familiar with the struggles in monogamic society to support an ordinary family keep up appearances. In the valleys of Utah there are opportunities for accumulating means other than by daily toil which enterprising men are not slow to take advantage of, and these are the class, as a rule, that enter into polygamy.

The wives, too, learn to be economical and thrifty, and are mutually helpful, assisting each other in times of sickness and willing to share with each other in the comforts as well as toils of family life. These women are not butterflies of fashion, but working bees in the family hive. The increase, not the suppression of progeny, is their desire and ambition. Their pleasures are simple and are not the chief object of exertion and existence." . . .

"Of course there are cases of unhappiness and discord in polygamous relations. The people are human beings with like passions and feelings to others. Both men and women, in polygamy as in monogamy, sometimes act foolishly or wickedly or both. The very opportunities that polygamy affords for the exercise of patience, forbearance, charity, self-control, and regard for the wishes of others, are openings for indulgence in their opposites. But experience has demonstrated that those virtues are absolutely necessary to the very existence of plural families, to say nothing of peace and content, which are the groundwork of happiness." . . .

"As there is no rule or obligation that compels a plural wife to remain in relations which she desires to sever, fairness and a proper deportment are rendered necessary on the part of the husband, in order to retain her allegiance and her affections. When all its aspects are viewed impartially, there will be more general surprise that men will assume the multiplied responsibilities of Mormon polygamy, than that women can accept their position in the system."
"The large majority of the people of Utah are monogamous in practice. The female popula-tion is less than the male. 'Celestial Marriage,' as the plural system is called, is only for persons of elevated character, recommended by the local and endorsed by the general church authorities. While all, with but a very few exceptions, believe in the rightfulness of plural marriage under given circumstances, all do not consider it obligatory upon them or that they are suited to its conditions and responsibilities. . . . The polygamists are all disfranchised. No one can vote or hold office who is a polygamist or who will not take an oath to obey the laws. The voters, then, are monogamists, present and prospective. They have framed a State Constitution embodying provisions already in existence under the laws of the United States. . . . The monogamous Mor-mons do not refer to matters of faith in the Constitution they have framed, for these are outside But they intend in good faith to carry out the provisions they have made under the State in deference to the pronounced decision of the vast majority of the nation, not as a religious but as a political measure. The polygamists have no voice in the matter, for they have no votes. The people who have broken no law claim the rights of citizens under the law, and they deny the justice of depriving them of political rights because of the alleged misdemean-or of others over whom they have no control."

Whether Mr. Apostle Franklin D. Richards was selected by his co-laborers to furnish this chapter of history for the work named, or not, we are not informed; but as he is one of the leading officers of the church, and an associate in the office of the Historian, it is fair to presume, that so far as the church to which he belongs, and which he represents in his article, is concerned, he writes authoritatively. With this thought we review the chapter, in regard to the one subject, "plural or celestial marriage."

Mr. Richards gives the day and date on which Joseph Smith is said to have "received a revelation from God" on the marriage relation, and gives the date as July 12th, 1843. He further states that it was "imposed" upon the church, and its "observance commanded under strict and righteous regulations."

Notwithstanding this, it was "about eight years after Joseph Smith's death," that this important revelation by which such a radical and pronounced change in regard to the sacred institution of marriage in the church was made public. This "about eight years," was from June 27th, 1844, to August 20th, 1852, eight years and two months; and nine years, one month and seventeen days from the stated date of its reception, according to Mr. Richards. But Mr. Richards states that because of the "prevailing prejudice and opposition" to the doctrine it was deemed "prudent not to make it public."

It would appear from the above statement of Mr. Richards that the time for the giving of this revelation was a very inopportune one; that the Lord had not chosen wisely the period of time and the condition of men's minds in which to "impose" this change in their practices. If it was not prudent in those to whom the commandment came to make it public, what shall be said of the prudence of the one who gave the command at the inopportune and unfortunate period at which these men say that it was given? Besides this, it is not a little singular that the determination of the time should have been left as it appears by Mr. Richards' statement it was, to the caprice or judgment of President B. Young, instead of having been made the subject of command in the revelation itself. For, if Mr. Richards is correct in stating that it was imposed upon the church, by command requiring its observance, and there is no specific time given for its promulgation as an edict from God in the document itself, then it must be in force from the date it was given and should have been made public then. This was not the case, however, for Mr. Richards states that it was "made known to but a few, and to them in secret." This secrecy was maintained, it appears, until the exodus from Nauvoo, when "everybody knew everybody else's affairs"! of course then it leaked out. And it was not until this "leaking out" of knowledge concerning other people's affairs had involved all the leading men in the church, who submitted to the rule of Pres. B. Young, in complicity with the practice of this thing brought in "ptivily," that it became prudent to make it public.

Mr. Richards correctly states that the document called a revelation was read at a conference held August 29th, 1852, at Salt Lake City; but the minutes of that conference, as published in the Salt Lake Deseret News, current volume, and republished in the Millennial Star, fail to to show any acceptance by vote, or anything that indicates that consideration and examination of the document was had, or even offered to the conference, or that any submission to the conference for acceptance or rejection of it was had. It was read at a special conference, called for a different purpose as stated by Pres. B. Young himself, as the minutes show, and not a man was allowed to say a word except the set sermon preached by Elder Orson Pratt, on the occasion. The reason why it was not reserved to be read at the annual, or semi-annual session of conference, or why it was not formally presented for examination, and comparison with the word of God already accepted by the church, does not appear of record. Neither was it at the time it was received by Joseph Smith, as stated by Mr. Richards, or at any subsequent time, officially presented to either of the three leading quorums of the church whose decision might be had in regard to its acceptability, that we have ever been informed of. No report from either quorum accompanied the document when presented by B. Young to that special conference, nor was any such report read. There was no previous notice given of the presentation of the dogma, no call made for the official gathering of the quorums that they might act as they did when the Doctrine and Covenants was presented to be declared the law of the church, as was done in August, 1835. Hence we can but conclude that Mr. Richards either purposely, or ignorantly, misstates when he says that the revelation was accepted by the conference, August 29th, 1852.

Mr. Richards states that "it is well understood among Latter Day Saints that Joseph Smith and many other prominent members of the church married, or had sealed to them, several wives. It would be curious to now discover how many were "the few" to whom this grave departure from the "righteous law" of 1831 was revealed "in secret;" and how many were the "many" prominent men who married several wives. This uncertain number, so variously stated to be "but few" in one line, and "many," in another; to be so secretly known that but "few" knew of it, and yet so widely known that it was "well understood," is very puzzling to him that is searching for the straight of it. Especially is this bewildering when the reader further reads Mr. Richards' statement that Joseph Smith's first wife was Emma Hale, the date of whose marriage to the prophet is known and given, January 18th, 1827; but that of "the names, or number of his other wives, as also the dates of their marriage to him, we are not informed." It is well for men to sometimes state the truth, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Richards has done so in the foregoing just quoted. What hidden meaning, or subtle difference of intent Mr. Richard's may hold as expressed in the words, "or had sealed to them," following the word "married," does not appear; but whatever it may be, as the laws of Illinois declared the having more than one wife at the same time to be bigamy, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, it can not safely be held to be a ceremony of marriage such as made Joseph Smith and Emma Hale husband and wife, without making Joseph Smith to have been at the time a breaker of the law of the state where he lived and died.

Mr. Richards states that the observance of the command enjoining plural marriage was to be "under strict and righteous regulations."

What these regulations are does not appear from the document, nor is there in it a commandment to the church commanding its adoption and observance as a rule for the government of the church. It was made known to but "a few," and even as late as 1852, "only those considered worthy were permitted to engage in it." And yet the "practice" was established "among the general community." Mr. Richards does not state by whom the worthiness to take several wives in plural marriage was determined, during the period in which the doctrine was growing upon the community; nor is there anything in the document, called a revelation, that defines the characteristics of the candidates to this peculiar distinction. We believe, however, from the evidence of those who were in membership with the Utah church at that time and since, who have refused credence to that dogma, that this prerogative was exercised by President B. Young; and that he alone decided as to the fitness or unfitness of the one who desired to avail himself of this peculiar doctrine. We believe, and from the same evidence, that in many instances individuals were commanded by President Young and President Kimball to involve themselves in the meshes of the system, when not only the lawful wife objected, but their own inclinations and judgment were against the entanglement. Subsequently to the death of President Young, the matter of worthiness is said to have been made dependent upon the recommend of the Bishop of the ward where the man lived, subject to the endorsement of the President of the church, thus virtually making the local bishop the judge of the qualifications of the candidate for celestial marriage, checked only by the veto power invested in the President. The document claimed as the basis for the system is silent in regard to how this worthiness is to be determined; and we can only conclude that if a man could stand in with the bishop, favoritism would succeed where worth were wanting; and Mr. Richards' admission that "there are cases of unhappiness and discord in polygamous relations," admits that some unworthy ones have been permitted to engage in its practice. One man, whose acquaintance with plural marriage extended over many years, publicly stated that when he "took polygamy into his household, he took hell in with it." Another, extensively acquainted in the territory of Utah, stated in the presence of his wife and the writer hereof, that he had visited the families of many from the north to the south of Utah, and being a member of the church in good standing, there was no attempt to conceal the real conditions from him, and that in "no single instance in which the second wife had been taken, was there happiness in the household afterwards." Mr. Richards admits in so many words that "patience, forbearance, charity, self-control and regard for the wishes of others," are "absolutely necessary to the very existence of plural families, to say nothing of peace and content, which are the groundwork of happiness."

One of the most astounding features of this many sided presentation of Mr. Richards' is the following:

"As there is no rule or obligation that compels a plural wife to remain in relations she desires to sever, fairness and a proper deportment are rendered necessary on the part of the husband, in order to retain her allegiance and her affections."

Compare this with Mr. Richards' statement that "the ceremony of sealing in each case, whether of a first wife, or a plural wife, being exactly the same and solemnized in the name of Deity for time and all eternity, thus laying hold upon the world to come," and we have one of the strangest contradictions possible to conceive of. Mr. Richards is attempting to give a satisfactory showing of plural marriage existing among the Mormons as a religious tenet and practice, as contradistinguished from the one-wife rule obtaining elsewhere, and in doing so starts out with the statement that it was instituted by divine commandment, to be observed under "strict and righteous regulations;" that it was a celestial contract and reached beyond time into eternity; that it was held to be a matter of great distinction and a "sacred privilege" to be united in relations in the "Eternal Order of Patriarchal Marriage," and insists that it should be called "Celestial Marriage, because it is an eternal contract under divine regulations;" that the ceremony of marriage with the first wife and with the plural wife or wives is the same, exactly the same, and yet there is no rule or obligation which requires for compels a plural wife to remain in such relations should she desire to sever them.

If the ceremony by which marriage is solemnized between a man and a first or only wife, under this celestial order, is the same as that by which the same man is made the husband of a plural wife or wives, then the rule and obligation upon the wife to remain in the marital relation with the man whom she thus marries are the same as those which bind the plural wife or wives—neither better nor worse. If Mr. Richards' statement is correct, (and we have reason from the statements of others of the same church as himself to believe that the matter of obligation under the plural wife system is so understood by them), then the perpetuity of this "eternal contract of marriage" is terminable upon the will, whim, caprice, wish, or desire of the wife or wives married or sealed under its rule. Surely, then, there is nothing more binding upon the husband than upon the wife or wives; for if there is no rule or obligation upon the wife, there can be none upon the husband. Can there possibly be among monogamists a marriage system whose rule or obligation is looser and less binding than this plural marriage system as stated by Mr. Richards?

There is in the document called a revelation, and which Mr. Richards gives as the divine sanction for plural marriage, no provision for divorce, and no rule for disannulling the contract once made under it: hence the statement made that there is "no rule or obligation" enforcing its observance must have been made because of some subsequent teaching not warranted by the document itself, teaching which not only violates the article itself, but ignores and vitiates it as well as practically dishonoring the command, "Thou shall love thy wife with all thy heart and cleave unto her and none else," and this further enactment of the Lord: "Whosoever shall put away his wife and marry another committeth adultery against her. And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery." –Mark 10: 11, 12.

Mr. Richards states that "Celestial Marriage is only for persons of elevated character, recommended by the local and endorsed by the general church authorities." Elsewhere he states:

"In the valleys of Utah there are opportunities for accumulating means other than by daily toil which enterprising men are not slow to take advantage of, and these are the class, as a rule, that enter into polygamy."

What these opportunities are to accumulate wealth in other ways than by daily toil which the valleys of Utah offer to men of enterprise, different from and superior to the valleys of other states and territories of the United States, Mr. Richards does not state; but from what he does state the men of daily toil, the workers by hand, are as a class precluded from the privileges of this celestial law; but the men of enterprise and wealth, who gather their means in other ways than by daily toil, make up the class of polygamists. The inference which Mr. Richards intends to be drawn from this is, that polygamists support their wives. What does he mean then, when he states:

"The wives, too, learn to be economical and thrifty, and are mutually helpful, assisting each other in times of sickness and willing to share with each other in the comforts as well as trials of family life. These women are not butterflies of fashion, but working bees in the family hive."

The idea of support from a husband conveyed in the statement concerning men of enterprise and wealth being the ones suffered to enter into polygamy, thus accounting for the sustenance and maintenance of plural families, and the one of selfdependence and self-support which is imposed upon women by plural marriage, are incompatible one with the other. But the history of the system in Utah illustrates sadly that the latter has been and is far too frequently the case.

Mr. Richards states that

"Thoughtful young women, looking to eternity as well as time, believing that their happines forever is involved in the choice of a husband, in many instances prefer to trust their destiny to an honorable, God-fearing, industrious man who has proved his integrity in the family relation, both to his wife and his children, rather than chance the risks of an untried and possibly unstable youth who may turn out a blank in that which some call the lottery of wedlock."

If Mr. Richards had stated that this condition of belief on the part of these "thoughtful young women" had been the result of long continued and persistent teaching upon the part of the old men and leaders of the church, who claimed that these young and untried men "could not save" the women whom they marry, not having sufficient "priesthood," he would have partially accounted for the morbid condition of mind under which a young woman could prefer plural marriage with a man already married, to a first marriage with one of a suitable age. And when we take into consideration the statement that women in plural marriage are under "no rule or obligation to remain" in such relation, how can the statement be accepted that such a young woman's "happiness forever" is involved in her "choice of a husband?" The practical result in Utah of such unions as Mr. Richards suggests, has been to leave young women, plural wives, unprovided for at the death of the plural husband, plural widows, frequently with children to care for, under conditions worse than widowhood indeed.

"The large majority of the people of Utah are monogamous in practice. The female popula-tion is less than the male."

So states Mr. Richards. This is the statement of the situation in a nutshell. How Mr. Richards should have blundered into such a statemement, in view of the history of the advocacy and defense of plural marriage by the elders of his church during the last thirty-five years, and the possible facts in the case, is very curious. But God having instituted wedlock and given the pattern in Eden, has so ordained the laws governing the existence of mankind that each man and woman has by creation and birth an equal and indisputable right to a companion. The female population of Utah being less than that of the male, absolutely forbids and makes impossible the carrying out of a command to observe a law of plural marriage, if any such command had ever been given. If it is a privilege to a few men, that privilege is exercised at the expense of some other man's right, constructively, and defeats the idea of its being a reward of merit; as worthiness may possibly attach to the many while few receive the reward. The equal numbers of the men and women of Utah is God's standing protest and argument against the plural marriage system! If plural marriage is a command to the church, it is to all; and all should feel it to be obligatory upon them; but its impossibility is an argument against the claim for its divinity.

The claim is stated by Mr. Richards

"The monogamous Mormons do not refer to matters of faith in the Constitution they have framed, for these are outside of politics. But they intend in good faith to carry out the provisions they have made under the state in deference to the pronounced decision of the vast majority of the nation, not as a religious but a political measure. The polygamists have no voice in the matter for they have no votes. The people who have broken no law claim the rights of citizens under the law, and they deny the justice of depriving them of political rights because of the alleged misdemeanor of others over whom they have no control."

In the closing sentence of the foregoing statement lies the mischief of the whole plural wife system. The monogamous portion, made so not because of belief in its rightfulness, but from necessity and impossibility to be otherwise, are not in "control," religiously; and were not politically funtil polygamists were disfranchised, if they are now. The polygamous element is the controlling one; and Mr. Richards hurts his cause when he states,—

"While all, with but very few exceptions, believe in the rightfulness of plural marriages under given circumstances, all do not consider it obligatory upon them, or that they are suited to its conditions and responsibilities."

The belief of the majority in the system presented by Mr. Richards thus being publicly stated, the "control" admitted to be in the minority who have been disfranchised, not because of "alleged misdemeanor" under the law, but for actual infraction of its provisions, what guarantee has the people of the nation, or the government, of the professed good faith of those who framed that State Constitution and are asking admission to statehood under it? If this monogamous majority can not now control that polygamous minority, "over whom they have no control," what is there apparent in the system that is assuring to the ordinary looker on, and to the Government, that when statehood should be conferred this same monogamous majority would any more control the disturbing plural marriage minority than it does now? When all believe it, and would practice it were it possible for them to do so, what restraint would this believing multitude exercise upon those of the minority who would disregard those provisions framed against their practice, as a political measure, because of the "pronounced decision of the vast majority of the Nation"?

We do no violence to the people when we presume from Mr. Richards' statement that, did the "given circumstances" make it possible for all the men to practice plural marriage, they would do it. Hence we may be pardoned for a degree of incredulity in not accepting the plea, that these who refrain should not be deprived of any right or privilege as citizens by reason of misdemeanors committed by those who not only believe, but having the courage of their convictions or inclinations, practice it to the infraction of laws against it. The very fact stated by Mr. Richards that the majority has no control over the minority, is a confession that it would not have were the conditions changed by statehood, for the idea of the majority ruling is thus denied. If this great majority, monogamous in its practice, had in the past controlled in Utah, or would now assert the right of the majority to control the minority, and stop further infractions of the pronounced opinion of the American sentiment crystalized into National law, then we and all who may be directly or remotely interested in the matter, either religiously or politically, could accept Mr. Richards' statement that the monogamous Mormons intend in good faith to carry out the provisions named. Or if the polygamous minority, those who have so far held the control, and who have disregarded and are now disregarding the law which reflects the "pronounced decision of the vast majority of the nation," will fall into line with the monogamous majority and avow their willingness and intention to carry out such provisions enacted by the majority, then we and all others would feel much more readiness to accept Mr. Richards' statement and plea. But while the minority refuses to give such assurance, and the majority alleges that they can not control, it leaves their declaration of good faith and intention to be received doubtfully.

The minority believing in and practicing plural marriage are aided, abetted and sustained in their opinion and deeds by the opinions and sustaining concurrence in "belief" of the believing majority who do not practice though they do believe, notwithstanding the open profession of abandonment made by the majority. The argument by the pluralist is, "These brethren of ours are not in the practice of this doctrine; they make no sacrifices, and abandon no wives in making the concessions they do. They believe as sincerely as we do, and would practice as we do if they could; hence they make a virtue of the necessity. We can not endorse their profession in good faith. They have no control over us now, and would not have if they succeed in having their constitution accepted and Utah made a state. Believing as they do with us in the matter, we would be quite safe if they should come into the exercise of state powers; for they could easily defeat the provisions of the constitution by neglecting to pass statutory enactments by which those provisions could be enforced. And if such statutory enactments were passed, our brethren could not conscientiously enforce them against us and bring violators of those statutes to punishment, because it is a matter of religious conscience and their belief is like ours; so in either case we have nothing to fear."

Would there be anything faulty in such reasoning from the premises offered by Mr. Richards in the chapter we have been examining? If so, where is it?

In the declaration of the faith of the church as given by Mr. Richards, from the pen of Joseph Smith in 1842 and 1844, there is no provision for plural marriage. The position and declaration of the church on the marriage relation is given in the Church Articles and Covenants, and is,

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else;"

And

"We declare that we believe, that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death when either is at liberty to marry again."

In apparent palliation of the complete antagonism and radical and opposing differences between the system of marriage and the belief of the church in regard to the domestic relation, existing during the lifetime and at the death of Joseph Smith, and the system and belief obtaining in Utah, and of which Mr. Richards is writing, he states:

"The establishment of the Plural Marriage system among the Mormons has been the work of years. It was no sudden social revolution, but has been a steady growth."

Just so. The document alleged to be a revelation from God announces a philosophy which is totally at variance with the facts of creation, the spiritual precepts and teaching of Christ and the New Testament Scriptures, the American idea and institution of the home and family relation, the positive declaration of God in the Book of Mormon, and the direct commandment of God to the Church itself, which commandment was in force at the establishment of the Church in r830 and unrepealed at the death of Joseph Smith and since. Plural marriage was a doctrine "brought in privily," in "secret." Men of minds congenial to its tendencies found it convenient; they accepted it readily, or by its blandishments broke down and discarded the teaching already obtaining as the rule of faith and practice, and blundered headlong and blindly into it. When once enmeshed in its practice, policy dictated to them that others must be entrapped also. So, like a cancer on the social sytem, it spread wherever its roots found congenial soil, until the secrecy of its introduction could no longer be kept; then with a flourish of prophecy on President B. Young's part, and an elaborate eulogy upon the philosophy delivered by Elder Orson Pratt, the "social revolution" was completed so far as Utah Mormons were concerned. What the harvest of such sowing shall be remains to time and time's events to determine.

ELDER CAFFALL'S REJOINDER.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—May it please you: Nothing since my identification with and essaying to live the laws God has given to govern the church which it has pleased him to establish in the latter days, which—as I believe—is to prepare a people for Christ's second coming, has appeared more compatible with the genius and Spirit of God's saving method than Saints reasoning with each other, with a view to a greater proficiency in the Master's cause.

And I am not aware of being prompted by impure motives in penning thoughts on the sheep and goat question. Nevertheless, my doing so appeared, as it would seem, distasteful to you; and so, as if to evince a zeal, a care for, and correspondingly strive to guard the church against (what from your standpoint may be) pernicious doctrine, and its promulgation proving prejudical to the cause, you essay (as I think) to prejudice your readers against the sentiments which my poor effusions breathed, by raising the cry of "the tradition of the elders," and in effect say, "Look at and receive my pure ebullitions as food plucked from the tree of knowledge.'

Accusations and loud claims beget expectations, and so it was when I read your reply in Herald of August 10th, and saw your efforts (as visible as I see the pencil that moves between my fingers while reducing thoughts to paper) to impress your readers with the belief that Elder Caffall and other elders were wallowing in the mire of tradition.

I looked first for the definition of tradition, followed by scriptural proof, backed up with fair reasoning and good logic, as proof of my traditional career; but I reachthe end of said reply but to meet with a disappointment, which forcibly reminded me of one mortal seeing a fellow-mortal encased in the earth, from which predicament he could not extricate himself, and tauntingly telling him he was in the hole, yet showing no sympathy nor help.

I fail to see your purpose in such a procedure; and it would ill become me—in view of the profundity of your knowledge, and claim to a towering gospel rectitude—to offer suggestions; but I may think. And I think, with sober thinkers, that your efforts to berate an opponent will add nothing to your gigantic efforts to gain a coveted prominence in the discussion, or detract from mine. And I am encouraged to know that there are to be found those among us who dare do their own thinking. You will hardly claim, I think, that such a procedure is evincive of the dignity of an honorable journalist; or indulge the thought of its being compatible with the genius of Christ's religion.

Did the Herald's circulation stop within the limits of those before whom I go in and out and co-operate with, your indirect accusation would have given me no concern, for I have had to stagger under the effects of suspicion before; but perhaps thousands read the Herald whom I shall never see, and who know not my manner of procedure; hence the apology, if an apology is needed for this defense. But I think an attack makes a defense permissible

I have nothing but the highest regard and profound respect for brother, sister or friend who will remind me of a fault I may evince, however it might touch my morbid sensitiveness, of which I have a full share, as I expect to reach perfection, if reached at all, by a correction of faults as fast as made conscious of them; not that I would indulge in wrong because of the privilege to recant, or be always sinning and always repenting, but rather strive to climb higher in Christ's likeness. Having launched my frail bark on the tempestuous sea of time that perchance I may reach the haven of rest, I find a frequent pause necessary to more thoroughly examine the God-given chart, and ascertain my spiritual whereabouts, and be made sensible of my slow advance toward Christ's righteousness. But, sir, I am not made sensible (though your accusation has induced me to make a more rigid self-examination) of the remotest wish to play the hypocrite under a righteous garb to decoy struggling, honest Latter Day Saints or seekers after truth into the meshes of tradition.

I think I thirst for a gospel zeal, an even tenor, a gospel rectitude in its fullest and grandest sense. Nor do I believe that sensationalism, wild excitement, impulsiveness, exaggeration, etc., have the least affinity with such a rectitude; yet I believe efforts to substitute these proclivities in lieu of such a rectitude possible; and many being infatuated thereby, probable; and correspondingly labor to dim the dazzling light of the above rectitude. Development in and out of the church tends to confirm the validity of the instruction of the Palmyra Seer-not only as to the fact of the existence of false spirits, but how, or what measures to adopt to escape their pernicious influences.

In your production of proof as to my traditional career (which I hope you won't delay) I shall hope for grace to recant and make reparation for evil done. I also hope you will please inform me if contributors to the Herald are expected to duplicate the Associate Editor's views, or be brought under his lash for daring to advance an adverse thought; so that in the future I may not exceed the limits. Please produce this proof and explanation in language adapted to my limited capacity, that I may gain understanding. Furthermore: I have thought a law-imposed procedure should precede accusation or charges, consisting of labor, etc., to be reflected in Matt. 18; D. & C. 42:22; 64:2, latter part of the paragraph. Please inform me if in this I am mistaken. Pardon this lengthy prelude and the making of self so prominent.

I was willing to let the question of the sheep and the goats drop, not wishing to aid in a protracted discussion that might be distasteful to the readers of the Herald, feeling a personal indifference whether my views were accepted or no, but for the above attack.

I have not, nor do I now believe that Matthew's sheep and Christ's saints who confess him before men, and die triumphant in the faith, or these my (Christ's) brethren, are identical. Your editorial of August 31st represents you as strongly endorsing a method of comparison which some wise man advocates; and, as I view it, you very flippantly refer to "isolated, disconnected facts," "jumping at conclusions," "digging deep," etc., and he who reads can not fail to see where you intend such blows to fall.

The Bible, and the Doctrine and Covenants teach that rewards and punishments are as diversified as the stars, as proof of God's munificence. But not exactly so with the Book of Mormon, an history of God's principal plants, who wandered in the wilderness and went over the sea, to whom the oracles of God were committed; hence the promises were to the faithful, and the threatenings of said book to the wicked who turned from the light that was always held up to them, in the radiance of which they might have walked, but would not. Hence a method of comparison leading to confusions based upon comparing the teachings of the latter book with the former books may be a matter for serious thought, on the subject of punishments and rewards in the coming time of reckoning by the Just Judge.

Furthermore, I believe Christ's teachings are authoritative and complete in themselves, therefore imperative; whether found in one or all of the three books. And I have never learned to quote from Christ's representatives to test the validity of Christ's teachings, but the reverse of this.

But your claim that Matthew's sheep and Christ's saints are identical, necessitates you to say, in effect, that the sheep did more good works than the Judge will credit them with, and that the goats will not go into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels for merely failing to perform or exhibit such benevolence. Then you go in quest of teaching to show what good works saints must perform, and what demoralizing deeds the sons of perdition must be guilty of, and reach the conclusion that the sheep are the saints, the goats those sinning against the Holy Ghost. This I gather from your editorial of August 31st with, as I suppose, some similar developments in the near future. And this I suppose you think an effective method to save the church from the damning effects of elders' traditions.

But I meet with what appears to me a sort of a snag. In Reply of July 13th you say that the term "righteous" can only be applied to Christ's actual followers; yet in your reply of August 10th you avow your belief that all, saint and sinner, will be rewarded according to their works, "and those giving a cup of cold water to a disciple of Christ will receive a reward." Now if Christ gives a reward it must be for a righteous act, hence the recipient of such a reward must be righteous in a sense; and as with those receiving a reward for a cup of water, so with those receiving a reward for receiving a righteous man in the name of a righteous man etc.; hence your claim as to the application of the term "righteous," is faulty. You also say that the parable (Matt. 25th) divides the nations into but two classes; yet that will not preclude the goats from resting under various degrees of condemnation etc., thus making more classes than one of the goats; yet in your editorial of August 31st you claim that the goats are the same as Paul and Jacob refers to as sinning against the Holy Ghost, making them one class. And here appears to be another snag, making your logic defective, or so I think, since God decrees bestowing rewards for righteous deeds, making the fact of degrees of glory as palpable as the shining of the sun; therefore other glories than the celestial. It is fair to presume that the other glories are also prepared in the divine mind from the foundation of the world; hence, your claim that Matthew's sheep are Christ's saints because he invites them to inherit a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world, I think not well taken. And as to the term "ye blessed of my Father," why, Sir, "every good gift and every perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights," etc.—James 1:17. And if the sun and the rain are good and perfect gifts, then all partaking thereof are blessed of the Father, therefore the righteous, the saints, the redeemed; where then are the sinners or unrighteous?

Moreover, in the reply of August 10th you claim that Christ never promised the Saints any other kingdom than the kingdom of God, the kingdom of heaven prepared from the foundation of the world, etc, which I think damaging to your claim for Matthew's sheep; for the king says nothing to them about the kingdom of God or the kingdom of heaven, hence in the light of the above logic they can not be the saints. And the fact of Christ only recognizing them as the blessed of the Father to inherit the kingdom prepared for them etc., because of benevolent acts to these my brethren, is supportive of the thought of their being a different class to the saints, the climax of proof being found in the following facts:

1st, Christ says he is the Good Shepherd and knows his sheep and is known of his--John 10: 14. John 7: 17 promises a knowledge of the doctrine to those doing the Fathers will.—8: 12. Those following Christ are to have the light of life.—17: 3. Christ declares this is eternal life "that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

2d, The knowledge of Christ and God, received by or through the doctrine in the mortal life becomes so much more intensified in the blazing light of eternity, that those meeting Christ will "see him as he is," (John 3: 2) saying, "This is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us" etc.—Isaiah 25: 9. Now they see through a glass darkly, but then—in the perfect day—face to face; see as seen, know as known.—1 Cor. 13:12. Christ knows his saints, his saints know him.

3d, All that offend and do iniquity are to be gathered out.—Matt. 13:41. The foolish virgins not being ready will not enter, the wise being ready will enter .-Matt. 25:9, 10. Hence those being ready are as a bride adorned for her husband. 4th, In the face of these, and many other similar scriptural facts, the sheep being non-anticipatory of glory, and evincing a profound ignorance of Christ, serves as proof that they never confessed Christ before men, hence were not Christ's brethren, but did minister to the wants of his brethren.

Other items in your replies and editorials invite attention, but with a passing notice of but one more, I will close: You affirm that the judgment reflected in Matthew is final, which appears to me a bold stroke. I read of times of refreshing coming from the presence of the Lord to blot out the sins of certain characters,-Acts 3:19; of prisoners being visited after many days, -Isa. 24:22; of Assur, Elam, Meshech, Edom—her kings and princes, the princes of the north, all of them, and all of the Zidonians, which are all gone down with the slain; with a thus saith the Lord; that Pharaoh shall see them and be comforted over all his multitude and all his, or my, slain.—Ezekiel 32:22-31. Of saints judging the world—1 Cor. 6:2; and I wonder whether these stupendous, God-foretold events are to be developed before, at, or after the judgment reflected by Matthew? And I am quite frank to say, I don't know.

But does not the word say, "And before him shall be gathered all nations"? Yes, but that is but a revealment of the fact that all nations will come before him; with not an inference as to how, when or where, or in what order all nations will be brought before him. And whether the "all nations" refers to all nations that ever have been, or the all nations of a particular dispensation, I could not decide. believe, as there is to be an order observed in the resurrection of the just-Christ the first fruits, etc., 1 Cor. 15:23—there will be an order in the judgment of nations. And God's judgment being eternal, should suggest a caution in deciding as to the finality of God's work of redemption. For who can know the heights, the fathomless depths, the breadths and lengths of God's munificence and mighty power to

The fact of the twelve apostles being with Christ, as the Inspired Translation declares, would favor the thought that the judgment which Matthew mentions was the judgment of or for the nations who lived in the dispensation of those apostles. But the declaration of Joseph Smith, namely, that all God's judgments are not given to man—D. & C., page 117—is quite compatible with the promise of "here a little," etc., and the great inducements of living to and being governed by the written word, thus preparing for what God may yet reveal, is seen in the fact of Christ the mighty one, beginning and finishing his work in the advocacy of that which was written; and his reproof to the apostles for being slow to believe what the prophets had written.

Human folly is never more conspicious than when essaying to enter into and explain in detail what God has but revealed in generalities, but man will soar and delve. Christ's declaration never shone with greater brilliancy and significance than now, "I go to prepare a place for you."-John 14:3. In gospel bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

MARRIED.

DAVIES-WOOLMAN .- At the Saints' Church, in St. Louis, Missouri, September 19th, 1889, Elder Isaac M. Smith officiating, brother Ivor Davies and sister Lillie Woolman, both of St. Louis. After the ceremony quite a company of invited guests repaired to Bro. Noah Cooke's, where supper was served and all had an enjoyable time. All wish the couple a happy voyage through life.

DIED.

-At Independence, Missouri, Septem-Myers.ber, 21st, 1889, in his 76th year, Bro. Bartley Myers. He was born in Sussex county, New Jersey, in 1814; was baptized into the Reorganization in 1866 by Elder J. Wadsworth, at Newton, Iowa, and was ordained an Elder at the same place by Elder I. N. White. He moved from thence to Independence several years ago, and died at the residence of his son-in law, Bro. F. W. Barbee. Bro. Myers was an exemplary Saint, always at his post in the house of God, faithful in testimony, steadfast in the faith, and was beloved of all. His death resulted from heart failure. active until the day before his death; and suddenly, though quietly, passed away in peace to join the ranks of the redeemed ones beyond the river. Funeral services were conducted at the Saints' Chapel on the 22nd by Joseph Luff, and a large concourse of sympathizing friends followed the remains to the cemetery. Sr. Myers is left a widow after fifty-two years of happy companionship. One son in Iowa, and one daughter at Independence, besides many other relatives are among the mourners left.

POWELL.—David W. Powell died at Cleveland, Lucas Co., Iowa, Wednesday, Sept. 4th, 1889, about noon. He was killed in mine No. 2 about that hour, while walking out of the mine and returning home from work by the falling of a large piece of slate in the mine passage-way, killing him instantly. Bro. Powell was an earnest, faithful, and consistent member of the church, being active and zealous in the discharge of his duties, and on the night before his death bore a faithful testimony to the work, and expressed a great desire to continue to the end in the service of the Master; and under the power of the Spirit admonished the young to diligence and faithfulness. At that meeting he seemed to enjoy a great degree of the Holy Spirit which continued with him till death, as some of the brethren testify who were in conversation with him some twenty minutes before the accident. Hence we have the blessed assurance that our beloved brother has gone down to his grave in the possession of that Spirit which Paul said would quicken our mortal bodies, and bring us forth in the resurrection of the just. He was born January 7th, 1863, at Danville, Vermillion Co., Illinois. He leaves a wife and two children and a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn their loss. was followed to his last resting place by the largest funeral cortege ever witnessed in this place, evincing their great respect for our departed Funeral Sunday Sept. 8th, in charge of brother. Elder John Watkins, prayer at the grave and sermon at the Saints chapel by Elder John Shippy to a large audience.

AIRD.—[The following from The Wasatch Wave of July 6th, 1889, will be of interest to those who knew Bro. William Aird, of Heber City, Utah:] "At his residence in this city, at four o'clock p. m., July 4th, of failure of the heart, William Aird, aged 68 years 4 months and Deceased was born in Kilmarnock, Scotland, on March 3d, 1821, and emigrated to Utah in 1853. He was one of the first settlers in Heber, having come here in 1861, and was a respected citizen."

A TANGLED WEB:

BY WHOM IS IT WOVEN?

In a work of some five hundred pages, entitled "Life of Joseph the Prophet," and of which George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency of the Church in Utah, known as the Mormon Church, is the author, printed and issued from the Juvenile Instructor office, Salt Lake City, Utah, 1888, is a chapter purporting to be a relation of the introduction of the dogma of plurality of wives into the doctrines and tenets of the church, This chapter opens

"Every woman has the right to virtuous wifehood and maternity. This was the omnipotent design in her creation. Yet how shall it be fulfilled under modern systems? Clearly the Creator can make known."

"When they are out of the world, they neither marry nor are given in marriage,' saith the revelation; therefore the ties of conjugal relation must be made here, and to endure beyond the gates of death they must be fixed by an eternal covenent with the divine sanction." . . .

"The decree of the Lord making known to the prophet the eternity and plurality of marriage, was a part of this sublime plan. It came to him little by little, as he was enabled to bear the dazzling light of celestial glory; and when eventually the full view of the holy order was permitted to him, he saw the principles of eternal progression, the laws by which the universe is filled with shining and inhabited spheres to make the infinite glory of our God. The exaltation of these visions was all that mortal could bear; and the prophet felt that the dull, selfish world would refuse to understand the purity and promise, would refuse to undergo the earthly trials to secure the heavenly blessing, and would seek the death of such humble disciples of the Savior as should embrace this principle of eternal life."

"Even after that portion of the revelation now recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants was made known to him, Joseph did not write it for a time; although he obeyed its commands and taught it to Hyrum and other faithful men, who, in praver and humility before God, accepted and fulfilled its requirements."

"The revelation therefore remained the unwritten law of God, established in the hearts and obeyed in the lives of some of His faithful servants, until the 12th day of July, 1843, when it was recorded, that it might remain a comfort and guide to the people after Joseph and Hyrum should pass away. On that day, under the Prophet's dictation, and in the presence of Hyrum, the revelation was written by William Clayton. A copy of it was taken the next day by Joseph C. Kingsbury for Bishop Newel K. Whitney."

"On the 12th day of August, 1843, the revelation was read before the High Council and Presidency of the Stake at Nauvoo. There were present Hyrum Smith, who presented the principle; William Marks, Charles C. Rich and Austin Cowles, the Stake Presidency; and Samuel Bent, William Huntington, Alpheus Cutler, Thomas Grover, Lewis D. Wilson, David Fullmer, Aaron Johnson, Newel Knight, Leonard Sobey, Isaac Allred, Henry G. Sherwood and Samuel Smith, the High Council."

"After reading the revelation, Hyrum promised his brethren that they who accepted it should be blessed and sustained in the Church by the Spirit of God and the confidence of the Saints, and they who rejected it should fall away in their faith and power; and it was even so."

"To promulgate this commandment and to obey it was probably the Prophet's greatest earthly trial. Emma did not at first accept it; but later she became convinced of its truth and gave good women to her husband to wife as Sarah of old administered to Abraham."

"Some of the Prophet's brethren caused him great scrrow by teaching impurity of life under the guise of this holy principle; but their wickedness was uncovered and the church was purged of their presence."

"The teaching of the revelation has been a test of personal holiness. The men who have seen in this commandment a holy and exalted duty and who obeyed in meekness and purity, have lived by their faith and have come off triumphant; while those who have sought to minister to evil passions have sunk and been cast out."

"There is not one word in the revelation, nor was there one word in the Prophet's teaching other than purity and self-sacrifice."

In support of his last statement Mr. Cannon writes thus: "The Lord said:" And after this very brief introduction he quotes from the, so-called, revelation, at the 12th paragraph, leaving the eleven preceding ones out. He quotes to the 25th paragraph; when, inserting stars, he quotes paragraph 61, which is connected to the 62 by a semicolon; and then skips the 62, 63, 64 and 65, and closes his chapter with paragraph 66, which reads:

66. "And now as pertaining to this law, verily, verily, I say unto you, I will reveal more unto you hereafter."

The chapter covers four pages of the book, which is printed in coarse type, similar in size to that used in E. W. Tullidge's History of Joseph the Prophet.

By the manner in which Mr. Cannon has introduced his account and the way he has quoted from the alleged revelation, he leaves the impression upon the reader's mind that he has quoted the salient portions of that document; and that there is nothing in it as a whole that is objectionable.

The fact is, however, that more than full one half of the document is left out, and in the portion left out occur some of those things which are in themselves objectionable, and which taken with the rest which he puts into his book, make the entire document to be decidedly and wholly obnoxious.

There are sixty-six paragraphs in the revelation as it appears in the edition of Doctrine and Covenants published in Utah, out of which Mr. Cannon quotes but fourteen, leaving all that portion in which a plurality of wives is taught, and the justification of Abraham, David and Solomon, for having many wives and concubines is attempted, entirely out. It is as clever a piece of author's juggling as we have seen in a good while. In that portion published in Mr. Cannon's history, it appears that only two wives, or the espousal of two virgins to one man, is provided for; whereas, the paragraph succeeding the one in which this provision occurs and which is left out makes provision for an additional ten virgins; or restricts to ten, as it may be read. Mr. Cannon in his zeal to place the revelation, so-called, before the reader in a light favorable to its reception as a harmless affair, leaves out the "conditions" upon which it is said to be given; these are as follows:

7. "The conditions of this law are these:-All covenants, contracts, bonds, obligations, oaths, vows, performances, connections, associations, or expectations that are not made, and entered into, and sealed, by the Holy Spirit of promise, of him who is anointed, both as well for time and for all eternity, and that too most holy, by revelation and commandment through the medium of mine anointed, whom I have appointed on the earth to hold this power, (and I have appointed unto my servant Joseph to hold this power in the last days, and there is never but one on the earth at a time, on whom this power and the keys of this Priesthood are conferred,) are of no efficacy, virtue or force, in and after the resurrection from the dead; for all contracts that are not made unto this end, have an end when men are dead."

The foregoing contains the spirit and essence of the glamour thrown over the entire business of celestial marriage; and contradicts specifically any hopes raised in the hearts of believers, by the promises made by the Savior in the New Testament Scriptures, the Book of Mormon and the revelations given to the church, to be fulfilled after death and the resurrection, as a reward for obedience to the gospel, authorized by Jesus Christ in each of the three dispensations, the one in Jesus' time, the one on this continent in Book Mormon times and the one in our own day. This clause has been one of those which have been productive of evil, because it has caused men and women to disregard those marriage vows and family obligations into which they entered before they became members of the church in Utah, by reason of which disregard much confusion in families has resulted, and many innocent hearts have been broken. It has also caused "the way of truth" to be evil spoken of.

From the closing paragraph given by Mr. Cannon it appears that the revelation, long as it is, was not finished-was, in fact, but a portion; and as such unfinished production there was no authority for its presentation to the church. And though he states that it was presented to the High Council, and the Presidency of the Stake at Nauvoo, Mr. Cannon does not state why this was done; nor does he state whether the council received it; but simply that Hyrum Smith "promised the brethren that those who received it should be blessed and sustained in the church by the Spirit of God and the confidence of the Saints, and they who rejected it should fall away in their faith and power; and it was even so."

Mr. Cannon states this presentation to this council, as if this were the regular order to be observed; but does it evidently, not from the records of that council, but from a statement made by Elder Thomas Grover, of Farmington, Utah, to A. M. Musser, of Salt Lake City. Elder Grover gives the names of those constituting the council, when it is stated that the revelation was read, and these names do not agree with the names given in Doctrine and Covenants as being members of that council, nor with the list as published in the Times and Seasons in the early part of 1844.

The character of the promise made by Hyrum Smith, as that promise is stated by Mr. Grover, from whose statement it is evident Mr. Cannon gives his information, may be gathered from the words given by Mr. Grover: "Now you that believe this revelation and go forth and obey the same shall be saved, and you that reject it shall be damned." Mr. Grover states: "We saw this prediction verified in less than one week." Mr. Cannon says: "And it was even so." Salvation to the one class and damnation to the other was meted out in "less than one week." Mr. Grover states it and Mr. Cannon affirms it. Neither furnishes the proof as to who obeyed the revelation, or who rejected it. The High Council as composed in 1841 were Samuel Bent, H. G. Sherwood, George W. Harris, Charles C. Rich, Thomas Grover, Newel Knight, David Dort, Dunbar Wilson, Aaron Johnson, David Fulmer, Alpheus Cutler, William Huntington. The names of those composing this council August 12th, 1843, as stated by Mr. Cannon are. Samuel Bent, William Huntington, Alpheus Cutler, Thomas Grover, Lewis D. Wilson, David Fulmer, Aaron Johnson, Newel Knight, Leonard Sobey, Isaac Allred, Henry G. Sherwood and Samuel Smith; being the same names as given by Mr. Grover. Neither list agrees with the names given in Times and Seasons, 1844.

p. 459, (vol. 5).

The difference between the lists of names of those composing this council, is, of course, subject to correction from competent records, if such records have been kept. But when men undertake to set aside long continued customs and doctrines long established, by oral testimony of what transpired, their alleged facts should agree with what is written, to be of value.

In the only paragraph quoted by Mr. Cannon from the so called revelation, in the chapter under review, in which anything like a plurality of wives is mentioned, or hinted at, we take the following:

"If any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent; and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified; he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him."

In the foregoing there is no commandment. It is simply and purely a suppositious condition of things based upon an "if." And "if" Mr. Cannon quotes this paragraph as being the extent of the command or permission for plural marriage, then it is restricted to the two virgins who had not vowed to another man. "If" it is permissive only then no penalty can attach for not marrying plurally, and hence there is no command to the church enforcing or imposing it upon the church.

The language of the command of God to the church in 1831, was, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and cleave unto her and none else." There is no "if" in this command. "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife." No "if" in this statement. "What man among you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?" There is in this no command to any one requiring him to have an hundred sheep, no command to lose one, and none to search for it after it is lost.

In Leviticus, twentieth chapter, there are a number of enactments, all beginning with an if, yet not one of the things so prefaced is either commanded or permissible.

In the seventh paragraph, to which we have already referred as among those left out by Mr. Cannon, there is a curiously restrictive one which makes no provision for any one to succeed Joseph Smith in the exercise of those powers of sealing, by which plural marriages were to be consummated; and this revelation, so-called, makes him the one and only one appointed in these last days. It is

"And I have appointed unto my servant Joseph to hold this power in the last days, and there is never but one on the earth at a time, on whom this power and the keys of this priesthood are conferred."

Hence, with this qualitying clause in the midst of the paragraph, and no provision in any other part of the document providing for the appointment of a successor to Joseph Smith in what is claimed as the plural marriage part of this law; together with the fact that the document is stated to be in an unfinished condition, as is obvious from the closing paragraph of it, there is great reason to doubt whether there was any authority to carry the vague and loosely worded provisions of this, socalled law, into effect after the death of Joseph Smith. It is only fair to presume that so great a change in the rules and practices of the church, as this alleged revelation and law was calculated to make, should not be left to any doubt, or ambiguity respecting its perpetuity, or those upon whom the burden of its enforcement, or the carrying of its provisions into effect There is, however, in the should rest. document itself no rule, or provision following the one appointing Joseph Smith, by which one to succeed him can, or may be chosen or appointed. Hence at Joseph Smith's death the right to administer in the things said to be revealed, lapsed, so far as has yet been promulgated.

"Mr. Cannon states that some of the Prophet's brethren caused him great sorrow by teaching impurity of life under the guise of this holy principle."

This vague and sweeping charge is certainly peculiar under the circumstances. It is claimed that even after a portion of this matter was revealed, it was not written, but remained an unwritten law for This some is an uncertain number. some. but Mr. Cannon states that they were God's faithful servants," ("Hyrum and other faithful men"), who "fulfilled its requirements." It would be much more satisfactory, and more convincing if Mr. Cannon, or some other would tell us who this other "some of the prophet's brethren" who taught "impurity of life," were, and what the nature of this impure teaching was, specifically. To first state that it was revealed to "but few" and they "faithful men;" and then that "some," a comparative number, out of the few faithful men taught "impurity of life" out of what was revealed to them, is confusing, either throwing discredit upon the prophet's sagacity and wisdom in the selection of his and the Lord's confidents, or to charge upon the few "faithful men" that they were unfaithful, unclean in mind, and treacherous to the prophet and the Lord. Who were they? How did they teach? And how does it happen that no one of those men so said to have been unfaithful, and to have caused the prophet great sorrow, did not give the so-called revelation to the light of day in palliation of their teaching? If Mr. Cannon states truly that "the church was purged of their presence," why did not some one of them give the church and the general public the benefit of the revelation, as it is almost morally certain they would have done had they known of its existence?

Mr. Cannon intimates that the revelation was recorded July 12th, 1843, and leaves the implication that it was recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants. It is "of record," however, that the Doctrine and Covenants continued to be published with the marriage law of 1831, sections 42 and 49, and the public declaration of the church affirming the one wife rule, adopted in 1835, section 109, in that book until the fall of the year, 1876. Pres. John Taylor, in charge of the printing office in Nauvoo in 1846, published an edition of the Doctrine and Covenants; Apostle Orson Pratt issued editions of the book in 1853 and 1854, known as the Liverpool, England, edition; Apostle Albert Carrington, issued an edition in 1869, at Islington, near London, all in the English language; in all of which the law of 1831: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and cleave unto her and none else;" "wherefore it is lawful that he [man] should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation, and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made;" and "we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband; except in case of death when either is at liberty to marry again," as stated by the church in 1835, were included and published to the church and the world as the rule of the church on the subject under consideration. Besides this, editions of the same work containing precisely the same revelations and rules of law were published by the church in the French, Italian, German, Danish and Swedish languages; all after the death of Joseph Smith, June 27th, 1844.

Mr. Cannon does not state in his relation of the matter when the dogma was promulgated; but leaves it to be inferred that it followed immediately upon its reception, when he should know that no sort of a revelation or document embodying it was presented to the church until August 29th, 1852. Mrs. Helen Mar Whitney and apostle Franklin D. Richards agree in stating this, as we have shown in the two articles preceding this. Mrs. Whitney, indeed, is frank enough to state, in apparent answer to "Joseph Smith, of Lamoni," that President Young was not likely to publish the revelation until it was in his possession, which she declares was some time in 1847; possibly, about the time when it became expedient to them to reorganize the church with a First Presidency at its head, which President Young and others set about doing in that year.

"Every woman has the right to virtuous wifehood and maternity. This was the Omnipotent design in her creation. Yet how shall it be fulfilled under modern systems? Clearly the Creator can make known."

So writes Mr. Cannon. Accepting the correctness of the closing sentence of the above let us examine the premise, under the light of what is written as the revealed word of God.

Is there any greater right to wifehood and maternity conferred upon woman by creation, than is conferred upon man to husbandhood and paternity by the same act of creation? Whatever of right was conferred upon woman, as woman by her creation, a co-ordinate and associate right was also conferred upon man as man; husbandhood and fatherhood to the man, wifehood and motherhood to the woman. If anything is to be argued from the creation in regard to the one, the same argument will hold in regard to the other. Further than this: God did at Creation make known how the "Omnipotent design" in the creation of woman to "virtuous wifehood and maternity" could be fulfilled." He did this by furnishing her with one husband, and endowed her with such emotions of love, devotion, singleness and purity of purpose and wifely regard that her "desire was unto her husband." The rule over her appointed unto her husband, was not hurtful to her, nor irksome in its bondage. It was supplemented and enhanced in value and force by such endowments to man that he should "leave father and mother and cleave unto his wife." Each was the complement to the other. They were counterparts in everything calculated to make them "one flesh." Neither was, nor could be complete without the other. Whatever of grace, beauty, loveliness was granted to her, was met and blended with deference, strength, grandeur, in him. One was to bless and adorn, the other to bless and sustain.

Mr. Cannon's question: How shall this "Omnipotent design" "be fulfilled under modern systems," referring to the monogamous institution, as he evidently does, implies the lack of wisdom upon the part of the Creator, in the creation, and throws discredit upon the same being for permitting the perpetuation of a system calculated to frustrate an all powerful design. Besides this, Mr. Cannon's question, as it is framed, states by implication that the Creator can make known how that design "can be fulfilled," even under the system he deplores. He asks, How can it be done "under modern systems," and then adds, "Clearly the Creator can make known" how it can be done under those same systems, as a matter of course. If he did not mean this, Mr. Cannon is unfortunate in both question and answer.

Again; Mr. Cannon conveys the inference that in order that "wifehood and maternity" shall be secured to every woman, there must be such a system that a woman must be bound in conjugal bonds beyond the grave. He writes of it thus:

"When they are out of the world, they neither marry nor are given in marriage,' saith the revelation; therefore the ties of conjugal relation must be made here, and to endure beyond the gates of death they must be fixed by an eternal covenant with the divine sanction."

It so happens that the predicate of Mr. Cannon's statement and argument is the right of woman to be a wife and mother. But it seems from the foregoing that he desires to convey the idea that in order that this right may be realized to her (every woman), she must be married in time for eternity that in eternity she may be blessed with wifehood and maternity.

Unfortunately for this argument the object for the creation of man, Adam and Eve, as stated by the history, was the peopling of the earth with man. To this the previous preparation of the Earth from its evolution from chaos to the planting of the Garden bears witness, and when the earth was so prepared and there was not yet a man to till the Earth, the Creator made the two with which the race began, put them on the Earth and commanded them, "Multiply and replenish the Earth and subdue it."

In this creation and this command there is not a word about the peopling of any spot beyond this earth. It is of this world, including its occupancy by man and all that was connected with it, of which the history treats. It is this to which the Savior, Jesus Christ referred when he said:

"The children of this world marry and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20: 34-36, inclusive.

Elder Cannon had no need to go so far as the document in dispute to have found that "out of this world they neither marry nor are given in marriage." Jesus stated it as given above while here in person, and at a time when the subject of marriage was before him by direct question, when, if ever, he should have put it beyond ambiguity or cavil.

That the creation of man was for the earth is seen in the command to replenish and subdue it, to which was added: "and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth. But that there should be no necessity for any Latter Day Saint who believes in revelation to misunderstand Deity in the creation, the Lord made a clear and direct statement to the Church in 1831, * * * "For marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man according to his creation before the world was made."

No possible casuistry can distort the meaning and intention of the foregoing. It is a plain declaration that God, in pursuit of the object had in view at the spiritual creation of man, while yet the earth was "without form and void," pre-arranged the conditions of his sojourn upon the earth that was to be, and designed his companionship in marriage in number, kind and character, in harmony with the design and law of his creation. The "omnipotent design," was known to the Creator then as it has ever been since; and with the possession of that all power, governed and controlled by all wisdom, that Creator fashioned the world of which Jesus spake, and put the created image of himself up on it to suit himself, his plans and designs; and when done said of it, "It was very good."

For these reasons it is proper to believe that God's measures to carry out his designs at creation were adequate to the accomplishment of those designs; and, though man may have corrupted his ways, and modern systems may in some sense be perversions of the normal laws of man's being, the design and the rule for carrying it out have not been changed by Deity himself; nor is any man justified in an attempt to do business for the next world upon rules and enactments of God intended to apply only in this.

The wifehood and motherhood stated by Mr. Cannon to be the right of woman by her creation was designed to be a virtuous condition. This we most fully believe. It is for this reason that we believe that the companionship formed for her in Eden, and for which she was created is the true type and expression of the will and design of the Creator in establishing the marriage relation.

In keeping with this example, when man in the wickedness of his heart corrupted his ways, the ways God had appointed for him, and "took wives of all which they chose." God chose a man "perfect in his generations," one living with the companion of his youth the wife of his covenant, through whom to re-establish the rule and the example of marriage given at the beginning. Of this design Malachi wrote of the creation: "And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed."—Mal. 2:15. It was within the limit of the power of the Omnipotent Designer, had his wisdom so decided, to have made more than one, when in the "likeness" of God "created he them." The statement of Malachi emphasizes this when he says that the object of this carefulness was, "That he might seek a godly seed." In perfect agreement with this sentiment of seeking a godly seed is the word of the Lord to Jacob, as stated in the second chapter of Book of Jacob, "For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women." The chaste, virtuous woman, was pleasing in the sight of the Lord at that time, and to secure these attributes, or rather that these attributes should be commended and fostered among the Lord's people at that time, the commandment was given: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife." More than the one would be subversive of his design and tend to injure and destroy the attribute of modest, virtuous chastity which made woman lovely in the eyes of her Creator.

If it was God's design to "raise up a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph," when he led Lehi and his family out of Jerusalem, and his design in saving Noah to preserve the children of a man "perfect in his generation," and he chose to do so by following the type established in Eden; one husband one wife, and not more, nor many; it is not surprising that Christ the law-giver to the Church should have said: "And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio, and there I will give unto you my law." That law he did give, and it is a repetition by command of the system founded in the morn of creation, one companion only in righteous wedlock, for either man or woman. According to this rule, and this only, can the right of woman to virtuous wifehood and motherhood be secured to her.

In the days before the flood the departure from the ways of companionship instituted for man by the Creator, is assigned as one of the reasons for the kindling of God's indignation against him. The "sons of God" "took them wives of all which they chose." It is held by the elders of the church which Mr. Cannon is representing that these "sons of God," were men holding the priesthood. In the destruction which overtook and overwhelmed the wicked of earth, these sons of God, men bearing the priestly authority, if Mr. Cannon and others are correct, the giants, and the men born of these improper unions, mighty men, men who became men of renown, all perished; and Noah the husband of one wife, the one whose companion was chosen as the new Eve to be the mother of all living, was saved by the extraordinary power and design of God to emphasize the reiteration of his divine enactment and save the crowning joy and glory of his handiwork from pollution and degradation; for whatever is contrary to divine ordination is destructive of good and must pollute and degrade.

How plain and unmistakable are the words of Jacob, who was inspired of God as much so as Peter on Pentecost's day, when he said:

"I, the Lord, have seen the sorrow, and heard the mourning of the daughters of my people in the land of Jerusalem; yea, and in all the lands of my people, because of the wickedness and abominations of their husbands."

How like this the indictment of Malachi against Judah and Israel:

"Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem." . . . "And this have ye done again, covering the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out."

It is not easy to mistake the meaning of Malachi. For when the people asked why it was that God no longer regarded their offaring, nor received it with good will at their hands; the Prophet answered:

"Because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant."

David ruled in Hebron over Judah, and in Jerusalem over Judah and Israel. He was succeeded in his rule by Solomon his son. Of these men and their departure from the righteous enactment of God in establishing the marriage relation, the covenant of wedlock, devised and decreed upon in Heaven, established by rite and ceremony in Eden; re-enacted in the saving of Noah and his wife; re-confirmed in Lehi and his family, in their removal from Jerusalem; the Lord affirmed:

"David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me." The word of the Lord in Malachi and the word of the Lord in Jacob are in agreement.

For the departure of man from the ways of the Lord, and the corrupting of his way before the Lord, in the days of Noah, the Lord punished man by destruction by the flood. And the punishment visited upon them who departed out of the way as stated by Malachi was: "Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law." The penalty for transgressing the law given to Lehi's people as uttered by Jacob was: "The men of my people . shall not lead away captive the daughters of my people, because of their tenderness, save I shall visit them with a sore curse, even unto destruction." That which was charged against them was the same as the sin of Solomon and David. Precisely like this is the utterance of the Lord to the church in these last days. The Lord said that the whole church was under condemnation; that it had been brought there by vanity and unbelief: "And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do, according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kidgdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, nay.

Departure from the law has brought condemnation upon Israel, and the children and people of God always; and it is proper to believe that it will continue to do so. Hence, the rule of law divine which is being broken and denied by Mr. Cannon and his people, must sooner or later be honored by God in visiting the penalty decreed upon transgressors, in vindication of the Creator and Giver of the law.

It is curious that Mr. Cannon, as do all his associates, lays great stress upon and attaches great importance to the plural marriage system in behalf of woman's right to virtuous wifehood and maternity; and in all the argument puts man out of the consideration. Now it so happens that, as the numbers of men and women born into the world are and have been nearly equal, the men rather in excess, it follows in the logic of facts that God has provided for "every woman her counterpart." "But," these pluralists say, "it is not every man who is fit to be a husband and father; hence the necessity for this command that righteous men may be privileged to take a number of women to wife, that no woman may be de-frauded of her right." It appears that the "Sons of God" were not to be trusted as these righteous men to exercise this right in the days of Noah. The men, husbands and fathers, of the people of God in Lehi's days, were unfit to be trusted with it. The men of Judah, according to Malachi, were guilty of an abomination in Judah and Jerusalem in exercising it, and hence not to be entrusted with it. David and Solomon were no better than others, and God denounced them for exercising that privilege. And from Mr. Franklin D. Richards' statement that the people of Utah are human, subject to the same passions and infirmities as are other people, we are impressed with the conviction that the men of the Mormon Church, though holding the priesthood and calling themselves "the sons of God," are no better than were their predecessors who claimed and exercised the privilege to take wives of all which they chose. When they do as David and Solomon and the "sons of God" in Noah's day did, they sin as those men did and commit an abomination in Utah as did the men of Judah in Israel and Jerusalem. The men of every generation have been equal to the wickedness of their time, and have had partners in their crimes. The woman has been the subject of man's rule. Her rights have in the ages past been secondary to the will and wishes of the man. She has submitted to the conditions imposed upon her by man. In her condition as man's helpmate, or rather a "help meet for him," she is his peer, his equal. In polygamic countries and nations she has lessened in value; her condition is and has been that of a chattel in the possession of a lord—a master. The plural wife can not, and does not hold the relation of wife to her husband contemplated in the command, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and cleave unto her and none else." She can not possibly feel toward him the sentiment that an only wife does towards a loval and honorable husband. This is the history of polygamy the world over, and Utah can not be an exception to the rule. The very provision of the socalled revelation which Mr. Cannon quotes, by which he claims plural marriage is commanded, uses the expression suggestive of what we have stated above.

"If any man espouse a virgin and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent; and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified; he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him; for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth to him and to no one else."

The possessory idea couched in the foregoing quotation from Mr. Cannon's work is something quite different from the companionship contemplated in Adam's expression: "This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh." It is infinitely below the Savior's reiteration of the Father's endorsement of Adam and Eve's espousal: "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh."

It is no more possible that a union such as is clearly within the intent and meaning of the Savior's words quoted above, can be formed between one man and several women, than it is that such a union can be formed between one woman and several men. Every departure from the rule is a departure from the principle in design and execution in creation, and in violation of the normal law of man's being and existence. Every man who reasons himself into the disregard of this rule, does so in violation of the law of his higher and better life; and every woman who suffers herself to be reasoned out of her instinctive repulsion to the condition of a secondary or plural wife, does so to the self-crucifixion of better and nobler self. Every man who through the persuasion of his selfish and fleshly nature violates the rule of companionship designed of God, does so to the degradation of himself and the pollution of woman. He loosens and finally throws off the influence of that principle implanted in man by creation under the power of which he leaves father and mother and cleaves to his wife. A woman consenting to enter into marriage relations in violation of the rule given of God in her creation, does so at the expense of a final smothering out of the sentiment by virtue of which her desire is unto her husband, and makes possible what Mr. Franklin D. Richards states is the case in the polygamous system of Utah," there is no rule or obligation that compels a plural wife to remain in relations which she desires to sever."

In juxtaposition with the idea that every man is not fit to be a husband and a father, it must be patent to Mr. Cannon and to every other man who will think for a moment rationally, that every woman is not fit to be a wife and mother. The frequent and persistent departures of man from the laws of his being established by his Creator, have resulted in injury to the race, both men and women suffering alike. Those causes which have vitiated men to such a degree that they are unfitted physically, mentally and morally to be husbands and fathers, have operated alike upon womankind, and unfitted women for the roles of wife and mother, physically, mentally and morally. The vitiating, demoralizing influences have wrought their ruin alike upon both sexes. In every stage of man's departure from right ways he has been accompanied by woman; either upon her own free will, or at man's lordly behest, and selfish coercion. If woman has remonstrated, and hesitated, man has urged his right of dominion, and has dragged his victim in helpless shackles into his own degradation. Woman has yielded to these influences, and Jezebels, Herodias and her daughters, Cleopatras, the mothers of Neros, the Catherines of Russia and De Medici have been made possible among the descendants of Eve. Step by step has woman kept pace in the world's strife with man. As man has risen in virtue, morality, power, beauty of development, woman has risen with him. As man has sunk, losing ground in all that marked his progress, woman has sunk with him. The average woman is the mate of the average man in every condition of human society. In the equality of creation the race has been perpetuated, in numbers, in corresponding characteristics, in mutual fitness or unfitness, in development, in progress; and in due preparation for the life to come, and in the promise and hope of its realization, "The man is not without the woman, nor the woman without the man, in the Lord."

IT DOES NOT PAY.

FROM AN AUTHOR WHO HAS TO LIVE.

Editor Post: Have received yours of recent date asking for an essay or something in the line of a contribution. I would be glad to spend most of my time in writing for the press if I could make my bread and butter at it, but I must work with my hands when I can and keep that great big howling wolf from the door. This is the fix I am in now, in my old age, exactly. I am so unfortunate with tenants for several years past and more than half this year that if I don't reserve a little garden spot for my own tillage and raise my own vegetables I would have none to eat; so I work with hoe and spade as much as I can, which supplies me with a good portion of food for self and family; and then it is only when the spirit moves me that I can write, so that between poverty and a dearth of ideas much can hardly be expected of me any more; yet, health permitting, I promise to send you something occasionally. I am so disappointed about my Mormon book venture that I am almost ready to give up writing any more. I spent much money on it in procuring facts and verifying statements, and devoted lots of precious time in writing it up-and now, to have it lie on my hands for years 'a rejected manuscript' to say the least, disappoints me not a little, especially as I hoped to make it pay. I know there is something in it, and some one will find it out some day after I am dead and gone. I do not think the Midland Monthly will gain much by publishing biographies of Mormon elders, or praising believers in the silly Mormon delusion."

The above from a recent issue of the Burlington, Iowa, Post is interesting as showing the lack of appreciation upon the part of the public, of an anti-Mormon writer. It also serves to show that it "don't pay" to any longer trump up stories against the Latter Day Saints. The writer bemoans his disappointment at his poor success in the unseemly work of "hunting up something" against the "Mormon delusion" in the pitiful wail, "especially as I hoped to make it pay."

E. D. Howe, who published the first work written against the Saints, and which formed the basis of almost every later work of the kind, also found that it did not pay, as have many others. The disappointment of this writer seems to arise from the lack of revenue derived from his work; and by this we presume that he wrote, not to do good and prevent deceptive practices upon the people, but for the money there might be in it. Such deeds should excite only our pity. It would doubtless be the wiser part for the writer of the above to stick closely to his garden work. If our faith is delusive its character will be made manifest; if divine, "truth will prevail." "In God we trust."

UTAH COMMISSION REPORT.

Below will be found the major and most important part of the report of the government's Utah Commission. The points contained in it are too numerous for our especial mention. It is evident, however, that as Congress will likely act upon its recommendations, even more stringent and effectual laws will probably be passed with a view to the speedy and complete extinction of the barbarous relic—polygamy:

Washington, D. C., Sept. 27th —The annual report of the Utah Commission has been received by Secretary Noble. Touching the question of polygamy the report says:

"Polygamy is not at the present time openly practiced except perhaps in a few remote and outof-the-way places, but the non-Mormon element insists that plural marriages are solemnized clandestinely and practiced secretly in the larger centers and throughout the territory. This may or may not be true. The commission neither affirms nor denies in the absence of positive evidence. Doubtless many members of the Mormon Church never have practiced and never intend to practice polygamy, and perhaps many of them do not believe in the practice, but from the standpoint of their faith and creed, they accept it as a revelation from God through Joseph Smith, ratified and approved by their president, Brigham Young, and that whoever desires to do so should have the right to comply with this ordinance of the church."

All laws forbidding the practice of polygamy, the report continues, the Mormons pronounce unconstitutional. There are grounds for belief, it is stated, that polygamy is still taught by the church as a saving ordinance, and that those who practice it are assured of a higher exaltation in heaven than those who content themselves with one wife. Extracts are given from Mormon papers showing that they still openly advocate polygamy. That the teachings and practice of polygamy have not been discontinued, as it is claimed by some, is proven, the report says, by the fact that since September 1st, 1888, there have been in the territory of Utah 357 convictions for bigamy, adultery, fornication, and unlawful cohabitation, and two for bigamy. Those who are convicted of polygamy regard themselves, and are so regarded by their friends, as martyrs, and think it no disgrace to be sent to the penitentiary. The courts are commended for their vigilance and also for the mercy with which its mandates are tempered.

The commission in view of the present condition of the territory as regards polygamy, does not think that Utah should be admitted as a state. "Should it be," the commission says, "it would not be long before the gentile element with its advanced civilization, its trade, and its traffic would be driven from the territory and the Mormon theocracy be made supreme."

The commission make a number of recommendations, among them, that jurisdiction of all polygamous and sexual offenses without regard to the place committed within the territory be conferred on district courts; that the term of imprisonment for unlawful cohabitation be extended to at least two years for the first and three years for the second offense; that it be made a penal offense for any woman to enter into the marriage relation with any man knowing him to have a wife living undivorced, coupled, however, with the provision that in cases where a polygamous wife is called as a witness against the husband her testimony could not be used in any future prosecution against her, and a like provision as to the husband; that no person who refuses to take an oath that he or she is not cohabiting with more than one husband or wife in the marriage relation, as the case may be, shall be excluded from making a location and settlement upon the public lands: that the laws with reference to immigration of Chinese and the importation of contract labor, paupers and criminals, be so amended as to prevent the immigration of persons claiming that their religion justifies the crime of polygamy; that the constitution should be amended so as to further prohibit polygamy.

The commission believes that the limitation on prosecutions for polygamy and bigamy should be extended, and sentence to hard labor should be added; that their confinement may not be spent in idleness and glorification of their supposed martyrdom. The commission has no doubt that punishment of the women for voluntarily entering into the polygamous relation would do much to lessen her zeal for the peculiar institution, and thus tend to remove one of the strongest bulwarks—Chicago Times.

THE following from another paper—clipped and sent us unmarked—shows that the Brighamite authorities have not acted in good faith in their pretensions of having ceased celebrating polygamous marriages:

"STORY OF A MORMON WIFE.

"SALT LAKE CITY, September 28 - Hans Jefferson was brought before United States Commissioner Hills at Provo, Thursday, charged with polygamy, and held in $5.000 bonds, and the second wife in $1,000. The latter related under oath how she was converted to Mormonism in Virginia, and came to Utah last November, and gave the details of her marriage to Jefferson in the Mormon temple at Manti five months ago. She told how she subsequently came to Salt Lake City, where she went through the endowment house where all polygamous marriages and other secret rites of the church are solemnized. She could not tell who performed the ceremony, as whoever it was stayed behind a curtain. No marriage license was procured as the Tucker-Edmonds law provides. The case is important, owing to the fact that for several years past it has been next to impossible to secure conviction in one of these cases. Had not the plural wife testified her husband would have escaped the five years' penalty which now stares him in the face."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. N. I. Fuller thus writes from Phoenix, Yazoo county, Mississippi, September 18th:

"The Herald is all the comfort we have here. I was in hopes that some of our elders would come here and preach this year, but they have not come as yet. My faith in the latter day work is strong, though I acknowledge my weakness. Pray for me that I may be made strong and faithful."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

UTAH papers contain startlingly long lists of indictments for violation of the anti-polygamy law. The government officials are determined to carry out its provisions, and truly "the way of the transgressor is hard."

Pres. W. W. Blair left home on Friday, September 27th, for St. Joseph, Missouri; expecting to hold services there on Sunday, and afterwards to conduct a series of meetings, during part of the following week, at Council Bluffs or Omaha; going thence, on Friday, October 4th, to the Annual Reunion at Missouri Valley.

Among many papers sent us we acknowledge the receipt of the Hav Springs, Nebraska, Northwest News, of September 20th, and the Osceola, Missouri, Advance, of September 26th. The latter contains a lengthy article from Bro. I. N. White who has had and is having a controversy upon the respective claims of the Christian and Latter Day Saint churches, with a Mr. Park. The editor of the Advance has kindly granted ample space in its columns.

Bro. John Johnston of Lone Rock, Missouri, wrote September 27th that he lately baptized one near Bethany, that state.

Ex-Postmaster-General Thomas L. James has prepared an explanation of needed postal reforms, which will appear in the October Forum. Mr. James declares that the railway mail service is twenty years behind the times and ought to be very greatly improved; that small offices near to one another ought to be consolidated under one management, so as to save expense; and that ocean postage ought greatly to be cheapened. Senator Cullom, of Illinois, will have an article in the same number on "Protection and the Farmer," to show that the farmers are benefited by a protective system more than any other class. Mr. Edward Wakefield, a member of the Australian Parliament, who has been elected and defeated many times under the Australian ballot system, will contribute to this number an explanation of the practical workings and of some defects of the system which has been so much dis-cussed in this country. Prof. William T. Harris, United States Commissioner of Education, writes a critical examination of Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"O Beauty, old yet ever new!

Eternal Voice and Inward Word! . . ,
Shine on us with the light which glowed
Upon the trance-bound shepherds' way,
Who saw the Darkness overflowed
And drowned with tides of everlasting Day."

THE following extract is from a private letter which we think too good to withhold from the readers of the Column.

"But I have something to say that will please you better if the rehearsing goes to your heart as the reading did to mine. Last Thursday was the day set apart for special prayer in behalf of sending the gospel to Israel or the Jews. I had thought much about it all the week while busy with my work. Was sorry I could not meet with some of the Saints, but intended to keep the hour alone all the same. But when the day came all remembrance of its sacred obligations escaped my memory. I was making a print dress and in rather a hurry to get it done for Sunday. There seemed to be no end of chores to be done that day to hinder me, but I struggled on, working at it all I could. At four o'clock I started off to the station for friends who were expected that day, and as they could not get back till after night, now, thought I, I will have two hours and a half before night, and if I am real smart I will get this skirt done. I had just sat down to work when I thought of the Prayer Union. My head fairly swam for a few minutes; then there came a reaction, and I felt as much out of spirits for a while as my memory was out of time. I was vexed and annoyed at myself because I had forgotten it, that day of all days when I wished to be punctual at the hour, and now they had all dismissed and gone home, and could I expect the Lord to meet with me at that late hour? I feared he would not. Then my eyes fell on my dress. If I took a whole hour the dress would not be finished. Then there came the struggle. It was past the time and I might as well let it pass to-day, but I recalled the words of the Spirit to our sister, "Can ye not watch with me one hour?" Yes, I said, I will go and give an hour, though it is not the hour, and I do not expect the Spirit to be with me. By this time I felt ready to cry with disappointment. I went to my room and offered a short prayer of pleading forgiveness for careless negligence, then took the Bible (Inspired Translation) to read a little, and opened at the book of Esther where she went in to the king and he held out the scepter to her. I applied that to myself and felt that the Great King had held the scepter out to me and I might draw more near. I thanked God in my heart and opened the Bible again and read the fifty-fifth chapter of Isalah as I had never read it before. Dear sister, how I wish I could tell you how vividly it came home to me. It was as though the Spirit was talking to me personally and I read through sobs and blinding tears, first the invitation, then the gentle reproof for grudging my time. "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken dillgently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." Then the loving kindness-oh so great and the precious promises. And as I read they took shape and confirmed the testimony given before. This chapter was read after praying that the time might speedily come when some one would be raised up and sent to the Jews, and as I read the fifth verse-"Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee,"-it took the form of the Jewish Nation to which I should yet be known. The eleventh verse, and fore part of the twelfth, -"So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace; the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands,"-confirmed the former testimony. The "mountains and hills" was where the scattered ones were that should clap their hands for joy at the sound of the gospel of salvation, and the trees of the fields were the sturdy ones of that place who had stood the storms of persecution, had bent and bowed themselves beneath it moaning and groaning because their Messiah came not; but would now break forth into singing his praise because he was comforting Israel. Yes, I spent the hour and felt that it was the most profitable one I had spent for many a day."

After we read and folded this letter, we found our thoughts wandering and repeating again the verse from Isaiah, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." We recalled the hundred and one times when we had experienced this same nervous anxiety to complete a certain piece of work, making all the energies of mind and body bend to its accomplishment and we wondered if perchance it was with our sister as it had many times been with us? Was she failing as we had failed to "hearken diligently unto Me." Was the garment unfinished because she was spending her "labor for that which satisfieth not?" We do not believe it was-indeed we can almost say we know it was not-but what of those other garments worn by thousands of the Saints?

"Wherefore," says the Lord, "do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not?" The tempter stood by us and so real and vivid was his presence felt that we drew back as to avoid his touch. There was such a horrible grin of satisfaction upon his face and the words fairly hissed from his mouth:

"Better spend your energies in some other direction, for as long as the world stands professors of religion will spend the Lord's money in my wares—my shops will be crowded and I shall garner a rich harvest of souls, because this money was not spent for bread. Ha! ha! have you the least idea that you can have any influence? Not one in a hundred will give a second thought to this and those who do think of it today, will come back to me to-morrow with double money in their purses and barter for my goods."

We hear you say, "This was not a reality? Satan was not truly before you?" Was ever any one tempted to cease to do that which they knew to be right, because they could see no fruits of their labors, and the adversary not have a part and lot in the tempting? Did you ever bow your head like a bulrush and exclaim, "It is folly for me to try to keep God's commandments when none others seem to regard them," and the adversary not near you?

The charge which we bring against the Saints to-day is, "We are spending God's money for that which is not bread and our labor for that which satisfieth not." Tithing is not paid and there is nothing for free-will offering because so much is demanded for personal expenses. Neither is this the worst feature of the case, because so much time is demanded in the trimming and making of garments to adorn the body which, in a few years at the most, will be food for the worms and return to the dust, there is no time to feed the soul, that it may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, but it will go to judgment dwarfed and feeble, naked and unadorned, because we could not spare the time to feed or clothe it. "Let all your garments be plain," is the wisdom of God, and can we point to any manifestation of that wisdom, which it is not the business of Satan to lead us to disregard?

And yet despite this boast of the adversary, are there not some among the sisters-yes, among the young sisters-who will stop and reflect? Said one young Saint to me in conversation lately, "I discovered the evil effects of trimming and ornamenting my garments in this way: When I commenced to do this and gave much time and thought to my clothing, I found that I became indifferent to the work, careless in helping it, and my mind more absorbed in trifling things. It took much time to make my clothing and more to wash and iron it, and at last I began to see how utterly selfish it was to spend my time in this way. When the Spirit of God was with me, I lost all taste for such things, and I now find that if I expect to grow, I must cultivate, not grieve the Spirit. I want to be neat and tastily dressed, but I am far happier when my garments are plain and I have time to study the word of God and pray."

Will not some of you, young Saints, stop and ask yourselves the question, "How much have I grown in grace and in the knowledge of God since I came into the church? Is my life a living witness of the gospel of Christ? Do I strive constantly to remember, "That to obey is better than sacrifice, to hearken than the fat of rams?" Dear sisters, believe us, there is no preacher so powerful, so effectual as example. Without example all our doctrines and our precepts fall to the ground. The words of our lips are "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal."

Do not consider the great numbers who are against you, but remember that it is a grand thing to be upon the Lord's side, and it is ignoble to be a traitor at any time, but more especially in the day of battle, when the hosts of the enemy are overwhelming.

Have any of us grown vain through the light and truth brought by the gospel? Do we love to boast of this glorious latter day work? If so, let us remember that we are called to be doers of the word, for it is the doers, not the hearers, who shall be blessed. There is so much to do in this world, and every Saint is called upon to be a laborer with God in bringing men to a knowledge of the truth. Time is needed, money is demanded—there are so few Saints and the few have so little money all told—can we then spend it in the devil's wares?

OREGON CITY, Cal., Sept. 20th.

Dear Sisters:- I have thought for some time to write, but have had little time, as I have to write so much to my children who are all from home but one. I try to keep them in rememberence of their eternal welfare as much as possible. The Herald and Autumn Leaves are always welcom to me, as they are my greatest comfort in life and show the pure way for the life to come. The letters in the "Home Column" from our sisters, and also the letters from our elders abroad are strengthening to any true Saint. My faith is as strong as ever and I hope it will continue unto the end. I am not without my trials like others, but I always think mine are not so hard as many others. I have hope that my family will see more clearly if they are spared long enough. The name Mormon is in the way, as they hear so much outside. My health has been very good since I was administered to by Brother Haws. Do not forget me in your prayers. I attend to the prayer hour as near as I can, and I wish there were some sisters near me to unite with me. I would like to give some little help too for the spread of the gospel, but will have to wait. I am much pleased to hear the good news from every side of the good work of God rolling on and I hope it will continue until the end.

Your sister in the gospel,

JANET STRANG.

ROLFE, Iowa, Sept. 8th:

Dear Saints:—I am a new member, trying to bear my cross and follow Jesus, which I sometimes find hard to do, as I am the only Saint within nine miles, and the people here think that a "Mormon" is worse than an outlaw. I try to bear all the jeers and taunts patiently, knowing that I will receive my reward.

While at Bro. Reed's in April I heard a Latter Day Saint speak, was converted to the faith, baptized and confirmed May 29th, by Elder D. M. Rudd. I do not belong to any branch yet, but hope to soon.

Some of my young friends have asked to let them know when there would be preaching here by the Saints, as they would like to hear them preach. I have engaged a schoolhouse in which to hold meetings whenever any one is ready to occupy.

While in the M. E. Sabbath School here one Sabbath I was asked to act as superintendent, the superintendent being absent, which I did. All gave good attention, and good order prevailed. I now act as treasurer and teacher of the infant class in the same Sabbath School. Some have hopes of converting me to the M. E. faith, but I fear their hopes are vain.

I receive the Herald and Autumn Leaves through the kindness of Elder Rudd, which I fully appreciate. My people will scarcely look at them, so you see I have them all to myself. I would ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be numbered among them in the life eternal. Your sister in Christ,

NELLIE COOPER.

Dear Sister Nellie:—Let your light shine and do not let your faith waver, for greater is He who is for you than all who are against you. It has happened before this that those who were seeking to make converts, have themselves been converted. We hope the gospel may be preached there soon.—ED.

Correspondence.

ROGERS Ark., Sept. 24th.

Bro W. W. Blair:—My health is much better. I preached Sunday; had good congregation and good liberty. The prospects are fair for me to get the South Methodist Church here, to hold meetings in. I am glad indeed that the good Lord has heard the many prayers offered in my behalf. Although I am weak yet, I hope I may get my strength soon. The thought of leaving my mission was very painful to me. Yours,

I. N. ROBERTS.

Boston, Mass., Sept. 27th.

Editors of Herald:-Things are moving with us fairly to good. The conference held in Providence, R. I. on last Saturday, Sunday and Monday was well attended. The weather was pleasant, and in the main a good interest and a saintly spirit prevailed. One was baptized by Bro. Bond on Monday, at the close of the conference: a lady of mature years and of hopeful promise. An occasional click of dissent was exhibited. clearly indicating that saints are mortal, and that bias and sides, fancies and preferences, likes and dislikes exert a wonderful control over both mind and conscience, as well with the Christian as Infidel. On the whole, the conference was a success, and the signs are hopeful for the future. The Spirit was sensibly present at times, and a marked devotional feeling was manifested by many of the brethren. Brn. M. H. Bond, Thomas Whiting and John Smith of the general ministry were present actively. Brn. F. M. Sheehy, U. W. Greene and J. C. Foss are in Maine, and report encouragingly. Bro. A. H. Parsons is in Nova Scotia who also reports success.

The causes of past dissensions that have moved the peace of the Saints and clogged the way of progress are being pushed to a finale. A lawful solution will be a relief; but even this may not dry up all the streams of disquiet. Prejudgment of mind, bias, "I have said so," "I have put my foot down and shan't take it up," "I have got my opinion," have quite as much to do with people sometimes in forming final conclusions and actions as decisions of courts or judges. Most everyone has an individual standard of judgment, and of course that which is, or appears to be, in conflict therewith must be wrong. So goes the world over. The law is too slow, or in the way; the judge is bribed, and the lawyers all rascals. This makes it possible for "white caps," "bald knobbers," "anarchists" and "moonshiners." I have long since settled down to the notion that the decision of the law, justly and wisely administered, should command the respect of Saints as well as men of the world; whatever may be the appearance of things from individual standpoints of view. Without this there can be no successful organization. I have just been reading in the Book of Chronicles that the love of idols and a misguided judgment and forsaking of the law was the curse of old Israel; and modern Israel, with their example before them to admonish, ought to hasten to the support of judgment and law, in Church or State; whatever their prejudgment and decision

The conference held at Brooklyn, as already reported by Bro. Squires, was a satisfactory one. There is much to do there, but how fast it can be done is the great question. The Saints sacrifice for the work and are trying to sustain it with the odds against them. They are gaining, and if faithful will succeed.

At the close of the Sunday evening meeting two Christadelphian gentlemen—ministers, as I suppose—stepped up and challenged me squarely for a debate. Well, if my hair is turning a little gray I thought I could not take that, so accepted. The following was agreed to:

- r. Resolved, That man is wholly of the earth earthy, and that consciousness thereof wholly and utterty ceases from the death of the body until the resurrection. Christadelphian affirms,
- 2. That the signs spoken of in Mark 16th chapter and 17th and 18th verses are promised to the believer wherever the gospel is preached and believed and obeyed. L. D S. affirms.
- 3 That the kingdom of God spoken of in Mark first chapter and fifteenth verse, was to be set up before the second coming of the Savior. L. D. S. affirms.
- 4. That the Book of Mormon is divinely inspired, and is entitled to the respect and belief of all Christian people. L. D. S. affirms.

The Saints of Boston are doing well. They have done well also in securing a church building. If they shall be able to hold on to it they will be greatly encouraged. It is one of the most valuable buildings belonging to the church either east or west, and is in a desirable part of the city. Those who can would do a christian act to aid the little band here in completing payment on it. They are doing valiantly, but a very little help even would be encouraging; a little like water in time of thirst. For years they have been paying from fifteen to twenty dollars per month for a hall, and then could only have it on Sundays. The church is theirs on all days. May the Lord bless their efforts.

I am to be at Providence, R. I., next Sabbath; after which, no preventing providence, I will meet with the Saints in conference at Jonesport, Maine.

Hopefully and in the faith, Wm. H. Kelley.

PRAIRIE CITY, I. T., Sept. 27th.

Dear Herald:-Three weeks ago I first came to this place. The Baptist minister who "demolished Mormonism" for two days after my arrival, would not stand fire when I replied. I spoke twice Sunday, and on Monday night it was so stormy that only ten were out, and as further appointments were announced, I rode horseback most of the next day, notifying the Indians and others that at night I would present the origin of the Indian race. The house was crowded; also next night; and on the following night a Church of Christ preacher was imported from Missouri to demolish me. After "spatting" until near midnight, he said he had no more time then, but if I would come back on the twenty-first he would attend to me.

As most of the people were going to Baxter Springs, Kansas, I went there next day and preached there two days at the Soldier's Reunion. Ten thousand were estimated as present; many admitted that we had the truth. I think much good was done, as the "word" will scatter far from such gatherings.

By special request, I went from there to Neutral, seven miles north, where a Seventh Day tent had been for near three months. Intense excitement prevailed, twenty-five having joined them. Quakers, Campbellites and others had been invited and had spoken against them in their tent, but they rejected "Mormons" I spoke twice in a large school-house only a few rods from their tent on Sunday, when they complained that it was unchristianlike for me to preach while they were there; that they would remove their tent that week, so I said I would wait until they got through, and left appointments for the next week.

I then went home after a month's absence, opened up a new place that week at Crestline, twelve miles south of my home, where the Adventists were to move their tent to, preached there over Sunday, amid much interest; some admitting the truth. I then came back to Neutral, preached there to crowded houses until Saturday last, many admitting that we had Bible truth and had proved the first day Sabbath. But oh, the terrible name "Jo Smith," in the restoration!

I came here Saturday and began debate with the Camptellite. Our understanding was that I was to affirm for three sessions that our faith and doctrine was in harmony with the Scriptures, and he to do the same in regard to his church: and he said we could fix up the writings when we returned. He had them written out: "We, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints affirm that we are identical with the New Testament church, in teaching and practice," and no debate unless I signed that. I did so, and then his quibbling began on the name, and the claim that the ancient saints practiced swallowing poison, etc., to make believers; but oh, what a failure! One night was all he could stay on his affirmative he said; he had all important business abroad; but his brethren prevailed on him to stay. The second night as I said the primitive church with its blessings had ceased to exist because of apostasy, he was going to force me in the affirmative to show when, where, and to whom the gospel was restored, or else he would quit. The moderators said he was in the lead. He then appealed to the audience if he was not justified in quitting because of my not doing as he said. I then said, "I'll do anything you say rather than have you quit," and then told how, when, where, and through whom the gospel was restored. The last night he came heavily charged with "Jo Smith," etc, but the moderators, a Catholic the speaker, told him to read the proposition; then told him to follow it; I proposing to affirm all I had said beginning next night. He urged many objections, sat and studied quite a while before he went on, and oh, what a failure. Said he would debate no more here, but if I would come to Newton county, Missouri, he would debate any question I might propose, as he had a hundred and fifty brethren there-there are about thirty of them here. I agreed to do so and made propositions, but he insisted that they must be just as the others, so he could quibble. We signed them and November 13th, at the Redding school-house, seven miles south-west of Neosho, Missouri, is the place. If any Herald readers live near that place, please let me know.

Nearly half here are admitting the truth. Bro. I. N. White's friends—Sullivan and wife—are here. They heard him twice and are near the kingdom. I continue here over Sunday on the restoration, then go back to Neutral, twenty-five miles north, to preach a week.

D. S. CRAWLEY.

LAKE CRYSTAL, Minn., Sept. 28th.

Bro. Blair:—We arrived in our field in May and have labored to the best of our ability to advance the truth since that time. We found some noble Saints who have done well by showing to the world that they love their Redeemer and are trying to obey his teachings. We feel thankful for the kind treatment received from them. They are few in number and badly scattered, which makes it hard for some to assemble for prayer and testimony meetings.

We were sorry to see some that had started in the way of life turn back to the "weak and beggarly things of the world;" but such must be expected, for our Savior said in his parable that the bad were cast away," &c.

We were attacked by an elder of the Seventh Day Adventist order, who made some very bigoted and self-conceited boasts, such as, "I will knock the face off of Mormonism," &c. The result was, we met in a joint discussion of fourteen sessions, but dropped one session at the earnest request of our opponent. I am satisfied with the result. The Saints feel strengthened and confirmed more than ever in the restoration of the gospel. The debate was held at Eunice, Becker county, Minnesota.

We have labored in Becker and Otter Tail counties this summer, and have just arrived here, in this part of our field, to-day. I had the privilege of leading Sr. Lizzie Nunn, daughter of Br. Wm. Nunn, into the waters of baptism last Friday evening. She bids fair to make one of the firm ones of Zion.

Your brother,

WARREN E. PEAK.

FULTON. Iowa, Sept. 27th.

Dear Editors: - I have just returned from Massilon, Cedar county, about thirty miles from here, where I had taken Elder John S. Roth. When we got there, through some delay in the mail, there was no appointment, so Bro. Roth and I took team and went from house to house and told them to come in the evening to hear the word of truth. W, went about three and one-half miles one side of town and then turned and went on the other side about three miles to tell people to come. We went out on the highways and hedges and told them to come in. I thought how good we ought to treat the traveling ministry; how many disappointments they meet with, and sacrifice the comforts of home and loved ones for the sake of the gospel.

There are only two Saints there, Bro. and Sr. Hardy, two noble Saints. About Massilon there seems to be a good class of people, mostly Methodists, and they turn out well to hear; the schoolhouse being full at every service. Bro. Roth had good liberty to present the word, and if only one would make the start to obey, there would be several to follow.

When Bro. Roth was with us at Fulton he baptized three noble souls, one of them was a Free Methodist. Satan is now raging, and the elders have been promised a coat of tar and feathers.

Rev. John Said, an Adventist, came to New Castle, where we reside, and lectured against Joseph Smith, as a false prophet. He did not make one point clear. He used Beadle's and Hithcock's histories, and he used the oft repeated hazel-witching and money-digging theme. He said he was going to act like a gentleman, but he acted all but that, for after he was through I asked for fifteen minutes time to show forth the other side, but was met with "No, sir." He then said that he would meet any of us in debate, so when Bro. Roth was here he went to see the Rev. Said, but he had no time to debate, and refused before about twenty-five men; so we are also opposed like at other places, for this sect is everywhere spoken against.

We have a noble branch of thirty-six members and also some young men who have been called to the ministry, who bid fair to be useful. We rejoice, keep up meetings both prayer and preaching every Sunday, and hope that the seed sown will bring forth fruit in God's own time. May Zion prosper. Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

Morris, Ill., Sept 29th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:— Since 1866 I have been looking for the right church, that is, I have been investigating the principles, faiths and doctrines of the various churches and have not found any doctrine as true and firm as that advocated by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. On the 26th of May last I was baptized by Bro. F. M. Cooper. My experience in the months since past is something wonderful, and the revelations brought before me are positive proof that the faith indorsed by me and multitudes of others is the only sure ingress to the kingdom of heaven.

Many of my neighbors call me a fanatic—a religious crank, and other like unpleasant names, yet I have excellent opportunity for good work in Morris and vicinity, and I shall hold tenaciously to anything proving a help to our church.

I have occasional talks with those in search of truth, and have every reason to believe that it is only a matter of a short time until they will enter the fold. Asking the prayers of all Saints to aid me, I am your brother in bonds,

LEWIS LEIST.

CRAWFORD, Neb., Sept. 22d.

Bro. D. Dancer:—I desire to see the church publications all sustained and prosperous. I think Autumn Leaves fills a long felt want in the church and it could hardly be dispensed with in our household. The Herald and Hope are also necessities to the life of the Saints and the rising generation. I think the church publications should be kept constantly before the young to encourage them to read them, as they will surely read something.

Please find money enclosed for Herald and Hope and Autumn Leaves for one year.

Yours for truth,

H. A. RUDD.

Editor Herald:—The Lord has been so good to me as to spare my life and give me a good degree of health of late, and I am feeling better than I have for a long time. And as He has enabled me to earn a little I thought I would send an offering to his cause. I am still firm in the faith, although I have a great many trials and temptations to endure.

Yours in the gospel,

Communications.

ARTICLES under this head do not necessarily receive the endorsement of the Editor: writers are responsible for their own views. Contributions solicited.

RELIGION IN THEORY AND NOT IN FACT IS NO RELIGION.

CHRONIC grumblers and fault-finders have a demoralizing influence, so far as their operations extend; but we should not be indifferent to the real dangers that obstruct the wheels of spiritual progress, and which paralyze the efforts for good of those who work according to the law and spirit of the gospel. One member of the church by unwise word or act can do more injury to the cause than twenty (and perhaps it would not be an exaggeration to say fifty) wise members can do good. It is much easier to destroy, than to build. A city that was years in building may be destroyed in a few hours by the criminal act of one man.

People may be on the verge of accepting the gospel, but through the folly of one or more members of the church may have their faith destroyed, as to its divine claims; and judging by the rule, "Ye shall know them by their fruits," they turn away from the religion which they were almost persuaded to accept. Somebody is responsible for these unhappy results. "Let your light so shine before men," etc., is the master-wheel that propels the entire machinery of the gospel, and other methods adverse to this ought to fail because they are wrong.

To be converted to the gospel through false motives or an unimproper understanding of its obligations is virtually no conversion, as it can not benefit the subject, and generally ends in making trouble for the church. If people in past ages could "hold the truth in unrighteousness," they can do so in this age. The proper motive is as essential as the proper thought, but both are necessary in the constitution of the proper act. Truth accepted by a bad motive and error accepted through an honest motive are both wrong; but the former is more reprehensible than the latter; the first represents deception and hypocrisy; the last is honesty imposed upon.

The religion that presents the highest possibilities in moral and spiritual attainment, that administers the greatest power for good in the elevation of our race, carries with it the eternal interests of the whole human race, and its faithful devotees occupy the highest grounds in spiritual life, while its never-ending possibilities invite them heavenward. the purest form of religious faith can only benefit us by practically applying to our lives the lessons it teaches and attaining the blessings it confers. Disregard these facts and our profession is but a sham, while lost opportunities will, in the end, mock the barrenness of our characters and the failure of our lives. "It is not the quantity of food that we eat that gives us strength, it is the amount we digest." The mind may likewise be filled with rich treasures of knowledge derived from the gospel's inspired teachings; but if this knowledge is not utilized in our life-work, if it does not permeate and control our actions and motives, all of our knowledge will be of no avail. We do not wish to apologize for willful wrong-doing, as the Lord has demanded of us to cease to do evil and to practice a righteous life; but it is perhaps true when we say that many errors and wrongs are committed through a mistaken judgment on the part of those committing them, who had no intention of injuring themselves or others at the time.

A lack of knowledge and wisdom to apply it, is where "the little foxes" are propagated that injure the vine and destroy its growth and productiveness. The many and varied forms of evil to be found in the church will not be fully eliminated while it is in its primary state; but if they are not regulated and controlled, they become controlling factors, and the unerring testimony of the past points out the inevitable result—collapse and death.

Truth perverted and employed to conserve the selfish interest of the individual generates faction, strife and a host of evils; besides it begets children "after its own kind," whose hideous deformity is apparent in the light of God's truth.

"Knowledge is power," but the knowledge how to live in our adopted relationship to God and to our kindred creatures, is the information the gospel gives; but they who think that their acceptance of the first principles of the gospel gives them the requisite knowledge to entitle them to salvation without subsequent earnest effort and growth deceive themselves. Regenerated life begins with our obedience to the first principles of the gospel, but regenerated life is relative and its demands can only be supplied by "growth in grace and the knowledge of the truth," until we pass from the primary and intermediate stages of growth to the perfected life of heaven.

Conversion to Christ is but the begining of growth and not the ending. but the commencement of a legitimate warfare for the mastery over sin, but the crown is not given to the victor until the war is over. Present knowledge utilized by the necessities of the present is but a safe conduct to coming responsibilities and duties. Our spiritual and moral power is to be measured by our ability to overcome the evils that menace our relationship to the divine standard that we have accepted. There is no need to court temptation, the evil is within us; external things can but excite and develop it. Results hinge upon the question, will our knowledge of the right, our love for the truth, coupled with our devotion to duty and to God, give us the mastery over the evils we encounter in life.

The divine law not only assumes to govern the mental and moral in organic man, but it dictates the government of his physical organization in its relation to moral life through the medium of his mind. It is evident that man's physical organization is subordinate to the operation of the mind, making the latter responsible for the adoption of thoughts and the construction of motives, whether good or evil. Voluntary action is the result of volition, hence no action of this kind can precede the dictation of the mind; the physical man is but the slave or servant of the mind, and external manifestations but an index pointing to his mental and moral condition. In the light of these facts it is safe to say that all actions which are evil are the result of previous mental infractions upon the divine law —a rupture of vital principles essential in maintaining a true condition of moral and spiritual life. The motive may be good, but the method wrong if so, the object aimed at will be defeated until the method ordained in the law of God is adopted. This proposition gives a solid and essential basis to truth, making it alone the conservator of man's highest interest, as well as the criterion by which all his acts are either justified or condemned.

We call attention to some of the practical evils which people are likely to stagger upon, even in the church; and which have a deleterious influence upon the advancement of the kingdom of Christ: Slander, inuendo, "tell it all" and more too; and advertising faults, supposed or real, but invariably some one else's, are parts of the nefarious work of the gifted linguistic gossiper, whose unsavory reputation is a foul blot noon the fair name of the Church of Christ. These poor unfortunates, with an abnormal capacity for unwholesome things, generally make trouble for themselves as well as for others; and the sad comment upon their judgment is their failure to foresee the unhappy results certain to follow their bad methods. It seems that in the constitution of truth, God has so arranged it that its violators bring retribution upon themselves, sooner or later; and none are safe except those whose external and internal life are in harmony with the divine law. An improper use of articulate speech is one of the great evils of the world, and it is to be regretted that this evil invades the church like a pestilence, and despoils the peace and beauty of Zion's children; creating division, mistrust, and the many evils which produce spiritual deterioration and death. While it is said "kind words can never die," we will not forget that harsh sentences have remarkable longevity; and that they live too long for the peace and well-being of those who utter them, as also those against whom they are hurled.

Tattlers are a menace to the peace of the church, and are as a deadly virus in the life-blood of the body spiritual; and nothing but a wise and cautious enforcement of the divine law can forestall or defeat their evil work. But tattling is but an evidence of moral disease within, where the very fountain of life and thought is corrupted, and which develops a condition of things as antagonistic to the Spirit and genius of Christ, as is the deadly malaria to the healthful air, exempt from its poisonous properties.

If we love the work of God, the manifestations of this love is to harmonize our lives with the will of God; to lead us triumphantly over every foe within and without that opposes our unity with Christ. Divine charity will never lead us to say one word or to do an act, intentionally, that does not accord with the law of God as well as the best interests of all concerned in the great work of human redemption. F. M. Cooper.

EDITORS HERALD:-If you judge this piece worthy a place in the Herald, give it an insertion. My text is found in Ephesians 1: 10, "that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he [Christ] might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and, which are on earth, even in him."

The Lord's mode or manner of instructing men is often by means of figures, similitudes and likenesses. "Six days shalt thou labor." The seventh is the fulness of days and the termination of the week, and a day of rest, when we change our garments put on our best and meet with the Saints to worship God.

In the Book of Abraham, as translated by the Seer, it says that it takes a thousand years of our time to make one day in God's time; and in the second chapter of Genesis, second verse, "on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made, and he rested on the seventh day from all his work." The former periods of time being a thousand years, of course the Sabbath was of equal duration, and when the earth has labored under sin, wickedness and death for six thousand years, a glorious rest of a thousand years must come, when pain and death will cease to be, and perfect pleasure, peace and joy reign supreme throughout all the earth.

Israel was commanded to keep the seventh year as a Sabbath year, and at the end of forty-nine years there was a jubilee, or year of release, when land property except in a walled city returned to its original Israel was a figurative people, owner. their bondage in Egypt answering to the bondage of man to sin and Satan; their deliverance from bondage to the conversion of men from wickedness to righteousness, and their passing through the Red Sea, to baptism for the remission of sins, as says the apostle, "they were all baptized to Moses in the cloud and in the sea."

How hopeless was their condition before they entered the passage through the sea, the Egyptian host behind them, and an impassable mountain on either hand and the sea before them, which opened to them a passage at the command of the servant of God! How great was their joy when they reached a place of safety to see their enemies dead on the shore, each with a slaughter weapon in his hand, with which Israel armed themselves for future conflicts, which they might expect to meet with on their way to the promised land.

It might be supposed that they never would have forgotten such a wonderful deliverance; and modern Israel is in no way different from ancient Israel. O, that we might or would learn wisdom by the things which we have suffered! Bless the Lord, O my soul; I know the Lord will have a people with whom he will perform every work that he has said he would when the time comes to perform that work, and notwithstanding all the apostasies in the wilderness, the Lord raised up a people with whom he fulfilled his word and made himself a name never to be forgotten.

When Israel crossed the Jordan the city of Jerico was the first in their way. The Lord commanded Joshua to select seven priests, and each one was to have a ram's horn on which to blow to make a sound. They were to go around the city, the priests that carried the ark were to go next to them and the armed troops were to follow; they were to go around the city once each day. The priests blew with the ram's horns continually while they were going round. They went once around each day for six days and on the seventh they went seven times around, and at the end of the seventh round the priests with the ram's horns blew a loud blast, and the people shouted, and the wall fell down, even all of it, and the city was taken.

It might be instructive to describe particulars, but it would require too much space; so suffice it to say that the seven days' work at the taking of the city foreshadowed the seven times that God would renew a covenant from Heaven to man to prepare them to enjoy that rest that remains for the people of God, and we should praise the Lord with all our might that to us is assigned the seventh day's work which supersedes all the balance in magnitude, for the Lord has begun to perform his act, his strange act; and bring to pass his work, his strange work.

What we need to prepare us for the work is faith in God. Faith in God arms us with the power of God. If any people ever had cause to have faith we are that people, for what wonderful things has he done for us and wrought in us! We are to-day what we are through his mercy and goodness. O, let us love and serve Him with all our hearts, and also love one an-Lamoni, Iowa, August 30th, 1889. other.

THE "HOPE."

Editor's Herald:-Because this is a subject in which the whole church, but especially the ministry, are interested, I ask space for it in the Herald, if convenient.

Editor Hope:—I am not privileged to be a constant reader of your valuable Sabbath school paper, for, being almost a constant traveler, I strike points it does not reach; but I chanced to see a copy for September 21st, therefore read your editorial and thought announcement and description of new dress encouraging to the patrons. But as I read, was forcibly reminded of the stern and trying fact, namely, "never a joy without a sorrow, or a sunshine without a cloud." For, believe me, I had flattered myself of a steady growth, and the gladsome news, soon saluting our ears, of an enlargement of Zion's Hope, columns. Five hundred less sub-scribers! What a clipping of the garment! What palpable proof of a backward step! Let us hope that such a staggering blow may cause the friends of so valuable a paper to pause, think, and then redouble their diligence.

Zion's Hope languishing, retrograding, subscribers growing less; its influence and usefulness as a consequent, measurably lessened! How distressing the thought! Rally, yes by all means; let there be a grand, sensible, aud substantial rally, culminating in adding at least a thousand subscribers to its list. It will never do to even think of withholding the requisite sustenance, now that in years the Hope has reached its manhood. Rather let it be increased, that the vigor and strength of its manhood may be visible.

It is possible that these suggestions may, to some, savor too strongly of a wild enthusiasm. If so, let me say, I hate such enthusiasm, knowing that it bodes no good; yet I believe a gospel imposed enthusiasm, or ambition, is as essential in the divine life for the strength and continued growth of God's work as the heat and moisture afforded by the sun, dew and rain are indispensable for the growth of flowers, vegetables, grain and fruit. Policy and ignorance delight to revel in unseemly enthusiasm and wild excitements, exaggerations, etc., while gospel moderation begets a true conception of possibilities, and in the exhibition of a godly persistency, a heaven approved zeal, labors for the consummation of that thus conceived.

This moderation leads to the contemplation, and correspondingly labors to effect the results of gospel unity. It knows no south, north, east or west, cultured or ignorant, yet recognizes and appreciates with no lack of discrimination between labor produced by five talents and that produced by one. It never essays to heap undue applause on the former, or forgets with what readiness the Master, recognized the seemingly insignificant act of the humble, trembling widow casting in her mite. How inspiring is the study of a gospel moderation! How astounding its practical results!

To estimate the results which the printed word may accomplish, would be difficult. A young woman became somewhat excited in the beginning of our church's missionary work in Utah, in 1863, by finding a bit of torn paper in a wood box with the word, "Reorganization" thereon, and she ceased not her efforts until she knew its import.

The appearance and choice reading matter of the Hope, as a product of, or coming from the Latter Day Saints, (who are in many places represented as being the most ignorant of the ignorant), must to the sober thinker appear significant, to say the least; and how effective it must be in securing a requisite prestige.

How many have failed to learn of the Latter Day Saints through a dropping off of the five hundred subscribers, and how many would learn of their existence if a thousand subscribers should be added, are among the mysteries; but certain it is that to bring into requisition every facility to advertise the great latter day work is but our reasonable service. We thus evince a readiness to bear our portion of the burden lest we be forgotten in the time of rewards.

Teachers and Sunday School scholars should not lose sight of the fact that our Publishing House is not endowed with an occasional contribution of ten or twenty thousand dollars, as are some of the popular orthodox book concerns; nor have they the advantage of a large advertising patronage or such an extensive circulation. It was but last spring that I read of a tenyear-old college, conducted under the auspices of one of the most influential orthodox societies, needing an endowment of a hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I learned of fifty thousand being received as a starter. These facts render the necessity of a united effort apparent to even the casual observer.

There is nothing written or said encouraging to those at ease in Zion. The Master who is represented as having gone into a far country; has not yet returned; but as surely as he is represented as going, so surely he will return, to know and make public, as upon the house-top, what use or abuse has been made of the five, two and one talents. The Herald, Hope and Autumn Leaves are three-yet onein adding strength and vitality to the latter day work; and to let either trail in the dust would prove injurious to the cause. The church can not afford to do this, yet the efforts to sustain may be arduous, though not impracticable; and why should we expect to accomplish anything great or good without the taxing of our whole strength and ability to their utmost capacity? The bearing or carrying of ponderous or crushing burdens, is well calculated to beget in the soul thirsting for right-eousness, a heaven approved humility, and a seeking to God for, with a consciousness of a reception of strength superior to its own; thus leading toward an ultimate which Paul evinced in the declaration, "I can do all things through Christ strengthening me."

Much, very much, depends upon a proper utilization of time, opportunities and earthly substance; let us see to it. In the long ago the fact stands prominent in the history of the latter day work, that when about thirty thousand in number the Latter Day Saints in the united kingdom of Great Britain (who had suffered under king-craft and were beginning to smart under the galling yoke of priestcraft, yet sincere in their profession, though mostly the sons of toil) doubled—and I think quadrupled-the subscription of the Millennial Star. Why then should it be thought a task too hard for the members of the Reorganized Church, whose circumstances are far more favorable in a pecuniary point of view than theirs were, to add a thousand subscribers, thus keeping Zion's Hope alive, or extending its usefulness? Now is the time to bring into requisition every facility for the extension of the latter day work. Your announcement of the Hope's age startled me, and I wondered what I had done in all these years!

JAMES CAFFALL.

While thanking Bro. Caffall for his interest in the Hope, we can not refrain from expressing our pleasure in knowing that one of the ministry at least, has an eye upon this little gospel messenger, and as we deem the chance an opportune one we are going to beg for space in the Herald not only for his article, but for a few words with the ministry of the church in reference to one or two points upon which Bro. Caffall has not touched. If what we have to say should seem plain talk, we beg our brethren to remember that Paul gave liberty to "entreat an elder." This is all we aim to do.

Brethren, we entreat you to enter into the sanctuary of your own souls and when you have barred the entrance, shutting out all intruders, ask of yourself the question, "What have I done in the years which are past, towards feeding the lambs of the flock? Do I know from a careful examination thereof the kind of spiritual food they are receiving? How many sermons in all the course of my ministry have I addressed to them? Have I ever tried to put myself in the child's place, that I might know how much of the spiritual food I am dealing out from time to time he is able to digest (or understand)? When the little ones have come to years of accountability and have presented themselves for baptism, have I felt in reporting the same, that because it was only a lamb, I was entitled to less credit than had it been a sheep? If so thinking, has it ever oc-curred to you that Christ demanded first the feeding of the lambs? Demanded it as a test of love to him? Have I always made it a matter of duty when traveling from branch to branch, to be present at and encourage the workers in the Sunday School? Do I know what is taught there, and have I helped to furnish the food which reaches them through the medium of Zion's Hope? (Ah, brethren, if you have to plead guilty at the bar of your conscience in reference to the other questions asked, as we surely know you will have to in reference to this last one, may God help you and enable you to reform).

As we look at it, there has been a great mistake made by the entire church, (of course there are exceptions, but we speak now of the rule). All will concede the point that the wisdom of God is greater than the wisdom of man, and every Bible student is, or should be, aware what line of policy God has marked out in this respect: "I know Abraham that he will command his children and his household after him and they shall keep the way of the Lord." "If you love me, feed my lambs." . . .

Shall we tell them what the gospel is not, and never tell them what it is? Christ "spake as one having authority." . . . "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself for the battle?"

Are the children of the household of faith equipped and prepared to defend that faith? Are the children adopted into the household trained to do the same. A few years ago there was a skeleton (or some believed it to be such) in the church and those who so regarded it, walked carefully by it, shaking their heads and saying, "I tell you it won't bear uncovering; just lift the corner of the sheet and see how the bones will rattle. It is putrid and there is a bad odor all about it." Tempted by curiosity or moved by the Spirit so to do, band after band of young and middle-aged Saints formed for the purpose of unveiling this skeleton and bringing it to the light. But lo, as they took off the wrappings, instead of corruption and decay, health and vigor were revealed; instead of death, life and vigor stood embodied before them, and to-day from one end of the church to the other, in the broad light of day, men and women, young and old open this book (the skeleton) and wonder anew at its purity, strength and beauty, and give to the Doctrine and Covenants the same honor given to the Bible and Book of Mormon. Why were they brought up in ignorance of its contents? There is responsibility somewhere, and the fact that God overruled the neglect, will not make individual responsibility less.

It is a self-evident fact that as a church we are not doing our duty by the Hope. No Sunday School can afford to do with one Hope less, because the lessons are not in it. The membership of the church is increasing, why should not the circulation of our papers increase also?

THE "SEALED BOOK."—No. XVII.

BY ELDER R. M. ELVIN.

LAKE MICHIGAN REGION.

MR. WM. H. BALLOU, in giving the above description, uses these words: "When we reach Chicago we find that the intellectual features of the Lake region have been exhausted, and also the scenery. Chicago proper has no institution of any prominence whatever. It has no scenery, except such as is artificial and has been made in her parks. I have seen artificial effects in scenery produced by the moundbuilders in the same region which bore such a striking resemblance to the effects produced in the parks by the landscape gardeners that I ceased to feel informed as to the extent of the civilization and learning of the former. Future races, excavating on the site of Chicago, will place the inhabitants of that city in the same category with the mound-builders of the Mississippi valley, if these effects are taken as types of progress. This is no reflection upon the artistic beauty of artificial Chicago scenery. It is simply a statement of The mound-builders excelled in artistic effects of artificial scenery, and whether from design or accident, the landscape gardeners have reproduced and extended the designs which charecterized the ancient and wonderful mound-builders."-

Leslie's Monthly, May, 1889, p. 620.

Mr. David S. Banks, who went from New York to Yucatan in the especial interest of certain departments of scientific knowledge lets light shine upon several topics that are strong proofs of the correctness of the Book of Mormon. It will be remembered that Stephens in 1842 gave the number of ruined cities at forty-two, while this man gives an increased or corrected list in 1888, as follows: "There are between sixty and seventy ruined cities in Yucatan, as far as they have been discovered."—Leslie's Monthly, May, 1889, p. 547.

COLOSSAL SERPENTS.

The same author in his description of the Casa de los Monjas, tells us: "The facades of this immense quadrangle are ornamented with the richest and most intricate carving known in the art of the buildings of Uxmal. That portion forming the western boundary, at the left as one enters the court, is the most wonderful of all; for its entire length of one hundred and seventy-three feet is covered by two colossal serpents, whose intertwined bodies inclose a puzzling quantity of sculptured hieroglyphs, showing a wonderful variety of symbols, a wealth of illustration and method of expression. It will be seen from this facade that the language of the Mayas must have been profound and subtle, wide in its range, and eloquent and graphic in its force and expression."-Ibid, p. 549.

HISTORICAL ENIGMA.

Scientists do not agree upon the antiquity of the ancient ruins, and they never will agree if they seek to establish that there was but one civilization. Do not let it slip from memory that the Book of Mormon accounts for three conditions or ranks of civilization; namely the Jaredite which was superceeded by the Nephite, the latter displaced by the Aboriginal or Lamanite supremacy. This is paralleled by some scientists by the Ake age or civilization, and this was followed by the Uxmal civilization, and it in turn gave place to the Indian rule. So that science and the Book of Mormon give us the same couclusions.

Mr. Banks says: "In all the centuries there has been considerable speculation as to the antiquity of ruins and mounds found in such great profusion in Central America. Many surmises have been made as to the actual truth. But who can judge? who has sufficient data to establish any reasonable hypothesis which can be substantiated by positive evidence? The claim, on one side of antiquity, on the other of a comparatively recent origin, in regard to these ruins, need not perplex us; but in one particular why should not both be right? Certainly I claim from careful, scientific investigations that these ruins show distinct signs of different ages. For instance, we see one structute with every line visible, and denoting a modern age, but deserted for centuries; while others, with the worn, round edges of their stones, teach to the accustomed geological observer that antiquity is a potent factor in the result. All of this I derive from my observations at Ake. In other words, I think Uxmal comparatively new, while Ake belongs to the ages lost in antiquity. Literal facts, in future publications I shall adduce to prove my theory in this particular, reserving to myself the hope to congratulate any scholar whom science may raise up to determine the antiquity of the great ruins of Ake, and thus the honor of solving the relative antiquity of the general ruins of Yucatan."-Ibid, p. 551.

Thus, kind reader, you perceive that practically scientific investigation and the Book of Mormon harmonize in relation to the several changes of the ancient civilization.

PHANTOM CITIES.

No astonishment should obtain that many believe there are yet to be made rich and marvelous discoveries in mystic ancient America. Mr. Banks adduces the following evidence and deduction thereon: "That which excites the keenest interest of the true explorer in Yucatan are what nearly all reliable authorities concede to be both wonders and mysteries—and those are the Phantom Cities, lying in sections of country still remaining a terra incogni-The territory south-west of Yucatan -that portion of Guatemala lying west of the British colony of Balize, south of Campeche and east of Chiapas and Tabascois an almost unexplored region. this region the aborigines, yet strangers to the white man, wander with all the free dom of independent nomads who have not yet come under the aegis of the Spanish conquest. Somewhere in this wild, untraveled land are situated the mysterious cities which, I may add, exist on the authority of those great travelers, John L. Stephens, Arthur Morelet, E. G. Squire, Don Pedro Velasquez, of Guatemala; Desire Charnay, who went to Yucatan as the representative of Mr. Pierre Lorillard, and has published, in a splendidly illustrated edition de luxe, 'Les Anciennes Villes du Nouveau Monde.' I beg also to add my own testimony to the statements and opinions of these authors; for my travels in the peninsula, a close study of its topography, the movement of the tribes, conversations with and a cross-examination of the natives, and the knowledge that no traveler who has ever ventured into this inhabited wilderness has ever returned-all convince me, independently of other considerations, that mighty cities, yet unseen by the eye of any stranger, still flourish in that isolated interior. And why should not this be so? It is only a little over three centuries since Cortes and Pizarro first made their inroads in the countries of the Montezumas and of the Incas, and all of the aboriginal civilization has been brought to the knowledge of mankind It is strange, too, that the territory specified has so long defied the investigation of dauntless and well-equipped explorers; yet not, when it is considered that the mysterious smoke' of the Everglades of Florida has never been reached by white man or negro. Although almost countless attempts, at great risk, have been made, through the swamps and jungles, to reach the spot whence rises this perpetual phenomenon, all have been failures, and none have solved the problem.

"But what is actually known of these aboriginal cities of Central America, which are still supposed to retain in their inhabitants the last of the continual descendants of the ancient settlers, keeping up the rites and ancient customs of their progenitors, and furnishing in their, doubtless, wellpreserved history, tradition and folk-lore a complete knowledge of the ancient arts and manufactures, a key to the complete architecture that has been the amazement of exporers and archæologists? As to the absolute certainty of their existence, in one form or another, there remains only the faintest shadow of doubt. What we do know is this: Stephens was the first of explorers to bring the city to the notice of the modern world. The cura of Quiche, an Indian village of Guatemala, informed him he had seen the Phantom City from the summit of the higher peaks of the mountains of that State. But the difficul-ties of attempting to go into the interior appalled even a somewhat reckless and curious traveler like Stephens, who wisely enough reasoned that the certainty of death was entirely too plain to justify the undertaking. It is not clear why, with such important results in view, Stephens did not secure an armed escort and proceed to invade the interior on a mission of science. However, he says, in speaking of this subject: 'In fact, I conceive it to be not impossible that within this secluded region may exist at this day, unknown to white men, a living aboriginal city, occupied by relics of the ancient race who still worship in the temples of their fathers.' Later than Stephens, a Frenchman, Arthur Morelet, entered this country by the Usumasinta River, and traveled on the frontier of the area where the Phantom City is thought to be, and such records as he has left indicate that he was a strong believer in its reality. Mr. E. G. Squier, an eminent authority on Central America, speaking of this territory, thus alludes to the subject: 'Within its depths, far off on some unknown tributary of the Usumasinta, the popular tradition of Guatemala and Chiapas places that great aboriginal city, with its white walls shining like silver in the sun, which the cura of Quiche affirmed he had seen with his own eyes from the tops of Quezaltenango.' I wish to add my testin ony to that of these distinguished travelers, from what in one respect might seem a trivial detail in observation. For instance, I noticed in Ake, where by far the most ancient ruins of Central America may be found, that the cement, as seen in protected places—that is to say, imbedded beyond the surface in depressed architectural recesses, where it had escaped the action of the elementswas very white, and would glisten in the sun in similar manner to that described by the cura of Quiche. The query naturally occurred to me, could not the later facades of the ancient cities, too, have been covered with this shiny cement? And is this not proof of the existence of such a city in the wilds of Yucatan—one like Ake? And then came Don Pedro Velasquez, of Guatemala—it is thirty years since—who, according to his own account, penetrated to the very heart of the Phantom City, saw it in all of its magnificence of architecture and statuary, became possessed of all its secrets and mysteries, and then, in an endeavor to escape, one of the Americans (two accompanied him from Baltimore) was sacrificed on the High Altar of the Sun, and the other was wounded, and subsequently died in the wilderness of Guatemala, after a fierce fight with the Indians. Finally, let me add that to solve the existence of this Phantom City and its living population is to-day the most important problem that confronts the ambitious explorer, in the whole range of such effort on American soil. For a traveler to reach there, to return with an accurate account of its people, its life, its physical characteristics, its order of civilization and system of government, would be a feat unparalleled since the early Spanish conquerors first carried the glories of the Montezumas to the wondering peoples of the Old World. It is a more difficult enterprise, however, than that of the Arctic traveler, or the African explorer, and he who has the temerity to try it must first acquire a thorough knowledge of Yucatan."-Ibid, p. 551-2.

When we consider the character of both country and people, it is not strange that the opinion has obtained of magnificent cities not yet found or seen by white men, and especially so when it is clear that the exploration of the American continent is but in its infancy.

NEPHITE LAWS.

The laws of government, God and family are the three safeguards to happiness here, with a rainbow of promise for a happy condition hereafter. Whoever has read the Book of Mormon carefully has discovered that all laws adopted by the Nephites had in view to sustain their government, protect their religion and to administer comfort to the people: "Behold, it came to pass that the son of Nephihah was appointed to fill the judgment seat, in the stead of his father; yea, he was appointed chief judge, and governor over the people, with an oath, and sacred ordinance to judge righteously, and to keep the peace, and the freedom of the people, and to grant unto them their sacred privileges to worship the Lord their God; yea, to support and maintain the cause of God all his days, and to bring the wicked to justice according to their crime. Now behold, his name was Pahoran."-Alma 22:8.

A man who will execute the law with justness and equity to all, seldom gives perfect satisfaction, and so it was in the above case; some restless spirits desired a "Nevertheless, they did not change: long maintain an entire peace in the land, for there began to be a contention among the people concerning the chief judge, Pahoran; for behold, there were a part of the people who desired that a few particular points of the law should be altered. But behold, Pahoran would not alter, nor suffer the law to be altered; therefore he did not hearken to those who had sent in their voices with their petitions, concerning the altering of the law."-Ibid 23: 1.

During the past fourteen centuries these laws have been almost lost sight of among the Mayas and other tribes who succeeded the Nephite civilization, but here is a shadow or reflex, as discovered and report-"Communism was ed by Mr. Banks: universal among the Mayas of Central and South America when they dwelt in unity and security. Indeed they offer a solemn example of a most perfect condition of human society, as built on primitive foundation, and well worth the study of the reckless theorists and wild-brained charlatans of the present day. It was ordained that one-third of the land should be dedicated to the Sun—that is, to support the temples and priesthood. One-third was for running the Government and public improvements, maintaining the army, and keeping the public granaries full in case of emergency. The remaining third of the land was divided among the people in equal shares; and no one was allowed to increase his property even a farthing. A topo of land was granted to every male child; half a topo to every female child, one topo being considered enough for man and wife. Marriage was compulsory at a fixed age. At the death of any individual, child or adult, the property reverted to the State. Capital, trusts and monopolies did not exist, and it may be added, there was no scope for the eloquence of Father McGlynn, the finely spun cure-all of Henry George, or such picturesque corporations as the Anti poverty Society. The Mayas never knew want. Agriculture was under strict regulations, as were

ed belonged to the Church; then such ground as belonged to the aged, infirm and widows and orphans, and others that were helpless. No one could till his own land until the land of those unable to work it was attended to. This was a paramount duty, and its disregard was punished by death on the gallows. The Government land was cultivated last, the individual owner taking the precedence. Such was the system that embraced millions of people, and they lived in peace, happiness and prosperity—a study for every class of students of socialism and political economyand they remained undisturbed in their serenity until the ruthless incursion of the Spanish conqueror, flourishing the sword of the bandit, while devoutly invoking the Cross of Christianity. Truly those were dramatic days in the history of the rich and wonderful South American tropics! Charity and equity were the universal rule, and this I noted to be the religious practice throughout the peninsula to-day. Let me give an example: A land-holder has a cenote on his property. This must furnish the water-supply for the immediate neighborhood, so that the native who is dependent upon him for his water contracts to take it, paying him for a week's supply by one day's labor on his (the proprietor's) land; and curiously enough, this always occurs on Monday-our American wash-day. No money passes; the contract is in kind."—Leslie's Monthly, May, 1889, p. 554-5.

The strange but common sense customs of the Mayas serve as a torch to trace our steps back through the dark days until we discover the halo of civilization obtaining when the Nephites were in the zenith of their glory and kept the law of God. The object of this article, as the reader is aware, is the presentation of evidence, with barely sufficient comment to make that evidence intelligible.

I will now present it under the following divisions: (1) Time when aboriginal civilization of America was made known to the world by scientific investigations. (2) Age, location, derivation and nature of civilization. (3) Aboriginal (4) Aboriginal warfare. (5) aboriginal civilization. migrations. religion. (6) Miscellaneous Aboriginal arguments. (7) Objections answered. (8) Bible arguments.

VIRCHOW ON DARWIN.

HE SAYS THAT THE PROOF OF HIS THEORY IS STILL LACKING.

Some sensation has been caused at the recent Anthropological congress in Vienna by the speech of the great Berlin biologist, Prof. Virchow. About a year ago Virchow, on a similar occasion, made a severe attack on the Darwinian position, and this year he is similarly outspoken. We make the following extracts from his long address to the congress:

"Twenty years ago, when we met at Innspruck, it was precisely the moment when the Darwinian theory had made its first victorious mark throughout the world. My friend Vogt at once rushed into the ranks of the champions of this doctrine. We have since in vain sought for the intermediate stages, which were supposed to connect man with the apes; the proto-man, the proanthropos, is not yet discovered. For anthropological science the pro-anthropos is not even a subject of discussion. The anthropologist may, perhaps, see him in a dream, but as soon as he awakes he can not say that he has made any approach toward him. At that time in Innspruck the prospect was, apparently, that the course of the descent from ape to man would be reconstructed all at once; but now we can not even prove the descent of the separate races from one another. At this moment we are able to say that among the peoples of antiquity no single one was any nearer to the apes than we are. At this moment I can affirm that there is not upon earth any absolutely unknown race of men. The least known of all are the people of the central mountainous districts of the Malay peninsula, but otherwise we know the people of Terra del Fuego quite as well as the Eskimo, Bashkirs, Polynesians and Lapps. Nay, we know more of many of these races than we do of certain European tribes; I need only mention the Albanians. Every living race is still human; no single one has yet been found that we can designate as Simian or quasi-Simian. Even when in certain ones phenomena appear which are characteristic of the apes-e.g., the peculiar ape-like projections of the skull in certain races-still we can not on that account alone say that these men are ape-like. As regards the lake dwellings, I have been able to submit to comparative examination nearly every single skull that has been found. The result has been that we have certainly met with opposite characteristics among various races; but of all these there is not one that lies outside of the boundaries of our present population. It can thus be positively demonstrated that in the the course of five thousand years no change of type worthy of mention has taken place. If you ask me whether the first man was white or black I can only say I don't know."

Prof. Virchow summed up the question as to what anthropological science during the last forty years has gained, and whether, as many contend, it has gone foreward or backward. "Twenty years ago the leaders of our science asserted that they knew many things which, as a matter of fact, they did not know. Nowadays we know what we know. I can only reckon up our accounts in so far as to say that we have made no debts: that is, we have made no loan from hypotheses; we are in no danger of seeing that which we know overturned in the course of the next moment. We have leveled the ground so that the coming generation may make abundant use of the material at their disposition. As an attainable objective of the next twenty years, we must look to the anthropology of the European nationalities .- London Tablet.

The above which has been going the rounds of the leading journals is of interest in many respects. It serves to show that those regarded as eminent in the domain of scientific lore at times adopt theories and reach conclusions which they are afterwards compelled to abandon, and which prove to be absolutely absurd; thus showing that all physical sciences, at least in the imperfect degree known by man,

About ten or fifteen vears ago when the Darwinian theory of the descent (or ascent) of the human species was creating considerable interest, if not alarm and consternation, in some theological circles, the sam eminent anthropologist-Professor Virchow—considerably eased and quieted many staggering and weak-kneed theologians by declaring in effect: that the vast difference in degree of brain power possessed by the least civilized and lowest intellectual type of any of the various tribes of man and that of the most intelligent of the mere animal, such as the gorilla, etc., was so great that it presented a gap or chasm which the adherents of the Darwinian theory could not span nor bridge; and "every new discovery in this branch of science removes us farther from such a conclusion." He also stated, in effect, the great physiological and intellectual truth that, man in every age in which we find him shows the same power or capacity for intellectual development as at present. We may state in this connection, as it in some sense bears a relation to the subject, that the Negro has at times maintained a front rank, and occasionally led the Caucasian, in some lines of studies at Yale or Harvard College. The same would probably be true of any of the other races under like favorable conditions.

It is comforting and confirming to note that in general the discoveries and conclusions of the ablest and most recent scientists are such as to emphasize the grandeur and the truth of Paul's wonderful and inspired declaration to the learned Athenians, "God . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men."

We believe that scientific discovery, rightly interpreted, will gradually but surely confirm many of the details of sacred narrative, and that God will use science as a handmaid to religion to sustain and confirm his wonderful word, past and present. Its value should not be underestimated, for to its researches are we indebted for great and wonderful improvements in almost every phase of our civilization-intellectually, physically and economically. In her proper domain she commands our respect and admiration, as in her sphere, she reveals and gives us expositions of the wonderful works of the Creator. But when her devotees attempt to reach beyond and independent of the realm of revealed truth and ignore the Creator, their folly will be made manifest and their steps will, in time, be always retraced, however reluctantly; and this by the irresistible force and power of truth. This is also true of many theologians. "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up," is a statement of deep and broad signification, and one that is inconsiderately read and but imperfectly comprehended. It also has local as well as general significance.

In conclusion we may appropriately, we think, mention the apt reply of an English Journalist to some members of the Royal Society of Great Britain, who in the presentation of a treatise or thesis on some occult, scientific subject claimed that man had existed upon the earth from the ages of very remote antiquity, expressing the probability of some hundreds of thousands of years as approximating nearer the truth than the time mentioned in holy writ. The substance of the journalist's. criticism was, in effect: It is passing strange that if such an industrious and restless creature as man has had a residence upon our earth for upwards of half a million or so of years, that it is only in the past few thousand years that he has given any account of himself, or left reliable traces of his doings.

We have heard of such a thing as "hitting the nail on the head." The phrase is a homely one, but is terse and significant, and is applicable in the instance just mentioned.

"THE FAMOUS BREECHES BIBLE.

"A COPY OF THE RARE OLD VOLUME OWNED IN HARTFORD.

"A well preserved volume of the genuine old 'Breeches Bible,' so called, is in the possession of Mr. Horace Johnson of Hartford. It was printed in London in 1602 in the old 'black letter' textenough to spoil the sight of any but the most persistent reader—but it was a kind of print with which Shakespeare and Lord Bacon were familiar. This edition-probably copied from the 'Bishops' Bible' of 1568-derives its irreverent name from its version of the story of Adam and Eve in the garden. In chapter 3:7, after telling of the transgression, it reads:

" '7. Then the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked; and they sewed fig tree leaves together, and made them-

"That picturesque attire is changed in King James' version, which appeared nine years later, to 'aprons'-the present accepted version. King James' fifty-four translators only made alterations of the Tyndale and Coverdale text, and of the 'Bishops' Bible,' when it was found to be 'necessary.' The new revised version, however, makes a good many changes. It cost poor Tyndale his life-he was burned at the stake, near Brussels, in 1536—for daring to make a translation into English.

This quaint old Bible includes those Old Testament books that have since been relegated to the nebulous limbo of 'the Apocrypha,' and includes them without any mark of separation from those that are now accepted. There are the books of Baruch, of Susannah, of Jesus the son of Sirach, the book of Maccabees, Esdras, Tubit, Bel and the Dragon, etc., all figuring as a part of the divinely inspired word. If we can believe the various holy 'councils' on those subjects, more or less of these apocryphal books are not so inspired.

"Mr. Johnson's old Bible contains also the quaint psalmody of Sternhold and Hopkins-the psalms of David 'done into' English verse.

"The quaint character of the mechanical work alone of this old Bible makes it an interesting study to any one especially who knows much about printing. Unfortunately, the quaint old title page is missing, its place being supplied by a pen and ink copy."-Hartford Times.

"Fortunately," the Herald Office library contains a copy of the "famous Breeches Bible" with the title page preserved in full, which,-with the exception that the old style letters are used in some places as f for s, v for u and vice versa, and i for i-, words of the title page, surrounded by a homely border containing the English coat of arms, are as follows: "The holy Scriptures contained in the Old and New Testament. Translated according to the Ebrew and Greeke, and conferred with the best Translations in divers Languages. With most profitable Annotations upon all the hard places, and other things of great importance. Imprinted at London by Robert Barker Printer to the King's most Excellent Majestie. 1610.

Apropos of the above, how would some of the criticisms on the "poor literary style of the Book of Mormon" be received by religious people generally if directed against the "breeches" and other early editions of the Bible? Won't the rule work both ways? We have heard it remarked that it is a poor rule that won't. How about the claim of some religionists that every word contained in the Scriptures was specially indited in the original? and also to those who translated it? The truth is those learned bodies of men who have revised and retranslated the Bible have left the stamp of their learning upon much that was originally written by inspired men in the vernacular of their own tongues or the "familiar speech of their day." Yet with all this labor bestowed upon it, the American Bible Society (we have been told) declares it has found thousands of grammatical, typographical and other errors in King James' translation of the Bible. There are points for the elders in what this article suggests, and in this connection we commend (to those who have the HERALD volume for 1884) a rereading of Bro. Blair's able article entitled, "Braden on Punctuation, etc.," which will be found on page 672 of the volume referred to.

CHURCH AND STATE. A QUESTION.

IT appears to us that a portion of the citizens of Independence, Missouri, are unnecessarily agitated over the appointment of Mr. Thomas James to the postmastership of that city. Had this appointment been made by reason of any effort of the church to which Mr. James belongs; or were the church officers known at Washington and in political circles to be active politicians seeking any sort of control in politics, either county, state, or nation, there would be some shadow of reason for thinking that the appointment of Mr. James might be a dangerous precedent-from their stand of argument.

Political quarrels on political grounds, and for partisan politics' sake are bad enough; but when to the bitterness of party strife is added the prejudice born of religious differences and intolerance, it is We know nothing of Col. A. W. Jones, other than that he has been engaged in local politics. What influence he may have at Washington, or in the Republican party, or how that influence has been obtained we know nothing of; nor does it seem that Mr. James' preferment is on anything else than political reasons of which Col. Jones and others have been the judges.

The following is from the Deseret News, of September 20th, 1889, for which we thank that journal; and while doing so call its attention to the fact that Utah Latter Day Saints are not the only people suffering persecution and proscription; and that the "Josephites," or Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has its share.

A "CHURCH AND STATE" QUESTION.

We learned from the press dispatches, several days ago, that President Harrison had appointed Mr. Thomas James as postmaster at Independence, Jackson county, Missouri. There is nothing very remarkable in the mere appointment of a postmaster nor in the name of the appointee. But it appears that he is a member of the sect commonly called "Josephites," or, as they claim to be, Latter Day Saints. This has raised a rumpus in Independence, and the noise thereof has gone forth, reaching New York City and the papers published there, with reverberations in Washington and rumblings in the White

A dispatch to the New York World gives particulars of the fray. From this it appears that the "Josephites" have 320 voting members in Independence, of whom 312 are Republicans. With this influence, backed by Col. A. W. Jones, now a prominent Republican, but formerly a Confederate Soldier, Mr. James succeeded in obtaining the place over the other applicant, Mr. T. C. Bullene, son of the former incumbent. This has aroused the old prejudice against the "Mormons," and the Independence Sentinel, the only daily in the town, has come out openly in opposition. It says that "whether the people should permit themselves to be so prejudiced is not the question at issue. They are prejudiced and always will be, and under the circumstances Mr. James should never have been appointed."

The disgruntled Republicans of Independence have appealed to the Democrats to help them, a remonstrance has been circulated for signature. and a special protest has been prepared for the ladies to sign, as follows:

"We resident ladies of Independence, Missouri, feeling a deep interest in the Post-office, and believing we ought to be heard, do most earnestly protest against the appointment of Thomas James as Postmaster."

This, it is expected, will work well at Washington, as the ladies are supposed to be particularly interested when the "Mormon" question is agitated. But as the body to which Mr. James belongs has always repudiated the polygamous features of the "Mormon" faith, we fail to see the relevance of this particular movement. It is admitted that, "Not one word has been heard against his character, honesty or business integrity during the whole fight, the only objection being to his church membership."

That this should not figure in an appointment of this kind, must be clear to every fair-minded American citizen. No religious test for office should be permitted in this free Republic. The Constitution forbids it, and the very genius of our institutions is opposed to it. The World dispatch says:

"The old residents of Independence are beginning to recount their experience with the old Mormons under Joseph Smith, whom they drove out of Independence years and years ago. They are beginning to discuss the propositon as to whether the Mormons really do intend to return to Independence, as they declared when forced to leave it and establish their temple."

"The old residents of Independence" ought to understand, for it has been dinned into their ear s by the "Josephites" often enough, that there is no connection between that body and the church which now has its headquarters in Utah. Also that the sect which has gathered a number of its members to Independence, has no right or title in, or possession of, the grounds which originally belonged to the church and were dedicated for the site of a Temple. The residence of a few hundreds of the sect, then, in the city of Independence, has no special significance in relation to the re-occupation of those grounds and the rebuilding of the Temple by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

It will be interesting to see what course President Harrison will pursue in regard to this appointment. If he removes Mr. James, it will be solely on religious grounds, for the "Mormon" question, as it has been agitated in Congress and before the country, is totally disconnected with this issue, except that the body to which Mr. James belongs assumes the title of "Latter Day Saints," and its members are commonly known as "Josephite Mormons." It is a clear case of religious prejudice. We shall see how much, in national politics and the Federal administration the church succeeds in controlling the state.

Bro. W. W. Blair: -- We have been to Logan, but there is not much to tell. We were permitted the use of the meeting room in the basement of the Tabernacle, quite a large and comfortable room. The upper room, or main room, the auditorium, was in a transition state. The method of lighting it was being changed, or improved; and they were putting in electric lights, as I understand. Some part of the apparatus had not yet been received, so there was no lights for it. The use of the room was cheerfully granted us, so far as we could judge. We were told that Apostle Moses Thatcher said, when asked about letting us have the room, "Yes, by all means." Mr. Martineau, chairman of the Tabernacle committee, very cheerfully gave his consent, and I think helped us to its use.

The audiences were large, quite as large as the room would hold, many standing, the first and second evening. On the third, a lecture in the Fourth Ward, on the Book of Mormon, by Elder Edward Stephenson, previously announced, perhaps took some; but the house was comfortably full, and excellent attention was paid. In fact, the attention was good throughout; and we were courteously treated. Elder Stewart, a member of the High Council, as I was told, and several others took seats on the stand the first evening, including Elder Steves, of the M. E. Church, Bishops Smith, Lewis and others. Mr. Stewart stood by us each evening, courteously and kindly. On the second evening I discussed the marriage question, affirming our position respecting its institution, and giving reasons for not accepting plurality. I tried to avoid the use of any language that could justly be taken as abusive, or calculated to stir up anger-I think no offense was taken.

Apostle Moses Thatcher, at my general request for some of the brethren to fill the seats on the stand came and sat with us. I was pleased to meet him and make his acquaintance. He spoke of the room above not being lighted, regretting it, as he feared all might not get in who wished. Towards the close of my discourse he interrupted me several times, by remarks; but thinking better of it, when I told him I had no objection, he apologized and let me finish. He told me, however, in correction of my statement that the revelation on plural marriage had never received the vote of the people sustaining, or accepting it as a tenet of the faith, that he was himself present when some nine thousand assembled at General Conference, had accepted it by vote. I asked him when it was. He did not remember exactly, but admitted, when I asked him, that it was some time after 1876. He also stated, in an interruption, when I was reading the notice of April, 1844, about Hiram Brown, that they "did not believe in polygamy, and never did." Of course I accepted both statements, especially the first, and thanked him for it. The second I held to be but a change of name for the same thing, the having more than one wife at the same time; which was the thing under discussion, whatever name it might be called by. I was sorry that he interrupted me, as it was unexpected by me from him. I thought that a man of his standing and of his known ability would hardly do that; especially as he knew that the house, the people, and all the opportunity to reply, or to disprove anything I had stated were his at any time. However, I found no fault then and do not now. All passed pleasantly, so far as I know. At the opening of the service a note was handed me from a Mr. Cox, wishing me to answer several questions. I did not read the note, supposing an answer in writing would do. At the close he arose and asked me to answer the questions, which of course I declined, and promising to answer him personally, I sent him a reply by mail next morning.

We distributed a number of tracts, "One Wife or Many," and dismissed the people. There seemed to be a good spirit present.

Yours in bonds,

Joseph Smith.

ELDER JAMES WHITEHEAD, (formerly private secretary to Joseph Smith the martyr), accompanied by his three grand-daughters, has lately removed from Alton, Illinois, to Lamoni, where he intends to permanently reside in future. We gladly welcome Bro. Whitehead and family in our midst. They are evidently given up reluctantly by the citizens of Alton, if we may judge from the following clipping from the Alton Sentinel-Democrat of the 2d inst:

"Mr. James Whitehead, of Union street, leaves this evening upon a trip to Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa. He will be absent about a year and is accompanied by his grand-daughters, Misses Jennie, Mamie and Annie Allen. Mr. Whitehead has been a resident of Alton forty-two years and has the best wishes of a host of friends for a pleasant trip."

Bro. Whitehead has for many years held positions of trust among his fellow-citizens, among them being those of Justice of the Peace, Alderman, and City Auditor. They seemingly prefer to regard his emoval as a "trip," and evidently regret his departure.

LEADING Chicago clergymen are busily engaged in discussing the subjects of the personality and non-personality of the devil; some arguing that he is a personal entity, while others affirm that the terms "Satan" and "devil" simply comprehend an existent principle of evil, which as an impersonal influence actuates men in wrongdoing. How much benefit their various congregations are deriving from such disquisitions is not stated, but it is interesting to note the intricate methods of Scripture interpretation peculiar to the age. We may well appreciate the simplicity of the truth restored. Modern theology is badly mixed. Degrees of light are appearing in many directions among the various religious bodies, however, and we are thankful that the days of severe religious persecution and intolerance are apparently numbered or passed away. With them must also depart all that is false and in the merest infinitesimal degree erroneous or foreign to the truth. Only that which can not be shaken will stand. It is the destiny of every principle and every person, in this peculiar age, not founded upon, grounded in and actuated by the truth to be removed; and "the remaining of [only] those things which can not be shaken."

EDITORIAL ITEMS

WE hereby thank Bro. J. W. Wight for three issues of the Wallsend and Plattsburg, New South Wales, Sun of August 17th, 21st and 24th, two of which contain lengthy and interesting communications from Bro. Wight on subjects of general interest in connection with the latter day work, such as "eternal punishment," etc. The editor of the Sun publishes a number of lengthy summaries of Bro. Wight's discourses, in the leading columns of that paper. Bro. Wight has been defending the work from attacks made by a Rev. Mr. Higgs of the Congregationalist Church, and has done nobly, winning from his audiences rounds of applause. Such opportunities will result in great good to the cause in new fields and we are glad they are being afforded to our brethren in Australia. Opposition and opportunities of this kind awaken general interest and inquiry concerning the word, and the appearance of either or both are almost always indications of a favorable character. The prophetic declaration of the angel to Joseph Smith was that the work would "increase the more opposed." So may it be in Australia.

Bro. F. A. Atkinson of Bank Postoffice, Maryland, wrote under date of September 29th, in good and earnest spirit, of his appreciation of the great work of the Lord. He is situated alone in faith and far from any of the branches of the church, and would like some of the elders to labor there. Bro. J. A. Stewart of Philadelphia, preaches about seventeen miles from Bank Post-office at times. He concludes: "When we are parted and scattered abroad, let us pray for each other and trust in the Lord."

We thank Bro. H. C. Smith for a San Bernardino, California, paper; also Bro. J. D. Howells for newspapers published in England, all duly marked. Some others have been sent us but by whom we now forget. We appreciate all, however. It would assist us in economizing our time if all sending us publications would plainly mark the articles which they desire us to notice.

Bro. D. I. Jones of Sheridan, Nevada, writes that Bro. Thomas Daley has lately recommenced his labors in Nevada. He hopes for the same success that followed the previous labors of Bro. Daley.

THE CONFESSION OF FAITH AND THE PRAYER-BOOK.

We clip the following from the Newark, New Jersey, News of October 2d and 5th, sent us by Bro. A. W. Brown, presumably of that city. The first is part of the reported proceedings of the Newark Presbytery on the consideration of the overture of the Nassau Presbytery. The second is from a telegraphic account of the Episcopal Convention held in New York City. We publish both without comment.

"THE CONFESSION OF FAITH.

"Then the much debated Nassau overture relative to the confession of faith came up for consideration from a new source. The general assembly at its last meeting in New York decided to send it to each Presbytery in the Union for consideration. Dr. Hollifield, the champion of the confession of faith as it is, said that while he was opposed to any change which would interfere with the established doctrine he would consent to a modification to meet a reasonable objection. He said further that he was in favor of submitting the matter to a committee appointed by the general assembly, and he made a motion to the latter effect.

"Rev. Mr. Henderson offered a substitute motion that a committee of four ministers and four laymen be appointed a committee to revise the whole confession, the committee to report to the meeting of the Presbytery next February. Other substitutes were offered and at times the discussion was very warm.

"REFERRED TO A COMMITTEE.

"It was finally determined to submit the matter of devising a way to dispose of the overture to a committee, the latter to report later on. That concluded the discussion for the time being."

"At eleven o'clock the disscusion of the twelfth change in the prayer-book was taken up where it was stopped on Thursday last. Rev. J. J. Vance of Arkansas, said in regard to the Nicene Creed: 'It is not the creed of the church; it was first forced upon the church by civic power. It is the Roman Creed, and it is obligatory on us just as much as the creed of the infallibility of the Pope.' 'Not only is it true that it is not the Catholic Creed, but the Church of England and the Church of America do not call it the Nicene Creed.'

"'No such yoke as this should be put on any church in this free country. Is the reformation complete? Are we to follow the Church of England? Are we in this land of religious liberty to follow the mother church? We stand where no church has stood since the time of Constantine. We must draw the church into close union, and I appeal to you as freedmen, as liberty-loving Saxons. No other church ever had the opportunities we have, and we must do nothing which may detract from success."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

The following from Bro. W. W. Blair is the latest from the Reunion at Missouri Valley, Iowa. It is dated Tuesday, October 8th:

"About one thousand are now tenting on the grounds, and more coming daily. Weather cool, but bright; meetings large, interesting and spiritual. Ten baptisms yesterday. The Omaha and Council Bluffs Chautauqua Assembly Company have offered us their Amphitheater, seating near ten thousand, and their grounds—one hundred and forty-four acres—two miles east of Council Bluffs, free for 1890, any time after July."

Bro. Robert Fuller, of Cleveland, Ohio, recently wrote us as follows:

"I had the privilege of attending the late conference at Kirtland and was greatly encouraged thereby. I rejoice in the progress of the work and pray that it may go on to a glorious consummation."

Bro. J. J. Cornish recently wrote from Reed City, Michigan, as follows:

"Six more baptized lately near Sherman City. The work is onward."

Bro. Wm. Newton wrote in a late letter from Kansas City, Kansas:

"I have received good news from Bro. Edward Tucker from the Broadclist branch, Devonshire, England, stating that he has baptized six since the branch has been organized, and he thinks there are many more that will soon come and that a good work can be done there."

Bro. M. H. Bond wrote from Brockton, Massachusetts, the 4th inst., as follows:

"Bro. Kelley has gone to Maine. Things are moving fairly well. God's hand is moving—behind the clouds and vail, betimes—but moving just the same. Severely tried but hopeful we stand for the best and permanent interests of our great work."

THE Chariton, Iowa, Herald, of October 3d, has this to say of Pres. Joseph Smith's masterly and unanswerable article entitled "Ways that are Doubtful," which we recently published; a copy of which was sent to many leading journals throughout the country that they might properly comprehend the main features of the religious situation in Utah:

"In a lengthy article in the Saints' Herald, published at Lamoni, Iowa, Joseph Smith, Jr., completely refutes the claims of the Salt Lake polygamists, as set forth by Franklin D. Richards in 'What the World Believes,' by Geo. J. Hagar, that Joseph Smith, Sen., was the author or founder of polygamy or the so-called Celestial Marriage covenant."

Bishop F. D. Huntingdon, of Syracuse, New York, lives according to the common sense requirement of plain living and high thinking. He does not occupy the town residence provided for him by his diocese, preferring an unpretentious house in the suburbs, where he is in close contact with nature and suffers none of the distractions of city residence. With tastes that have been formed by a life of this sort, he writes in the October Porum an analysis of the frivolity of fashionable society, and makes an argument to show that the force and time spent by social requirements might greatly advance the work of the world.

The date accompanying your name on the small colored label on each paper shows the time to which your subscription has been paid. When payments are made the date is changed, which answers for a receipt.

Mothers' Kome Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Our sweet illusions only die Fulfilling love's sure prophecy; And every wish for better things An undreamed beauty nearer brings."

LITERATURE FOR THE BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE Christian at Work calls attention to this subject by saying:

A lady was asked recently to what benevolence she would devote $50,000, if it was at her disposal. Her reply was: "I would use it in an effort to develop a taste for the better class of literature among our boys and girls."

We believe her answer struck at one of the main roots of the immorality of the day. The minds of boys and girls are becoming poisoned beyond belief. They become so familiar, through reading, with every form of folly and vice, and so feed their imagination upon what is low and vile, that their moral sensibilities become blunted, and they are no longer shocked when they come in contact with the reality.

Pope wrote of vice:

"Familiar with her face, We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

But the "endurance" and the "pity" are now too often experienced through the medium of the dime novel and the sensational stories, within the precincts of the home, and the young reader is ready to "embrace" at first meeting.

The question comes, how are we to meet this evil? We believe that the solution of the problem lies with the Christian workers of our land, and they will solve it only when they make as great an effort to put that which elevates into the hands of the youth, as is now being made by the emissaries of evil to circulate that which degrades.

Parents must awaken to the fact that it is no less a duty to supply their children with pure and happy literature than to furnish shoes for their feet and bread for their mouths. They must learn that unless their boys find plenty of attractive reading on the parlor table, he will be likely to exchange his dime for a thrilling story of the Jesse James type, which he reads on the sly and then slyly exchanges with a neighbor boy for an equally pernicious tale.

The indifference of the masses in regard to this evil is truly alarming. A great cry is raised over drinking and gambling, while comparatively little is said of the influence exerted by vile literature, which, it may be no exaggeration to say, bears somewhat the same relation to the saloons and gambling dens that the preparatory school does to the college. Well meaning parents in Christian homes, while careful to ask where their children go and what they do, quite forget to ask what they read; and we hear twenty ministers denounce from the pulpit the liquor traffic, where one raises his voice against this more subtle and therefore more dangerous evil.

Anthony Comstock is doing a noble work in trying to put down vile literature; perhaps no man in the land is more unselfish in his labors. But we ask, what is being done to put something of worth in the place of that which he throws out? Unless something wholesome and attractive is substituted, his work will have little of permanent value.

It is not simply by attacking the impure, but by setting forth the worth and beauty of the pure as well, that moral reforms are to be effected. Surely, if vile literature is one of the strongest forces of evil, pure literature may be made one of the most potent for good.

FULTON, Iowa, Sept. 20th.

Sirter Frances:—As I have not seen a letter from the Fulton branch for some time, I thought I would write again. I have wondered whether Saints in every part are persecuted as we are in the Fulton branch.

About six weeks since one Rev. J. Said of the Advent faith came into our midst for the purpose of annihilating Mormonism, as he called it, and if ever there was a cess-pool of corruption, vituperation and false statements emptied, it was done that day. He called the Saints many hard names and affirmed that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, an impostor and false prophet, and defied any man to meet him in debate upon the subject. Some of the Saints asked for just five minutes to speak, but he would not suffer one to say a word, but his talk only confirmed the Saints and made them stronger in the faith.

The brethren wrote immediately for Elder Roth to come and meet him. Brother Roth came as soon as possible and has been with us a week talking, visiting, admonishing and encouraging the Saints, and on Sunday at 2:30 he delivered one of those soul-stirring sermons from Matt. 20:23, on the authority, which made us all rejoice that we had ever enlisted in this glorious latter day work. After the sermon three more offered themselves for baptism; the one a married man and the son of the old gentleman who was going to cain Elder Roth when he was here before, the next a lady who has been a faithful member of the Methodist Church for a number of years and well respected by all who know her, the other a young gentleman whose character is worthy of emulation.

The Spirit of the Lord was truly with us at the water and at confirmation, so no wonder that Satan rages and the people imagine vain things. Elder Roth "bearded the lion in his den" a few days ago, and visited the Rev. Said, in order to make arrangements for the proposed debate. The following are the propositions which Elder Roth proposed to affirm in an eighteen nights' discussion of two hours each:

- 1. That Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.
- 2. That the Book of Mormon is a true record, and of divine origin.
- 3. That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ is the Church of God, and agrees with the teaching in the New Testament in doctrine and organization.

The would-be "Mormon eater" retreated with very little ceremony and declared in the presence of twenty-five or thirty men that he would have nothing to do with it, so of course Elder Roth could do no more than leave him to the amusement and indignation of many who stood by. Some remarked that the Rev. had met the wrong man this time. The work is onward in the Eastern Iowa district, and still more are investigating in this vicinity. We are sorry that Elder Roth can not remain with us continually, but other parts of the field require his labor, and therefore he leaves here to morrow in company with Bro. J. Heide for Massillon. May God bless him wherever he goes in convincing souls of the truth and leading them to obey this glorious gospel. My prayer is ever for the welfare of Zion.

Ollie Sutton.

NORTH FORSTER, Aus., July 14th.

Dear Sister Frances:—My heart is overwhelmed with joy when I read in your valuable columns of the blessings of God to the Saints, for they contain spiritual food for our souls. I feel through the Spirit, that I am, as it were, conversing with the sisters.

I would not nor can not do without those dear Heralds. I do not know how any of the Saints can go on without taking them. I would feel lost if I ever was without the means to get them. It is three years next month since my husband and myself took upon us the name of Christ by covenanting with him in the waters of baptism, and I thank our Heavenly Father we have never once had cause to regret it, and I pray God for strength that we may ever be faithful to the end.

We have just parted with brother and sister Wight; they left us for Newcastle, and we feel sad, for they are both God-fearing and desirous to do the will of God. If we are sad at parting with those we love, how rejoiced we are when we meet them. Then why do we not live lives of true Saints that we may so perfect ourselves while here in the flesh that we may all meet in our Father's kingdom where there shall be no more parting.

Oh, dear Saints, may we pray to our Father who seeth in secret that in our daily walk and conversation he will aid us in all our endeavors to keep his laws and commandments, and may we do all we can to assist those who go to proclaim the true gospel of Christ. As we were brought out from utter darkness into the true light of God, may our thoughts be of other poor souls that know not God, that they may be able to hear and obey the commands as we have done we ought to be as, it were, perfect Saints from all the good teachings and examples shewn us from all the elders we have had here. Besides brother and sister Burton's good teachings we have had also much explained to us of God's word from brother and sister Smith, who have left us on their mission of love for the Islands. We pray for them, and may our prayers ascend to our Father in heaven that he may still assist them by the power of his Holy Spirit to be patient in all the trials they may have to contend with. Bro. Smith does explain the Scriptures in a way that shows he has the Spirit abiding in him. We were often made to rejoice in his most eloquent discourses and in preaching the descending of Christ the Spirit was resting upon him in mighty power we can indeed say the Spirit was blessing us. I can testify that the faith he was blessed with when administering to sister Wright and sister Taylor's little girls, and his prayers in their behalf, together with that of our prayermeeting has, with the blessings of God, restored them.

Does it not show us the work of God? And as there was prophesying in days of old, so is it the same now. It makes me feel sad when we see the worldly ways of our fellow creatures, that they will not heed the true word of God. It calls to mind those words, "Oh, ye of little faith, turn from your former evil ways, repent and be baptized for the remission of your sins and obey God's commands to be saved in the kingdom of heaven.

The sister's prayer meetings are a grand thing and the means of doing much good. If memory serves me right the sisters here were the first to commence them, and we do feel to rejoice that we are being so led by the Spirit to continue it. We feel a longing for the time for us to meet. Our day is Monday afternoon. We feel God is with us, and as long as we meet with that purpose of heart to serve God he will not fail to help us in his great work. Before I received so much knowledge of the gospel of Christ I have often murmured at God's doing that I was not spared one of my dear little babes; but now I can fully realize and see it in the meaning that I should do. Our Father has taken them out of this wicked world; [they were too precious to be left here to be contaminated, and that as I did love them while here that I should obey him in his commands and prepare myself to be found worthy of being received in his heavenly mansion and meet my dear ones again never to part. There may be other sisters placed as I am, and can know a mother's feelings on this matter. We often think we should have no sufferings of any kind, (the second of Timothy, second chaptes and twelfth verre). If we suffer we shall also reign with him. Our Savior did not suffer for us that we might never suffer. He did not die for us that we might never die. Those whom he loves have often to walk in a path of very great sufferings and know that those sufferings must terminate in death, and yet in Christ suffering becomes a blessing, and to die is gain. Not those whose lives are most free from pain are the happiest in God's sight, but those who suffer with him that they may be glorified together with him. Glorified not only in a future state of bliss, but even now in their perfect acceptance of God's will. Let patience have her work; it can not be wrought without the endurance of pain nor tested without suffering. The apostle says to the Philippian disciples that something had been given to them besides the grace to believe on Christ. They had received a privilege, an honor in the behalf of Christ. God had called them to a duty. Alas! it was one from which nature might be ready to recoil, it was given to them to suffer for his sake. Most of us think we would gladly work for Christ. Let us ask ourselves would we suffer for him? suffer not only as the early Christians did when men persecuted them and cast out their names as evil, but suffer for Christ and with Christ in any way in which he may appoint, suffer with patience, taking up and accepting whatever trials he sends, looking on them not as evils to be got rid of by any means, but as his own appointed path for us to walk in, a path in which we may find Christ walking with us, and enriching us with precious communion with himself. Suffering thus accepted becomes an invaluable discipline to the soul, and the sight of one enduring it in such a spirit becomes to other men a most striking witness of the power of God's grace to give strength and comfort in the time of trial?

If the waters of the Sea of Galilee had not been raised by the storm the disciples would never have known the Master's power to still them, nor would they have learned his tender care for their safety, had they not been exceedingly tossed by the tempest while with him in the ship. May God bless and be with all who will try to investigate and love the truth, is my prayer.

Your sister in Christ,

EMMA COLVIN.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Sept. 9th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I have been thinking for a long time that I must do something to show my appreciation of all you have done for me. I have been helped and comforted very much by your advice and testimonies; besides this I know that I must make the best use of the little ability I have, or I will be in danger of loosing that little. I want to give you some of my experience, and if it should assist even one, I will be very thankful.

I had just commenced to raise my family when I heard the gospel and accepted it. I did it with full purpose of heart and with a firm determination to serve God the rest of my days. I was greatly blessed, and have been through all these years. I have ever found our kind Father ready to answer and bless in every time of need. I have had many testimonies of my acceptance with him, and joy and consolation at all times, if humble and faithful. After all of this I was not satisfied. I thought I ought to receive some wonderful demonstration of God's love and power to give me a knowledge whether the work was of God or not, and because I did not get it I grieved and prayed long and anxiously, and by this means allowed myself to be robbed of much joy and peace. Nearly twenty years went by in this way, till a few months ago I was reading one of our splendid Autumn Leaves and came to a little piece of poetry written by Bro. Charles Derry, entitled, "He Leadeth Me." While reading it my soul cried out almost in anguish, "Why can't I know he leadeth me?" The question was no sooner asked than it was answered by the Spirit and just as plainly, "You do know, but the adversary hinders you from confessing it." Immediately all fear and doubt vanished and I rejoiced exceedingly, and have rejoiced ever since; and I feel to thank God to-day for his manifold blessings in the past and present. I hope and pray that they may continue, not only with me, but with you all, until all trials, fears and doubts will be changed into perfect day.

Your sister in the one hope,

M. A. MATTHEWS.

TEMPLE, Mo., Sept. 30th.

Dear Sister Frances: - I have just been reading Sister Emma's letter, and my heart was filled with overflowing love toward God, while the tears were made to flow, and I felt to thank God for his goodness to us, his children. When she mentioned Bro. Wight, now of Australia, it called to mind the many times of rejoicing we had together, especially when he led my dear children into the waters of baptism. Marriage has separated me from one of the three, but I feel every day to thank God that she is trying to live the life of a Saint. We have had some good meetings in this part, held by Bro. E. Curtis, which the Holy Spirit attended all through and many have gone to investigating. Bro. Curtis is the right man in the right place. How much easier we can perform our household duties when sustained by the Spirit. I can not express my feelings only by praising his holy name. Many times I have to lay aside my work and go on my bended knees and pour out my soul in thanks to God. What a comfort it is to read the sisters' letters in the Home Column. They always give me renewed courage. In regard to our children I do not feel capable of giving advice, but I know yours has been of great benefit to me. I had not the comfort of the Home Column while raising most of my family. I have erred many times and can only make amends by doing better in the future with those I have left, but it causes me much remorse. I will close.

Your sister in bonds of love,

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:-It is with great interest that I read the letters in the Home Column, and I often wonder if I could write anything that would interest the sisters. We are another family off to one side where we have no preaching only through the Herald. My prayer is that the Lord will bless the many good sermons that are read therein. We feel that the time is near at hand here for the organization of a branch. Bro. Sparling and family, from Kansas City, have settled twelve miles south of us, in Douglas county, near sister Tucker's, and on the same day another family of Saints, Bro. Barrett's, came from Colorado. Four of the family belong to the church and they have settled in the same neighorhood with Bro. Sparling. The first is a teacher and the latter a priest. My husband is an elder, and therefore I think we have a good prospect. They will have a rough place to work, yet I think by perseverance a few of the rough stones can be polished.

We have lived here seven years, and some have been made to see the gospel truth, and while we all hung together we had good meetings and great blessings. Some have moved away, some have gone to that rest that has no end, while we are left, and I often study and wonder if we are doing the Lord's will in sitting idle? And yet we are not altogether idle, but are we working with wisdom? I have lent the Voice of Warning to several, distributed and sold altogether twenty-four. Probably the day will come that we will begin to see the fruits.

Remember the few Saints in this land in your prayers that we may receive God's blessing.

Your sister,

M. A. ATWELL.

Correspondence.

STEELVILLE, Missouri.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Since I wrote to you I engaged in a discussion with Prof. Ashley, subject, "The state and condition of departed spirits." The Savior made proclamation to "preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15. "Christ also preached unto the spirits in prison, which were sometimes disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited, in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing."—I Peter 3:19 20. "For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh."—2 Peter 4:6.

Isaiah 42:7 says: "To open the blind eyes; to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house." Also 51:14: "The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed and that he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail;" and 24:21, 22: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in prison, and after many days shall they be visited."

If these quotations be true we can see why David in his Psalms (46:10) says: "For thou will not leave my soul in hell."

David knew that he was a murderer, that he would have to endure the pangs of the pit until justice was meted out, or in other words, answered and accounted for the murder which he had committed. David also says that Christ was there at one time, that God did place his soul there. From this one can readily see why the Savior said in John 5:25, 28: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live. Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of God."

Both the words of the Savior and consistency say that if in Noah's day and in Isaiah's time they were put in the pit until they answered for the deeds done in the body and were redeemed, that it will be the case with this generation."

I Corinthians 15:29: "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead if the dead rise not at all?' Why baptize for the dead? And stand in jeopardy every hour? No one, I suppose, will deny the fact that Christ is the adversary referred to in Matthew 5:25, 26: "Agree with thine adversary quickly while thou art in the way with him, lest at any time the adversary [Christ] deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into the prison; verily, I say unto thee, thou shalt not come out thence till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing." "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them in chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment; if, as some say, those angels are already judged, why then a judgment? And if judgment is rendered when the breath leaves the body, why another judgment?

It seems plain to me. Revelations 20:5, 6: "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years." This causes a flaw in the doctrine, that when the breath leaves the body that it goes to the Father who gave it. I can only give you my quotations from the Scripture without comment. The debate was conducted in a Christian and gentlemanly way. We had a C. P. Preacher for moderator, and a Missionary Baptist for assistant. Would say that several saw that the Scriptures were on our side. among them the C. P. preacher who also freely gave his views. There were two Baptist preachers who let loose with shot and shell at the C. P. preacher. He told them that the truth was the greatest aim of his life, and that he believed my position would hold water. A Baptist preacher by the name of Atchison has challenged me to debate the same subject, which I accepted.

I am alone here excepting the presence of God's Spirit. I feel more determined to live for the Master. Pray for me, that I may be instrumental in doing good.

LEOPOLD BRANCH, Victoria, Australia, August 31st.

Dear Herald:—It is over two years since I was baptized by Bro. J. F. Burton, and I rejoice that I was led to obey the truth. I pray that the Lord may give me His Spirit day by day, and help me to live humble and faithful before him at all times. We are very thankful that we are living in the last days, and that the gospel is preached now the same as it was in the days of Christ and his apostles. I know this is the true church, because the signs do tollow them that believe. I have heard persons speaking in prophecy and unknown tongues, and the prophecies have been fulfilled.

It always makes my heart rejoice when I read Herald, Hope and Autumn Leaves, to see the letters from all parts of the world. It strengthens us in the faith, and gives us a stronger desire to press forward and win the crown of everlasting life which is prepared for all those who obey the gospel. What a glorious time it will be when all the Saints shall gather home to Zion, to live and reign with Christ a thousand years upon the earth! My earnest desire and prayer is that I may prove faithful unto the end; that I may be enabled by God's help to do something to help on this glrious work in these the latter days. For we know the harvest truly is great and the laborers are few.

Although we are only young in the work, and many times feel our weakness in trying to speak for the Master, but if we only do our best the Lord will bless us and give us sufficient strength to do what we desire. The more we do for Christ in this life, greater will our reward be in the life to come. We have trials and temptations to pass through while we are upon this earth, but when Christ shall come there will be no more trials, but peace and joy with the Saints of God.

Elder C. A. Butterworth is staying with us at present; he is a splendid preacher. He has baptized three whilst staying here. Others are convinced of the truih of the work, and we hope they will soon come into the church. Elder J. W. Wight will be in Victoria for the September conference. He has been up in New South Wales for about six months; we will all be glad to see him back again. Our branch is still increasing. We have twenty-seven members, one elder, one priest and one teacher. I pray that we may all stand firm unto the end and be in the celestial kingdom.

Your sister,

EMMA CRAIG.

SUBLETTE, Ills, October 5th.

Brother Blatr: — Can not yourself or some other elder come this way and preach a little for us this fall or winter? The gospel in its true light is a strange theory in this part of the country and I have to go all the way to Plano to hear a sermon, a distance of forty miles.

Elder F. M. Cooper was here and stayed one week with us two years ago last fall, and made our home very pleasant for us while here. I got a school-house for him to preach in two nights, but both the weather and the prejudice were so bad that he had but very small congregations.

I went to Plano last fall where I was happy to meet with Elder Foss when he held his two weeks' meeting there, and was well instructed in the truth. It is quite a pleasure for me to go down to Plano, for I do know that their treatment of me has been that of Christian people, and my prayer to him that holdeth all of our destinies in His hands is that he may guide both them and us with all of his people in the way of life.

I must close, for I am so blind that I can scarcely see to write my name.

Yours in Christian bonds, SAMUEL BROWN.

WEBB CITY, Mo., October 3d.

Bro. Blair:—Permit me to speak a few words through the Herald to the Saints upon the very important practice of preaching a great long sermon when they attend prayer meeting. If I understand the intent or purpose of prayer and testimony meetings it is to pray, sing and speak one to another, confessing our faults; and if we have the blessing of God's Spirit, to speak in tongues or prophesy, that is in order; but for two or three persons to take up the time in making long speeches needlessly deprives the rest of their just rights, and is a breach of courtesy. Each one is entitled to a share of the time, and let each be brief, making short prayers and praying for just what is needed, and saying just what is necessary in as few words as possible; then all can have the privilege of praying or giving a testimony if they wish. I hope no one will take offense at this; let us all learn what our duty is and do it to the best of our ability, with an eye single to the glory of God and a due consideration for the rights of others.

Yours with love,

A. J. HEADLEE.

CANEY, Kans., Oct. 3d.

Dear Herald:—I thank God that I have embraced the privilege offered. After arguing with Brn. Johnson and Clark, I was convinced that I was wrong, hence was baptized and confirmed by Bro. Clark, our elder. I feel a great desire to go on in the good work of God and the upbuilding of his church upon earth. Have already been the means whereby another man, now a brother, has given his heart to God. There are nine of us who have put on Christ after the order of Latter Day Saints.

A. SMITH.

IRONTON, Ohio, Oct. 2d.

Brethren:- Just a line to say the work is progressing slowly but surely here. We now number six Saints, and continue to have preaching services on Sundays. I have been called upon to administer to one man sick of a fever, who has since recovered; also to a dear sister who was sick and who has since been baptized into the one faith on the 22d of September, which was Sunday, and was witnessed by several hundreds of people. I took the opportunity to address them and with good liberty. Others will soon obey and we hope for a branch to be established in the near future. I have been called upon to bless two children, also a woman who has been a cripple from birth and has never walked in her life. Patience and a better walk will win. May it please the Master to help us redeem the time.

Your brother,
ELDER W. A WIBBERLY.

Lansing, Mich., Oct 1st.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—The Grove Meeting at Dimondale was well attended; very good interest manifested; preaching most excellent by Brn. C. Scott and T. Horton; exhorting by Hiram Rathbun; two were baptized. We hear of the work in the district under the labors of Brn. Columbus and Leonard Scott as prospering. We are praying, hoping and trusting in Him who doeth all things well.

HIRAM RATHBUN.

Sonora, Iowa, Oct. 1st.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from eastern Iowa, and I am glad that the work is in good condition there. I baptized three more noble souls in the Fulton branch, and now there are thirty-six members there, and the beauty of it is that there is not a drone among them, but every one is at his post and ready to do his part. It makes me rejoice when I look back so short a time when Bro. Maitland preached the first Latter Day Saint sermon there, and when there was only one Saint there; and now so noble a band of Saints, but her life was worthy of emulating, and had much to do in getting a start there. May all the Saints so live as not to pull down, but rather build up the work.

There are other good openings which I hope will soon yield an ingathering of souls. I intend to start to the Reunion in a few days and afterwards will visit the Davenport and Clinton branches, also the Buffalo Saints. I would say to all the Saints who have written me to come, have patience; I will be around as soon as I possibly can. My whole desire is for the furtherance of God's cause. In bonds,

J. S. Roth.

DIXFIELD CENTRE, Maine, Oct. 4th.

Bro. Dancer: With Bro. F. M. Sheehy I am in this place and have been speaking for some days; interest is good. Last night he began a debate with a Free Baptist, subject, "the laying on of hands is essential to be observed by all believers in Christ." Two weeks later they discuss the question, "The Free Baptist church is in harmony with the New Testament in organization and doctrines," affirmed by the Rev. Mr. Roys of the Free Baptist church. Then Bro. Sheehv is to affirm the same of our church. God is blessing us by His Spirit and its manifestations to us are encouraging as to results. I have baptized two since the Reunion and learn of others who are ready when an elder can reach them. Praise God for the restoration of his truth. May it ever roll on till the honest in heart in every land shall rejoice in its power. So may it be!

Yours, U. W. GREENE.

Chelsea, Neb., Sept. 30th.

Bro. D. Dancer:—I am young in the cause, (only three years old), but the Herald gives me great joy. I love to see Zion build up.

I am in favor of the College building at Lamoni—I think it is the right place. I think Sr. Walker shows the right spirit in regard to the College. It looks to me as if it would be of great benefit to the children of Zion and the world also. I will give some to help it along, but not very much, because we have some tithing to pay next January. I would say to all, be strong in the good cause of Zion.

It fills my soul with joy when I hear of the building of Jerusalem. I find that we Saints must keep the celestial law if we expect to inherit the celestial kingdom. I am trying to keep the law which all Saints must if they expect to receive the kingdom. I am glad of the truth which is springing out of the earth, which testifies of the Book of Mormon.

W. B. WESTON.

RIVER FALLS, Wis., October 6th.

Dear Herald:—I will drop a few lines to you this pleasant Sabbath evening. I often think what a grand thing it must be to go to church every Sabbath and hear the gospel preached in its fulness. We are all alone here and never see an elder nor hear a sermon preached, yet I pray without ceasing to the Lord for strength, and I receive a reasonable blessing, I suppose.

I have just finished reading the Voice of Warning, and then I wonder how people can be so ignorant and so blind. Yet when I offer it to them they will not read it. I think the people here are the most stubborn and bitter against the cause of Christ. I am trying to contend earnestly for that faith that was once delivered to the Saints.

Pray for me, dear brethren and sisters, that I may prove faithful in the latter day faith.

In gospel bonds, E. H. RANDALL.

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 1st.

Bro. Blair: Bro. E. C. Briggs has been here. He got here on the 20th and was going to leave the next day, but I wanted him to stay over Sunday and preach, and he consented. I went with him to see some of my friends, and when he told them of the doctrine they were very much pleased. He preached in the hall on Sunday, and on Tuesday evening I took him to the Union Mission. They call themselves Free-Will Baptists, and I asked the pastor, Dr. Walker, if he would let Bro. Briggs speak a few words on the doctrine of Christ, and he consented. He spoke three quarters of an hour, but he got in words and doctrine enough for double the time. He left the next day, and that night I went to the Mission to hear them talk, and they testified that they had heard a man of God and that he spake by the Spirit of God. One lady said she would never get tired of hearing such a man talk, for he spoke by the Spirit. The pastor told me he endorsed every word Bro. Briggs said.

Why can we not have such a man in Chicago to preach? Your brother,

SIMEON TOWNSEND.

BAPTISM IS IMMERSION.—No. 1.

BY ELDER R. C. EVANS.

ALL who believe the Bible to be a record of divine authenticity, agree that water baptism is a sacrament—an ordinance of divine appointment. John said, "He that sent me to baptize with water."—John 1: 33. It is written concerning John, "There was a man sent from God whose name was John."—John 1: 6. From the above we learn that God sent John to baptize with water.

It is evident that God sent Christ to baptize, for he said, when speaking to the apostles, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."—John 20: 21. How did Christ send them? Read his great commission to them: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."—Matt. 28: 19. And when praying to his Father he said: "As thou hast sent me into the world." —John 17: 18. Thus we discover that John, Jesus, and the apostles, were sent to baptize with water.

In verification of my assertion that the Christian mode of baptism is immersion, I submit the following, trusting that those who read may come to a proper understanding with reference to the mode of baptism—the "one baptism."—Eph. 4:5. John the forerunner of Christ baptized those who believed the gospel "in the river Jordan."—Mark 1:5. John baptized where there was "much water."—John 3:23. He would not require "much water" unless he baptized by immersion.

The baptism of Jesus surely was performed by immersion: "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water."—Matt. 3: 16. God was well pleased with Christ's baptism, (Matt. 3: 17), for Jesus said, "I do always those things which please Him."—John 8: 29.

Paul says, "Therefore we are buried with him (Christ), by baptism into death; . . . for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—Rom. 6: 4, 5. We can not be buried with Christ by baptism unless he, Christ, was buried by baptism.

It is said by many that this does not refer to immersion. I therefore submit the following from the pens of some of the greatest theological scholars. Wesley in his notes on the New Testament says: "We are buried with Him, [alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion] that as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we also by the same power should rise again."

Mr. Wesley frankly declares that immersion was the primitive mode of baptism. I refer you next to his "Journal" of February 21st, 1736: "Mary Welch, aged eleven, was baptized according to the custom of the first church, and the rule in the church of England, by immersion."

In his translation and notes of the New Testament, which he tells us in the preface was the last work of his life, in his comments upon Colossians 2: 12 he says: "The ancient manner of baptizing by immersion is as manifestly alluded to here, as the other manner of baptizing by sprinkling and pouring of water in Hebrews 10: 22."

Let it be noted that Mr. Wesley declares that the apostle in Romans and Colossians, manifestly alluded to the action of immersion in baptism. Then did Mr. Wesley understand him to say in these two passages, "Know ye not that so many of us [the apostles and brethren at Rome] as have been immersed [Stuart] into Jesus Christ, have been immersed into his death? Therefore, we have been buried with him by immersion into death."

But Mr. Wesley is not alone in this admission: Dr. Adam Clark in his comments on Romans 6:4 says: "We are buried," etc. "It is probable that the apostle here alludes to the mode of administering baptism by immersion," (then of course that mode was practiced in the apostles' time, and was the mode by which they, with Christ, were baptized), "the whole body being put under the water, which seemed to say the man is drowned, as dead; and as he came up out of the water, he seemed to have a resurrection to life—the man is risen again, he is alive; and he was, therefore, supposed to throw off his old Gentile state, as he threw off his clothes, and to assume a new character, as the baptized generally put on a new or fresh garment. I say it is probable that the apostle alludes to this mode of immersion, but it is not absolutely certain that he did so, as some do imagine; for in the next verse, our being incorporated into Christ by baptism is also denoted by our being planted, or rather grafted, together in the likeness of his death; and Noah's ark, floating upon the water and sprinkled by the rain from heaven, is a figure, (I Peter 3: 20, 21), but none of these give us the same idea of the outward form as burying."

On Colossians 2:12 he says: "'Buried,' etc., alluding to the immersion in the case of adults, when the person appeared to be buried under the water, as Christ was buried in the heart of the earth, his rising again the third day, and then emerging from the water, was an emblem of the resurrection of the body, and then a total change of life."

Mark it well, that Mr. Clark declares that adults, that is all adults, of course were immersed in the days of Paul. The Scriptures nowhere intimate that any but believing adults were baptized; and therefore, we must conclude, that none but adults were baptized, and consequently, on Mr. Clark's hypothesis, that all who were baptized in those days were immersed.

Mr. Benson in his comments on Romans 6:4 says: "We are buried,' etc, alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion."

His comment on Colossians 2: 12 is, "'Buried in baptism,' etc. The ancient manner of baptizing by immersion is as manifestly alluded to here, as the other manner of baptizing by sprinkling and pouring of water in Hebrews 10: 22."

How strikingly similar to Mr. Wesley's comment on the same passage! That was a rare idea to drag in sprinkling and pouring because they were forced to confess, without equivocation, that the passages manifestly alluded to immersion as the absolute baptism. The reader can easily satisfy himself that Hebrews 10: 22 refers to the ceremonial washings, which were immersions. See Leviticus 15: 5, 8, 10, 11, 16, 17, 21, 22, 27; 16: 26-28; 17: 15, 16.

During the Wilkes-Ditzler debate at Louisville, Kentucky, the following question was put to Dr. Kleeberge, the Jewish Rabbi of that city: "Were the Jewish ablutions immersions?" He replied: "Before eating and prayer, and after rising in the morning, they washed; when they become unclean they must immerse."- Louisville Debate, p. 652.

Rabbi Maimonides, perhaps the most distinguished Jewish teacher who has lived since the apostolic age, states: "Whenever in the law of Moses, washing the flesh or clothes is mentioned, it means nothing else than the dipping of the whole body in the bath, for if any one dip himself all over except the tip of his finger, he is still in his uncleanness."—Maimonides, Helch, Mikva 1 c., sect. 2.

Dipping among the Jews was a national custom.—Lightfoot's work, vol. 1, p. 585. In the days of R. Joshua Ben-Levi, the Jewish Rabbi, some endeavored to abolish this dipping for the sake of the women of Galilee, because by reason of the cold, etc. R. Joshua Ben-Levi said unto them, "Do you go about to take away that which hedges in Israel from transgression?"-Heiros Beracoth, vol. 6, p. 3. So much for sprinkling and pouring being taught in Hebrews 10:22.

Mr. Burkett's comment on Romans 6: He says: "We are buried, etc. The apostle alludes, no doubt, to the ancient manner of baptizing persons in those hot countries, which was by immersion, or putting them under water for a time, and then raising them up again out of the water; which rite had also a mystical signification, representing the burial of our old man, sin, in us, and our resurrection to newness of life. The metaphors, burying and rising again, do simply intimate this much, Burial implies a continuing unto death, this is mortification, a continued act, a daily dying unto sin, and rising again supposes the person nevermore to be under the power of death."

Lange's commentary on Romans 6: 4 (Schaff's edition) says: "To be buried is a stronger expression than to die, for the burial confirms the death and raises it beyond doubt; it withdraws from our sight -annihilates it, as it were." He adds, "Buried in death; an oxymoron, according to which burial precedes and death follows, as is illustrated in the bath of baptism."
In a note Schaff says, "all commentators of note (except Stuart and Hodge) expressly admit, or take it for granted, that in this verse, especially in sunetapheemen and eegerthee, the ancient prevailing mode of baptism by immersion and emmersion is implied as giving additional force to the idea of the going down of the old and rising up of the new man."

Dr. Schaff then quotes Bloomfield: "There is a plain allusion to the ancient mode of baptism by immersion." Barnes: "It is altogether probable that the apostle had allusion to the custom of baptizing by immersion."

Conybeare and Howson: "This passage can not be understood unless it be borne in mind that the primative baptism was by immersion."

Webster and Wilkinson: "Doubtless there is an allusion to immersion as the usual mode of baptism introduced to show that baptism symbolized our spiritual resurrection."

Turretine says: "For as in baptism, when performed in the primitive manner, by immersion and emmersion, descending into the water, and again going out of it, of which descent and ascent we have an example in the eunuch—Acts 8:38, 39—yea, and what is more, as by this rite, when persons are immersed in water they are overwhelmed, and, as it were, buried, and in a manner buried with Christ; and again they emerge, seem to be raised out of the grave, and are said to be risen again with Christ."—Frey on Bap. p. 126.

Whitby savs: "It being so expressly declared here (Rom. 6:4 and Col. 2:12) that we are buried with Christ in baptism by being buried under water; and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death being taken hence, and this immersion being religiously observed by all Christians for thirteen centuries, and approved by our Church, and the change of it into sprinkling, even without any allowance from the author of this institution, or any license from any council of the church. being that which the Romanist still urges to justify his refusal of the cup to the laity; it were to be wished that this custom might be again of general use, and aspersion only permitted as of old, in cases of the clinici, or in present danger of death."-Com. on New Test., Rom. 6:4.

Doddridge in his Family Expositor, on Rom. 6: 4, says: "Buried with him in baptism. It seems to me the part of candor to confess that here is an allusion to the manner of baptizing by immersion."

Vossius says: "That the apostles immersed when they baptized there is no doubt, and that the ancient church followed their example is very clearly evinced by innumerable testimonies of the Fathers." Pengilly, p. 75.

Beza, John Calvin's friend and associate, says: "Christ commanded us to be baptized, by which word it is certain immersion is signified."—Pengilly, p. 72.

Bishop Smith, of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Kentucky, says: "We have only to go back six or eight hundred years, and immersion was the only mode, except in case of the few baptized on their beds when death was near; and with regard to such cases, it disqualified its receipient for holy orders in case he recovered. Immersion was not only universal six or eight hundred years ago, but it was primitive and apostolic, no case of baptism standing on record by any other mode for the first three hundred years, except the few cases of those baptized clinically, that is, lying in bed; if any one practice of the early church is clearly established, it is immersion.—Bliss' Letters on Baptism, p. 24.

McKnight, a distinguished moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly of Scotland, says: "In baptism, the baptized person is buried under water, as one put to death with Christ, and on account of sin, in order that they may be strongly impressed with a sense of the malignity of sin, and excited to hate it as the greatest of evils." Commenting on Rom. 6:4, he says: "Christ submitted to be baptized. that is to be buried under water by John, and to be raised out of it again, as an emblem of his further death and resurrection; in like manner the baptism of believers is emblematical of their own death, burial, and resurrection."

George Whitfield says: "It is certain that in the words of our text (Rom. 6:4) there is an allusion to the manner of baptizing, which was by immersion."

Archbishop Tillotson, of the Church of England, says: "Anciently those who were baptized were immersed and buried in the water, to represent their death to sin, and then raised up out of the water to signify their entrance upon a new life; and to these customs the apostle alludes in Romans 6:4."

The Edinburg Review says: "We have rarely met, for example, a more weak and fanciful piece of reasoning than that by which Mr. Ewing would persuade us that there is no allusion to the mode by immersion in the expression, 'buried with him in baptism;' this point ought to be frankly admitted, and, indeed, can not be denied with any show of reason.'

Turtullian, who lived and wrote A. D. 200; that is about one hundred years after the Apostle John is thought to have been called to try the realities of another world, says, quoting Romans 6:3: "Know ye not that so many of us as were immersed into Christ Jesus, were immersed into his death."-Tertullian on the resurrection of the body, Ch. 47. A few lines further on he adds: "For by an image we die in baptism, but we truly rise in the flesh, as did also Christ." Again he says, speaking of the Savior's command: "And last of all, commanding that they should immerse into the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost."-Tertullian against Praxeas, Ch. 26.

Referring to trine immersion, he says: "Then we are three times immersed, answering somewhat more than the Lord prescribed in the gospel."-Tertullian on the Soldier's Crown, Ch. 3.

In telling what Christian baptism is, he says: "As of baptism itself, there is a bodily act, that we are immersed in water; a spiritual effect, that we are freed from sin."-Tertullian on Baptism, Ch. 7.

Reader, please remember that this man was born about the middle of the second century, (A. D. 150), and that he wrote within one hundred years after the apostles. Even "clinical baptism," by affusion, had not begun then, hence he says nothing about it.

Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, born about A. D. 346, says: "Thou wast asked, dost thou believe in God, the Father Almighty? Thou saidst, 'I believe,' and thou didst sink down, that is, wast buried."-Ambrose on Sacrament, Book 2, Ch. 7.

The same writer, Book 3, Ch. 1, Sec. 1, says: "Yesterday we discoursed respecting the font, whose appearance is, as it were, a form of sepulcher, into which, believing in the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, we are received and submerged, and rise, that is, are restored to life."

Eugene Stock, in his lessons on the Acts of the Apostles, (Church of England Sunday School institutes), says: "There can be no doubt that the ideal and perfect mode of baptism is by immersion, the going down into and under the water, and the coming forth to a new life; and this is the mode not only allowed but enjoined in the Rubric."

"Trine immersion continued to be practiced in the west as well as in the east, till the end of the sixth century, when it was decreed by the fourth council of Toledo, that the primitive baptism by a single immersion should be restored."-Fuller on Baptism, p. 97, from Tertullian about 200, A. D.

William Smith, in his Dictionary of the Bible, says: "Baptism properly and literally means immersion."—P. 73.

Vitringa says: "The act of baptizing is the immersion of a believer in water; this expresses the force of the word. Thus expresses the force of the word. also it was performed by Christ and the apostles."—Aphor, Theol. Sanet. Aphoris., 884.

Salmasius: "Baptism is immersion, and was administered in former times, according to the force and meaning of the word."

De Cesarie Virorum, P. 669. Bretschneider: "An entire immersion belongs to the nature of baptism; this is the meaning of the word."-Theology

Leipsic, 1830, Vol. 2, P. 681. H. A. W. Meyer, said to be the greatest of all New Testament commentators, on Romans 6:4: "The recipient-thus has Paul figuratively represented the process—is conscious, (a) in the baptism generally; now am I entering into fellowship with the death of Christ; (b) in the immersion in particular; now am I becoming buried with Christ; (c) and then, in the emergence; now I rise to the new life with Christ."

Dear Reader, as others have canvassed the ground as to Christ's and John's baptism being one and the same, we will not attempt to ask your future indulgence upon this part of the subject only for a

John Calvin says: "The ministry of John was precisely the same as that which was afterwards committed to the apostles, for their baptism was not different, though it was administered by different hands; but the sameness of their doctrine shows their baptism to have been the Both baptized unto repentance, both to remission of sins, both baptized in the name of Christ, from whom repentance and remission of sins proceeded. John said of Christ, "behold the Lamb that taketh away the sin of the world," thus acknowledging and declaring him to be the sacrifice, acceptable to the Father, the procurer of righteousness, and the author of salvation. What could the apostles add to this confession? Wherefore let no one be disturbed by the attempts of the ancient writers to distinguish and separate one baptism from the other."—Calvin's Institutes, 11, Lib. 4., Cap. 15.

To the above the Rev. Charles A. Tenkins in his celebrated work entitled "Baptist Doctrine," says: "We entirely concur in the opinion of Calvin about John's baptism,"—p. 81.

Calvin: "From the words" (John 3: 23) "it may be inferred that baptism was administered by John and Christ by plunging the whole body under water."—Pedo. Exam., vol. 1, p. 194.

From the above statements made by some of the most learned theologians of the centuries of the past and present, we ought to admit that John, Jesus and the apostles taught and practiced baptism by immersion.

But some may yet claim that the word "baptize" does not mean immersion. If so, let me again request them to go with me to the proper authorities, and search the lexicons, in order to find the meaning of the word which our Savior used in his great commission to the apostles: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."-Matt. 28:

Now from this commission one minister claims the right to baptize by sprinkling the water on the candidate; another pours the water upon him; a third immerses the person in water, and the question naturally arises, Which is correct? for Paul when writing to the Saints at Ephesus, says that there is but "one Lord, one faith, one baptism."-Eph. 4: 5.

We are further informed that there ought not to be divisions among us, that we should all speak the same thing. all should be one, that we should follow Christ, that we should do all things according to the pattern, that we should seek for the old path, and walk therein, and that we should not follow the traditions of men, who make the commandments of God of none effect. As men were to change the ordinance, and not endure sound doctrine, and turn away the people's ears from the truth. Let us, then, dear reader, arise to a sense of our danger and see if we have been deceived with reference to the mode of baptism.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION, PRAYER MEETINGS, CHOIRS, ETC.

Norhing requisite to hasten on the great latter day work, though attended with trouble, sacrifice of time and money, should be left undone; but the admonition to do all things decently and in order should never be overlooked. Distributing the printed word is indeed an important (and so far as it can be done) an imperative work; but if in this work a zeal be exhibited not according to knowledge, it must militate against instead of helping

A duly organized branch is a body corporate, or invested with power to regulate its own affairs; and the officials thereof are measurably responsible for the spiritual condition of the branches over which they preside. Therefore if members of a branch assume the responsibility of distributing tracts, and their procedure in the work is such as to bring reproach on the cause, the officers should move as the law directs, kindly yet firmly, to remedy or stop the evil; for consistency or equity can not be evinced in allowing one member to do that which is gratifying to him or her self which may annoy the body, especially when that engaged in is at variance with the genius and spirit of the work, and bringing a reproach on the cause. Paul advised "diligence in business, fervency in spirit, serving the Lord," which means a gospel modesty, a non-intrusiveness, a godly zeal, a heavenly discretion, etc., and a moments reflection would serve to show that a zeal leading to an intrusionfor instance, on a business man in business hours-to leave tracts, or in an abrupt way demand the return of a tract left while he is in a whirl about or with his legitimate business, and his attention be thereby illegitimately demanded, would be a zeal not according to knowledge, therefore producing evil, giving cause to speak reproachfully of the church. And brethren and sisters acting with such indiscretion should be officially remonstrated with, and if persisting after due patience and labor, bring a charge for disorderly conduct.

Unless invited, Latter Day Saints should refrain from advocating their religion in business houses. Tracts should be left at private residences with permission respectfully sought; and if, under the auspices of branches, a system of tract distribution could be inaugurated, it would be laudable and productive of good.

The right to exercise one's self in prayer or social meetings does not warrant the violation of the rules of order and propriety. Every member may or should pray or speak and sing, thus contributing to the interest of the meeting; but none should think of making lengthy, inflammatory speeches, arraigning or berating any religious sect or individual because of their belief, or in an unbecoming way talk of sectarians or sectarianism, or essay to startle strangers by some strange narration of Joseph Smith, etc. Rather strive to show confidence in God and Christ, with a godly sorrow for human folly, evincing a desire to become more Christ-like in words and deeds, never thinking of reproving or correcting any one, for that belongs to the presiding officer. And lovers of order, sobriety, etc., should sustain the presiding officer in his endeavor to frown down all that leads to a violation of good order, or that interferes with the solemnty of prayer meetings.

Wherever practicable, singing choirs should be formed; and those having talent or ability to sing with good time and in harmony should be in their place in the house of worship as punctually as those who are expected to preach, to do that which they can do. Nothing is more inspiring in worship than good singing and music when available. Those having proficiency or ability for singing, yet not so extensive as desired, should readily and cheerfully use what talent they have and legitimately strive to improve. That which a brother or sister can do, that he or she should do, cheerfully and willingly, lest they be condemned for hiding their talent; and if results are not as gratifying as hoped for, still press on in duty's path. It is the only course to pursue to insure justifi-

It is too often the case where a number of Saints are found in a branch having but a partial knowledge of the rudiments of music, that more indifference is evinced in striving to have fair singing than in places where a profound ignorance of music exists. This ought not to be, and need not be. Every member of a branch should feel as if the success of the branch depended on him or her, by diligently doing that for which they are best adapted, never failing to evince a gospel rectitude. Branches that have members with undeveloped musical talent that could not pay for tuition might devise measures to aid them. Members that can should be willing to help themselves in this direction and cheerfully give the branch the benefit of their labors. Music teachers who can should give their labors gratuitously. Those who have to depend on such labor for a livelihood should be as moderate in their charges as possible, thus co-operating in the great work. Exorbitant charges because of superiority of talent or because it can be had is evincive of what might be called business tact or shrewdness, if not covet-In bonds, ousness.

THE UNRIGHTEOUS MAMMON.

I HAVE thought a good deal about the law of tithing. I do not know as I have had any business to think or study on that question, since it is not my "charge to keep" any farther than to learn enough of that law to enable me to do my duty concerning it; but thoughts sometimes choose their own channel and refuse to be diverted therefrom until they have followed it to its broad outlet—like the little rivelet which runs clear and distinct till it reaches the ocean and then becomes lost in the great tumult of waters, so when our thoughts lead us to view in a limited degree, the deep things of God and the vastness of the plan of salvation and redemption, the finite mind is lost in wonder, and our hearts are filled with admiration of Him who wrought out that plan so broad, so generous, and so just!

The thought has not been whether I shall pay my tithing and how much I must pay, but what the law embraces, its origin and its purpose.

In the silent hours of the night this subject has been opened to my view in a very clear and comprehensive manner, embracing certain portions of scripture—parables spoken by the Lord—which hitherto had been obscure and mysterious, but when viewed in this connection seem very clear. It is called the temporal law, and yet we find it in connection with, and a part of the gospel; then it is Christ's law, and all of of Christ's laws, though temporal with us, pertain to spiritual things.

So with the law of tithing, though temporal, I believe it will govern largely in the spiritual life hereafter; and since it is a part of the great "whole and perfect law" whereby mankind is to be saved and exalted, it is not strange that Jesus should teach it to his disciples in parables, as well as the spiritual part of the law or gospel. The parable of the unjust steward in the sixteenth of Luke, seems to me to bear directly on this subject, as I shall show

It is written "the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." Man has nothing of his own in this world, we are simply renters on Christ's property; stewards over what they receive in this life and are notified that they must give an account of their stewardship after the lease has expired. Strict accounts are kept and all must meet them. Our Lord is lenient, kind, and forbearing; but he is a business man as well, and all would do well to learn to keep their books well balanced!

But to return: Though we possess nothing of our own in this present world, there is a time coming when some at least—those who are faithful over their Lord's goodswill have something of their own, even an everlasting inheritance, habitation or possession. And how shall they obtain it? By keeping the gospel law including tithing!

Obedience to the gospel makes people "Saints," and tithing is the law by which the "Saints" obtain their inheritance according to revelation given through Joseph the Seer at Kirtland, November 27th, 1832, wherein he says in substance that "it is contrary to the will and command of the Lord that those who do not receive their inheritance by consecration, should have their names enrolled with the people of God-in the book of the law of God." And further on he says: "And all they who are not found written in the book of remembrance, shall find none inheritance in that day."

I understand by this that none will receive inheritance unless their names are found in the book of the law of God, and none will be found there except by consecration and tithing. I suppose if one sets aside a tithe of their property they consecrate it to the Lord.

Yet we are led to believe that many will be saved who will not have an inheritance, from the fact that the church has stated that "all those who believe in the first principles of the gospel, repent of their sins, are baptized for the remission of their sins, have hands laid on them for the reception of the Holy Ghost, and live just, upright and consistent lives, will be saved in the kingdom of God, notwithstanding their belief or non-belief in other questions." But as such do not receive the gospel in its fullness in this life, they will certainly fail to receive salvation in its fullness hereafter, and "have no inheritance in that day."

Now with this view of the subject, I will take the parable of Luke sixteenth home to myself. If I am just with my Lord in paying him the portion that belongs to him of what he entrusts to my care, (and he has said that portion is onetenth of all we possess) and through my faithfulness I have obtained an inheritance on the purified earth, it will be my own, never to be taken from me. But if my brother should not pay the Lord the money he owed him, (his tithing), whether from non-belief or carelessness, he would be an unjust steward and would fail to receive an inheritance, seeing he merited none, for, "if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give unto you that which is your own?"-Luke 16:12.

But though my brother had not kept the law by which he might have received an inheritance, he had kept the other part of the law and was saved; he also had given liberally to me and to others, and therein he was unjust to his Lord, for the money was not his to give until he had paid his Lord what he owed him. Still his Lord commended his generosity. Perhaps through that very generosity I was enabled to pay my Lord what I owed him, and would I not regard this brother as being a friend to me? Yes, he had made friends with me and my household; and in the great hereafter when the everlasting habitation (-place wherein to live-)

was mine, would I not have the right to receive such an one into my habitation if I desired to do so? If the Lord commended the spirit of generosity while in this world, he would not disallow the same principle in the world to come. I may not have the right, or the desire to give any portion of my habitation, yet might receive a friend to dwell with me.

God and Christ only have habitations to give, but the parable does not convey the thought that any habitation shall be given to those who make to themselves friends with the mammon of unrighteousness, but that such might be received into another's habitation. When the steward says he is "resolved what to do," his words do not indicate that he was thinking of the "rich man" whom he calls his lord, but of more than one—"that they may receive me into their houses," evidently those whom he called to him and made friends with by giving them of his lord's money.

It appears that this steward understood the law by which the habitation was obtained. If not in his life he did when the Lord sent for him-when he was stricken down with sickness and knew that ere long he must appear before his Lord and give an account of his stewardship. It was too late then to keep the law of tithing, but while he is yet steward over what he has, he endeavors to redeem the past as far as he can, or prepare for the future as best he can with what time he has left. So he wills portions to one and another whom he feels sure will have houses into which they may receive him when his probation of stewardship is ended, and he has failed to obtain what he might have obtained, had he been faithful and just to his Lord.

SISTER EMMA.

EPHESIANS 1: 10.

THE Apostle Paul says in Ephesians 1: 10: "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to the good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

He says again in Colossians 1:25 that a dispensation of God was committed to him. Verse twenty-three says, "which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I, Paul, am made a minister." We find in Mark 16:15-18, that Jesus told his apostles to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. Again in Romans 10:18, Paul says their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world.

Seeing that a dispensation of God was established by Jesus and his apostles, which some suppose was to gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and on earth, even in him, which I believe is a very erroneous idea. This we find by reading Luke 21: 24; Matt. 24th chapter; Mark 13th chapter; Luke 13: 35; Matt. 23: 38, 39; Romans 11: 25-27;

Matt. 11: 12; Matt. 21: 43; Acts 1: 6-8; 3: 19-21; 20: 29, 30. So it is easy to see that it was a dispensation of scattering and that the Jews, their house being left to them desolate, and they have been wandering among the nations ever since, until recently they are beginning to return to the holy land and build the ruined places and plant that which was desolate, in fulfillment of Ezekiel 36: 36-38, which the Lord said would take place soon after He set his standard in the earth; that he would gather them from the four corners of the earth, even as Paul says, in the fulness of times.

The angel was to bring the everlasting gospel. (Rev. 14: 6, 7). We find in Jeremiah 16: 14, 16, that God was to call fishers and hunters to hunt and fish them from every mountain and hill.

We learn that those fishers and hunters were to be dispised, hated, looked upon as the filth of the world and the offscouring of all things unto this day. (I Cor. 1:25, 29; 4:13).

Yet they are the men who are called and are going forth preaching the gospel in fulfillment of Revelations 14:6,7; Matt. 24: 14, which was to be preached in the hour of God's judgments, just before the downfall of Spiritual Babylon; telling the people to flee the wrath to come, and then the kingdom of heaven is set up on the earth never more to be thrown down; and as Joseph Smith says the weak and simple will carry the fullness of the gospel unto the end of the world, and before kings and rulers. And the martyr says again, "Wherever the sound will go it will cause the ears of men to tingle, and wherever it is proclaimed the pure in heart will rejoice while those who draw near to him with their mouth will seek its overthrow and the destruction of those by whose hands it is carried; yet their message is divine, they being called of God to preach the gospel as no man has a right to preach without being called; (Heb. 5: 4); teaching those grand principles of heaven as found in Hebrews 6: 1-3; 1 Timothy 4: 14; Acts 8: 14-17: 9: 17; 19: 1-6; 13: 1-3; Mark 16: 15-18; John 3: 5; Titus 3: 5; Matt. 28: 19, 20; 3: 13-17.

The same kind of organization that existed in primitive times: 1 Cor. 12; 3: 10, 11, 14; 1: 22-29, 40; Ephesians 1: 22, 23; 2: 18-22; 4: 11-14. Making the same promise that Jesus did, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine," etc.—John 7: 16, 17; 8: 31, 32. Telling the world that God has sent his angel with the everlasting gospel and that the hour of his judgment has come; to worship Him, etc., and that he used Joseph Smith as an instrument in His hands to organize His church and kingdom in fulfillment of Zechariah 2: 1-13; Isa. 11: 4-9; 40: I-10; 29: 9-24; 2: I-15; 28: 21, 22; Dan. 2: 44. Telling them the time has come for us to begin to gather together in one; that God has sent his angel with the gospel.

Telling them the time is near for the Jews to gather back to build Jerusalem; that their land will shortly be turned into a fruitful field, which indeed it has turned into and the Jews are building their city and their villages as the former day and latter day prophets said they would do, just prior to the second coming of Christ, who will come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, (2 Thess. 1:6-10), when he will sweep all wickedness from the earth, and when the wolf will dwell with the lamb; when everything is peace and "nothing will hurt nor destroy in my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

That is when all things are gathered together in our Lord; when Satan will be bound a thousand years, when nothing is to molest the Saints of God, but all will be peace and joy; when they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into prooning hooks; when they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, (Micah 4: 1-8), and Jesus Christ will sit as a purifier and a refiner, that he may refine the earth, and his Saints serve him day and night in his temple.

Thus as Paul says, God will "gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth; even in him." "Fear God and give glory to him for the power of his judgment is come."

MEDITATION.

SHALL we sin that grace may abound? God forbid. What is sin? Sin is the transgression of the law? Yes, but what law? The decalogue. Which of the law has been repealed or disannulled?

"Where sin abounded there did grace much more abound." Shall we sin then? God forbid. He that breaks one commandment is guilty of all; that is he can not be saved by the law because he has broken the law. If he is saved at all it must be by grace through faith.

Is it not now a sin to break one of the least of the ten as well as one of the greatest? And which is the least?

It is not the fourth if we may judge by the penalty. And yet for all that the popular voice of the religious world has made a new law against the law of God, making void the law of God, at least so far as the Sabbath is concerned. If we should still live by every word that cometh out of the word of the Lord, as Christ said that man should so live, then the seventh day is not the first day nor the second. And nowhere in God's law is a commandment to be found that man should hallow the first day, in place of God's holy day which he set apart for a day of rest and named it Sabbath, a weekly Sabbath, numbered the seventh day; and said "Remember the Sabbath day."

He said not a Sabbath day but "the Sabbath day."

But if we are no longer under the law of the decalogue or ten commandments, as some seem to teach, then how do we now know what sin is?

Paul "had not known sin but by the law." How else shall we know what is Therefore we do not make void the law of God through faith; "nay, we establish the law."

What is it to establish? Is it not to confirm, or to fix in full force? Therefore we are not at liberty to break any one command in the decalogue. If any one of them is now in full force, so is each and every one. If one is done away, so is everyone; and whoso violates one of them sins against God.

The first commandment in the gospel is to repent, believe, and be baptized in water for the remission of sins, that the heavenly gift of the Holy Ghost may be given through the laying on of the hands of the God-sent men who only can preach the word of God, for faith cometh not by reading but by hearing the word of God proclaimed by a God-sent preacher. And the law still remains for a schoolmaster to all who as yet have not come to Christ for salvation.

So I understand it, and so I believe. Therefore if I am saved it will be by grace through faith, and not the deeds of the law.

THE RACES OF MANKIND.

M. DE QUATREFAGES, the leading French ethnologist, in presenting the second part of his "Introduction to the Study of the Human Races" to the Academy of Human Sciences, has given, says the London Times, an interesting summary of his general conclusions with regard to the origin and distribution of mankind.

Neglecting the minor differences he estimates that there are no fewer than seventy-two distinct races in the human species. All these descend or branch off from three fundamental types—the black, the yellow, and the white—which had their origin at the great central mass of northern Asia, which is thus the cradle of mankind. Representatives of these different types and the races which sprang from them are still to be found there.

The whites, according to M. de Quatrefages, appear to have originated on the west of the central mass, the yellows on the north, and the blacks on the south. The whites extended westward and northward, giving birth to three secondary types—the Finnish, the Semitic, and the Aryan—if we except the Allophyles, which form a separate group. Their area of distribution is continuous, as is that of the yellows, because of the extensive land surface of the Eurasian continent. yellows spread eastward and crossed into America. The whites and yellows checked or blended with each other, producing many varieties of man. The black or negro type, which originated on the south of the central mass, was forced by the nature of the continent, and probably by the attacks of the whites and yellows to go south into Africa and east into the Indian archipelago, or Melanesia. The proto-Semites arrested their distribution in the north of Africa, and the mixture of the two races gave rise to the negroid populations. In the center and south of Africa the blacks continued in their ethnic purity until the infiltration of other races from Europe and the north of Africa in modern times. Those who remained in their original home became blended with the whites and the yellows, giving rise to the Dravidian populations which pass by shades into the three fundamental types.

As for the Allophyles, represented by the race of Cro-Magnon, they occupied parts of Europe and north Africa, from which they extended to the Canaries. The three fundamental types also found themselves in Oceanica—the Allophylian whites occupying Polynesia, the blacks Melanesia, the yellows Malaysia. The latter were, according to M. de Quatrefages, the latest to come into the maritime world.

The peopling of America dates from the quarternary period and is due to migrations of different types—Allophylic white and yellow blending with the local quaternary races, which also belonged to the yellow type. Europe since the tertiary ages, has received only Allophylian whites, Finns, and Aryans. The number of races now existing in a pure state is exceedingly restricted, if indeed there is a single one that can be accepted as such. Perhaps some little groups protected by their isolation, such as the Mincopies, may show an identity of characteristics attesting their ethnic homogeneity.

"CASA GRANDE."

SECRETARY NOBLE has transmitted to the Director of the Geological Survey a report by Special Agent Morrison on the condition of the Casa Grande (Great House) ruins in Pinal county, Arizona, with instructions that the necessary steps be immediately taken to repair and protect the ruins, under the authority granted in the act of March 2d, 1889, appropriating $2,000 for that purpose. Special Agent Morrison says: The front of the main building measures sixty feet and the width forty-three feet. The height of the first story is thirteen feet, second, nine feet, and the third and fourth, eight feet. The greater part of the upper story has disappeared. The walls are between four and five feet thick, and the material of which they are constructed is an almost indestructible concrete, made of fine gravel, sand and cement, closely resembling granolithe now used in Washington. walls, both inside and outside, are plastered with cement, which yet clings to them with wonderful tenacity, that on the inside being as smooth and glossy as the best hard-finished interiors of the present day. The lower story is nearly filled up with crumbling debris and the drifting sand of the plain. The holes in which the ceiling timbers were placed are plainly visible, but every particle of wood has been carried away by relic hunters, and the disintegration of the walls has been so rapid of late years that if measures are not immediately taken to strengthed them the entire mass will soon fall into a shapeless ruin. The report further says: For miles around the mysterious Casa Grande many great mounds, now hardly distinguishable from the desert sands, bear indisputable evidence of having been at some far remote period the abode of busy industries. Mr. Morrison says he is convinced Casa Grande was not used either for religious or warlike purposes. The superiority of the architecture, it having outlived all other structures by which it was surrounded, the numerous small apartments into which it was divided and the elegance of the interior finish, all point to the conclusion that it was the palace of a King or Chief who governed the primitive Americans who inhabited these vast domains ages before Aztec or Toltec. The most ancient of traditions of the Pimas and Papagos, who yet live here where their fathers have lived for centuries, allude to them as "The Ruins." The earliest historic record we have of Casa Grande was given by the famous Spanish cavalier and explorer, Cabeza de Baca, who discovered it during his journey across the continent about 1537. A few years later the famous explorer Don Francisco de Coronado, Governor of New Galicia, who led an expedition into New Mexico, states that the Pima Indians then (350 years ago) had no knowledge of the origin or history of the town which they believed had existed. It had always been "The Ruins" to them and their ancestors. Father Kino and Monge, who visited there in 1694 also gave an account of other "Ruins" in that vicinity. Father Pedro Faut, in 1777, found them in much the same condition. He describes the main building as an oblong square, facing the cardinal points of the compass. The exterior walls extended from north to south 420 feet and from east to west 260 feet. "We thus see," says Morrison, "what hevoc the storms of 110 years have made and the necessity for immediate action to save this remnant from complete destruction. The ruins are regarded as one of the most interesting remains of a prehistoric age to be found on this continent."-San Diego, Cal., Union, Sept. 24, 1889.

PROGRESS OF INVENTIONS SINCE 1845.

In the year 1845 the present owners of the Scientific American newspaper commenced its publication, and soon after established a bureau for the procuring of patents for inventions at home and in foreign countries. During the year 1845 there were only 502 patents issued from the United States Patent Office, and the total issue from the establishment of the Patent Office up to the end of that year numbered only 4 347.
Up to the first of July this year there have been granted 406413 Showing that since the commencement of the publication of the Scientific American there have been issued from the United States Patent Office 402,166 patents, and about one third more applications have been made than have be granted, showing the ingenuity of our people to be phenomenal, and much greater than even the enormous number of patents issued indicates. Probably a good many of our readers have had business transacted through the office of the Scientific American, in New York or Washington, and are familiar with Munn & Company's mode of doing business, but those who have not will be interested in knowing something about this, the oldest patent soliciting firm in this country, probably in the world.

Persons visiting the office of the Scientific American, 361 Broadway, New York, for the first time, will be surprised on entering the main office, to find such an extensive and elegantly equipped establishment, with its walnut counters. desks, and chairs to correspond, and its enormous safes, and such a large number of draughtsmen, specification writers, and clerks, all busy as bees, reminding one of a large banking or insurance office, with its hundred employees.

In conversation with one of the firm, who had commenced the business of soliciting patents in connection with the publication of the Scientific Amarican, more than forty years ago, I learned that his firm had made application for patents for upward of one hundred thousand inventors in the United States, and several thousands in different foreign countries, and had filled as many cases in the Patent Office in a single month as there were patents issued during the entire first year of their business career. This gentleman had seen the Patent Office grow from a sapling to a sturdy oak, and he modestly hinted that many thought the Scientific American, with its large circulation, had performed no mean share in stimulating inventions and advancing the in-terests of the Patent Office. But it is not alone the patent soliciting that occupies the attention of the one hundred persons employed by Munn & Company, but a large number are engaged on the four publications issued weekly and monthly from their office, 361 Broadway, New York, viz: The Scient fic American, the Scientific American Supplement, the Export Edition of the Scientific American, and the Architects and Builders' Edition of the Scient sic American. The first two publications are issued every week, and the latter two the first of every month.

FASHIONABLE SOCIETY.

Bishop F. D. Huntington, in the October Forum, describes fashionable society "as a something too formal for an institution, too irregular for an organization, too vital for a machine, too heartless for a fraternity, too lawless for a school, too decent for a masquerade, with too much lying for a bureau, and too many passions for a page-There are the competitions, matches, risks, calculations of a perilous game, the interchanges of an imponderable, immaterial commerce, musical voices from inharmonious breasts, spiteful There are courtesies, magnificent meanness. songs of peace, flying arrows of malice and revenge, bonds and fragments of friendships, charming veils over hidden horrors, laughter rippling over dark depths of silent agony. One has only to reflect a moment how considerable a section of the lives of many men and more women these activities occupy, what capacities they include, what forces they engage, the interplay between life and life, the issues and destiny of character, the august responsibility, to comprehend that 'society,' even in this limited sense, is a study for the wisest minds."

A WAR OF THE FUTURE.

WHEN war comes in Europe, as it must come some time, it will be seen that a new era has begun in the art of destruction. The Belgian historian, Emile de Laveleye, sums up in an article in the Forum for October the terrible factors of the next conflict. The civil war in the United States was but child's play in comparison. With Russia and France on one side and Germany, Austria, and Italy on the other, seven million of men can be instantly put in the field, with ten millions in reserve. The facilities for concentration and the improved arms are such that more men may easily be killed in one day than have ever before been killed in a whole war. The continuous preparations for war, even when there is no thought of its immediate occurrence are far greater and more expensive than ever be-France has surrounded her frontiers and her capital with a continuous line of forts and entrenchments. Germany has made Metz, Strasburg, Mayence, and Cologne gigantic fortresses, which seem absolutely impregnable. Italy has fortified her Alpine passes, her sea ports, and even the Eternal City itself. Belgium is spending forty millions of francs in the construction of redoubts with cupolas of steel, to close the passage by the Maas valley. The war budgets are everywhere increasing in enormous proportions. "And it is under this continual menace of the most frightful shock of armies that our planet will ever have looked upon," writes M. de Laveleye, "that we live. And the most extraordinary thing is, that we get used to it. We go about our business, our pleasures; we rush in crowds from all parts to the Paris exposition, while each one says: 'It may be for to-morrow!'"

ANCIENT EGYPTIAN FLORA.

THE National Museum of Egyptian Antiquities at Bulak contains a very interesting collection of plants which have been found in the catacombs and sepulchral monuments of the country, says the Revue Scientifique. Dr. Schweinfurth was the first to study this ancient flora, which contains no example of a plant that does not grow to-day in the Nile valley. Nor does the most minute examination show the least difference between the vegetation which flourished fifty centuries ago and that of the present time. In some cases the color of the flowers can be clearly distinguished, as for instance, the purple larkspur, the red poppy, the reddish-brown saffron, and the blue lotus. The leaves of the watermelon contain grains of chlorophyll perfectly visible in the microscope. All these were found in great numbers in the burial places of the fifteenth dynasty, 3.000 years B C., and in one tomb of the same time some ears of barley. In later monuments were discovered mustard, flax, cucumbers, len-In later monuments tils, pine cones, juniper berries, dates, hollyhocks, chrysanthemums, figs, olives, onions, and grapes. Around the necks and upon the breasts of the mummies of 1100 B C, were garlands of celeryleaves and blue lotus flowers. In regard to the various specimens of grain discovered, it may be added that no attempt to make them grow has ever succeeded, the plants having been subjected to great heat at the time of the embalming and burial, which, while it preserved them, destroyed their germinating power. The cases in which mummy wheat is said to have been raised are due simply to the fraudulent mixture of modern with the ancient grains.—Sel.

EDUCATION IN ANCIENT EGYPT.

Boys intended for the government service entered the school at a very early age. The course of instruction was very simple. The first care of the teacher was to initiate the young scribe into the mysteries of the art of writing. After he had mastered the first difficulties he was given older texts to copy. These texts were moral treatises, older poems, fairy tales, religious and mythical writings, and letters. It is to this fact that we owe the preservation of the greater part of the literary remains of ancient Egypt. When one of these school-boys died the copies he had written, that could be of no earthly use to any one else, were buried with him. From these old books that he copied he learned to form his own style; he learned the grammar and syntax of his beautiful language; he became acquainted with its vast stock of moral precepts, religious and mythical traditions, and with the unnumbered poems and tales that undoubtedly abounded, and of which the merest fragments have come down Two classes of writings were preferred for this purpose, moral precepts and letters. was considered a high and difficult art, and the pupils needed very special preparation in it -Popular Science Monthly.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

That the tongue is not steel, yet it cuts. That cheerfulness is the weather of the heart. sleep is the best stimulent, a nervine safe for all That it is better to be able to say "no" than to be able to read Latin. That cold air is not necessarily impure. That a cheerful face is nearly as good for an invalid as healthy weather. That advice is like castor oil, easy enough to give but hard enoug to take. That it is not enough to keep the poor in mind; give them something to keep you in mind. That life's real heroes and heroines are those who bear their own burdens bravely, and give a helping hand to those around That hasty words often rankle in the the wound which injury gives, and that soft words assuage it; forgiving cures, and forgetting takes away the hurt.—Selected.

A royal order has been issued by the German government sanctioning the creation in Jerusalem of an evangelical establishment with corporate rights. The object of the new body is to preserve existing evangelical institutions and to add to the number.

AERIAL NAVIGATION—Aerial navigation has reached this surprising stage of progress: At the late Parisian "congress" on the use of balloons and carrier pigeons in time of war it was resolved that "aeronauts in time of war should be treated as belligerents if they were soldiers, but as spies if they were really spies." M. Janssens of the Academy of Sciences expressed his belief that in the next century the problem of aerial navigation would be solved.

An English lady declares that a mustard-plaster on the elbow will cure neuralgia in the face, and that one on the back of the neck will cure neuralgia in the head; and the reason given for this is that the mustard is said to touch the nerves directly it begins to bite; while, if put on a part where no nerve exists, it is of no use. The writer states that she has cured hundreds by this simple remedy.

The Pope's income amounts to £480,000 yearly, exclusive of special gifts like those of his jubilee year. Peters pence provides two-thirds of the amount, the remainder being the interest of vsrious investments. As the papal expenses rarely exceed £320,000 his holiness retains a good annual surplus.

An address has been issued by a body of ministers and elders of the Scottish Free church, representing its conservative element, setting forth in strong terms the dangers which threaten the Free church in the line of departure from the faith as it is contained in the confession of faith.

THE LATE REUNION.

THE minutues for our Annual Reunion for 1889 will appear in their place in due time, and we therefore need to say only that the session was the best, in many respects, ever held in the church. weather, with the exception of the first two nights of the session-Friday and Saturday—was all that could be desired. During the ten days the Saints were together unity and fraternal good will prevailed, not a jar of discord occurred, but all seemed happy and fully imbued with earnest, godly desires, seeking to promote the best interests of all concerned. The attendance was good from first to last, and on both Sundays many could not get within proper hearing of the speaker's stand. The last Sunday Mr. Garrison, Sheriff of the county, who was present, estimated the assembly at much over 5,000 souls. He was with us two days, and doubtless his presence did much to tone down the "hoodlum" element frequently found at such gatherings. We found him a genial gentleman and an efficent officer.

The sermons were varied in the range of topics discussed, and were timely and edifying. The 9 a.m. prayer and testimony meetings were largely attended and were very ac ive and spiritual.

The gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit were abundant and full of good counsel and cheering promise. One person—a sister Turner, of Deloit, Iowa—sang a song of Zion in "another tongue" consisting of near ten verses, and then sang the interpretation. The language was plain, chaste, expressive, and in every way adapted to the beautiful and important sentiments conveyed. Through the gift of prophecy the Lord assured the Saints that he owned and approved the Reorganized Church in its work and bade them press forward faithfully and patiently to higher and greater victories in His cause, admonishing them that great and essential developments were at hand requiring greater wisdom, zeal and skillful effort.

The song service was good throughout, and the "Saints Harmony" proved very valuable in aiding the singers to "sing with the Spirit, and . . . with the understanding also."

The next Annual Reunion, as will be seen by the minutes, will be held at Logan, the county seat of Harrison county, Iowa, if the committee on arrangements are properly sustained and aided by the citizens of that place. If not, they are authorized to locate elsewhere. There were thorized to locate elsewhere. fifty-five baptisms during the session, others converted to believe, and many others "almost persuaded."

"TALK NOT OF JUDGMENT."

WHATEVER may be said of men and their motives for speech or action, it must be that the Lord has motive and reason for what he may say or do. Christ said: "For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account in the day of judgment." He who would give such a rule of law, would in no way violate such rule.

We hear of some Latter Day Saints who are constantly predicting punishment and devastation upon some of the lands where Saints once lived, and whence they were once driven. The Lord said to the people thus driven away from their homes: "Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works." He who gave this advisory commandment knew the people by whom the land was and would be peopled; and that for any religious society to talk and prophesy judg-ment and destruction against those whom they might account as their enemies and among whom they were living could have but one result, that of angering and exasperating the people. He knew also that for any people to be constantly boasting of their faith and mighty works was vain and foolish, and could not fail to bring shame and contempt upon those so boasting. Boasting of goodness, or of being better than ones neighbors is a snare into which unwary people may easily slip, and from which arise self-righteousness, selfgratulation and final headiness which precedes defeat and humiliation. If a man, a family, or a society possesses a right spirit, and is good, it is better for their neighbors to recognize and know and tell of it than for them to do it themselves in any sense, but to boast of it is very foolish indeed.

The Lord, foreseeing what the conditions would be under which the dispersion of the people from Missouri and Illinois would occur, gave the Saints excellent advice, and it is as good now as it has ever been. Let the affairs of the past rest with God. Good sense and common judgment can not hold the people now occupying the regions whence the Saints were driven responsible for the acts of their predecessors, and for the Saints to be constantly recurring to those awful things in a spirit of bitterness and denunciation, is not calculated to commend them or their faith to those among whom they live. It is calculated, however, to irritate, annoy and sow ill feeling, and to bring grave discredit both on the faith and the people. It is better far to take the command as meaning what the Lord intended to say, and live in accordance with it.

We hear that some few ill-advised of the flock have stated that they have had certain manifestations in which devastation upon Independence and Kansas City has been depicted. If such persons have had any such manifestations they have been intended and given for the production of mischief to the Saints; and it would be much better for those claiming to have had them to have consulted the officers of the church who are presiding in those regions, and who are the responsible men to the public for the well meaning and good behavior of the Saints under their charge. These presiding officers are doing all they can to make the people whom they represent to be and appear to be the peaceable exponents of a faithful christian principle, "Peace on earth, good will to men," and will be compelled to deny the correctness of such denunciatory manifestations. Many such have been foolishly uttered in the past, and have signally failed. spirit by which they were uttered has been shown to have been a wicked and mischievous one, and why should any Saint allow himself to be fooled by it

We heard a good brother once prophesy in the name of the Lord that "Nauvoo and vicinity would be visited and the fair scene be utterly wasted and destroyed in four years." We suggested to him to make his prophecy in that way, that if it failed his faith in God would not fail also. He said: "My faith in God is not going to fail, neither is my prophecy." Five times four years have passed since that prophecy was uttered; Nauvoo stands yet beautiful for situation, and the brother sleeps with the dead. In our opinion, these "manifestations" are of the same character as the brother's prophecy in regard to Nauvoo; similar in import to Elder S. Rigdon's inflammatory Fourth of July speech, many years ago, that made trouble for the Saints; and we disapprove of them and their utterance first, last and all the time; they can do no good and they will do harm. The "wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable and easy to be entreated."

If the Saints want to live in the land in peace and happiness let them make themselves to be good citizens, neighbors and friends to the people among whom they dwell, showing their faith in redeeming grace by their works, not words only. But if they want to invite persecution and trouble for themselves and their brethren, let them talk of judgment, boast of their faith and goodness and mighty works, utter vindictive wrath and devastation on the people and the land, and they will soon have trouble enough. We advise that the Saints be good and do good, and let the Lord attend to his affairs in his own way, and in his own time. He has told us what to do, now let us do it.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Senior Editor has had the opportunity to see and examine the Saints' Harmony, and is much pleased with it. The music is good and the arrangement excellent. Its size is an objection to many, but how could we have what we want and have a book any smaller. The same complaint was made against the Harp, but we had to make the book large or leave out many hymns that Saints wanted in; and as it was, some complaint has been made that some excellent pieces were omitted. To have music suitable must necessarily make the Harmony large. We are not disappointed in its size, if its quality is up to standard, as we think it is. We are pleased with it.

The Avant Courier of Bozeman, Montana, of the 3d inst., contains quite a full account of the "Josephite" conference, held at Reese Creek the previous Saturday and Sunday. It is a good, lengthy account, and in it our people are correctly represented, for which we thank the Courier. It also publishes local notice of the meetings held by Br.J.C. Clapp of whom it says, "He is a big man and a big preacher." Bro. Clapp wrote us the 7th inst. from Willow Creek, Montana: "I preached three times yesterday to full houses and am to continue on through the week at nights."

Bro. William A. Doty wrote October 6th, from Tiff City, Missouri, giving an account of the late discussion between Bro. D. S. Crawley and Elder Lee of the Christian church. As a full account of the matter has already been published we omit this one. Bro. Doty thinks our cause was victorious.

The North Attleboro, Mass., Chronicle, of October 3d reaches us, containing good notices of services held by Bro. John Smith of New Bedford.

We are indebted to Hon. A. R. Anderson, M. C. from the eighth Iowa district, for public documents: "Department of Agriculture Report 1887 and '88;" also "Message and Documents 1887, '88."

The Church Librarian acknowledges the receipt of a copy of the third European edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, published by S. W. Richards, 1852. It is presented by Sr. M. J. Borland of Omaha, Nebraska.

Brn. W. W. Blair and G. A. Blakeslee arrived from the Reunion camp grounds, the former on the 15th, the latter on the 16th, both looking hale and hearty and in good spirits. Bro. Blair elsewhere gives an account of the very successful and encouraging sessions held and the immediate results which attended and followed.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. E. E. Wheeler wrote from Breed's Station, Illinois, October 9th:

"Have been holding forth here since last Friday night, and will stay over another Sunday. Prospects are good. The Baptists have offered me the use of their chapel one mile north of here and I have accepted it. Canton Saints are greatly encouraged. Opportunities for work are opening up and we hope good will be done. Have been blessed with a great degree of the Spirit in presenting the word."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—If one is persuaded by friends to be baptized, without giving the matter a thought and not realizing the responsibility of the act, and afterwards gives his name to another church for membership, and then in after years should be ordained to the office of an elder, and the thought of being baptized again still hangs around him, also of being a sinner and a backslider from the faith, should such a one be rebaptized and his office be restored to him?

Ans.-We think that any one in the condition named above should certainly be re-baptized if convinced of the truth and desirous to obey it. No one should remain in such condition of uncertainty when good cause exists for believing that rebaptism is necessary, for "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and we do not believe a man can act freely as a member, much less as a minister, while in that condition. The church has ruled that in cases like the above the act of rebaptism places the one so baptized among the laity. Such an one should not be reordained without authentic evidence of his calling to the ministry. The thought of possible loss of office should deter no one from being rebaptized, if convinced of the necessity of it. If the Lord wants men to act in the priesthood He will see to it in proper time, otherwise no one should desire to accept responsibility; nor should over-anxiety exist in that regard. It would be well if these things were more perfectly apprehended. Men should be willing to act in the line of duty when properly made manifest, clearly and plainly; but no one should accept and act in the absence of such evidence. Responsibilities of this kind are too sacred to be trifled with; thoughtful and prudent men will not lightly assume them. We would discourage no one; but simply indicate the line of duty as lying in the golden mean between over anxiety and undue hesitation. "Be sure you are right and then go ahead," is applicable in all such instances.

"LONGING TO GO BACK."

Bro. RALPH G. SMITH, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, sends us the Dispatch of Wednesday, October 9th, published in that city, from which we extract the following article and the editor's comments which follow it. The article is self-explanatory, and with the editorial is as follows:

LONGING TO GO BACK,

The question has often been raised in the past and will be raised again to the future whether the Hebrews are ever to be recognized as a distinct people or merely as a religious sect. The fact is they are prouder of their nationality than they are of their religion. A strong movement has been in progress in Europe since 1870 looking to the re-establishment of the Hebrew nation in Palestine and the restoration of old Jerusalem as the proud capital of a representative people.

About a year ago the society was introduced in New York, and within the past two months a branch has been started in Pittsburg under the general name of "Lovers of Zion." The object of the society is the colonization of Palestine by American Hebrews. The Pittsburg branch was organized by Rabbi Brachio Meyerovitz, of the Wylie Avenue Synagogue, and already two or three Hebrews have been sent back to the Holy Land from this section through its influence. About one thousand eight hundred colonists have gone from the country at large.

THE SOCIETY'S OBJECT.

In the constitution of the association the objects are stated to be these: To improve the conditions of the Hebrews in Palestine; to assist the Hebraic colonists of Palestine; to establish new colonies in that country; to instruct the people in agriculture and other industries; to propagate the idea of a settlement of Hebrews in the Land of Israel, and to diffuse the knowledge of the Hebrew language. While there is an element of charity in the objects as stated, the ultimate idea is to restore the nation.

The President of the local association is R. Raphael, and H. Malachowsky is the Secretary. In an interview yesterday J. G. Scheinman, one of the members, said: "The branch in Pittsburg numbers between four hundred and five hundred members. Some of the members of the Gusky firm and many other prominent Hebrews belong to it. The membership, however, consists largely of the middle and lower classes, and at present the society aims to induce the poorer and oppressed Hebrews to return to the Holy Land, where they are settled on land which the association owns.

A SMALL SUM CHARGED.

"They are charged the small sum of twenty-five cents per month on account until the land is paid for. We reason that as much money can be made in Palestine in agricultural pursuits as in peddling in America, for example, and in addition, the poor Hebrew escapes that scorn and intolerance which we are sadly forced to admit is so prevalent even in this enlightened age. There are about 300 Hebraic families in Pittsburg, and we hope to see the day when they will be back in Palestine living happily as part of a powerful nation, as did our ancestors once in the past.

"Even the richer class of Hebrews are anxious to return, and many of them are willing to forego wealth to aid in re-establishing the government. We are working by personal solicitation and slowly educating our people up to the idea. Rabbi Meyerovitz has his whole heart and soul in the work, and by his preaching he has already done much good.

PROPHECY IGNORED.
"In spite of prophecy, we believe the Hebrew nation will be restored. The land is purchased from the Turkish government at nominal figures.

"It is still rich in fertility and easily cultivated. It yields Eastern products in abundance, which are exported into Europe"

For years the prominent and wealthy Hebrews of Europe, the Rothschilds, the Hirschs, the Montagues and even Moses Montefiore, have directed their attention to the colonization of Palestine. Baron Hirsch not long since contributed 60,000,000 francs for this purpose. These men firmly believe the time will come when the Hebrews will once more occupy their Ghettoes and synagogues, not as captives, but a free and independent people.

BEAUTIFUL PREDICTION.

The members of the society hope to live to see the day when the words of the prophet shall be fulfilled:

Behold, days are coming, saith the Eternal, when the plowman shall come close up to the harvester, and the one treading grapes to him that scattereth the seed, when mountains shall drop sweet new wine, and all the hills shall melt away therewith. And I will return with the captivity of my people Israel and they shall build the wasted cities and dwell therein, and they shall plant vineyards and drink their wine; and they shall lay out gardens and eat their fruit. And I will plant them upon their own soil, and they should not be uprooted any more out of the soil I have given them, hath said the Eternal thy God.

During the recent Hebrew festivals Rabbi Meyerovitz referred to the movement now in force among American Hebrews. He made a strenuous appeal to the modern community to assist in maintaining the principles that constitute the Israelitish nationality. He spoke of the movement to colonize poor Hebrews in Palestine as by no means the least of the levers to be used.

Rabbi H. Scheinman ably efficiated in the service and acted as cantor during the festival, and also delivered sermons several times.

Of the foregoing the Dispatch says:

The intelligence is given in our local columns that a branch of the Hebrew Society for colonization of Palestine has been organized in Pittsburg. This shows that even the modern and Americanized Hebrews are still faithful to the traditional dream of their race for the restoration of the ancient kingdom, and its rehabilitation, with all the glories of modern invention and commerce added to it.

There can hardly be any doubt that the wealth and influence of the merchants and financiers of Hebrew blood, scattered throughout the world, would crown a united effort for the restoration of Ierusalem with a brilliant success. The race whose members check European wars or permit them to go on, by tightening or loosening the purse strings, would find it easy to furnish the funds and command the protection of the powers for a project so full of romance and combining so much of the traditions of antiquity with the triumphs of the Nineteenth century commerce. There is an irresistible attraction in the thought of reversing the work of ancient conquerors and restoring the distinction [desolation? ED.] of Titus by the power of modern wealth and trade, that would enlist the sympathies of civilization without regard to creed or race.

We do not think it likely that Jerusalem would ever offer such attractions even to its restorers, as to take the majority back there for permanent residence. It might be made a religious capital, like Rome for the Catholics, or Mecca for the Moslems. But the marts of Europe and America offer too great attrections for the trading instincts of the successful Hebrews, cultivated through nineteen centuries of expatriation, for them to accept the monotonous, if honorable and romantic, retirement of life in their ancient land.

Still the object is an ideal one, and places the Hebraic hopes and purposes in their finest light. The prosecution of the work to a successful issue will command universal sympathy and admiration."

If we rightly discern the signs of the times it certainly seems apparent that the children of Abraham are being wrought upon by an influence which has clearly outlined their manifest destiny. To the thoughtful and expectant students of prophecy such items of news, read and carefully studied in connection with the prophecies of the three books, are both confirming and comforting. Such have abundant reason to lift up their heads and rejoice, if children of and walking in the footsteps of those who by faith inherit the promises.

In the midst of the rush and crash of the surging and swaving masses of modern Babylon God's purposes are being accomplished-slowly, but steadily and surely; and what was declared anciently has a present application, namely: "The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." Two forces are striving for the mastery: light and truth; and darkness, evil and worldliness. mission of the one is to deliver from sin, ignorance and imperfection, and to govern and preserve by bringing into subjection to the laws of divinity; that of the other to veil and blind the senses, that men may become "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," and serve the world, the flesh and the devil.

On the one hand the inestimable possibilities of moral and temporal salvation, heavenly exaltation and eternal bliss are offered to the beings whom God has created in His own image,—all these to be given on condition of obedience; on the other, loss, shame and degradation, the inevitable results which will follow a failure to appreciate, accept and live by the wonderful and applicable truths which the Almighty offers to the world in His Son, in whom is the gospel, the glad tidings of salvation from evil, from ignorance and from the imperfect conditions, standards and faulty conceptions of humanity.

Two inevitable destinies confront the entire world, and in one or the other we must individually have part. One is partly pictured in the following description of the fall of Babylon—the world and its confusions, imperfections and iniquities:

"And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies, . . . How much she has glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning, standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come. And the merchants of the earth shall mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more: The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, and cinnamon, and odors, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men. And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all. . . . And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth."-- Rev. 18: 1-3. 7-14, 21, 24.

The other is represented, partially, in the following:

"And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God: For true and righteous are his judgments; for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again they said Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia. And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise, our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And he said unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God."—Rev. 19: 1-9.

Our course as a people is clearly outlined in the statement and command, "And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues;" and we will do well to study the full import and signification of this verse. If we have at any time of late been impressed to present anything to the Saints, it has been in the line of calling attention to the necessity of a strict examination of personal conduct and habits of life. The voice of the Spirit to us is to come up to a higher standard. We must do it to escape disaster and to save ourselves from bitter disappointment. Now is the day of sacrifice and of opportunity. "It is written," "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God," and only by overcoming will a "people be prepared" for the Lord, and only such will He own.

Let us carefully continue the good and indispensable work of self-examination and study the commands contained in God's written standards given to regulate our thoughts and words and deeds, otherwise our hope will prove vain and we deceive ourselves. The prospects are inspiring and encouraging, and blessed and wonderful experiences await those who walk in the light and who come up high enough to receive. Only to such is the promise, "I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth."

"Watch ye therefore . . . lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping." "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing."

BEWARE.

WE are requested by reputable parties at Shenandoah, Iowa, to warn the Herald readers against a Miss Clauda Ikerman, who is said to be a deceptive, untrustworthy person. She is supposed to be about 24 years old; has dark hair, cut close; dark eyes, and weighs about 150 pounds; is heavy set, and near sighted.

By letter received from Bro. G. S. Lincoln, president of the San Francisco branch, we learn that they have sent out circular letters to the different branches asking aid for the building of a chapel in that city, at some future time.

In Italy no clergyman can be an inspector or director of a state school, a law having been recently passed to the effect that the local control of schools shall be in the hands of heads of families. The object is to cut the schools loose from clerical influence.

THE CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

A very grave matter, indeed, has become the quality of the reading furnished to our young people. In families where newspapers enter freely, even the casual reader who takes them up and glances them over carelessly can not fail to get a knowledge of the world that if it does no harm does no good either. There are families, indeed, where the children are allowed certain columns of a single paper only, but such prohibition is often as dangerous as its opposite. A notion prevails in many minds that the young must have reading furnished to them where the subject has been written down to their comprehension, forgetting that all our growth comes from struggle upward, and that it is really a great deal better, after the taste for reading has been once formed, to have the book or subject just one degree advanced beyond the momet's taste or fancy. Much of the formation of taste in this matter devolves upon the mother, the aunt, the elder sister; and if they see to it that models of purity and wholesomeness are presented and observed, rather than those which are debilitating to the mental fiber, and thus noxious, a habit will be formed that in time will instinctively reject all that is not distinctly ennobling, and does not feed the better portion of the mind and nature, Puerilities are much in vogue to-day; but their influence is vicious because it is weakening, and in so much degrading. Children can be trained to care as much for one of Parkman's histories, with all its tale of daring and doing, as for any paper-covered story of a cow-boy's adventures, as much for the "Midsummer Night's Dream," with its wit and poetry and pathos and music, as for any tawdry story in which boy and and girl love has part, as much for the sounding sentences of the Old Testament and of Ossian as for any senseless jingle; and while they will derive now as much pleasure from one as from the other, and eventually more, the better kind will give pleasure on a loftier plane, and will cause the mind to reach up instead of down.

It is high time that the heads of families looked into this subject in some measure, especially since the eager mind of childhood must be fed, and will devour watever comes in its way if nothing is furnished it with design. Such oversight is not so easy a task that it can be despised as too trival to be undertaken, for in the myriad of publications for children and those just escaping childhood, it is a serious effort to keep au courant; and so doubtful is the character of many of them, if not as to intention, yet as to injurious quality without intention, that in the supervision one has to become acquainted with a mass of rubbish in order to eliminate it, and finds it a work of time and thought not always pleasurable.

Dear Saints:—A short time ago the little Hope came to us, and in addition to the change in appearance I noted the remarks of Sr. Frances regarding the enlarging of it. I have long thought it should be enlarged and would be glad to see the change; for if there is anything I really enjoy it is good attractive reading matter for children.

The Hope, in its present form, is small. If it were twice the size it is, there would then be space to fill with good matter both original and selected such as would make its weekly appearance a pleasure to young and old. It is good now, but there is not enough of it.

Sr. Walker says we cut off one end of the garment to sow on the other end. The books that have been recently published can do a work that the Hope could not, but the Hope can and will fill its own place and do good in another way.

When all over this land and in lands too beyond the great waters in the homes of Latter Day Saints, the children gather in the long winter evenings, how shall they spend their hours? Can parents put forth any nobler effort than to implant in the hearts of their children pure thoughts and noble aspirations? Can Latter Day Saints do a better thing than to teach their children diligently concerning the great things the Lord has done for us, is now doing and the greater things that must soon come?

Autumn Leaves is published for the youth of the church and is a necessary publication, and yet it is quite as necessary that we sustain Zion's Hope for another class of readers, those who as yet are not capable of understanding such reading matter as they find in the Autumn Leaves; for we can neither enjoy nor be benefitted by what we can not understand.

Let us consider the needs of the children of the church, let us make of Zion's Hope a useful instrument, a "thing of beauty, a joy forever" for the fruits it shall yield.

The older Saints enjoy the Herald, the young people, Autumn Leaves, and the children, the little Hopes should have their paper, too. As it is, how often do I find the space occupied by letters, reports and other matter, good, of importance I admit, but intended for maturer minds. I am not complaining of the contents of the Hope. Be that far from me. I am lamenting the limited space which prevents our giving to the children each week a little paper, bright, interesting, instructive, one that shall be suggestive to parents and teachers in their efforts to guide the little feet "that still must run such weary length."

Can not each one who has been a subscriber for the Hope again contribute his mite, if, by so doing, we may improve the paper?

And after it comes to your homes, mothers and fathers, do you ever notice its appearance, do you ever talk with your children of its contents as you do with your brethren of the contents of the other publications?

A paper may come into a home, be read, its articles talked over and the thoughts gleaned from its printed pages may teach a soul to see the beauty, the grandeur of life, lived well. But the same paper may come into a home, be tossed about, hurriedly scanned, thrown aside, and accomplish nothing.

Do your children read the Hope after you take it for them?

Do you encourage them to read it?

BESSIE BRIGHT.

DEFIANCE, Iowa, Oct. 1st.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:-As my life is still precious in the sight of the Load I thought I would write a few lines. I am still living in the midst of my children, grandchildren and great grandchildren, patiently waiting the change. When my husband and I first embraced this latter day work we dedicated ourselves, our children and all that we had to the Lord; and I humbly claim to-day that we are the Lord's. I have outlived my husband over thirty years. Since that time our posterity has grown into a little multitude. I can not say that we are all doing right though we all belong to the church. I can look around and see scores of our posterity engaged in this latter day work helping to build up the kingdom of God on the earth. This is a great satisfaction to me and I often think while sitting in my lonely room, we "ought not to live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God." When I think how good the Lord has been to us as a family I am lost in wonder. I am ready to say, "Thank the Lord, Oh my soul, and all that is within me." I thank the Lord that has watched over me almost ninety years.

He sought me when a stranger, Wandering from the fold of God.

Beloved sister, our cause is good and the kingdom is ours and the hour of redemption is near. I hope that you may pray for me.

As ever your sister in Christ, SARAH HANLEY.

September 16th.

Dear Sister Frances and Sisters of the Prayer Union, one and all:- I have long thought of writing but have not, thinking that others were better able to write. But I have a testimony to bear as well as the rest. It is now about sixteen years since I came into the Church of Latter Day Saints and I have ever since been happy that I am numbered with the people of God, but am one of the lonely ones and am persecuted because of my religion. I desire the prayers of the sisters and of the church generally, that I may be delivered from this thralldom in which I feei bound, and over which at present I have no control. I am old and a widow and lonely. A sister also desires that I should ask your prayers for her husband who is very wicked and is persecuting her for her religion, almost beyond endurance. He says she must join a popular church which she steadfastly refuses to do.

GROVETON, Tex., Oct. 11th.

Dear Herald:—I have often thought of writing to the "Column" but have not before made the attempt. I like to read the Herald very much. It is so much help to me. My husband and I are both members of the Saints' Church and we feel very lonely here, as we are all there are in this town. We pray for the day when we can live in a branch of the church I love the good works of these latter days, and love to hear and know of its going on in other parts of the country. I am the mother of four children and am just recovering from a long spell of sickness. I was sick about ten months and no one but those who have suffered as I have knows what I have been through.

I feel to praise God for his mercy to me, and thank him that he heard the prayers offered up in my behalf. I begged the Lord all through my sickness to spare me to raise my little children. My husband and I try to live so that others may see our good works and glorify our Father in heaven. Some times it seems like we will starve for spiritual food. Oh, if I could live where I could talk with some of the members of the church, I would be so happy! But, dear brothers and sisters, I hope to live so that after death we will meet and sing God's praises through all eternity, where parting will be no more. I would be glad to know where Bro. I. N. Roberts is. It was under his voice my husband was converted. I pray that God may bless him and his family wherever they may be. I hope the Saints will pray for us.

May the Lord help us all to arouse, and do our work like faithful followers of the meek and lowly Savior, is my earnest prayer.

Your sister in Christ, S. B. TEAGARDEN.

WARREN, Ohio, Sept. 22d.

Dear Sistsr Frances:—Again I take up my pen to write a few thoughts for the Column, which is just as interesting and instructive to us as ever.

How swiftly time flies. I have been a member of the church since May 19th, 1889, and it does not seem nearly so long. You will doubtless think five months a short time, and it is, but I was convinced of the truth of the work a year ago, circumstances preventing my obeying. My sympathies are enlisted in behalf of thee "scattered ones" who so seldom have the privilege of enjoying a gospel sermon. You are not forgotten dear ones, though far removed from us! still may you ever be present in memory. Those whom we have met, and those we have not seen we will hope to meet by and by.

Truth grows dearer to me every day if possible, and as I have been given the light of the gospel to be the guiding star of my earthly pilgrimage, I trust that,

"When death comes with his sickles keen, To reap the bearded grain at a breath And the flowers that grow between,"

it will guide me to the farther shore of the beautiful river, the place prepared, where many mansions be, and where the dear ones that have gone before will be waiting and watching at the beautiful gate, also where the loved ones of our lifetime will be "watching," or

"Waiting till the shadows are a little longer grown,"

"We do not know, We can not tell, But Jesus doeth All things well."

Our number has increased to nine, and our prayer services are more interesting than ever. So much depends upon our being faithful and willing to do our duty. I have been thinking about the sweet briar. It grew under our greatgrandmother's window, and sent its delicate odor through all the rooms of that old fashioned house. How we love the sweet, spicy fragrance! "The little four leaved rose," as one of the poets called it, seems rather insignificant beside the Prairie Queen, and others, but in its perfume it excels them all. There have been those-I trust there are many still-whose characters are like the sweet briar, as it stands all unnoticed in its dark restful green, yet filling all the air about it wth sweetness. Many there are who remind us of the roses; delicate pink, deep carmine, and pure white roses, all have their counterparts in actual life. There are the deep red roses of rare mental powers robed in bright personal attractions; these shine in society, and are followed with admiration everywhere, but after they have passed there is no fragrance, for the fragrance comes only from the soul. There are the delicate flesh roses of sensitive natures, sweet, too, perhaps, as they are lovely, in whom the spirit-life is rare and beautiful as the outward petals which cover it. But more enduring than all hot-house growth is the hardy sweet briar. Braving the winter storms, it stands amid the snows, leafless it may be, but the roots are still aglow, and from the ice-bound stem will come again buds and fresh leaves sweet as before. We have known characters like this, hardy and brave amid misfortunes and coming through the winters of sorrow with a sweetness beyond expression. Our minds may not all be rich with brilliant endowments, but our characters may be strong, pure and sweet. Every Saint may be a sweet briar, quiet and unassuming, yet sending out around them the fragrance of a lovely life. The face may be plain or rugged, the outward adornings all unattractive, but if the sweetness be in the soul, it will find its way out in words and deeds, till all around shall breathe the fragrance and be blessed.

Fearing I may have trespassed upon your valuable space I will close. Your sister in Zion's cause, ALICE M. PINKERTON.

GARDEN GROVE, Iowa, Oct. 8th.

Dear Herald:-It is with pleasure I read your pages and often find in them much consolation and comfort. And now having had another other evidence of God's love to us in healing the afflicted, I thought I would relate it for the strengthening of my brothers and sisters. Our little daughter of ten years was afflicted with sore eves for several weeks so that we had to keep them darkened. I was impressed if she was baptized they would soon get well, and she thought the same. We had lately moved here and are the only Saints in this place, and thought it best to go to Lamoni. I took her there September the 14th, and the 15th she was baptized by brother I. R. Lambert, together with his own little daughter, Maud. There were present brethren Cochran and Moore, sister Lambert and myself. I never felt more peaceful and happy. It did not seem to me we were on the earth. I do not know how the others felt, but that heavenly feeling remained with me all day and I enjoyed myself at the meetings. More than this, God did answer our prayers, for my little daughter's eyes are well and look brighter than ever, and she is stronger in body. Thanks be to His holy name. We ought to take Him at His word, and when we ask, expect to receive.

My prayer is that we may pray without ceasing.

Your sister in bonds,
E. RAY.

We remember seeing the little girl at meeting with her eyes closely bandaged. Sr. Lambert told us she had been baptized that morning and as we took her little hand in ours we felt sorry because of her affliction. How and why is it that so few return to give glory to God?—ED.

Correspondence.

OGDEN, Utah, Oct. 7th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—We occupied the Tabernacle at Richmond Friday and Saturday evenings, September 27th and 28th; and Monday evening, 30th. On Saturday evening a list of questions was handed to me for answers. I read them to the audience and told the people that I would try and answer them on the Monday night, and any which I could not answer satisfactorily to myself at least I would tell them I could not. As these questions are staple ones, I herein repeat them, with a digest of the answers, so far as it is practicable for me to remember them.

- 1. Do you believe in a priesthood?
- 2. To what extent?
- 3. Have you got it?
- 4. Where and how did you get it?
- 5. May it not be possible that your brother David is the man to lead the church?
- 6. You say God never changes. He gives a commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." After this God commands his people to kill whole nations. Please explain.
- 7. Can you prove that your father had no more than one wife?

To these questions there were added at the opening of the Monday night meeting two others:

"Inasmuch as you profess to be practicing all the principles of your father, what are you doing in the way of building temples and redeeming the dead? Your father taught that the church was established by him in 1830, never more to be thrown down or given to another people. Please tell us where it was from the time of his martyrdom till you assumed the leadership sixteen years after?"

To these several questions we replied substantially thus:

- 1. Yes.
- 2. To the extent that Jesus Christ conferred the priesthood on his apostles in his immediate day, and as the same was re-conferred upon Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery and others, at the restoration of the gospel and for the purposes of fulfilling the prophecy in Math 24; and the accomplishment of the angel's message of Revelations 14; and as the same is set forth in the section on Priesthood in Doctrine and Covenants, the Melchisedec and Aaronic.
  - 3 Yes.
- 4. First by birthright; second by blessing; third by call and ordination to the Melchisedec by laying on of hands of those who held this priesthood in my father's time, and whose right to act in it had never been taken from them; after my baptism by father and confirmation during his lifetime and under his authority.

- 5 Yes. It is possible that my brother David is the man to lead. God might employ this means after all other efforts to recall Israel had failed. If he did no man was more ready to say amen to it than I.
- 6. I had not said that God never changes. I had said that the elders used to teach that God was unchangeable. But on this point I gave the following texts: Mal. 3:6; Num 23:19; Jam. 1:17; D. and C., Sec. 2, p. 1; Sec. 34, p. 1; B. of M. 2 Nephi; in which it is stated that if God changes, he ceases to be God. The killing of the Midianites, Amorites, Amalekites, is all explained in the history itself, which states why it was done, which I referred them to.
- 7. I did not propose to prove that father had no more than one wife. It devolved on those who said that he had to prove their statement. That I did not know whether he had or not. That I did not believe that he had, from the evidence I had so far seen. That if he had and it could so be proved, it would but prove him a transgressor against the laws of the Lord acknowledged by the church during his lifetime and at his death, as also a transgressor of the laws of the state where he lived and died. The question with me was not whether he had or not, but was, "Was it, and is it according to God's will and word?" And I had shown and would show that it was not.
- 8. We were not building a temple, as we knew of no commandment requiring it of us. That when God should command it we were ready. Baptism for the dead was a permissive ordinance, and ceased as a privilege when the church failed to build the temple at Nauvoo in time; as found in the Revelation of 1841.
- 9. That the church remained with the scattered membership in its organized branches where organization had remained unbroken; but did not attach to the quorums in their organizations.

I did the best I could under the circumstances; but how far the answers were satisfactory to the assembly, I do not know. The audiences were large each night, but the last evening the house was crowded. We were not made acquainted with any of the officers. The Bishop was lying abed, confined by a broken leg; and none others were presented to us. An old schoolmate, Charles Stoddard, was on the stand the first evening, but no others. On the last evening two young men, Mr. Lowe and Mr. Tooleson, came up and sat near us, the seats below being full.

We were very courteously treated. The Deacon in reply to Bro. Anthony's question: How much are we indebted for use of house and lights? said: "Not anything, gentlemen. All we ask is that if any of our people come your way, treat them as well as we have you." We assured him that we would use our influence to do so. The name of our questioner was Jno. E. Rouche (pronounced Rooshe).

From Richmond we drove to Hyrum, near the south end of Cache Valley, on Tuesday. At Hyrum we found an appointment in the Tabernacle, where at 7: 30 we met Bishop Molen and other officers of the Ward, the choir, and a house full of people. The choir sang and Bro. Anthony led in prayer, when another hymn was sung. Bishop Molen introduced me to the congregation, and I told them some of the reasons why the Reorganization and myself had taken the stand in regard to the question of plural marriage that we had. The attention was good; and we were at the close of services introduced to several of the men of the place, the wife and daughter of Bishop Molen, Mr. James Unsworth and his wife, Mr. O. Shaw, Patriarch Lilinquist, and others.

Mr. Unsworth is brother to Bro. Mark H. Forscutt's wife. We were the guests of Mr. Lilinquist Jun., and Mrs. Elmira Benson, his mother in law, by whom we were well cared for.

We left Hyrum impressed with the kindness and manly treatment of Bishop Molen and his people. Of the treatment accorded to us in Cache Valley we make no complaint; but that at Hyrum was the kindliest, and, to our thinking, the manliest.

At Logan we were cared for principally by Bro. Peter Anderson; but Brn. Wikland, Nilsson, Johansen and others of the brethren stood by us like Saints should by each other. At Richmond Bro. Jons Nilsson gave us welcome, and with his wife and girl took good care of the missionaries. May blessings be and abide with them all. Brn. Nilsson, Erickson and Eckersley are pretty much alone in Richmond, but hold manfully to the faith.

Bro. Peter Anderson has succeeded in gathering in a few good souls at Logan and Richmond, and is standing well with the people in his work.

In bonds.

JOSEPH SMITH.

COLEMAN, Mich., Oct. 8th.

Bro. Blair:—So many say and write, "Why don't you write to the Herald? We don't hear from you of late," etc.

Well, it is not because I am idle. I have been very busy and scarcely had time, and there are lots of better writers, and more written than printed. I am am doing all the good I can; opening up new places, and assisting my brethren all I can; and we are being blessed of the Master, and encouraged amid our joy and persecutions.

A few weeks ago we commenced preaching in Reed City for the first time, and the first ever done here save a few sermons delivered a few years ago by Bro. W. H. Kelley. We had a good congregation, good order, and good attention; and I had fair liberty in presenting the gospel to the people. I put in two sermons that Sunday and Bro. Wm. Carns commenced to hold regular services every second week; but the second time he was shut out. Since then they have had a special meeting, but I have not learned the results. I think a majority are in our favor.

In my travels many have asked, "What about that debate in Tawas?" They say they have been looking through the Herald, but have failed to find it. Well, I received a letter from Elder Wear that he had been sick, and it would be some time yet before he would be able to do any talking in public; and if I believed what I was preaching I was to go on, and he would do the same, and we won't have any debate. I was also informed that he was forbidden to hold a discussion with the Saints. A sister writing from that place said that Elder Wear was very sick, nigh unto death, and she supposed that if I had come there and he received word of it, it would likely have killed him.

The middle of last month we had a two days' meeting in Farwell. A good time was had and five more were baptized. Farwell has about twenty-three members, Brinton eighteen, and Coleman about twenty, not yet organized.

The Lord is blessing us too, with healings, and the Saints are being encouraged. One brother was baptized herein Coleman who was a cripple; was taken to the water by team and baptized and he came out of the water a whole man. He threw away his stick and walked all the way home, a distance of about three miles, and has never used a crutch or cane since.

One day when I was talking with him about the gospel in his own house I was speaking of miracles and the power of God, etc., and he said: "I believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God just as much as Moses or any other man that we read of in the Bible." I told him I thought he was not far from the kingdom, and I could see no reason why God would not heal him as well as others who exercised faith in Him; and that evening he was baptized and the Lord healed him of his affliction.

Some would perhaps think that the whole country around would obey if they saw that, but they did not. In fact, one of the ministers said he was healed, but the devil did it. Good members are generally made by receiving faithfully the gospel, plainly and earnestly presented to them.

The work is moving on fairly, yet not without much labor and trouble. I have baptized about fifty since the last General Conference.

Your brother,

DETROIT, Michigan, Oct. 7th.

I. I. CORNISH.

Editors Herald:-The conference which closed to-day, of the Kent and Elgin district, Canada, at Chatham, was quite an encouraging one to the Saints and certainly showed much improvement and growth over that which I was permitted to attend in the same district seven years ago. There has not only been a goodly growth in membership, but a decided advancement in understanding and manner and method of work. The missionary force have been doubtless active and earnest watchers and workers. Bro. John H. Lake presided over the conference assisted by Bro. Samuel Brown. Brn. Richard Evans and Arthur Leverton of the Seventy were present, and Bro. Wentworth Vickery of Plano, Illinois, Richard Coburn the Bishop's Agent, the aged

Bro. Brown from St. Marys, together with many active, local workers whose countenances showed a keen interest in the success of the faith "once delivered to the Saints." Seven years ago there was hardly a place in Chatham at which a Latter Day Saint minister could hope to get a welcome shelter, but now their branch numbers sixty-five members and the people are stripped of much of their former prejudice and intolerance Bro. Blakeslee and I had comfortable quarters with young Napoleon Liddy, and you would never discover from the name that this genial host and warm-hearted Latter Day Saint was manufactured from the raw material of a wild Irishman. In the meetings there was much to commend, encourage and comfort.

The first ordination of a member of the colored race, to the eldership in the church, took place during the conference, under a proper call and direction. Bro. Eaton of Puce River, Canada, being the one so ordained. I noticed also that some of the brethren introduced a resolution instructing their delegate to General Conference to secure, if possible, the attendance of President Smith at their June conference. That indicates a long ride during the next few months and but little rest in the meantime; only think—from Idaho to Canada—interspersed with a full bill of fare made up of rattling good sermons, all along the journey; and yet the world tells us there are no prophets now!

Duties calling me westward prevented my stay in the Dominion. After looking after business for a few days in Kirtland, I go to Mills County, Iowa, stopping first at Council Bluffs. The work at and about Kirtland is hopeful, and Satan's hosts are shaking all around. They have not got so badly scared yet, however, as to prevent them from lying about the work of the Latter Day Saints there—the latest is through the Cleveland Penny Press, and it shows how low and mean some sectarian bigots can be at the same time they are professing a belief in the doc trine "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them." Surely their own professions condemn them, and will before the Judge of all. God is upon our side however and we shall press on unmoved.

In bonds, hastily and faithfully yours, E. L. Kelley.

GROVE HILL, Iowa, Oct. 7th.

Bro. Blair: - I left my home in Lamoni, August 29th, went to Lucas, held a series of meetings, the result of which has been stated by Bro. Morgan in the Herald of September 28th, after which I met Bro. C. H. Jones at Chariton while enroute for Oelwein, Fayette county, where we arrived September 17th, then went six miles west to my brother Benjamin's, where Bro. Jones preached twice in the Center school-house, and I once. Since then Bro. Jones baptized my niece, Kate Spear, at which time we had a glorious confirmation meeting in her house near the water. The Spirit's presence was sensibly felt, and we blessed two of her children. My brother, Charles S. Shippy, took us in his buggy to Mr. Fay's, who married Bro. Jones' sister, where we held two meetings with large and attentive congregations, and left several believing the gospel. Bro. Jones preached once near Grove Hill, then left here for home September 30th to attend the district conference. I am at present holding a series of meetings in a school-house one mile from my brother Charles'.

The interest in gospel research is increasing, as well as our numbers in attendance. Last night the house was filled to overflow and attention good. My brother Charles and wife are believing. So are many others. I look for an ingathering in the near future. Yours in hope of victory over the evil.

JOHN SHIPPY.

BIRD'S EYE, Indiana, Oct. 11th.

Brethren Joseph and William:—I left home on the 5th for Byrnville. Held meeting on the nigh of the fifth, and on the sixth I was assisted by brother D. Scott of New Albany, and brother W. H. Kelley, of Lee Summitt.

On the nights of the eighth and ninth I spoke at Ricevile, Crawford county, and to night I am to speak at Bird's Eye, Dubois county. The interest is not as good as we would like to see, but I am inclined to think that we make our own condition and the fault must be ours. I hope for the better. Bro. Gillen did a good work in our district. May his light never grow less.

Yours, M. R. Scott.

ANNUAL REUNION MINUTES.

THE Annual Reunion of the church for 1889 convened at Garner's Grove, Iowa, Saturday, October 5th. Upon motion Brn. W. W. Blair, C. Derry and M. H. Forscutt were chosen presidents, H. A Stebbins and J. F. McDowell were chosen secretaries. M. H. Forscutt was selected as chorister with privelege of securing an organist.

A police force was asked for, to be chosen by the committee on grounds, and names reported at afternoon meeting for confirmation. Bro. John Benson was chosen as janitor; Bro. B. Benson and W. Smith as ushers. The matter of appointing ministers was left in the hands of the presidency.

Elder Blair made some timely remarks touching upon punctuality and good order; such devolving upon each one seeking to promote spirituality and good fellowship.

Elder J. R. Lambert spoke relative to the possibility of prosperity and adversity being attendant upon the church, and as to our living in harmony with the Celestial law. "How many are striving to keep the commandments fully that shall bring unto us those blessings for which we are hoping?" "We trust all will strive to do right that we may be right."

Bishop Blakeslee spoke of the favor being shown us by men of business and agents of the various railway companies showing us courtesies, and more willingly than before. The Saints should be willing to live nearer to God, and make stronger efforts in that direction.

At two p. m. the Saints assembled for preaching service. A hymn was sung, prayer by Elder Lambert, followed by another hymn. Elder C. Derry was announced to speak; I Cor. 19: 20 was his text.

These instructions given were to the saints and therefore applicable unto us. The body being a tabernacle for God, it should be kept under subjection. Purity of thought suggests purity of action; we should keep our spirits pure, thus keeping our lives pure in the line of our conduct, it being an education of much time. Continual vigilance is necessary for successful subjection of fleshly passions, in order to the retention of the Spirit of God. Our covenant was solemn and profound; for we placed ourselves in the hands of God's servants for admission into the church, promising to keep God's covenant inviolate until death. We thus manifest our unreserved devotion toward God, being buried with Christ, rising to newness of life; otherwise it was a mockery before God. We arose to live a life of purity and excellence, and to do that that would ennoble and enrich our lives. The lesson of the gospel is to be found in our lives. Lessons of holiness, purity, goodness are to be learned. If we yield to temptation and are overcome, we lose the great object which we started out to obtain. The Holy Spirit comes into us to expect to find a habitation of rest and peace, and thus the obedient person has the Great Guide to be with them. When God's peace is with us we may know we are striving to keep His word. We should ever remember that we are not our own, for we have been bought with a price, that price being the precious blood of Christ. It seems to me at times that the purchase act was greater than the creative act. Anything contrary to God's nature defiles our bodies. We should glorify God in our body and spirit, for they belong unto God. We are to use all our powers of mind and body unto God's glory; otherwise we prostitute their intended object, for which they were created.

If the ministry be endangered by neglect of duty, what shall be said of those who have means to give to aid the ministry in declaring the word and who withhold that money so as to prevent the work of propagation? Hymn 615, tune 380 was announced by J. R. Lambert; benediction by W. W. Blair.

At seven p. m. the following names were presented as policemen: W. Steward, marshall; W. M. Smith, B. Benson, J. Dickey. After singing, and prayer by Bishop Blakeslee, another hymn was sung and Bro. Leonard Scott was introduced as speaker of the evening. His text was John 17:20, 21. Modern religionists present, instead of a unity, a diversified relig ion of one thousand and thirty-six institutions. Religion is opposed to Christianity as modernly interpreted. That presented by Christ was pure; religion of our time is diametrically opposed to Christianity. Religion persecuted Jeremiah, Paul, Peter, etc., but there was no Christianity in it. Paul in the Baptist pulpit contradicts Paul in the Methodist pulpit. A revelation from God to the Baptist contradicts God in a revelation to the Methodist church. There is but one God, faith, hope, baptism,---a legitimate outgrowth of the Christian system.

Ministers called to-day are called by a majority vote, causing the rule to be democratic and not a kingdom. The rule on the part of one ascends; the other, in the kingdom, by descent. Christ said his kingdom was not of this world, but of yonder world; then why not let the other world rule in that kingdom? Is it in existence now? Revelation, as a governmental principle, should always obtain in the true church. It is the means by which God regulates the affairs of His church. Christianity always maintained that principle, while religion has oft been divested thereof. True Christianity enhances the spiritual interests of mankind and seeks for promotion of their eternal good, while religion has oft been found a narrow, selfassuming tyrant; not seeking the general or special good of any. A hymn was sung, benediction by Elder Blair.

SUNDAY, 6TH.

Saints assembled for social services, which were in charge of Brn. W. Chambers and J. McIntosh. After singing and prayer the meeting was given to the Saints and many faithful testimonies borne and prayers offered.

At 10:30 a.m. Elder Blair had charge of the services. After the usual opening services Elder J. R. Lambert spoke from 1 John 3:1-3, and Heb. 13:8, as follows: The object of preaching the gospel is the salvation of the people. As ministers we should so simplify as to bring it within the reach of all people. Man is in a lost and fallen condition, a peculiar one, for which there is no human aid. Man abused his agency, bringing himself into a state of bondage. The kind of deliverance must be an infinite and eternal one. There is no redemption outside of Christ; no name but His by which we can be saved. Faith is first necessary.

The standard is God; we are required to believe in Him. It was not only necessary that Jesus should be born into the world, but to have One who could bring us near to God. There was nothing imperfect in the character of God ere Christ came, but the mediatorship existed in Him. Christ's subjection to trial, etc., was voluntary, and we are to trust Him for life, as all He did was for the betterment of our condition. He came as a teacher sent from God, teaching the people in a proper and authoritative manner what they should do. God will require it at the hands of all people who heed not Christ through his teachings. He spake as God gave him utterance, and the righteous teachings of God's ministers should be heeded, as they are sent of Christ, as Christ had been sent of God. The truth of God should be declared, and a knowledge of this makes men free. God has pledged himself to do right and good, and when we do so, we are co-laborers with Him; He will be with us so long as we so act.

We call your attention to the principles of the doctrine of Christ. There is such a great adaptation in them unto all people. We are required to believe in God and It enables us to lay hold on the hope of life, and it causes us to be joyful in the Lord. Repentence is essential; repentence is necessary. We can not obtain the reward while in sin, we must depart from sin. We are required to be baptized for remission of sins, because there must be a complete separation from sin upon entering God's church. God has provided that we should have the Comforter. It is infallible in its character, and those who follow its guidings will do right and be lifted up and made grand and happy. It leads us to better know God. And every gift thereof is calculated to bring us into harmony with God. And this should be had.

The resurrection of the dead God will accomplish for all mankind. The judgment occurs then, when all shall be rewarded or punished as their works shall have been. It is necessary that we should live well here that we may live well there.

A hymn was sung: benediction by Elder Derry.

At 2 p. m. Elder Derry was in charge. A hymn was sung; prayer by J. F. Mc Dowell, followed by another hymn, after which Elder M. H. Forscutt spoke to a large audience from John 11th chapter. "Consciousness after death" was the theme of the discourse. Jesus was the perpetuator of life.—Prov. 20: 20 was quoted relative to the Spirit. Man lives in or out of of the body. The spirit God placed in man's body to lighten the tabernacle.— Prov. 13:9. "The lamp of the righteous rejoiceth; the lamp of the wicked shall he put out." Our spirit is enlightened by God's Spirit. There is continuous light and life for the righteous man. Man refusing to be lighted by Christ is destroyed as to spiritual light. God's promise to the righteous is that they shall shine brighter and brighter until the perfect day. See 1 Thess. 5:23. God will preserve the whole man—spirit, soul and body—until Christ comes. 2 Cor. 5:6-8, referring to mortality swallowed up of life; Phil. 2:21-24. This does not refer to the "body," the church, but to the fleshly body, most assuredly. No doctrine of unconsciousness after death to the body is herein taught by any means. 2. Peter 1:13. This apostle agrees perfectly with the apostle Paul upon this question; they each were in harmony upon the idea of consciousness after death. See Luke 20. All live unto God. He is not the God of the dead but of the This proves the consciousness of living. spirit after death to the body-seeing Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were not yet resurrected. See Mark 9:6, 7. Luke 16: 19-31:- the parable of Dives and Lazarus. Both died; and when they were deadyet living in spirit, as attested by the language—affection and regard are manifested by them after leaving the flesh. See Revelations ... May God help us to share with them the blessing of reward. Rev. 19:10 teaches us of spirit life hereafter, a hopeful and inspiring doctrine. A hymn was sung; benediction by J. F. McDowel'.

7:30 p. m. Meeting in charge of C. Derry. Hymn, prayer by C. E. Butterworth. After singing another hymn Bro. J. S. Roth spoke upon the subject of the resurrection of the dead, Job 14:14: "If a man die, shall he live again?" I Cor. 15: 35: This question is an important one. See Isa. 26:9. Here we read that "the earth shall cast out her dead." Thy dead men shall live. John 20:21: This refers to the resurrection of Jesus, giving an unmistakable evidence of the truthfulness of the doctrine; also Luke 24:21; Matt. 22: 29. Character of angels; appearing unto Abraham, eating and drinking. says in the resurrection we shall be as the angels of heaven, being tangible in appearance, and form and general make up. If the angels have wings, then the Sodomites would have known the difference, but not so. They ate with Lot also; Ps. 78: 20; Heb. 13:2. We are not to be forget ful to entertain strangers, for angels appear as men. The primal elements of the physical form at death return to their respective elements-none are lost. Ezekiel tells us of the resurrection, very plainly indeed, as shown to him in vision. reorganization is perfect in all its parts. According to Paul, Christ was the first fruits of them that slept, thus assuring the resurrection of all mankind; the destruction of mortality bringing about immortality, eternal life. Closed with hymn and benediction.

MONDAY, 7TH.

Prayer service at 9 a.m. in charge of Brn. J. Pitt and C. Butterworth. Many strong and pleasing testimonies were borne, and the Holy Spirit's light was shed abroad in the hearts of the Saints.

At 11 a. m. the meating was in charge of Bro. W. W. Blair. After singing, with prayer by J. R. Lambert, Elder David Chambers spoke from Acts 16: 30, "What must I do to be saved?" This query is of as much importance now as then. It may be a task to answer the question, What is it to be saved? All that we do or say should be in perfect accord with God's commands, thus to work out a line of conduct that shall meet with God's approval and that shall thus secure unto us God's promised salvation. We must have His Spirit to be with us to teach and guide us aright that we may be able to walk in the Without it we could not know God's will or receive His wisdom. When we talk of salvation, from what source did we receive the light upon it? All compliance with His principles develops a life of righteousness. The gosgel of Christ fills us with love and desire to do His will. We love nature and nature's products. His law discovers unto all the condition in which they stand. In obeying the gospel we become sons of God. When we speak of sons of men, it is one thing; to speak of being sons of God, is quite another-it implies so much more; that which is spiritual, and holy, and true—something grand unto which we should all aspire. The sons of men love the world and the things thereof; the sons of God love the things of God and his kingdom. A theory may be beautiful, but the practice is much more so. We should be a practical people in works of right, under God's blessing. Closed with hymn, and benediction by Elder

During the intermission nine persons were baptized by Elder J. F. McDowell.

At 2:30 p. m. the service was in charge of Bro. C. Derry. After the singing, with prayer by Bro. H. O. Smith, Elder Charles Butterworth was speaker. His text was Joshua 24: 15: "Choose ye, this day, whom ye will serve." God had led Israel out of bondage by power. He made himself manifest to Israel, and placed them in a position to know His will. By God's help Israel was enabled to possess the promised land in comparative peace. Joshua was enabled to put Israel in a position whereby they might worship God acceptably; and now, ere he dies, he desires to learn of the intent of their hearts, as to their willingness to abide in the way of life. The language of our text is not only applicable unto those out of Christ, but also unto those in Christ. Our voli-tion is called into requisition upon this matter. While we may not be surrounded by material idols, we are by a power that can be served to our hurt, and the hurt of all. The serving of self is a system of idolatry, seeking self happiness, etc. The enemy desires that we should serve him—that the true worship of God in our hearts might be deposed. We are required to worship God in sincerity, spirit, truth, and truly, from the heart; otherwise we act the part of hypocrites. In our worship of God we must have communion with Him; especially is this true of the ministry, that their labors may be acceptable unto God. Christ held much communion, and much power was given him. The decisive choice of Joshua was, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Let us be wise to do as he did, that we may be judged aright. After a hymn and benediction confirmation services were held.

At 7:30 p. m. Elder Blair in charge, the usual song service, prayer by Elder Blair. Elder J. F. McDowell spoke from Acts 24:5, telling of the estimate the world had placed upon the ministry of God and their message then and now. Benediction by Bishop Blakeslee.

TUESDAY 8TH.

Saints met for prayer at 9 a m; Bishop Blakeslee in charge. A spiritual season was enjoyed.

At 11 Elder Derry in charge, prayer by Bro. J. S. Roth, Elder Blair was speaker of the morning. He said: "Unity means strength, division implies weakness; discord brings discontent and disappointment. We claim that the work which we represent has been predicted by ancient prophets upon the eastern and western continents, and this work is of a marvelous character. We teach that Joseph Smith in connection with others was chosen to bring about this church, and he received prophecy and wisdom from God to establish this system of religious work. The Book of Mormon lies at the very foundation of this work, and was and is one of the great means of its bringing about. It is important that the ministry should be acquainted with it more thoroughly than many are. For while we have to appear before the illiterate, we have to also appear before shrewd and learned men, and we need evidence rather than mere theory. The book teaches us that the object of its coming forth was for the purpose of presenting to us important things, to reveal the existence of God, the divinity of Jesus Christ; and claims to show the matter more fully than the Bible does, There are those who claim that Jesus was God, others that he was the only God, still others that he was man and God, and others that he was merely a good man. The Jewish people think he was a man, good, possibly, but misled by a vain ambition. The Book of Mormon does not claim to be a setter forth of a system of church government at all, but the fulness of the gospel, that is, such things essential for mankind to obey that salvation might be theirs. In many respects it is abridged. There are many things relative to a developing and growing church not found in it. It teaches the resurrection and doctrine of judgment; it teaches of those essential doctrines for man to obey in this life. It is an excellent and very important work." A hymn was sung; benediction by C. Derry.

2:30 p.m. Service in charge of Elder

J. C. Crabb. Hymn 697 was sung, prayer by Bro. Joseph Seddon. Elder John A. McIntosh was introduced as speaker. He stated that he would not take up any particular subject, but that his sermon would be of the nature of a testimony and exhor-He had been a member of the church for about fifty years, and although he had passed through a great many trials, he had always found that God had been faithful in fulfilling his promises. He told a few incidents of his early life, and his first religious impressions and how those impressions had been with him through his life. Some things connected with his embracing the gospel of the latter days, also of his preaching to his relatives and of their conversion, as they were all opposed to the work, but came in soon after under his administration of the word. He also told some of his experiences in the dark days of the church and of his uniting with the Reorganization, and his testimony to the utility of the "word of wisdom." He bore strong testimony of God's goodness and care for those who go without purse or scrip to preach the gospel. This was all told in "Uncle Johnny's" peculiar way; at times bringing the tears, and at other times the smiles of the congregation.

Benediction by J. C. Crabb.
7:30 p. m. Services in charge of Bro.
W. W. Blair, prayer by C. Butterworth. Bro. J. C. Crabb addressed the congregation from 2 Cor. 5:17, claiming that man ought to worship God for the reason that man is by nature a worshipful being and ought to endeavor to ascertain who or what being is worthy, or entitled to our worship. As far as the speaker was concerned he would not worship a being that had neither body, parts or passions, as is represented by some bodies of Christians. He then showed who and what God is from a scriptural standpoint, denoting that He is a Being with, not only body and parts, but capable of loving and exercising others of the passions, and therefore worthy of our love and worship; all of these attributes being in His possession in conjunction with all power, etc. Benediction by J. S. Roth.

THE "SEALED BOOK."-No. XIX.

BY ELDER R. M. ELVIN.

TIME WHEN ABORIGINAL CIVILIZATION OF AMERICA WAS MADE KNOWN TO THE WORLD BY SCIENTIFIC INVESTIGATIONS.

OPPONENTS of the Book of Mormon have persistently asserted that the civilization said by that book to have once existed upon this land had been made known to the world prior to the publication of that work, though none of them, so far as the writer knows, has ever attempted to prove that assertion by the introduction of competent evidence. This assertion in itself is not very important; but it becomes of manifold importance when it is seen that it practically makes some very important admissions which are as follows:

1. The Book of Mormon accurately describes aboriginal civilization as said civilization has been made known to the world by scientific explorations.

2. The fact that the Book of Mormon accurately describes this civilization, is unquestionable evidence of its divinity, unless it appears that this civilization was known to the world prior to the publication of

The question which I shall first attempt to settle is whether the numerous cities, dense population and high order of civilization said by the Book of Mormon to have once existed in Central America, were known by the world to have so existed, prior to the publication of that book. The two works of Stephens and Catherwood in respect to the civilization of Central America, were first published in 1841 and 1843, respectively. Their travels in that country were begun in 1839. (See American Encyclopedia, Article Stephens). The preface of the above works contain the following:

"They describe, as the author has reason to believe, the most extensive journey ever made by a stranger in that peninsula, and contain the account of visits to fortyfour ruined cities, or places in which remains or vestiges of ancient population were found. The existence of most of these ruins was entirely unknown to the residents of the capital; but few had ever been visited by white inhabitants; they were desolate and overgrown with trees.

"Stephen's account was noticed by quotations by nearly all the reviews at the time of its appearance, and has been the chief source from which all subsequent writers, including myself, have drawn their information."—Native Races, vol. 4, p. 146.

This is most excellent proof in behalf of our proposition.

Bancrott says again: "Since 1830 the veil has been lifted from the principal ruins of ancient Maya works by the researches of Zavala, Waldeck, Stephens, Catherwood, Norman, Friedericksthal, and Charney. A general account of the antiquarian writings and explorations of these gentlemen is given in the appended note:-It will be noticed that all the authors mentioned who write from actual observation, have confined their observations from one to four of the principal ruins, whose existence was known previous to their visits, excepting Messers Stephens and Catherwood. These gentlemen boldly left the beaten track, and brought to the knowledge of the world about forty ruined cities, whose very existence had been previously unknown even to the residents of the larger cities of the very state in whose territory they lie.

"The visits of these explorers was the first, and has thus far proved in most cases the last."-Ibid, pp. 144-146.

Bancroft is a good witness that the explorations have been made and published to the world since the Book of Mormon was printed in 1830. The application of the word Maya used in the above, is seen from the following: "I deem the grounds sufficient, therefore, for accepting this Central American civilization of the past as a fact, referring it not to an extinct ancient race, but to the direct ancestors of the peoples still occupying the country with the Spaniards, and applying to it the name Maya." - Native Races, vol. 2, p.

The term "Central American," and the word "Maya," are used as synonymous.

Bancroft says again: "The earliest modern account of Yucatan antiquities with which I am acquainted is that written by Sr. Lorenzo de Zavala, ambassacor of the Mexican Government in France, and published in Antiquites Mexicanes, tom. 1, div. 2, pp. 33-35. Sr. Zavala visited Uxmal several years before 1834.—

Ibid, vol. 4, p. 144. M. Frederic de Waldeck, a French artist, visited Uxmal in 1835, during a short tour in the peninsula, and published the result of his labors in Paris, in 1835: Mr. John L. Stephens, accompanied by Fred Catherwood, artist, at the end of an antiquarian expedition through Central America, arrived at Uxmal in 1840. The results of their incomplete work were published in Stephens' Central America, New

The other explorers of Maya ruins mentioned by Bancroft are of much later date, and need not be mentioned here. It will be noticed that he says that since 1830 the veil has been lifted from the Maya civilization, by the researches of Zavala, etc. Then he affirms that Zavala was the first modern explorer of these ruins, and visited Uxmal several years before 1834; thus fixing the first visit in modern times to the ruins of Yucatan, the richest of all American Antiquarian fields, between the years 1830 and 1834.

Mayer says: "I have attempted to describe to you the prominent remains that still exist farther south in the valley of Mexico, and in other portions of the Republic. Following the links of the chain still farther south, Messieurs Stephens and Catherwood have given an account of forty cities visited by them in their second tour; and they described the ruins of others, and their monuments, still more southerly in their former volumes."-Mayer's Mexico, p. 257. (His book was published in 1848, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.)

Of the explorations of the ruins of Central America, Baldwin says: "Palacios, who described Copan in 1576 may properly be called the first explorer."—An. Am. p. 102.

This description by Palacios was not published until 1843 in any language; and not till 1860 in English. See Native Races, vol. 4, p. 79, also American Encyclopedia, article Squier.

Baldwin in speaking of the antiquities of Central America says: "Captain Dupaix's folios, in French, with the drawings of Castenada, contain the first really important memoir on these ruins. It was prepared in 1807, detained in Mexico during the Mexican Revolution, and finally published at Paris in 1834-5."

In an inquiry into the Origin of the Antiquities of America, by John Delafield, and published at New York, London and Paris, in 1839, he says: "The antiquities of America are an immense field hardly entered; abounding in promise of reward for the most devoted investigations. Let it be thoroughly explored for the truth's sake. The scriptures have yet to gather a richer cabinet of illustrative and corroborating collections from the long buried and unknown depositories of American antiquity,"

In the work of Josiah Priest, entitled "American Antiquities," published after 1832, the author says on page 38: "It yet remains for America to awake her story from its oblivious sleep, and tell the tale of her antiquities—the traits of nations, coeval perhaps, with the eldest works of man this side of the flood."

In the Book of Mormon is accomplished the very thing anticipated or hoped for by Mr. Delafield.

Bancroft says: "Authorities on the Isthmian antiquities are not numerous. Mr. Berthol Seeman claims to have been the first to discover stone sculptures near David in 1848, and he read a paper on them before the archaeological institute of London in 1851."-Native Races, vol. 4,

Of Costa Rican relics Bancroft says: "Drs. Wagner and Scherzer, who travelled extensively in this region in 1853-4, found in all parts of the state, but more particularly in the Turialba valley, which is in the vicinity of Cartago, traces of old plantations of bananas, cacao, and palms, indicating a more systematic tillage of the soil, and consequently a higher general type of culture among the former than are found among the modern native Costa Rican."-Ibid, p. 21.

"Across the dividing sierras, the Pacific slope, or Nicaragua proper, has yielded plentiful monuments of her former occupants, chiefly to the researches of two men, Messrs. Squier and Boyle."

"Mr. E. G. Squier resided in Nicaragua as charge d'affaires of the United States during the years 1849-50. On account of his position he was afforded facilities for research not enjoyed by other foreigners." "Frederick Boyle visited the country in 1865-6 with the examination of antiquities as his main object."—Ibid, pp. 28, 29.

Speaking of the ruins at Quirigua, which he says are the most important antiquities in Guatemala, Bancroft says: "Our only knowledge respecting this ancient city comes through Mr. Catherwood and Dr. Scherzer. The former traveling with Mr. Stephens visited the locality in 1840." "Dr. Carl Scherzer's visit was in 1854."—Ibid, p. 108.

It is said that Humboldt whose work was published in 1809, wrote of the civilization of Central America, but Stephens did not so understand: "The first new light thrown upon this subject as regards Mexico was by the great Humboldt, who visited that country at a time when, by the jealous policy of the government it was almost as much closed against strangers as China is now. No man could have better deserved such fortune. At that time the monuments of the country were not a leading object of research; but Humboldt collected from various sources information and drawings, particularly of Mitla, or the Vale of the dead; Xoxichalco, a mountain hewed down and terraced and called the Hill of Flowers; and the great pyramid or Temple of Cholula he visited himself, all of which his own eloquent account is within reach of the reader. Unfortunately, of the great cities beyond the Vale of Mexico, buried in forests, ruined, desolate, and without a name, Humboldt never heard, or, at least, he never visited them." -Incidents of travel, vol. 1, p. 98.

"The study of the great architectural works of the ancient Mexican and Peruvians led Humboldt to investigations of their languages, records, early culture and migrations."-American Encyclopedia, vol.

Some, who are totally uninformed upon the subject, affirm that Kingsborough wrote upon Central American civilization before the publication of the Book of Mormon. In answer to this it is only necessary to state, that the earliest date given for the publication of Kingsborough's work, is 1830; the American Encyclopedia gives it as 1831. See Prescott's Conquest of Mexico, vol 1, p. 128; and American Encyclopedia, article Kingsborough.

It is also said that the civilization of Central America was reported to Spain by the early Spanish explorers; that from these reports compilations were made by Spanish historians, and thus it became known to the world. To this I reply: 1. The aboriginal civilization of Central America as it is revealed in the Book of Mormon, was not discovered, and therefore could not be reported by the early Spanish explorers. Mr. Bancroft tells us that: "During the conquest of the central portions of the continent following that of Mexico, the Spaniards found an advanced culture, great cities, magnificent temples, a complicated system of religious and political institutions; but all these had been met before in the north, and consequently mere mention in general terms of these later wonders was deemed sufficient by the conquerors, who were a class of men not disposed to make minute observations, or comparisons respecting what seemed to them unimportant details. As to the Priests, their duty was clearly to destroy rather than closely investigate these institutions of the devil. And in the years following the conquest, the association between the nations and the conquerors was made less intimate than in Anahuac. These nations fought until nearly annihilated, or after defeat retired in national fragments to the inaccessible fastnesses of the cordillera, retaining for several generations, some of them permanently, their independence, and affording the Spaniards little opportunity of becoming acquainted with their aboriginal institutions."-Native Races, vol. 2, p. 114.

Of the civilized nations generally Bancroft says: "In these relics of architecture and literature, of mythology and tradition, there are clear indications of an older and higher type of culture than that brought immediately to the knowledge of the invaders; of a type that had temporarily deteriorated, perhaps through the influence of long continued and bloody conflicts, by which the more warlike, rather than the more highly cultured nations had been brought into prominence and power. But this anterior and superior civilization, resting largely as it does on vague tradition, and preserved to our knowledge in general allusions rather than in detail, may, like the native conditions since the conquest, be utilized to the best advantage here as illustrative of the later and better known, if somewhat inferior civilization of the sixteenth century, described by the conqueror, the missionary and the Spanish historian."—Ibid, p. 84.

In regard to the publication of a Maya manuscript by Kingsborough, whose work was published from 1830-8, known as the Dresden Codex, Bancrost says: "At the time of its publication, however, the existence of any but Aztec [Mexican] hieroglyphics in America was unknown. -Ibid, p. 771.

Of the early Spanish explorers, Bancroft says: "These men were soldiers, gold hunters; they did not travel leisurely; they had no time to examine the architecture of private dwellings; they risked and lost their lives for other purposes."-Ibid, p. 783.

Mayer says: "The silence of the contemporary historians in regard to the former cities of Yucatan and Guatemala, is no argument against their having been inhabited. The two best writers, Cortez and Bernal Diaz, were soldiers, not antiquarians. They came for conquest not research. And it is greatly to be regretted, that a history of Guatemala, known to have existed a few years ago in that country, in the original manuscript of Diaz, (and which was once in the possession of Mr. Whitehead of Mexico) has been utterly lost in the turmoils and confusion of that country."-Mayer's Mexico, p. 162.

"The Spaniards who first visited America and who had opportunity of beholding its various tribes while entire and unsubdued and before any change had been made in their ideas or manners by intercourse with a race of men much advanced beyond them in improvement, were far from possessing the qualities requisite for observing the striking spectacle presented to their view. Neither the age in which they lived, nor the nation to which they belonged, had made such progress in true science, as inspires enlarged or liberal sentiments. The conquerors of the new world were mostly illiterate adventurers, destitute of all the ideas which should have directed them in contemplating objects so extremely different from those with which they were acquainted. Surrounded continually with danger, or struggling with hardships, they had little

The same author says again: "The persons who penetrated at subsequent periods into the interior provinces, to which the knowledge and devastation of the first conquerors did not reach were generally of a similar character; brave and enterprising in a high degree, but so uninformed as to be little qualified either for observing or describing what they beheld. Not only the incapacity but the prejudice of the Spaniards render their accounts of the people of America extremely defective."—Ibid, p. 152.

Baldwin says: "One of the most learned writers on American antiquities, a Frenchman, speaking of discoveries in Peru, exclaims, 'America is to be again discovered! We must remove the veil in which Spanish politics has sought to bury its ancient civilization.' In this case quite as much is due to the ignorance, indifference, unscrupulous greed and religious fanaticism of the Spaniards as to Spanish politics. The gold hunting marauders who subjugated Mexico and Peru could be robbers and destroyers, but they were not qualified in any respect to become intelligent students of American antiquity."-An. Am., p. 13.

The Spanish explorers did not then, study, report, or in any way make known the aboriginal civilization of which the Book of Mormon speaks. They had neither the dispositions nor qualifications to do this; and therefore did not do it. They devoted their entire attention to sixteenth century civilization, and therefore I now turn my attention to this and say:

2. Early Spanish explorers, and therefore early Spanish historians devoted their attention to the sixteenth century civilization; and then reports upon that were imperfect, "unsatisfactory," and of "but little value."

In introducing the chapter on the history of the Maya (Central American) nations, Bancroft says: "Concerning the Aztecs and kindred peoples about the lakes of the Mexican valley, as we have seen, a large amount of information has been preserved; I have consequently been able, in treating of the northern nations, to take these nations of the valley as a nucleus, adding in their proper places such fragments of knowledge as are extant respecting tribes outside the limits of Anahuac [Mexico]. In the south, fragmentary information is all we have have."—Native Races, vol. 2, p. 631.

The same author again says: "Our knowledge of Maya [Central American] arts and manufactures, so far as it depends on the statements of the early Spanish writers is very slight, and may be expressed in few words; especially as most of these arts seem to have been very nearly identical with those of the Nahuas [Mexicans], although many of them at the time of the conquest at least, were not carried to so high a grade of perfection as in the

"Some branches of mechanical art have indeed left material relics which, examined in modern times, have extended our knowledge on the subject very far beyond what may be gleaned from sixteenth century observations."-Ibid, p. 748.

Bancroft notes the poverty of Spanish writers when he says: "The Spanish authors say little or nothing of the sculpture of either idols or archituctural decorations, except that it was elaborate and often demon-like; but their observations on the subject would have had but little value, even had they been more extended, and fortunately architectural remains are sufficiently numerous and complete, at least in Yucatan, Honduras, and Chiapas, to supply information, that if not entirely satisfactory, is far more so than what we possess respecting other branches of Maya Brasseur de Bourborg speaks of vases exquisitely worked from alabaster and agate in Yucatan. There is some authority for this in modern discoveries, but little or none, so far as I know, in the writings of the conquerors."-Ibid, p. 751.

From the old writings Bancroft concludes: "A full resume of the principles of Maya architecture, gathered from observations of ruins made by modern travelers, will be given in another part of this work. I shall therefore, without regard to the inevitable scantiness and unsatisfactory nature of such information, confine myself in this chapter to the descriptions furnished by the old writers. The accounts given of the dwellings of the Mayas are very meager. The early voyagers on the coast of Yucatan, such as Grijalva and Cordova, saw well built houses of stone and lime, with sloping roofs thatched with straw and reeds; or in some instances with slates of stone; but this is all they tell us, and indeed they had little opportunity of close examination."-Ibid, p. 785.

Of the intrinsic value of the material relics Bancroft says: "Besides constituting the only tangible supports of the more ancient triumphs of American civilization, they are the best illustrations of comparatively modern stages of art whose products have disappeared, and by no means superfluous of Spanish chroniclers in later times, very many, or perhaps most of whose statements respecting the wonderful phenomena of the New Word culture, as I have remarked in a previous volume, without this incontrovertible proof, would find few believers among the sceptical students of the present day."- Native

BY ELDER R. C. EVANS.

I will introduce my argument by a few readings with respect to the laws governing the interpretation of words: Mr. William Blackstone says, "The words of a law are generally to be understood in their usual and most known signification, not so much regarding the propriety of grammar as their general and popular use; but when words bear either none, or a very absurd signification, if literally understood, we must a little deviate from the received sense of them."

The English Pirie says: "Law required words and phrases of the most ascertained and unequivocal sense." Words are the vehicles of thought, the signs of ideas, and the expressions of doctrine; hence the more accurately we learn the meaning of a word the better will we understand the doctrine which that word is employed to express.

Dr. Benson says: "What can be more absurd than to imagine that the doctrines or rules of practice, which relate to men's everlasting salvation, should be delivered in such ambiguous terms as to be capable of many meanings."

Now all Biblical scholars, we think, will admit that the Greek word, "Baptizo" occurs in Christ's commission to the apostles. Let us go to the Lexicons, Encyclopedias, and church historians, to find out the meaning of that much-controverted and protoundly important word. It is claimed by learned men that the word "Baptizo" occurs some seventy-two times in the New Testament: William Greenfield (N. Y. Lex.) defines "Baptizo (from bapto) to immerse, submerge, sink; in N. Y. to wash, perform ablution, cleanse; to immerse, baptize, administer the rite of baptism."
Thomas Sheldon Green (N. Y. Lex.)

defines, "Baptizo properly to dip, immerse, to cleanse or purify by washing; to administer the rite of baptism, to baptize."

John Pickering gives the following meanings: "Baptizo: to dip, immerse, submerge, plunge, sink; in N. Y. to wash, perform ablution, cleanse, baptize; also to overwhelm one with anything, to be prodigal towards one."

John Groves, (classic and N. Y. Lex. defines, "Baptizo (from bapto, to dip,) dip, immerse, immerge plunge, to wash, to cleanse, to purify, to baptize, depress, humble, overwhelm."

Edward Robinson (N. Y. Lex.) defines Baptizo to dip, to sink, to immerse; to dip in a vessel, to draw water; in N. Y. to wash, to lave, to cleanse by washing, to baptize, to administer the rite of baptism: pass and mid, to be baptized, or to cause one's self to be baptized; to baptize with calamities, to overwhelm with suffering.

James Donnegan (classical Lex.) defines "Baptizo to immerse repeatedly into a liquid; to submerge—to soak thoroughly, to saturate; hence to drench with wine; met, to confound totally—to dip in a vessel and Cornelius Schrevilious, Greek Latin and Latin-Greek Lexicon, defines Baptizo, "Baptizo, mirgo, abluo, lavo; in English to baptize, to dip, to wash, to bathe.

Henry George Liddle, Dean of Christ's Church, and Robert Scott, Master of Balliol, Oxford, two distinguished English scholars, in their lexicon defines "Baptizo; to dip repeatedly, of ships to sink them, to baptize.'

Calvin, in his Institutes, says: "The word Baptizo [Baptize] signifies to immerse, and the rite of immersion was performed by the ancient church."

Luther: "Baptism is a Greek word, and may be translated immersion, and when we immerse something in water, that it may be wholy covered."-Op. 1, p. 336.

Bass, in his Lexicon for the New Testament, says: "Baptizo to dip, immerse, plunge in water; to bathe one's self; to be immersed in suffering or affliction.

Stourtza, a native Greek, in a work published in 1816, says: "Baptizo has but one signification; it signifies, literally and invariably, to plunge.

The learned Dr. Conant, when he was asked the question, "Does any respectable lexicon define Baptizo to sprinkle," replied: "My dear brother, no respectable lexicographer gives or ever has given 'sprinkle,' or 'besprinkle' as a definition of baptizo. I have all the Greek lexicons of any name." This is the testimony of one of the greatest scholars of our time. (Dr. Conant to Mr. Harding; see Harding-Wilkinson Debate, p. 42.)

Dr. Charles Anthon, Professor of languages in Columbia College, New York, in a letter to Dr. E. Parmly, March 27th, 1843, says: "The primary meaning of the word [baptizo] is to dip or immerse; and its secondary meanings, if it ever had any, all refer in some way or other to the same leading idea. Sprinkling, etc., are entirely out of the question."-Fuller on Baptism,

Now, reader, your Bible informs you that Christ commanded his apostles to baptize. They wrote in Greek; the Spirit told them what to write; it brought to their rememberance what the Savior told them, and when they wrote what Jesus said to them about baptism they used the word 'Baptizo.'" I have presented for your consideration just what the lexicons. say on the subject. All say that Christian baptism, or the word baptize, is taken from the Greek word baptizo, and means immersion. Permit me to say that all lexicographers of any note are agreed that The passages baptizo means immersion. which refer to immersion are so numerous in the Bible, and the Fathers, church historians and enclycopedias, that it would take a large volume to recite them. This is the testimony of the first scholars of England and America.

In concluding this part of the subject permit me to say that from the foregoing statements I think the point is fairly settled; 1, that Christ was immersed. that John and the apostles taught and practiced immersion. 3, that we have no authority from God, Christ, the apostles, nor the early Fathers to substitute sprinkling or pouring for immersion.

For the benefit of some who wish to know just when sprinkling and pouring were first practiced instead of immersion, we submit the following: Dr. Wall says, in speaking of the first case of affusion: "The most ancient of which is that of Novation, who [A. D. 251] while lying in bed from sickness received what they called clinic baptism. This is the most ancient case on record."

Eusebius, "The Father of Church Historians," relates how aspersion, or sprinkling water upon the individual was applied as baptism, in the case of Novatus, about A. D. 263. He says of him: "Who aided by the exorcists, when attacked with an obstinate disease and being supposed at the point of death, was baptized by aspersion in the bed on which he lay, if indeed it be proper to say that one like him did receive baptism. But neither when he recovered from disease did he partake of other things which the rule of the church prescribes as duty, nor was he sealed [in confirmation] by the Bishop. did not obtain this, how could he obtain the Holy Spirit?"-Eccles. Hist. p. 266.

Dyonisus says: "We justly cherish an aversion to the Novation, by whom the church is split asunder, and some of the brethren have been drawn into impiety and blasphemy, and most nefarious doctrine has been introduced respecting God; and our most gracious Lord and Savior, Christ, has been calumniated as devoid of compassion: which also, beside all this, sets aside the holy baptism and overturns the faith and confession that precede it."-Euseb. Eccles. Hist., p. 276.

From the above we learn that to substitute sprinkling in place of the true mode, immersion, we "set aside the holy bap-Bingham in his Antiquities says: "Baptism was administered by immersion, and no mention of any other mode till the middle of the third century."

Bishop Smith, of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Kentucky says: "We have only to go back six or eight hundred years and immersion was the only mode except in the case of the few baptized on their beds when death was near; and with regard to such cases, it disqualified its recipient for holy orders in case he recovered. Immersion was not only universal six or eight hundred years ago, but was primitive and apostolic, no case of baptism standing on record by any other mode for the first three hundred years, except the few cases of those baptized clinically, that is, lying in bed. If any one practice of the early church is clearly established, it is immersion."—Bliss' Letters on Bap., p. 24. Venema: "It is without controversy, that baptism in the primitive church, was administered by immersion into water, and not by sprinkling. The essential act of baptism in the second century consisted, not in sprinkling, but in immersion in water, in the name of each person in the trinity. Concerning immersion the words and phrases that are used sufficiently testify; and that it was performed in a river, a pool, or a fountain. To the essential rite of baptism in the third century pertained immersion, and not aspersion, except in case of necessity; and it was accounted a half perfect baptism. Immersion, in the fourth century, was one of those acts that were considered as essential to baptism; nevertheless, aspersion was used in the last moments of life, on such as were called clinics-and also, where there was not a sufficient quantity of water."-Hist.

Eccles. Sec. 1, p. 138, etc. The monks of Cressy, A. D. 754, inquired:-"Is it lawful in case of necessity, occasioned by sickness, to baptize an infant by pouring water on its head, from a cup or the hands?" To which Pope Stephen, the third, replied: "Such a baptism, performed in such a case of necessity, shall be accounted valid."—Apud, Labbei Concilia, Tom. 6, p. 1650.

In speaking of the foregoing, Basnage says: "This is accounted the first law against immersion. The Pontiff, however, did not dispense with immersion, except in case of extreme necessity. This law, therefore, did not change the mode of dipping, in public baptisms; and it was not until the legislature in a council at Ravenna, in the year 1311, declared immersion and pouring indifferent."-Monumenta, Vol. 1, in Robinson's Hist. of Bap., ch. 33. F. Brenner, a Roman Catholic writer, published a learned work which contains a copious history of usages in respect to the baptismal rite. He says: "Thirteen hundred years was baptism generally and ordinarily performed by the immersion of a man under water; and only in extraordinary cases was sprinkling or affusion permitted. These latter methods of baptism were called in question, and even prohibited."

Add to this one of the highest Roman Catholic authorities in the world, that of Mons. Bossuet, Bishop of Meauec, who was preceptor to one of the kings of France. Bossuet says: "In fine, we read not in the scriptures that baptism was otherwise administered; and we are able to make it appear by the acts of councils, and by the ancient rituals, that for thirteen hundred years baptism was thus (by immersion) administered throughout the whole church, as far as possible."-Stinnet's answer to Russen, p. 186.

Now hear what the best encyclopedias say on the matter:

Brand's: "Baptism was originally administered by immersion."

Americana: "Baptism, that is dipping, immersion, from the Greek word, baptizo."

Kitto's: "The whole person was immersed in water."

Edinburg: "Baptism; in the times of the apostles the act was very simple, the person was dipped in water."

Zell's Encyclopedia is very plain on the It says: "In the time of the apostles the form of baptism was very simple. The person to be baptized was dipped in a river or vessel, with the words which Christ had ordered, and to express more fully his change of character, generally adopted a new name. The Greek church retained the custom, but the Western church adopted, in the thirteenth century, the mode of baptism by sprinkling, which has been continued by the Protestants,—the baptists only excepted. The introduction of this mode of baptism was owing to the great inconvenience which arose from the immersion of the whole body, in the northern climate of Europe. The custom of sprinkling thrice in the administration of the rite spread with the diffusion of the doctrine of the Trinity."

The Schaff Herzog Encyclopedia says: "In the primitive church baptism was by immersion, except in the case of the sick, (clinic baptism), who were baptized by pouring or sprinkling. These latter were often regarded as not properly baptized, either because they had not completed their catechumenate, or the symbolism of the rite was not fully observed, or because of the small amount of water necessarily used. . . . The council of Ravenna (1311) was the first to allow a choice between sprinkling and immersion."

Enclyclopedia Britannica: "The usual mode of performing the ceremony was by immersion. In the case of sick persons [clinici] the minister was allowed to baptize by pouring water upon the head, or by sprinkling. In the early church clinical baptism, as it was called, was only permitted in case of necessity; but the practice of baptism by sprinkling gradually came in in spite of the opposition of councils and hostile decrees. The Council of Ravenna, in 1311, was the first council of the church which legalized baptism by sprinkling, by leaving it to the choice of the officiating minister.

Now read what two of England's greatest men have to say with reference to this subject. Mr. Leigh says: "The native and proper signification of Baptizo is to dip into water, or to plunge under water."

Bishop Horne, in his "Introduction to the Sacred Scriptures," says of Mr. Leigh: "He was one of the most learned men of his time, and most succeeding lexicographers of the Old and New Testaments have been greatly indebted to his 'Critica Sacria."

Of modern church historians the late Dean Stanley stands in the front rank. At one time he was Chaplain to Queen Victoria. He visited Russia and the east, and his history of the Eastern church is now the standard authority on that phase of the church question. He says: "There can be no question that the original form of baptism, and the very meaning of the word, was complete immersion in the deep baptismal waters, and that for at least six centuries any other form was little known or regarded, unless in the case of dangerous illness, an exceptional and almost monstrous case. To this form the Eastern church still rigidly adheres; and the most illustrious and venerable portion of it, that of the Byzantine Empire, absolutely repudiates and ignores any other mode of administration as essentially invalid."-History of Eastern Church, p. 117.

Reader, you see by the above that the Greek Church, the church which uses the language in which the New Testament was written, immerses to this very day; nor has it ever practiced anything else for baptism. This ought to be of great weight on this matter. We have, so far as time and opportunity and our ability will permit, searched the lexicons on this question, and all agree that baptizo means The Encyclopedias all testify to the same effect; the first and best ancient and modern church historians all agree that immersion was the only mode practiced by John, Christ, and the apostles and their immediate successors. Some of them have told us the very first case of sprinkling or affusion did not take place till two and a half centuries of the Christian era had passed away, and that immersion was the almost universal practice for the first 1300 years. Do you wish to follow Him who is known to the world as the "Lily of the Valley," "The One altogether lovely," "the Chief among ten thousand," "the bright and morning Star," "Jesus Christ?" If you do, go down into the watery grave with him. Do not permit unauthorized men to sprinkle water upon you and call it Christian baptism, but like the true follower of God go to where there is "much water." Do like those of other days, "Have your body washed with pure water," and not your forehead only. Like the Eunuch, get a true servant of God to go "down into the water" (Acts 8:35) and have him do like John the Baptist did with those he baptized — baptize you in the river. (Matt. 3: 16). Remember, the great God spake from the heavens, not only to send John to baptize (John 1:6, 33) but to say that He was "well pleased" at the baptism of Jesus. (Matt. 3: 16, 17). O, may all who read these pages see the light as God has revealed it, is the silent prayer of the writer. (To be continued.)

WE publish, by request, the following poem which will be of interest to those who are inquiring into the sentiments and work of Joseph the Seer:

A VISION

I will go, I will go, to the home of the Saints,
Where virtue is the value, and life the reward;
But before I return to my former estate
I must fulfill the mission I had from the Lord.

Wherefore, hear, O, ye heavens; and give ear, O, ye earth;

And rejoice ye inhabitants truly again;
For the Lord he is God, and his life never ends,
And besides him, there ne er was a Savior of men.

His ways are a wonder; his wisdom is great;
The extent of his doings, there's none can unveil;
His purposes fail not; for from age unto age
He still is the same, and his years never fail.

His throne is the heavens, his life-time is all Of eternity now, and eternity then; His union is power, and none stays his hand,—The Alpha, the Omega, forever: Amen.

For thus saith the Lord, in the Spirit of truth,
I am merciful, gracious, and good unto those
That fear me, and live for the life that's to come;
My delight is to honor the Saints with repose;

That serve me in righteousness true to the end; Eternal's their glory, and great their reward; I'll surely reveal all my myst ries to them,— The great hidden myst ries in my kingdom stor'd—

From the council in Kolob, to time on the earth.

And for ages to come unto them I will show
My pleasure and will, what my kingdom will do:
Eternity's wonders they truly shall know.

Great things of the future 1'll show unto them,
Yea, things of the vast generations to rise;
For their wisdom and glory shall be very great,
And their pure understanding extend to the skies:

And before them the wisdom of wise men shall cease,
And the nice understanding of prudent ones fail!
For the light of my Spirit shall light mine elect,
And the truth is so mighty 'twill ever prevail.

And the secrets and plans of my will I'll reveal;
The sanctified pleasures when earth is renew'd;
What the eye hath not seen, nor the ear hath yet heard,

Nor the heart of the natural man ever hath view'd.

I, Joseph, the prophet, in Spirit beheld,
And the eyes of the inner man truly did see,
Eternity sketch'd in a vision from God,
Of what was, and now is, and yet is to be.

Those things which the Father ordained of old, Before the world was, or a system had run,— Through Jesus the Maker and Savior of all; The only begotten, (Messiah) his son,

Of whom I bear record, as all prophets have, And the record I bear is the fulness,—yea even The truth of the gospel of Jesus—the Christ, With whom I convers'd in the vision of heav'n.

For while in the act of translating his word,
Which the Lord in his grace had appointed to me,
I came to the gospel recorded by John,
Chapter fifth and the twenty-ninth verse, which you'll see

Which was given as follows:

"Speaking of the resurrection of the dead,—
"Concerning those who shall hear the voice of the Son of Man—

"And shall come forth:—
"They who have done good in the resurrection of the

"And they who have done evil in the resurrection of the unjust."

I marvel'd at these resurrections, indeed!
For it came unto me by the Spirit direct:—
And while I did meditate what it all meant,
The Lord touched the eyes of my own intellect:

Hosanna forever! they open'd anon,
And the glory of God shone around where I was;
And there was the Son, at the Father's right hand,
In a fulness of glory, and holy applause.

I beheld round the throne, holy angels and hosts,
And sanctified beings from worlds that have been,
In holiness worshipping God and the Lamb,
Forever and ever, amen and amen!

And now after all of the proofs made of him,

By winesses truly, by whom he was known,
This is mine, last of all, that he lives; yea he lives!

And sits at the right hand of God, on his throne.

And I heard a great voice, bearing record from heav'n,
He's the Şavior, and only begotten of God—
By him, of him, and through him, the worlds were all made,

Even all that career in the heavens so broad,

Whose inhabitants, too, from the first to the last,
Are sav'd by the very same savior of ours;
And, of course, are begotten God's daughters and sons,
By the very same truths, and the very same pow'rs,

And I saw and bear record of warfare in heav'n;
For an angel of light, in authority great,
Rebell'd against Jesus, and sought for his pow'r,
But was thrust down to woe from his God-given state.

And the heavens all wept, and the tears drop'd like dew,

That Lucifer, son of the morning, had fell! Yea, is fallen! is fall'n, and become, Oh, alas! The Son of Perdition; the devil of hell!

And while I was yet in the Spirit of truth,

The commandment was: Write ye the vision all out;

For Satan, old serpent, the devil's for war,—And yet will encompass the Saints round about.

And I saw too, the suff'ring and mis'ry of those, (Overcome by the devil, in warfare and fight,)
In hell-fire, and vengeance, the doom of the damn'd;
For the Lord said, The vision is further: so write.

For thus saith the Lord, now concerning all those Who know of my power and partake of the same;
And suffer themselves, that they be overcome
By the power of Satan; despising my name:—

Defying my power, and denying the truth;—
They are they— of the world, or of men, most forlorn,

The Sons of Perdition, of whom, ah! I say,
'Twere better for them had they never been born!

They're vessels of wrath, and dishonor to God,
Doom'd to suffer his wrath, in the regions of woe,
Through the terrific night of eternity's round,
With the devil and all of his angels below:

Of whom it is said, no forgiveness is giv'n, In this world, alas! nor the world that's to come; For they have denied the good Spirit of God, After having receiv'd it: and mis'ry's their doom.

And denying the only begotten of God,—
To crucify him to themselves, as they do,
And openly put him to shame in the flesh,
By gospel they can not repentance renew.

They are they, who must go to the great lake of fire, Which burneth with brimstone, yet never consumes, And dwell with the devil, and angels of his, While eternity goes and eternity comes

They are they, who must groan through the great second death,

And are not redeemed in the time of the Lord; While all the rest are, through the triumph of Christ, Made partakers of grace, by the power of his word.

The myst'ry of Godliness truly is great;—
The past, and the present and what is to be;
And this is the gospel—glad tidings to all,
Which the voice from the heavens bore record to me.

That he came to the world in the middle of time,
To lay down his life for his friends and his foes,
And bear away sin as a mission of love;
And sanctify earth for a blessed repose.

'Tis decreed, that he'll save all the works of his hands,
And sanctify them by his own precious blood;
And purify earth for the Sabbath of rest,
By the agent of fire, as it was by the flood.

The Savior will save all his Father did give,
Even all that he gave in the regions abroad,
Save the Sons of Perdition: They're lost; ever lost,
And can never return to the presence of God.

They are they, who must reign with the devil in hell,
In eternity now, and eternity then,
Where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quench'd;—
And the punishment still, is eternal. Amen.

And which is the torment apostates receive,
But the end, or the place where the torment began,
Save to them who are made to partake of the same,
Was never, nor will be, revealed unto man.

Yet God shows by vision a glimpse of their fate,
And straightway he closes the scene that was shown:

So the width, or the depth, or the misery thereof, Save to those that partake, is forever unknown.

And while I was pondering, the vision was closed;
And the voice said to me, Write the vision: for lo1
'Tis the end of the scene of the sufferings of those,
Who remain filthy still in their anguish and woe.

And again I bear record of heavenly things,
Where virtue's the value, above all that's pric'd—
Of the truth of the gospel concerning the just,
That rise in the first resurrection of Christ,

Who receiv'd and believ'd, and repented likewise, And then were baptiz'd, as a man always was, Who ask'd and receiv'd a remission of sin, And honored the kingdom by keeping its laws.

Being buried in water, as Jesus had been,
And keeping the whole of his holy commands,
They received the gift of the Spirit of truth,
By the ordinance truly of laying on hands.

For these overcome, by their faith and their works,
Being tried in their life-time, as purified gold,
And seal'd by the Spirit of promise, to life,
By men called of God, as was Aaron of old.

They are they, of the Church of the First Born of God,—

And unto whose hands he committeth all things;
For they hold the keys of the kingdom of heav'n,
And reign with the Savior, as priests, and as kings.

They're priests of the order of Melchisedek,
Like Jesus. (from whom is this highest reward,) Receiving a fulness of glory and light;
As written: They're Gods; even sons of the Lord.

So all things are theirs; yea, of life, or of death;
Yea, whether things now, or to come, all are theirs,
And they are the Savior's, and he is the Lord's,
Having overcome all, as eternity's heirs.

Tis wisdom that man never glory in man,
But give God the glory for all that he hath;
For the righteous will walk in the presence of God,
While the wicked are trod under foot in his wrath.

Yea, the righteous shall dwell in the presence of God,
And of Jesus, forever, from earth's second birth—
For when he comes down in the splendor of heav'n,
All these he'll bring with him, to reign on the earth.

These are they that arise in their bodies of flesh,

When the trump of the first resurrection shall sound:

These are they that come up to Mount Zion, in life, Where the blessings and gifts of the Spirit abound.

These are they that have come to the heavenly place;
To the numberless courses of angels above:
To the city of God; e'en the holiest of all,
And the home of the blessed, the fountain of love:

To the Church of old Enoch, and of the First Born:
And gen'ral assembly of ancient renown'd,
Whose names are all kept in the archives of heav'n,
As chosen and faithful, and fit to be crown'd

These are they that are perfect through Jesus' own blood.

Whose bodies celestial are mention'd by Paul, Where the sun is the typical glory thereof, And God, and his Christ, are the true judge of all.

Again; I beheld the terrestrial world,
In the order and glory of Jesus, go on;
'Twas not as the Church of the First Born of God,
But shone in its place, as the moon to the sun.

Behold, these are they that have died without law; The heathen of ages that never had hope, And those of the region and shadow of death, The spirits in prison, that light has brought up.

To spirits in prison the Savior once preach'd,
And taught them the gospel. with powers afresh;
And then were the living baptiz'd for their dead,
That they might be judg'd as if men in the fiesh.

These are they that are hon'rable men of the earth;
Who were blinded and dup'd by the cunning of men;

They receiv'd not the truth of the Savior at first; But did, when they heard it in prison, again.

Not valiant for truth, they obtain'd not the crown,
But are of that glory that's typ'd by the moon:
They are they, that come into the presence of Christ,
But not to the fulness of God, on his throne.

Again I beheld the telestial, as third,
The lesser, or starry world, next in its place,
For the leaven must leaven three measures of meal,
And every knee bow that is subject to grace.

These are they that received not the gospel of Christ, Or evidence, either, that he ever was; As the stars are all diff'rent in glory and light, So differs the glory of these by the laws.

These are they that deny not the Spirit of God,
But are thrust down to hell, with the devil, for sins,
As hypocrites, liars, whoremongers and thieves,
And stay 'till the last resurrection begins.

'Till the Lamb shall have finish'd the work he begun;
Shall have trodden the wine press, in fury alone,
And overcome all by the pow'r of his might:
He conquers to conquer, and save all his own,

These are they that receive not a fulness of light
From Christ, in eternity's world, where they are,
The terrestrial sends them the Comforter, though;
And minist'ring angels, to happify there.

And so the telestial is minister'd to,

By ministers from the terrestrial one,
As terrestrial is, from the celestial throne;

And the great, greater, greatest, seems stars, moon, and sun.

And thus I beheld, in the vision of heav'n,
The telestial glory, dominion and bliss,
Surpassing the great understanding of men,—
Unknown, save reveal'd, in a world vain as this.

And lo, I beheld the terrestrial, too,
Which excels the telestial in glory and light,
In splendor, and knowledge, and wisdom, and joy,
In blessings, and graces, dominion and might.

I beheld the celestial, in glory sublime; Which is the most excellent kingdom that is,— Where God, e'en the Father, in harmony reigns; Almighty, supreme, and eternal, in bliss.

Where the Church of the First Born in union reside, And they see as they're seen, and they know as they're known:

they're known;
Being equal in power, dominion and might,
With a fulness of glory and grace, round his throne.

The glory celestial is one like the sun;
The glory terrestr'al is one like the moon;
The glory telestial is one like the stars,
And all harmonize like the parts of a tune.

As the stars are all different in lustre and size, So the telestial region, is mingled in bliss; From least unto greatest, and greatest to least, The reward is exactly as promis'd in this

These are they that came out for Apollos and Paul;
For Cephas and Jesus, in all kinds of hope;
For Enoch and Moses, and Peter, and John;
For Luther and Calvin, and even the Pope.

For they never received the gospel of Christ,
Nor the prophetic spirit that came from the Lord;
Nor the covenant neither, which Jacob once had;
They went their own way, and they have their reward.

By the order of God, last of all, these are they,
That will not be gather'd with Saints here below,
To be eaught up to Jesus, and meet in the cloud:—
In darkness they worshipp'd; to darkness they go.

These are they that are sinful, the wicked at large,
That glutted their passion by meanness or worth;
All liars, adulterers, sore'rers, and proud;
And suffer, as promis'd, God's wrath on the earth.

These are they that must suffer the vengeance of hell, 'Till Christ shall have trodden all enemies down, And perfected his work, in the fulness of times;

And is crown'd on his throne with his glorious crown.

The vast multitude of the telestial world—
As the stars of the skies, or the sands of the sea;—
The voice of Jehovah echo'd far and wide,
"Ev'ry tongue shall confess, and they all bow the knee.

Ev'ry man shall be judg'd by the works of his life, And receive a reward in the mansions prepar'd; For his judgments are just, and his works never end, As his prophets and servants have always declar'd"

But the great things of God, which he show'd unto me, Unlawful to utter, I dare not declare; They surpass all the wisdom and greatness of men, And only are seen, as has Paul, where they are

I will go, I will go, while the secret of life,
Is blooming in heaven, and blasting in hell;
Is leaving on earth, and a budding in space:—
I will go, I will go with you brother, farewell.

DIED.

SEVILLE. - Sister Elizabeth Seville, born in North Wales, A. D. 1812, aged 77 years, died of paralysis, September 3d, 1889 Interred at Stafford cemetery, England. Sr. Seville's loss will be felt among the Saints, and her family have lost a mother and an exemplar.

BROWN .-- Harriet H. Brown, of Gladwin, Michigan, died September 2d, 1889, of typhoid fever. Sr. Brown was born June 9th, 1842, and was baptized by J. J. Cornish April 2d, 1888. She lived up to the faith of the gospel until death, and urged her husband (who was also baptized when she was) to live faithful to the cause; for she knew it was true and he must never depart from it; if he did there was nothing else to take its place. She also urged upon her husband to bring up their sons in this true faith. She heard beautiful music and singing before her death. "Death was sweet unto her." Funeral sermon by Elder J. J. Cornish.

ELVIN.—At Kearney, Nebraska, September 20th, 1889, at 8: 30 p. m., of intermittent fever, Augustus Walter, youngest son of Dr. R. C. and Sr. Martha Elvin. The deceased was born in Sr. Martha Elvin. The deceased was born in Nebraska City, Nebraska, April 9th, 1864, and was baptized at the same place November 1st, 1875, by Elder Mark H Forscutt. Shortly after uniting with the church he had a most wonderful vision and testimony by the Holy Spirit.

During the last few years he had devoted his time and energy to business to the neglect of church duties. His sojourn in mortality was 24 years, 5 months and 11 days. On January 31st, 1889, he was married to Miss Mary Harris, of Laramie, Wyoming. The funeral service was conducted at the Brunswick Hotel, Kearney, Nebraska, September 22d, by Bishop Oliver, of the Episcopal church, from Job 19:26. A wife, father, mother, two brothers and two sisters, with many other relatives mourn this sudden departure. He is now awaiting the judgment of a just, merciful, all-wise God.

Brown.-At his home in Washington county, Nebraska, October 8th, 1889, of kidney trouble, Bro. James Brown. He was born in Canada, February 24th, 1820, and was baptized in Washington county, Nebraska, in 1871 by Elder Geo. Hatt. He was one of God's noble sons, and his life was a living witness for the latter day work from the time of his baptism until his death. He was highly respected by the whole community where he has lived for about thirty years, and where he many times bore his testimony to the truth. He passed away surrounded by his large family consisting of a wife, three sons and six daughters, with their families. The last words he was heard to say to his weeping wife, were, "Don't fret; it is all right." He thus kept the faith, and his rest, therefore, is glorious. Funeral services from the house, conducted by Elder W. M. Rumel before a large assembly. The feeling among them was that a good man had gone.

IOWA'S EXPERIMENT.

Does prohibition prohibit? How is it in lowa? In 1882, the same year that the people voted on the liquor traffic, to be defeated by a technical error and a judge on the bench, the counties of Iowa expended for criminal prosecutions $401,431,18. In 1883 this expense ran down to $361,173,-78. In 1884 there was an increase. In 1885 and 1886 when the saloons defied the law there was also an increase, amounting in the last year to $421,024.31. But in 1887, the year after the enforcement law was passed, these expenses were reduced to $282,877.66, and in ten months of 1888

In 1882 there were 188 convictions for assault, 18 for breaking and entering, 78 for burglary, 30 for forgery, 14 for gambling, 41 for keeping a gambling-house, 215 for larceny, 14 for murder, 1 for manslaughter, 658 for keeping a nuisance, 25 for unlawfully selling intoxicants; a total of 1282. In 1888 there were 94 convictions for assault, 13 for breaking and entering, 47 for burglary, 13 for forgery, 13 for gambling, 42 for keeping a gambling-house, 148 for larceny, 9 for murder, 6 for manslaughter, 190 for keeping a nuisance, 59 for selling intoxicating liquors; a total of 634, less than half the number of convictions occurring in 1882.

The monthly average of prisoners in the two prisons, Fort Madison and Anamosa, was in 1886, 696; in 1887, 667, and in 1888, 607. At the end of the fiscal year, September 30th, 1888, there were in both prisons 535 prisoners. Iowa has thus the smallest percentage of convicts of any other state, except Vermont. Forty-one Judges of District and Superior Courts in Iowa, were interrogated by Governor Larrabee as to the expediency of repealing the prohibitory law. Four of these favored repeal, nine declined to commit themselves, but twenty-eight replied that in their judgment the law ought to remain.

Mr. Johnson Brigham, in an article in the Century for October, 1889, quotes from the pamphlet in which these replies of these judges are published, as follows:

"Judge Traverse, Bloomfield: 'My experience is that, whenever saloons are closed, crime is diminished."

"Judge Harvey, Leon: 'It has reduced crime at least one-half, and the criminal expenses in like ratio."

Judge Harvey is our own good judge in Decatur county; and his statement agrees with the answer made by Judge Henry, of Mt. Ayr, Ringgold county, to our inquiry as to what effect the law was having on the work of the courts on account of criminal prosecutions. He said: "I should think fully one half. Indeed, I may say that all, or very nearly all that class of crimes arising from the sale and use of liquors has about ceased."

"Judge Lewis, Sioux City: 'The law is as well enforced as any other, and has decreased criminal expenses at least two-thirds."

"Judge Deemer, Red Oak: 'In many of the counties the jail is getting to be almost an unnecessary building, and in the last three counties I visited there was not an occupant."

"Judge Carson, Council Bluffs: 'When in the Senate I favored local option, but I am now satisfied the statute should stand."

"Judge Thornell, Sidey: 'I should regard its repeal as a calamity."

"Judge Bank, Keokuk: 'This was the first and only term in my recollection that there was no criminal business transacted in court."

"Judge Wilson, Creston: 'I was not in favor of the law, thinking that high license would work better. I have carefully watched its workings and am convinced that I was wrong."

"Judge Wakefield, Sioux City: 'As the saloons were driven out, other business came into occupy the vacant places."

"Judge Wilkinson, Winterset: 'Crime and criminal expenses have been lessened.'"

"Judge Johnson, Oskaloosa: 'The effect of the prohibitory law has been to reduce very materially crime and criminal expenses in this district."

"Judge Kavanaugh, Des Moines: 'It has decreased crime over fifty per cent. and added largely to individual happiness."

"Judge Granger, Waukon, (now of the Supreme Bench): 'The closing of the front door of the saloon, whereby it is destroyed as a place of resort, has canceled nine-tenths of the drunkenness. . . . Our grand juries have comparatively nothing to do. . . . Our criminal expenses since the closing of the saloons have been comparatively nominal."

Of the ability of the state to live without the business of the saloon, and as a reply to the statement that "prohibition has killed Iowa," Mr. Brigham says:

"The census of 1880 gave our state a population of 1,624,615. The state census of 1885 put the population at 1,753,980—an increase of 129,365. The fact that there has been a decided increase in population since the last census (in 1885) is shown by comparison of the vote of 1884 with that of 1888. The total vote of Iowa in 1884 was 377,153, while that of 1888 was 404,-130; an increase of 26,977—an estimated increase of 134,885 in four years."

"Iowa years ago won, and has never since lost, the honor of having less illiteracy in proportion to population than any other state in the Union. But note the educational progress she has made during these six years of prohibition. In 1883, there were 11,789 school-houses in Iowa; in 1884, 11,975; in 1885, 12.285; in 1886, 12,444. The value of these school-houses I 2,444. was, in 1883, $10,473,147; in 1886, $11,-360,472. State Superintendent Sabin's report to the last Iowa Legislature begins thus: 'It is gratifying to be able to report a most satisfactory and prosperous condition of education throughout the state. The past two years have been years of increased interest, activity and growth.... The number of school-houses has been increased by about 500, and their aggregate value by more than $550,000. The number of teachers is increased by about 500, while our school population is 10,000 greater than the same as reported two years ago."

"Another index of Iowa's increasing prosperity, is the showing made by our savings banks. The reports made to our Auditor of State show that the 'total assets and liabilities' of Iowa's Savings-Banks were, in 1883, $8,419,739 83; in 1885, $9,618,866.97; in 1887, $12,666,347.72. Auditor Lyons informs me that on June 30, 1888, the total assets, etc., of the Savings-Banks had increased to $14,625,024.-84. These figures show that since the adoption of prohibition the resources of these depositories of the poor man's surplus earnings have increased over six millions dollars, or over 73 per cent."

We have gathered the above items concerning the experiment of prohibition in Iowa from Mr. Brigham's article, in the October Century; and from the showing it would seem as if the good State of Iowa could stand some more killing of the same sort. The statement of one judge that on his last judicial visit the jails of three counties had not an occupant, is an argument not to be set aside. The statement of another that the closing of the saloon as a place of resort "cancelled nine-tenths of the drunkenness" in his district; agrees with the statement of Sir Garnet Wolesley, commandant British Arms, that "nine-ty per cent. of the crime in the British army was traceable directly or indirectly to the use of intoxicants," and speaks loudly in favor of continuing the experiment in Iowa.

Judge Banks' statement that his last term of court was the first and only term in his experience when the court had not had criminal business to transact, is another argument pertinent to the issue.

Somehow it does seem that prohibition does prohibit some things in Iowa.

THE Semi-Weekly Chicago Inter Ocean of October 10th makes lengthy editorial comments on Pres. Smith's article, "Ways that are doubtful;" which, as previously stated, was sent to many leading newspapers for the information of the public. It is scarcely necessary to state that the article and the comments made upon it will doubtless accomplish great good. Here is the article:

ANTI-POLYGAMOUS MORMONS.

In an elaborate, argumentative article Joseph Smith discusses the chapter on plural marriage furnished by Franklin D. Richards to a work entitled "What the World Believes, the False and the True." It is hardly necessary to state that the son of the prophet brushes away the downy bloom that makes the theory of polygamy attractive, and introduces the very broad insinuation that the alleged revelation made to the prophet was devised to suit the purposes of the church after the tragic death of the Nauvoo father of Mormonism. The work referred to sets forth in rosy colors, but in strangely contradictory terms the benefits and beauties of the system. According to the present professions of the Mormon Church, God revealed to Joseph Smith, July 12th, 1843, "the principle and doctrine of men of God having more wives than one, imposing it upon the church and commanding its observance." Nevertheless, "in consequence of the prevailing prejudice and opposition to this doctrine, it was not considered prudent to make it public at the time," and so the heavenly mandate was disregarded and not promulgated by the church until August 12th, 1852, when Joseph Smith had been dead eight

The son points out the singular inconsistency between the prudence of the church in concealing and the indiscretion of the Lord in making the revelation in a time when it was inadvisable to put the doctrine into practice. Mr. Richards states, however, that a special few of the elect did take unto themselves more wives than one, though the matter was conducted with great secrecy, the fact not becoming generally known until the flight from Nauvoo made "everybody acquainted with his neighbor's affairs." Concealment of polygamous practices being no longer possible, it became necessary for the church to give sanction to the conduct of its representatives, and accordingly "the revelation was made public both to the Saints and the world."

Mr. Smith intimates the opinion that this was a clever bit of charlatanism conceived and put in force by the church with no higher authority than its own peculiar will. The matter was presented to a conference, it is true, but there is no evidence to substantiate Mr. Richards' statement that the doctrine was accepted by vote, or that the "revelation" was ever submitted to the conference for consideration and acceptance. The only man who spoke to the subject was Elder Orson Pratt, who preached a set sermon in its support. That the whole thing was a palpable fraud perpetrated by Brigham Young and those privily in complicity with him is an inference no one can escape who looks at the situation with unprejudiced vision. But aside from the origin of the institution the vital consideration is as to the character and worthiness of the institution as it exists. Though the majority of Mormons do not practice polygamy, the minority is in control, and is, whether willingly or under religious pressure, aided and abetted by the majority. Moreover the church assumes that the conditions would not be altered were Utah made a State, because the giving of State powers to the majority would not alter the religious sentiment of that body, which is friendly to the doctrine of plural marriages. They could defeat the provisions of the constitution by neglecting to pass statutory enactments by which those provisions could be enforced." This is the assumed attitude of the church. It will defend its institution by force, fraud or persuasion as long as there is one defensible position left to it, notwithstanding the fact that the testimony is overwhelming that "he who takes polygamy into his household takes hell in with it."

It is interesting to find stated in brief Mr. Smith's view of the system. It sums up the facts and morals conclusively and repulsively enough. He says:

"The document alleged to be a revelation from God announces philosophy which is totally at variance with the facts of creation, the spiritual precepts and teachings of Christ and the New Testament Scriptures, the American idea and institution of the home and family relation, the positive declaration of God in the Book of Mormon, and the direct commandment of God to the church itself, which commandment was in force at the establishment of the church in 1830 and unrepealed at the death of Joseph Smith and since. Plural marriage was a doctrine "brought in privily," in "secret." Men of minds congenial to its tendencies found it convenient; they accepted it readily, or by its blandishments broke down and discarded the teaching already obtaining as the rule of faith and practice, and blundered headlong and blindly into it. When once enmeshed in its practice, policy dictated to them that others must be entrapped also. So, like a cancer on the social system, it spread wherever its roots found congenial soil, until the secrecy. of its introduction could no longer be kept; then with a flourish of prophecy on President B. Young's part, and an elaborate eulogy upon the philosophy delivered by Elder Orson Pratt, the "social revolution" was completed so far as Utah Mormons were concerned. What the harvest of such sowing shall be, remains to time and time's events to determine."

The Sandwich, Illinois, Argus of the 12th contains the following editorial note, followed by the above from the Inter-Ocean:

"We had intended to make copious extracts from the article of President Joseph Smith, but an article in the Inter-Ocean so fully covers the matter that we copy it entire."

We thank these manly editors for their good words; also all others who are interested in publishing to the world the simple and unvarnished truth concerning all matters of public interest. Journalists of the class who do so are wisely and properly filling their spheres as educators of the people.

EXPOSITION OF 1892.

FROM present indications the enterprise, grit, superior advantages and abundant contributions of Chicago and her innumerable friends and helpers are sure to locate "The World's Exposition of 1892" in or near that marvelous city.

Chicago has the territory, climate, water, railway facilities, hotel accommodations, progressive spirit and unyielding business audacity essential to the full success of such a great and important undertaking. And besides all that she tosses the "almighty dollar" into sight with such readiness and prodigality as to insure victory from the very start.

Chicago, more than any other city of either hemisphere, exhibits the wonderful possibilities of well-founded faith followed by corresponding works, and would constitute in her marvelous progress in a commercial and industrial way one of the best and most striking features of the entire Exposition.

It will be well in every material view that both the Old World and the New—the eastern and the western—be brought into immediate and constant contact with the best phases of our nation's masterful ambitions, and the latest and highest evidences of her unparalleled and widening progress; and for these and other reasons apparent to all, the Exposition of 1892 should be held in Chicago.

VAIN AND FOOLISH BOASTING.

A MEMBER lately sent us an account of a discussion held at a certain place between a representative of our faith and one of another religious society, in which he exultingly recites a boasting, slangy prediction which he made to a certain number of the people concerning the result.

If there is one thing that should be avoided as entirely foreign to the spirit and dignity of the work, it is a word or an act of that character. We are pained every time we hear of it, and always feel sad at the loss of prestige and the unfavorable impressions which result from such foolish and vain boasts. No one need think that he is properly representing the cause who indulges in such unwise doings, and such will learn, finally, at least, that he has only done harm to instead of assisting in establishing the church and its righteousness, which latter all should do. Only that which is of a meek and quiet spirit can accomplish or assist in accomplishing the Lord's work. It would be infinitely better to not attempt anything in behalf of the truth than to use carnal or mere human methods in our efforts. The Lord does not use such means, and He will not accept the use of any that are not in harmony with Him. Be careful, Saints, in all these things; be wise servants and harmless as doves.

Our readers will be both amused and instructed with the following article, especially with its caption. If no one has authority and power to revive and teach "the Apostolic theology," has any one authority to teach any other "theology" professedly from God? Paul the Apostle said, "Though we or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed;" and John the Apostle said, "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any among you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, [as a representative of Christ's doctrine. ED., neither bid him God speed. For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds." These things being true, the "Apostolic Theology" is the only safe and authorized kind to be "revived" and taught.

CAN THE APOSTOLIC THEOLOGY BE REVIVED?

Dr. George MacDonald, in the new series of his "Unspoken Sermons," breaks out passionately against the notions of vicarious punishment and imputed righteousness. He uses freely such terms as "horrid phantasm," "merest, poorest, most shameful fiction," "low invention," "spiritual charlatanry," "grotesquely deformed absurdity," "tirade of vulgar Roman legality," "a miserable, puritanical martinet of a God." We have always thought that Dr. MacDonald had not a particle of logical power: we had always believed him an humble worshiper of Jesus Christ, in Whom is no shibboleth. He imagines the doctrines so described by him to lie at the root of much the greater part of Christianity in the country: others, however, hold them to be completely dead. Some time ago the writer listened to a conversation, in which one of the speakers described the ministry under which he had been brought up. "He was always preaching to us about justification, the law, imputed righteousness, the covenants, and things you never hear about now." As we heard him, and watched him smile at the thought of the better day which had come, we were strangely reminded of a story of good Bishop Berkeley's tar-water. In his last days the philosopher discovered that tar-water was a soverign cure for every ill. He wrote a book ("Siris") explaining how it was to be made, with a long list of cures, which came speedily to a second edition, and made a mighty sensation. "A man came into an apothecary's shop the other day," says Horace Walpole in 1774. "'Do you sell tar-water?' 'Tar-water!' replied the apothecary. 'Why I sell nothing else." Great Britain and Ireland for a time did little but swallow the hateful draught. Its vogue, however, soon ended; (and here is our story) an old lady was living and enjoying life a dozen years ago who could tell from experience the miseries of a houseful of Irish children who were condemned to begin life daily with a cupful of tar-water! In such fashion did our companion talk of his early pangs in having administered to him in childhood copious provisions of nauseous old doctrine, now thought good enough for no one.

On reflection it seemed as if there were reason in what he said; for, when we think of it, we very seldom hear apostolic theology preached in these days. From those who have got past the Apostles it were unreasonable to expect it. But even those who do homage to their authority rarely grapple with their centre thoughts. They prefer to preach on the Gospels, and we have sermons in which fragments of Scripture text are made to swim in an ocean of nutritious comment. The easier parts of the Epistles, like the eleventh chapter of the Hebrews, are nibbled at like little bits of green herbage on smitten and barren crags, and discussions on what were once considered the grand characteristic doctrines of Christianity are looked on as archaic.

But if Christianity be what our Lord delivered to the Apostles and the Apostles delivered to the Church, this can not be right. We shall look to the Epistles rather than to the Gospels for the last word of Revelation. And we shall find that claim urged by the writers. They take the death of Christ as told in the Gospels, and left without full explanation, and make it their theme. They connect it with God and man, and the world of unknown evil powers. They do not profess to make things simple, for life is strange and complex, and an easy religion is self-condemned. But they go deep: they evade no difficulty; they grapple with the awful problem of reconciliation, and show how it is solved in the solemn Cross. Up to comparatively recent years the burden of pulpit teaching was the thought of Atonement fashioned by them, as they believed, under the teaching of the Holy Spirit. The profoundest natures, rejecting slighter healing, found rest in theirs. "I do prefer this book" (Luther on the Galatians), said John Bunyan, "to any, for a wounded conscience." Whence, then, the change that seems to have come over Christian minds?

Is it that the phrases are dead because they have been used as strictures for the mind, as clamps for creeds and confessions, because those who have preached them have been too indolent to find the fresh interpretation and setting every new generation demands? We believe there is much in this.

Has the real thought of the apostles been truly given by orthodox theologians? The question is a fair one, and we were never in a better position to discuss it than now, when exegesis has been so far pursued, and its results have been digested in systems of Biblical theology.

Is it because the apostles make too much of the Old Testament—that their writings resemble it in being too dim with the smoke of sacrifice? Let it be remembered that Christianity is for all nations and tribes and for all ages. Its great victories have yet to be won. It is not yet two thousand years old. Ere the end Wisdom will be justified of her children.

Is their theology false? Better understand it before saying so. If it does run contrary to shallow streams of thought, it may be in harmony with the deep eternal currents. What was the truth of truths to St. Paul can hardly strike at the root of moral life in man. It may be the very word needed for the Jerusalem that now is, and is in bondage with her children; the very message to make her more of a life-giving, supernatural force among men. Dr. MacDonald may find it easy to sneer at theologians, but somehow it is not easy to talk down to St. Paul. Though he did write the Epistle to the Romans, it is hard to deny that he had the mind of Christ. As we think of him from the hour when at Christ's call he rose and stood on his feet, to that other hour when, an old man, he was led along the Ostian Way to die, the heart swells. It is worth while, even in the midst of modern enlightenment, to understand this man's thought of Christ and his cross.

We shall endeavor from time to time to explain in the language of to-day what we conceive to be the apostolic meaning in such phrases as are quoted above. We shall ask whether the true thoughts and discoveries of men in our day—even of those who reject Christianity—do not confirm them. Expressions alter, systems of thought change, but the heart of God and the heart of man remain, and with them the essence of theology.—British Weekly.

CRISPI ON THE POPE'S TEMPO-RAL POWER.

Rome, October 15th.—A banquet was given to Prime Minister Crispi at Palermo last night. Forty-nine senators and one hundred and forty members of the chamber of deputies were present. Sig. Crispi delivered an address. He touched upon the reforms necessary in the educational system and promised measures for the relief of the poor. He declared that it was necessary to combat all persons, high or low, who were seeking to undermine the political edifice of Italy. The temporal power of the pope, although it has existed for centuries, has been only a transition period. Rome existed before it and would continue to exist without it.

The above concerning the views of the Italian Prime Minister regarding the Papacy indicates that the Italian Government does not intend to change its attitude toward the Roman Catholic Church. The fact that clerical connection with the public schools of Italy is forbidden shows clearly that the government has virtually said to the Catholic Church, "Hands off all civil affairs."

HOW TO SEND MONEY.

COMPLAINTS have reached us of late from several parties who have failed to receive acknowledgments from this office for money sent without registering their letters or securing post-office orders.

We again remind our readers that money sent otherwise than by post-office order, draft or registered letter is forwarded at the risk of the sender. The Herald Office does not hold itself responsible for money sent in an ordinary letter. Several parties have of late lost their remittances by neglecting the necessary precaution of registering their letters or securing government money-orders or drafts when remitting.

AUTUMN LEAVES FOR NOVEMBER.

THE November number of Autumn Leaves reaches us and is in our opinion one of the best numbers of that growing and interesting magazine which has yet been published. It is noticeable that most of the contributions are original and their merit of a high order. This clearly indicates that there is an abundance of talent possessed by Zion's children; also that once awakened and kept at work their contributions will be to the young, the middle aged and the old (for all who are progressive and who can obtain it will have Autumn Leaves) "meat in due season."

We can not enumerate the table of contents, but we pronounce "Liberty and her handmaid;" "Others with the church in an early day;" "Do noble things, not dream;" "With the church in an early day," and "The Gospel of Jesus Christ," as compositions of a class that will be appreciated by all who read them. They possess and reflect light and truth, and the true disciple everywhere receives and absorbs such, for they are in harmony with the perfect intelligence and infinite charac ter of God, and confirm and strengthen those who in trying to become like Him assimilate such spiritual food.

Let those who have the facts of the past relate them, and those who have true conceptions of the present and future write them for Autumn Leaves. Thus the young will be spiritually fed, and grow in faith and intellectuality as they mature in physical stature and growth.

We should profit by the things of the past, live by every word of the present, and thus become fitted for the wonderful developments and glory of the future.

EARLY AMERICAN CIVILIZATIONS.

In an address before the General Convention of the Episcopal Church by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Whipple of Minnesota, the following statement was made: "It was a singular providence that this continent laden with the bounty of God, was unoccupied by civilization for thousands of years.

It is passing strange that with all that has been published concerning the aboriginal civilizations of America that so little is known, even by many learned clergymen, of the early civilizations of America, the ruins and traces of which are so abundant, and of which so much has been written of late years. There is a time to come, and that time is not very far distant, when the knowledge of those things will be declared to all, together with the history of those civilizations which is written to the world in the Book of Mormon.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. H. R. Evans of Malad City, Idaho, wrote as follows, October 6th:

"Bro. Joseph is casting bread upon the waters. He is being heard, and what he says is having a thorough consideration. A large number of the people here are hanging on the trees like apples that are getting ripe very fast.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques .- Has a sister the right to prophesy in a Sisters' Prayer Union when the Spirit moves upon her, or must she quench the Spirit?

Ans.—If the meeting is not confined exclusively to prayer, but is free for testimony, then a person may exercise the gifts if the Spirit of God moves him or her. Wisdom and order should govern, and all confusion be avoided.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Independence, Missouri, Gazette comes to us now enlarged and remodelled and its forty columns closely packed with advertisements, editorials, news items, miscellany, etc., etc. It bids fair to keep pace with the progress of the times, and we most heartily wish its publishers, Luff & Co., good success in their enterprise.

In the letter department will be found a note from Sr. Kate Turner and a song of Zion which she sang in the gift of tongues and then interpreted at our late Reunion. Our readers will be interested in its peru-

Sr. Sadie McKenna, of New York City, New York, writes ordering tracts and Voice of Warning to distribute among her friends that they may learn the truths of heaven.

Bro. J. Avondet, of Omaha, Nebraska. writes renewing for the HERALD. It is a favorable indication when members of the church endeavor to keep fully posted concerning the work and its progress. him that hath not shall be taken away that which he seemeth to have." necessity for growth in the truth is here emphasized.

Bro. T. A. Hougas, of Henderson, Iowa, desires us to state that the word "vindicative" should appear instead of "vindictive" in the South-Western Iowa camp meeting minutes.

Bro. I. N. White wrote from Clinton, Missouri, October 15th: "I am now in a series of meetings near Knob Noster."

While the encouraging news of members being baptized at different places is being received, Lamoni desires to also give a good account of herself. Eleven have been baptized at this place during the last twenty days, and the Saints are being blessed with the Holy Spirit and encouraged by its voice.

The Constitution of the state of Minnesota provides that it is illegal to pay any money to a teacher who occupies any of the time of the school in teaching doctrines and the creeds of any particular religious sect,—all of which is sound, sensible and thoroughly American.

Sr. Rachael Griffith, of Vincennes, Iowa, in a late letter says: "I have taken the Herald for many years and can not do without it. It is meat and drink to the Saints who live away from the church."

Lamoni and the surrounding country rejoices in abundant crops, good health and beautiful weather. And the Saints in "the regions round about" have great cause for their joy, for the Lord is blessing them richly, spiritually and temporally. We have received the Los Angeles,

California, Times of Wednesday, October

16th, which contains a good notice of the branch at Los Angeles, of its religious belief and its place of worship.

MONEY WANTED.

THE Board of Publication has found it necessary to procure a new and much larger boiler for the Herald Office, and this with other expenses which must be met without delay demand that all who are in arrears for HERALD, Hope, books and other publications, should remit at once therefor; also that all-especially the ministry-should seek actively to procure new subscribers for the church papers and purchasers for church books and miscel-laneous publications. There should be no delay and no half-heartedness in these matters. A little time wisely devoted by all who can take it will be of great worth to the Board, enabling the office to pay its dues on maturity and aiding it in purchasing material at cheapest rates and getting the benefit of all discounts.

It should not be forgotten that the Publishing House and all its fixtures belong to the church, and that whatever success or failure there is connected therewith must and will affect the entire church. Those placed in charge are bound, for the general good, to make appeals when requisite for needed aid, and they do so now and urge all to help as best they can, and help immediately.

Send all moneys to D. Dancer, box 128, and send by Post-office Order, draft on Chicago, Express Order, or registered letter; but not by Postal Note, for such are but little if any better than bank bills or coin in an unregistered letter. Care in these matters will prevent loss and trouble. And those sending money from foreign countries should send United States currency instead of foreign, or send Postoffice Orders or bank drafts.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"To seek is better than to gain. The fond hope dies as we attain: Life's fairest things are those which seem, The best 1s that of which we dream.'

WHY WE SHOULD NOT WORRY.

If you want a good appetite, don't worry. If you want a healthy body, don't worry. If you want things to go right in your homes or your business, don't worry. Women find a sea of trouble in their housekeeping. Some one says they often put as much worry and anxiety into a loaf of bread, a pie or cake, a weekly washing and ironing, as should suffice for much weightier matters. This accounts largely for the angularity of American women. Nervousness, according to the American Artisan, is the bane of the American race. It is not confined to the women by any means, but extends to the men as well. Even business men are sometimes afflicted, so we have heard, and so our advice not to yield to this habit will be most kindly received by all classes of readers. What good does fretting do? It only increases with indulgence, like anger, or appetite, or love, or any other human impulse. It deranges one's temper, excites unpleasant feelings toward everybody, and confuses the mind. It affects the whole person, unfits one for the proper completion of the work whose trifling interruption or disturbance started the fretful fit. Suppose these things go wrong today, the to morrows are coming, in which to try again, and the thing is not worth clouding your own spirit and those around you, injuring yourself and them physically—for the mind affects the body-and for such a trifle. Strive to cultivate a spirit of patience, both for your own good and the good of those about you. You never will regret the step, for it will not only add to your own happiness, but the example of your conduct will affect those with whom you associate, and in whom you are interested. Suppose somebody makes a mistake, suppose you are crossed, or a trifling accident occurs; to fly into a fretful mood will not mend, but help to hinder the attainment of what you wish. Then, when a thing is beyond repair, waste no useless regrets over it, and do no idle fretting. Strive for that serenity of spirit that will enable you to make the best of all things. That means contentment in its best sense; and contentment is the only true happiness of life. A pleasant disposition and good work will make the whole surroundings ring with cheerfulness.

That we who read the Home Column may be able fully to appreciate the importance of the advice given above, and the sweet peace and comfort which in after years will result from following it, we append below a pen picture which may cause some weary, tired mother who reads it to stop and ask herself, "Could I bear thus to have my toil and drudgery lifted from me?" Dear, weary sisters, frail and overburdened ones to whose tired feet so hard to climb and filled with thorns which pierce at every turn: let us beseech you to carry your burdens no longer. They are too heavy for you; your strength is not sufficient for them. There is One who torsook the courts of heaven, purposely to find out just how heavy they were. It was not known even to the angels, the full weight of the burdens which mortals carry; but when there was laid upon Him the heaviest of these, when the sharpest thorns had pierced His feet, then he said to us: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

There is a key in these words to the whole matter, and if we will patiently, carefully and prayerfully examine this brief sentence, "I am meek and lowly in heart," we will discover it. No true child of God, who has learned of Christ, but knows the sweet peace and comfort of submission to the Father's will. The portion may be bitter, but the hand holding the cup to our lips is the hand of a loving Father who will never fail in his infinite wisdom to measure out just the portion we need. Ah! believe me there are none of us, no matter how severe may seem the present ordeal, how hot may be the blast from the fiery furnace, who can afford to murmur at or shrink from the faithful discharge of the present duty. It is now we need the patience held in the hand of meekness that we lay not up for ourselves memories which in years to come shall gnaw at our heart-strings like the worm which dieth not.

SO TIRED.

"So tired, so tired!" she bitterly sighed, As broom and brush she wearily plied; Tired to death of work and worry, Tired of all this rush and flurry; Longing for even an hour to read, Longing for time earth's beauty to heed, Longing to paint that service for tea, Or better still yon thrush on the tree; Longing for music, rest and fame, Longing to teach the world my name, Longing to rise to a higher sphere Than simply toiling and drudging here.

"So tired, so tired!" she bitterly sighed,
Yet now now broom nor brush she plied,
Not tired now of work and rush.
Plenty of time for painting thrush;
Time all written lore to read,
Time all nature's wealth to heed,
Time for music, rest and fame,
Time to teach the world her name;
Time to rise to any sphere,
No need for toil or drudging here;
A row of mounds on the hillside bare
Had removed forever the need of care.—Sel.

KINDNESS THAT CAME TOO LATE.

AT last the tired hands were at rest, folded peacefully over the heart that had ceased to throb with joy or pain. It seemed strange that Rachel Mathews should be a guest in the darkened parlor, where her weary feet had never been wont to linger. It was not like her to lie there so still and quiet, while the cows lowed uneasily at the barn-yard gate, and the harvest hands waited for the sound of the breakfast-bell that for the first time failed to ring out its welcome summons promptly to the minute. In the kitchen everything showed the touch of her magic fingers. The table was spread ready for the morning meal, while the fuel in the stove needed but the application of a match to send flame roaring up the chimney. "Everything is now ready for the morning's work," she said, wearily, the night before, as she left the kitchen, where so much of her dreary life had been spent. Yes, everything was ready but other hands than hers would take up the work where she had laid it down, for in the silent watches of the night the angel of death paused at her threshold, and with his icy fingers stilled the beating of her heart. The morning sun arose as on other days, but in the old farm-house on the hill, its bright, effulgent rays seemed mockery, for they shone in upon a family, stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. Those were bitter tears that John Matthews let fall upon the face of his dead wife that summer morning. Ah! but it was too late to smooth out the tangles in the barren life that had opened into the full fruition of eternal day.

Twenty-five years before when Rachel Wentworth left her father's house to make a home for John Matthews, she carried with her a warm, loving heart, in which he ruled king.

What an Eden she hoped to make for this man, who, before God, had promised to love, cherish and protect her, but even before the honeymoon began to wane the scales fell from her eyes, and to her dismay she discovered the utter selfishness of the man by whose side she was to finish her earthly pilgrimage. When her soul cried out for the sweet ministries that had come naturally during their courtship, he cooly informed her that as a married woman she must give up all such nonsense and settle down into a thrifty housewife. So, one after another of the joys she had anticipated were put aside, until her life, that promised so much in the outstart, was stripped of all she held most dear. At times her whole being rebelled against this dwarfing of her soul, but she was too true a woman to herald her wrongs before the world, so she took up her heavy cross and, without a complaint, slipped hopelessly into the dreary, tread-mill life, into which she had walked blindfolded.

When her children came she lavished upon them the love which her husband had cast from him. In her anxiety to shield them from hardships, she took upon herself the burdens their young shoulders should have borne, thus, in her mistaken devotion, laying the foundation for the selfishness that characterized their after lives. Though they dearly loved their patient, plodding mother, they did not hesitate to take from her tired hands the comforts and pleasures of life which they should have bestowed upon her, and unnatural as it may seem, there were times when they were actually ashamed of her faded dress and old-fashioned ways. They forgot that it was in their service that her hands had grown hard and her face wrinkled, neither did they call to remembrance that it was to her patient toiling and self-denial, that they owed all the advantages they had gained. How many heart-aches she might have been spared had they rewarded her according to the sacrifices she had made on their behalf; but she was at rest now, and ft mattered not how weary and foot-sore she had been during the journey just completed, it was over and she was at home, safe in her Father's house. In mercy, her worn-out body had not been racked with torturing pain, and the dreaded agony of a bitter parting from loved ones had been spared her. Yes, she was at rest. The tired expression on her face had given place to one of peaceful quiet, while the poor, drawn features seemed rounded out into youthful freshness and beauty. After years of unrest and disquietude, she had fallen into a sleep which awaited no rude waking in the morning. The sun would rise on the morrow, as it had done thousands of times before, but the thought of the monotonous rounds that must be gone before it should set disturbed not the sleeper, for with her it was everlasting morning, and all her cares and trials were ended.

The remorseful tears of her husband, and the bitter self-upbraidings of her children, fell unheeded upon her closed ear. If she could only have heard the tender, appreciative words that dropped from their lips, or felt the warm tears that were showered so plentifully upon her cold face, how they would have warmed and cheered her frozen heart; but, alas! they came too late; she had gone out of life without receiving any of its sweet, tender ministries from those who now wept bitterly over her shrouded form.

For the first time her heart did not respond to the cries of her children, nor her hand return their pressure. She was at rest, sleeping the unbroken sleep that knows no waking, but who could bring balm to the broken-hearted children who gathered so disconsolately around her bier? How all her love and sacrifice rose up before them now! How could they have given pain to one who lived and died in their service? And who will say that the tears shed by the husband, who had snatched all the flowers from the path over which her weary feet were forced to walk, were not genuine? In his own way he had loved her, but until this hour he had never realized how much of life's sweetness he had shut away from her, and all the flowers he could heap upon her coffin were utterly powerless to atone for the kindness he had refused while she traveled beneath his shadows. He may extol her virtues in fitting eulogies, and chisel her good deeds in imperishable marble, but no after-love can bring back the shattered life whose best affections he has slighted, or redeem the vows so heartlessly broken.

God pity the husband and children who, in addition to their crushing sorrow, are compelled to bear about with them the consciousness of having planted thorns in the pathway of the stilled heart that never throbbed but in love for them.

Oh! who is able to endure the pangs of separation, with all the heavy weight of unforgiven unkindness still pressing upon the bleeding heart!—Sel.

ONE DAY AT A TIME.

One day at a time! that's all it can be;
No faster than that is the hardest fate;
And days have their limits, however we Begin them too early and stretch them too late.

One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme!
A good one to live by,
A day at a time!

One day at a time! Every heart that aches,
Knowing only too well how long they can seem;
But its's never to day which the spirit breaks—
It's the darkened future, without a gleam.

One day at a time! When joy is at its height—Such joy as the heart can never forget—And pulses are throbbing with wild delight,
How hard to remember that suns must set!

One day at a time! But a single day,
Whatever its load, whatever its length;
And there's a bit of precious Scripture to say,
That, according to each, shall be our strength.

One day at a time! 'Tis the whole of life; All sorrow, all joy, are measured therein; The bound of our purpose, our noblest strife, The one only countersign sure to win!

One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme!
A good one to live by,
A day at a time!

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

BEELER, Kansas, October 12th.

Dear Sister Frances: —I request the sisters of the Prayer Union to pray for my recovery from sickness. I have been sick for five months and there has been no elders near.

Your sister in Christ,

AMERICA THOMPSON.

Sister A. Gardner, of Ellis, Nebraska, also asks an interest in your prayers that if it is God's will she may be restored to health, and if not that her sufferings may be relieved.

The prayers of the Union are requested for Bro James Calkings, of Riverton, Iowa He was hurt by a runaway team and there is no hope for him but in the intervention of God.

ELEANOR.

MANTENO, Iowa, Oct. 14th.

Dear Sister:-Although I have not written you for so long I have not become less interested but have been waiting hoping to have something of interest to write you. But things remain about the same (or seemingly so). There is not the interest that I would like to see, but hope there will soon be an awaking to the duties and responsibilities resting on us as children of Zion, especially mothers on whom so much care and anxiety rests. It seems to me there are many who do not appreciate the Prayer Union as they should, or they would not pass it unheeded but would secure the blessings. The Aid Society is progressing though the burden falls on the few, yet we enjoy ourselves in trying to do good, realizing the prize lies at the end of the race, so we'll work and wait till Jesus comes. We have recently been told by the Spirit "that the gospel would soon go to the Jews and soon after it would go to the house of Jacob," with an exhortation to faithfulness and diligence in searching the Scriptures and preparing ourselves for the future, by doing the things required of us.

I am so thankful for the church publications. I would much rather do without some of my daily comforts than do without them. Autumn Leaves is splendid, supplying a long felt want. I pray it may long continue to cheer and bless. My health is quite good at present, for which I am thankful.

Your sister in the covenant of peace,
M. A. Jenkins.

ALLENDALE, Mo, 17th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have nothing new to write about, but must tell you that my interest in this work grows stronger from day to day as I grow older in the cause and my thoughts and longings are ever for the welfare of Zion, and may God help us all to keep in its straight and narrow path.

I will say concerning our Prayer Union, some of our sisters are very faithful and prompt in attending our little meetings whilst others seem to have lost all interest or suffer other things to interfere with this duty. It is sad to tell, but nevertheless true. It grieves me to think they will become so indifferent in so short a time. If they could only realize how much we owe to our Heavenly Father and how little we are doing to cancel that debt, and how short our time God only knows. Sisters, I will say to you, If you will only come out and serve God at the appointed time or devote one hour in worship, at home, you will be more than amply repaid for the time you spend. I know from experience, for I have not missed but one meeting in six months and

God has blessed me, for I can truly say I have not missed the time nor do I regret the hours spent, and I never have got along better with my work and had it all so well done when fall come as it now is. I have also attended our sewing society every week. There are five in my family. Three boys, my husband, and myself, and I do my own work. I know this is God's work and all who serve him with an eye single to his glory will get this reward.

Your sister in Christ,
HELEN ACKLEY.

MEDINA, Texas, Oct. 6th.

Dear Herald:-As I feel lonely to-day, yet not alone, I will write to you, as it is the only way I can speak to you all as I desire. I have been looking at myself to see if when I am persecuted it is for righteousness sake. Dear Saints, let us try to live so that if persecuted it may be because of righteousness. When I heard of Bro. I. N. Roberts' illness it was at prayer meeting, and a prayer went up in his behalf that he might be healed. He has done a good work here and we would like to hear from him. May God bless all of the ministers and protect them and also their families. We have prayer meeting every Wednesday night and meet with twelve or fourteen Saints. Our church is not quite finished yet. Yours in the one faith,

A. E. SHEPPARD.

NEWARK, Dak. Oct. 6th.

Dear Sisters:-I rejoice in the work of the Lord in which I am engaged. I have been blessed with the Spirit of God many times. I was baptized eleven years ago and I can say that I have never regretted the step that I took, although I never have seen such troubles and persecutions in any branch as I find here in this branch, but I will try and press my way onward and fear God and not man. When I read the letter of Sister Head of Missouri in the Herald some time ago, I remembered that I have often met with those dear sisters in the German Stewartsville branch, and the Pleasant Grove branch. Oh, I often think if I only could step in for one hour in your prayer meetings to mingle my songs and prayers with you! I have not used tea or coffee for two years. Let us have our lamps trimmed and burning, that when Christ comes we may be prepared to meet him with joy.

Your sister in Christ,
MARY C. ODE.

October 10th.

Sister Walker:-To-day while praying with the sisters of the Prayer Union I thought I would write to you and ask you to make a request of them which I very much desire they should grant me. It is that I may again be aroused to greater diligence in this work. My whole heart, I believe, was once in this work and I knew no joy but that which the Spirit of God led me into; but I can not say so now, for I no not seem to have as clear discernment between good and evil, neither as firm a desire and determination to do what is right. My trials seem to be heavier and ofttimes my way seems hedged about, but I know that if my whole heart and diligence were in the work, that these things would be a help to me and a lasting joy to know that in time of trial I could overcome, and in time of trouble trust it all to God. I know by the word of the Spirit in times that are past, that I shall yet serve him with my whole heart and be clothed with the Spirit of God, but I now ask the prayers of my sisters of the Union for one of their number that God will deign to bless me with wisdom, patience, humility and faith and that he may arouse me to greater diligence that I may serve him faithfully. I only have been to blame, but I desire to return with full purpose of heart, and to have an eye single to God's glory that my whole body may be full of light. I have been blessed in observing the prayer service of the Union.

Your sister,

SHERIDAN, Ill., Oct. 21st.

Bro. W. W. Blair: The good work goes on. I have been laboring in the old Mission branch since the conference on the 4th instant. Their house is too small for the congregations. Men and neighbors who have never been in their meeting-house have been constantly attending. A week ago yesterday three were baptized, and on yesterday I held forth here in the Universalist Church; only a few came out in the morning, but when the shades of night came down, Nicodemus like, they turned out to hear. I hold meeting again on Tuesday night. This is a hard place to get an opening. You are remembered in loving kindness by the Saints in the Mission branch. They would be pleased to have you visit them again. I go to Chicago the first Saturday in November to hold a two days' meeting; and on the second Saturday we hold a two days' meeting at Plano; the week following at Sandwich. Bro. F. M. Cooper, president of Northern Illinois district, assisting. And so the good work goes bravely on.

Bro. M. T. Short has gone to his field. He was here and gave us a noble sermon during the week after our conference. I never heard him do better. We are moving all along the line, and prospects were never better, spiritually. With regards to all the Saints. May God bless all who labor for Zion's welfare.

Your co-laborer,

ALEX. HALE SMITH.

PLEASANTON, Ohio, Oct. 8th.

Bro. R. S. Salyards:—The district conference which convened on the 7th ultimo, at Kirtland, Ohio, was one of the best ever held in the district. The business session passed off without a jar and the preaching was excellent, being seasoned with the Holy Spirit. The Saints' meetings were grand and greatly enjoyed by them. There were about sixty visitors from abroad in attendance, and it was surprising to note the large gathering of outsiders which assembled at every session. It reminded us of General Conference. Three were baptized.

There have been ten planted in the waters of Kirtland since April, and about twenty more in the district. Thus you see we are gaining slowly. Brn. L. W. Powell and T. W. Williams have done good work since coming to the mission. Bro. M. B. Williams of Kirtland has spent three or four weeks of his time in the district with good effect. We trust ample means will be forthcoming to continue him in the field this fall and winter.

We left Kirtland on the 13th ultimo for Conneautville, Pennsylvania, and delivered nine sermons in a new opening, we think with good results. Bro. L. W. Powell arrived there on the eve of our departure and will remain as long as the interest will demand his efforts.

On the 23d Bro. T. W. Williams and the writer left for Vales' Mills, Ohio, to attend the conference and reunion. Conference lasted three days and the reunion six. A time of rejoicing was had throughout the entire meetings. The business was dispatched with alacrity and ease, and the dispensers of the word were made to realize the promise of the Savior as ample assistance was rendered them on each occasion. People from all the neighboring counties flocked to hear the gospel preached. It was estimated that there was upwards of one thousand persons on the grounds on the conference Sunday. We are confident that good was accomplished. The Saints were cheered and comforted and went home better qualified and more determined to resist the trials and temptations of life which we are all subject to. Yours, GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

LAKE PORT, Mich., Oct. 16th.

Bro. Blair:—Our conference is over. It was one among the grandest we have ever had. And as we are growing in membership, naturally our gatherings of this kind are larger. The brethren in Juniata have built them a neat little church, all plastered and painted and finished off nicely. It is the only church in that place, and is nearly all paid for. The brethren have done nobly. We had with us Brn. E. C. Briggs, C. Scott and W. J. Smith. Nearly all of the officers in the district were present.

Much of the Spirit was enjoyed. Bro. E. C. Briggs gave us much wise and timely counsel, and the ministry were edified. Brn. Briggs and A. Barr (Bishop's agent) presented more fully the law of tithing. Several paid tithing, and others manifested a desire to comply with the law. The district is in a fair condition. Several are coming into the church, and as a district we feel like trying to do our part towards spreading the gospel to the dark corners of the earth.

Brethren, pray for us.

J. J. Cornish.

15 Broad St., Dowlais, Wales, October 10th.

Dear Herald:-Please inform your many readers that take interest in us and the work of God in Wales that I am still alive and do endeavor with my dear brethren in the ministry, to advocate the good cause. It is very little that I am able to do, but when among my brethren I am very happy and pleased to do that little. On the 14th ult., accompanied by my dear wife, we went on a visit to the Cardiff branch and were received with open hearts. Next day, Sunday, at 2 p. m., met with the Saints in a sacrament meeting when I had the privilege of teaching the Saints, and of confirming a respectable young man who was baptized that morning by Elder T. Gold. We had a very good meeting. At 6:30 met again for preaching at Bro. Cope's large room, and had a good audience. I was called to lead in preaching; was followed by Elder Gold with a good gospel sermon. Tuesday and Thursday evenings following met in prayer-meetings, and they were good.

Sunday 22d, met in a Saints' meeting. A sister who had been a member for several years said, after the meeting, that she always did believe it was the work of God, but never could say that she knew it but that now she can testify she knows it.

At 6: 30 preaching. I was called to lead, but again my sermon was a very short one. I was followed by Elder G. Cope with a good able sermon. These brethren—Elders Gold and Cope—are good men, able preachers, of pure character, very faithful, as the streets of Cardiff can testify, for they often preach on them.

We left them Monday with grateful feelings for the kind manner in which we were received by all the Saints, especially by sisters Cope, Gold and Light. We were pleased with our visit in every way except my own sermons. I had much more strength and liberty at Llanelly and Morriston some weeks before. I hope to be better next time.

The two missionaries sent here by April conference of 1888 have returned to America. Two able speakers, and strong reasoners. Elder E. A. Davies was released by last April conference and returned home early in the summer. Elder John T. Davies was forced to return by the ill health of his dear wife and financial circumstances. Bro. John was not only an able preacher, but greatly beloved as one in charge of the mission. If that is so, how is it that the work did not prosper here? That question is much easier to ask than to answer. Some could answer it if they were here only a day. It is an important question, and we will try to answer without prejudice or deceit. Were the missionaries at fault? To say yes would be condemning myself, and also Elder John D. Jones who was a most faithful missionary and would travel over mountains and valleys to seek the stray ones. His name is mentioned with pleasure in all the branches, especially in Cardiff. What then is the cause? The principality is very religious; the people are bound up in the chains of sectarianism, and the others not within the chains are very irreligious—hardened in sin and iniquity. This, and the evil effects of the Brighamite doctrine, are the chief causes; and to all human appearance the pure gospel of Christ has but little prospect of prospering rapidly here. What then shall we do? Shall we yield? No! no!! We can not-will not yield, What then shall we do? Believe truly that what is impossible with men is possible with God. An Almighty power can break the chains; an almighty power can change the stony heart to a tender one.

Ye Latter Day Saints in Wales, shall we humble ourselves before God, asking him to take our cause! Shall we pray without ceasing for him to manifest his Almighty power among us!

Ye Saints in America, will you join in fervent prayers that God will prosper his work in Wales! We have good local elders here, but we want one to travel through the branches. Will the First Presidency think of it? Yours,

Thomas E. Jenkins.

LONE ROCK, Mo., Oct. 22d.

Bro. Blair:—I am still happy in this glorious gospel of our dear Lord. My desire is to abide in the doctrine and keep all the commandments that I may be worthy to enter into his kingdom. I have been made to realize of late that there is a great responsibility resting upon me as a member of his church—how I conduct myself—that I may not bring reproach upon it. Since my ordination to the office of a priest I realize that my service toward God is of a two-fold nature; I have done no labor since my ordination, but in the coming year I propose to do something for our Master's cause if health and circumstances permit. I desire to see the good work roll on, that the sound of the gospel may fill the whole earth as the water does the great deep; and I know I have a part and lot—or station—to fill that his cause may be advanced, for it has to go to all nations, kindred, tongues and people.

Never will I forget the good instruction Bro. Stebbins gave me, exhorting me to be faithful, for there would be a great demand made upon the young of this church to carry forth this gospel. And of late I have realized that his instructions were filled with the Spirit. That I may be useful in God's cause is my daily prayer.

I had the pleasure of leading one precious soul into the waters of baptism on the 18th ult., Albert Johnson, in fulfillment of a dream I had, and if faithful to his covenant it will be well with him.

EDWARD E. MARSHALL.

Indianapolis, Ind., October 20th.

Editors Herald:-Please give space to the following: My wife belongs to your church and I also did at one time though now I have no use for a God, Christ, or any part of that called religion, yet desire to see fair play and free speech. Nearly every denomination is represented in this city except your church, my wife, as far as I can find out, being the only member in this city. Some time ago M. R. Scott of Galena, Indiana, wrote my wife as to the prospects of getting a place to preach in. I went to work and found a hall in which he could preach, but they charge $2.50 for all day Sunday, and two dollars weekday nights, and wrote him to that effect. Now I am an invalid and the support of both rests mainly upon my wife, so that it is impossible for her to pay hall rent; yet a preacher can come and stay with us as long as he wishes without costing him a cent for board. I have had inserted in the daily paper here the following notice:

"Latter Day Saints living in Indianapolis send address or call on Susan Everett, Room 2, Ryan block Very important."

Hoping to find some of your members in the city and thus be able to raise enough amongst all to pay hall rent. And I write this to ask any of your members living in this city to or near vicinity to correspond with Susan Everettas above, with the view of devising ways and means for a preacher of your faith to open up in this city.

One who desires free thought and speech,
ARTHUR C. EVERETT.

WOODBINE, Iowa, Oct. 17th.

Dear Herald:—How often we see in your columns letters from the lone and scattered ones, and it makes us sad to think of the hundreds of Saints who are cut off from the privilege of hearing the gospel preached. To such I would say, Be steadfast in the faith; grieve not that you are isolated, but rejoice that you have heard and accepted the glorious work. I was for a long time a wanderer in a strange land—being for eleven years deprived of all companionship with the Saints except as I would take long rides to meet them—and during all this time I heard but three sermons by the elders, although a great deal of preaching by ministers of other denominations, which to a Latter Day Saint fails to fill the measure of their wants. We know what the gospel is, and anything short of this fails to satisfy.

For twelve years I was alone in the work, so far as my relatives were concerned, but God has at last given me my wife, as well as a brother and his wife and daughter, for companions in the fold and family of God. We little know what will be the result of faithfulness and of prayer. How true is the hymn:

"Pray in faith and pray unceasing To the God we love and trust; For our prayers are much availing If we walk upright and just."

There has lately been added to the Woodbine branch (where I now belong) by baptism, as follows: On August 15th 12, on the 18th 5, and on September 15th 4, making 21 by baptism and some by letter. So the good work goes on in spite of all opposition.

May the gospel work roll on until all obstacles are met and overcome, and all who bear the name of Saint remain steadfast and be accounted worthy to meet the Son of God when he comes to reign over and with us in that glad and glorious "thousand years," is the prayer of an unworthy brother in Christ.

W. F. Donaldson.

GUILFORD, Mo., Oct. 12th.

Bro. Blair:—It has been a long time since I last wrote to the Herald. I read its columns with pleasure and trust in its future progress. The Sweet Home and Platte branches are in hopes of building churches to worship in. I believe this is a proper step and will prove a great blessing to both branches. The saints in the Platt branch are rejoicing in spirit and I have never felt the spirit of love more than I have of late with them. We have felt to say, "Praise the Lord, O my soul," and all say, Amen.

Some have united with us this year, and many are afraid we are right, I believe the work has been injured in this district by some who are wise in their own conceit, and threaten all others that honorably oppose them, and who when proven quilty by the voice of the district conferenc, without hesitancy sit upon their own case and do their work over again. I believe it is time that elders learn to attend to their own business, and if we can not do this, the sooner the church calls for our licenses the better. It strikes me, that rule is still good.

Yours in bonds, Amos J. Moore.

Deloit, Iowa, Oct. 17th.

Dear Saints:—Having arrived home safely and finding all well and happy, I feel impressed to write you. We were greatly blessed while at the late Reunion. I can truly say that never have I had such spiritual enjoyment. God was with his people by the power of his Holy Spirit, and we felt that the very portals of heaven were opened unto us. We were made glad, and our hearts went out to Him in gratitude and praise that we are permitted to live in these latter days when the gospel of the Son of God is restored to earth and its gifts and blessings are enjoyed by his people. We feit that, indeed

God had given us a foretaste of eternal joys to come.

But a feeling of sadness came over us when we had to part with the dear Saints, and we mentally breathed a prayer to God that he would keep his people from the evils and vanities of the world, and that we might be able to meet again.

Many requested me to write the lines sung by inspiration and I therefore send them to the Herald that all may have them.

Your sister in Christ, KATE TURNER.

Rejoice, ye Saints! Lift up your heads, For God is very near; And by his mighty, sovereign power, He rules his people here.

He'll bear you up in his strong arms, Along life's ragged road, If you will put your trust in Him, And lean upon your God.

He'll hear your prayers and answer them In accents soft and mild; And by his still, small voice of love Will own you for His child.

Be not ashamed to own the name Of Jesus Christ, your King, Who shed H:s precious blood for you, To free salvation bring.

Ye chosen servants of your God, Gird on your armor bright; Go tell to all the world abroad, Of truth's free, saving light.

The perfect law of liberty
Will joy and peace afford,
To all who will obedience yield
To Jesus Christ, your Lord.

Ye Saints of God, let love abound, Whatever may betide; Let unity and peace be found, And in your hearts abide.

Oh! watch and pray; beware of pride Lest some may go astray; For Jesus says 'twill not abide In realms of endless day.

Your garments must be neat and plain, For this is God's decree,— This is a day of sacrifice Unto His Saints, you see;

For the glad news of Jesus' name Must fill the earth abroad, Till all may know him, and rejoice, The true and living God.

The way is glorious, bright and fair, To everlasting bliss; And Jesus bids you enter there, Where all is joy and peace.

He bids you walk the narrow way To everlasting life, And shun the evils of the world, The vanities and strife.

He bids you rise and higher come, And shun the evil way, That God may glorify his name In this the latter day.

BUCHANAN, Mich., October 21st.

Dear Herald:—I have not written anything to you for several years. I have not been as diligent in the work on account of temporal circumstances, as I otherwise would been glad to have been. I have labored some, however, and others have added to my labors; and so some have been brought into the fold.

At Pomery, Kansas, I went and preached a few sermons while stopping at Wyandotte, a few years since, and have since learned that some of the brethren there went up and labored further and baptized some. I went out at that time "without purse or scrip not know where I should go, and had excellent liberty, when at last I traveled around to Pomeroy and began preaching. Thus I trust it may have been proven that one planteth while another watereth, and God hath given the increase.

Afterward, while at home in Michigan, my mother's mind was turned toward the faith, and about the time that she afterward told me all her objections had passed away, I saw her in a dream standing in the front yard. There was an oval spot of light extending from left to right in the western sky about midway in the heavens, from the horizon to the zenith. From this spot of light rays shot out for the distance of about a yard, then suddenly back. Again they would proceed and suddenly fall back and so continue to flash out and draw back. Upon the centre of this spot of light appeared two words in Hebrew. The right hand word was afterwards translated into English when I looked up again the second time, From this light in the clouds descended a globe or ball of a translucent substance, like fire. It came along on the ground to where my mother was standing, and, springing up, enveloped her whole person from about the knees upward; extending three or four feet above her head, waving backward and forward as it gradually spent the force of its motion; and clung to her with a sort of suction.

"Aunt Esther" as we all call her, was there, an aged lady who first heard the faith in New York by some of the early elders. I thought she came forward, went up toward mother and soon became drawn in with the absorbing power of the body of light which had come upon them. Truly, as saith the scripture, "the wind bloweth where it listeth... ye can not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth... so is everyone that is born of the Spirit." I awoke.

My mother, Aunt Esther, and finally my father, are all in the church; the latter is where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. The remaining letters in the heavens remained in the foreign language as they were, and I hope, if the Lord will, to see them in a day appointed.

I remember that Sr. McCallum-Bro. Joseph Smith's eldest daughter-at a Geneaal Conference of the church at Plano, Illinois, a few years ago gave a testimony with the energy and power of the Spirit. She spoke among other things of existing pride, which Sr. Low, of Plano, had but just testified to having seen in vision by the appearance of a woman before the audience holding a mirror in her hand. Bro. John H. Lake of the twelve, also a few moments later spoke in tongues the most powerfully of any I had ever heard, in which he also mentioned the same thing, when the tongue was interpreted. Bro. Joseph also, in an address to the conference, stated that he had no fears for his part of the unchaste features of Utah ever cropping out again in the church; but that he saw an element of pride, and the setting of the elders one against another.

Pride is one of the strong strongholds of the enemy. If I could recall some lines on humility which I was aided to write at one time I would include them. Can you give a verse:

"Be humble, mortal, that is best;
Full many a wrong has been redressed
In sweet humility's waiting hour,
And proven well her conquering power."
I saw also in a dream, two or three years ago, a woman standing with one of the quorums, while in session in the basement of a large building fronting on four sides, having apartments one above another, from lower to higher. She held a lily white pad or duster in her hand, with which she kept dobbing her face, quite after the feminine fashion, peering anxiously, meanwhile, into the mirror at the other end of the room. When I awoke I was passing up the stairway into the next apartment above. I had a sash around the waist passing from either side up around the opposite shoulder, crossing in front and on the back, and hanging off in two ends at my left side nearly to the feet.

This spring—sometime in May—at Three Oaks, Michigan, I dreamed of seeing the following letters in the sky: "A reward for diligence," and then a garden drill; which I interpreted as the gospel drill to sow the seed of the kingdom.

I have been at Buchanan, Michigan, a part of the summer and have enjoyed good liberty in speaking several times at this place.

God speed the work and "hasten it in its time," is the praper of G. F. WESTON.

RIVERTON, Iowa, Oct. 23d.

Bro. Dancer:—Bro. Henry Kemp baptized three more at Hamburg. Others almost persuaded. Bro. James W. Calkins got badly hurt by a runaway team; but we trust he will get well.

ANNUAL REUNION MINUTES.
Concluded.

WEDNESDAY, 9TH.
PRAYER service in charge of J. M. Putney and W. Chambers. A good season was enjoyed.

At 11 a. m. preaching service in charge of Leonard Scott. Elder J. R. Lambert was the speaker. Texts, 2 Cor. 4: 1-12; Matt. 5: 4. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect."

The Saints will admit that holiness and purity of life are strongly taught in the The ministry are instructed Scriptures. We should walk in full obeto so teach. dience to the laws of God. I read from Genesis 17th, as to Abraham walking and being perfect before God. The record informs us that, because Jesus "loved righteousness, and hated iniquity, therefore God anointed him above his fellows." For he walked in perfect obedience before his Father, and he expects that we shall do so. It is expected that we shall be like him.-See Col. 1: 28; every man to be presented perfect before God in Christ Jesus. How can we enjoy that we anticipate save we shall become God-like! We are said to be heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; therefore the strict obedience required of him is required of us! The normal condition of man is such that he desires an improved condition. As we require physical sustenance so we require spiritual sustenance, that the spirit may be properly cared for. To claim holiness of life while denying the means by which such is or can only be attained, is against well known law.—See Heb. 7: 19; 9: 9, 10. James 1st. We read of a perfect law of liberty, which, if we look into and continue in we shall be blessed in our deeds, being made free from the law of sin and death, as named in Romans 8: 12. Let us measure ourselves by God's standard of law. There is relative and absolute perfection. The latter may not be attained here; the former can be, and it will lead us to the other. So let us live.

During the interim nine were baptized by Elder C. Derry.

2: 30, p. m. Service in charge of C. Derry, prayer by Bro. Bullard. Elder J. S. Roth, speaker.

He said: "My subject is from Matt. 6: 33. 'But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and its righteousness." Some state that God never organized a church or kingdom. If this be true, why did Christ command men to seek for it? The word kingdom implies territory, law, citizens, officers. We read, "He that is least in the kingdom of heaven;" "the kingdom of heaven shall be taken from you." Gal. 1:6-8. Paul received the gospel from Christ, and see the twelfth verse— "translated us into his kingdom." Then there was an organized kingdom. Some argue that the kingdom is in our hearts. Jesus cursed the pharisees, calling them hypocrites; the kingdom would not be in their hearts. See Matt. 13:31, 32: The kingdom is like a grain of mustard seed. Here is a parable of it. Men can find lodgment in it. It grows imperceptibly to the world.

Paul taught "one body," one church, one faith, Lord, baptism, Spirit and hope; see I Cor. 12:28 as to organic structure. I Cor. 13th tells of the duration, also Ephesians 4th. How can there be a kingdom triumphant without the kingdom militant to go on to triumph?

7:30 p.m. In charge of Bro. W. W. Blair, prayer by Bro. E. C. Brand. Elder Leonard Scott was the speaker. He said: Isaiah 20th portrays the bringing forth of the latter day work. "The Zion of God." It is denominated There has been a marked departure from christianity. The marked divisions, irreconcilable in many respects, denote this as a fact. The church was represented as a woman with twelve stars upon her head. She goes into the wilderness, and after a time is seen riding in scarlet upon a beast, showing that she severed her relationship with heaven and identified herself with the political state, and thereby became a politico ecclesiasticism. This was predicted by Isaiah in the 24th chapter. The people came into such a condition that darkness and superstition besotted the nations, and people knew not God, but drew near Him with their lips, and their fear toward Him was taught by the precepts of men. People admit this from the statement of their creeds; fear exercised not from principle but from dread of a burning for ever and ever. If "forever" means eternity, then "ever" would imply another and this would necessitate an absurdity of two eternities! This state of affairs was to be in existence prior to Christ's coming, and the decision of the prophetic conferences of New York and Chicago was 5 to 2 that Christ's second advent was imminent, thus admitting this statement of matters to be really existent. But God was to establish a work in the latter days by revelation. This is now attested by phenomena in nature and divine inspiration a power in the church.

THURSDAY, IOTH.

9 a. m. Prayer service in charge of Brn. J. C. Crabb and J. Turner at which nine persons were confirmed by Brn. Crabb, McDowell, Turner and Seddon.

11 a.m. Preaching services in charge of Bro. J. C. Crabb; sermon by Bro. H. O. Smith; text 2 Cor. 13th chapter. Theme, Charity as involved in the gospel of Christ in its application to all men and in all conditions. During the interim three were baptized by J. F. McDowell.

2:30 p. m. Service in charge of W. W. Blair. Elder E. C. Brand was speaker, text 2 Thess. 1:7. Central thought: "Obedience to the gospel of Christ." Mark 16: 15, the universal commission. The main question to your speaker's mind is that we should be baptized. The human family is so divided as to what we should believe. Credulity is not faith. Paul wrote, "Faith is the assurance of things not seen." The word of God must be authoritatively declared ere true faith can be exercised. The ministry are to "preach the gospel," it is the gospel that is to be believed, which was to be universally taught. One must believe in the principles of the gospel as portrayed by Paul in Hebrews 6:1, 2. Any one not baptized of water and of the Spirit both is not truly baptized. "Belief in Jesus" alone won't do, for the devils believe, and that would make sheep of them. It requires a true faith accepting what God has told us to do. We must enter through the door.

7:30 p. m., service in charge of W. W. Blair. Elder M. H. Forscutt was speaker, text Zechariah 9:11,12. You find here mention made of Jesus. The theme was "probation after death." The possibility and probability of pardon of sin in the spirit world, or the universal prevalence of Christ's redemptory plan.

FRIDAY, IITH.

9 a. m., prayer service in charge of J. W. Chatburn and David Chambers. At this service the three baptized yesterday were confirmed. An enjoyable season followed in prayer, testimony and the gifts.

11 a. m., service in charge of Elder C. Derry. Elder J. S. Roth spoke from Exodus 23:21, 22, subject, visiting of angels. Gen. 18th, angels appearing to Abraham; also 19th chapter, appearing to Lot. Central thought, What is the object of angels visits? Gen. 31:1; Ex. 3:1; see also Luke 7: 11. Angels visit mankind to warn, instruct, reprove, enlighten, etc. Angels are intelligent beings, appearing as men, in varied manner, but always in light and divine power. They appear in dreams, visions, and openly. They always attended God's people in all ages, to maintain God's work. They appeared to prophets, patriarchs, seers, priests, apostles and the laity.

During the interim fourteen persons were baptized by J. F. McDowell.

2:30 p. m., service in charge of W. W. Blair. After singing and prayer the meeting was opened by consideration of time and place for holding next Reunion, etc. The financial report of committee on grounds was read, and upon vote was referred to an auditing committee of J. W. Chatburn, G. A. Blakeslee and J. Seddon.

A resolution governing committee on Reunion meetings was read and by vote adopted as follows: "Whereas the Annual Reunion meetings of the Reorganiz-ed Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was instituted for the express purpose of the worship of God, hearing his word and enjoying the communion of the Holy Spirit, with the communion of Saints, that thereby we might be advanced in the divine life, and sinners be converted to Therefore, be it resolved by this God. Annual Reunion meeting, That wherever and whenever these meetings shall be held, saloons or any places or means for the sale of strong drinks of any kind, shooting galleries, swings, shows, or any places or means of worldly amusements shall not be permitted within the limits prescribed by law for meetings assembled for religious puposes; and that we hereby instruct all committees of location and arrangements to imperatively exclude all the above mentioned things, means or places; and that this resolution shall continue in force so long as these reunion meetings shall be held and wherever they shall be held.

Signed CHARLES DERRY. W. D. BULLARD.

Letters were read from the following named places, petitioning for the reunion next year: Missouri Valley, Omaha and Council Bluffs Chautauqua Assembly, and Logan. After petitions had been read, and a verbal statement from Bro. H. Garner heard for the grove, two informal ballots were taken on each place, after speeches had made pro. and con., which resulted in favor of Logan, and the choice was made unanimous by acclamation.

7: 30 p. m. Service in charge of M. H. Forscutt. Elder C. Derry was speaker, text, Amos 3:7,8, theme, objections made against the Saints as a people, and answers to them. "We caim that Ged has revealed Himself again to his people. God's servants are illy spoken of now as ever in the past. Yet God's way is not as our's, and His methods are ofttimes mysterious unto us. The path of trial lies before all of God's servants. The Lord chooses His own servants, in His own way. charges preferred against God's ministers are founded upon false premises and can not be maintained upon proper principles.

SATURDAY, 12TH.

9 a. m., meeting in charge of J. C. Crabb and J. M. Putney. A season of spiritual rejoicing was had.

11 a. m., service in charge of W. W. Blair. Bishop G. A. Blakeslee was introduced as speaker. He said: "The law called 'temporal' is as essential to salvation as is that called 'spiritual,' but nevertheless, all of God's law is spiritual. Jesus has commanded that we should lay up treasure in heaven, not on earth; for where the treasure is, there will the heart be also. God has spoken unto us through the Seer regarding this matter.—See D. & C. 64: 5. Jesus says it is a day of sacrifice and tithing of his people. He said through Malachi that the Jewish nation had robbed Him in 'tithes and offerings.' If it is now the time to preach the gospel, then it is time to pay tithing. If the gospel is to be preached means must be placed in the treasury for a work of sustenance."

During the interim seven were baptized

by J. F. McDowell.

2:30 p. m., meeting in charge of M. H. Forscutt. After singing and prayer the unfinished business of yesterday was taken Report of auditing committee was read, which showed the following: Expenses $155.08, receipts $118.25, balance $37.43 unprovided for. The committee find a quantity of lumber used in seating etc. that can be disposed of, and recommend that the proceeds of such be used for the care of tabernacle, fixtures, etc., the balance left therefrom be paid over to new committee on final settlement between the two. J W. Chatburn, chair-The new committee was elected by vote and is as follows: J. Turner, J. Coffman, J. Seddon, W. Davison, D. Cham-This new committee was authorized to come to an understanding with committee of Logan citizens concerning the agreement made for offer of Reunion at that place next year, and if matters prove unsatisfactory they were empowered to confer and select another place. When the outgoing and incoming committees on Reunions make final settlement the old one is then discharged. A vote of thanks was tendered outgoing committee. A vote of thanks was also tendered Bro. Henry Garner, and to neighbors for courtesies extended.

The time of next meeting was left with new committee. It was voted that the incoming committee be requested to make report through the Herald, after settlement with outgoing committee. singing, Elder Lambert was introduced as the speaker. His theme was, "The duty of Saints in living near to God in keeping his commandments. The law of tithing was imposed upon all. Invalid excuses are not acceptable unto God. The Bishop is to be held accountable for the distribution of means. The objections urged against paying the tithes would not be urged against any other law possibly."

7:30 p. m., service in charge of W. W. Blair. Bro. J. F. McDowell was introduced as speaker; lesson, John 14: 10-22, theme, the power and possibilities of faith and primitive and modern phases of Christianity.

SUNDAY, 13TH.

9 a. m., prayer service in charge of C. Derry. Many faithful testimonies were given and the Holy Spirit's presence cheered the hearts of His people.

11 a. m., service in charge of M. H. Forscutt; Elder Leonard Scott was speaker. Lesson 12th chapter of Luke. The central thought is "The intensity of interest mankind should take in seeking the kingdom of God." We should accept the truth at whatever cost, and not because some popular institutions endorses it as a truth, for errors have been popularized and frauds canonized! All good has been opposed and all progress sought to be impeded. The church fell, and instead of being the kingdom of God became the empire of Satan.

During the interim thirteen persons were baptized by J. F. McDowell.

2:30 p. m., service in charge of C. Derry, Elder M. H. Forscutt speaker.

At 7 p. m. Elder W. W. Blair addressed the audience, speaking chiefly to the laity and ministry upon the performance of duties, and disciplinary ruling.

Thus closed one of the most profitable and spiritually blessed meetings of Reunion held in the west. The audience was large and orderly throughout. Every one seemed in good humor and all things passed off pleasantly. The weather was delightful, all that could be desired. There were over two hundred tents on the grounds. The baptisms numbered fifty-five, the majority being adults. The Holy Spirit attended them and also the confirmations. Many children were blessed, and a number of sick benefitted through administrations. The preaching was attended by the Holy Spirit's presence and power.

BAPTISM IS IMMERSION .- No. 3.

BY ELDER R. C. EVANS. NAAMAN WAS BAPTIZED BY IMMERSION.

IT has been said by some that "Naaman the captain of the host of the king of Syria," who was sorely afflicted with that dread malady, leprosy, was sprinkled at the time he was healed. Let us look at the passage, and then learn the meaning of the words used by the prophet, also the word used by the writer that described his action at the time of his cleansing: "And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean. . . . Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God, and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean."-2 Kings 5: 10, 14. You are aware, kind reader, that this man could have stood on the shore and had water sprinkled or poured upon him without his himself seven times "down in the river." It is said that language is a sign to convey ideas. Now how could you frame words to convey the idea of this man's immersion better than the above?

going in the river; but if he was to immerse, he had to "go down into the river" which the divine record says he did do-

he washed himself seven times, or dipped

But let us hear what some of the most celebrated scholars have to say about the words used in the text. Hear the Jewish author Maimonides: "Whenever in the law of Moses washing the flesh or clothes is mentioned, it means nothing else than the dipping of the whole body in the bath, for if any one dip himself all over except the tip of his little finger, he is still in his uucleanness."-Helch Mikva, 1 c. sic. 2.

Again, he says: "Every person bap-tized or dipped, whether he was washed from pollution or baptized unto proselytism must dip his whole body at one dipping, and wheresoever in the law washing of the body or garments is mentioned it means nothing else."-Mikva, c. 3.

"Although the baptism practiced by John and the apostles did not, in all circumstances, resemble those Jewish washings to which I have now adverted, yet it was precisely like them in that main particular of immersion in water."-J. J. Gurney Obs. Religious Peculiarities Society of Friends, p. 61.

"The word rendered 'dipped' in the common version, is taval in the Hebrew, and baptizo in the Greek; that is, King James translators testify that the Hebrew taval, the equivalent of the Greek baptizo signifies to dip. Taval occurs fifteen times in the Old Testament; in the common version, it is rendered dip fourteen times, plunge once. This is the Hebrew word for baptism."—Hardy and Wilkinson debate, p. 107.

"It is an axiom in logic as well as in mathematics, that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another." The Hebrew word taval is rendered in the Greek by the word baptizo. When the Jews translated their scriptures into the Greek, whenever they came to this word they rendered it baptizo; and when our translators came to this same word, they rendered it by the English word dip. It follows therefore, since dip in English and baptizo in Greek, are equal to taval in Hebrew, they must be equal to each other. Instances, Lev. 4:6; 14:6; Num. 19:18; Ruth 2:14; 1 Sam. 14:27; 2 Kings 8: 15; Josh. 3: 15; Job 9: 31; 2 Kings 5: 14. Robinson's Gesenius Heb. Lex., p. 364, defines "Taval: To dip, to dip in, to immerse, to dip or immerse one's self. Example, 2 Kings 5: 14—'He went down and dipped himself seven times in Jor-

Parkhurst, p. 255: "Taval, to dip, immerse, plunge. 2. To tinge or dye with a certain color, which is usually performed by_dipping."

Robinson's Heb. Dict., p. 111, "Taval: 1. He dipped. 2. He was dipped."
Stokius' Vet. Test. vol. 1, p. 421: "Ta-val, dip, dip in, immerse, submerge." Davidson's Heb. Lex.: "Taval, 1, to dip, to immerse; 2, to stain."

The learned Jewish Rabbi, Dr. L. Kleeburg, says: "Taval, means to immerse, to dip; it never means to sprinkle or pour."—Louisville debate, p. 652.

From the above statements we think all will believe that Naaman was immersed. And now, dear reader, after having read the above statements made by some of the greatest theologians and scholars of other days and of the present, not forgetting the positive testimony of John Wesley and other Methodist ministers of the past, what think you of the following? At the General Conference of the Methodist Church, held in the city of Toronto, Ontario, in 1886, a special committee was appointed to revise the "Discipline" of the The following is noticeable: "The committee also recommend that the passages from Romans 6: 3, 4 and Colossians 2: 12 be eliminated from the baptismal service, as they do not refer to water baptism, and are, therefore, misleading in the connection in which they are now used." "Carried."

Please notice in the beginning of this article John Wesley's notes on the New Testament, where he says with reference to these very passages, that they refer to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion. Here is worse and more of it: In the "Discipline" as published with the above change made they say in section 1, "The doctrines of the Methodist Church are declared those contained in the twenty-five articles of religion; and those taught by the Rev. John Wesley, M. A., in his notes on the New Testament, and in the first fifty-two sermons of the first series discourses, published during his lifetime."

The Rev. W. A. McKay, B. A., Pastor of Chalmer's Church, Woodstock, Ontario, in his work entitled "Immersion but a Romish invention," from the forty-fourth to the forty-ninth pages, labors hard to prove that the word "into," "down into," "out of," etc., is no proof that immersion is taught, and that when the word into is used in these cases, it does not mean into, but to, and from, etc. As this article is already lengthy permit me to give you a few quotations from the book of all books, the Bible. See if you can make them convey the idea of just being "close by," "near to," "at" or "by," or "from:" Psalms 9: 17; 2 Kings 2: 1; Isaiah 14: 13; Mark 16: 19; Luke 2: 15; Eph. 4:9; Matt. 15: 17; 4: 1; 4: 12; Dan. 3: 6, 11, 21; 6: 16, 24; Jonah 1: 15; 2: 3; Acts 8: 38; Mark 1: 4, 5; John 3: 5; Rev. 22: 14, 15.

I am aware that this article is lengthy, but I wish to ask you to indulge me while I try and answer another argument in favor of sprinkling. The pet passage of those who teach that sprinkling is Christian baptism is not found (strange to say) in the New Testament, but in the Old Testament;—see Ezekiel 36:24, 25: "For I will take you from among the heathen and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean from all your filthiness, and from all your idols will I cleanse you." I fail to see that this gives any man the right to baptize the followers of Christ by sprinkling. The plain reading of the text and context show that God through his prophet told how Israel should be restored to their native land, and how he would cleanse them according to the ceremonial law from their filthiness and idolatry. If the reader will carefully read the law he will discover that there are twenty sprinklings under the law. There are eight sprinklings of blood, of blood and oil three; of blood and water two; of oil three; mixed water and oil four. In those sprinklings there are six only in which there is water, and the water is never unmixed; it is also mixed with blood and the ashes of a red heiter. (See Num. 19: 11-22.) We fail to find where God ever commanded unmixed water to be sprinkled on anybody. Again: The sprinkling referred to in this passage was not to be performed until scattered Israel should be brought back to dwell in "the land God gave unto their fathers." Now we think if the reader will examine the record he will discover this has all been fulfilled years ago. "Ezekiel delivered the prophecy 587 B. c. Their return to Jerusalem under Zerubbabel was 536 B. c., that is fifty one years after Ezekiel's prophecy. That prophecy was therefore fulfilled five hundred and thirty-six years B. C. Fifty-one years after Ezekiel wrote that prophecy Zerubbabel with about fifty thousand Jews returned to Jerusalem and rebuilt the walls of the ancient city, as Ezekiel had prophesied he would do. Nine years afterwards Nehemiah went to Jerusalem and rebuilt the temple. passed away, the land became fruitful, villages were built, and when Christ came the temple was still standing."-Harding and Wilkinson debate, p. 87.

But still it is urged by some that Paul in in Hebrews 9: 10 refers to divers baptisms in the gospel. Here is the verse: "Which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation." Now I have shown that the "divers washings" under the law refer to various bathings. The authorities I have quoted show that to bathe or to wash is Taval in Hebrew, Baptizo in Greek, and means immersion. But were we to admit that there were diverse baptisms under the law, that is that they baptized by immersion, sprinkling and pouring, that is no proof that Christian baptism is sprinkling or pouring.

In verification of this assertion please read the following: "For the priesthood being changed there is made of necessity a change also of the law."—Heb. 7:12; also Rom. 10:4. "For Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth." In a word "the law of Moses made nothing perfect."—Hebrews 7:19. "It could not make them perfect."—Heb. 9:9. "It was only a shadow."—Heb. 10:1. "God had no pleasure in it."—Heb. 10:6. It was to be taken away when the gospel came.—Heb. 10:9. "Ye could not be justified by the law of Moses."—Acts 13:39. Rom. 3: 28-30: "No flesh can be saved by the deeds of the law."

It was a "law of sin and death" and "was weak."—Rom. 8: 2, 3. "Righteousness" did not come by the law of Moses.—Rom. 2:21. It was only "a school master."—Gal. 3: 24. "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law."—Gal. 3:13. It was, as the above show, a curse, imperfect and weak. God had no pleasure in it; it was to be taken away; a severe school master. Christ was the end of it, and he came and redeemed us from the curse of it. "For it was added because of transgression."—Gal. 3:19. "Added to what?" ask some. We reply: to the gospel, the perfect law, the means that God devised to save earth's children by.

That the gospel was preached before the law is evident from the following scriptures: Heb. 4:2; Gal. 3:18; 2 Pet. 2:15; Ex. 15:26; 16:28; Heb. 11:23, 37; Ex. 14:31; 1 Cor. 10:2; Acts 22:3; Ps. 19: 7-11; James 1: 25; Rom. 10: 16. From the above passages the reader will discover that the gospel was preached to Abraham, preached and loved by Moses, and counted by the sweet singer of Israel as the means through which God converts the souls. Surely the weak, imperfect law of sin and death was not the one that he referred to when he said, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." That law to him was "sweeter than honey, more to be desired than fine gold."-Ps. 19:7-10. God through Moses plead with Israel to keep the gospel, His commandments and laws; but, as these passages show, they rebelled and then God added the law as a curse upon them because of their transgressions; yet, after all, some would gladly drag latter day Israel back to the law of sin, bondage and death.

Now as the law was changed, Christ nailed the ordinances of the law to the cross.—Col. 2: 14. Were we to admit that God in the law of Moses commanded pure water to be sprinkled on the people as a baptism, our friends who advocate sprinkling or pouring would gain nothing, for the law was changed from "the divers washings," or baptisms, to the gospel law of "one Lord, one faith, one baptism."—Eph. 4:5. That one baptism we think we have proven to be immersion.

Another objection to immersion being the primitive mode of baptizing is the fact of three thousand being baptized on the day of Pentecost by the twelve apostles.

ist. We are not sure that three thousand were baptized that day. The scriptural statement is: "They that gladly received his word were baptized." This does not say three thousand. "And the same day there were added unto them," (that gladly received the word) "about three thousand souls." Probably the church that day was organized, or at least the branch at Jerusalem, and the scattered members that John, Jesus, the twelve apostles and two quorums of seventy had baptized, came to Jerusalem and all united with that branch.

2nd. The twelve were not alone, but by referring to Acts 1: 13-15 we are told there were one hundred and twenty assembed in the upper room at the time. Who will affirm that the remaining one hundred and eight were not members of the quorums of seventy who had authority to baptize?

But let us suppose that three thousand were baptized, that the apostles were the only ones that officiated at the baptism, we see no difficult in the way for the twelve to have baptized the three thousand. Our modern ministers have beaten the record of the apostles. As proof of this assertion I cite you to the case of baptism that took place in July, 1878, in India, at Velumpilly, two miles north of Oongole, where two thousand two hundred and twenty-two persons were immersed in one day by six administrators, only two baptizing at a time. They took six hours to do it; three hours in tho morning and three in the afternoon. The above was published in Calcutta, January 1883, and in London, England, in 1888. Baptizing at that rate, twelve administrators would have baptized 4.444 in six hours, one third of them baptizing at a time, or all of them working for the six hours, at that rate would have baptized 13.332. For the twelve apostles to baptize the three thousand they would only have had to baptized two hundred and fifty each to accomplish their work. The Rev. Dr. R. R. Williams, president of Ramapatam Seminary, baptized seven hundred persons in one day without leaving the water. Who now will say it was impossible for the twelve apostles to baptize three thousand in one day?

There has been much quibbling about the river Jordan not being deep enough to baptize in, and that in other localities, such as Gaza and elsewhere there was not enough water to immerse, etc., all of which is mere nonsense; for be it remembered that since the dispersion of the Jews, A. D. 70, "the former and latter" rains (spring and fall) have been withheld as part of the curse against Palestine; so that modern travelers judge of things as they see them now, and not as they were nine-teen hundred years ago. But about the river Jordan read the following. Matt. 3:6; Mark 1:5; Psa. 104:3; 2 Kings 5: 10-14; Jer. 12: 5; Joshua 3: 15; 4: 18; 2 Kings 2: 6-14. Elijah and Elisha could not wade it; it was too deep; so they both had to smite so as to divide the river in order to get over. Besides there were many pools, conduits etc., for bathing, etc. See Eccl. 2:6; Isa. 7:3; 8:6; 22:9-11; Neh. 2:13-15; 3:15; John 9:7; 5:2-7; 18:1; 2 Kings 20: 20; 2 Chron. 33:30-34; John 3: 23; 2 Sam. 2: 13; 4: 12. Above is mentioned the old pool, the new pool, the upper pool, the king's pool, etc. To show that those pools were for bathing see John 5: 2-7 many sick multitudes lay in the porches, waiting to step in after the angel troubled the water, etc. See J. A.

The writer when holding a discussion in Vanessa, Ontario, in 1887, with a Rev. gentleman by the name of Sims was told by him that Spirit baptism was a true representation of water baptism, and that Spirit was "poured out" on the people; therefore water baptism was by pouring and not "immersion." Let us look at this for a moment. Turn to John 3:5: "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." I think here is positive proof that Spirit baptism is immersion. We have, we trust, proven to your entire satisfaction that to be "born of water" is immersion; then, if so, to "be born of the Spirit" is immersion. Notice, we die, are "buried with Christ in baptism," (Rom. 6:4), we are dead and buried. Going from the element of air into the element of water, is here called a burial. "Thou fool, that which thou sowest [or plant or bury] is not quickened, except it die."—1 Cor. 15:36. To rise again we must have life, "be quickened;" so coming from the element of water into the element of air is called by "He who spake as never man spake" a birth. By a parity of reasoning, then, as "born of water" is immersion in water, it follows that to be "born of the Spirit" is immersion in the Spirit.

That men have been immersed in the Spirit is seen by the following: The Bible represents the body as being a house in which the Spirit lives. (See Job 10: 11); "Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews." Job 4:9: "How much less in them that dwell in houses of clay." Job 32:8-18: "There is a spirit in man," etc. Zech. 12:1: "God formeth the spirit of man within him." For further proof see Romans 7:22; 2 Cor. 4:7-16; 5:1-4; Romans 8:22-24; Eph. 3:9, etc. Now as man is dwelling in the body, "this tabernacle," if it is filled with the Holy Spirit, he is in the Spirit, or in other words, immersed in the Holy Spirit. For further proof that man may be immersed in the Spirit, read the following: "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit."—Gal. 5:25. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day."—Rev. 1:10. "And immediately I was in the Spirit."

—Rev. 4:2. Please read Acts 1:5, Iesus says: "For John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." Observe the same words are used in both water and Spirit baptism.

We have proved that the word baptize was rendered baptizo in Greek, taval in Hebrew, and that the most celebrated scholars have told us baptize, baptizo, and taval means to immerse; that John's baptism was immersion, from Acts 1:5. Then we have proof that the promised baptism of the Spirit would be immersion in Spirit as John's baptism was immersion in water. Read Luke 24:49: "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until you be endued with power from on high." The word endued is taken from the Greek word enduno, and means to immerse. But let us look at the passage where the account of the baptism of the Spirit was enjoyed by the apostles on the day of Pente-

Acts 2: 1-4: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place; and suddenly there was a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind and it filled all the house where they were sitting. . . . And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Casaubon speaking upon this very passage says: "To baptize is to immerse; and in this sense the apostles are truly said to be baptized, for the house in which this was done 'was filled with the Holy Ghost,' so that the apostles seemed to be plunged into it as into a fish pool."—R. Fuller, p.

Archbishop Tillotson on this passage says: "It [the sound from heaven] filled all the house. This is that which our Savior calls, baptizing with the Holy Ghost. So that they who sat in the house were, as it were, immersed in the Holy Ghost, as those who are buried with water, which is the proper notion of baptism."— Harding-Wilkinson debate, p. 122.

Neander, perhaps the greatest church historian says: "Baptism was performed by immersion as a sign of entire baptism into the Holy Spirit-of being entirely penetrated by the same."-History of Christian Religion, vol. 1, p. 310. Curtlerus in his Institute Theo. says:

"Baptism in the Holy Spirit is immersion into the pure waters of the Holy Spirit, for he on whom the Holy Spirit is poured out is, as it were, immersed into Him."-

R. Fuller, p. 19.

To conclude this part of the subject, permit me to draw your attention to the statement of a learned Bishop who lived about three centuries after this baptism took place. He presided over the church in the very city where this baptism occurred, this Bishop Cyril says: "As he who is plunged in the water and baptized is encompassed by the water on every side, so they that are baptized by the Holy Spirit are also wholly covered."-Pengilly, p.

75.
I now call your attention to a summary of the proofs I have adduced that Christian Baptism is immersion, and that the objections urged against it are not founded in facts:

1st, God sent John and Christ to baptize by immersion.

2d, Christ commissioned the apostles to baptize by immersion.

3d, That the only mode practiced for hundreds of years after the apostles had passed away was immersion.

4th, That the first case of [Clinic] baptism by sprinkling was A. D. 251.

5th, That all the learned lexicographers define the Greek word baptizo, (the word that occurs in the commission) "Immersion.'

6th, That the greatest encyclopedias affirm that for hundreds of years the Christian Church baptized by immersion

7th, That Church historians and celebrated ministers of both Roman and Protestant churches affirm that the primitive mode of baptism was immersion.

8th, That Naaman the leper was baptized by immersion.

9th, That wherever in the law dip or wash is given it means immersion.

10th, That all the sprinklings of the law were never with pure water, but always the water had blood or ashes mixed with

11th, That the sprinkling referred to in Ezekiel 36th has nothing to do with Christian baptism, but has been fulfilled.

12th, That the Methodist Church of Canada has forsaken not only the way of the Lord, in stating that the baptism referred to in Romans 6: 3, 4, and Colossians 2: 12 "had no reference to water baptism," but also the plain teaching of John Wesley, the man whom they profess to revere so much.

13th, That Dr. McKay's work on baptism is wrong where it says the word "into" does not mean "into," but "to," "from," "by," etc.

14th, That even if there were divers washings under the law they have fothing to do with Christian baptism, or "the one

15th, That the statement that the apostles could not baptize three thousand in one day is false.

16th, That the statement made concerning there not being enough water to baptize the three thousand in at Jerusalem is unfounded.

17th, That Spirit baptism is immersion. This is the first article I have ever written for the press on any Biblical subject. I have endeavored as much as possible to be silent myself, and let others who are wiser and more competent present this great subject to you. Be assured, dear reader, that it is far from me to desire controversy, but like one of old the ambition of my heart is to be about my Father's business. My only object in presenting this article for your consideration is that you may "learn the way of the Lord more perfectly," so that when you meet the Master the smiles of his approbation may rest upon you because of your having "kept the word of God." It has been the work of years for the writer to collect the matter that is herein presented for your consideration, thinking that if it was all compiled together it would not only convince some who are still out of the "Fold" but also be useful to my brethren of the ministry.

It is because I believe with my whole heart that "water baptism is immersion" that I went forth in cold weather and was baptized, and since then have so often been found breaking the ice and going down into the watery grave to baptize my fellow men. And now may our Father bless this article to the convincing of many that baptism is immersion, is the prayer of your friend and brother.

THE ULTIMATUM.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I still believe that exchange of thought and reasoning with each other honorable and necessary among Saints for mental and spiritual develop-But when a departure from that honorable procedure is evinced dominancy and special effort to justify self and condemn others ensues, I think it time to halt. So after reading your criticism in Herald for August the 5th [10th? ED.], without resorting to efforts to censure you or justify myself, I have decided to come to the halt. I know timorous yet well intended mortals will startle at the expression of adverse thoughts. But they need not, and though I would regret to know that my proceedure had added sadness to such souls, I have no apology to offer for the advocacy of that I believe to be a part of God's divine economy.

The church organ is supposed to reflect its doctrine, and if it exhibits what I can't defend I think myself at liberty to thus state it. This I essayed to do with no ill intent. My works and ways are my own. If faulty or wrong, none others will have to suffer. So I believe, and so teach. Latter Day Saints must learn if need be by what they suffer, that they should follow none, only as they follow Christ. I don't expect to plead for special favors. God's guaranteed rights and His law-imposed prerogatives, are all I claim. Nor do I wish to be efficient in adroitness to solicit applause or ward off just censure. And here I leave the matter for all to decide as they please. In gospel bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

THE GREAT HEREAFTER.

Among vague terms applied to the future world are the follows: "The great here-after," the other world," "futurity," "the great somewhere else," "the after life," "the farther shore," "the spirit world," "the unseen universe," "another life," "the great beyond." It is unnecessary to inform you that "the sweet ultimately" is an American term. A famous Frenchman, when dying, said he was about to go into the "great perhaps." Similar terms are "the dim unknown," and "the unknown dark." In poetry the future world is "the happy land, far, far away," the "land o' the leal," "the world beyond the stars," "daybreak," "the mansions of light," "Jerusalem the golden," "the better land," "the realms of the blessed," "the happy isles," "beyond the waveless sea," "the fair home above," "the realms of endless day," "the celestial shore," "the harbor of rest," "the sovereign dim illimitable ground." Camoens terms it "the somber shades avernal." Anglo-Saxon poems refer to "the green woods of paradise." Mrs. Barbauld calls it "the brighter clime." Goethe speaks of joining "the ghostly nation." Shakspeare terms it "the undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns." Edgar Allan Poe calls it "the distant Aiden." "the Plutonian shore," and "the Lethean peace of the skies." To the negroes of the southern states of America the future world is, both in conversation and hymns, "de oder side ob Jordan," "de shinin' strand," "de golden city," "de land ob Canaan," "Eden's blissful shore," or "Canaan's happy shore." To Bunyan heaven is "the celestial city" and "Sion the golden." To Col. Ingersoll the other world is a "shoreless sea." The Scotch call it the "eternal Sabbath." To the red Indian of North America the future is "the happy hunting grounds." Bover says: "We journey across the isthmus of now to the continent of then."

The general term applied by the ancients to the future dwelling-place of spirits was "the under world," and this term has been much employed in medieval and modern A similar term is "the nether world." According to the ancient Persians all spirits returned to Ormuzd, the vital principle of life and motion. Karins of Burmah called heaven "the new city." Buddhism teaches that the future life will be blissful quiescence in Nirvana. The Mussulman's "Al Araf" is the region between Paradise and Hades, where those who are neither good nor bad remain. When engaged in battle the Slavonians shout "Hu-ray!" ("to Paradise!") The spirit of the good Japanese when he dies eats of the wasuregusa, or herb of forgetfulness, and all sad memories are thus dispelled and the soul is "tranced by its taste for ever more."

The Egyptians believed that immediately after death the soul descended into the lower world called Amenti, and was conducted to the "hall of truth," where it was judged in the presence of Osiris and of his forty-two assessors. The good were then conducted to Ahlu, or the "pools of peace." These were the dwelling-places of the blest. The wicked were condemned to a series of transmigrations in the bodies of animals. If after many trials sufficient purity was not attained they were condemned to complete annihilation by Shu, the Lord of Light. In the mythology of Greece and Rome the abode of the dead is named Hades, or the realm of Pluto. The proper name of this region was Erebus, which was the dwellingplace of the righteous as well as the wicked. This was in later times divided into Tartarus, where the wicked were confined. and Elvsium, the abode of the blessed-English Rare Bits.

COST OF SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.

According to the calculations of Villal-pandus the talents of gold, silver, and brass used in the construction of Solomon's Temple amounted to £6,876,822,500. The jewels are reckoned to have exceeded this sum, but for the sake of an estimate let their value be set down at the same amount. The vessels of gold consecrated to the use of the Temple are reckoned by Josephus at 140,000 talents, which, according to Capel's reduction, are equal to $545,296,203.

The vessels of silver are computed at 1,340,000 talents, or £489.344,000. The vestments of the priests cost 10,000; the purple of the singers, $2,000,000 The trumpets amounted to £200,000; other musical instruments to £40 000. To these expenses must be added those of other materials, the timber and stone, and of the labor being employed upon them, the labor being divided thus: There were 10,000 men engaged at Lebanon hewing timber; there were 70,000 bearers of burdens, 20,000 hewers of stone, and 3,300 overseers, all of whom were employed for seven years, and upon whom besides their wages and diet, Solomon bestowed gold and silver to the value of £6.733,977. the daily food of each man be estimated at 4s. 6d. (English money) the sum total will be £93,877,088. The costly stone and the timber in the rough may be set down as at least equal to one-third the gold, or about £2,545.296,000. The food used by the workers, the wages of the same, and the gold, brass, and silver used during the seven years of construction, according to the above estimates, could not have amounted to less than the enormous sum of £17.442,443,268 English money, or about $77,221,965.636 in current money of the United States!

Miscellaneous.

Department of the Interior, Census Office, Washington, D. C., Oct. 1, 1889. To the Editor of the Saints' Herald:

Dear Sir:—Having determined to include Church Statistics in the special inquiries to be made for the Eleventh Census, I wish to announce to you and through you to your readers, my desire and purpose to obtain the fullest and most accurate results possible in this special department. I need not enlarge upon the value of such results to any who are in any wise interested in Church work and progress, and wish to know the numerical strength of the various religious denominations of the United States.

The inquiry will be broad enough in scope to embrace every religious body, of whatever name or creed, however few or many its churches and members, and it will be conducted with the utmost fairness and impartiality. The information sought will be arranged under five heads: (1) Organizations or societies; (2) Church edifices; (3) Seating capacity; (4) Value of church property; (5) Communicants. This is as much, in my judgment, as it will be wise to undertake in this direction for the eleventh Census.

In order to prosecute this plan successfully and to make the results so thorough and accurate that they cannot be impeached, the government will have to count largely on the prompt and generous co-operation of those in each denomination who are in a position to furnish the information desired. This information can not be gathered by the enumerators. They are already fully burdened; and the appropriations available for the Census will not admit of the appointment of special enumerators for this work. It is necessary, therefore, to make Church Statistics a special inquiry, and they must be gathered chiefly by schedules placed in the hands of some competent person in each of the minor ecclesiastical subdivisions of the various churches.

The conduct of this special inquiry has been committed to a gentleman whose qualifications for the work will, I am sure, be instantly recognized. H. K. Carroll, L.L. D., editor of "The Independent," of New York, has consented to assume the duties of the position. Dr. Carroll is now engaged in preparing plans for such a division of the territory of each denomination as will make it comparatively easy for those to whom his inquiries will be addressed to give a prompt and faithful response. I ask for him, and I am sure you will heartily second me, such cheerful and generous assistance as he may require from officers of the denomination you represent.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT P. PORTER,

Robert P. Porter,
Superintendent of Census.

NOTICES.

I wish to remind the Saints of Colorado that I am agent for the Bishop of the church in this state, and the coffers or the store-house of the Lord is quite empty, not anything to feed those that are hungry and thirsting for the bread of life. Now is a good time for all to send in their tithes and offerings so that there may be meat in the Lord's house, and thereby prove the Lord and see if He will not pour out a blessing upon you, according to His promise in the third chapter of Malachi, and also as the wise man said in Proverbs 3:9, "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst with new wine." What a glorious promise this is to encourage all to give to the Lord!

Let all remittances be sent to me at Hutchinson by registered letter or post office money order, payable at Morrison, Jefferson county, Colorado. JAMES KEMP.

To Whom it May Concern:

Whereas the Southern California District conference did, on October 20th, 1888, refer the Laguna branch to the missionary in charge; and whereas at a subsequent conference, viz, on October 7th, 1889, said district in conference assembled did refuse to sustain all officers in said branch except a secretary; I therefore hereby appoint Elder A. W. Thompson in charge of said branch until Thursday, December 26th, 1889, at 7:30 p. m., at which time there will be an election of branch officers at a place to be appointed by said Elder A. W. Thompson, and publicly announced by him at least thirty days prior to said election.

IS IT A BIBLE?

The delicate duty of deciding whether or not the Mormon Bible is authentic has devolved upon the customs department. If really a Bible, the duty to be levied upon it is but five per cent, but if not a Bible, it is a mere book, taxable at the rate of fifteen per cent. The department has levied the higher duty, thus practically determining that the work is no revelation, but the production of human intellect. Here is a ruling that will not be questioned in this community.—

SHOULD LATTER DAY SAINTS OBEY THE LAWS OF THE LAND?

THERE is no religious people in the United States who are under greater obligation to live within the observance of the laws of the country than are the Latter Day Saints.

In the word of the Lord, given July, 1828, it is stated:

"The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to nought, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand. nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round."

God chose the land of America to be the land upon which he proposed to establish his work, which was to be a "marvel-ous work and a wonder." To accomplish this he gave commandments unto Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris and others, by virtue of which commands the church was organized April 6th, 1830; "it being regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God," as is stated in the account of the rise of the church in section 17, Plano and Lamoni editions, section 2 and 20 of other

In perfect harmony with this is the statement of section 20 (47 and 22). The Lord in this revelation said:

"For you can not enter in at the straight gate by the law of Moses, neither by your dead works; for it is because of your dead works, that I have caused this last covenant, and this church, to be built up unto me; even as in days of old."

This establishment of the church by the everlasting covenant was by command of God in agreement with the law of the country where God says, "I have caused" . it to be done. For this reason he who would trace the history of the church subsequent to its organization, and read of God's commands given to the church for its government and direction, would very naturally expect that such commands and revelations would be in harmony with this pre-stated design; and we shall see whether this was the case.

In a revelation given to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, February, 1831, respecting the calling of the elders of the church together for consultation and instruction, the Lord said:

"Inasmuch as they are faithful and exercise faith in me, I will pour out my Spirit upon them in the day that they assemble themselves together. And it shall come to pass that they shall go forth into the regions round about, and preach repentance unto the people; and many shall be converted, insomuch that ye shall obtain power to organize yourselves according to the laws of man, that your enemies may not have any power over you, that you may be preserved in all things, that you may be enabled to keep my laws, that every band may be broken wherewith the enemy seeketh to destroy my people."

One of the objects to be attained by the people of God, as stated in this quotation, is the preservation of the people in such way that they would be enabled to keep the laws of God; and the way to secure this result was in organizing "according to the laws of man,"—the laws of the states where the people should be converted.

In August of the same year, in a revela-tion directed to the "Elders of my church," the Lord gave the following:

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light shall ye hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom."

If that which was then spoken was "wisdom," the opposite of it would be folly. It was wisdom then in God, that the church should neither break, nor distegard the laws of the land as a body, nor direct or encourage its members to do so individually. It is not presumptive to infer from this statement that God, who had commanded the organization of the church according to the laws of the country, would himself observe the rule he gave, and would not give, as he already had not given, any command to the church to observe which would require the church or its members to break the law of the land; and this rule He would himself not disregard until He came whose right it is to reign. Of this coming the Lord had told them in February, 1831, section 41

"And I will be your ruler when I come; and behold I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept."

That there was no change in this principle of observance of law is discoverable from a revelation given August, 1833, $ection 93 (86, 98), the second paragraph of which reads:

"And now verily I say unto you, concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all these things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting the principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore I, the Lord, justifieth you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to the law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these cometh of evil. I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore ye are free indeed; and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless, when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good and wise men, ve should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these, cometh of

In this commandment there is nothing which, in the remotest degree, teaches that the right to determine what is, or what is not constitutional law rests with the church as a body, or with its members as individuals. The church is justified in keeping that law that is the "constitutional law" of the land. The right to determine the character of the law, whether it is in keeping with the constitution, under which the rights of the American citizen are held, rests with those in whom the constitution itself rests that right; and it would be a strange and striking impeachment of the wisdom of Him who gave the rule and said, "Behold, here is wisdom," for any of those to whom this revelation of his will came to say that He did not know what that revelation was, and what its provisions for determining what was in accordance with itself.

The possibility that there would be a time when the church, or some in it, might rise up and assume to decide for themselves whether any given law was constitutional or otherwike, seems to have been forshadowed in the same revelation which enjoins it upon the church to keep the laws, for it is there stated:

"Let no man think he is ruler, but let God rule him that judgeth, according to the counsel of his own will; or, in other words, him that counseleth or sitteth upon the judgment seat."

This was given in direct connection with the commandment and rule concerning inheritances in Zion, and of it the Lord had said: "My law shall be kept on this land."

That God, who directed the minds of those men whom he raised up unto the purpose of framing the constitution of the United States, upon principles which should conserve the purposes he had in view to accomplish in establishing the church including the legislative, the judiciary and the executive departments of the government provided for in that document, should have been so oblivious to any rule or law contemplated by him as necessary to the institution and perpetuation of that church to be given to it direct, by which the church should be required to come into conflict with such principles and provisions for governmental purposes, is not admissable for a single moment. Hence we conclude that the tribunal before which "the constitutional law" of the land is to be determined is not the church, neither as a body in its general assembly, nor in any of its councils; much less does such prerogative attach to any portion of the church that may have elected to adopt some dogma, or tenet, not based in the law of the Lord but contrary thereunto; but is that body of judges provided for in the constitution, which should be to all Latter Day Saints God's constitution of the United States.

In this light it is evident that the men who composed the church in 1835 held their obligation to observe the law of the land, for their opinion then was:

"We believe that rulers, states and governments have a right, and are bound to enact laws for the protection of all citizens in the free exercise of their religious belief; but we do not believe that they have a right in justice, to deprive citizens of this privilege or proscribe them in their opinions, so long as a regard and reverence are shown to the laws, and such religious opinious do not justify sedition nor conspiracy."

So long then, as the church exists in the United States, it must show "a regard and reverence" for the laws of that political government; and whenever the church, or any portion, or fraction of it shall show disregard for, or fail in reverence to the laws, then, by confession of the church itself, government has a right to punish such infraction by enactments providing penalties adequate to enforce observance of the laws. If Latter Day Saints observe the laws of the United States to keep them, then they can have just claim for protection under those laws and have confidence to ask for justice at the hands of the administrators of the law in the courts provided for in the constitution. They can then also have confidence to trust in God to so provide by his unseen agencies that just men shall be chosen as such administrators, to the end that innocent men may not suffer unjust penalties, nor His great work be hindered, nor His purposes prostrated. If Latter Day Saints keep within the pale of the law, then shall they be justified and preserved by the law. But if they put themselves outside the pale of the law, then shall they be found to be transgressors, subject to condemnation under the law, and not entitled to justification, nor protection, nor preservation by the given for the government of the church, and the laws of the United States are corelative in the hands of God, for the accomplishment of His divine purposes to give political freedom, and right religious liberty to all men, according to the statement that "that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privi-leges belongs to all mankind."

We believe that the law of the Lord,

Therefore, brethren, let us be good citizens, observant of the laws of our country, under and by virtue of which we have our citizenship, and be thankful that no law given of God to the church requires us to violate those laws.

CHURCH DEDICATION, ETC.

On Sunday the 27th ult., by request of Bro. William Leeka, president of the Plum Creek branch, near McPaul, Iowa, we assisted in the dedication of the Saints new chapel, one and a half miles east of Thurman and near the residence of father John Leeka. The chapel is a frame structure, 36x48 feet on the ground, and nearly 20 feet from floor to ceiling. The painting and papering are in good taste; chairs are used in seating; the pulpit is shapely and well furnished; two large incandescent lamps light nicely the body of the room, and two ample stand lamps are placed on pulpit and organ. As a whole, the chapel reflects great credit on the branch and their friends, and we confidently hope it will richly bless them and their neighbors for all time to come.

As early as half an hour before service time-II a. m.—the house was well packed with an intelligent and most orderly congregation. The choir, under the direction of Bro. George Kemp, sang two well selected voluntaries, and then the regular services began by the singing of hymn 768, from Saints' Harp, followed by prayer by Elder Henry Kemp, then hymn 767 was sung. Psalms, chapters 8 and 1, also John 4: 1-26, was read and briefly commented on, after which Matt. 24:14 and Rev. 14:6-8 were given as texts for the occasion, and then followed the sermon by the writer, setting forth the nature, purposes, and general objects of the work committed of God to the Saints, also the means and methods ordained of heaven by which that work must be carried forward to present and final success. This was followed by a concise relation of the history of the church from its beginning in 1830, including the falling away and scattering, also the rise and progress of the Reorganization, its prophetic origin, its inspirational guidance and confirmation, also its prospects for future progress. After this came the collection and song 1063, then the dedication prayer by the writer, followed by hymn 13 and the benediction. The services were rather prolonged yet none seemed wearied, the best of order and attention was paid throughout, all seemed interested, and some were very joyful.

At 2:30 p. m. the writer addressed the large congregation again—this time on the marvelous, glorious provisions the Lord has prepared those who love and serve him-from 1 Cor. 2: 9. The Spirit of God attended the word spoken giving most cheering assurances that these promises are yea and amen.

Bro. M. H. Forscutt arriving from Nebraska City at about 3:30 p.m., he was announced for the evening service, and at 7:15 p. m. he delivered a most acceptable sermon on John 10:1-29 to a large and appreciative congregation.

Thus passed a very eventful, happy and prosperous day in what is commonly known as the Plum Hollow branch.

Monday, the 28th, the district conference convened, and with despatch and excellent order disposed of its business in a manner satisfactory to all. At 7:30 p.m. the writer preached a gospel sermon in the Saints' chapel to an attentive congregation and was richly blessed with the Spirit's aid and comfort.

It was arranged that Bro. Forscutt should continue services Tuesday and Wednesday nights, and that afterwards Bro. J. R. Lambert would hold services there nightly and over Sunday, the writer in the meantime to hold meetings on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings in Nebraska City, he intending to reach Lamoni the Friday following. And thus the good work moves on apace.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME. THE ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME WOULD SMELL AS SWEET."

APOSTLE MOSES THATCHER, of the Utah Church, said in an interruption to Pres. Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church, while the latter was delivering a discourse in the Tabernacle in Logan, Cache county, Utah, September 25th, 1889, upon the marriage institution as established by the Creator, and as shown in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants: "We don't believe in polygamy and never did." Apostle Franklin D. Richards in a chapter furnished by him to George J. Hagar, for his work entitled "What the World Believes; the False and the True," on page 604 of that work, says: The Bible—King James' translation—has been one of the great implements in the establishment of Mormon Polygamy. On page 606 of those who marry more than one wife: "These are the class, as a rule, that enter into polygamy." On page 607 in reference to the conditions and arguments forming plural marriage he says: "All this must be taken into account in an endeavor to understand the workings of Mormon polygamy." On the same page he says: "Of course there are cases of unhappiness and discord in polygamous relations." "Both men and women, in polygamy as in monogamy, sometimes act foolishly, or wickedly, or both." "The very opportunities that polygamy affords," etc. "The teachers . . report that as a rule there is far less family trouble in the polygamous than in the monogamous households." "When all its aspects are viewed impartially, there will be more general surprise that men will assume the multiplied responsibilities of Mormon polygamy, than that women can assume their position in the system." On page 608 in reference to the election franchise in Utah, he says: "The polygamists are all disfranchised. No one can vote or hold of-fice who is a polygamist." "The polygamists have no voice in the matter for they have no votes."

The dictionaries give the following definitions: "Polygamy is the state of having several wives at the same time." "Polygamist, n, one who practices polygamy.'

Moses Thatcher, apostle, and Franklin D. Richards, also an apostle of the Utah church, believe in the plurality of wives, "several (two or more) wives at the same time;" and it is currently believed that the first named has been in the practice of such belief. If the definitions of such words polygamy and polygamist are correct then is not Apostle Moses Thatcher a polygamist?

Who speaks for the Mormon Church; apostle and associate historian, Franklin D. Richards, or Apostle Moses Thatcher?

We are anxious to know.

THEOLOGICAL STRAWS.

HERE is a religious medley which will furnish some straws to indicate the direction of the theological wind of doctrine. The various questions which suggest themselves on reading some of the following, especially the first three, are too numerous to be discussed here. Suffice it to say that we present them that the ministry and membership may obtain some idea of the general condition and trend of modern religious bodies.

It is comforting to know that the gospel of Jesus Christ needs no modification, amendment or revision. Every revelation harmonizes with what has preceded it, and thus the things of the past, present and future are before us; each in its place serving its great purpose. Other men have labored and we have entered into their labors; and in the completed building, "that glorious church without spot or wrinkle or any such thing," we shall have eternal residence if clothed upon with the wedding garment. Let us then, appreciating and living by the truth, "be up and doing, . "still achieving, still pursuing," and be heroes "in the strife."

The following are the items:

Dr. McCosh is a strong advocate of a revision of the Westminister confession.

In his sermon before the Protestant Episcopal General convention last week the venerable Bishop Whipple expressed the opinion that we are now living in the eventide of the world, and suggested that there were weightier matters for an apostolic church to busy itself with than any projects of name-changing or canon-tinkering.

Many will be surprised, says a religious paper, to learn that Mr. Spurgeon, the famous Baptist preacher of London, was never ordained. He is quoted as saying: "I never have been ordained and never intend to be. When a church chooses a man to be its pastor, that man is ordained, if God has called him and filled him with the Holy Spirit and power."

The tobacco question in its various ramifications is now worrying the brains of the clergymen of the United Presbyterian body throughout the country. Last year's general assembly handed down two overtures for the consideration of presbyteries. The first proposition is to so amend the "book of government of the church" that any theological student who uses tobacco shall be refused license to preach, and the second that no church member who uses tobacco shall be eligible to the office of elder. The Philadelphia presbytery will act on the matter in January.

In one of the London churches women who have received the benefit of choir rehearsals are seated in twos and threes throughout the congregation to guide the singing, which is joined in much more readily for the presence of these assured leaders.

Evangelical churchmen in England are terribly alarmed at the prospect of a revival of the monastic system in the Anglican church. The subject will be discussed at the next session of con-

A doctor of divinity in the New York Observer regrets the number of people who go to church and come away from its services unable to remember the text.

The Moravians, though small in number and wealth, have sent out during the last century 25,000 missionaries and expended $300,000 yearly. They have nine mission ships.

The American board's missionaries in Japan send on an urgent appeal for re-enforcements. Thirty-five additional men and women are needed at once, they say.

Cardidal Gibbons claims a Catholic population for the United States of about 9,000,000.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ALL credits for remittances received since October 7th will not appear on the HER-ALD list for two weeks yet, owing to the absence of the superintendent of the mechanical department, who makes all such changes on the printed mail lists.

Bro. M. R. Scott lately wrote from Galena, Indiana, concerning the brightening prospects for the work in southern Indiana. Like the dropping of the water upon the rock the steady and well directed efforts made in presenting the faith were having their effect and some are obeying the gospel, and the plans of opposers are being frustrated. The branch at Byrnville recently organized with six members now numbers sixteen. Bro. Scott strongly endorses a late editorial entitled, "Talk not judgment," etc.

Elder Leonard Scott of Michigan paid a brief visit to Lamoni while on his way home from the Reunion.

Bro. W. W. Blair left home on Friday the 25th ult. to attend a church dedication and hold services at Thurman, Iowa.

The St Joseph, Missouri, Herald of Saturday, October 16th, reaches us, containing a column devoted to a description of some of the leading clergymen of that place, in which we find a good and complimentary notice of Elder Mark H Forscutt and his labors.

Bro S. P. Sherrill wrote October 20th from Groesbeck, Limestone county, Texas, that he was battling against great odds there in his endeavors to acquaint the people with the truth. He had prepared the way by distributing the printed word among them.

Bro. Isaac True, of Canton, Ohio, writing under date of October 21st says: "I would be glad if some of our ministers would give me a call when passing through this part of the country, for there are a great many souls here who are perishing for the bread of life. I think this city would be a good place to accomplish a great work. I hope the Lord will send some brother to preach here."

A Washington, D. C., telegram, of the 21st has this to say of a portion of the report of Governor G. L. Shoup, of Idaho:

"He states, that he has reason to believe that a division of sentiment is springing up in the [Mormon] church on the subject of the practice of polygamy."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. K. E. Richardson of Williamsburg, Nebraska, wrote October 22d:

"The Herald is the only means I have of learning what is going on in Zion. I am a lone sheep, starving to be fed at my Master's table and would be content if I could have the privilege of meeting with the Saints once a month. I do wish a branch could be started somewhere near here. I am so tired of false doctrine. My faith is confirmed in the gospel, and I wish I was near a branch. I might be of some use. As it is I am a useless member."

Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., wrote lately from Manchester, England, as follows:

"We held our quarterly reunion meeting at Leeds, on the 6th instant. Had a good gathering and pleasant time. One name was given in for baptism at the close of service. Last Sunday, in company with Elder Wm. R. Armstrong, we occupied the "Valley Mission Room," Atherton, near Chowbent. Had much liberty and a sympathizing audience. We held two services, and now await further developments. The "Harmony" is well spoken of here."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques - Whose prerogative is it to appoint branch meetings; both business and religious? also to change appointments in regard to time, the branch or the presiding officer?

Ans.—Branch meetings should be appointed by the presiding officers of the branch with the consent of the members when practicable. Changes in appointments either in respect to time or place should be made in the same way. Cases or exigences may arise in respect to such matters, making it impracticable if not impossible for the officers to consult the membership. Business meetings usually are had at stated times on regular appointments. The Rules of Order should be consulted in regard to these matters.

2.—Should a teacher in striving with the members in regard to their duties speak to them and get them to abstain from the use of tobacco?

A-Yes; and from every other evil and error.

2.—Are members excusable in not partaking of the emblems because the one officiating handles tobacco previous to breaking the bread?

A .- No; unless the emblems are defiled by uncleanness on the part of the administrator in the act of handling the emblems. All should be careful to not "strain at a gnat."

Is not the law of tithing just as binding and as necessary to salvation as the command to be baptized?

A.-No. The duty of baptism applies to many who are are under no duty to pay tithing. Those who can aid by tithing and donations to help the poor and needy and forward the work of gospel ministration should do so promptly and cheerfully, and are under condemnation when failing to do so, either wilfully or negligently. Financial aid must be rendered to the church, and all those in a condition to do so are under covenant obligation to give it. But there are some who can only say, "If I had I would give;" and others there are whose business complications hinder more or less. All should aid as they can.

Wothers' Kome Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Somewhat of goodness, something true From sun and spirit shining through All faiths, all worlds, as through the dark Of ocean shines the lighthouse spark, Attest the presence everywhere Of love and providential care."

REPLYING to a question from a sister in reference to the Prayer Union, we say, No, we do not think it wrong, for it was a voluntary matter upon your part, entirely optional with you, and if circumstances prevent your complying, there is no wrong done by withdrawing; but we do say that if it is possible for you to give the hour, that it will be greatly to your loss to withdraw. Our own experience is this: It is not possible for us to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, without the food of secret prayer. We need it in order to grow spiritually, just as much as the body needs food to sustain the natural life. Organization is not necessary and in the beginning was not contemplated. It was to be an individual matter, a consecration by the individual and meeting with Him only who has said, "There will I be and that to bless." Its good, its power and its blessing was to result from the united faith and prayer. The agreement as touching one thing for which they should ask the Father in the name of the Son. Many, however, preferred organizations and so founded them. Public prayer, the lifting of the heart in praver to God when no words are spoken, are necessary and have their place, each and all; but they can not take the place of secret prayer, and without this as we have before said, the Christian can not grow. If you can not give the whole hour, give a part and if it is not always the same hour let it be an hour or the portion of an hour of the same day; but if it is not possible to give either, God never requires impossibilities.

SR. MARY WRIGHT, of Merlin, Kent county, Ontario, wishes Sr. Ellen Young to please write to her as she has lost your address.

INSTRUCTION GIVEN BY THE SPIRIT THROUGH SR. A. FRANCE.

AT THE SAINTS TESTIMONY MEETING IN LAMONI, OCTOBER 20TH, 1889.

Hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord, for I say unto you that inasmuch as you come near unto me, I will draw near unto you and bless you with the Comforter, and you shall know that I the Lord liveth. But have you cherished in your hearts all the promises that I have communicated unto you in my word? I say unto you Nay.

Behold, I say unto you that inasmuch as you will treasure them, I will bless you.

I will bless you with wisdom and will strengthen you and give you evidences of my truth.

I say unto you, be faithful, O ye my people. You know that it is written in my Scriptures that I will write my law in your hearts, and I will be your God and you shall be my people.

I have blessings for you, and they shall be poured out upon you, yea, the messengers of heaven shall minister unto you, and you shall rejoice and know that God liveth; and many shall rejoice in me in receiving that assurance that the prayer of faith of the humble contrite heart has been heard, and answered. I say unto you put away those things that offend, put away those things that produce discord and contention, and remember that I the Lord have forbiden O, my people, I warn you you that the time will come when there shall be a division of those who serve me, and those who do not; and they that serve me shall know that I am with them to confirm, to strengthen, and to bless, and when my Saints from a distance ask your prayers in their behalf, your prayers shall be heard and answered.

Is it not written in my word, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock, if you hearken unto my voice, and open the door, I will come in unto you, and sup with you."

O, be ye humble and faithful, and when you come together for my worship, see that your hearts are prepared before me, and I will be with you, saith the Spirit of the Lord.

Amen.

Through the kindness of Bro. Edwin Stafford, who took it down in shorthand, we are enabled to present the Home Column readers with the above instruction of the Spirit, it being one among many given to the Saints in the Lamoni branch at recent meetings.

Many thoughts have occurred to us lately in regard to those manifestations of the Spirit, in connection with the tender mercy and long forbearance of God toward us.

James speaks of men beholding their natural face in the glass and going away and forgetting immediately what manner of man they are; and to us it seems that from time to time we meet together, earnestly desiring for the Spirit of God to meet with us and impart instruction to us, and then even more quickly than we forget the likeness of our natural faces, as we have seen them reflected in the mirror, we go away and fail to honor God by obeying the admonitions given by the Holy Spirit.

Hear the pleading of the Father through the Comforter: "Have you cherished in your hearts all the promises that I have communicated unto you in my word? I say unto you, Nay."

Here the Spirit sits in judgment upon us, we are weighed in the balance and found wanting. We have not cherished the promises of God as it is pleasing in his sight that we should have done and yet from Sabbath to Sabbath we ask for more.

Dear Saints, let us beseech you to stop and reflect, how great, how precious are the promises which this one communication of God to us contains! It is to all who are scattered—to all in any branch of the church, yes, to each one called to be a Saint, no matter where, no matter how humble, how weak or how little known to their brethren or sisters, such an one is known to God and this communication with its gentle admonitions as well as its glorious promises is for them as well as for us. Let us read it again carefully and separate the reproof from the blessings promised and note also the conditions upon which those blessings will be given.

First then, the charges brought against us as a people:

We have not in our hearts cherished the promises of God.

We have not put away those things which produce discord and contention, and have not remembered that God has forbidden them.

Second, the promises given:

Promise: I will draw near unto you and bless you with the Comforter, and you shall know that I live.

Condition: Come near unto me.

Promise: I will bless you with wisdom, will strengthen you and give you evidences of my truth.

Condition: Inasmuch as you will treasure my promises contained in my word.

Promise: I have blessings for you and they shall be poured out upon you, yea, the messengers of heaven shall minister unto you and you shall rejoice in me and know that God liveth, and many shall rejoice in me through receiving the assurance that the prayer of faith of the humble, contrite heart has been heard and answered.

Condition: Be faithful O, ye my people! Put away those things which offend. Put away those things which produce discord. I the Lord have forbidden them.

Promise: I will come in to you and sup with you.

Condition: I stand at the door and knock, if you hearken unto my voice and open the door.

Could Saints of God possibly ask for greater blessings than are here promised? If not, then what should hinder our having them?

Can we for a moment suppose that in any age or dispensation of the world the people of God obtained or inherited more than they lived for? Some of us will attain unto every blessing here promised and some of us will fail to attain unto any, for, beside the gentle admonitions and the glorious promises contained in this voice of the Spirit to us, there is also a solemn warning of that which the Spirit foresees is to be, namely:

Oh, my people, I warn you that the time will come when there shall be a division of those who serve me, and those who do not and they that serve me shall know that I am with them to confirm, to strengthen, to bless, and when my Saints from a distance shall ask your prayers in their behalf, your prayers shall be heard and answered."

How many of us have stumbled over the shortcomings of our neighbors and being pierced by the tongue of the backbiter, wounded by the scorpion sting of the retailer of scadal, have forgotten that there is a time coming when the Lord will separate the just from the unjust and have telt in our souls that it was vain to serve God, for even to his very altars we have been pursued and our testimonies before him have been derided. Let us remember that the time of separation will surely come, and until then let us only be careful, oh, so careful that we walk humbly and uprightly before our God. Has selfishnesss or want of friendly feeling hurt us, have we in any way suffered at the hands of others, let us forgive and forget, for the Lord will arise in judgment and will plead the cause of his Saints and he will separate those who serve him from those who do not. Let us pity them, therefore, and strive to win them to a better life, for if we indeed have the spirit of the Master, our souls will yearn over those who are laying up for themselves unavailing regret when the time of separation shall come.

ARE PARENTS RESPONSIBLE?

The responsibility of parents in training children to make successfuf men and women is not realized by many parents as it should be; but not upon them alone does this accountability devolve, it is shared by all who are brought in contact with these little gatherers of knowledge. There are circumstances sometimes beyond the control of parents that modify and counteract the teaching of their children and make or mar their successful manhood or womanhood.

A child's brain may be aptly compared to the sensitive plate of the photographer. It needs but a moment's exposure to good or bad influences, either of deportment or speech, to imprint upon its surface the lines that make a good or bad impression. We are not as parents sufficiently alive to the fact, that this highly sensitive organ is being continually exposed and is continually recording both the good and bad alike, as it is subjected to these influences; and too, like the sensitive plate, it gives the clearest impression of those things to which it is exposed the longest, and parents are being daily shamed or edified, often the former, by the impressions imprinted on those little brains coming to light.

Among the circumstances spoken of is an atmosphere laden with the sayings, doings and wearings of others; need I say, matter not calculated either to enrich or ennoble speaker or hearer; the more frequently dealing with the faults and follies of others, not to be mentioned outside the circle in which they are committed and then with bated breath. Of the authors of such Addison says: "A third kind of female orator may be comprehended under the word gossip. Mrs. Fiddle Faddle is perfectly accomplished in this sort of eloquence; she launches out into dissertations upon the edging of a petticoat; runs divisions upon a head dress; knows every dish of meat that is served in her neighborhood; and entertains her company a whole afternoon with the wit of her little boy before he is able to speak."

It is very hard in a mixed household to keep the watchful eye and ear from seeing and hearing much that is harmful and especially where there is a Mrs. Fiddle Faddle.

That the continuous hearing of this sort of "eloquence" is pernicious to the young is to put it mildly. It soon bears fruit, the little one, if she be a girl-and girls are more impressed by this kind of talk-begins to say of a visitor, "Mrs. M. had on a blue overskirt;" "Mrs. T. had her hair banged;" "Florence has the measles;" and telling, as they are remembered, conversations ad nauseam, fit only to be heard by grown geople, and they the Fiddle Faddles. The little mind thus continually exposed, the faculty grows, these things become second nature, and if radical measures are not taken to counteract these tendencies, in coming years another is added to the Fiddle Faddle family.

Another error made by parents, and leading to the same result, is laughing and tacitly encouraging the children when such smart (?) observations—in the very nature of the above—are made, instead of admonishing or passing them over in silence.

It can not be too strongly insisted upon, that as the twig is bent so will the tree be inclined, and if a child breathes an atmosphere laden with dissertations on the edging of petticoats, what Mrs. Smith or Mrs. Jones said, what they had for dinner, and perhaps tinctured with malice-or at least uncharitableness-in coming years it will develop a fondness for this sort of edification and these sort of people to the exclusion of those nobler thoughts and feelings that go to make the perfect man or woman.—Sel.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Sr. Sheppard; of Medina, Texas, requests your faith and prayers in behalf of her little daughter, Lenora, that God will restore her to perfect MEMORY TEXTS FOR DECEMBER. First Thursday, Isaiah 32: 15-18. Second Thursday, Col. 3: 1-6; D. and C. 61:6. Third Thursday, Isa. 32: 20. Fourth Thursday, 1 Nephi 3:41.

ELEANOR.

Dow CITY, Iowa, Oct. 18th.

Dear Sister Frances:-It has been some time since I reported the progress of our Prayer Union. We meet as usual every Thursday afternoon at three o'clock, at the church. Nearly all of the sisters of the branch take part in the meetings, and even those who have been so backward are taking right hold and doing their duty. Yes, we have all been blessed and strengthened and been made to rejoice.

"The Lord hath truly blessed us. In this the latter day; In Spirit he doth answer us, When we do humbly pray."

Only yesterday the Lord heard and answered our prayers in behalf of our aged sister who was sick in our midst. Dear sisters of the Prayer Union, do not forget us in your prayers and also will you remember the ministry? I have two brothers who are preaching the gospel. The youngest is in that far away country, Australia. Do not forget him in your prayers. Did you see the piece in the September number of the Autumn Leaves "Look after your boys?" Sisters, he is young in years and young in the church and has neither father or mother to speak a kind and loving word, as they were taken from us when he was quite young. He has left all that is near and dear to him for the gospel's sake.

There are many trials and temptations for him to pass through, but there is an all-wise unseen Father who will guide and care for him and us if we are faithful.

I desire an interest in your prayers that when Christ comes I may be one that will enter in to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Your sister in the one faith,

JENNIE BAKER.

STOCKTON, California, Oct. 18th.

Dear Sister Francis: When I read your earnest calls for help it makes me feel that I am not doing all I might do, but then when I read in the Home Column the letters from the sisters oh I wish I could write like them-write something that stirs us up, makes us wish we could do better, could do more for the work we love so well. I wish to tell the sisters of the Home Column how much good their letters do me and for them not to be weary in well doing, for the "Lord knoweth the path that we take," so says his servant Job, and we know the Lord does bless us when we do right. I wish to bear a testimony to this work for I know it is of God. My prayers have been answered many times and sometimes miraculously in healings and other special blessings. What a comfort to the Saints to know the Lord hears and answers us when we ask in faith believing. And I would say to those Saints who are sick to exercise faith, and God will send them answers of peace through the prayers of the "Union."

AUNT SARAH.

MALTA, Idaho, Oct. 17th.

Dear Sister Walker:-The sisters of the Malta branch met at Sr. Leonard Condit's the 21st of last March, and organized a Prayer Union, choosing Sr. Frances Condit president, and Sr. Secor secretary secretary; and afterwards Sr. Addie Condit was chosen treasurer. There are seven names on the roll; but as three have moved away, only four are left to meet regularly. We have since organized a Mite Society in connection with the Prayer Union.

We meet at 2:30 p.m. on Thursday, spend an hour in reading the Scripture, singing, prayer and testimony, after which we work another hour at piecing quilts, and doing fancy work. We hope before long to make a sale and thus be able to bring in a little for the Sabbath School. The members pay fifteen cents dues per month, and donate as much as we feel disposed.

We have been greatly blessed since we began this work, and although we have not had the gifts, God's Spirit has been with us and we have been made to rejoice many times.

We have had a number of cases of healing in our branch also, which makes us feel that God is still merciful to us. The writer can truly testify to the goodness of God in this respect. She was very near death's door a few weeks ago, her husband, brothers and sisters working over her with frightened faces and trembling hands. But when Bro. John Condit administered to her. God harkened to the prayers in her behalf, and thanks be to Him, she again enjoys her usual health; and has a greater desire than ever to do all in her power for the good of his cause ere she is called to her final home.

Our sister, Addie Condit, who has been a cons stant sufferer since last March, desires the prayers of the Union, that she may be restored to health. She has had the promise of health; but for some reason the promise has not been verified as yet; although she has received much benefit from every administration. Her faith is strong, and she bears her suffering with great patience and Christian fortitude. Oh, how much we have to be thanful for, in this grand and glorious work! And when sick or in trouble, what a blessed thought, that we can call upon the greatest of all Physicians with the assurance that we will receive due consideration, no matter if we be rich or poor; for he is no respector of persons.

The Herald is a welcome visitor here, and although my husband is not a member of the church, he does not think of doing without the Herald. And I sincerely hope it may be the means of helping to convince him of the truth of this work. For if it be the will of the Master I do not wish to be called hence till I have seen him led into the waters of baptism. Pray for us, dear sisters, that we may remain faithful, and be the means of doing good here.

Yours in the true faith,

SARAH M. SECOR.

KNOXVILLE, Ark., Oct. 16th.

Dear Home Column:-It is through my sad bereavement that I am prompted to write. I am not a member of the Latter Day Saint Church, but my mother and aunt, Miss A. A. Vitty, is, and I read the Herald a good deal; consequently I am a friend to the cause. I am the mother of five children, three of which are living. My sweet little babe, who was fifteen months and nineteen days old, was taken away the 14th of this month. Her name was Zelma Lee, and a sweeter flower than she has never bloomed. It is hard, oh, so hard to give her up. But there is one consolation, she is removed from a world of troubles, trials, sickness and death. I want the Saints to pray for me, that I may have strength to bear my trouble, and that I may live to raise my children, to love God and keep his commandments. You mothers who have lost little ones know how hard it is to give them up.

A friend,

SEWING ON BUTTONS.

"When I get a bright idea I always want to pass it along," said a lady as she sat watching a young girl sew.

"Ever, they are always doing it. They are ironed off, washed off and pulled off until I despair. I seem to sew buttons at every step."

"Make use of these two hints when you are sewing them on, and see if they make any difference. When you begin, before you lay the button on the cloth, put the thread through, so that the knot will be on the right side. That leaves it under the button and prevents it from being ironed or washed away, and thus begin the loosening process.

"Then, before you begin sewing, lay a large pin across the button, so that all of threads will go over the pin. After you have finished filling the holes with thread, draw out your pin and wind your thread round and round beneath the button. That makes a compact stem to sustain the possible pulling and wear of the buttonholes.

"It is exaggeration to say that my buttons never come off, and I'm sure yours wont if you use my method of sewing."—Youth's Companion.

Correspondence.

London, Ontario, Oct. 24th.

Dear Herald:—Will you please to freight a little budget of news to your readers, and to those concerned, from the pen of one of the laborers in the great harvest-field of the Lord.

Although I have been there for a number of years and have not found a resting place, I do not feel to weary in the great conflict for victory, but trust in the promise that the rest will be obtained at the end of the race. Reports from my associated laborers are quite good, showing that they have been blessed by the Master. A goodly number have been added to the church by baptism and difficulties in some of the branches have been properly adjusted, and the Saints have been strengthened and encouraged.

The Kent and Elgin district conference held at Chatham on the 5th and 6th instants, was a success in every way. The business was done in a peaceful and pleasant manner. The preaching was presented in clearness of thought and with power, and the prayer services were excellent and blessed of the Lord by his Spirit, imparting such instruction as was needed at the time to direct in righteousness and beget love, joy, long-suffering and kindness; "against such there is no law." May it ever abide with the Saints of God.

The London district held at St. Thomas on the 19th and 20th instants, was a pleasant conference; the preaching was good and with power in the Spirit of the Master. The business sessions were peaceful; the prayer services were not so comforting as hoped for. I would say that in both conferences the sacrament was presented to the Saints, and the most of them partook; and I trust discerning the Lord's body. I hope it may prove a blessing to their souls.

In conferring with some of my fellow-laborers I have decided for Elder James A. McIntosh to labor in that part of the mission lying east, commencing at the Alliston branch, opening up the work in Toronto, and to labor and care for the Cameron, Irondale and Monmouth branches, and open up in new places as wisdom and the Spirit may direct. And further, that Elder John Shields labor in and care for Garafaxa, Masonville, Proton, Egremont, River View, and Amaranth branches, and in the regions round about; and to open up as many new places as the Spirit and wisdom may direct. And Elder R. C. Evans to labor in and care for McKillop, Osborne, St. Marys, Corinth, Vanessa and Waterford branches, and in the vicinity of the branches, and open up all new places possible, as wisdom may direct. And further that Elder Samuel Brown labor in the western part of the mission, caring for the branches in the Kent and Elgin district and open up as many new places for preaching as opportunity and Wisdom may direct. Hoping all local elders and priests will do all they can to help the great work committed to our trust along, so that when the Master comes we may be worthy of a righteous reward.

The above appointments will remain in force until the setting of the London district conference in June 1890. If the above elders wish to exchange labors they can do so by conferring with each other, and it will be expected that they will report to the missionary in charge, from time to time as wisdom may direct.

Hoping the Spirit of the Lord may be with all to assist in the discharge of all duties, is the prayer and desire of your brother and fellow-laborer,

JOHN H. LAKE,

President of Canada Mission.

ORO GRAND, Cal., Oct. 21st.

Dear Herald:—For reasons known to but few, but which in no sense affect my faith in the latter day work, I have not written much for your columns, for the last two years, choosing rather to do my work as quietly as possible. But of late I have received letters from some in my former fields asking, What is the matter that we never hear from you? Are you losing faith in the cause you once advocated?"

So allow me to say here that after several years of active work and close investigation, during which time I have seen the dark and the bright side of the picture, lived in peace and met the fury of angry mobs, I am profoundly convinced that we have not labored or hoped in vain. I am not as sanguine as some, do not always see as much in manifestations as do some others, yet I have seen enough and felt enough to enable me to say, calmly and deliberately, and without hesitation, that God is in this work and I know it.

I will not say that I have done all that I could. I may have left opportunities pass which could have been used to better advantage, but I have desired to devote all my life and energy to this work. I have no designs for the future only to labor in the interest of God's work until I lay the armor down in death or witness the coming of the Master in majesty and power.

Financial depression has prevented me from visiting other parts of my field during the summer, but I have labored as the way opened in San Diego, Orange, San Bernardino, Los Angeles and Kern counties—the most of the time accompanied by our young Australian brother, S. G. Wright. I have not time or space to write in detail of our labors, but can say the Lord has wondrously blessed us; especially have I felt the power of God in a remarkable manner in speaking to the Saints of late.

I am now trying to make an opening here on the borders of the desert. Have spoken twice to fair audiences, and am billed for to-night. The elements, however, so far are against me. The winds have been blowing a gale ever since I have been here, and as they sweep down from the snowcapped mountains they chill one to the bone.

Brethren Mills and Lander report favorably of the interest in Los Angeles where they have been laboring of late. Bro. Burton is in Central California, Bro. Daley in Nevada and Bro. Haws in Oregon; Bro. Wm. Gibson is laboring in San Diego county, where he has done a good work during the summer.

In bonds, HEMAN C. SMITH.

ST. Louis, Mo., Oct., 22d.

Bro. Blair:—I am happy to say that the spiritual condition of our district is improving. Our late conference and the anniversary of the opening of our chapel, were times long to be remembered. Elder J. W. Gillen preached in the morning on the duties of the Saints. The sermon was timely and good, full of instruction and good advice. The sacrament meeting will long be remembered by those present, that calm, sweet, abiding Spirit like fire in our bones made our hearts glad and eyes bathed in tears, letting us know that our Heavenly Father was with us in Spirit to give up hope of life eternal.

In the evening Bro. I. M. Smith, in his usual style, fed the Saints upon manna from above.

The floral decoration by Bro. J. Dawson, was grand and added much to the celebration of the first anniversary of our new chapel; and thus ends the first year and commences the second in the house set apart to worship God, and our hope is soon to have the house clear of debt, and then dedicate it as a sacred spot for the worship of God for all time.

Be it known to the brethren traveling this way, You are invited to give us a call.

Let our brethren and sisters who have lived in St. Louis remember the promises of the Lord to us and hope soon to realize them. May peace and the blessings of God be upon his work for the salvation of the children of men.

For this cause I shall ever watch and pray.
Yours in hone.

NOAH NEPHI COOKE.

NOAH NEPHI COOKE

Parrish, Ill., Oct. 25th.

Editors Herald:—The discussion between Rev.

Throgmorton of the Baptist Church and Bro. I.

M. Smith closed to-day at four p. m. Bro. Smith affirmed the divinity of the Book of Mormon, on which question three days were spent, of two sessions each, and of two hours to the session.

Bro. Smith made the best affirmative argument on Biblical evidence we have known of. He also presented other and profuse evidences, as well as taking due care of the matters furnished on the other side.

Rev. Throgmorton is an able man. His work readily shows that he has seen much of debate, besides his controversial experiences as editor of the Baptist Banner. He is as honest as Braden, (much of whose matter he used), quite gentlemanly in many ways, and wore smiles to the last, which sometimes seemed to vary in kind. For two days he made of prejudice a splendid vehicle, but the load outgrew the cart, and a notable change took place, increasing to the last in favor of God's truth on both questions.

The second proposition, and which Rev. Throgmorton affirmed, was, "The canon of Scripture full and complete as contained in the Standard version of the Scriptures." As this did not admit of culling and misrepresenting the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants he was not at home on it and made rather a weak effort, as compared with some others. His attack on doctrine during the progress of the debate and other matters, as also the threatening for years from different localities by Baptist people with this gentleman gave rise to Bro. Smith in holy boldness asking that Rev. Throgmorton or any other meet him, and each affirm their church to be in fact the Church of God. This not being accepted at the close, as Bro. Hilliard had been the one threatened so long, and made a special target of through the entire last day. He took occasion to say in valiant manner that if the the Reverned was afraid of Bro. Smith he would accommodate him, "brushing the hay seed off his coat and debate a dry month." To all this the Reverned replied that when the Baptist brethren required it, where harm was likely to be done, he would. The second question occupied but one day, the affirmative asking the cut from two to one at the beginning of the debate.

It is just to mention that Rev. Throgmorton made an attempt to answer the Biblical matters on Book of Mormon, thus: "The utmost bounds of the everlasting hills," were those of Canaan; the land beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, Abyssinia. The truth of Psalms 85, Christ's resurrection; and Isaiah 29 was all fulfilled in Christ's time; the book was that of Esaias, from which Christ quoted, and by him the deaf were made to hear and blind to see, etc. I suppose that is sample enough.

Fifteen or more Saints from Wayne county, Springerton and Tunnel Hill were present, who together with all here, had their faith strengthened and hope revived of the ultimate triumph of truth

The attendance was large, the interest intense, and for the cause we love can frankly say as to the discussion, All is well. For Bro. Smith as a debater we be peak a bright future.

Bro. Hilliard and Elder Danbury of the Baptists, of Du Quoin, Illinois were moderators.

Bro. Hilliard will remain and speak a few times.

Yours in bonds,

R. Etzenhouser.

Bozeman, Montana, Oct. 23d.

Elder W. W. Blair:-Not having any particular weakness for appearing in print I have neglected writing to you so long that I fear some of the Saints may think that I am either spiritually or temporally dead; but I am happy to say that I am neither. For the last two months I have been preaching in Gallatin county, mostly at Willow Creek. I also preached, or tried, at Reese Creek, but did not have the freedom that I could wish for. Ou the 17th through the kindness of Bro. Dan Harris furnishing a horse and Bro. John Prichard furnishing a horse and wagon and acting Jehu, we crossed the range eastward on to the headwaters of Shield's river where Brn. Kelley and Hamilton and their families live, and had the honor of doing the first preaching that was ever done in their school house or neighborhood. On Sunday night I spoke with much freedom on the promises of God to His obedient children and held the people for a little over two hours. I suppose I should ask pardon for this. The audience was good and very attentive, and I felt that some seed was sown on good ground. I very much regret that we had arranged for so short a stay with those Saints whom we found so loving and true, especially as we were the first that ever visited them in their mountain home. May the Lord bless them for their kindness and aid, is our prayer. We left them on Monday morning and drove to Bozeman, where we were welcomed by Bro. Tom Reese who had secured the use of the Bozeman Academy for preaching, and on Monday evening, although tired and hoarse, I tried to preach, and have continued, and will continue on through the week of evenings, or as long as an interest is manifested. Bro. Reese has been to considerable trouble and expense to get the truth before this people and I pray that he may be rewarded by seeing the name of God glorified by the salvation of souls in this

When I go from this place I go again to Willow Creek, thence to Upper Willow Creek, thence to Jefferson Island. Amid many afflictions I am still rejoicing in the work of the Lord.

J. C. CLAPP.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Oct. 21st.

Herald Office: - I received the Voice of Warnings and showed them around to my friends. I went over to the monastry on Sunday, and my two Catholic friends could scarcely believe their own eyes, for Catholics have such a terror of the priests. I talked to Father Sabastian and told him I had been a Roman once, but had changed my creeed and only came to see him because I had been dared into coming. He then asked me when I made my last confession, and I told him not since I was fifteen. He then began to tell me all the sins I ever committed in my life, and he seemed to know them better than I did: but I politely told him that it took a sinner to make a saint, that the law of love was to redeem from sin, and that it was for sinners Christ died. He then wanted me to go to confession. I told him I did not believe in confession only to Christ; He was the only mediator between God and man. I quoted the verse of Peter, "Repent and be baptized for the remission of your sins," and that commandment I had obeyed. Then another priest made his appearance, and said to me, "Do you believe in the doctrine of Luther, the expriest?" and I said, No sir, I believe in the doctrine of Christ. I am a Mormon and I told him if he could get me anything better I would accept it. He then asked me my name and I told him, and he said, "Your name is French." I said No sir, my name is Irish; good people are among all nations. But when I see him again I must tell him my mother's maiden name which was McGuire, so that he will know in the future that I am not French.

I spoke to Father Sabastian and said that a church without a prophet was no church, and that Christ did not build the church on Peter but on revelation. But he did not hear me or heed me. He then told me I was to humble myself and asked my friend to pray for me. I then said, could there be anything more humbling than to be a Mormon, the most despised on earth? "They deserve to be," he replied. I am going to hear him speak next Sunday and I will know from his sermon whether he read the Voice of Warning or put it in the fire.

Still remaining a Latter Day Saint, true to my conscience. Respectfully, SADIE MCKENNA.

WEST BURLINGTON, Iowa, Oct. 23d.

Bro. Blair:—You undoubtedly remember Bro. Albert P. Brown from New London of this state, whom you met at conference at Rock Creek; also Charles Willey who was with him and who is now a brother also. By request of Bro. Brown I went to New London after his return from conference and held some meetings in the school house in that neighborhood. I found the people very much interested, never having heard our doctrine preached before. They were somewhat surprised in hearing the true side of Mormonism (so called). The second Sunday I was there Bro. Charles Willey was baptized, and last Sunday I baptized six more earnest souls, all related to Bro. Brown.

A Methodist and Campbellite minister have both attended our meetings there, and while they have not expressed themselves in meeting. I think their opinion outside is rather to discourage people in going to hear us. Just now I believe a good elder could do much good in that neighborhood if he could labor there steadily for about two weeks. I believe enough would obey the gospel so that a branch might be organized, as there seems to be some now who are almost persuaded. I can not be there more than every other Sunday at most, which is not enough to keep up the interest which now seems to be good. There is, I believe, a long stretch of country along through this state where the gospel has never been preached and where it would be well if some brother could be sent to sow the seed and give honest seekers an opportunity to come out and cast their lot with us.

Your brother in Christ,
FRED JOHNSON.

NORTH FREEDOM, Wis., Oct. 22d. Editors Herald: - In the latter part of September Elder E. E. Wheeler, missionary to the Kewance district, and your humble servant held a series of meetings in the M. E. Church at Henderson, Knox county, Illinois. The attendance, though not large the most of the time, was fair, and some considerable interest was manifested, judging from inquiries after our services closed. We regretted that our last appointment was stormed out, and that the services came thus abruptly to an end. We would have renewed our work were it not that our time there was limited. I returned to hold forth over Sunday at home, and more to baptize three precious souls that were to come over from Aledo, the county seat, seven miles away. Rain and mud made traveling difficult, and hence the candidates came not.

The next day being fair we went over and administered the rites of the gospel to Sr. Catharine Bear, who is the aged, honorable mother of Sr. I. T. Kinnaman. She, with her cousin, Martin, who deceased a few years since, had been connected with the movement of one George M. Hinkle, of historic note. She is four score and more, and is getting quite feeble and infirm. She is a great reader, very candid, quite humble, firm and devout. Another lady accompanied "Aunt Katy," named Mary Herdimen. She joined in with what she was led to believe was the gospel in 1852, in England, and came as far as Keokuk, Iowa, en route for Utah. Priestly domination, systematic, cruel robbery by high church leaders. and the licentious revelry of the theory disgusted the family. They judiciously left that odious, avaricious, polluted land, and thus "the house of God" is slowly but surely being put in order. Bro. Greenberry Cramblet, the other party, had a job of work that he could not, in justice and honor, leave that day; so he concluded to come over to our house two days later and be baptized. The brother, using his own expression, had been in the "Baptist frying pan," but when he jumped out he did not get burnt because he passed through the waters of regeneration and received a renewal of the Holy Ghost.

On the 5th and 6th instants I met with Brn. A. H. Smith, Cooper, Rogers, Good, et al in conference in the Mission branch in La Salle county, Illinois. The whole session passed off without a jar, and the crowd was simply immense. The missionary in charge was to continue his work there at least a week, and I inadvertantly learn from Bro. Cooper, the district president, that the effort is being crowned with success. I spoke in the commodious chapel Tnesday evening, the 6th instant. The house was fairly full and the choir acquitted themselves well, using the new Saints' Harmony.

From there I called at Morris, and held on over Sunday, the last two efforts being in the large opera house. My subjects were: 1st, The true church identified, or what must I do to be saved? 2d, New and continued revelation, or the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.

I made a flying call on the Saints at Chicago, Lyons, Springfield, East Delavan and Janesville, Wisconsin, and hastened on here to attend conference in the Western Wisconsin district, October 19th and 20th. The Saints are few and far between in these parts, but the few that came brought a good influence with them, and we had a time of refreshing to reward hard toil.

Bro. W. S. Pender has gone up to Valley Junction, sixty miles north-west. Bro. A. L. Whitacer has relurned home to get up fuel and round up fall work preparatory to the winter's campaign. Elder Frank Hacket, the district president, thinks to be able to devote about one-half of his time for awhile. I am speaking here to rather good houses, and thus you see our ministerial force and have a bird's eye view of the work in Wisconsin. The Lord revive us all and prosper the good work begun.

M. T. SHORT.

SAN BENITO, Cal., Oct. 17th.

Pres. W. W. Blair: -- Our Central California district conference-presided over by Elder John Carmichael-was a very pleasant one; perfect harmony throughout, not a single note of war was heard during the session, and all seemed very happy. The meetings were marked with the quiet, peaceable influence of the Holy Spirit, which is so pleasant and instructive. Several times the gift of tongues was exercised to the edification of those present, and, what was very pleasing to me, Elder John Holmes spoke (in our own tongue) by inspiration of the Holy Spirit; so calm, so convincing; the language so pure, the argument so unanswerable, the adoration so humble, without the least semblance of a cringing fear, and withal so full of love and pleading, and yet justice, the justice of God-was not hidden-and then the testimony in favor of the great work of these times,-it was beautiful, it was grand, and although only a short speech in a testimony meeting it was a long sermon in itself. My heart rejoiced, and I felt very grateful to God for thus blessing us, and partook of the expressed feeling of the saints-a renewed determination to strive on, more faithfully, to the end. At the close of the conference four persons were baptized. A two-days' meeting was appointed for this place which begins to morrow evening, and another at Watsonville in a fortnight from now.

The conference organized a Sunday School teacher's union, appointing Bro. I. F. Kingsbury district superintendent, and he selected Sr. James Smith assistant superintendent, and Sr. Ava Smith secretary and treasurer, and conference ratified his selection. The officers of all the Sunday Schools of the church in the district constitutes the Union—that is, superintendents, teachers, secretaries, treasurers and librarians. All the schools in the district are to be aided by the district superintendent visiting them, instructing them in the best methods of teaching, forming classes, etc.; he is to also organize new schools when practicable and is to report to each conference the progress and standing of the Sunday Schools of the district under his charge, etc. The Union is to meet at the time and place of district conference, hold its meetings separate from the conference meetings, choose its officers (which choice is to be ratified by conference) and consult together for information, etc. It is hoped that when enough unions and associations are organized delegates from them may meet at the time and place of General Conference and thus organize a General Union, and appoint a General superintendent over all these unions, which shall be sanctioned and ratified by the General Conference. These superintendents having the oversight of all publications for the schools, and also to search for information among other nations (if practicable) and peoples in regard to the best ways, means and methods of conducting Sunday Schools, etc., so that our Sunday Schools shall stand higher in efficiency than they have in

The children of the Saints have been neglected, and our present Sunday School system is deficient in this, that the children of Saints do not have a well defined knowledge of the faith and doctrines of the church. Some children from nine to twelve years of age at this last conference wished to be baptized, but were refused because it was judged that they were not sufficiently well informed of the faith. What a hard thing to say! A child of a Saint at nine or twelve years os age ignorant of what baptism is or is for, and of what the sacrament of the Lord's supper is or means!

And I am not sure but what a catechism for children, especially prepared to instruct them concerning the points of faith and doctrine necessary for them to know prior to baptism, would be a good thing; so that our children might be properly instructed and willing to enter the kingdom at eight years of age. The question book for primary classes is good, but a shorter catechism plain and simple upon the duties of children desiring to be baptized would help different fathers and mothers to instruct their children. "Come up higher," O Church, upon these matters, and let the lambs be fed with milk pure and sweet from the Mother Church!

The work in this district is in good order, no trouble existing, but not many workmen in the field. I am getting stronger in body and still love the Latter Day work more than all else on earth, and hope to be accounted worthy to help in the redemption of man on to the end.

In Christ, JOSEPH F. BURTON.

BEVIER, Mo., Oct. 25th.

Elder H. A. Stebbins:—I see one mistake in the minutes of our last conference in Herald of the 19th. Instead of "at the request of Bro. J. T. Richards to postpone the auditing of Bishop's agent's report until next conference," it should read, "at the request of Pres. J. Taylor." Please make correction. The Bevier branch is still working and moving onward; but there is place for improvement. Bro. Turpen's labors in the district are appreciated. May God bless him in doing good.

DISCUSSION.

On account of many conflicting ideas among religionists respecting the propriety of discussing the differences existing between the religious bodies they represent, I thought it not out of place to present some thoughts in reference to this subject, and the reasons why I believe that those representing the different religious bodies should feel free to meet and in the Spirit of the Master which each professes to serve and compare the different views held by each other in the light of that which is written in the Scriptures, and thus seek to establish that one faith as was taught by Christ and his Apostles, and upon which they were united. It is a very serious matter that as the only name given under heaven by which a soul can be saved is Christ, that those professing to represent him represent him as such a different person. "Is Christ divided?" No. "I and my Father are one," says Christ.

Wherein men agree with Christ they also agree with each other, and hence much good can come by a candid and earnest comparison of all views with each other, and that which all agree upon as standard evidence in reference to what Christ taught as the one faith. Comparison is the best method of convincing a seeker for truth upon any point of difference, and no religionist will deny but what differences almost innumerable exist, and that unity is what is desired.

There has ever been, and ever will be so long as error exists, a conflict, whether apparent or not, between truth and error. Every man to a greater or less extent, and especially one who professes to represent a religious body, is interested in this conflict, and we learn from the Master, Christ, during his ministerial experience, the manner in which this conflict between truth and error should be conducted. He met his opposers with truth for their errors, and never avoided them on any occasion, whenever their object was to question him or converse with him in respect to his views; and when they questioned his views critically he always met them in a similar manner. But we find it often said, "they durst not ask him any more questions." They were the ones to shun a critical examination but he, never.

We notice in the history of the apostles and early representatives how harmoniously they acted in this matter, and how they sought opportunities to exchange views in regard to the plan of salvation, and never do we find them making excuse that it was not best to contend for their peculiar views as against the views held by their opposers.

All religionists claim to be representing a plan that is devised for the salvation of those who adopt it, and most if not all claim to be representing the work of Christ as the messenger of the covenant of life. No one should be denied the right to make such a claim, and an unbounded privilege to present their reasons for making such claims, and as all claims of this character are public property, hence no one should be denied the right to make a critical examination of such claims, when made for the sole object to establish the truth, and when the examination is made in the light of what is written; for it is said that that which is written is profitable for doctrine, correction, etc.

All may not have equal authority for their claims, but this must be proven, and until it is so proven the party or parties making such claims will be but honest with themselves and content in continuing to advocate their respective claims; and by so doing may be the means of deceiving many souls. This leads us to conclude that those who by critical examination, experience and divine sanction know that their claim is right, and necessary to be received by every creature in the whole world, should urge upon those in error to meet them in public and in private for the sole purpose of assisting them in an examination of their views in the light of holy writ, and giving them unbounded privilege of producing their cause and bringing forth their strong reasons. This was God's invitation to people who were in error in the days of the prophet Isaiah, -See Isaiah 41:21. As God is the same and does not change, (Mal. 3:6; Heb. 13: 6), He through His servants is still making and should make that invitation to all.

When a professed disciple or a body of professed disciples of Christ assume that they are so far above others making equal professions that they will not meet them upon equal grounds, it is evidence of their being like some were in the days of Christ whom he called "hypocrites." They thanked God that they were not like others, and boasted themselves of great things they had done; or else they were fearful of the result of an honest examination of views. 'Tis true the disciples have ever suffered severe persecution at times for these sharp contentions, but God has always delivered them either in life or death to the entire satisfaction of his disciples. See history of Stephen, Acts 7: 54-60, and of Christ, and of all those who were persecuted for earnestly contending for the doctrine of Christ.

The true church has grown in numbers and in spiritual power when earnestly striving for the triumph of the right, so long as they based all their evidence upon the divine doctrines, and by the Spirit of the Christ deported themselves in their labors.

We have not the right to merely assert that another's claim of being right is not as good as ours, or else why has God given us such an abundance of evidence to present? If this evidence is not to be used to convince one in error of his error, what is it for? Only by reason and the stronger evidence can we say to this man or that, "You have not as good claim of being right as we."

Abuse, persecution, false assertions, attacks upon personal character and the like are proof of no better evidence to be produced to sustain their cause; but such evidence—if indeed it can be called evidence -can never establish a truth, and it takes the same class of evidence to prove an error as it does to establish a truth. Wherever truth is presented in contrast to error. the one representing the error will soon show it by the class of evidence he uses, for he will try to sustain his claim by abuse, persecutions, or by referring to some weakness, real or assumed, of some representative of the truth, or else just simply acknowledge that his claims are not sufficiently sustained by scriptural evidence to bear a critical examination, by their actions, and that is by their desiring to close the investigation, or, coward-like, withdrawing themselves.

According to the scripture we are to "contend earnestly for that faith once delivered to the saints."—See Jude 3. contend, according to Webster, means, "to strive; to dispute; to vie with." Either of these explained meanings signifies an opposing influence to be met and overcome by remaining actively engaged in defending the right, or that believed to be right. The truth is attacked, its representatives must defend it. Évil makes his attacks in any way to take advantage of or to overpower; Truth must ever stand out honestly making her defense with "all long suffering and doctrine."-2 Tim. 4:2. When God appoints one to represent the truth He empowers him with a duty and responsibility to defend it in the manner above referred to, using doctrine as his evidence. And should a representative fail in this he fails to stand the test of true patriotism to God's kingdom.

When a person is seeking to incite your loved ones to hate you and thus destroy your peace, you would think of doing nothing less than seeking to approach that person and correct his erroneous and injurious position in the spirit of long suffering, and a proper representation of facts; and should that person simply say when you sought to meet him thus, "I don't want to talk about this matter," and seek to evade you, declaring by so doing that he desired peace, you would at once conclude that so long as he continued as he had been and yet gave you no chance to defend yourself, that peace never could exist between you and him.

The decision Christ expressed in reference to this matter was, "He that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God."-John 3:20. "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved [discovered]," see margin. Contrasting things side by side where the same degree of light reflects upon them, and the same circumstances surround them is the best means to discover differences if any exist. It is so with principles claiming to be true. "Ye are the light of the world," says Tesus to his representatives. when two, both claiming to be his representatives meet and present their theories in the light they each represent, and in the light of holy writ, it gives honest investigation the best privilege to decide which is in harmony with the scriptures.

Deception is practiced by false representatives of Christ as it was practiced by Satan when tempting Christ, by using only such portions of the written word as will suit their purposes, and who refuse to accept of "every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." And many are deceived thereby because having no better light; but should one who is truly a light to the world meet one of these false representatives, there is not such a privilege for deception, for Christ says they shall not be confounded, and hence will be able to reflect light upon the false theories presented, by the eternal truths of heaven, accompanied by the light which God has sent to enlighten "every man that cometh into the world."

None who have the whole truth need be afraid of a comparison of the same with error, and they are not nor ever have been; and to find one afraid of a comparison, in the light of scripture, it will be one evidence against their having the truth, or else they are not established in the same. Neither need a representative of the truth be fearful of the possessors of truth, be they but members, losing faith in the same by listening to such comparison, but, instead, they will be strengthened.

However angry did those in error become at Christ and his apostles in their day, because the truth prevailed and they could not overthrow the truth with their theories, yet we never once hear of their concluding that to meet and question and be questioned was in itself wrong, but to the contrary. They presented the principles of truth, and their evidences of truth everywhere, in private or in the synagogues of their opposers, disputing with them face to face, and whether opposers called them evil names, persecuted or beat them, it mattered not, they still contended for truth and did not stoop to attacking personal character to prove theories true or untrue.

"Peace on earth" the angels sang; but this can not exist only where all are of one heart and one mind. No peace can exist between to persons or parties where each believes himself right; for that is conclusive evidence that he or they believe the other to be wrong, and if wrong in a religious sense, subject to condemnation or loss. Each will be anxious to try to save the other from these sad results, and hence will be brought together for that purpose. It does not matter when they meet or under what circumstances, just so each meet that specific object in view-of saving a soul from the error of his way. 'Tis very true one must manifest, ofttimes, a great deal of forbearance with an opposer, for where error is there will be erroneous actions, and a man of God is ofttimes met and used in an unchristianlike manner in many ways; but it only takes the same trust to be sustained in this labor as in any other kind of ministerial labor; and that is, full trust in Christ, the Author and Finishsr of the one faith.

We must educate ourselves as true representatives to be able to meet all opposition, whether in public or in private, with the Spirit of the Master, and thus prove by the strongest proof that can be adduced, that we have been with and have been taught of Him. And then whether we are contending for the one faith in what is termed discussions, disputes, debates, correspondence, or exchange of views, or making declaration of the faith in public or in private, such labor will be done as will build up God's work, and establish faith in the earth.

CHORDS FROM MEMORY'S HARP.

DEAR BRO. BLAIR: -- My studies are broken by distant meditation, and an echo less silence has succeeded the joyous testimonies, the energizing discourses, inspiring doxologies, pleasant associations and converse of Saints at the late Reunion in Iowa's rustic fields. That occasion, with all its magnificent environments, will remain inseparably linked with my brightest dream. Leaving densely populated Chicago with its busy hum of industry, the richer notes of worship, and its classic melody of literature, Bro. Blakeslee and I sought the broad freedom and peace of mind which the western sweeps, with their rich, florid complexion, only can supply. On the right and left were entrancing scenes. The rolling prairie obediently yields its superabundance. The beneficent Father, who controls the stupendous work of redemption, adapts the means adequate to the accomplishment of the required ends.

The proclamation of the "tithing of my people" is immediately followed by an abundance, in every line of active life. Simple truths seem grand discoveries.

Yonder, a lone ruin perched on its tall crag has for many a day seemed tenantless to the way-farer passing by. Generations ago, and by men of another mould, were its keep and battlements breached and its walls rent asunder from base to cap-stone. Its steel-clad inhabitants are gone. are in the dust of the field. The baron and his lady; the fiery man, the low-voiced woman; the knight and his squire; the stalwart men-at-arms; the falconer and the jester, were all laid to their long slumbers in the tongueless dust centuries agone. The hand of the spoiler fell heavily on their moated fortalice. From the crumbling turrett down to the shattered foundation, you may trace the ingenuity of man, in overthrowing what the strength of man had originally reared. This sapped and ruined and battered and defaced old ruin is but another monument, and only one of numberless remains on this continent along with Egypt, Babylon, Greece, Persia, Carthage and Rome on the eastern, that proclaim as with a voice of thunder that man's strength is his weakness, his wisdom is folly, his glory is his shame; that splendid and well-policied institutions have been raised to dignity amid the clash of arms, and prostrated to the dust. Perchance the Book of Mormon is productive of such ideas. But here old Father Time has lavished patient labor, not only on the crumbling structure, but over on the leftthat green garb of ivy was no other than his weaving. The rich bloom of golden moss was all his own device. lichen and stone-crop were his rearing, and let me whisper, many a day of sunshine and rain it cost him ere he saw them grow to his satisfaction. Those wreaths of wild bramble, clematis, and honey-suckle he trained with his own hand. Could the gentlest daughter of Eve have wound them round the heaps with more exquisite taste, or disposed them in more winning gracefulness? Here and there, further on, he has called up the drooping lusmore, from whose swaying bells you can imagine unnumbered fays to pass continually; and high above on the dizzy pinnacle the irondved wall-flower makes the air rich with its perfume. Thus venerable old Chronos has disported himself all along the line, hiding where he could thedesolation, adorning it in all places where concealment was impossible; like the gentle teacher, our Savior, who sought to hide and render doubly sweet the ruins and crags and desolations and clouds and thorns of life, by clothing the beautiful flora of the field with the prophetic mantle. And this is my apology for so writing: "Consider the lilies of the field."-Jesus. a commandment, and reflects the bright side of life. We could continue, but prudence suggests condensation.

Rapidly sailing up the frost-seared valley of the Missouri to Mondamin-within five miles of Camp grounds-and boarding a hack we were soon ushered in to the pleasant valleys. But one especially was interesting to us now. A city had grown up as if by magic—a whole city of cotton houses-and in one or two nights it was peopled too. Ah! it was a congregation of worshipers-a reunion of Saints-and I trust of spirit and feeling too. The intensity of interest and the congregation increased to the last when an estimate of over five thousand was placed on the surging and well pleased multitude. I had no idea that the "marvellous work and a wonder," had assumed such vast proportions, or amassed such strength, and yet only a few districts represented. But, the ebb and flow of the great systems of life in one period stand confessed before its successor. What was true, is confirmed and applauded; and what was evil, is stripped of its flimsy veil of pretences and excuses.

The weather was superb; somewhat chilly at the opening. But we remember with pleasure the prayer offered on Saturday morning by our beloved president, that, if pleasing to the Divine Mind, "a speedy moderation" of weather was asked for, and how signally and sensibly the request was granted, and that from that morning till the following Saturday evening the elements changed for comfort and pleasantness. I, also, am a believer in special providences.

The evenings' "in the valley" during the meeting were the happiest ever spent. Dying daylight brings dusky darkness in its mane, and throws its sable mantle afar and loops the spears of departing light; but up comes the moon, like a pale, white abbess with her starry nuns, like a queen to her bridal, and the glittering stars with amorous glances pale. After evening service, Brn. Chambers' and Seddon's bonfire calls almost one hundred and fifty persons around it, who manifest their joy by singing the hymns of Zion. thought that, if ever the time was to be, when the sweet zephyrs blend with the psalms of men, it is now. And now the chiming of the bell suggested rest, and until morning, when the rosy streaks of dawn awoke the chatter of children, the sound of a hundred axes, and conversation about "good sermons," "lively music," "confirmatory testimonies," and including the "empty lemon" of Bro. McDowell, and the vacated "egg-shell" of Sr. Coffman.

We will not omit the pleasant visit, though brief, we enjoyed at Council Bluffs and Omaha with Bro. and Sr. Rumel and Bro. and Sr. Beebe. Athough hoarse, I enjoyed the visit had by Bro. Blakeslee, especially the part relating to finances. By the way, he has a happy faculty of talking in that line.

Uncle Mark's sermon on Monday eve, was at Saints Church, and well received. His voice rang out like a continental clergyman's, and his presentation of evidence on "signs of the times" made us feel that the latter day work was indeed a revolution, and for the race, and for all time. Wanted to tarry longer, but resuming our journey down the Missouri Valley to St. Joseph, broad fields of corn met the eye. The views were scenic, far-away and grand. Variegated foliage groves of maple clad in tender gold, perpendicular cliffs among the bluffs piercing the purple air, with the limpid waters of the river winding like a silver serpent and stealing silently, and sometimes violently to mingle in the murky waters of the "Father of Waters"—(how much a momento of life) —were indeed picturesque and suggestive. Arriving at "St. Joe," we sought the "creamery" (Latter Day Saint like) of Bro. Lewis. After a short jog on the Motor we entered, desired, and sat down and refreshed ourselves with a glass of cool, sweet milk. Bro. L. has three blue ribbons hanging conspicuously—trophies of victories from the New Era Exposition competitive grounds for the cream, butter and cheese contest. Sharing the hospitality of his family till morning, we boarded cars for Lamoni. Our stay at this place was very entertaining, though brief; occupied the time with cousins, some of whom I had not seen for near a dozen years, and some I had never seen before. We sang, chatted and visited as only Scott cousins can. I shall not soon forget the short (?) figure of Bro. Dancer, either. I sincerely believe the generation of fifty years hence in scanning his record will look back to him and exclaim, "There were giants in those days." May his memory be perpetuated. After a day and a half with friends, we parted, and I realized more and more that it is the "parting that gives us pain"—and then I thought at the close of the Reunion, How many of us will meet at the expiration of another twelve months—and who will rehearse joys and sadness, sorrow and gladness anniversaries—as they statedly return some of them written in characters of joy, others graven by sculptor's art on marble slabs—glad return—with smiles of divine approval and angels lingering near, the gentle Spirit stealing into the heart with a tenderness that dissolves it away in tears, or a rest unbroken by dreams and unracked by suffering, leaves faded, plucked and gone, and the hearts that bitterly weep place a leaf of laurel on the crown of those stilled beneath the simple mound!

Beloved Saints, rejoice in the hope of immortal glory. Raise this latter day issue to purer realms and better basis than personal attacks. If slander is busy with your name, heed not the rumors,they will detect themselves in due time. Only bear them patiently and give them the contradiction of your life, not of your lips. Be assured also that they can not eventually harm you, if the arrow has not the barb of truth to unfasten it. If it have that means of holding, see that you do not suffer such to continue. When it lacks the point, the blunt shaft will rebound in your accuser's face, and the hidden things of darkness will be brought to light. Let us remember that the "silver cord" will be loosed; the golden bowl, broken; the pitcher be shattered at the fountain; and the wheel at the cistern—for by one touch of the finger the whole structure lays in ruins; then the dust resturns to the earth as it was, and the spirit returns to God who gave it. Beauty will vanish, and the strong men bow themselves. Those who look out of the windows will be darkened and all the daughters of music brought low. Time has this mission to perform and is executing his office speedily. He snaps the cords that bind man to this sphere, and by an unmarked transition lifts him away. Then he tells him of another country whither the angel Azrael is to be his conductor, and he shows him the necessity of his going and creates at the same time the desire that so it should be, and who would desire to appear in the presence of the great God against whom we have all done worse things than anybody has against us-carrying grudges? "Let not the sun go down on your wrath," covers the ground.

In hopes of attending another Reunion, I remain your brother in faith, LEONARD SCOTT.

THE GOVERNMENT OF GOD.

"And hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto and God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. 5:9, 10. "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, but this one thing I do: forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Phil. 3:13, 14.

The whole universe must rationaly be under the mediate or immediate rule of the unfathomable and Infinite Mind and Will. Orders and grades of government fitting to the capacity and need of the almost numberless grades of intelligence known and unknown exist, everywhere and always. Evidently it is impossible to go beyond the domain of God. This means, then, government. The highest of all these is called, in revelation, the government of God or the kingdom of God, or the immediate or highest form or expression of God's government. Where this exists in force there, rationally, must dwell the highest intelligence, and we may believe, without laborious argument, as a natural consequence, the highest and most exalted orders of life and happiness. A government designed without this as a final end in view could not be practicable because unattractive, and would never be entertained by rational beings.

"All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; . . and unto every kingdom is given a law. . . . All beings who abide not in these conditions are not justified, for intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy, and claimeth her own; justice continueth her course, and claimeth its own; judgment goeth before the face of him who sitteth upon the throne, and governeth and executeth all things: . . . he hath given a law unto all things by which they move in their times and their seasons; and their courses are fixed; even the courses of the heavens and the earth; which comprehend the earth and all the planets. . . . The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth her light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also giveth their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold, all these are kingdoms; and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. . . . Nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended."—D. & C., 65:9-13.

Magnificent revelation! Who can comprehend its beauty and spirit and truth? Certainly not those who deny its inspiration. "All kingdoms have a law given." . . And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom. For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom can not abide a celestial glory. . . . The earth abideth the law of the celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law; wherefore it shall be sanctified, yea, not-withstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and the righteous shall inherit it; for notwithstanding they die, they shall also rise again a spiritual body; they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body."—D. & C. 85: 9; 5: 6.

"That which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same."—Par. 8.

In paragraphs 20 and 21 the Lord says to the first elders of the church, "Behold I will hasten my work in its time;" and commandment was given to prepare for their ministry by organization, purification, prayer, fasting, teaching one another diligently the doctrines of the church, and of the accumulation of wisdom generally, and the law of the gospel, and in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God: "Therefore tarry ye, and labor dilgently that you may be perfected in your ministry, to go forth among the Gentiles for the last time, as many as the mouth of the Lord shall name; to bind up the law and seal up the testimony, and to prepare the Saints for the hour of judgment which is to come."-Par. 23.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven; having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred and tongue and people; saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth; yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."—Rev. 14: 6; 7: 13.

Eighteen hundred years ago Paul an apostle and called servant of God said: "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give." The latter day dispensation and work, inaugurated by the angel message, has enlarged itself to my mind since I came forth from the waters of baptism; but more especially since my call, or rather I would say, since my fixed determination to apply myself with an eye single to the glory of God to the ministry of his gospel to the world. "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come." Is it absolutely true that I am thus placed so near to the Son of God as to become his servant indeed? When I raise my hand and say, "Being commissioned by Jesus Christ," do I understand and feel, or do others feel and know that I am indeed sent forth with a message whose truth shall be manifest before the judgment seat of God and which shall soon be witnessed by "wrath and indignation upon the people," the confirmation of earthquakes that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground and shall not be able to stand? Is it indeed and of a truth the hour of God's judgment? To be a competent witness for God is to know by practical experience the things of God which we are sent to preach. To declare the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness among the children of men involves the necessity of understanding government. To become an officer of any government a man must first be calledappointed—by those designated by law whose duty it is to so appoint. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand forever."-Dan. 2:44.

As by observation and experience I am made to see that wisdom, experience, knowledge of law, courage and faith to administer that law are absolute necessities and prerequisites to successful candidacy, election, retention, approval and success of officers in the governments of this earth, and the establishment and success of the government itself; so have I been forced to conclude that less can not be said of the highest and best of all governments and kingdoms-the kingdom of God.

If less wit, judgment, knowledge, faithfulness, courage, honesty, devotion, application, general trustworthiness and adherence to the law which is to govern is necessary to the establishment of the superior government which we have for over half a century been and are (or should be) representing, than is necessary to the establishment of earthly and man-made gov-ernments, I should like to have it understood that I do not so believe.

The law that makes for superiority is vindicated alone in its application, enforcement, and results. Judged by this standard as Latter Day Saints we have something to learn and to do.

If this church is called to represent the government which Daniel saw, and is to "stand forever," it must logically be so because of a superiority of its law, and of faithfulness and obedience and conformity to that law. "A kingdom, divided against itself, can not stand," but must fall and "come to naught," according to the words of Christ himself. Unity of sentiment, harmony of understanding and cooperation are made necessities to success.

To belittle past effort, toil and sacrifice should not be our aim; but that there is a call through the Spirit and manifest needs of the church to "come up higher," is apparent to every interested, thoughtful member of the church.

To give impetus to the work, inspire all with a zeal and courage to go forward in the labor, toil and sacrifice necessary to the establishment and permanency of this latter day work, confidence has become an absolute necessity. That this has been abused in the history of the past needs hardly to be stated, but I apprehend that so far as the present is concerned one of the most serious obstacles in the way of advancement (and the cause, in many places, of a real or apparent loss of interest and influence) is that of misapprehension, lack of understanding or application of the law, which should properly govern.

To seek for causes of failure or hindrance to the work of God should be the conscientious endeavor of every man and woman in the church, but more especially those to whom is entrusted, by special appointed, the watchcare over the church, as well as to proselyte and swell its numbers.

We call attention to the revelation in

Sec. 83: 7, 8 D. & C: "And now I give unto vou a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life; for you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God." . . . "And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written."

In February, 1831, the Lord said unto the Elders of his church: "But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before."—D. & C. 43:2.

In the same month, but prior to this, the Lord had said to the Elders who were assembled to receive his law: "Again I say unto you that it shall not be given to any one to go forth to preach my gospel, or to build up my church, except he be ordained by some one who hath authority, and it is known to the church that he has authority, and has been regularly ordained by the heads of the church."—D. & C. 42:4. . . "No man taketh this honor unto himsely but he that was called of God, as was Aaron. . . . So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest," but was both called and chosen by the superior powers.

The reversal of this process and the ignoring of the counsel of God, and not only the "former" but present "commandments' in relation to the calling and ordaining of men to the priestly office appears to my mind as one of the fruitful sources of misapprehension, division, contention and strife, death and decay, that to-day hinders and prevents the growth of the Reorganized church. That there are many who have been called and ordained according to natural and revealed law; the law of fitness, practicability and by revelation and endorsement of God-"according to the gifts and callings of God unto them" who have hidden or may hide their talents in the earth, is true; but these can not be included in the army of elders, priests, etc., who since the day of their ordination have never manifested the gifts, calling or fruitful results that must come through a knowledge of and obedience to the "former commandments" that should govern in these most sacred and important matters.

Many whose walk before the world unfits them for membership, others whose testimony and speech, as well as actions, constantly and always betray to the intelligent mind their unfitness; many others, honest but ignorant of the law and order of God's government, failing to see the kingdom of God and that which makes for its permanency and growth, may be led to oppose, through intelligent but unprincipled leadership, the very men and measures that the God of heaven Himself has instituted "for the perfection of his saints" and the successful "work of the ministry."

Candidacy for ordination to any office—more especially that of the eldership—should manifest, 1st, A capacity for growth and ability to apprehend, naturally and spiritually, the ground his ordination places him upon; and to strive to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God, an important one of which is, "Wherefore now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand," [in his office].—D. & C. 104:44.

It will be observed that not only is action required, but intelligent action, conformity to the law; to learn his duty before ever attempting to act; and that slothfulness is not imputed alone to him who refuses to preach the gospel before he has learned what it is, or to run his neck off in a zeal which is without knowledge, and under the impulse of a revelation and commission or an ordination not warranted in the counsels of God-to build a kingdom of which he may know but little else than its title. Who then is it to blame, and what is our remedy? I am not disposed to blame anybody. I have a mind that nearly all at some time have been ignorant, thoughtless or slothful. The remedy, already suggested, is in a return to the "former commandments," and to every word that has proceeded since from the mouth of God through his legally appointed servants. We call attention to the revelation given to the church in June, 1833; Sec. 92: 1-3: "Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, whom I love, and whom I love I also chasten, that their sins may be forgiven, for with the chastisement I prepare a way for their deliverance, in all things, out of temptation; and I have loved you. Wherefore, ye must needs be chastened. and stand rebuked before my face, for ye have sinned a very grevious sin, in that ye have not considered the great commandment in all things, that I have given you concerning the building of mine house, for the preparation wherewith I design to prepare mine apostles to prune my vineyard for the last time, . . . Yea, verily I give unto you a commandment, that you should build an house, in the which house I design to endow those whom I have chosen with power from on high, . . . and let the higher part of the inner court be dedicated unto me for the school of mine apostles," etc.

The revelation given in December, 1832, (Sec. 85) and from which we first quoted, is a marvelous and wondrous communication, and preparation necessary to the final establishment of the greatest of all kingdoms is again testified to, and the means to be employed clearly indicated in the following paragraphs: "Behold, I the Lord will hasten my work in its time. I give unto you who are the first laborers in this last kingdom a commandment that you assemble yourselves together, and organize and prepare yourselves."-Par. 20. "And I give unto you a commandment that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom, that you may be more perfectly instructed in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel; in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God that is expedient for you to understand. Of things both in heaven and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which are to come to pass." . . . "Therefore, tarry ye, and labor diligently, that you may be perfected in your ministry to go forth among the gentiles for the last time, as many [and no more] as the mouth of the Lord shall name, to build up the law and seal up the testimony." etc.

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, as a witness unall nations." In order to make it a sufficient witness to justify God in his condemnation of those to whom it is preached, it must be an intelligent argument and presentation, and must stand the test of the world's cross-examination. Otherwise I apprehend its binding and sealing force is vitiated or lost.

"Who then is that faithful and wise servent whom his Lord [not men, neither women] hath made ruler [by common consent and law] over his household [the church of the living God,—Tim. 3:15], to give them meat, [something upon which they may grow spiritually strong] in due season, [not promiscuously and out of season]. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." Failure to possess courage or intelligence to meet this issue, as laid down by the Savior may, and probably will, subject us to the "cutting asunder" process affirmed in Matthew 24:50, 51.

"And again the order of the house prepared for the presidency of the school of the prophets established for their instruction in all things that are expedient for them, even for all the officers of the church, or in other words those who are called to the ministry in the church, beginning at the high priests even down to the deacons," etc.—D. & C. 85: 39. For the help of the ministry and perfecting of his Saints God commanded rooms to be prepared for the instruction of the presidents of the lesser priesthood and their counselors, presidents of stakes, etc.—107: 46.

If any man was warranted in starting out without the preparation suggested, or rather commanded, Hyrum Smith might have been. "Whoso desireth to reap let him thrust in his sickle," etc. . . . "Keep my commandments and assist to bring forth my work according to my commandments and you shall be blessed." . . . "Behold I command you that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called. Wait a little longer, until you have my word, my rock, my church, my gospel, that you may know of a surety my doctrine. Seek not to declare my word, but first seek to obtain my word, and then shall your tongue be loosed." etc. . . "Behold I speak unto all who have good desires and have thrust in their sickles to reap."—Sec. 10:4, 8, 10.

"All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry, and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work, labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all."—Sec. 10:8

Sec. 119:8. Indiscriminate calling and ordination by anybody-largely by laymen and sisters in the church, and a local ministry, has wrought confusion; and its results we still have to confront. Its evils have been seen in a measure, and ordination any how and by any body has been largely restricted by conference resolution; but the calling goes on in some quarters, and consequent uneasiness, if not open hostility, is engendered against those whom the law has designed to regulate or counsel in these matters. To "try the spirits" that trouble us in these matters would not be so hard a task, nor the difficulty so hard to solve if faith in what God has already revealed, through his chosen mouthpiece, and has become law by common consent of the whole wisdom of the church, were had. But faith comes, not by hearing, reading, or instruction, but by signs (Sec. 63: 2, 3, D. & C.) with many.

In the design of God, clearly to my mind, a prepared ministry, by schooling and study of the law of God, as well as wisdom from all quartars and sources, and preparation by spiritual experience, a godly life, etc., was and is intended in the revelations given to the church at first. Failure to heed this counsel has, to my mind, brought "the whole church under condemnation," and in many cases disgrace or just reproach. We must have a spiritually intelligent and unified ministry, or continued discouragement if not disaster, will be our fate. As a means or remedy God commenced to speak promptly in the beginning of this Reorganization. See Sec. 114: "In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve will take measures in connection with the Bishop, to execute"let us study that word-"the law of tithing;" with a charge of faithfulness, etc. Many years ago the church was informed that it was "a day of tithing of my people." It is a just law and the only one that makes injustice impossible, and by which every member in the church may become a worker together with God, and spread the last warning message abroad to the earth's inhabitants and to assist in establishing Zion.

I look with great favor upon schools of education in our church for children and youth. I want to see a "school of the prophets" for the preparation of a ministry that shall challenge respect and justify God in condemning those who reject their testimony. The time has come when we shall have to "come up higher." If there is not a growth in grace and in a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ, and in his words in the church as well as for individuals, then need we not to learn by the things that we have suffered? Large branches can be no longer raised up or maintained against the influx of light and criticism of our day, nor withstand the assaults of the subtile spiritual enemies of the church and kingdom of God that intrench themselves behind and within human forms and faces, by the novice, the inexperienced or the aspirant for an office, the responsibilities and burdens of which he has little or no conception of.

While at Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, last spring, that notable place in the eyes of God, upon which with prophetic vision through the haze of centuries unborn, prophets, patriarchs and apostles gazed, and through which by the pen of inspiration and signs of the times in which we live the heavenly country and city draws near, I was led into reflection suggested by my brief stay and opportunities for observation. One thing, germain to our subject, however, I noticed the presence of one of the Twelve; that it was a necessity of the time that he or some one else that represented the best wisdom of the church, that should be possessed of an experience with men and devils-for if they are not there, and to come, then is it not Zion-should be upon the ground to preserve the peace of God's saints; to see that wisdom, judgment and justice was not driven from her place; and the design of God in the gathering and salvation of his saints defeated. Without talk, comment or suggestion I came away, with the memory of my own experiences upon me. I said to myself, God save Bro. Luff and give him aids that can climb up high enough in the tower to see the enemy, and with wisdom and courage hold up his hands and aid in courageous defense or offensive warfare against the everlasting foes of God's kingdom upon earth!

Honesty and intelligence combined are Satan's deadliest foes. Separated, they may be used as his most powerful allies.

"Let us go on unto perfection." The six first principles do not comprehend all there is to the gospel of complete salvation. "And how shall they preach except they be sent; as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things." What good things? "That saith unto Zion, Thy God reigeneth." This to my mind is the enlarged view of the gospel of the Son of God.

When, oh when, shall our hindrances and our incompleteness be removed? When shall Zion—our hope—"the perfection of beauty" appear?

"And now behold if Zion do these these things she shall prosper and spread herself, and become very glorious, very great and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall know her." etc. "Behold I say unto you concerning the school in Zion: I the Lord am well pleased that there should be a school in Zion." "Verily I say unto you, that it is my will that an house should be built unto me in the land of Zion; yea let it be built speedily by the tithing of my people. Behold this is the tithing and the sacrifice which I the Lord require at their hands; that there may be an house built unto me FOR THE SALVATION OF ZION; for a place of thanksgiving for all saints, and for a place of instruction for all those who are called to the work of the ministry in all their several callings and offices that they may be perfected in the undersanding of their ministry: in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in all things pertaining to the kingdom of God upon the earth." . . . "Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things I have commanded her, I will visit her according to all her works, with sore affliction," etc., etc.—D. & C. 204:2, 3, 5.

Unity and intelligent and lawful co-operation is needed. Means expended under the direction of the infinite mind must produce glorious results. The Twelve and Bishopric in execution of the law of tithing things whatsoever I have commanded her,

but if she observe not to do whatsoever justice will be met by just disapproval.

May God hasten the time of exaltation and deliverance for his chosen people is my prayer.

WHO OWNS THE UNITED STATES? In spite of the rapid increase in the number of millionaires in the United States in recent years, the popular notion is that wealth is yet very much more evenly distributed in this country than in England. Mr. Thos. G. Shearman, the well-known New York statistican, has been engaged for some time in collecting facts to show as precisely as possible the proportion of the wealth of the country held by a few rich men and families; and he finds a greater concentration of wealth here than in any other country. The results of his investigation will appear in The Forum for November, from advance sheets of which the following facts are taken. Mr. Shearman makes the following enumeration of owners of more than $20,000,000 each:

$150,000,000: J. J. Astor, Trinity Church.

$100,000,000: C. Vanderbilt, W. K. Vanderbilt, Jay Gould, Leland Stanford, J. D. Rockefeller.

$70,000,000: Estate of A. Packer. $60,000,000: John I. Blair, Estate of Charles Crocker.

$50,000,000: Wm. Astor, W. W. Astor, Russell Sage, E. A. Stevens, Estate of Moses Taylor, Estate of Brown & Ives.

$40,000,000: P. D. Armour, F. L. Ames, Wm. Rockfeller, H. M. Flagler, Powers and Weightman, Estate of P. Goelet.

$35,000,000: C. P. Huntington, D. O. Mills, Estates of T. A. Scott, J. W. Garrett.

$30,000,000: G. B. Roberts, Charles Pratt, Ross Winans, E. B. Coxe, Claus Spreckels, A. Belmont, R. J. Livingston, Fred Weyerhauser, Mrs. Mark Hopkins, Mrs. Hetty Green, Estates of S. V. Harkness, R. W. Coleman, I. M. Singer.

$22,000,000: A. J. Drexel, J. S. Morgan, J. P. Morgan, Marshall Field, David Dows, J, G. Fair, E. T. Gerry, Estates of Gov. Fairbanks, A. T. Stewart, A. Schermerhorn.

$25,500,000: O. H. Payne, Estates of F. A. Drexel, I. V. Williamson, W. F. Weld.

$20,000,000: F. W. Vanderbilt Theo. Havemeyer, H. O. Havemeyer, W. G. Warden, W. P. Thompson, Mrs. Schenley, J. B. Haggin, H. A. Hutchins, Estates of W. Sloane, E. S. Higgins, C. Tower, Wm. Thaw, Dr. Hostetter, Wm. Sharon, Peter Donohue.

These 70 names represent an aggregate wealth of $2,700,000,000, an average of more than $37,500,000 each. Although Mr. Shearman, in making this estimate, did not look for less than twenty millionaires, he discovered incidentally fifty others worth more than $10,000,000 each; and he says that a list of ten persons can be made whose wealth averages $100,000,ooo each, and another list of one hundred persons whose wealth averages $25,000,-000. No such lists can be made up in any other country. "The richest dukes of England," he says, "fall below the average wealth of a dozen American citizens; while the greatest bankers, merchants, and railway magnates of England cannot compare in wealth with many Americans."

The average annual income of the richest hundred Englishmen is about $450,-000, but the average annual income of the richest hundred Americans cannot be less than $1,200,000, and probably exceeds The richest of the Roths-$1,500,000. childs, and the world-renowned banker, Baron Overstone, each left about $17,-000,000. Earl Dudley, the owner of the richest iron mines, left $20,000,000. The Duke of Buccleuch (and the Duke of Buccleuch carries half of Scotland in his pocket) left about $30,000,000. The Marquis of Bute was worth, in 1872, about $28,-000,000 in land; and he may now be worth $40,000,000 in all. The Duke of Norfolk may be worth $40,000,000, and the Duke of Westminster perhaps $50,-

Mr. Shearman's conclusion is that 25,000 persons own one-half the wealth of the United States; and that the whole wealth of the country is practically owned by 250,000 persons, or one in sixty of the adult male population; and he predicts, from the rapid recent concentration of wealth, that under present conditions 50,000 persons will practically own all the wealth of the country in thirty years—or less than one in 500 of the adult male population.

BINNEY.—Sr. Rosa Binney, formerly a resident of Springfield, Illinois, died October 7th, 1889, at Rock Springs, Wyoming Territory. She was born at Warwickshire, England, June 28th, 1842, and was aged 44 years, 2 months and 9 days.

"Dear mother, thou hast gone to rest,
And this shall be our prayer:
That when we reach our journey's end,
Thy glory we shall share."

TERRY.—David Terry departed this life Sun-TERRY—David Terry departed this life Sunday, September 15th, 1889, a little past four o'clock p. m. Dropsy was the direct cause of his death. He had been a hardy son of toil for lo these many years. He was economical, providential, just to a penny, kind almost to a fault; and as honest as the day was long. While he was rather modest, and retiring in his disposition, he was ever kind and cleaver frank and corteous he was ever kind and clever, frank and corteous, humane and cheerful to all that came within the warmth and light of his radius and sphere. While he never made an open profession of any faith he was infinitely better than many that profess and do not possess. In his suffering he was a monument of patience and fortitude, and died as he had lived, in great peace with all mankind. gust 17th, 1813, near West Chester, Chester county, Pennsylvania. He was united in wedlock to Hannah Lear in the above named county and state June 22nd, 1838. From these parents were born ten children, six being sons. Sr. Terry and five sons and three daughters survive him. Elder J. M. Terry, sometime pastor of the St. Joseph Missouri branch, and J. L. Terry, the Millersburg. Illinois postmaster, and other children, belong to the church. Funeral at the home just adjacent to Millersburg, Illinois, at and near where he had lived since 1848, the following Tuesday, to a large, sympathetic and weeping throng, in charge of Elder M. T. Short.

THE BLOSSOMING LAMANITES. INDIAN VOTERS.

"Washington, Oct. 14th.—The Indian as a political factor is a feature in politics which is likely in the near future to attract public attention. By recent acts of Congress every Indian over twenty-one years of age who receives an allotment of land in severalty becomes a voter, clothed with every attribute that attaches to citizenship. The successful termination of the negotiations with the Sioux Indians by which they surrender a large part of their reservation in Dakota will, it is estimated, by next year throw into the politics of the state of South Dakota the uncertain quantity of four thousand, nine hundred and thirty-seven voters. This vote, thrown solidly as it will be in both state and national elections, is likely to become an important factor in that state. Negotiations now in progress with other Indian tribes will soon make many thousands more Indian voters. At the interior department it is thought that upwards of twenty thousand Indians will be entitled to vote in the next presidential election. How the 'red man' will conduct himself as a part and parcel of the nation, and not as its ward, will be watched with interest by all who are interested in the solution of the Indian problem."

We present the above to our readers, not because of its bearing upon the political situation, but because of what it suggests concerning our Indian brethren of the house of Jacob. There is an eternal fitness, a harmony and congruence in all the great purposes of God, and also in the set times for their accomplishment. are correlative; for while the ancient Biblical prophecies concerning the restoration of Israel to their God-given possessions -Palestine and Canaan-and to temporal and spiritual favor with the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are rapidly and in their turn approaching fulfillment,— Jacob's descendants in America are feeling the beneficent effects of those forces which the Almighty has silently and almost imperceptibly put in motion to lift him up and redeem him from the condition of barbarism, ignorance and depravity into which sin and transgression and the white man's thirst for conquest and gold have precipitated him.

The Book of Mormon, published in 1830, declared to the world that the American Indians were a branch of the house of Israel; that its record was an abridgement of their history, a synoptical account of their origin and vicissitudes. It contained positive predictions that, though decimated and driven as a nation, yet they should be remembered in the covenants of the Lord and their seed should be preserved, delivered, and be blessed again with spiritual and temporal light, knowledge and favor with God.

Among other revelations Joseph Smith declared by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit as follows: "But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites [Indians] shall blossom as the In 1831 when this prediction was made there was little or no prospect of such a future for the "poor Indian." was then being pushed westward; and extermination seemed a more probable fate for him than any other. His ranks thin-ned by the irresistible and determined white man, he was finally subjugated, and afterwards swindled and starved by the unscrupulous post trader and government Indian agent until his condition became one of abject misery and despair. But in the midst of all these cruelties phi-lanthropic and influential Americans urgently protested against such inhumanities until the government and others having power to do so adopted such measures as proved beneficial to our aboriginal brethren, and to day thousands of them are skillful and successful agriculturalists and artisans, and are comfortably and substantially settled in communities, and separate commonwealths, having their own legislatures and institutions; and their children, in many instances, are becoming educated and cultured, while many of their public men have been and are able and intelligent types of mankind.

All these things-mere suggestions leading to a more thoughtful and extended contemplation of this subject and the many additional facts bearing upon it, and which we trust the reader will reflect upon more fully than our limited time and space permit the expression of here—are strongly indicative, not only of the harmony, correlative character, completeness an unanimity in the great purposes of God in the enlightenment and gathering of His people, but they also clearly show that the latter day work is brought prominently forward and emphatically demonstrated to be the great gathering dispensation of the fulness of times, in which God's people are to be pushed together from every quarter of the globe.

The truths contained in the latter day work and which include those revealed through the Seer in this dispensation are being so forcibly emphasized and his predictions so completely fulfilled by the concurrent facts of our own times, that a mass of evidence is represented which is simply overwhelming to the opponents of truth, and its position is impregnable and its truths invulnerable.

We are not extravagant nor egotistical in these assertions, for firmer than the everlasting hills is truth, and of it we may aptly insert the statement of a great mind; "What was written by Esdras near the willow-fringed rivers of Babylon, more than twenty-three centuries ago, still holds good: 'As for truth it endureth and is always strong; it liveth and conquereth for evermore."

"The world will yet have to face the music' of 'he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son.'" Our work is to present that doctrine, clearly and in simplicity; being careful that our presentation of it be in the spirit of meekness, kindness, and in the love of God. For harsh and dogmatic methods do not represent and are not exhibitions of the love of God. We must remember that "faith, hope, charity and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him [us] for the work."-D. & C.

Let us hope that the natural sobriety and stoicism peculiar to the Red Man will assist him in escaping the meshes and chicanery of politics, and that aided and blessed of God to reach the destiny of favor and exaltation decreed for him, he will, in turn, use his vote and influence for good, and conscientiously and wisely cast them on the side of all that is calculated to disenthrall and deliver our nation from the degrading control of machine politics, and all that is inconsistent and inharmonious with the grandeur of the spirit and genius of its charters of liberty and great institutions.

THE LAW OF PRESERVATION.

"THAT which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sancti-fied by the same."

The above is from a revelation given to the church December 27, 1832, and is a part of a dissertation delivered through the Seer, on the redemption and the law of Christ, of which law the Lord speaks thus: "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or a telestial kingdom."

The church was organized in 1830, by command of God, agreeably to, or in accordance with the laws of the country. It was undoubtedly with reference to the subsequent history of the church, of which his foreknowledge enabled him to take cognizance, that he gave these commands directing such organization subject to the law.

Subsequently to the organization, in harmony with the principle that what is established and governed by law is preserved by law, the same divine, and divinely wise being, who directed the establishment of the church gave commandment unto Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, concerning those who were to be sent out to preach repentance unto the people, that they should be able to so labor that "many" should "be converted, insomuch that" they should "obtain power to organize" "according to the laws of man, that" their "enemies" might "not have power over" them. This was for the purpose that the church, organized in this way might be "preserved in all things;" that they might "be enabled to keep" God's "laws, that every band" might "be broken wherewith the enemy seeketh to destroy" God's "people."—D. & C. Sec. 44, (44), Feb., 1831. In what way God may have designed to preserve the church by the laws of the United States in accordance to which laws it was governed in its organization we may comprehend; but the faithful Saint, whose faith accepts the wisdom, good will and power of God to be equal to all his divine designs, ought not to stop in the performance of his duty under God's command because he does not comprehend all that may be in the divine mind. Hence, we ought to be satisfied that by commanding these men to organize in accord with the laws by virtue of which they held state and national citizenship, he would in his own wise discretion preserve by law what he had commanded to be governed

To observe the law then is our duty as we may value preservation. If, however, we conclude to set aside the laws of our citizenship, while the governmental conditions remain as they are and have been since the church was organized, the result is stated by the same Lord from whom we have quoted at the start: "That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still?"

This is easily made applicable to the conditions under which the church is existing. If we choose to remain in relation to the laws of the country as was the church at its organization, we shall conduct ourselves "agreably to those laws;" but if we choose to set those laws at defiance, and conduct ourselves contrary to the provisions thereof, we can not look for preservation to those laws, nor hope for sanctification, (holiness and safety), nor for mercy for our transgression, but for justice when tried for such transgression; for the judgment of both the law of God and the law of man is against us.

AN EVERLASTING COVENANT.

THE word "everlasting" is defined by the lexicographer, Noah Webster, to mean "continuing without end; eternal."

In whatever other places in Scripture the word everlasting may be limited by conditions and circumstances to mean less than a never ceasing continuance, that found in Revelations 14:6 can scarcely be claimed as thus limited.

In this passage it is stated that the angel was seen to "fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth." That which the angel had, existed and was of a character to be preached, taught, explained and administered unto men that were dwelling on the earth. It was called everlasting to determine its enduring nature and to enforce upon men the unlimited power for the purpose for which it was to be preached.

Jesus said as stated in Matthew 24:14, that "this gospel of the kingdom"—that identical system of salvation then being taught by him, and confided by him to his apostles to be taught-was to be "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations;" and it is not hard to believe that the system to which he referred was the same as spoken of in Matthew 4:23: "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." again spoken of in connection with the preaching of Jesus in Mark 1:14: "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." It is further identified by Christ in his answer to the request of the people to tarry with them at Capernaum, "I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent. And he preached in the synagogues of Galilee."-Luke 4:43, 44.

As enduring as was and is the kingdom of God, so is that which is identified as the gospel of that kingdom.

Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist, speaking in regard to John and his work, refers to a promise and a covenant made by the Lord God of Israel with the fathers of himself and his people, after this fashion: "And thou, child, shall be called the prophet of the Highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins-"—Luke 1:76, 77.

Simeon who waited for the "consolation of Israel," under the visitation of the Holy Ghost identified Jesus Christ as the one in whom this promise and covenant were to be kept, and of whom the Prophet John was to be the forerunner, when led into the Temple he saw the child Jesus he took him into his arms and said: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel."—Luke 3:21-32.

John identified Jesus by those tokens by which he was told he should know him, and said of him: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—John 1:29. Jesus certified to the personal identity of John and the nature of his commission as the forerunner of Him whom God should send, and the preparation of His ways, by asking for and submitting to baptism at the hands of John. Matt. 13:13-17.

Stephen identified Jesus as being the "Just One," in whom the covenant made with Abraham should be fulfilled. (See Acts 7.) So also did Paul, as related in Acts thirteen and in Hebrews eight, in which latter chapter specific reference is made to the covenant recited in Jeremiah, thirty-first chapter and thirty-one to thirtyfourth verses. This covenant can in the very nature of it have no fulfillment except by and through the instrumentality of such a system as the one shown to be the "gospel of the kingdom of God," in passages already cited; and as held by Paul in Romans first chapter and sixteenth verse, as the "power of God unto salva-That this is the covenant which Jesus as the Mediator came to establish and keep by preaching the "gospel of the kingdom," is clearly deducible from Peter's statement found in Acts 3:25, 26: "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning every one of you from his iniquities," and as is specifically stated by Paul in Hebrews 13:20, 21: "Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will."

One of the strongest evidences known to us, other than the direct testimony of the Spirit to the fact that Jesus is the Christ, in favor of the work known to us Latter Day Saints as the church and latter day work established by command of God, in 1830, is the fact that in the Book of Mormon the revealment and establishment of the church in Christ's time, and upon this land, as recited in the history of the book, is understood to be for the intent and purpose of keeping that covenant that God made so long ago, to be fulfilled in the life, work and ministry of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

All this will be more readily seen and more gladly recognized from the following evidences from the Doctrine and Coverants, the direct and special evidences to us as a people, and found to be in harmony with both the Old and New Testament evidences heretofore given in this article.

In the outset of the work, after reciting some of the things which were to follow upon the continued disobedience of man, the revelation states: "And all this that it might be fulfilled which was written by the prophets; the weak things of the world shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, (a) that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world; (b) that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fulness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers."—D. & C. I: 4.

The blending of identities the covenant and the fulness of the gospel, making them to be one, is easily gathered from the foregoing. In section 20, (22), identification is made more emphatic, as follows: "Behold, I say unto you, that all old covenants have I caused to be done away in this thing and this is a new and everlasting covenant; even that which was from the beginning."

There is no need to mistake what is here meant, for it is stated in reference to the covenants of men made by them in the various baptisms administered by the several churches existing at the time, April 1830, and upon which some sought admission into the church. In the same section it is called "this last covenant."

In section 45, Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 2, the Lord stated to the elders and people of the church: "I came unto my own and my own received me not; but unto as many as received me gave I power to do miracles and to become the sons of God, and even unto them that believed on my name gave I power to obtain eternal life. Even so I have sent my everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people and the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me." This was in March, 1831. In September, 1832, in a revelation on priesthood, (delegated power from God), the Lord said: "And every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit, cometh unto God, even the Father; and the Father teacheth him of the covenent which he has renewed and confirmed upon you, which is confirmed upon you for your sakes, and not for your sakes only, but for the sake of the whole world."—Sec. 83, (84): 7.

The Book of Mormon is called the new covenant in one place in the revelations; but the identy of the gospel as it has been restored with the everlasting gospel of the angel's mission stated in Rev. 14:6, and the identification of this gospel with "the covenant," "the everlasting covenant," are made complete by the evidences quoted. To these however may be added the statement of Ezekiel: "Moreover I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them; and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sactuary in the midst of them forevermore. My tabernacle (c) also shall be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people."—Ezek. 37:

The promise here made in Ezekiel is essentially the same made in Jeremiah, chapter 31, respecting "the covenant" God would make with Israel and Judah: "I will put my law in their inward parts; and write it in their hearts, and I will be their God and they shall be my people."

Let us, brethren, "take heart of grace," and be encouraged, that as we live in the last days, in the midst of God's wrath he has remembered mercy, and has revived his work, not in the midst of the years only, but in the fulness of time as well, and rejoice that unto us as unto Israel God has raised up a "horn of salvation," a "light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory" of his people, Israel; that by the restoration of the gospel God has remembered his promise to our fathers and established his everlasting covenant with us as children of the covenant.

The gospel is called the "gospel of God," (2 Cor. 11: 7), the "gospel of Christ," (2 Cor. 10: 14; 8: 13; Rom. 1: 16, and other places). These, God the Father, and Christ the Son, and the Holy Ghost, which constitute the Godhead, are eternal, everlasting; therefore the gospel in which is set forth the promises of God to man, based upon man's obedience to the requirements and obligations contained in it, is God's everlasting covenant, and continueth forever. Amen.

A UTAH DIVORCE.

In the case of William B. Bennett, tried on a charge of unlawful registration in the Third District Court of Utah before Judge C. S. Zane, it appeared in evidence that said William B. Bennett registered as a voter in the West Jordan precinct before H. J. Crandall, Deputy Registrar, May 13th, 1889; that said Bennett had married prior to 1882 Hannah Dowden, and that at the time of such marriage he had another wife living; that he lived with both wives until June 4th, 1888, when there was a separation from Hannah Dowden, his plural wife, by agreement in a "church divorce."

We give below this "Church Divorce," copied from the published minutes of the trial, that the readers of the HERALD may see what sort of thing it takes to disannul a "celestial marriage" ceremony performed "for time and all eternity," when a plural wife finds herself in "relations which she desired to sever," and which she is under "no rule or obligation to remain in" according to apostle and associate historian Franklin D. Richards, as shown by quotations from his pen in a late issue of the HERALD:

"THE CHURCH DIVORCE.

"The witness here identified the agreement of separation, known as a 'church divorce,' and the prosecution offered the document in evidence. It reads as follows:

"TRIPLICATE.

"Know all men by these presents, that we, the undersigned, William B. Bennett and Hannah N. Bennett his wife, before her marriage to him Hannah Nash, do hereby mutually covenant, promise and agree to dissolve all the relations which have hitherto existed between us as husband and wife, and to keep ourselves separate and apart from this time forth.

"In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands at West Jordan, Utah this 4th day of June, A. D., 1888. W. B. BENNETT,

HANNAH NASH BENNETT.
Signed in presence of

Jos. J. WILLIAMS, MARY R. MILLS.

If this is one of the "strict and righteous regulation," under which Mr. Richards affirms the command to the church sanctioning plural marriage was to be enforced and carried out, it is a much easier and quicker method of dissolving marital relations than any that we know of existing in Gentile lands under monogamy, especially as the woman herself testified in the court as follows:

"To Mr. Rawlins the witness testified:

"'I did not state as a ground for the divorce that the defendant did not visit me as a wife, but that he failed to support me as such; he came to see me as often as I wanted him to.'

"To Judge Powers.—'We had no divorce other than this church divorce.'"

In this case there is no complaint of unfaithfulness; but simply the statement of the woman that her husband in the "celestial" relation had failed to support her as his wife, as, in her opinion, he should have done. This was not done in a court having jurisdiction and making a public record of its acts, but possibly and presumedly in private, with only the two signing witnesses present; and these witnesses affix no statement of their official character by which they may be identified as proper authorities before whom such separation could be properly consummated. If the marriage ceremony of these two took "hold upon the world to come," "for time and all eternity," does this divorce also enter in upon the world to come and annul the "eternity" clause, as it appears it was intended to do the time conditions of the contract? One seeking to discover, if he may, the beauties and unities of the plural institution of Utah, "viewing all its aspects impartially," as expressed by Mr. Richards, meets with discouragement in such things as this case reveals, taken with the statement of Pres. John Taylor, sworn to in open court, that he did not know whether there was kept a record of marriages in the Endowment House, where marriages were solemnized, or not, and comparing them with the claims to strictness, sanctity, righteousness and divinity, made for the institution by Mr. Richards, G. Q. Cannon and others.

DEDICATION AT CRESCENT.

WE are requested to announce that the dedication of the Saints' new church in Crescent City, Iowa, will take place the 24th inst., (probably at 11 a. m.,—Ed.), also that Elder W. W. Blair is expected to take charge of the services, and that Pres. Joseph Smith is invited to attend and take part in the exercises if he returns from Utah by or before that time. A general invitation is extended to the Saints and friends to attend on that occasion.

THE RESURRECTION.

A BROTHER wrote us that he heard a Methodist preacher say in his sermon lately that, "if all the dead were now resurrected there would be four persons to the square foot of the earth's surface," and the brother asks for information on the matter. In view of this we present the subject of the resurrection in a general way, and will reach the point of information he desires in due time.

No subject within the scriptures is fraught with greater interest to the race than that of the resurrection.

"If a man die shall he live again?"—Job 14:14. What a profound question! Who can answer it? Shall human wisdom? Can the philosophy of the learned? Ah! no; we may search in vain for the wisdom of men in any age to solve it. Man may found empires, may subjugate nations, may bind the lightnings, make the elements his servants, and hold converse with the starry hosts that are nightly marshaled upon the plains of infinitude, but the secrets of the hereafter, the future of the dead—they belong alone to the Maker Almighty.

In vain has the wisdom of man sought to know the future, and to disclose the mysteries that are hidden with God. Sages and philosophers, toiling and wearying, have ever left this subject where they found it—unsolved and unknown.

Shall the untold myriads who have lived, and loved, and suffered, and died,—shall they find that "death is an eternal sleep"? Shall man, who is "fearfully and wonderfully made"—man, the best, the noblest work of God—shall he sleep forever in the silent dust? That body so grand in design, so lovely in form, so majestic in bearing, so complex in structure, so perfect in all its parts,—has it answered all and the only end of its creation by enduring but for "three score years and ten"? The scriptures answer, No! and enlightened reason answers, No!

Ages succeeding ages have witnessed the terrible conquests of death. One generation after another has risen, fallen, and passed away. The infant; the youth; those in the strength of life; and old age with decrepit, tottering step—all have bowed, have fallen at his hand. The statesman and the warrior; the poet and the sage; the king and his subject; the rich and the poor; the servant and the master; aye, the parent and the child; the loved and loving companion more precious than life itself,—all have felt the heartstrings breaking, all have stepped down into the cold, turbid waters of death. The chambers of silence, the voiceless grave is their resting place. Wealth and honor; beauty and ambition—"hither shalt thou come;" here, here is thy final goal!

The tears of our suffering race for its dead for the past 6000 years, shall they prove unavailing? Is there no balm in Gilead for the wounded, broken heart? Is there no comfort for the mourner? No hope for them that have gone to "the land of the enemy"? Let perishing mortals look upward! "Look unto Jesus"! See him yonder seated upon the throne of his Father! He holds the sceptre of universal power. Listen! "All power is mine, both in the heavens and in the earth." "I am he that was dead, and am alive forevermore, and have the keys of death and of hell. I am the Almighty." "Come handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." "I am the resurrection and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by me," "and this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up in the resurrection of the just."

O, man; the mystery is solved; the question is answered; the dead shall live again! "Thus saith the Lord; refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death; O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction." "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." "Thus saith the Lord God; behold, O! my people, I will open your graves and cause you to come up out of your graves."

Precious promise! Delightful prospect! Inspiring hope!—hope, "like an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast." "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth." Jesus is the "ransom;" he is the "Redeemer;" he is "the Savior of all men, especially of them who believe." Jesus has bound "the strong man armed," and will "spoil his goods." He is "the captain of our salvation;" and the promise to us is, "If we have been planted together [with him] in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.

OF WHAT DOES THE RESURRECTION CONSIST?

The resurrection consists in the spirit of man taking another, a second body; not by natural birth or fleshly reproduction, being born again of woman, as some vainly teach, but taking, so far as element, size, and general form is concerned, the same body that was lost in death, this body to be made and prepared by the Spirit of God (which is His creative power), and to be composed of flesh and bones and be incorruptible, immortal, and indestructible.

Jesus was the first resurrected being upon this planet. Others had been "raised from the dead," but that was to natural life only, for they were afterwards mortal, —subject to death. Jesus was "the first begotten of the dead."—Rev. 1:5. "The beginning of the [new] creation of God."—3:14. "The first-born [in the new creation] of every creature."—Col. 1:15. "The first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence."

(18 v.); Christ the first-fruits."—I Cor. 15: 23. "That he should be the first that should rise from the dead."—Paul, Acts 26: 23.

Christ is the pattern and the pledge of the resurrection. Before he conquered death and "led captivity captive," the question of the resurrection was purely a matter of faith—it remained undemonstrated. But when he broke the bands of death,—when he took his crucified body from the cold, gloomy grave and lived again—he proved himself to be "the resurrection and the life" and laid a firm foundation for our hope. His first body was natural, but after he took it from the tomb it was spiritual—"It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body; there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body."—I Cor. 15: 44.

Joseph the Martyr taught that the child that dies would be raised the child; the man that died would be raised the man, etc.; and in his history, Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 397, 422, he tells us of a certain "Joshua," who came to Kirtland, and undertook to teach him in regard to the resurrection that the spirits of the fathers are taking natural bodies by human generation, and that therein is the resurrection. He (Joshua) said "The spirits of the fathers that were cut down, or those that were under the altar, are now rising; this is the first resurrection." "Joshua" further said that "he possessed the spirit of his fathers, that he was a literal descendant of Matthias the Apostle, who was chosen in the place of Judas that fell; and that his spirit was resurrected in him; and that this was the way or scheme of eternal life —this transmigration of soul or spirit from father to son." Joseph says, "I told him that his doctrine was of the devil-that he was in reality in possession of a wicked and depraved spirit, although he professed to be the spirit of truth itself; and he said, also, that he possessed the soul of Christ.'

The theory that the spirit of man may have many earthly probations—having as many bodies as probations—was not peculiar to "Joshua," for many after Christ's time believed in it; and long before the days of Christ it was taught in Persia, Egypt, Greece, etc., as we learn by history; and it is being taught by some in this nineteenth century, even by those who once were saints. Joseph who, with Sidney, saw in the "vision" the resurrection in all its order, and should therefore know whereof he testifies, pronounces that theory "the doctrine of the devil."

We learn not only by Joseph that the doctrine is false, but the fact that Christ was the first that should be resurrected, and that the resurrection consists in raising up, so far as size, general form, and element is concerned, the same body that we lay down, goes cleary to show that doctrine to be false. Christ was the first that was resurrected, and at—or immediately after—his resurrection, all the righteous were resurrected; all from Adam to John the Baptist, "were with Christ in his resurrection."—Doc. & Cov. 108: 10.

"And the graves were opened; and the bodies of the Saints which slept, arose, who were many and came out of their graves. And after his resurrection, went into the holy city and appeared unto many."—Matt. 28: 56, 57.

"There is no resurrection, or, I would say in other words, that this mortality does not put on immortality; this corruption does not put on incorruption, until after the [first] coming of Christ. Behold, he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead."—Alma 19: 5.

"And behold, again it hath been spoken, that there is a first resurrection; a resurrection of all those who have been, or who are, or who shall be, down to the resurrection of Christ from the dead . . . it meaneth the re-uniting of the soul with the body of those from the days of Adam, down to the resurrection of Christ."—paragraphs 6 and 7.

"And many graves shall be opened, and shall yield up many of their dead, and many saints shall appear unto many."—Helaman 5: 7.

"And the saints arose and were crowned at the right hand of the Son of Man with crowns of glory; and as many of the spirits as were in prison came forth and stood on the right hand of God; and the remainder were reserved in chains of darkness."—D. &C. 36: 11.

By the foregoing we learn that the resurrection does not consist in taking bodies again from the womb, but from the grave. The bodies are not born again of the flesh, but raised up in the same general form and size as they were laid down. They are raised "spiritual," "incorruptible," "immortal."

"I say unto you that this mortal body is raised to an immortal body; that is from death; even from the first death unto life, that they can die no more, their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can see no more corruption."—Alma 8: 11.

"Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall be raised from this temporal death; the spirit and the body shall be re-united again in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time: and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt. Now this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; and even there shall not so much as a hair of their heads be lost: but all things shall be restored to its perfect frame as it is now, or in the body, and shall be brought and be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good, or whether they be evil."-par. 10.

"Notwithstanding they [the saints] die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body; they who are of a celestial spirit shall received the same body which was a natural body; even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened [made alive, or resurrected]."—D. & C. 85:6.

The resurrection is purely the creation of God in every particular—equally as much so as the making of the bodies of Adam and Eve. Their bodies were miraculously made,—made by the power of God's Spirit,—and so, no doubt, will the bodies of all in the resurrection be miraculously created and made.

The process of the resurrection is clearly stated in Ezekiel 37: 7-14:

"And the bones came together, bone to his bone. And when I beheld, lo the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above; but there was no breath in them. Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live. So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army. Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel; behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; we are cut off for our parts. Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live."

For a further evidence that in the resurrection God will raise up the bodies miraculously we may quote:

"But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

—Rom. 8: 11.

"And as the words have gone forth out of my mouth, even so shall they be fulfilled; that the first shall be last, and that the last shall be first in all things, whatsoever I have created by the word of my power, which is the power of my Spirit; for by the power of my Spirit created I them; yea, all things, both spiritual and temporal; firstly spiritual, secondly temporal, which is the beginning of my work; and again, firstly temporal, and secondly spiritual, which is the last of my work."—D. & C. 28: 8.

The creation of man, in the beginning, was a miracle; the resurrection of Jesus and his saints one thousand eight hundred years ago, was a miracle; and the resurrections yet in the future are to be equally as great miracles. Oh, how the child of God longs for this redemption! How the soul leaps forward at the thought of being clothed upon with a "glorious body"—a body "immortal," "incorruptible," a body "raised in power," "raised in glory"—

"For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought [created] us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit."—2 Cor. 5: 4, 5.

Man lives; and herein is proof that he may live again. The same power that causes him now to live, can certainly cause him to live again.

For him who does every thing in its proper time, one day is worth three.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

The following series of resolutions, unanimously adopted at "The Iowa Woman Suffrage Association," held of late in Oskaloosa, we clip from the Daily Herald of that city, and cheerfully give them place in our columns that our readers may consider the matters therein advocated and be prepared to act wisely with reference to them when occasion offers:

Resolved, 1. That the Iowa Woman Suffrage Association, in its Eighteenth Annual Convention, pursuant to its constitution, re-affirm woman's right to the ballot, and demands protection in that right as an act of justice imperatively needed in the interest of good government and a progressive civilization.

2. That this association is non-partisan, and it appeals to men of all parties to yield the ballot to women.

3. That the spirit of the age has enlarged woman's sphere, broadened her vision, developed her intellectual powers, and compelled recognition of her citizenship, and she should have a voice in the enactment of laws by which all are governed, and a voice in the expenditure of money raised by taxation, hence we claim the enfranchisement of woman.

4. That a government of the people, for the people, by the people, must be a government of men and women; that the equal co-operation of the sexes is essential alone to a happy home, a refined society, and a representative government.

5. That in view of the unqualified success of full woman suffrage in Wyoming since 1869, and of municipal woman suffrage in Kansas since 1887, and of school suffrage in seventeen states, therefore, we will labor with our next legislature to extend municipal and school suffrage to the women of Iowa.

6. That the partial recognition of woman suffrage by the four new states is a happy augury of its speedy establishment in our nation, and we look to Iowa, Kansas, Wyoming, Nebraska, North Dakota and South Dakota to be the pioneers in our great work of universal co-education, emancipation and enfranchisement.

7. That we heartily co-operate with each movement to establish purity in politics, in morals, and in individual life; holding, as we do, man and woman subject to the same rule of criticism.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—If a member presents a letter of removal to the president of a branch, is it legal to record the name without the vote of the branch?

Ans.—The branch vote should be taken. The expression of the people is the execution of the law of "common consent."

Q.—If a member has been legally cut off from the church, can he remove into some other place and be again received into the church without making restitution to the branch where he was cut off?

A.—No; not if it is in his power to make restitution.

Q.—Would an officer of the church be doing right to baptize such a one, being acquainted with all the facts in the case?

A.—No. "By this ye may know that a man repenteth of his sins, behold he will confess them and forsake them." He should make restitution if in his power.

2.—Can a member be dropped from the church upon their own request, and confession of guilt, without the formality of an elder's court?

A.—In answer we present the following, adopted by General Conference: "Resolved that in the opinion of this council [the quorum of the Twelve], no persons name should be stricken from the Church Records until specific charges have been preferred against them, and lawful action had in the case, and that the cause or causes of action and expulsion should be stated upon the Church Record."—Herald, vol. 31, p. 299, (May 10th, 1884).

2.—Is dancing a test of fellowship; and if so when was the resolution passed?

A.—No; but General Conference has strongly discouraged it.

EDITORS HERALD: — Myself and the Seventh-Day Adventists have got into a controversy and I need some of our publications bearing on the "Sabbath," "soul-sleeping," and the place where the Saints and Christ will be during the millennium. Can you send me the Heralds that contain the arguments of Bro. Crawley on the Sabbath?

Bro. D. S. Crawley's tract on the Sabbath or Sunday being the first day of the week is now in the hands of the HERALD editors, and will be submitted to the next meeting of the Board of Publicution. We anticipate its early publication if the Board passes favorably upon it.

"Joseph the Seer" and the "Compendium" contain scriptural and some general evidences on the subject of soul-sleeping and the millenium.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE acknowledge the receipt of some verses from Orchard, Nebraska, signed "Little Sister."

A letter from a young sister, Harriet Lester, reaches us, but no address is given. She expresses joy which she has realized in finding the truth and obeying it. May all our young people receive the blessings promised those who do likewise.

Sr. Sarepta Pratt of Millfield, Athens county, Onio, wrote from that place under date of the 31st ultimo, expressing in grateful terms the good she receives from reading the various letters in the Herald. She mentions the successful district conference which she lately attended in the vicinity of Vales Mills, and is gratified by the growth of the work there and elsewhere. She asks the prayers of all in behalf of an aged Sr. Marton, who lately lost a husband and who previously lost a son by death. Limited space prevents the insertion of the entire letter.

Bro. J. F. Burton writing from San Benito, Cal., said three were baptized there last Sunday, and that he was going thence to Watsonville to attend a two days' meeting. We are greatly pleased to know that Bro. Burton is regaining his former good health, and we pray heaven to fully heal and freely bless him so that he may spend a long and useful and happy life in the dear Master's service. The church and the world need his labor in ministering "the wonderful words of life."

Mothers' Home Column.

"No perfect whole can our nature make; Here or there the circle will break; The orb of life as it takes the light On one side, leaves the other in night."

Dear Sister Walker:-Since I wrote you before I have improved in health so that I am now able to do my housework, with my children's help, and my husband is in the field again, for all of which I am thankful to our heavenly Father. I am desirous to become a Saint indeed, and in truth. I feel that my life has come so far short of being what the life of a Saint should be, that I am almost discouraged, but still I feel to strive to the best of my ability asking God to help me to overcome the weaknesses by which I am characterized. I have many times been blessed by the sisters' letters in the Herald and feel that they are doing much good. Sr. Walker, I feel to come to you for a word of advice. How shall I teach my little daughter (who has obeyed the gospel) to be satisfied with the cheap and often partly outgrown clothing she is obliged to wear, on account of her father's being in the ministry. Do not think I am complaining of the amount the church pays its ministers. I am not. I desire to be satisfied, for I know there are so many chances for presenting the gospel now, that it seems a great pity that we can keep so few men in the field. But just how to present the idea that this is a day of sacrifice, and that what we give up or deny ourselves is done for Christ's sake, is what troubles me. If you think this is a question that is asked by other elder's wives, in mind if not in word, you may answer it through "The Column." I desire the prayers of the sisters, that I may have strength of body and mind to fill the responsible position of mother in a manner that will be acceptable to God. If there is anything in this letter that you think will be of benefit in the Column you are at liberty to publish it. A. SISTER.

Dear Sister:—It is because we feel that your letter is timely and will do good, that we insert it just as you wrote it. It is indeed a day of sacrifice, but unfortunately for Zion's weal there is one class of Saints (?) who are perfectly willing that another class should make all the sacrifices. Perfectly willing that they should be made, so they are not called upon to make them.

Shall the faithful few be discouraged by this? Nay, verily, for it is in itself a valid reason for them to gird up their loins and be strong for the right, since there remains not only the world who have never professed Christ, to be converted, but those who have forgotten the horrible pit out of which they were taken, to be led to repentance and the doing of their first works over.

Is there a mother who will read this letter to whose heart an appeal will not be made? One who will not know just what this means? It is so natural for the mothers to lay costly sacrifices upon the altar of love, every day, every hour of her life, that she does not feel it; but when her own sacrifice is not enough, but she must take her child—her daughter who is as dear to her as the apple of her eye—and bind her there, then, human nature shrinks and the heart instinctively turns to another for sympathy and help.

"Dear me, it is a small matter," we hear some one say, "and does not call for any great amount of sympathy! Has not one of the apostles said, "Having food and raiment let us be therewith content, for we brought nothing into the world with us and we will take nothing out"?

We grant you, it is a small matter to you, my sister, who have enough and to spare: truly a small matter. But will you for a brief space of time put yourself in her place—the place of this mother, we mean. Years ago, when she was young and strong, you thought it a small matter that she should relinquish the companionship of her husband and give up every aspiration of having a home of her own. As one by one God sent her children, you still thought it a small matter that she should struggle on weighed down by poverty and sickness, for this was a day of sacrifice. This great and glorious gospel must be preached and woe unto him who is called to preach it and does not heed the call! Moreover it will go ill with the wife who detains him from it. Her lonely fireside, her uncounted struggles and sacrifices were a small matter to you as you sat with husband and children all about you, surrounding your cheerful fireside, while she sat down by hers, toil-worn, lonely and faint-faint because of the strong arms which could in no wise shield her, and the burdens there were none to help her bear. It is no matter of astonishment therefore that this latter trial seems to you a small matter, "It is so easy to bury other people's dead."

There are among us many who are striving to serve God with full purpose of heart—who are willing to do the will of the Master, and it is to them we now address ourself. First to the young Saints who know well that to a young girl this is no small matter, and because you know it, we say to you that if you would fulfill the perfect law here is the opportunity. "Bear ye one another's burdens." Set a noble and worthy example by heeding the voice of the Holy Spirit,

"Your garments must be neat and plain,
For this is God's decree,—
This is a day of sacrifice
Unto H1s saints, you see."

If all saints dressed in this way not only would they be happier themselves, but the supply would be like the manna: enough for all and nothing over. Mark you we do not deem this any sacrifice. It is a duty and one which you can not neglect without suffering loss. There is another duty: "Bear ye one anothers burdens." See to it that you divide of the good things which are only loaned to you-over which God has made you a steward—with those from whom in his wisdom he has withheld such. Make it possible by your own plain dressing, for the children of the poor, the children of those whose fathers are in the ministry, to sit by you in the house of God, without having to blush for the plainness of their garments or the thoughts of murmuring-yes perhaps of envy which have found a place in their hearts. Let your eyes be open to the needs, the sensitive feelings of others, and pray, yes pray earnestly, for that adorning which is above price and which having, you will become a worthy example of Him who said, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in mind."

To each tried, tempted, toil-worn and weary mother, we say, let your faith reach forward to the time of his coming. He has not promised us exemption, in this life, from any ill to which mankind is heir. He will not withhold the fiery trial when he sees that the dross must be consumed. The gold must be purified, for into the beautiful city nothing unclean can enter. Through the things which he suffered he learned obedience. Shall we fear to follow him? Nay, for if we do not follow him, where shall we go!

There is a beautiful parable which contains the lesson you wish to teach your child. There was a certain rich man, clothed in purple and fine linen, who fared sumptuously every day. The palace in which he lived he called his own, and the food which weighed down his table was purchased with his own money. At the gate of the rich man a poor beggar is lying, ragged, sick and covered with sores. How many, think you, as they entered the gate by which the poor beggar lay realized that he was rich and the man whose crumbs he was begging, to keep life in his miserable body, was poor—was indeed worse than a beggar?

But change the scene—the place. These men pass from this earth. Take just one step beyond and the rich man of this earth becomes the beggar in the beyond, while in torments he lifts up his eyes and sees Lazarus soothed, comforted and at rest. Then from his parched lips the pleading comes, "Have mercy on me and send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame." But back across the intervening chasm comes the answer, "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted and thou art tormented."

Which shall we choose—cheap clothing and scanty fare for the few days we may sojourn here and the robe of righteousness, the palm of victory and a crown of everlasting life in the great hereafter; or the good things of this world for the few days of time and then the torment of thirsting for that we can not obtain, in the world to come? Which?

Let no one for a moment suppose that by this parable Christ intended to teach that it was a sin to be rich. The rich man was not condemned because of his riches. How many and how grievious were the faults of this man, we know not. One thing however we do know, our God is just, and having loaned to this man an abundance of this world's goods, it was not pleasing in his sight that one of his children should lie uncared for, at his gate.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Jane Couser of 260 Leib street, Detroit, Michigan, wishes to say to the saints who were so much interested in her when she was in trouble in regard to her boy, that he has returned home, as the Lord promised her he should. He came home on the fourth of September. She is very thankful for the interest manifested in her behalf, and but for very heavy family cares would have written to many before this. Like many other of the scattered ones she is hungering for the bread of life and hopes that any elder passing through Canada will call if it is possible for them to do so. She desires to hold out faithful and praises God for the privilege of being a Saint in latter days.

Sr. M. Houck, of Radcliff Iowa, writes:—"I have received much strength and encouragement from the letters in the "Column." I feel my weakness but am encouraged when I remember that others, 'out of weakness were made strong.' My desire is to serve God and gain a crown which fadeth not away. I long most earnestly to meet with the Saints once more as in the days that are past. In those days, though we were few in number, God met with us and we enjoyed the gifts of the gospel, in tongues and prophecy. Thank the Lord for the everlasting gospel, delivered to the saints of God. I hope an elder will come here soon. Bro. Jacobs is here now, but as the Norwegian is his native tongue, he would like to have the help of some one who can use the English language better than he can. Bro. I. Roth promised, some two years ago, that he would come, but he has not as yet done so. There are some here who would like to hear the doctrine."

ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME.

Are we spending our time in the way that we should? Are we living our life to do others good? Is each hour to useful labor given, In view of the record kept in heaven?

Do we brighten our homes with our presence within?

Do we watch and pray all through life's din?

That each day and hour will be so spent

As with those who know they are only lent?

Do we know our time is a fleeting breath? That our lives will soon be closed in death! Do we know each hour that passes away Is bringing us nearer the judgment day?

Have we given our means to those in need? Have we patiently striven to sow the seed? Have we laid on the altar our worldly cares? Given those who hate us our secret prayers?

Are we trying all through the journey of strife To keep the pure law of an endless life? Are we trying as weary this race we run To say, Thy will, not mine, be done?

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Sr. Addie E. Hull, of Willow Brook, Michigan, requests your prayers in her behalf that her eyes may be healed and her body strengthened.

DICKENS, Nov. 3d.

B.

Dear Sister Frances:—We are in trouble and come to you for help. Our son Frank, eighteen years old, has been very sick and he is losing his reason. We ask the prayers of the Prayer Union in his behalf, that he may be restored to health and reason. We expect Bro. Caffal here to see us soon. If God does not rebuke the disease we will have to send him to the asylum. Oh, pray for us! From your brother and sister,

E. W. and MARY ANWAY.

TIFF CITY, Missouri.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:- I have concluded to write a few thoughts which will do me good, if no one else, that others may know of my whereabouts, love and anxiety for this work that is developing into such magnitude that it causes us to rejoice. I know enough to say that I rejoice in the work of the Lord and know I am in the narrow way, so I ask you to pray for me. I will soon be seventy-three years old. I was born in Wayne county, Ohio, seven miles east of Wooster, on Little Killbuck, and married William Fulks in Medina county, Ohio, and since then have roamed in the west. In 1874 my companion and I, with two children, were baptized into Christ in Labette county, Kansas. Since then I have had much comfort as well as trouble. It was not long after this that our oldest son, Phineas, died, then William, my companion; since then I have battled alone, living the most of the time with my children, my youngest son, Bor. William J., who lives in Spencer, Medina county, Ohio. He is a blacksmith and would take good care of any of the brethren passing who would call on him or any of our connections; as we have many there who are quite well off. Some are much confused and others make no profession of religion at all. I have been stopping with another son, Elder C. M. Fulks, who is living in the Cherokee Nation and is doing some good there. We hear Bro. S. Maloney has baptized two there of late. They are living with Charles and his family. They are from Kansas and their name is Elder. I am now with my daughter, Sr. Mary M. Goodwin: her husband is an unbeliever and their children are growing up never having been blessed, and some are old enough to be baptized. O, I hope all my dear sisters will pray for us. I have been working out and been quite feeble, but I am now better. May the Lord bless us all.

From your sister,

MARY C. FULKS.

Dear Sisters:-Though I have not appeared among you of late, yet I assure you that I have lost none of my interest in the "Home Column," but I reason thus: The Column is firmly established; it will last as long as the Herald does. But Autumn Leaves, the child of the Home Column, although a vigorous infant, requires careful nursing to make it grow and thrive; and I have been very solicitous for its life, realizing its importance as an auxilliary to the Column. When the latter was first instituted anxious mothers were asking, "What can we do to best promote in our children a love for the pure and the good? How best preserve them from evil contaminations?" The answers given were, Home example, Sunday Schools, and pure literature.

The latter we have especially urged on your consideration because we believed its importance was not as fully appreciated as the two former, the home and school, and yet it holds a place of as great importance, and in connection with them its value can not be estimated. And knowing that the recommend would be of little help to you if the right kind of literature was not at hand it has been by energy, persistent hard work, and through much discouragement at last furnished in the Hope and Autumn Leaves. Not that I mean to say there is nothing pure outside of the church publications, for there is much, but it is a hard matter to cull it from the evil with which it is plentifully mixed, and the work of culling should never be left to the children. Their judgment is formed or developed by their mental food, and a knowledge of this fact will lead to the presentation of only that which will instruct, elevate and refine, and such as will stimulate thought. In the Hope and Autumn Leaves you have all these to your hand, the payment of their price is far less than the trouble of doing without them if the mothers really feel the importance of the questions propounded by them to the Column.

Especially is this true when so many are freely giving their time, labor, and anxious thought to supply this reading, there ought to be no question at all about the duty of sustaining either of them. When I read "Liberty and her handmaidens." In the last issue of the Leaves, it seemed to me that one article was worth the whole year's subscription to the magazine and the church could not afford to deprive herself of the talent which produced it.

The Home Column has done nobly in scattering a vast amount of good seed, some of which we have seen bear fruit in a closer attention to the written law of the church as found in the three books, and a more general effort to conform to them in letter and in spirit. In all this evidence of success I rejoice, and mourn for all failures including my own.

A few words in regard to the Prayer Union. We, in Lamoni, have not yet succeeded in effecting an organization although some of those who have enrolled their names have earnestly desired it. The trouble in the way has been, chiefly, that some of its members belong to the Sisters' Aid Soclety which holds its meetings Thursday afternoon, and the sisters think they can not attend two meetings the same day, nor do they wish to neglect either. Some attempt was made to unite the two, but it did not work satisfactorily to either, I believe. No doubt but that the exercise of a little more will power could make a way, but at present this, together with household matters and business affairs compel us to observe the time at home, if at all.

As regards myself, personally, I have been greatly blessed when observing the time, and always feel a loss when through any cause I have failed to do so, as has occured a few times.

Dear Sisters, if the devotion of a part of the time to gaining instruction in the divine life is the better part that shall not be taken away, as was said to Mary, and the entire absorption of time in the cares of this life is the unwise choice as with Martha, what is our position in the matter? "Unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have more abundantly, and unto him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

I believe that the talents referred to in the quotation mean spiritual gifts, and there certainly can be no more effectual way to bury them than under the cares of modern dress, fancy work, house-keeping and social life. All these are the things that shall be taken away. Spiritual knowledge and acquirements are the only things that shall remain. If we have not these, what follows when that which we have is taken away?

I am not advocating the neglect of any earthly duty. I believe in this case as in that of tithing, these we ought to do and not leave the others undone. Right here is where the choice comes in. When the cares of life are so engrossing as to leave no time for the things of the kingdom, between them which should we choose?

And just now I feel like having a word with those brethren who seem to be troubled by the Prayer Union and other woman's work. I may not speak, being a woman, but there is no prohibition against asking questions, and believing the ground of opposition is selfishness I will appeal to their selfishness by asking if, since the woman is the glory of the man in the same sense that the church is the glory of Christ, that is, in and through spiritual, mental and moral gifts and graces, is he not then robbing himself of glory if through his teaching, exaction or oppression, woman is compelled to bury her talents, (spiritual gifts), and is he not thereby depriving himself of a corresponding reward, the same as though he neglected or refused to employ his own? This is the light in which I see it. Her deprivation of these privileges and blessings must detract from his, as by the deprivation of the same the church would lessen the glory of Christ in her, would it For the truth.

ELEANOR.

Correspondence.

MILLERSBURG, Illinois, Oct. 30th.

Dear Bro. Blair: -- We have had beautiful fall weather here with only a few disagreeable days so far. Weather has been very favorable for preaching all the fall. I have been preaching at Breed's Station and at the Baptist chapel, one mile north of Breed's. I spoke twenty times in succession, missing only one night and one Sunday forenoon. The people gave me a good hearing and the interest was excellent. A number are convinced and are very near the kingdom, while many are very favorable and are investigating. The Spirit of God is not only working with us but is also working with the people and softening their hearts and leading them to search after the truth. I do not know when the good seed sown at Breed's Station will spring up and grow and bear good fruit, but think it will be at no distant day.

The Saints there and at Canton and vicinity are in good condition considering the manner in which they have been neglected for many years. They have been actually famishing for the bread of life. We had four social meetings and a good spirit was present. Nearly all are desirous of doing more for the good cause. I think the principal cause of all the difficulty in the district is from a lack of labor; not enough effort put forth to save what we already have. The best way to get the Saints back in line of duty I think is to preach them back, and hold up the light in the Spirit of Christ. Then all but the wilfully perverse and the most hardened will fall into line. Many that had become indifferent and cold have renewed their covenants and are determined to make another stand.

I was kindly cared for by Bro. William Riley of Breed's, Bro. and Sr. Emanuel, living between Breed's and Canton, and Bro. Ephraim Grim of Canton. Bro. Riley has taken a renewed interest and has great faith that the work there will improve. If he keeps faithful he will do great good and be the means of bringing his children into the church. Bro. and Sr. Emanuel are full of faith and good works proving by their works that they have learned of Christ. There is a better time coming for the Kewanee district and that in the near future. God is moving and, if the saints are determined to stand in the way of the progress of the work they will be moved out of the way and God will carry on the work right over their heads.

The articles in Herald on self-examination and personal righteousness are right in line; are timely and exactly what we need. We are all making loud enough professions, but we all need to live nearer to God and purify ourselves in heart and ears so that a greater degree of the Spirit may be poured out upon us.

Bro. Short preached three powerful sermons at Henderson and baptized three into the Millersburg branch before going to Wisconsin. One more has given her name for baptism and will be received Sunday if the weather is favorable. There is great demand for labor and many opportunities, and if we could only take advantage of them good would follow.

Would say to those living in other parts of the district to not be disappointed if I should not get around to them as soon as they think I should. I intend to spend the month of November at Canton and vicinity. Want to keep up my efforts there as long as interest is good. They need labor and I feel to hold on.

Your brother,

ELLENSBURG, Washington.

Dear Herald:—I have just been reading the Herald. It gives me great joy to see the good work go on. I am young in the cause and I find, as Bro. Weston says, that we must keep the celestial law if we expect to inherit that kingdom. I am trying to live and do right, and I ask the prayers of all the brothers and sisters that I may in the end prove faithful.

Your sister in love,

Annie M. Dawson.

Monmouth, Ont., Oct. 25th.

Dear Herald:—Bro. J. H. Lake came here on the 25th of July and left here on the 4th of August to return west. He preached some excellent sermons which both comforted and cheered the Saints. The meetings were well attended, but none were baptized, as it seems very hard to get the people to believe this great latter day work. Bro. Lake is well liked here by all the Saints and we consider him to be an excellent preacher. We feel that God has blessed us in sending him here, as it was a season of refreshmnt to the Saints.

The branch here is in a favorable condition, and I am trying to do what I can to help this grand work along.

Since Bro. Lake left us I have held meetings at C. Billings' house in Glamorgan every other Sunday; and in our own School-house the Sundays intervening. The meetings were well attended. It was the first time that I ever spoke away from our School-house, and I was rather timid, but the Lord strengthened me and gave me grace to carry me through.

As I am young in the work I ask the prayers of the co-laborers, that I may prove faithful and do that which is well pleasing in the sight of God. Yours in gospel bonds, Anson W. Burton.

New Canaan, Conn., Oct. 25th.

Brethren in Herald Office:- I feel well in the gospel. I went to Brooklyn on the 6th and partook of the sacrament with the Saints, and we all rejoiced in the meeting, for the good Spirit was with us and all rejoiced. I spoke in the evening by the request of Bro. George Potts, and he followed in speaking, and we had good meetings, thank the Lord. I received a letter last week from Bro. Potts stating that he had baptized five precious souls into the church. May God bless them and give them power to stand firm in the STEPHEN STONE, IR. truth.

BAY CITY, Mich., October 27th.

Bro. W. W. Blair: Our late conference, held at Juniata, was largely represented and was very successful. We were pleased to have Bro. E. C. Briggs and C. Scott with us, and to hear them preach the word. We hope to have many such conferences.

Since the conference Bro. W. J. Smith and myself came to Bay City, and have been holding meetings. On Sunday I had the privilege of baptizing three, and on last Friday evening we met to organize a Sabbath School, and were blessed in this as well as all other duties pertaining to the kingdom of God. Should we not try to bring our children up in the fear and admonition of the Lord? Yes; and I am confident that a good live Sabbath School is the best method of schooling and training our children.

To-night I am to preach in the Indian church, and shall try to instruct them more perfectly. I hope we will all be willing to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, May heaven's choicest blessing rest upon the church and people of God everywhere.

Yours in bonds,

E. DELONG.

Bro. De Long's statement that they were blessed in organizing a Sunday School similarly as in other ministerial work is indicative that the blessing of the Lord will follow every proper effort to care for and instruct the young.—ED.]

JONESPORT, Me., Oct. 26th.

Brn. Joseph and William:-I am very much pleased to report to the readers of the Herald that our cause in the east is onward. Since I arrived here I have baptized eighteen. Others are near the kingdom, and I have more calls to go and preach where once houses were closed against me, than I can respond to.

I am talking with people of other churches who tell me they are dissatisfied where they are. They say, "I have never received anything from the Lord," as the word informs them they can, and I tell them it is because they are not connected with the living vine, and only can they be by making covenant with God and be baptized. in water by one of God's authorized ministers, have hands laid upon them and be sealed up unto God by prayer, then they can say, like all Latter Day Saints, We speak that we do know, and if faithful to him that calls us unto holiness, shall enter the rest with all God's dear children. One old Adventist lady at the close of my meeting Sunday evening said: "You must come right back, for I see we have got to take the water again; and, bless the Lord, we older ones must set the example for the young." Quite thoughtful, I thought. May God bless the aged ones.

I was called here yesterday to preach a funeral sermon and shall return to Crawley's Isle this week, if the Lord will. At the close of last Sunday night's meeting a young man and his bride stood up in the presence of my congregation and they went home as one. May their lives prove a blessing.

We had Brn. W. H. Kelley and A. H. Parsons with us a while, but they proyed to us like time, come and go; but I am pleased to say they did us great good, and both of them left a good report behind them. May God bless his anointed servants. Come again, my brethren. Our conference held while they were here proved a grand success. I am glad to know of the gospel's good news being spread in the land, and hope it may fall on good ground.

Yours truly,

J. C. Foss.

SANTA CLARA, S. D., Nov. 1st.

Bro. Dancer:-Please send me a cloth bound volume of Bro. W. W. Blair's, "Joseph the Seer," new edition.

Dear Herald, you have not heard from me in so long a time I guess you must tnink I have apostatized or am dead. I am still in my appointed field. Bro. R. A. Oehring and myself intend to start in a short time for a trip through South Dakota, and I hope we may return laden with many sheaves. The brethren south are quite anxious we should meet with them as soon as possible. I hope we can make a good report at next conference, and if the winter is not too severe I think we can. I would like to attend next April conference, but do not know whether I can yet or not. If I am continued in the field another year I hope to find a more congenial field.

Yours for the truth, E. DAY BENNETT.

ELMIRA, Kans., Oct. 20th.

Dear Herald:-I am preaching about seven times every week since the first of September to good congregations. Some have obeyed, more believing and many are made friends to the cause, and in all respects the church is being placed in better repute than ever before in these parts. I have opened several new places lately that must yield an increase before long in numbers. Onward and upward is our motto. Let us only be one and the victory is ours.

In bonds,

G. W. SHUTE.

COOK'S POINT, Texas, Oct. 28th.

Brn. Smith and Blair:- I am still trying to make my peace, calling and election sure, and to do something for the advancement of the cause of the Master. I have made a trip from home to Grimes county, this state, to see a family of Saints that formely lived in Florida. I found them getting along very well spiritually, specially for Saints who had not met with a member of the church for about three years.

The work in central Texas is moving along slowly, but I hope surely. There are but few of the Saints in one place in Texas, for this reason it seems that they are not so strong as those in sections where there are large branches. We have many things to contend against there that are unknown in some places, I suppose; but it is common for us to think we have the grandest time and place, but God will bring us all out victorious in the end, if faithful.

I have not been doing as much preaching for the last two months as before on account of home affairs, but have not been idle. I have been distributing tracts and writing letters to friends and acquaintances in different states with good effect. A number seem quite ready for baptism in Tennessee and also in Alabama. I aim to do more preaching from now till General Conference.

Yours in bonds,

E. W. NUNLEY.

GROVE HILL, Iowa, Oct. 28th.

Bro. Blair:-I am still keeping the latter day work moving onward in this locality. Bro. Charles Jones preached three times, baptized one, then left for home. Since then I have preached most every night and twice on Sundays. The light of the restored gospel begins to shine more brilliant than at first. Yesterday I baptized five. My brother, Charles S. Shippy, and wife, were among the number. Our meetings are well attended. Last evening the house was filled to overflowing, as also the Sunday before. We met for baptism at two p. m., "on the water's brink" the largest audience I have seen for some time at a baptism. Many more are near the kingdom, and I think will soon obey. I look for a large ingathering in this region of country if this mission is properly conducted by a wise ministry. Yours in the one faith,

JOHN SHIPPY.

ELLENSBURG, Washington.

Dear Saints:- As I was looking over the Herald this morning it reminded me that I must write a few lines if not much, to let the brethren and sisters know that I am pressing onward and trying to reach that celestial kingdom. Pray for me that I may be faithful. May God bless and be with you all that love the truth.

Your sister in Christ, MYRTA DAWSON.

BYRNVILLE, Ind., Oct. 25th.

Bro. W. W. Blair: - I am happy to inform the Saints through the Herald that the work is still progressing in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Four have been baptized at this branch this week and are rejoicing in the latter day work. One of them is about sixty years old and has been a member of the United Brethren Church for a number of years.

I am glad to see the work roll on and the true and honest in heart gathered out. Our branch which was organized here a little over a year ago numbers sixteen members and prospects are fair for others yet uniting with the church. Although there has been great efforts made by other churches to hinder the work it is all in vain; every effort they make against the work the worse it is for them.

I am laboring as much as I can owing to circumstances. I will speak at Eden next Sunday. I will devote most of my time this winter in the work if it is the Lord's will.

I feel like pressing on in the work of the Lord. I have great joy and comfort in the service of the Lord. A few weeks ago I had a dream in which I saw a pair of balances coming from the east through the air. They passed over me and went on west and when it got past me I saw a platform under each end of it and a small space between them, and I saw men passing from the north side to the south side of it. I then turned to my brother and said to him, "Did I not tell you the truth?" I was on a platform and he was standing on the ground by the side of it, and when I said the above words he dropped his head down and smiled. I then walked to the edge of the platform on which I was standing and stooped down and embraced him. I then looked to the east and saw a light in the sky about as large as the sun, but it shone out lengthwise in the place of being round like the sun, and I said, pointing towards it that it was the Savior of the world. I ask the prayers of the Saints.

G. JENKINS.

New Hope, Virginia, Oct. 23d.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—On the 19th I went to Milton, Cabel county, West Virginia, Saturday night and preached in a school-house close by Milton; and on Sunday preached the funeral of Bro. Edward Thompson in the North Methodist Church. I had a good hearing with reasonable liberty.

Yesterday I arrived at Staunton where I was met by Bro. Coffman, who conveyed me to his home where the weary can rest and be refreshed. The people here in the valley are anxiously looking forward to the dedication of the Saints' new chapel, which is to take place November 3d, also to the discussion between W. C. Thurman of the Reformed Advent faith, and Elder D. L. Shinn of the Latter Day Saints, which is to begin Wednesday, November 6th. It has been noticed in two papers in the valley, and if the weather is fair the discussion will be largely attended. Therefore I ask the Saints, all that see this notice to pray that the truth may be nobly defended and maintained by our worthy brother Shinn, for the truth has much opposition here.

I am here to stay most of the winter by the direction of Apostle Griffiths, and I feel hopeful of success. Remember us here in this mission.

Still contending for the establishment, and confident of the success of this great work, I am your brother in the new covenant,

JAMES MOLER.

SAGINAW CITY, Mich., Nov. 2d.

Dear Herald:—I have taken the field and am going to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. I have spoken three times in Bay City, and while there an appointment was given out for a Seventh-day Adventist and we told him he could have our hall to speak in, but when the evening came for him to be there the news reached us that he had hurt himself while helping to lay a carpet, and could not come, and so the lot fell upon me to speak. There was a full house and I had good liberty and felt a good portion of the Spirit.

I expect to speak Sunday in Saginaw City. I love this latter day work. My heart is in it, and love to see it go to all nations of the earth, and it can not be accomplished any other way than by the saints paying their tithing and offerings into the Lord's store-house that there may be meat in his house to feed the families of the elders while they are away. Jesus says if we love him we will keep his commandments. Let us pay our tithing, brethren, and God will bless us, for he has said so, and his word can not fail. "Prove me," he says, "and see if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there will not be room enough to receive it." I tried him and proved him and found him true to his word; and my prayer to God is that others may soon see the necessity of proving the Lord by paying their tithing, that God's work may roll on and his kingdom fill the whole earth.

Your brother in gospel bond,

F. C. SMITH.

GOD AND HIS ATTRIBUTES.

God in his revelation to the children of men has given them to understand that he is the great almighty Power who is over and above all things; that he is the great, everlasting, Eternal and unchangeable, who is without beginning of days or end of years, in whom all fulness dwells; who never had a beginning and never will have an end; the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; in whom there is no variableness nor shadow of turning; whose course is one eternal round. That he is the all-seeiug, all-knowing, all-powerful I AM; who swore by himself because there was and is none greater. That he is the Creator, upholder and sustainer of all things; that known unto him are all his works. From him there is nothing hid, neither can there be; and that to him every one of us must give an account of the deeds done while here we live in our bodies of flesh and There are many among the men blood. who refuse to believe this because they can not understand nor gain an idea of how such a self-existing Being could be from all eternity forever still the same; to whom was never a beginning; and so they have denied it all: yet all men who reason, must and do admit that there is of necessity a self-existing, great First Cause of all things, else created things could have no existence.

When men stop to think, there are many things which they believe, yet fail to understand. They say there is no end to space. Now this can not be understood nor even brought to the comprehension of the mind; for if it were possible to set a man in a chair and send him through space at the rate of a mile a minute for a million years, at the end of that time where would he be? Why, in the midst of space; yes, there would be to him no ending.

This world on which we live is said to be a great ball suspended in space, spinning round like a top at the rate of fifteen miles a minute; yet to our understanding it is a center; around which the sun, moon and stars seem to travel, and how can we understand that it is a ball or globe, for let it be ever so large a ball, it must have sides, a top and bottom; but no matter what part the people live on, to them it is the top, and there is no under part; yet it has been proven that it is a globe, and whoever has been to sea and seen the ships sailing thereon has been forced to admit that the earth is round, though how they do sail on the under part, is the thing that can not be understood. Thus then it is, that men believe in what they do not understand. And so it must be with that great almighty power we call God, though they fail to understand, yet they have concluded there is a great, eternal, incomprehensible, self-existing Creator of all things. But there are some things that men, through the aid of revelation and reason, may know and understand concerning God; and so obtain a better knowledge of the great Creator and God whom they should love and worship.

The Emperor is a king, and as such sends his mandates through all his empire by those whom he has called to his aid and authorized to administer in the affairs of the empire, and all must yield obedience; even the kings must obey. There are none exempt, as the Emperor is the highest of all. So, then, may we understand that God is all-powerful among the children of men, and sends forth to them his commands by his servants whom he has called and chosen to make known his laws and will unto the sons and daughters of men. And he exempts none; hence it is written, all men must give account to God.

He is also all-powerful by his Spirit; but this has been but little understood by mankind, as few there have been who have sought to learn. But this much we know, that a workman in order to work must have tools, as for illustration a telegraph operator could not work without his instruments; he could have no communications. But with them and the liberty to work, he can operate and make the wants and wishes of himeself and others known in every corner of the world. Such, then, is the Spirit of God. Be it what it may, it is the instrument of his power, and searches even into the minds of men. Hence the saying of the sages, "Guard well your thoughts for thoughts are heard in heaven, and the day shall come when every secret thought and hidden act shall be revealed." And as the fish are in the water and of the water, and could not live without the water, so are the children of men in relation to God.

"Known unto God are all his works," is easily understood when we think that the watchmaker is the one who can know, fix and set in its place, every wheel and fixture of a watch or clock; the machinist the engine, and the carpenter the building. So, then, God who has created all things, (and as all is the workmanship of his creative power), knows all his works.

He is all-seeing, and from him there can be nothing hid; and yet he can not be seen. Now one can go to the top of a hill and view the landscape, see the farmers at work in their fields, the cattle in the pasture, the growing corn, waving grain, the woodlands and silver streamlets; and can, by the aid of a telephone, look into the cottage home and see the housewife at work with her maids and friends; or he can spy out the inhabitants of the distant town or city and see them all as busy as bees in a hive; and yet not one of all of them may have the least knowledge that there is any one taking notice of their acts. And not only this, but man by the aid of such a thing as a piece of glass enables his eye to see the mountains of the moon, the spots and hollows in the sun, the rings of the different planets, the clouds and seas thereon and their moons. This and much more has man been able to see and learn.

Astronomy tells us that the dwelling-place where God dwells is the great center of all heavenly bodies, and that all the numerous suns with their planets are held by the power of attraction, and that all the many suns and planets gravitate in their places, and all revolve round this grand center in their time and season, as it has pleased God to so ordain each and all in the order he has placed them. Now men have by the aid of observatories been able to view the heavenly bodies at pleasure. Now what should we say if the Great Eternal had an observatory in his dwelling-place that would enable him not only to view the many planets but to see each and all of the beings thereon, whenever it should please him so to look; for if that little atom of life called man can by the aid of feeble means do so much, what can we say of Him who is perfection in all things? It is reasonable to believe that all we have here in this world is typical of heavenly things, and from this way of reasoning we may easily conceive in our minds how God can be all-seeing.

God is a personage of spirit like unto the person of man; as it is written: "God made man in his own image; male and female made he them." But men have much confounded this, as their idea is that there can be nothing have form unless it is or does consist of material substance, forgetting or not knowing that the spiritual is the real, clothed in material substance, through which it acts.

Thus, then, we can understand that God is a real, substantial being, having a body just like man; and that he possesses all his faculties in the highest state of perfection, and is the embodiment of love, mercy, justice and truth.

Everything we know of on this earth is mixed up with gross, material sabstance, so much so that it has to be refined and purified with fire, such as the iron, silver, and other metals. So is man; hence the reason he can not understand the things of the Spirit, as we learn that when men have seen God, it has always been with their spiritual eyes in the form of a vision; as we learn that no flesh can stand before his presence and live, as their gross, material bodies would wither and decay in the glory of His presence if men should see God as they see natural things.

God is a God of truth, and can not lie. It has beed said by some that it is no credit to God that he can not lie. But they have never fairly considered the subject; for if they did they would even learn of men and women who have so loved the truth that they would rather die than lie, and it is good to learn that the great Eternal is the embodiment of truth; and that a firm trust and confidence can be placed in all his promises to mankind; that he is truly unchangeable.

God is love; but who can tell of that love? Who shall explain it to our understanding? Not poor, frail humanity; and never can they tell unless they have obeyed that great command, "Love one another even as I have loved you." "God is love," sing the waters of the streamlets as they rush onward to the river; "God is love," sing the summer breezes as they rustle through the trees. The birds as they carol forth their morning song sing, "God is love," and all nature joins in the singing. Man also says God is love, but in what way does he understand? Does he love the drunkard in his cups? the libertine in his wickedness? and all those who follow after their own foolishness? It is true, it is written, that "he causes his sun to shine on the just and on the unjust," and "rain to fall on the good and evil;" yet we also learn that it is only after men have forsaken the wickedness of their ways, and accepted of the conditions of fered that they can know and feel that God is love. And it is only then they know the gifts of his love in the mercy of his forgiveness, of all their past deeds and foolish wickedness, for his love and mercy go together to all his children who return from error and obey his commands.

God is mercy; yea, he is known as the Father of mercies, and the God of all comforts; and his overruling hand of providence is seen in all the affairs of men and nations. True, would-be wise men tell us that all things are governed by law, and that these laws are so fixed that they can not be changed; but this is only blind foolishness, for if it really was so, then there is no hope; for law has no love, no pity, no mercy, no patience; law has nothing in it to touch our sympathies, or call out our affections. If law is fixed and can not be altered, then it has left us to our fate, as there can be no forgiveness; yet all down through the pages of history there is God in his mercy and love; whether it be in the story of Joseph and his brethren, or Moses and the children of Israel. With each and all is seen the guidance of His hand, so that many from the depth of their sorrow, misery and trouble have felt to cry, "God is love, God is mercy; he comforts and forgives me."

God is just; but shall we say His justice is in accord with men's notions or opinions of justice? If it were so, there are many wrongs that would never be righted, and crimes committed that would go unpunished. God is just in that his justice wrongs none. He is alike to all, black and white, bond and free, male and female, in that he is no respector of persons; but in every nation those that love and serve Him are accepted with Him; and none need fear who feel the need of His aid and desire to accept of His blessings.

Scientists and men of learning in the wisdom of this world have accounted the things of God as the veriest of foolishness; for although they do admit of a great First Cause, yet their idea seems to be that he created this world and the things thereon, and forever after left them to take care of themselves as they could; and that men could do just as they pleased, and that was all there would be about it. They claim to see God in everything, but not to know Him to be anywhere.

We find ourselves on this world in our youthful days under the care of our earthly father. We know we need his care and protection, and are indebted to him for what we really are; and when we come to the years of manhood, and at last have to set out for ourselves and begin to learn the trials, troubles and uncertainty of life, 'tis then we learn how little we really are: how helpless in all our attempts, and how oft we need a helping hand to aid us on the journey of life. In the God of the scientists we can take but little aid or comfort, but when we can learn from reason and revelation that we have a heavenly Father, who is able and more willing to hear us than our earthly father, then, poor mortals begin to see what life really is.

Although this is but a feeble attempt to tell a little of God and his attributes, yet it is enough for a human mind to conceive how much there is to be gained in giving heed to what has been written of God and His goodness; for such a God is worthy of our love, our adoration and greatest song of praise; of our prayer, of devotions ever, and our thank offerings for his ever great blessings, that we may ever remember his kindness and never forget his great and tender mercies to all mankind. For, be it known unto all mankind, that all that God asks in return is that we should ever love and obey His commandments.

DWELLINGS.

In Nicaragua, the dwellings were mostly made of cane, and thatched with straw. Of the dwellings in Guatemala still less is said. The front of each house was open, but the back and sides were closed with a strong stockade. The house, or rather shed, near the gulf of Dulcs, in which Cortez stayed, had no walls, the roof resting upon posts. In other parts of Guatemala, he saw large houses with thatched roofs. Gage does not give a glowing account of their dwellings. 'Their houses,' he writes, 'are but poor thatched cottages, without any upper rooms, but commonly one or two only rooms below, in the one they dress their meat in the middle of it, making a compass for fire, with two or three stones, without any other chimney to convey the smoke away, which spreading itself about the room, filleth the thatch and the rafters so with soot that all the room seemeth to be a chimney. The next unto it, is not free from smoke and blackness, where sometimes are four or five beds according to the family. The poorer sort have but one room, where they eat, dress their meat, and sleep.' Little is said about the interior appointment and decoration of dwellings. Landa mentions that in Yucatan they used bedsteads made of cane. And the same is said of Nicaragua by Oviedo, who adds that they used a small four legged bench of fine wood for a pillow."—Native Races, vol. 2, pp. 785, 786.

He further informs us: "It is my purpose to relate in this chapter all that is known of the scattered tribes of Central America, exclusive of the Quiche-cakchiquels. The historical information that has been preserved respecting these tribes is, however, so meager and of such a vague and unsatisfactory character that the reader must expect nothing more than a very disconnected and incomplete account of them."—Native Races, vol. 5, p. 603.

The civilization of Central America

The civilization of Central America was not comprehensively treated of until long after the publication of the Book of Mormon.

Bancroft says: "The only author who has attempted to treat of the subject of Central American civilization and antiquity comprehensively as a whole is the Abbe Brasseur de Bourbourg."—Native Races, vol. 2, p. 116.

Brasseur de Bourbourg's work on the civilization of Central America was first published in 1857-9. See American Encyclopedia, vol. 3, p. 214.

The richest mythological legacy of the aborigines of America, was not given to the world until 1857, according to Bancroft: "Of all American peoples, the Quiches of Guatemala have left us the richest mythological legacy. Their description of the creation, as given in the Popol Vuh, which may be called the national book of the Quiches, is, in its rude strange eloquence and poetic originality, one of the rarest relics of aboriginal thought. In Vienna, in 1857, the book now best known as the Popol Vuh was first brought to the notice of European scholars."—Native Races, vol. 3, p. 42.

Just twenty-seven years before the

Just twenty-seven years before the scholars of Europe were permitted to read the wonderful and captivating description in the Popol Vuh, the Book of Mormon, a much more truthful and comprehensive book was published at Palmyra, New York.

It is asserted that Copan, Uxmal and Palenque were explored, and the result of such explorations published to the world, long prior to the publication of the Book of Mormon. This is not sustained by the facts.

Stephens says: "I shall make one remark in regard to the work of Mr. Waldeck, which was published in folio at Paris in 1845, and except my own hurried notice, is the only account that has ever been published of the ruins of Uxmal."—Incidents of Travel, vol. 1, p. 297.

This is good evidence in favor of the Book of Mormon from the pioneer explorer in Yucatan and Central America.

Now of the ruins of Copan the American Encyclopedia says: They were described with great accuracy in 1576 by the licentiate Palacios. A full account of them is given in Stephen's Central America."—See Article Copan.

By some Mr. Bancroft is styled the father of American antiquity. Hear him in relation to Copan: "For what is known of Copan the world is indebted almost entirely to the works of the American traveler, Mr. John L. Stevens, and of his most skillful artist-companion, Mr. F. Catherwood."—Native Races, vol. 4, p. 81.

The harmony of the above statements is seen when it is remembered, as already appears in this article, that the description of these ruins by Palacios was not published in any language until 1843, and not in English until 1860.

Of Palenque the American Encyclopedia says: "The ruins were discovered by the Spaniards in 1750, explored by Bernasconi in 1783, by Del Rio in 1787, and by Dupaix in 1807, whose account was published in 1834."—See Article Palen-

In speaking of the ruins of Palenque, Stephens says: "The report of Captain Del Rio, with the commentary of Doctor Paul Felix Gabrera of New Gautemala, deducting an Egyptian origin for the people, through either the supineness or the jealousy of the Spanish Government was locked up in the archives of Guatemala until the time of the revolution, when, by the operation of liberal principles, the original manuscript came into the hands of an English gentleman long resident in the country, and an English translation was published at London in 1822. This was the first notice in Europe of the discovery of these ruins. So little notice was taken of it, that in 1831, the Literary Gazette, a paper of great circulation in London, announced it as a new discovery made by Colonel Galindo."--Incidents of Travel,

In regard to Del Rio's work, published in 1822, in London, England, Prof. C. S. Rafinesque, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, wrote in 1832, as follows: "My attention was drawn forcibly to this subject as soon as the account of those ruins, surveyed by Captain Del Rio as early as 1787, but witheld from the public eye by Spain, was published in 1822, in English. This account which partly describes the ruins of a stone city seventy-five miles in circuit, (length thirty-two miles, greatest breadth twelve miles), full of palaces, monuments, statues and inscriptions; one of the earliest seats of American civilization, about equal to Thebes of Egypt, was well calculated to inspire me with hopes that they would throw a great light over American history when more properly explained. I have been disappointed in finding that no traveler has dared to penetrate again to that recondite place, and illustrate all the ruins, monuments, with the languages yet spoken all around. The Society of Geography has received many additional accounts, derived from documents preserved in Mexico; but they have not been deemed worthy of the reward offered for a new survey, and have not even been published." -This is found in the first letter of C.S. Rafinesque to Champollion, on the graphic system of America, and dated at Philadelphia, 1832. American Antiquities,

Professor Rafinesque's Magazine, in which he discussed some of the problems of American antiquities, was published in 1832; and was so poorly patronized that but six numbers were issued. See American Encyclopedia, Article, Rafinesque.

The above quotation from Rafinesque is important in several particulars: 1. It shows that a man watching closely for light upon the subject of the civilization of the people of Central America, had found none until after the publication of Del Rio's work in 1822. 2. That the account was not clear, full, nor satisfactory; and did not furnish reliable data. 3. That the hopes entertained after the publication of Del Rio's work, that it would be followed by others of a more reliable and extensive character, revealing in fact the civilization of Central America, were not realized. 4. That such reports as were made between 1822 and 1832 to the Geographical Society, were not deemed worthy of publication, and were not published. 5. That these last mentioned reports were based upon documents preserved in Mexico; thus showing the estimate put upon these old documents by the highest scientific authority of that time in America. 6. That the whole question of Central American civilization was then a mystery, that in 1832 when the work from which we quote was written; and that, therefore, whoever took an unequivocal stand in regard to it, one way or the other, was very liable to be proven by future explorations and discoveries, to be grossly in error.

Josiah Priest, whose work was published after 1832, got so little information of value from the writings published prior to his day in regard to Palenque, that he locates that city in South America. He says in the index of his work: "A fac simile, or engraving of the glyphs of Otolum, a city, the ruins of which is found in South America." Also see on page 241: "Ruins of the city of Otolum, discovered in America, of Peruvian origin."

Otolum is the name which Professor Rafinesque gave to Palenque, as the following quotation from his first letter to Champollion shows: "Chiefly those fifteen miles from Palenque, which are wrongly called by that name. I have restored to them the true name of Otolum."

So strong were the convictions of those times, that Central America never had been inhabited by a civilized people, that this author of most diligent research must give to Palenque a South American origin. The question naturally arises here, Did not the inhabitants of New Spain discover the ancient ruins of Central America, and make known such discoveries to the world prior to the publication of the Book of Mormon? Stephens in speaking of this matter says: "The ignorance, carelessness and indifference of the inhabitants of Spanish America on this subject are matters of wonder."—Incidents of Travel, vol. 1, p.

Again in the above work, published in 1841, he says: "It is but lately that accounts of their existence reached Europe and our own country. These accounts, however vague and unsatisfactory, had roused our curiosity; though I ought perhaps to say that both Mr. Catherwood and I were somewhat skeptical, and when we arrived at Copan, it was with the hope, rather than the expectation, of finding wonders."-Ibid, p. 98.

Bancroft, in speaking of the early times of the Spanish conquest, and the ruins of Yucatan, says: "Since these early times the ruins, shrouded by a dense tropical vegetation, have lain untenanted and unknown, save to the peaceful inhabitants of the northern and more thickly settled portions of the state, who have from time to time become aware of their existence accidentally while in search of water or a favorable locality for a milpa, or cornfield. Only a few of the forty-four ruined towns explored by Mr. Stephens were known to exist by the people of Merida, the state capital."—Native Races, vol. 4, p. 144.

Prescott tells us that, "A few of the Mexican manuscripts have found their way from time to time to Europe, and are carefully preserved in the libraries of its Capitals. They are brought together in the magnificent work of Lord Kingsborough; but not one is there from Spain."

—Conquest of Mexico, vol. 1, p. 103.

The same author says: "M. de Humboldt remarked many years ago, It were to be wished that some government would publish at its own expense the remains of the ancient American civilization; for it is only by the comparison of several monuments, that we can succeed in discovering the meaning of these allegories, which are partly astronomical and partly mystic.' This enlightened wish has now been realized, not by any government, but by a private individual, Lord Kingsborough. The great work, published under his auspices, and so often cited in this introduction, appeared in London in 1830."—Ibid, p. 128.

Not even the manuscripts relating to Mexican civilization were published until 1830; and the cities of Central America, "lay untenanted and unknown," with very few exceptions, until after the researches of Catherwood and Stephens, beginning in 1839; and these exceptions were vague reports that had "lately reached Europe and America," and were only sufficient to create a "hope," and not sufficient to create an "expectation" of finding wonders. The greatest of all wonders of this country, is that the Book of Mormon with its positive statements, was in advance of all great scientific revelation of the age, and each new discovery is but another witness confirming its truthfulness.

I propose now to show that a series of eminent, and some of them world renowned writers whose works were published from 1777 to 1839 did not attempt to describe either the civilization of Central America or any single one of the cities thereof; thus entirely ignoring the vague and "unsatisfactory" reports of early Spanish explorers and historians; and saying to the world, that they knew nothing of the aboriginal civilization of Central America.

Robertson's History of America was first published in 1777. Of him as a historian the American Encyclopedia says: "His histories vie with those of his contemporaries. Hume and Gibbon in diction and liberal sentiment, and surpass them in impartiality."—See article, Robertson.

This able and impartial historian tells us: "But in the new world the state of mankind was under, and the aspect of nature extremely different. Throughout all its vast regions there were only two monarchies remarkable for extent of territory or distinguished by any progress in improvement. The rest of this continent was possessed by small independent tribes, destitute of arts and industry, and neither capable to correct the defects, nor desirous to meliorate the condition of that part of the earth allotted to them for their habitation. Countries occupied by such people were almost in the same state as if they had been without inhabitants."—Robertson's History of America, p. 137.

son's History of America, p. 137.

Again the same author says: "We may lay it down as a certain principle in this inquiry, that America was not peopled by any nation of the ancient continent, which had made considerable progress in civilization. The inhabitants of the New World were in a state of society so extremely rude as to be unacquainted with those acts which are the first essays of human ingenuity in its advance towards improvement. Even the most cultivated nations of America were strangers to many of those simple inventions which were almost coeval with society in other parts of the world, and were known in the earliest periods of civil life with which we have any acquaintance. From this it is manifest that the tribes which originally migrated to America came off from nations which must have been not less barbarous than their posterity at the time when they were first discovered by the Europeans. For although the elegant and refined arts may decline or perish amidst the violent shocks of those revolutions and disasters to which nations are exposed, the necessary arts of life, when once they have been introduced among any people, are never lost. None of the vicissitudes in human affairs affect these, and they continue to be practiced as long as the race exists. If ever the use of iron had been known to the savage of America, or to their progenitors; if ever they had employed a plough, a loom or a forge, the utility of those inventions would have preserved them, and it is impossible that they should have been abandoned or forgotten. We may conclude, then, that the Americans sprung from some people who were themselves in such an early and unimproved state of society as to be unacquainted with all those necessary arts which continued to beknown among their posterity when first visited by the Spaniards."—Ibid, pps. 143,

Once more let us hear from Mr. Robertson: "As the conquest of the two great empires of Mexico and Peru forms the most interesting period of the history, . . 'when compared with other parts of the New World, Mexico and Peru may be considered polished states.' The people of both the great empires in America, like the rude tribes around them, were totally unacquainted with the useful metals."—Ibid. p. 35%.

In the light of recent discoveries the above reads strangely. It will be noticed in describing the territory included in Central America, Robertson does not mention one single city of the original inhabitants. See his history. He further says: "Superstition among the Mexicans, was formed into such a regular and complete system, that its institutions naturally took hold of the mind; and while the rude tribes in other parts of America were easily induced to relinquish a few notions and rites, so loose and arbitrary as hardly to merit the name of a public religion, the Mexicans adhered tenaciously to their mode of worship."—Ibid, p. 255.

What a wonderful change has been wrought during the past century, and should the next century be as rich in development, the divinity of the Book of Mormon will be no more liable to be called in question, than the Holy Scriptures. Robertson, then, the equal of Hume and Gibbon in some respects, and then superior in others, from a complete and scholarly survey of the whole field of American history, as it was made known to the world by the early Spanish historians and explorers, gained no knowledge of any advanced civilization of the aborigines of America in any part of the land; and not the remotest hint of any civilization ever having existed in Central America. What chance was there then, for such men as Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, or Solomon Spaulding to gain sufficient knowledge of the civilization of the Aborigines of Central America, to enable them to write a book, which subsequent explorations have verified? Humboldt, whose great work was published in 1809, makes no attempt to describe any of the ruins of Central America, Josiah Priest, in a work published after 1832, entitled "American Antiquities," though treating of the civilization of Mexico on one side, and of Peru upon the other side, makes no mention of the cities and civilization of Central America. In Goodrich's Universal Geography, a work of 975 pages, published at Boston, 1838, I find quite an extended account of the antiquities of Mexico; but although his account of Guatemala immediately follows that of Mexico, there is not a word in it about antiquities. Guatemala then included the whole of Central America, as the boundaries given by Goodrich show: "Guatemala is bounded north by Mexico and the Bay of Honduras; east by the Caribbean sea; south-east by the Isthmus of Darien, through which it is connected with South America; and south-west by the Pacific Ocean."—See page 405

In the work of John Delafield, published at New York, etc., in 1839, and treating of the whole of American antiquities, and pointing out the antiquities of Mexico on one side of Central America, and those of Peru on the other side, is yet silent as to the antiquities of Central America.

I now approach the question, when the civilization of the Mound Builders was scientifically made known to the world. Bancroft says: "This section, including chiefly the State of Ohio, but also parts of Kentucky, Indiana, Tennessee, Illinois, and Missouri, was the ground embraced in the explorations of Squire and Davis, by far the best authorities on eastern antiquities. In the northern region, on the great lakes, on which Lapham and Pidgeon are the prominent authorities."— Native Races, vol. 4, p. 749. Squire's survey of the mounds of the Squire's survey of the mounds of the Mississippi Valley was made in 1845, and published in 1848. See American Encyclopedia, Article Squier.

Lapham's work on the antiquities of Wisconsin was first published in 1855. See American Encyclopedia, Article Lapham Pidgeon's work on the antiquities of Wisconsin and adjoining states, was not published until 1832. See the work itself.

Of the works of the Mound Builders, McLean says: "The first general survey of the works was made by Caleb Atwater, of Circleville, Ohio, in 1819, under the auspices and at the expense of the archaeological society at Worcester, Massachusetts. In 1848 the Smithsonian institution published, under the title, 'Ancient Monuments of the Mississippi Valley,' the surveys made by E. G. Squier and Dr. E. H. Davis, together with the plans and notes furnished by others who had taken an interest in the matter. This publication constituted the first systematic work with descriptions and figures of the numerous remains of the Mound Builders."-Mound Builders, p. 4, published at Cincinnati, in Baldwin says: "Among those who have examined and described remains of the Mound Builders, Messers Squier and Davis rank first in importance, because they have done most to give a particular and comprehensive account of them. Their great work, published by the Smithsonian institution, must be regarded as the highest authority."—Ancient America, p. 31.

Of the remains of the Mound Builders McLean says: "These remains have carefully examined, and after long and patient investigations the archaeologist has arrived at certain definite conclusions."—Mound Builders, p. 13.

The scientific knowledge manifested by the construction of their earth-works, could not be known until a "systematic," ticular" and "comprehensive" survey of those works was made. This was first done by Squier and Davis, whose work was first published in 1848. Two very important evidences of their civilization, each of which is distinctly mentioned in the Book of Mormon, namely mining and weaving, were not made known to the world until 1849 and 1868. On the art of weaving Baldwin says: "There appears to be evidence that the Mound Builders had the art of spinning and weaving, for cloth has been found among their remains. At the meeting of the international Congress of Pre-Historic Archaeology held at Norwich, England, in 1868, one of the speakers stated this fact as follows: 'Fragments of charred cloth made of spun fibres have been found in the Mounds. A specimen of such cloth, taken from a mound in Butler county, Ohio, is in Blackmore Museum, Salisbury. In the same collection are several lumps of burnt clay which formed part of the altar, so called, in a mound in Ross county, Ohio. To this clay a few charred threads are still attached."—Ancient America, p. 41.

Baldwin says in relation to mining; "Remains of their mining works were first discovered in 1848 by Mr. S. O. Knapp, agent of the Minnesota mining company, and in 1849 they were described by Dr. Charles T. Jackson, in his geological report to the national government."—

Ibid, p. 43.
Mr. P. B. Eastman in a letter published in 1852, in the National Democrat of Cassopolis, Cass county, Michigan, after describing the discovery of the mines and the evidence that they had been worked. and the tools used, but as to the time and people he writes: "When this was done it is impossible to determine, but conclusive evidence exists of its being a work of very remote period. Trees of several hundred years' growth are found extending their roots on the surface of the earth and soil that has required ages to accumulate over some of their deepest works. As yet no trace has been found of their authors; nothing to throw the remotest light on their origin. They evidently belong to a race and age passed away long before the inhabitants of Europe dreamed of the existence of a western Continent."

In the Book of Mormon, years before the copper mines were discovered and operated, the statement was made that that the ancient Nephites possessed abundance of copper, and the labor of the miner and scientist confirms the claim. In proof of this I may cite the "Mound Builders" by McLean, and the "Native Races of the Pacific States" by Bancroft.

BANCROFT'S UTAH.

"UTAH" is the subject of the twenty-first volume of Hubert H. Bancroft's "History of the Pacific States of North America, which the History company, San Francisco, has just published. It need scarcely be said that in this part of his work the author has found himself compelled to work a historic field to all intents and purposes entirely new. The original motive for exploration and colonization that applied to the development of other portions of the country applied to this part of it for only a short time and to a limited extent. Two short chapters suffice to tell the story of the region for about 300 years. Then Mr. Bancroft turns his attention eastward and takes up the story of the birth and development of Mormonism as a matter that is necessarily preliminary to any fair understanding of the appropriation of the Salt Lake region by that strange sect. One is strongly disposed to think that the historian gives more space to the subject than his purpose, that of writing the history of Utah, strictly requires. It scarcely seems necessary to go so minutely into details in tracing the rise and the tribulations of these people in New York, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, etc., during the years that preceded their great hegira. But one can forgive Mr. Bancroft for a score or two pages more than are actually necessary in consideration of the clear-headed, admirably impartial way in which the work has been done. Not a little has been written on the subject, but nearly all of it is more or less warped and colored, and perverted by interest, passion, or prejudice, or by all at once. To one class of thinkers all that is said by Mormons or anybody else about revelations from God-in the sense in which they use the phrase-is simply so much meaningless bosh, while to them all that is said against revelations is the most shocking blasphemy, while to still another classand a large one it is-revelations to themselves, through Moses, etc., are all right, but revelations to Joe Smith are both blasphemy and bosh. In the wilderness of Mormon rhodomontade and anti-Mormon vituperation Mr. Bancroft has steered a creditably straight course, his chapters, in text and copious notes, giving both sides with admirable impartiality. He is a little too severe with Gov. Ford of this state, not seeming to realize that he was confronted with something entirely new, and is hardly to be blamed if he did not solve at once what the united wisdom of the nation has been trying to solve for forty years since then, and is apparently as far from solving as ever. No doubt Mr. Lincoln's policy of "Let them alone" was well enough in his time and with his other engagements. Quite possible it is the policy that will have to be adopted at last, and that plural marriage—the thing anti-Mormons hold up as a bug-a-boo-when it finds itself ignored legally, but socially only ostracized, will shrink away of itself. But Mr. Bancroft touches the heart of the matter when he says that it is not polygamy, but the absolute fealty to a theocracy that makes it impossible for Mormons and the general American public to live together at peace. It is a monopoly, in a word, a monopoly of voters, which is a monopoly of power, and Mormonism has to relinquish that or go to the wall. Our form of civilization may not be the best possible, but such as it is it must develop along its own lines. Mr. Bancroft is just a little inclined to be sentimental about the Indians, the Mormons, the "under dog' always, but a historian of pronounced courage and admirable impartiality also. In the course of his volume he presents successively the arguments for and against polygamy, and though it is easy to see that his sympathy is with monogamic marriage the most zealous polygamist could not accuse him of weakly or falsely stating the other side. The military blunder of Mr. Buchanan in the "war," socalled, against the Mormons is detailed and justly criticized, and the recent attempts of congress to break up polygamy are described in a way to impress one that the author does not think them very wise. To be brief, the volume is a bold and conscientious attempt to write a phase of history unlike any other, and in it to handle a question which men have made delicate with common sense and firmness. As in all his other volumes there is a well-made index besides the table of contents by chapters, a complete bibliography, and copious foot-notes running with the text which present fully views other than those the author has thought proper to embody in the text. It is probably the first time that any writer has honestly and conscientiously tried to tell both sides of this strange controversy between civilization and what looks like a lapse into barbarism without prejudice toward either. That so to do is the duty of the historian nobody will deny, and probably not many will refuse Mr. Bancroft credit for doing this duty well.-Chicago Times.

THE following clipping from the Chicago Times is valuable as showing (1) how few there were prior to 1860 who thought it possible that the United States would ever have a civil war over any question, and, (2), how indistinct, imperfect and limited in detail were the premonitions and prediccions of that few. In contrast with the clipping, we place the prophecy of Joseph Smith which he gave to the church December 25th, 1832, which was often talked of by the Saints up to 1851 when it was published in the Pearl of Great Price, in Liverpool, England, and in the Compendium, page 103, by F. D. Richards, Liverpool, England, in 1857, and in many other publications since. The latter, it will be observed, is a "thus saith the Lord," thus giving to God, rather than to human forecast and sagacity the honor and power of making known to man the coming of that terrible calamity.

Here is the clipping:

LINCOLN'S PREMONITION.

Every now and then some good story bobs up about honest old "Abe." All of them are not of a strongly marked religious character, out occasionally something is said or written which serves to show the more serious and even deeply religious side of Lincoln's personal disposition.

At a recent "harvest-home" celebration near Lewiston, Illinois, the Rev. Richard Haney is said to have told a singular story about Abraham Lincoln not elsewhere published. Some years before the war Dr. Peter Akers, who had the reputation of preaching very long but very able sermons, had an appointment to preach at a place not far from Springfield, Illinois, in which latter place lived Mr Lincoln. A carriage-load of lawyers, including Mr Lincoln, went out to hear the learned Akers, whose fame was then well known. The story, as told by "Uncle Dick" Haney, runs thus:

Akers' theme was "The Sin of Slavery." He portrayed its horror in vivid color. He prophesied that God would wash away the crime of crimes in blood. He predicted the war and with prophetic accuracy described its terrors. But he put off its date some years. It was a startling and thrilling sermon. Few hearers sympathized with the preacher's views. They regarded the sermon as the idle frothings of a harmless old abolitionist. As the lawyers drove home they chatted gaily about the absurd fears of the preacher. They expected to see a railway built to the moon before any civil war would happen in this country. But Lincoln was silent and thoughtful. At last they rallied him.

"What do you think about it, Abe?" they

"Well," he replied, "I confess that I have never before been so deeply impressed by human utterance. I have never thought we should have war over slavery or any other question, but those utterances to-day seemed to come from far beyond the preacher. They came to me as a real and awful prophecy. More astonishing than all -and you may laugh if you will-I seemed to be thrilled in my very soul with the conviction that I am in some way to have tremendous responsibility in that coming and awful war.

Mr. Lincoln's solemn manner impressed his hearers, as usually he was the happiest in any company. It was only a few years until "Father" Akers' prophecy and Mr. Lincoln's remarkable impression were fully verified.

Lincoln, himself a prophet, readily recognized th voice of a brother prophet, and readers of the little story may judge of the value of the impressive words of Dr. Akers, as well as their relation to the then future of Abraham Lincoln.

And here is the revelation of the Lord through Joseph, the "Choice Seer":

"Verily thus saith the Lord concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place; for behold, the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States, and the Southern States will call upon other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations, in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations. And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war. And it shall come to pass also that the remnants who are left of the land will marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation; and thus, with the sword, and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn; and with famine, and plague, and earthquakes, and the thunder of heaven, and the fierce and vivid lightning also, shall the inhabitants of the earth be made to feel the wrath and indignation, and chastening hand of an almighty God, until the consumption de creed, hath made a full end of all nations; that the cry of the Saints and the blood of the Saints shall cease to come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, from the earth, to be avenged of their enemies. Wherefore, stand ye in holy places, and be not moved until the day of the Lord come; for behold it cometh quickly, saith the Lord. Amen."

A MAN'S SALVATION DEPENDS UPON HIMSELF.

Not long since we read a dream related by a man in a public meeting, in which dream he saw the Savior and his early disciples who were to accompany him to his abode. The one who was dreaming desired greatly to go with the Savior, and asked permission to do so, even pleading earnestly for such privilege, which was denied upon the ground that his work was not yet done. The dreamer then asked the Savior to promise him that when his work was done he might then come to the Savior. The answer of the Savior to him was: "That will depend entirely upon yourself."

This direct statement to an earnest plea to go from the scenes of earth to the presence and company of the Savior, the great lawgiver of the Church, is very striking though it was made in a dream—the "airy, unsubstantial fabric of a dream." It is, however, in keeping with the words of the same divine being when teaching in the temple he said: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak

It is not for him to know who only saith, "This is the work of God," but it is to him who doeth the will of Him who sent Jesus to make that will known. He it is who is to know.

This idea of a man being permitted to go and be with Christ depending on himself entirely is also consonant with the statement of the same Savior when he said: "If any man hear my word, and believeth not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world but to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my word, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.

In this case the judgment in that last day is to be predicated in the word Jesus had then spoken.

The same loving Savior said also: "If ve love me keep my commandments." "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode wi h him." "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love."

Again, this same Jesus Christ said: "Behold, here is the agency of man, and here is the condemnation of man, because that which was from the beginning is plainly manifest unto them, and they receive not the light."

"The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God," is the preface with which Mark openes his account of the birth, work and mission of the Savior. Another writer upon this sacred theme of salvation dependent upon the obedience of man to the word of God, wrote as follows: "And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it."

That which was from the beginning is made plainly manifest to this latter day church. The Seer of Palmyra, the translator of the Book of Mormon, in which is the fullness of the gospel, gives the testimony of John, the beloved Disciple, whose words are quoted above: "In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God."

—John I: I, Inspired Translation.

To this agrees the word of this same Son of God given to the church in 1830, in which word he says: ... "and this is a new and an everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning." To them then who desire to go to the Savior and be with Him, the way is open and should be plain; and it is equally plain that it does depend entirely upon themselves, whether they will "walk after his commandments" as they were given at the beginning, or attempt to climb up some other way. Let us be diligent in the study of the word of God, that we may not defeat our own desire to be with Christ, by failing to discern and receive his word. The Savior's answer in the dream is worthy of our consideration, for it really does "depend entirely upon" ourselves.

THE RESURRECTION.—No. 2.

WILL ALL WHO HAVE DIED BE RESURRECTED?

Some teach that the wicked and the infant children of the wicked, will not be resurrected; some that all but the wilfully and finally impenitent will be; and others that none but those who attain to righteousness in this life be. The Scriptures teach us that all—positively all—will be resurrected. The final judgment does not take place with either Saint or sinner until after their resurrection. Christ does not fully reward His Saints until after His second and glorious appearing, and not finally and fully until after the one thousand years reign and the "little season," which is after the resurrection.

"And behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be."—Rev. 22: 12.

"For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—Matt. 16: 27.

"And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead."

—Acts 10: 42.

"For we [the Saints] shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. For it is written, As I live saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."—Rom. 14: 10-12.

"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive a reward of the deeds done in the body; things according to what he hath done, whether good or bad."—2 Cor. 5: 10.

"I charge those therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing, and in his kingdom."

—2 Tim. 4: 1.

"The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the Saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."—Rev. 11: 15, 18.

All this takes place after the second advent, and at the end of the thousand years they who remain wicked are to be punished finally after the judgment.

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death [the grave] and hell [the prison] delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

—Rev. 20: 12-15.

That all the dead shall be raised is further manifest from the following:

"Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they who have done good, in the resurrection of the just; and they who have done evil, in the resurrection of the unjust, and shall all be judged of the Son of Man."

—John 5: 28-30.

Paul said he had "hope toward God, which they [Pharisees] themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."—Acts 24: 15.

"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—I Cor. 15: 21, 22.

"And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God."—Rev. 20: 12.

"O how great the goodness of our God, who prepareth a way for our escape from the grasp of this awful monster; yea, that monster, death and hell, which I call the death of the body, and also the death of the spirit. And because of the way of deliverance of our God, the Holy One of Israel, this death of which I have spoken, which is the temporal, shall deliver up its dead; which is the grave. And this death of which I have spoken, which is the spiritual death, shall deliver up its dead; which spiritual death is hell; wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits, and the grave must deliver up its captive bodies, and the bodies and the spirits of men will be restored, one to the other; and it is by the power of the resurrection of the Holy One of Israel.

"O how great the plan of our God! For on the other hand, the paradise of God must deliver up the spirits of the righteous; and the grave deliver up the body of the righteous; and the spirit and the body is restored to itself again, and all men become incorruptible and immortal, and they are living souls, having a perfect knowledge like unto us in the flesh; save it be that our knowledge shall be perfect; wherefore, we shall have a perfect knowledge of our guilt, and our uncleanness, and our nakedness; and the righteous shall have a perfect knowledge of their enjoyment and their righteousness, being clothed with purity, yea, even with the robe of righteousness.

"And it shall come to pass that when all men shall have passed from this first death unto life. insomuch as they have become immortal, they must appear before the judgment seat of the Holy One of Israel; and then cometh the judgment; and then must they be judged according to the holy judgment of God. And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which can not pass away, and they who are righteous shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy, are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever; and has no end." -2 Nephi 6: 4-6.

"Therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death; for behold the day cometh that all shall rise from the dead and stand before God, and be judged according to their works. Now there is a death which is called a temporal death; and the death of Christ shall loose the bands of this temporal death, that all shall be raised from this temporal death; the spirit and the body shall be re-united again, in its perfect form; both limb and joint shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time; and we shall be brought to stand before God, knowing even as we know now, and have a bright recollection of all our guilt. Now this restoration shall come to all, both old and young, both bond and free, both male and female, both the wicked and the righteous; and even there shall not so much as a hair of their heads be lost; but all things shall be restored to its perfect frame as it is now, or in the body, and shall be brought and be arraigned before the bar of Christ the Son, and God the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one eternal God, to be judged according to their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil.

"Now, behold I have spoken unto you concerning the death of the mortal body, and also concerning the resurrection of the mortal body. I say unto you that this mortal body is raised to an immortal body; that is from death; even from the first death unto life, that they can die no more; their spirits uniting with their bodies, never to be divided; thus the whole becoming spiritual and immortal, that they can no more see corruption."—Alma 8: 10, 11.

"Behold there is a time appointed that all shall come forth from the dead. Now, when this time cometh, no one knows; but God knoweth the time which is appointed. Now whether there shall be one time, or a second time, or a third time, that men shall come forth from the dead. it mattereth not; for God knoweth all these things; and it sufficeth me to know that this is the case, that there is a time appointed that all shall rise from the dead. Now there must needs be a space betwixt the time of death and the time of the resurrection. And now concerning this space of time. What becometh of the souls of men, is the thing which I have inquired diligently of the Lord to know; and this is the thing of which I do know. And when the time cometh when all shall rise, then shall they know that God knoweth all the times which are appointed unto man. Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection. Behold, it has been made known unto me by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea, the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, &c. And then shall it come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea, who are evil; for behold, they have no part nor portion of the Spirit of the Lord; for behold they choose evil works, rather than good; therefore the spirit of the devil did enter into them, and take possession of their house; and these shall be cast into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth; and this because of their own iniquity; being led captive by the will of the devil. Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked; yea, in darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for, of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection. Now there are some that have understood that this state of happiness, and this state of misery of the soul, before the resurrection, was a first resurrection. Yea, I admit it may be termed a resurrection; the raising of the spirit or the soul, and their consignation to happiness or misery, according to the words which have been spoken. And behold, again it hath been spoken, that there is a first resurrection; a resurrection of all those who have been, or who are, or who shall be, down to the resurrection of Christ from the dead. Now We do not suppose that this first resurrection which is spoken of in this manner, can be the resurrection of the souls, and their consignation to happiness or misery. Ye not suppose that this is what it meaneth. Behold, I say unto you, nay; but it meaneth the reuniting of the soul with the body of those from the days of Adam, down to the resurrection of Christ. Now whether the souls and the bodies of those of whom have been spoken, shall all be re-united at once, the wicked as well as the righteous, I do not say; let it suffice, that I say that they ALL come forth; or in other words, their resurrection cometh to pass before the resurrection of those who die after the resurrection of Christ. Now my son, I do not say that their resurrection cometh at the resurrection of Christ: but behold, I give it as my opinion, that the souls and the bodies are re-united, of the righteous, at the resurrection of Christ, and his ascension into heaven. But whether it be at his resurrection, or after, I do not say; but this much I say, that there is a space between death and the resurrection of the body, and a state of the soul in happiness or misery, until the time which is appointed of God that the dead shall come forth, and be re-united, both soul and body, and be brought to stand before God, and be judged according to their works; yea, this bringeth about the restoration of those things of which have been spoken by the mouths of the prophets. The soul shall be restored to the body, and the body to the soul; yea, and every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost, but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame. And now my son, this is the restoration of which has been spoken by the mouths of the prophets. And then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of God. But behold, an awful death cometh upon the wicked; for they die as to things pertaining te righteousness; for they are unclean, and no unclean thing can inherit the kingdom of God; but they are cast out, and consigned to partake of the fruits of their labors or their works, which have been evil; and they drink the dregs of a bitter cup."-Alma 19:4-7.

"Yea, and it behooveth him, and becometh expedient that he dieth, to bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, that thereby men may be brought into the presence of the Lord; yea, behold this death bringeth to pass the resurrection, and redeemeth all mankind from the first death; that spiritual death for all mankind, by the fall of Adam, being cut off from the presence of the Lord, or considered as dead, both as to the things temporal and to things spiritual. But behold, the resurrection of Christ redeemeth mankind, yea, even all mankind, and bringeth them back into the presence of the Lord; yea, and it bringeth to pass the condition of repentance, that whosoever repenteth, the same is not hewn down and cast into the fire; but whosoever repenteth not, is hewn down and cast into the fire, and there cometh upon them again the spiritual death, yea, a second death, for they are cut off again as to things pertaining to righteousness; therefore repent ye, repent ye, lest by knowing these things and not doing them, ye shall suffer yourselves to come under condemnation, and ye are brought down unto the second death."-Helaman 5: 6.

"And he [Jesus] did expound all things, even from the beginning until the time that he should come in his glory: yea, even all things which should come upon the face of the earth, even until the elements should melt with fervent heat, and the earth should be wrapt together as a scroll, and the heavens and the earth should pass away; and even unto that great and last day, when ALL people, and ALL kindreds, and ALL nations and tongues shall stand before God, to be judged of their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil; if they be good, to the resurrection of everlasting life; and if they be evil, to the resurrection of damnation, being on a parallel, the one on the one hand, and the other on the other hand, according to the mercy, and the justice, and the holiness which is in Christ, who was before the world began."—Nephi 11:7.

"But, behold, verily I say unto you, before the earth shall pass avay, Michael, mine arch angel, shall sound his trump, and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even ALL; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father; wherefore I will say unto them, depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."—D. & C. 28: 7.

"And Enoch beheld the Son of Man ascend up unto the Father, and he called unto the Lord, saying, Will you not come again upon the earth, for inasmuch as you are God, and I know you, and you have sworn unto me, and commanded me that I should ask in the name of your Only Begotten, you have made me, and given unto me a right to your throne, and not of myself, but through your own grace; wherefore I ask you if you will not come again upon the earth? And the Lord said unto Enoch, as I live, even so will I come in the last days—in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you, concerning the children of Noah: and the day shall come that the earth shall rest, but before that day, shall the heavens be darkened, and a vail of darkness shall cover the earth; and great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven; and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of my Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of ALL men: and righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion, a new Jerusalem."-D & C. 36: 12.

We have been thus profuse in our evidences, that all may see what a great amount there is to prove that all the dead are to be resurrected.

JOHN, THE APOSTLE, NOT DEAD.

"ALL THE GRAVES OF THE APOSTLES BUT THAT OF ST. JOHN THE EVAN-GELIST ARE DEFINITELY LOCATED.

"ALL that now remains of the apostles of Christ are in the following places: Seven are in Rome—namely: Peter, Phillip, James the Lesser, Jude, Bartholomew, Matthias and Simon. Three are in the kingdom of Naples: Matthew at Salerno, Andrew at Amalfi, and Thomas at Ortona. One is in Spain, James the Greater, whose remains are at St. Jago de Compostella. Of the body of St. John the evangelist, the remaining one of the twelve, there is no knowledge. The evangelists Mark and Luke are also buried in Italy—the former at Venice and the latter at Padua.

"St. Paul's remains are also believed to be in Italy. Peter is, of course, buried in the church at Rome which bears his name, as are also Simon and Iude.

"James the Lesser's remains are in the Church of the Holy Apostles; Bartholomew's in the church on the island in the Tiber which bears his name.

"Matthias' remains are said to be under the great altar of the renowned Basilica. Little faith, however, is placed in the legend."—Chicago Times.

The above is presented to our readers as one of the many similar accounts or legends of the resting places of the apostles of Christ. What has been stated in other accounts together with what is stated in the above may or may not be true; but it is noticable, if not significent, that almost all of the purported records or traditions of the deaths and resting places of the other apostles fail to give any positive information concerning the death, and location of the remains of the Apostle John.

The above account says: "Of the body of St. John the evangelist, the remaining one of the twelve, there is no knowledge." It will be noticed that he is here mentioned as "the remaining one of the twelve;" and that while history or tradition locates the resting places of all the others of the original and of some or all of the later twelve apostles—of the burial place of St. John, it simply states "there is no knowledge."

Before presenting other matter relating to our subject we call attention to the statements of holy writ concerning the beloved disciple. In John 21: 18, 19, I. T., is a prediction concerning the death of the Apostle Peter, after which the following is written:

"Peter seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die; yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things; and we know that his testimony is true."

—John 21: 21-24.

Some may conclude that because it is stated "yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die;" that the question of his living was left in doubt; that there was no certain prediction made by the Savior that John should not die before His second coming. We think differently, however; and conclude that when Jesus said to Peter, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" He plainly and clearly implied that John would live and continue to minister while he tarried until He should come again; but that Peter should soon "put off this tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ had showed" him.—2 Peter 1: 15.

"Then went forth this saying among the apostles that John should not die." Jesus would hardly allow an impression of an erroneous character concerning his statements to obtain among his apostles and not correct it. As an example that he would not permit them to retain a false conception of the meaning of his statements, see Acts 1: 6, 7. While in that instance he did not fully explain that which was not for them to then fully understand, he evidently indicated to them that their understanding of the matter was erroneous. That John should tarry and minister until Christ's second coming is no more wonderful than the translation of Elijah and Enoch, and the raising of others from the dead.

In Revelation 10: 8-11, I. T, we find the following concerning John:

"And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth. And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey. And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey; and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter. And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues and kings."

We can best explain this by inserting the following question, and the answer to it, written by Joseph Smith the Seer:

"What are we to understand by the little book which was eaten by John, as mentioned in the tenth chapter of Revelations?"

"We are to understand that it was a mission, and an ordinance, for him to gather the tribes of Israel; behold, this is Elias; who, as it is written, must come and restore all things."

We also insert the following:

"Revelation given to Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, in Harmony, Pennsylvania, April, 1829, when they desired to know whether John, the beloved disciple, tarried on earth. Translated from parchment, written and hid up by himself:

"And the Lord said unto me, John, my beloved, what desirest thou? For if ye shall ask, what you will, it shall be granted unto you. And I said unto him, Lord, give unto me power over death, that I may live and bring souls unto thee. And the Lord said unto me, Verily, verily I say unto thee, because thou desirest this, thou shalt tarry until I come in my glory, and shall prophesy before nations, kindreds, tongues and people.

"And for this cause the Lord said unto Peter, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? For he desiredst of me that he might bring souls unto me; but thou desiredst that thou might speedily come unto me in my kingdom. I say unto thee, Peter, this was a good desire, but my beloved has desired that he might do more, or a greater work yet among men, than what he has before done; yea, he has undertaken a greater work; therefore I will make him as flaming fire and a ministering angel; he shall minister for those who shall be heirs of salvation who dwell on the earth; and I will make thee to minister for him and thy brother James; and unto you three I will give this power and the keys of this ministry until I come.

"Verily I say unto you, ye shall both have according to your desires, for ye both joy in that which ye have desired."—D. C., section 6.

In the Book of Mormon we have an account of three of the twelve apostles who were ordained on this continent, a part of which account is as follows:

"And when he had spoken unto them he turnhimself unto the three, and said unto them, What will ye that I should do unto you, when I am gone unto the Father? And they sorrowed in their hearts, for they durst not speak unto him the thing which they desired. And he said unto them, Behold I know your thoughts, and ye have desired the thing which John, my beloved, who was with me in my ministry, before that I was lifted up by the Jews, desired of me; therefore more blessed are ye, for ye shall never taste of death, but ye shall live to behold the doings of the Father, unto the children of men, even until all things shall be fulfilled, according to the will of the Father, when I shall come in my glory, with the powers of heaven; and ye shall never endure the pains of death; but when I shall come in my glory, ye shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, from mortality to immortality; and then shall ye be blessed in the kingdom of my Father. And again, ye shall not have pain while ye shall dwell in the flesh, neither sorrow, save it be for the sins of the world; and all this will I do because of thing which ye have desired of me, for ye have desired that ye might bring the souls of men unto me, while the world shall stand."-Nephi, 13: 3.

"And now behold, as I spake concerning those whom the Lord had chosen, yea, even three who were caught up into the heavens, that I knew not whether they were cleansed from mortality to immortality. But behold, since I wrote, I have inquired of the Lord, and he hath made it manifest unto me, that there must needs be a change wrought upon their bodies, or else it needs be that they must taste of death; therefore that they might not taste of death, there was a change wrought upon their bodies, that they might not suffer pain nor sorrow, save it were for the sins of the world. Now this change was not equal to that which should take place at the last day; but there was a change wrought upon them, insomuch that satan could have no power over them, that he could not tempt them, and they were sanctified in the flesh, that they were holy, and that the powers of the earth could not hold them; and in this state they were to remain until the judgment day of Christ; and at that day they were to receive a greater change, and to be received into the kingdom of the Father to go no more out, but to dwell with God eternally in the heavens."-Nephi, 13:6.

In this connection we present an extract from a sermon by Joseph Smith concerning translated bodies, angels and ministering spirits, as it has a connection with our subject:

"He explained a difference between an angel and a ministering spirit; the one a resurrected or translated body, with its spirit, ministering to embodied spirits—the other a disembodied spirit, visiting and ministering to disembodied spirits, Jesus Christ became a ministering spirit, while his body laying in the sepulchre, to the spirits in prison, to fulfil an important part of his mission, without which he could not have perfected his work or entered into his rest. After his resurrection, he appeared as an angel to his disciples, etc, Translated bodies can not enter into rest until they have undergone a chang equivalent to death. Translated bodies are designed for future missions. The angel that appeared to John on the Isle of Patmos was a translated or resurrected body, Jesus Christ went in body, after his resurrection, to minister to translated and resurrected bodies."—Times and Seasons, vol. 2, p. 577.

In conclusion we present but one selection from among the many of those written by scholarly theologians concerning the Apostle John. We quote from Dr. William Smith's Bible Dictionary, page 422:

"In the persecution under Domitian he is taken to Rome, and there, by his boldness, though not by death, gains the crown of martyrdom. The boiling oil into which he is thrown has not power to hurt him. He is then sent to labor in the mines, and Patmos is the place of his exile. The accession of Nerva frees him from danger, and he returns to Ephesus. There he settles the canon of the gospel history by formally attesting the truth of the first three Gospels, and writing his own to supply what they left wanting. . . . At Ephesus, he appears as one who was a true priest of the Lord, bearing on his brow the plate of gold, with the sacred name engraved on it. The very time of his death lies within the region of conjecture rather than of history, and the dates that have been assigned for it range from A. D. 89 to A. D. 120. The result of all this accumulation of apocryphal materials is, from one point of view, disappointing enough. We find it better and more satisfying to turn again, for all our conceptions of the apostle's mind and character, to the scanty records of the N. T., and the writings which he himself has left."

Our conception, formed from "the writings which He himself has left" and from others, given above, is that he did not die, but tarried, and will tarry until Christ comes.

Bro. I. N. White recently wrote from Clinton, Missouri, as follows:

"I am sorry to say that I am sick. This is the first time in near a twenty years ministry that I have had to quit the field and go home sick. # TRAINING A CHILD TO SELF-CONTROL.

An inevitable struggle between the individual and the several powers that go to make his individuality, begins in every child at his very birth, and continues so long as his life in the flesh continues. On the outcome of this struggle depends the ultimate character of him who struggles. It is, to him, bondage or mastery, defeat or triumph, failure or success, as a result of the battling that can not be evaded. And, as a matter of fact, the issue of the life-long battle is ordinarily settled in childhood.

A child who is trained to self-control-as a child may be-is already a true man in his fitness for manly self-mastery. A man who was not trained, in childhood, to self-control, is hopelessly a child in his combat with himself; and he can never regain the vantage ground which his childhood gave to him, in the battle which then opened before him, and in the thick of which he still finds himself. It is in a child's earlier struggles with himself that help can easiest be given to him, and that it is of greatest value for his own developing of character. Yet at that time a child has no such sense of his need in this direction as is sure to be his in maturer years: hence it is that it rests with the parent to decide, while the child is still a child, whether the child shall be a slave to himself, or a master of himself; whether his life, so far, shall be worthy or unworthy of his high possibilities of manhood.

A child's first struggle with himself ought to be in the direction of controling his impulse to give full play to his lungs and muscles at the prompting of his nerves. As soon as the nerves make themselves felt they prompt a child to cry, to thrash his arms, to kick, and to twist his body on every side, at the slightest provocation-or at none. Unless this prompting be checked, the child will exhaust itself in aimless exertion, and will increase his own discomfort by the very means of its exhibit. A control of himself at this point is possible to a child, at an age while he is yet unable to speak, or to understand what is spoken to him. If a parent realizes that the child must be induced to control itself, and seeks in loving firmness to cause the child to realize that same truth, the child will feel the parent's conviction, and will yield to it, even though he can not comprehend the meaning of his parent's words as words. To leave a child to himself in these earliest struggles with himself, is to put him at a sad disadvantage in all the future combats of his life's warfare; while to give him wise help in these earliest struggles, is to give him help for all the following struggles.

As soon as a child is able to understand what is said to him, he ought to be taught and trained to control his impulse to cry and writhe under the pressure of physical pain. When a child has fallen and hurt himself, or has cut his finger, or has burnt his hand, or has been hit by an illdirected missile, it is natural for him to shriek with pain and fright, and it is natural for his tender-hearted mother to shrink from blaming him just then for indulging in this display of grief. But even at such a time as this, a mother has an unmistakable duty of helping her child to gain a measure of control over himself, so as to repress his cries and to moderate his exhibit of disturbed feeling. A child can exercise self-control under such circumstances. His mother can enable him to do so. It is better for both child and mother that he should have her help accordingly. Because of the lack of help just here, many a child is a sufferer through life in his inability to control himself under physical pain. And because of this inability many a person has actually lost his life, at a time when calmness of mind was essential to that endurance of physical suffering which was the only hope of prolonged existence.

Coaxing and rewarding a child into quiet at such a time is not what is needed; but it is the encouraging a child into an intelligent control of himself that is to be aimed at by the wise parent. It is only a choice between evils that substitutes a candy paid silence for a noisy indulgence of feeling on a child's part. A good illustration of the unwise way of inducing children to seem to have control of themselves, is given in the familiar story of the little fellow throwing himself on the floor and kicking and yelling, and then crying out, 'Grandma, grandma, I want to be pacified. Where are your sugar-plums?" Dr. Bushnell, protesting against this method of coaxing a child out of a state of irritation, in a fit of illnature, by "dainties that please the taste," says forcefully, "It must be a very dull child that will not cry and fret a great deal, when it is so pleasantly rewarded. Trained, in this manner, to play ill-nature for sensation's sake, it will go on rapidly, in the course of double attainment, and will be very soon perfected in the double character of an ill-natured, morbid sensualist, and a feigning cheat besides." By what methods, or means, can the great themes of God and religion get hold of a soul that has learned to be governed only by rewards of sensation, paid to affections of grief and deliberate actions of ill-nature?

That control of himself which is secured by a child in his intelligent repression of an impulse to cry and writhe in physical pain, is of advantage to the child in all his life-long struggle with himself; and he should be trained in the habit of making his self-control available to him in this struggle. "I buffet my body [or control it] and bring it into bondage: lest by any means, after that I have preached to others, I myself should be rejected," says the Apostie Paul; as if in recognition of the fact that a man's battle with his body is a vital conflict, all his life through. Every child needs the help of his parents in keeping control over his body, instead of allowing his body to gain the control of him. The appetites and passions and impellings of the outer man are continually striving for the mastery over the i ner man; and unless one is trained to master these instead of being mastered by them, he is sure to fail in his life-struggle.

A parent ought to help his child to refrain from laughing when he ought not to laugh; from crying when he ought not to cry; from speaking when he ought not to speak; from eating that which he ought not to eat, even though the food be immediately before him; from running about when it is better for him to remain quiet; and to be ready to say and do just that which it is best for him to say and do, at the time when it needs to be said and done. Self control in all these things is possible to a child. Wise training on the parent's part can secure it. And by means of this self-control the child is made happier, and is fitted for his duties in active life, as otherwise he could not be. Many a man's life-course is saddened through his hopeless lack of that self-control to which he could easily have been helped in childhood, if only his parents had understood his needs and been faithful accordingly.—Sel.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—In the last Herald is an article, "Literature for the boys and girls," which I liked very much, and as it is a subject that has often occupied my thoughts, and the subject has been opened I would like to write a few lines on it.

It is said that it would require a hundred years for one to read just the titles of all the books in the world's libraries, and of all these books fully one half are not worth reading. Some are immoral, and impure, and hurtful to the reader. Another class, though not tainted with impurity, are frivolous and empty, and not only is our time thrown away in reading them, but they destroy our taste for more solid and better literature.

In these busy days the most of us have but a few hours each day, at best, to devote to reading, and those who have most leisure could not read one book in every thousand published. When we consider this, should we not choose the very best, most useful, and most elevating reading matter to devote our leisure moments to? Youth seems to be a period much given to reading because they have most leisure, and being a period when they are little competent to judge of the merits of a book, parents should not only choose their children's reading, but, if they are given to trashy reading, should try to encourage them to read good books, and the books of the best masters. If, in our spare moments we would read aloud to them from some good book, I think they would soon acquire a taste for that kind of reading and read only good books, for people who like good solid reading seldom care for that which is light and trashy; but reading can be light and good. In your selections do not choose anything too dry or hard at first, to read aloud, but something interesting, light and good. I think parents are often careless in this matter, and do not consider enough the deep impressions, and influences left on our inner lives, by what we read, particularly that of children. We should also keep our children supplied with good reading, even at the sacrifice of something else less important. Good literature is as cheap as bad literature, if we only use a little caution and judgment in our selecting. I have seen many parents and adults use poor judgment in their choice of literature. Will some one give us a little advice as to choosing reading matter? Are all standard authors reliable? I will close now lest I occupy too much of your valuable space.

SISTER POLLY.

WEBB CITY, Mo., Nov. 1st.

Sister Frances:—I thought I would write you a few lines, if it was just to tell you that the Mother's Column is both read and appreciated in our home.

It has been over two years since I first heard and accepted the gospel. I have never had any cause to regret it. On the other hand I feel truly thankful to my Father in heaven for the many blessings which I have received. I have always found my Heavenly Father ready to answer and bless in every time of need, if I was humble and faithful. I have three little ones, and my desires are to bring them up in the way they should go: with an eye single to the glory of God. I for one believe and realize that it is better to lead our little ones by kisses instead of scolding. Kisses are stronger than blows, and they leave no stings like bitter words. They are blessed memories in our crown of thorns, when the sweet babes we kissed have gone from us into that higher life in that city whose builder and maker

My children are not large enough for the literature of the day to have much effect on. And I think with the good advice given in the Home Column there would be but little excuse for me, if they were ever to go wrong in that respect.

Ever praying for the weltare of Zion; I remain, Your sister in Christ,

HANNAH PUCKETT.

WILLOW BROOK, Mo., Nov. 4th

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I will write and thank you for writing to me, as I could not very well answer all by letter. Your letters have helped me more than I can tell, and I am trying to live so that I can stand on the right hand of my Heavenly Father when he gathers the wheat from the tares. If it is possible I pray that an elder may be sent to this part of the country, so that I can see my sister and her children and husband unite with the church. I know that this is the only true church and I thank God I am one of you. I believe that I will be healed. Pray for me that I may not waver.

Mothers of the Home Column:—The time has not been long since I have had the pleasure of being placed upon the list of mothers; for my first born, (aged a little over two months) lies in the cradle before me, a bright, blue-eyed boy, and if I can only be permitted to raise him so that he will respect and love the work of God as I do, I will feel that I have not disgraced the sacred name of mother. If every mother would strive to raise her children aright how much different the rising generation would be. But ah! it does not all rest upon the mother, if so where is the father's duty? I think they should equally share the raising of their children.

One reason I have called upon you for a portion of the precious space in the Herald to-day is to add one more to the many testimonies, that it is not folly to obey the fifth chapter of James. When my baby was three weeks old he was seized with a cough that the neighbors all called the whooping cough. When I had seen other children with it I had said if my baby takes it I have no hopes for it. But after he had coughed about as long as it seemed that he could, and all that saw him thought that he would not live until morning, no one except a mother knows my feelings as I sat by the side of the cradle watching the precious form wasting away. I went out for secret prayer but I was so full of grief that I could not utter words. But God knew my heart and put it in my mind to send for the Saints. My father (being the presiding elder) was away and we did not look for him until the next day, but when the news got to the Saints, four miles away: he was there unloading his lumber for the church. He came as soon as he could and administered to my child. The fever left him, he opened his eyes and aroused from the stupor he had been in all day except when his cough aroused him, and we immediately had hopes of his recovery. From that time on his cough grew better and he recovered. Thanks be to the God we love. His affliction is not yet removed. Please pray for him, sisters of the Prayer Union. May God bless his people. Pray for your unworthy sister,

HATTIE MINEAR.

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa., Oct. 26th.

Dear Sisters of the Column and Union:-It is needful that we strive diligentaly to heed the admonition, "Come up higher." That we may be as a city set upon a hill that can not be hid, if we are not, in a degree, responsible for our neighbor's and friend's faith in the gospel, why does the Savior admonish usto live a righteous life, as the gospel teaches that, "others seeing our good works" may be constrained to obey this blessed gospel and have the same spirit to help them to lead a life that is pleasing in the sight of the Lord. "Faith without works is dead, being alone." This the Saints have learned long ago, but it reaches beyond the obedience to the first principles, as recorded in Hebrews 6:12. Everything we do should be with an eye single to the glory of God, and these advanced principles, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, patience, diligence, etc., will bring us up to that higher standard where our works can not be hidden from the world, and our children will then truly call us blessed. When a Saint observes these things those outside of the church who hear them speak in social meetings, or in the pulpit, will have confidence in what they say, and can not fail to profit by it, because, others seeing your good works will glorify God. We may not see and know on whom it takes such an effect, but the Savior's words are none the less true. As Bro. McDowell stated in a sermon last spring, there may be a "hidden faith" within them-planted within their hearts at such times when seeing our "good works" that will in time bring forth fruit. Unless we observe these, our words are as a tinkling cymbal" in the ears of the hearers and they will not believe our testimonies even should we speak with the tongue of men or of angels. Thus we become a stumbling block to those around us, hence the "necessity of a strict examination of personal conduct and habits of life" as mentioned in the editor's comment upon "Longing to go back" in the last number of Herald.

Sisters, and brothers too, if we offend a brother, sister, friend, or neighbor in any way, let us not fail to correct the offense if known to us. If it has been done unintentionally, we surely ought not to be backward in asking their forgiveness. It is not half so hard a task as some suppose.

"Think upon these things," let us not be afraid to humble ourselves, it is just what we need to do; and if you give offense in a fit of anger and afterwards see you have done wrong, acknowledge to the one offended that you have done wrong and wish to make amends for it; profit by that lesson and strive not to commit the same error again.

Autumn Leaves is indispensible in my home. I have volume one bound and my husband said he would have the next volume bound when I get the next two numbers. I think he is very kind. I take the Herald too, and he is willing I should, although he professes unbelief in the latter day work. I have the three Sunday School books also. The Compendium is a little gem. I want Sr. Walker to sending me the Autumn Leaves. The Herald is always a welcome visitor, it always tells me how the work is progressing and how the Saints are living in such a quiet and modest way that it inspires me with new zeal in the Master's cause, which I love more, if possible, each day.

The sisters of this branch have organized a Sewing Circle with twenty-two members and the following named sisters as officers: Annie Butts president, Hattie Beecham treasurer and Ella Miller secretary. We have had four meetings and have sewed enough rags for one carpet and sent it to the weaver's. Sr. Annie Crabb donated six pounds which was quite a help.

Speaking of the publications I forgot the "Harmony" which I prize very highly. He said in the last revelation of his will to the church that a hymn sung from the heart in the spirit of prayer was accepted by him as such. The Harmony "bears acquaintance." The selection of tunes are from the authors and every Saint who loves music should study and become acquainted with it.

I have been alone in the Prayer Union with the exception of a few times, as the sisters were not united upon organizing one here, and unless unity prevails there is not much use to attempt. I will enclose two names of sisters who have resolved to keep the hour at home as much as lies in their power and perhaps ere long organize.

Yours in gospel love,

ELLA MILLER.

WALNUT CREEK, Cal., Oct. 16th.

Dear Sister Frances:- I have often thought to add my mite to the Home Column, but was afraid it might not be as interesting as I would like to make it, but to day I have so much work on hand and so many necessary things to do, I felt and was tempted again not to write, but I went and knelt down and asked the Lord for the help I needed. And did you ever know him to fail you in the time of need? Oh, no, not if we are humble. I received an immediate witness of the Spirit, and my cares took flight and the joy of the hereafter presented itself. Sisters, why should we bend like broken reeds beneath our many trials. Why grieve over what we can not help, when there are so many around us with so much greater burdens than ours? When we try to lift the burden from another's shoulders, we are lightening another's load; and let us not be careless in these lesser things. How many times we might step into our neighbor's home and sew a little while for this one who has so many little ones to care for, or take that sick one some little extra dish. Cut over those stockings small enough for some poor child or take this little dress or that piece of cloth that is just enough for some poor little one a dress. You don't need it and what right have we to let the moths eat those things that are laid away doing no one any good while our sister or neighbor shivers with cold how dare I offer my petitions to such a loving Father and look on the suffering of my own sisterhood. Yes, brother, sister, all I have in this life of sunshine or of tears, they are all, all His. He gives to each a portion of sunshine and of shadow that we may better enjoy the future when that glorious day of our redemption shall be ushered in, and then, dear suffering sisters, who have endured to the end, what joy to meet your loved and faithful, in that bright home of the

I have quite a family, six children. Four have obeyed this gospel and the fifth desires baptism and the partner of my life's joys and sorrows is also with me. We have been very poor like many other Saints but for the past two years the Lord has blessed us with plenty to eat and enough to wear, but all that I have my Heavenly Father gave me. He has heard and answered my prayers and He will also hear yours. Please pray for me, dear sisters, that I may prove faithful. In bonds,

SISTER WELDON.

Correspondence.

SANTA ANA, Cal., Oct. 30th.

Dear Herald:-I inclose a report of our Sunday School Association meeting held at San Bernardino. We did not have a large attendance but we had a peaceable one, no jarring, but a happy good time. I trust it will do a great deal of good. I can see that we have to be patient and wait for the growth of this movement. I believe that in the end it is going to be a power in the church for doing good. When the parents in the church see the need of their children being instructed in the principles of the gospel of Christ, then they will come to the front, and ask for a power for good to be thrown around them; but now so many are reclining at ease, trusting that God will bring all safely through without any particular effort on their part.

I look back upon my life, and not far back either, and see myself a bitter opponent of the Sunday School; but today I find there has been a change, and I find myself a strong advocate of the system of Sunday School work. I ask myself, how came the change? and I find it answered by saying that I sought the Lord daily, and weekly, and monthly to know what he had for me to do that I might not be idle, and my astonishment was, and is today, that he led me to take hold of something that I abhorred. I do not know how the mind was changed, but I do know that there came a change of mind, and also of conduct; and in the language of Paul I can say, "That which I once hated I now love;" and I have never felt such peace of mind as I have since I have been working for the Master in this cause, and I expect to so continue.

When the rules were drawn up for an association I knew that they were prayed over day after day, and therefore I was a strong advocate of them. Although opposed and still continue to be a pposed, yet I can see the good they have done, the good they are doing, and feel that they will be the means of doing much good in the future. The seed is sowon and now it only needs a little care and it will grow until a mighty harvest will be the result. The young minds need food; yes, the very best of food; and who is more capable of furnishing it than true, faithful and honest Latter Day Saints! I answer, none. Then I am going to work patiently and wait for the time when there will be a greater effort put forth to build up Sunday Schools than ever before and when some who are now opposed will, like myself, shake off the lethargy that binds them and go to work for the Master.

I heard a parent say, not long since, that the great desire of the heart was that their sons would take the field and be ministers of the word, and help to build up  $\hat{Z}$ ion. What a good desire, I thought. But then, there arose another thought like this: Do you when the shades of evening have gathered around and the family are seated in their respective places as Abraham of old command your children? If not, I thought, there was much to be done by way of preparation before the desire could be realized. How many today are wishing that their children would be good and religiously inclined, but seldom if ever do as the Lord said of his servant Abraham: "I know him that he will command his children after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment." And when time had rolled on and his posterity had become numerous we hear of a commandment being given by the prophet Moses to the people as the Lord commanded him: "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." If the Lord is unchangable as all Saints believe, then he surely would require as much of parents today as then; and when I take up the Book of Covenants and read the commandment of the Lord in these last days, "That inasmuch as parents have children in Zion or of any of her stakes that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in the Son of God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents." And further on I read where certain of the leading men of the church neglected to teach their children according to the commandment above and the Lord was displeased with them, and commanded them to set their own house in order: "And now a commandment I give unto you, if you will be delivered you shall set in order your own house; for there are many things which are not right in your house."

And further: It was once said that the whole church was under condemnation, and that it would remain under condemnation until they repented and remembered the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments, which had been given them, not only to say but to do according to the things written. Now if the Lord was so particular to warn the people of their transgressions and admonish them to return and remember, the Saints should be particular to keep them—the commandments.

We find that when the church was rejected, it was not individually but as an organization; and as they were to remain under that condemnation until they returned and remembered the former commandments, not only to say but to do; I conclude that all who do not, as is written in the former commandments and Book of Mormon, are still rejected or are under condemnation just as much as those in the early days of the church; for God is no respecter of persons. Now if each one who have a name in the Church of Christ would examine themselves and see whether they be in the faith or not, many no doubt would find that they were in the transgression spoken of or are rejected as much so as those were who were declared rejected in 1841. The Lord said in 1831: "Who am I that made made man, saith the Lord, that will hold him guiltless that will not obey my commandments?" No wonder he spoke to them in this way, because if they would have continued to neglect the instruction which He gave them, the church would have dwindled away in unbelief and to-day it would have been hard to have found faith upon the earth. The Psalmist David has told us in beautiful language how their fathers had instructed them. He says: "I will open my mouth in a parable, I will utter dark sayings of old, which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us. We will not hide them from their children. Showing to the generation to come the praises of the Lord, and his strength, and his wonderful works which he hath done. For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel which he commanded our fathers that they should make them known to their children." And why? Because they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but "keep his commandments." The need of such instruction is felt to-day as much as any other time in this dispensation. I hope we will all see the need of a closer walk with God so that when he shall come we will with our works be saved and with those whom we have taught in the Sunday School enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb. Yours in the covenant of Christ,

DANIEL GARNER,

WEST FORK, Ind., Oct. 9th.

Dear Herald:-The last time I wrote for your pages I was at Midletown, Ohio, trying to do my duty toward building up this great latter day work. We labored there three weeks, baptizing three. Bro. Gillen came to the rescue and baptized two more at that place; while I went on to New Trenton branch with him and baptized two more at that place. We were greatly blessed in our sacrament meeting with the Spirit of God, and some grand instructions by the Spirit were given, and we were made to rejoice in this great work. Since leaving there I learn that the branch had greatly revived through Bro. Gillen's labors. We came on to Ripley county and stayed there some twelve days. We met Bro. Daniel there and held meetings every night, Bro. Gillen doing most of the speaking. What a nice time we have when he have a good preacher with us.

On Sunday, at the sacrament meeting, we were blessed with the Spirit and good instructions were given to the Saints to be faithful to their covenants and to press forward, that God would bless them. May all heed the warning given at the meeting.

We then came on to the district conference, which was good. Here we separated from the company of Bro. Gillen, I coming home to see what could be done for the work in this vicinity, laboring a few times at the Wright School-house and the vicinity of Birdsye, meeting Bro. Gillen again at Boston Station. Then we came to West Fork, my home, where he preached four discourses, among them the funeral of Sr. Elizabeth Bowman, to quite a crowded house, but not with Mr. Bowman's consent, for he forbade us preaching it. But he could not keep the crowd away. How narrow some men are, but God will reward every man as his work shall be.

Uncle Harbert had but just left this place when Bro. Gillen got here. The Christians had sent for him to do their preaching through their big meeting, but they did not have very much confidence in him. Bro. Gillen knocked the bottom out, as some say here. He did good and we rejoiced and thank our Heavenly Father for such talent. A good many here say they want Bro. Gillen to come back and stay longer. He made a great many friends for the work.

After he left for St. Louis we went to Plainville, Davis county, Indiana, the home of Brn. Daniel and D. O. Stites. Labored there for two weeks and baptized Bro. Daniel's wife. He has done a good work there in spite of all obstacles, and has made friends for the work. May he continue to fight the fight of faith and stand as a witness for Jesus. Several here are near the kingdom. Patience and a continual work, with faith and prayer, will gain the day. We will long remember our visit to that place. With all our ups and downs we have some good times, especially, if God is with us. We are at home nearly sick with a cold on the lungs. Pray for us, Saints; we want to do our duty.

Editors Herald:—By the diligence of the few members in Denver a suitable public hall was secured, in which services were held for four successive Sabbaths. Said services were published in three different newspapers which circulate among one hundred and fifty thousand people, the present population of the city as claimed; but so numerous and fascinating were other attractions, (or so it would seem) that we were never honored with more than four or five strangers.

Denver City is making rapid strides indeed, in the most approved and modern style. Of wealth there seems no lack, while modern attractions can not fail to meet the expectation of the most sanguine. Costly church buildings abound, and Sunday exercises therein, as advertised, forcibly reminds one of the vivid description presented by the apostles of old in reference to the great apostacy. And while it is clear that the social gatherings, fairs, bazaars, etc., are bringing to both Catholics and Protestants popularity and prestige which appear quite essential for their perpetuity, it is just as clear that from the primitive doctrines, practices, etc., they are drifting farther and farther, and the glare of modern Babylon's creeds, and dogmas are so dazzling and bewitching as to make any and every primitive doctrine distasteful to most of the cultured and refined of this age of progress. Yet it seems that many of these professed modern christians are not so contented as the exterior grandeur and seeming progress of their respective societies would indicate, hence the frequent hints and corresponding efforts to reform, modify and revise their various creeds.

An Editor recently referring to the proposed change in the Westminster Confession of faith said: "A change should be made to comport with pulpit preaching" So while some of the editors are in sympathy with whatever may tend to make popular religion more popular, they have but little to say in favor of the Latter Day Saints, who are striving against the popular tide to represent, defend and practice the primitive religion or gospel in its entirety. Yet despite this, present and anticipated events greatly tend to furnish proof in favor of Joseph Smith's mission. And as coming events cast their shadows, the divided and contradictory positions of that known as the christian world, is bringing them to the very edge of the yawning precipice of rationalism, into which without a radical change they will be precipitated; thus bringing rationalism face to face with the verity of Christ's mission, the unchangeableness of his promises, etc., thus making the distinction between the Latter Day Saints and so-called Orthodoxy more visible, and the battle more fierce.

The early snow storms and cold snaps—almost unprecedented in Colorado—making out-door work uncertain, and the little interest manifested, induced the brethren (most of whom have to depend upon out-door labor, and being illy prepared for a protracted winter), to let one month's rent of an expensive hall suffice for the present. They nevertheless were anxious for branch organization, which was effected on Sunday, November 10th; twelve members being present. A greater unanimity of feeling I seldom have seen on such occasions. That suggested seemed to have been anticipated, hence received and agreed upon.

Nothing is so effectual in producing unity and evincive of a oneness of purpose as God's saving method. And modern revelations through the Palmyra Seer setting forth God's government have rendered the duties, prerogatives, etc., of the various officials that God deems requisite to consummate his purposes, so plain that when believed and acted upon a unity ensues that is inspiring indeed. But the reverse of this show should the sacred precincts of that government be invaded.

For the present the Denver branch will worship at Bro. O. A. Westland's private residence, No. 1123 Evans street. Known representatives of the church or scattered members in or adjacent to Denver will be recognized and received when making themselves known to the little band so far as church fellowship and the extension of hospitality within the reach of the sons of toils are concerned. But none need expect special or extended privileges. House rent is high in Denver, so that the laborer and mechanic are necessitated to do with small house or limited room.

Whatever the future may develop, at the present time this little band of Saints are peaceful, zealous and united. God keep them! Their ready co-operation with and kindness to me, will often loom from memory's chamber as green spots to the weary traveler over the sandy desert.

I go to-morrow to Kit Carson, a hundred and fifty miles east in response to an urgent request; on new and unbroken ground.

We would be glad for all scattered members in Colorado to report themselves to Bro. James Kemp, Hutchinson, Colorado.

In bonds,

James Caffal.

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 10th.

Bro. Blair:—As Joseph has kept you advised of our movements and the work in general I have not written. We expect to start out on a tour this week to different points.

Joseph is billed to speak twice here to day. There are two or three places we want to reach if possible, and we are under promise to go to Plain City. Politics is the chief theme here at present. In Salt Lake City now a person might think it was a recruiting station instead of a peaceful city. It is almost impossible to get out of hearing of the clatter of drums and the sound of horns. If the war spirit does not prevail here it is one very near it.

Yours in Christ.

R. J. Anthony.

FLORILLA, Mo., Nov. 5th.

Bro. Blair:-I promised to write to many, but I have neither time nor money to spare to do it, so I will say to all that this country is good for a man with small capital. The land is rich; good market for all you raise at Willow Springs; five years time to pay for land, and prices from two to three dollars per acre. Will correspond with all who wish in course of two or three weekstoo busy just now. I have spoken twice at Bro. Barrett's, twice at Sister Tuckers, twenty-seven being present the first time, and the number increasing. Mr. Tucker drove us over to Willow Springs last Saturday. Mr. Lay and grandma tried to get me the Methodist Church to speak in; they got consent of three of the trustees and the minister, the other two refused. Not wishing to press the matter we stuck posters for preaching at Sister Lay's house at 11 a.m., when the writer spoke to a goodly number. Bro. Atwell gave notice he would speak in the evening. A great many seem interested from the efforts made by Srs. Lay and grandma in loaning the Voice of Warning and Tracts. Bro. Atwell left an appointment for the first Sunday in every month. There is now in this vicinity something over twenty Saints, members of no branch, and some of them have not even certificates of baptism. There are from ten to fifteen down at West Plains in the same state. Two branches could be organized here if we only knew who is missionary in charge of this district, or whether it is in a district at all or not. Hoping to hear from some one in charge, I remain, in bonds of love, HENRY SPARLING.

PLAINVILLE, Ind.

I came here from Terre Haute, the 12th of Janury last, found Brother and Sister Stites the only Saints in this county. Commenced preaching as opportunity offered. Many are investigating now, and some have promised to be baptized. I sent for Bro. V. D. Baggerly and he came. We held meetings in Epsom several evenings. The M. E. preacher found his craft was in danger and got some help and kept some from being baptized for the present, but they say they are yet determined to be. A sister Wilson of the U. B. sect, one of the most worthy members and the best read of the place is the one they hindered. Mr. Wilson says she don't need to go back to her church any more since their preacher gave her such abuse publicly, last Sabbath. Satan is mad and is trying his utmost to stop the good work, but I don't think he will effect it. Half of the M. E. church are investigating, and the other half are trying to keep them from it. I think we will be able to organize a branch before long.

Bro. V. D. Baggerly baptized my wife last Sabbath, preached in the evening and left for home Monday the 4th. Am looking for some other elder to come this winter. Bro. M. R. Scott talks of coming through this county this fall. Elder V. D. Baggerly rendered good service for the church here. May God bless him in preaching everywhere as he did while here. Bro. and Sister Stites and my wife and myself are all the Saints here at present. We are working hard. Pray for us that we may withstand the persecution and keep the faith.

ELDER L. F. DANIEL.

COLEMAN, Mich., Nov. 4th.

Dear Herald:—We have about twenty members and they are trying to live to the covenant made at the water's edge. Our prayer-meetings are attended with much of the Holy Spirit, and our teachers take great interest in showing us the right light and keeping us in the straight and narrow way.

Your sister,

MARY E. SMITH.

DELOIT, Iowa, Nov. 11th.

Bro. Blair:—One of the most successful quarterly conferences of the Galland's Grove district closed here last night. The attendance was good; the business portion passed off pleasantly. The Sunday School association occupied a part of Saturday afternoon with a good interest manifest. The preaching of the word was seasoned with the Spirit of the the Master and the prayer and testimony meetings were active, spiritual and the gifts of the gospel were manifested.

Yours for truth,

C. J. HUNT.

ST CLAIR COUNTY, Mo., Nov. 11th.

Dear Herald:—I am now holding meetings three miles south of Osceola in St. Clair county. My greatest desire is to do the Master's will. I wish you to say to the missionary in charge of New Mexico that Sr. Medie Story lives near Victoria, Donnaanna county, New Mexico. She thinks her husband is ready to be baptized and wants some of the elders to come there and preach. Sr. Story was baptized here in St. Clair county by Bro. E. Curtis and would be glad to see some of the elders.

D. E. Tucker.

LLANSAMLET, South Wales, Oct. 19th. Bro. Blair: - It is almost a strange thing to see a letter from Wales appearing in the Herald. There are some here that can write well if they only try. This writer belongs to the Morriston branch, and has the care of said branch at present. There is a good little branch here numbering about twenty five members, but only about fifteen are attending regularly. We have had a very good time here some years ago, the gifts were in our midst in abundance. There has been some changes; some have departed through death, others have emigrated to America; therefore the branch has been affected very much through such circumstances. I am sorry to state that the church is a rather low estate in Wales at present. We regret that Bro. J. T. Davies was obliged to leave us so suddenly, owing to the ill health of his dear wife. He could have done a lot of good if he could have stopped here a little longer. He is a very good man, and a very good preacher in English and Welsh. Some of the brethren in America wrote to Bro. J. T. Davies when he was here, stating that they should like to help the Welsh mission in some shape or form; and in regard to that I beg to inform them that Bro. B. D. Davies, Frederick Place, Llansamlet, Wales, has published a little tune-book, in the tonic-solfa notation, entitled, 'The Songs of Zion,' for the use of church and family. If any of the brethren feel to send for some copies of same, we shall be very thankful.

> Yours in the gospel of peace, D. LEWIS (DEWI CHWEFROR).

> > FLORENCE, Mich., Oct. 22d.

Dear Herald:-I was baptized June 12th, 1889, by brother Willard J. Smith, and now the Spirit urges me to write my testimony and send it to the Herald. The Holy Spirit of promise, the Comforter, that was promised to the true seeker after truth; and I can say with all my heart that I have found that Comforter in the restored gospel that the Reorganized Church of Christ teaches. It is the glorious gospel of the kingdom of God. I know it is true, for God has shown it to me by His matchless power. I feel my weakness and nothingness in the sight of God; also to have my poorly written letter go to the Herald to be published; but this is precious truth to me, and I give it to the Herald as truth. Spots of bright gold and sparkling stars have appeared before my eyes on paper when I have been reading the Holy Scriptures, the Hevald, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Book of Mormon. The Lord has shown me a marvelous light in three different shapes over and above it, and it lighted the room as light as a lamp.

Hopefully, a sister in Christ,

MARY A. LAWRENCE.

ŒNAVILLE, Texas, Nov. 8th.

Mr. David Dancer :- Please send the Herald to Columbia Holcumb, Albany, Shackleford county, Texas. She says she has read the Voice of Warning and a book of tracts sent her by Bro. J. A. Robinson, and heard him preach three sermons while he was in Texas. She is persuaded the truth is with the Saints. I want to send her the Herald for one year that she may be more thoroughly convinced. I have sent my Herald to H. C. White, Pensacola, Florida, for four years, also the Book of Mormon, and the good news comes to me that all of his household are ready for baptism. He says he knows that the Saints possess the kingdom. I also sent the Herald to Mrs. Sarah Atkinson, Science Hill, Pulaski, county, Kentucky, and the answer comes back from that country, "I read the Herald with great interest." And she rejoiced because of the conversion of her husband. May the Lord bless the Herald as it goes laden with good.

C. C. HOLCOMB. Yours.

LAMAR, Mo., Nov. 3d.

Dear Herald:-I would like to say a few words through your columns, although I feel that I will not be able to write anything interesting to your readers. Though not a member of your church, I would like to express my love for the cause.

My people came to this place three years ago from Wisconsin. We like the country very well and have a pleasant home, and think if we only had some Saints to meet with it would add so much to our enjoyment. Besides my father and mother there are none here. We are in hopes that ere long some of the elders will come this way and preach for us. We are much interested in the labors of Elder D. S. Crawley and others at Webb City, and surrounding country, as we think the Webb City branch is the nearest one

I am thankful for such good reading matter as the Autumn Leaves, Herald and Hope contain. Should any of the elders or Saints pass through Lamar, they will be very welcome guests at our home. We live one mile west and half a mile north of Lamar, Barton county, Missouri. Enquire for William Souders.

With love to the cause, ZADA SOUDERS.

COOKSPOINT, Texas, Nov. 7th.

Brn. Smith and Blair: - Our district conference is over and we had a fine time, though the congregation was not as large as common at our meetings in the past. Four were added to the church, two by baptism and two by letter; the two by letter being scattered members who had not attended a meeting of the Saints in about three years, and had not seen a member of the church for nearly three years until I went about fifty miles to where they lived from any branch. They are now happy in a branch and their daughter was also baptized.

The good work moves on in this section-more calls for preaching than I can fill.

I am still yours for the truth,

E. W. NUNLEY.

BLENHEIM, Ont., Nov. 10th.

Bro. W. W. Blair: Please publish the enclosed minutes in the Herald and oblige. We had an excellent conference, the spirit of the Master being present to bless and edifying the Saints.

This is a grand work and I hope to continue faithful in it. The prospects seem brightening and the time drawing nearer when, if faithful, the Saints Saints will be blessed more than ever they have been.

The religious world seem to be very uneasy, in fact it is hard to distinguish those who belong to the churches from those who do not. The Methodists of to-day are far different from the Methodists of twenty-five years ago. Many of them own fast horses and attend horse races and do things that would not be tolerated then at all. I believe the Saints will have to be careful lest they drift into the same worldly and indifferent groove. May God bless and prosper his people. In gospel bonds,

RICHARD COBURN.

COVE SPRINGS, Kan., Nov. 9th.

Brn. Foseph and William: - I have had the pleasure of baptizing Grandma Nave, a lady who has been a believer for sixteen years. She has been suffering with cancer for three and one-half years, but was cured by using Bro. Levi Cheney's receipt for cancer, lately published in the Herald, and which I would recommend to any who may be suffering from cancer.

Yours in bonds,

O. BAUMGARTEL.

THE "SEALED BOOK."-No. XXI.

BY ELDER R. M. ELVIN.

DWELLINGS.

THE Book of Mormon was not written with a view to what was known of the aborigines of America prior to its publication, because it most emphatically and squarely contradicted what were regarded as scientific and historical facts, but which have since been shown to have been historical inaccuracies and scientific fallacies. 1. The Book of Mormon affirmed that the principal aboriginal migrations were from south to north, whereas the view entertained by antiquarians before its publicarion, and for sometime thereafter, was that those migrations had been from north to south, as the following evidences show: "It is believed both by Clavigero and Humboldt, that all these tribes of the Toltecs, Acolhuans, Chichemecas and Nahuatlacks, spoke the same language, and therefore, in all probability, emigrated from about the same degree or northern latitude."-Mayer's Mexico, p. 261.

Bancroft writes: "Second, this fact is directly opposed to the once accepted theory of a civilized people, coming from the far north, gradually moving southward with frequent halts, constantly increasing in power and culture, until the highest point of civilization was reached in Chiapas, Honduras and Yucatan, or as many believe, in South America."-Native

Races, vol. 5, p. 167.
Delafield on page 18 of his work, distinctly asserts the theory of a migration from the north into Mexico and the other southern countries, and speaking of the inhabitants of Mexico, he says: "The civilized inhabitants came originally from the north."—p. 102. same theory is asserted. On page 103 the Caleb Atwater, and Josiah Priest maintained the theory of a northern origin of the Mexican nations, i. e., that there had been a great migration from north to south. -See Priest's American Antiquities, p.

Jedediah Morse, a geographer and divine, whose "Universal Geography" was published in the latter part of the eighteenth century, in the preparation of which several of the eminent scholars of the United States assisted, maintains the theory of a migration from the north of the people of Mexico.—See page 618.

2. The Book of Mormon affirms in Ether 4:3, that the people had horses, and that there were elephants, and cureloms and cumoms. This was a pointed contradiction of the then scientific theory.

Robertson says: "America gives birth to no such creature of such bulk as to be compared with the elephant or rhinoceros, or that equals the lion and tiger in strength and ferocity."-Robertson's History

America, p. 138.

The scientific writers of the present day are not making the same mistakes Robertson did. In their book published at Philadelphia, in 1857, one of the conclusions arrived at by Nott and Gliddon in regard to the aborigines of America is the follow ing: "That they possessed none of the domestic animals."—Types of Mankind, p. 296.

Of course these theories are now known to be false; but they were maintained as true, both before and after the publication of the Book of Mormon, and were regarded by the wiseacres of scientific lore as indubitable evidence against that book.

3. Aboriginal civilization, as understood by the world prior, and for some time subsequent to the publication of the Book of Mormon, was located principally in Mexico and Peru; whereas that book locates that civilization principally in Central America, and the central portions of North America.-See Lamoni edition of the Book of Mormon, pages 43 63. 136-7-8, 155-6, 248-9, 267-8, 279, 512, 518 and 520.

SUMMARY.

From the foregoing I conclude: 1. The early Spanish explorers were not capacitated to discover, did not discover, and therefore did not report, or in any way make known to the world the aboriginal civilization of Central America.

2. That these explorers made some attempt to describe sixteenth century civilization; but that their reports of this were "unsatisfactory," "imperfect," "vague," and of "but little value, even had they been more extended."

3. That what knowledge the sixteenth century explorers made known to the world, was between the sixteenth and the nineteenth centuries practically obliterated; so that the ruins lay "untenanted and un-known," to the world, until after "1830."

4. That "since 1830 the veil has been lifted" from Central American civilization, first by Zavala, but principally by Stephens and Catherwood, whose works were published in New York in 1841 and 1843 respectively.

5. That the first modern visit to any of the ruins of Central America was made by Zavala, between the years 1830 and

Uxmal was published in 1835.

7. That the first exploration of Copan was by Palacios in 1576, whose work was not published in any language until 1843, and not in English till 1860; and that therefore the first account of Copan was published to the world by Catherwood and Stephens.

8. That the first account of the ruins of Palenque was published in English at London, England, in 1822, that it received so little attention that the Literary Gazette, a paper of wide circulation, announced it in 1831 as a discovery of Galindo; that Prof. Rafinesque, in America, regarded it as unsatisfactory, unless confirmed by other reports, which other reports he was disappointed in not receiving prior to 1832; that it deduced an Egyptian origin for the people of Central America, whereas the Book of Mormon asserts a Jewish origin.

9. That the first Isthmian antiquities were discovered by Berthold Seeman, near David, in 1848; that Costa Rican antiquities were first discovered by Drs. Wagner and Scherzer, in 1853-4; that the chief antiquities of Nicaragua have been by two men, Squier and Bovle, the former in 1849-50 the latter in 1865-6; that the most important antiquities in Guatemala were first visited in 1840, by Mr. Cather-

10. That the civilization of Central America was not comprehensively treated upon until 1857-9, and then by Brasseur de Bourbourg.

11. That "the richest mythological legacy" of the aborigines of America, the "Popol Vuh," was not given to the world until 1857.

- 12. That Robertson, the "equal of Hume and Gibbon in style and diction, and their superior in impartiality," in 1777; Humboldt, one of the most thorough, systematic and comprehensive scientists of his day, in 1809; Priest after 1832; Goodrich, assisted by other able men, in 1836; and Delafield, whose able work was published in the three leading cities of the civilized world, New York, Paris and London, in 1839, though describing the civilization of Mexico on one side, and Peru on the other, yet do not attempt to describe the civilization of Central America. Central American civilization was not, therefore, known when these authors wrote.
- 13. That the first "systematic," "perfect" and comprehensive survey and exploration of the works of the Mound Builders of North America, and therefore the first survey which could reveal the scientific skill employed by those Mound Builders in the construction of their earthworks, were made by Squier and Davis, and first published by the Smithsonian Institute in
- 14. That two of the most important elements of the civilization of the Mound Builders, namely, mining and weaving, were not made known to the world until 1849 and 1868, respectively.
- 15. That the publication of the Book of Mormon antagonized the world upon the following points: the location, character, and derivation of aboriginal civilization, and the kinds of animals which in aboriginal times had inhabited this continent.
- 16. That, therefore, at the time of the publication of the Book of Mormon, no man or set of men, had sufficient data from which to write that book.
- 17. That the testimony of the hundreds who have read the book is-notwithstanding its lack of elegance, and want of literary perfection-that no man could write such a book without the divine aid of inspiration.
- 18. That without any particular attraction in diction, and without the aid or influence of a great name or wealth to push it, it is marvelous how it attracts the love and hatred of the world,

GLASS.

I do not call to mind a positive assertion in the Book of Mormon that either the Jaredite or Nephite civilization possessed the article, glass. But on account of the following,—"And he did moulten out of a rock sixteen small stones; and they were white and clear, even as transparent glass," (Ether 1:7),-such men as Lamb and Braden assault the book. It will be seen by the reading, that it mentions sixteen stones, not glass; and they were white and clear AS GLASS. Glass is from the word ice; (See Chambers Encyclopedia, vol. 4, p. 773, article Glass); and I would as soon or rather believe that the ancient people of this continent had a knowledge of the But let it be understood that the original account of those sixteen transparent stones was translated into the Nephite language and subsequently, in 1829, into the English.

The art of manufacturing glass was understood in Egypt more than two thousand years before Christ, or more than three hundred years before the Israelites made their four hundred years sojourn in The Israelites thus gaining that land. that knowledge from the Egyptians, it would be nothing strange that they retained the word and the knowledge of how to produce the article after their settlement on this continent. Josiah Priest however claims that glass has been found: "He discovered in one mound, an article of glass, in form resembling the bottom of a tumbler, weighing five ounces; it was concave on both of its sides."-American

Antiquities, p. 280,

This discovery was made after the publication of the Book of Mormon, and is therefore another proof of the advanced civilization of the Nephites. With the increase of clear evidence on this topic, some one like Job of old will exclaim in honor of God: "Which doeth great things past finding out; yea, and wonders without number."-Job 9: 10.

ABORIGINAL RELIGION.

We establish the fact that a form of religion existed among the aborigines of America that came down by tradition from the ancient inhabitants, and it is the very strongest evidence of the truthful character of the Book of Mormon. I will therefore first direct attention to the

SACRED RECORDS.

Ellen Russell Emerson says: "The Ojibway Indians, relates Mr. Copway, had three depositories for sacred records near the waters of Lake Superior. Ten of the wisest and most venerable men of the nation dwelt near these, and were appointed guardians over them. Fifteen years intervened between the opening of these records. If any vacancies had been caused by death, others were chosen in the spring of the year; and in the month of August these were called to witness the ceremony. As they were opened all the information respecting them was given. After this, the plates were closely examined; and if any had begun to decay, they were taken out, an exact copy was made and placed in its stead. The old one was divided equally among the wise men. very highly valued for being deposited; every fiber was sacred, and was considered capable of endowing the possessor with wisdom. These records were written on slate rock, copper, lead, and the bark of birch trees. It is claimed that they contain the transcript of what the Great Spirit gave the Indian after the flood, which has been transmitted by the hands of wise men to other parts of the country ever since. There is a code of moral laws, which they call a path made by the Great They believe a long life will re-Spirit. sult from obedience thereto. In them are represented how man lived before death entered the world; and the path he then followed marked out an example for those of the present time."-Indian Myths, p. 225-6.

This book was published in Boston, in 1884. See also Copway's "History of the Ojibways."

A truth in tradition, held by some Indians is, that they at one time had a book the equivalent to our Bible. On this Boudinot savs: "It is said among their principal or beloved men, that they have it handed down from their ancestors that such a book as the white people have, was once theirs; that while they had it they prospered exceedingly; they also say that their fathers were possessed of an extraordinary divine Spirit, by which they foretold future events, and controlled the common course of nature; and this they transmitted to their offspring on condition of their obeying the sacred laws; that they did by this means bring down showers of blessings upon their beloved people; but that this power for a long time passed, [past] had entirely ceased."

He also says: "There is a tradition related by an aged Indian of the Stockbridge Tribe, that their fathers were once in possession of a sacred book, which was handed down from generation to generation, and at last hid in the earth, since which time they had been under the feet of their enemies. But these oracles were to be restored to them again, and then they would triumph over their enemies, and regain their ancient country, together with their rights and privileges."

Mr. Boudinot after recording many traditions similar to the above, at length remarks: "Can any man read this short account of Indian traditions, drawn from the tribes of various nations, from the west to the east, and from the south to the north, wholly separated from each other, written by different authors of the best characters both for knowledge and integrity, possessing the best means of information, at various and distant times, without any possible communication with each other, and yet suppose that all this is the effect of chance, accident or design, from a love of the marvelous, or premeditated intention of deceiving, and thereby ruining their well established reputation?"

Mr. Boudinot was the first president of the American Bible Society. The above quotations will be found in a work entitled "Star of the West, or an effort to discover the lost tribes of Israel," See American Encyclopedia. article Boudinot.

1. The control of the

ONE SUPREME BEING.

Paul wrote to the Ephesians, there is "One God;" and there seems to be sufficient evidence to show that the ancient people of America were monotheistic in in their belief concerning God: "The Mexicans had some idea of a Supreme God, to whom they gave fear and adoration. They did not represent him by any visible form, calling him 'Teotl,' or God, to whom they applied expressions highly characteristic of his nature. They also believed in an evil spirit, called 'Tlacatecolotl."-Researches in America, by an officer of the army, Baltimore, 1816, Delafield, p. 32.

Jones says: "Among the southern tribes the sun was regarded as the symbol of the power and beneficence of the Great Spirit, the Supreme God, or Creator, the soul and governor of the universe, the giver and taker away of the breath of life. Hence, to this celestial luminary, did they pay profound homage as to the visible minister and representative of the author of life."—Antiquity of Southern Indians, p. 20.

Bancroft says: "The Californian tribes, taken as a whole, are pretty uniform in the main features of their theogonic beliefs. They seem, without exception, to have had a hazy conception of a lofty, almost supreme being; for the most part referred to as a Great Man, The Old Man above, the One above."—Native Races, vol. 3, p. 158.

"The natives of Nevada have ideas respecting the great kind spirit of some kind, as well as a myth concerning an evil one.

The Utah belief seems to be nearly as possible identical with that of Nevada.

The Apaches recognize a supreme power of heaven, . . the creator and master of all things."—Ibid, p. 170.

Again he says: "The people of Durango

Again he says: "The people of Durango called the principal power in which they believed Meyuncame, that is to say, Maker of All Things." Thid a 170 of All Things."—Ibid, p. 179.

He tells us that: "The Abbe Brasseur believes in the knowledge by the Mexicans and certain neighboring or related nations, of a Supreme God."—Ibid, p. 185.

Kind reader, if you will accept I will furnish the true foundation upon which rests these aboriginal traditions relative to the Supreme Being. That wonderful Book of Mormon, the sacred record of the Nephites, speaks on this wise: "Hearken unto me, O Jacob, and Israel my called; for I am he; I am the first and I am also the last. Mine hand hath also laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens."—I Nephi 6:3.

The same authority further says: "For there is a God, and he hath created all things, both the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are."—2 Nephi 1: 7; while another writer has it thus: "And no man knoweth of his ways, save it be revealed unto him; wherefore, brethren, despise not the revelations of God. For behold, by the power of his word, man came upon the face of the earth; which earth was created by the power of his word."—Jacob 3:3.

Bancroft says: "The Mexicans and the Tezcucans, 'following Senor Pimentel,' recognized the existence of a Supreme Being, of a First Cause, and gave him that generic title Teotl, God."—Native Races, vol. 3, p. 190.

He further says: "It is well to remark, 'writes Camargo,' that allthough the Indians had a divinity for each thing, they were aware of the existence of a Supreme God."—Ibid, p. 195. Almost in the opening of the Book of Mormon is this statement: "He saw God sitting upon his throne, surrounded with numberless concourses of angels in the attitude of singing and praising their God."—1 Nephi 1:4.

Ellen Russell Emerson says: "In the opinion of all, some ruling deity was an object of worship and reverence to the North American Indian. There was a conception of a Supreme Being, Creator and ruler of the universe. . . . However broken the image, however dim this consciousness of the one universal Lord, its prevalence is indubitable."—Indian Myths, p. 4.

Of the American Indian she further says: "They recognized the supreme power of the Great Spirit, who rules the sun, moon and stars."—Ibid, p. 634,

Mr. Wood in speaking of the American Indians says: "One of the most pleasing traits in the character of these tribes is the strong religious feeling which pervades the general tenor of their lives, and which raised them above the rank of mere savages. However imperfect may be their ideas on this subject, they are not idolators, and give all their worship, whether directly or indirectly, to one Great Spirit, whose aid and protection they continually invoke."-Uncivilized Races, p. 1313.-He still further says: "To the Great Spirit they ascribe the possession of all the necessaries and pleasures of life, and to him they offer their prayers and return their thanks on almost every occasion."-Ibid, p. 1313.

The cogitation of an Indian is given in this language: "Such were frequently the reflections of Dee Coo Dah. He was aware of the condition, and mourned the doom of the Indian race, but would occasionally take comfort in the exercise of a faith that the Great Spirit, or God of his fathers, would at some future day pour out his wrath in retributive vengeance, to to the total extermination of the white man."—Traditions of Dee Coo Dah, p. 177.

Speaking of a grand stair case at Kabah, Stephens says: "The doors of two center apartments open under the arch of this great stair case. In that on the right we again found the prints of the red hand; not a single print, or two, or three, as in other places, but the whole wall was covered with them, bright and distinct, as if but newly made."—Incidents of Travel, vol. 1, p. 402.—The meaning of these "red hands" will be presently explained.

Of another part of the same ruins he says: "It had a raised platform about four feet high, and in each of the inner corners was a rounded vacant place, about large enough for a man to stand in; part of the back wall was covered with prints of the red hand. They seemed so fresh, They seemed so fresh, and the seams and creases were so distinct. that I made several attempts with the machete to get one print off entire, but the plaster was so hard that every effort failed." -Ibid, p. 411.

Speaking of the ruins of Sabacche, Stephens says: "On the walls of this desolate edifice were prints of the 'mano colorado," or red hand. Often as I saw this print, it never failed to interest me. It was the stamp of the living hand."-Incidents of Travel, vol. 2, p. 46.

Bancroft speaking of antiquities of Nicaragua says: "Of the remaining figures shown in the cut in the following page, the red hand is of frequent occurrence here, and we shall meet it again farther north, especially in Yucatan."—Native Races, vol. 4, p. 37.

"Mr. Boyle found the cliff paintings to have suffered much since Mr. Squier's visit thirteen years before; so much so none could be made out but the winged snake and the red hand."-Ibid, p. 38.

In speaking of Uxmal Bancroft says: "And take leave of the Casa del Gobernador with a mention of the red hand, whose imprint is found on stones in all parts of the building,"—Ibid, p. 164; and of Kabah he says: "One of the apartments has the red hand imprinted in bright colors in many places on the walls.' Ibid, p. 209.

He gives this additional notice of Sabacche: "Three other buildings were visited, and one of them sketched by Catherwood, but they present no new features except that the red hand common here as elsewhere, is larger than usual."—Ibid, p.

Writing concerning the red hand at Labphak he says: "The lower ones present numerous imprints of the ever present red hand."—Ibid, p. 251.—He also says that at Tuloom, "The imprint of the red hand appears on the interior walls."-Ibid

p. 257. Now for the explanation of the red hand, found so frequent among the ancient temples. Schoolcraft says: "The figure of the red hand is used by the North Ameican Indians to denote supplication to the deity or Great Spirit; and it stands in the system of picture writing as the symbol for strength, power, or mastery, thus derived. In a great number of instances which I have met with of its being employed, both in the ceremonial observation of their dances, and in their pictorial records, I do not recollect a single one in which this sacred character is not assigned to it. . . . This use of the hand is not confined to a single tribe or people. I have noticed it among the Dacotahs, the Winnebagoes, and other western tribes, as among the numerous branches of the red race still located east of the Mississippi river, about the latitude of forty two degrees, who speak dialects of the Algonquin language." Incidents of Travel, vol. 2, p. 476-7.

The prevalence of the red hand throughout Central America as well as among the North American Indians, indicates, if Schoolcraft's definition of its import be right, that the worship of the Supreme Being, known to the Indians as the Great Spirit, was universal throughout those regions. Of the American Indians, the American Encyclopedia says: "They recognized a Supreme Being."

ROMANISM AND OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

THE Rev. Dr. A. P. Foster of Boston preached last evening at the First Congregational church on "Romanism and Our Public Schools." He said the publicschool system of this country had been struck a deadly blow by the pope of Rome. It was a peculiarity of the American people that they were anxious to treat all religions with equal toleration. This spirit of generosity was commendable and right, but in consequence of this peculiarity there was danger from any attack that might be made at the vital principles of our government in the guise of religion. He did not wish to speak of Romanism as a religion, but as a political power. There were at least 8,000,000 Roman Catholics in this country. It was the Romish theory that the pope was king of kings. It was his right to command obedience of all his subjects, even if his commands conflicted with the principles of the government under which the subjects lived. The Roman Catholics of this country in establishing parochial schools were not expressing their own will, but that of the power which they felt compelled to obey. The plenary council at Baltimore was not a representative body, but it expressed the will of the pope and the people had only There was no vote taken by the to obey. people. Of the 7,2000,000 baptized members of the Catholic church in this country there were none that had any voice of their own. The pope at Rome was the autocrat of the Catholic population in this country. The clergy must obey the pope and the people must obey the clergy. When the pope said the public schools of America must not be used by Catholics his subjects must obey.

At a convention of representative Irishmen in Chicago in April, 1885, protest was made against the pope's denunciation of the plan of campaign in Ireland. They were nearly all Catholics, but they declared that they would resist to the bitter end any encroachment of the Roman court on their political rights. If these people would show the same devotion to America, the country they live in, as they did to Ireland, if they displayed the same spirit in standing up for American institutions as they did in defense of those of Ireland this country would be saved from a great danger. Such Catholics ought to be on our side in this school question, and they would be if it were properly laid before them.

Catholics were urged to make themselves active political elements wherever they lived. They were taught to obey the laws of this country only when they did not conflict with those of the pope. A foreign and despotic government caused them to violate their oaths of allegiance The growth of the to this country. Roman power in America was checked for awhile by the public schools, for they made patriots of the children. The pope discovered this and attacked the schools. The public schools taught American instead of Catholic principles. No wonder a power like Rome, desiring to rule in America, hated this public-school system. Without the public schools this republic would be a failure. The Catholics began to establish parochial schools, of which there was about three thousand, with an an attendance in 1888 of over five hundred and eleven thousand. Public schools were denounced as "nurseries of vice." vet in order to gain control they put their own people in them as teachers. It was said that in Chicago the majority of the board of education were Catholics, while eighty per cent. of the teachers were of the same faith. Now that the Roman clergy were making the public-school system of this country the point of attack Protestants and Americans must rally to its support.—Chicago Times.

VERY GOOD DODGING.

REVIEWING the work of its general convention, which closed last week in New York, the observer can not fail to be impressed with the extreme conservatism of the Episcopal church. There is scarcely a great deliberative body in this or any other land which so successfully and withal gracefully succeeds in dodging awkward questions and persistent people as does the Épiscopal church.

The convention has adjourned, yet little or no action to speak of has been taken on the vexed questions, such as revision of the prayer-book, change of name, alterations in creed, and the precise settlement of the color line south, which are so persistently dragged into its councils. Verily, the general convention of the Episcopal church represents a learned, scholary body of gentlemen who for tact, suavity, and adroitness in the art of how not to do a thing can scarcely be equaled and certainly not surpassed in the world.

The council did take some action on the divorce question, however, and has recommended that the marriage service be so amended as to read "live together in holy love until our lives end." This new departure provokes an expression from a Roman Catholic direction which is to say the least severely critical:

"This canon prescribes some very commendable provisions, which, however, are by no means new. They have been from time immemorial enjoined by the Catholic church. They include the forbidding of marriage within certain degrees of consanguinity and affinity, the forbidding of clandestine marriages, and the requiring of registry of names, residence, and other particulars.

"On the question of divorce the canon makes marriage indissoluble except for adultery, with the proviso that the guilty party in such case is not permitted to marry again during the lifetime of the other party. It also enjoins that 'persons divorced are forbidden to marry each other again if meanwhile the woman shall have married again.' This, it seems to us, is a strange provision. A person who would do what it forbids would be guilty, under the laws of the land, of bigamy. From the point of view of Episcopal church law or the secular law the canon might as well have specified bigamy as one of the things prohibited.

"It is a pity that the Episcopalians can not see their way to settling this important question once for all by adopting the marriage law of the ancient and universal church. It is the law which upholds and defends the dignity of woman, which guards the rights and interests of children, and maintains and sanctifies the family relations. The divorce court is a blot upon our civilization, an incentive to immorality, a scandal to Christianity. It ought not to have the sanction of any organization having at heart the temporal and spiritual welfare of man."—Chicago Times, Sunday, Oct. 27th

CONFESSION OF FAITH.

JUST what intelligent, wide-awake, modern men and women of the Presbyterian church really do believe about that grim old Westminster confession of faith is a pretty hard thing to find out. The perplexing question, "Revision or non-revision?" is just now making the Presbyterian pulpit critically difficult and the pew desidedly uncour cidedly uneasy.

The logic of their theological system is not palatable to modern Presbyterians. They want more comfortable and more popular teachings, even if logic must go by the board. If they do manage to get rid of "election" as a sort of sugar-coated compromise, to be consistent they will have to throw overboard the entire doctrine of hell. It is a doctrine which, with the idea of a personal devil, is already in much disrepute among the more liberal minded and better educated of their congregations as it is getting to be among the more enlightened Christian people generally.

The most trenchant utterance recently upon this much vexed subject of revision is from the pen of the Rev. Dr. Q. L. Scott in the Preshyterian Yournal:

in the Presbyterian Journal:
"The term 'elect infants' is at best unfortunate; it means something or nothing. If nothing, then let it be expunged. If something, then what? Does it mean that all infants dying in infancy are elected? Very well; then say so. One thing is certain, the single word 'elect' does not convey that meaning. Does it mean that by election all infants dying in infancy are Then so express it. The sense will then be one of method, and not limitation, which many now claim. I submit again that 'elect' is not the word to express that idea. Or, further, does it mean that there is a possibility of one little soul being passed by in the exercises of God's sovereignty and left to the pangs of eter-al torture? We declare that to be a libel on God, a slander on the Christ. The Presbyterian church believes nothing of the kind, and it is to escape the suspicion of such a horrid possibility we want the word changed. The canonization of Herod is something for which our church is not yet prepared. No one who has ever looked into the face of his own sweet infant dead, and then thought of the gentle Christ and his tender, child-like love, can entertain the remotest thought that such are lost. This may be sentiment. Be it so; with the heart man believes unto righteousness, and sentiment may be the outburst of the purest faith."—Chicago Times.

PLEA FOR COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

WE are a firm believer in a stringent law for compulsory education. Public sentiment, which upon this subject has been appallingly dormant, seems lately to be aroused, and it is to be hoped that this interest will bear fruit, both in insistence upon the strict execution of the law in such states as have one, and a formulation in such states where such measure is wanting. A philosopher has wisely said that the state should either educate or kill its children. Behind the ghastly wit of the statement is the great fact that society has no more paramount duty than insisting that the youth of the land shall be educated. Education is a certain road to success, and it behooves the commonwealth to see that the young are directed therein. The people of ancient Greece understood these things better than we do. With them child training was considered a matter worthy public supervision. It may be argued that if children grow up to illiteracy, it is through their own truancy or the carelessness of parents and guardians. This is to a certain extent true, but if behind all this a law for compulsory education were rigidly enforced, such a condition could not exist.

A state is what its citizens make it. The children of today are the citizens of tomorrow, and the necessity for the proper training and preparation of these young people is apparent. At no time in the span of human life is the mind more impressible than in the years of youth. If in these plastic years the child is permitted to grow up in ignorance, it is bound to grow up in evil. What would life be worth without at least an elementary education. Who would wish to live in intellectual darkness? Ignorance on the part of the public of the value of such a law has allowed thousands of children to grow to majority uneducated, unfitted for the duties of life. Some weak-headed sentimentalists object to a law of this nature on the ground that it is an infringement of personal liberty. Such objection is ex-Every child who runs tremely trivial. away from school at every opportunity, or who is kept there by stern parental command is educated on the compulsory plan. No one-not even the sentimentalist-objects to that kind of compulsory education. That the general and strict enforcement of such laws will come is not to be doubted. The public mind has only to be aroused to the dangers of neglect in this matter, and to the blessings that will follow an intelligent and thorough enforcement of wise measures upon this question, to not only approve, but insist.

LINCOLN AND EMANCIPATION.

The last installment of the Lincoln biography in the Century for October presents Mr. Lincoln's views on emancipation. The subject is presented by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay in connection with the famous "peace conference," February 3d, 1865, at Fort Monroe, between Mr. Lincoln and the commissioners appointed by Mr. Davis. When he told the confederate commisioners that peace could be restored by the southern states laying down their arms and returning to their places in the Union, the latter cited his emancipation proclamation, the division of Virginia, etc., as obstacles to the restoration of the status quo ante. Thereupon Mr. Lincoln replied substantially that in his opinion the proclamation, having been a war measure, would be inoperative after peace was made. It would apply only to such slaves as had come under its operation during the war and would not free others. "It was not his intention," he added, "in the beginning to interfere with slavery in the states; he would never have done it if he had not been compelled by necessity to do it to maintain the Union; he had always himself been in favor of emancipation, but not immediate emancipation, even by the states." He said further, according to Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, that "he would be willing to be taxed to remunerate the southern people for their slaves. He believed the people of the north as responsible for slavery as the people of the south and if the war should then cease, with the voluntary abolition of slavery by the states, he should individually be in favor of the government paying a fair indemnity for the loss to the owners." The disposition to remunerate slave-owners, Mr. Lincoln stated, was extensive in the north. "I know," he said, "of persons in favor of an appropriation as high as $400,000,000 for this purpose."

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

Although many branch reports have beeen received throughout the year, yet several district clerks have not forwarded the reports that published minutes show have come into their hands at district conferences. Therefore this is to ask all clerks and presidents, who have possession of branch reports, that they will please forward them to me at an early day. Do not try to send them with a one cent stamp (as some have done), for written matter should pay letter postage. you are not supplied by the district with postage, and can not afford the stamps, then, rather than the reports be lost, I will send stamps to prepay; or if you put on a two cent stamp it will come, and if more is needed it can be paid here. If only a one cent stamp is put on the package it is likely to be cast aside because of being insufficiently paid, and thus be lost altogether. Some pieces so stamped get through but others are lost. This causes additional expense for correspondence with each branch in search of items and corrections. If mission and district presidents will also take an interest in this matter (as some have already done), it will thereby greatly aid in the work that the Lord requires to be done by us, and for such aid I will be thankful.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH IN CONGRESS.

A MISTAKE of understanding has occurred among some of the elders in the field concerning the part taken by the Reorganized Church in affecting the various enactmentments of Congress respecting the repression of plural marriage, or polygamy in

The presidency of the church, at a very early day, took the subject of what effect the legislation of Congress with reference to Utah Mormonism might have upon the corporate and individual rights of the Reorganized Church into consideration, and decided that the peculiar circumstances by which the reorganization was made a necessity, and the conditions under which it took place, required that those entrusted with the watchcare of the body should in all laudable ways see to it that the lawmaking powers of the nation and the states and territories should be informed of the facts and true faith of the Reorganized Church, pending all legislation by which the rights of members, as citizens of the Republic, and the church as a corporate body, might be injuriously affected, either directly or in any remote degree.

In pursuance of this decision of duty, upon the occasion of pending legislation in Congress, the church by its representatives has laid before those likely to be engaged in such legislation, in clear terms and concise form the facts of the founding of the church in 1830, its faith then and subsequently prior to and until the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the loyalty of the members of the church and the com-mands of God requiring such loyalty, the defection from the faith caused by and resulting from the introduction of plural marriage as a tenet, and the utter untenability of such dogma when measured and determined by organic and existing rules and laws; and all this that these persons might fully consider the attitude of the Reorganized Church and that church be spared wrong and distress by unjust legislation.

In 1866, pending legislation following the enactment of 1862, the senior editor of the HERALD, Joseph Smith, was summoned to Washington, at the instance of Congressman Ashley of Ohio, then chairman of the Territorial Committee, to answer questions touching the matter, and to make such suggestions as he might deem necessary. At that examination the position of the church was stated; and the suggestion was made that existing laws be enforced, and no further legislation was suggested.

In the spring of 1870, pending the action of Congress on the Cullom Bill, the April session of conference appointed Ioseph Smith, Alexander H. Smith, Mark H. Forscutt, William W. Blair and Josiah Ells, from among its leading men, a committee to draft a Memorial to Congress, setting forth the faith and loyalty to the government of the church, and a statement of facts. This duty these men discharged, and on April 11th that memorial to the PRESIDENT and VICE PRESIDENT and the SENATE and House of Representa TIVES was presented, read and adopted by conference, and ordered to be laid before those to whom it was directed. This was done. Copies of this memorial were sent to each member of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to the governors of the several states, that so far as it was practicable to do so the information contained in it might be widely spread in the places where the church might have an existence, and desire to do missionary labor.

In 1882, while the Edmunds Bill was pending, the Reorganized Church sent Elders Zenas H. Gurley and Edmund L. Kelley to Washington, as representatives to do whatever might be done by them to protect the interests of the church, and set such facts before those engaged in shaping the legislation as they would be permitted This these brethren did, being permitted to appear before the committee of which Hon. Reed, of Maine, was chair-

It was also decided that a statement should be made to Secretary of State, Hon. Frederick Frelinghuysen, in respect to the action of his predecessor, Hon. Wm. M. Evarts, by which the rulers of foreign lands had been asked to take measures to prevent the emigration of persons from their respective countries whose faith was supposed to be inimical to the institutions of America, and who were called Latterday Saints, commonly called Mormons. This was thought advisable, in order to avoid any subsequent confounding of the Reorganized Church and the Utah Mormon Church, to the prejudice of the former, should any foreign missions be undertaken by it, and to secure if possible a recognition as loval citizens of the United States. This duty was performed by Elders Zenas H. Gurley and Joseph Smith, who secured a presentation to Secretary Frelinghuysen, through the kindness of Senator William B. Allison, of Iowa, and Congressman W. P. Hepburn, of the eighth congressional district of Iowa, and J. C. Burrows of Michigan; each of whom gave a pleasant and personal recognition of the object contemplated in the effort of these commit-

Subsequently to these efforts, and while the bills contemplating the dissolution of the church corporation in Utah and the confiscation of the Emigration fund and other property of the church in Utah, were under consideration, the presidency addressed Congressman W. P. Hepburn, setting forth the injury likely to result from such extreme measures, and protesting against what would inevitably be construed into acts of persecution; and which would be unproductive of the results in-

In all these several presentations to Congress the Reorganized Church has had but one object in view, and that has been to protect the rights of the believers in the true faith from being confounded with those who, we believe, have been following a perversion of the faith, and thus prevent so far as it was possible, the lawmakers of the nation from doing violence to the constitutional right of conscience. In all of these efforts, we have set before these men the laws of the Lord as given to the church in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, as the last named was left to the church at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

How far these several efforts at self protection upon the part of the Reorganized Church may have affected congressional legislation we are not prepared to say, for we have no means of knowing. We therefore think it a grave mistake for any of the elders to assume privately, or in their public letters and lectures that the Reorganized Church "framed," or "was instrumental in having enacted" the various bills adopted by Congress respecting polygamy, for all such assumption is made without other evidence than the fact that the efforts were made as herein stated, and speculation supposes that those efforts assisted congessmen to their conclusions.

We have neither the right to inculpate congressmen in favoritism to us, and hostility to Utah Mormonism on our account, nor to take credit to ourselves when it does not properly so belong, nor to flatter ourselves with having influence and power in circles where perhaps no thought of us was ever indulged.

It is as wrong to claim the honors of the legislation referred to, if honors there are attaching to it, as it is for the Utah Mormon church to charge us with the bitterest enmity and malicious and hateful intent in the defensive measures we felt called upon to take in protection of the rights we knew ourselves to be entitled to as members of the body which we believe to be the Church of Jesus Christ.

That the legislations in Congress has been unfavorable to the church in Utah, in the claim made by that church for immunity from interference by law with their plural marriage institution is a fact. Whatever blame may justly attach to the Reorganized Church for the part taken by it and its representatives in the acts recited above, we are willing to bear; but we want neither commendation nor blame, where neither is due. The truth, principle, and fact, will be all that we shall finally stand or fall by; and let us therefore be content with that now. We are not responsible for the mistakes, misunderstanding and misrepresentation of newspaper reporters; but we are responsible for what we ourselves present in press and pulpit, and it behooves us that we present only what is clearly true. When the Senior Editor returns from his western trip, we will set these matters more fully before the HERALD readers, giving dates and such other statistical information as will be needful.

SPECULATIVE THEOLOGY.

It is a fine thing to be able to wander amid the stars and delve into the depths of the earth in search of the secrets of nature. and possibly a finer thing to seek to explore the borders of the infinite to surprise the divine intents of the Creator, if possible, and thus enthrall and captivate our fellow men. It seems to us, however, that the elders of the church, ministers of the Gospel of Peace, are not called to air their learning, or to lead their hearers into the misty realms of speculative philosophy in search of new and dazzling conclusions. We believe that the injunction, "preach nothing but repentance to this generation," was given to guard the eldership from those vain and idle researches which, while they may possibly be safely indulged in by the strong and healthy reasoner who may come back from the loftiest and farthest flight to the real and solid unharmed, confuse, bewilder and finally overturn the weaker and leave him doubtful, irresolute and finally despairing. This injunction is evidently in harmony in the spirit of it with the statement of the Christ,-"and repentance and remission of sins shall be preached in all the world, beginning at Jerusalem."

"Preach the gospel," was the tenor of the last commandment of the Savior ere he took his upward course after the resurrection; and, "Preach the gospel" is still the command.

Speculative and controversial research into abstruse scriptural themes, while they may possibly be within the limit of the direction to "search the Scriptures," are so frequently permitted to degenerate into wordy squabbles for the mastery or the last word, that those who are witnesses of them--sometimes unwilling witnesses - are seriously pained. Many of these disputes, if finally determined one way or the other, add nothing to the spiritual life or usefulness of the controversialists, nor to that of their hearers or readers. It may increase their store of knowledge, but if it does it is frequently of such a character as simply to encumber the storehouse of the mind with an impracticable thing. The lines between "endless genealogies," "contending about words to no profit," and the useful and beneficial may not be so exquisitely drawn as to furnish a set schedule of what is and what is not permissible; but they are, we think, sufficiently defined to prevent an elder in the field from wasting his time upon fruitless researches with the results of which to astonish his hearers and win a name as a "smart fellow," and point out to him those questions most necessary for him to present as a representative of the faith of the church, by which his hearers and readers may be enlightened and led into the way of forgiveness and peace. As for us, we have not authorized any elder to present us to the world upon the theories concerning the final redemption of all men; fallen angels, the devil included; the propagation of Saints after death and the resurrection; the precise date of the coming of the Savior, and all that he may say and do after he comes; whether the Jews will be gathered in belief or unbelief; the nationalities of those who shall compose the armies that shall fight against "the camp of the Saints," and whence they come; the exact naming of who are the sheep and the goats; the admixture of the scattered and lost tribes among the nations, and many other delightful studies to the curious and studious researcher, belief or knowledge of which will neither fit nor unfit a man for duty in this world and salvation and happiness in the next. Indeed, the Lord has said that so far as his second coming is concerned-"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Of the final condition of the wicked it is revealed that, "no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof;" and although shown in vision to some, it is straightway shut up again, so that the end. the width, the height, the depth and the misery thereof," are not understood by any but those who are to endure that condemnation.

In writing as we have, we do not mean to be understood as curtailing any man's privilege to strive after knowledge, for we have neither right nor disposition to do that; but we do wish to be understood that the elders are called to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, the saving grace of God, unto this generation, and are not called to preach abstruse theories and nicely spun reasonings upon subjects but remotely connected with the work at best, and the discussion of which bewilders and does not profit the inquirer after the way of life.

The church expects the representatives of the faith to preach Christ and him crucified, diligently, carefully and in a way to make faith attractive for its simplicity and plainness; but it does not expect the elders to ride hobbies, nor spend their time in the elucidation of pet philosophies peculiar to themselves alone.

The private opinions and beliefs of the elders and members are their own, between them and their God, their correctness or incorrectness to be determined "on the other ride of Jordan." Of them the church may not take cognizance either to suppress or make public, but the church is certainly justified in asking and expecting that the elders shall teach and defend the well accredited faith of the church, while representing the church, rather than private opinion and belief.

To our thinking there is an ample field for advancement and research offered in the legitimate subjects for discussion before inquiring multitudes, answering the question, "What shall we do to be saved?"

"Preach the gospel," "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

"TWO CHURCHES ONLY."

A BROTHER requests us to explain the following passages: "Contend against no church, save it be the church of the devil" (D. C. 16:4):

"And it came to pass that I saw among the nations of the Gentiles the foundation of a great church. And the angel said unto me, Behold the foundation of a church, which is most abominable above all other churches, which slayeth the saints of God, yea, and torture them and bindeth them down, and yoketh them with a yoke of iron, and bringeth them down into captivity. And it came to pass that I beheld this great and abominable church; and I saw the devil that he was the foundation of it. And I also saw gold, and silver, and silks, and scarlets, and fine twined linen, and all manner of precious clothing; and I saw many harlots. And the angel spake unto me, saying, Behold the gold, and the silver, and the silks, and the scarlets, and the fine twined linen, and the precious clothing, and the harlots, are the desires of this great and abominable church; and also for the praise of the world, do they destroy the saints of God, and bring them down into captivity. . . . And it came to pass that when the angel had spoken these words, he said unto me, Remember thou the covenants of the Father unto the house of Israel? I said unto him, Yea. And it came to pass that he said unto me, Look and behold that great and abominable church, which is the mother of abominations, whose foundation is the devil. And he said unto me, Behold, there are, save two churches only: the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God, belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations; and she is the whore of all the earth. And it came to pass that I looked and beheld the whore of all the earth, and she sat upon many waters; and she had dominion over all the earth, among all nations, kindreds, tongues and people. And it came to pass that I beheld the church of the Lamb of God, and its numbers were few, because of the wickedness and abominations of the whore who sat upon many waters; nevertheless, I beheld that the church of the Lamb, who were the saints of God, were also upon all the face of the earth; and their dominions upon the face of the earth were small, because of the wickedness of the great whore whom I saw. And it came to pass that I beheld that the great mother of abominations did gather together multitudes upon the face of all the earth, among all the nations of the Gentiles, to fight against the Lamb of God. And it came to pass that I, Nephi, beheld the power of the Lamb of God, that it descended upon the saints of the church of the Lamb, and upon the covenant people of the Lord, who were scattered upon all the face of the earth; and they were amed with righteousness and with the power of God in great glory. And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth, and as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me saying, Behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things; and when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants, which he hath made to his people, who are of the honse of Israel."—1 Nephi 3: 33, 34, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51.

We think the first quotation refers to doers of evil in any and every form, and to sin in any and every phase, whether found among Latter Day Saints or anywhere else, and has no special reference to church forms and organizations whatever, and therefore is not applicable nor restricted to any one separate, distinct church organization as such. The "church of the devil" is composed of those who serve him. Paul said to the Roman Saints,-"His servants ye are to whom ye obey;" and Jesus said to the sinful Jews, "Ye are of your father the devil." John says: "He that committeth sin is of the devil."-1 John 3:8.

To this agree the teachings of the Book of Mormon, for Alma says: "And now if ye are not the sheep of the good Shepherd, of what fold are ye? Behold, I say unto you, that the devil is your Shepherd, and ye are of his fold; and now who can deny this? Behold, I say unto you, whosoever denieth this, is a liar and Child of the devil; for I say unto you, that whatsoever is good cometh from God, and whatsoever is evil cometh from the devil; therefore, if a man bringeth forth good works, he hearkeneth unto the voice of the good Shepherd, and doth follow him; but whosoever bringeth forth evil works, the same becometh a child of the devil, for he hearkeneth unto his voice, and doth follow him."-Alma 3:6. Moroni fully confirms the foregoing in these words: "Wherefore, all things which are good cometh of God; and that which is evil cometh of the devil; for the devil is an enemy unto God, and fighteth against him continually, and inviteth and enticeth to sin, and to do that which is evil continually. But, behold, that which is of God inviteth and enticeth to do good continually; wherefore, everything which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God. Wherefore take heed, my beloved brethren, [and this is applicable to Latter Day Saints.—Ep.], that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God, to be of the devil. For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge, that ye may know good from evil; and the way to judge is as plain, that ye may know with a perfect knowledge, as the daylight is from the dark night. For behold, the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they may know good from evil; wherefore I shew unto you the way to judge; for everything which inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of God; but whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God, then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the devil, for after this manner doth the devil work, for he persuadeth no man to do good, no, not one, neither doth his angels, neither do they who subject themselves unto him. . . . And all things which are good cometh of Christ."-Moroni 7:2, 3.

The delineation of character set forth in these texts enables us to judge as to who belongs to "the church of the devil," and therefore what we are to do when we "contend against" that "church" as mentioned in D. C. 16:4.

We think that I Nephi 3:33-51, when speaking of "the great abominable church," refers in a special way to apostate Christianity in all its divisions and sub-divisions, and is not limited to the Roman Church alone as some hold, and that in a general way it refers to all manner of wickedness inspired of Satan. And yet it is manifest that Romanism is the head and chief, when reference is had to an organization. For is she not the chief member and figure in "MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH," mentioned by St. John in Revelation 17:5? And yet it should not be overlooked that God has a people within her, for John says: "And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."-Rev. 18:4. This last quotation will enable us to understand both the text from 1 Nephi, chap. 3 and that of D. C. 16:4, for in the first we are told that, in the latter days, before the Lord began his "marvelous work" and restored the "covenants of the Lord," including "the gospel of the Lamb," His Spirit would move "upon the man" who would discover America and "the seed" of Lehi, also His Spirit would move "upon the Gentiles" who thereupon go to America, also that "the Spirit of the Lord" . . . would be "upon the Gentiles," and that they would "prosper, and obtain the land for their inheritance," and that "the power of the Lord" would be with them, and that "by the power of God" they would be delivered "out of the hands of all nations;" also that then would exist the "great and abominable church" and "other churches," and yet that, at that time, there would be "save two churches only; the one is the church of the Lamb of God. and the other is the church of the devil;" and that then, "whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God, belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations," etc., all of which shows that God would then have a people whom He would bless with His "Spirit" and "power" and guidance, though the organized, specific Church of Christ was not yet established nor the gospel restored in its fulness; and it shows also that both "the church of the Lamb of God" and "the church of the devil" may exist, at times, outside of and unlimited by organic church forms and church lines.

At that time "the church of the Lamb of God" would manifestly be with and be composed of those who feared God and worked righteousness to the best of their ability and understanding; for "the Lord looketh on the heart" (1 Sam. 16:7), and "granteth unto men according to their desire" and "their wills" (Alma 15: 11), and "in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."—Acts 10: 35. Certainly, many of the reformers filled these requirements in an eminent degree, as also did not a few in the Romish, Greek, Abyssinian, Armenian, and other organized churches-persons who, like Cornelius the centurion, lived faithfully to the best light they had, and were reckoned of God to be members of "the church of the Lamb of God;" for all who did not belong "to that great church, which is the mother of abominations," belonged to the other—these two churches embracing all the people then living in the land. And this proves that these "two churches," as such, were known to God by their "desires" and their "works," and were designated and blessed accordingly. In this broad, but just view of the matter, we go back through all time and find men and women who ever sought for, sustained and forwarded the good and the true, as best they could, and we find those whom He who "is no respecter of persons" loves, blesses, honors, and identifies as His by the enlightening, comforting "power" of His Spirit, and who, when His "great and marvelous work" began by the restoration of the gospel and the authority to administer therein, called by "a voice from heaven" to His "people" to "come out of" "Mystery, Babylon the great," etc., as is set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1, 3-8; 34: 3; 108: 2, 4, etc., etc. The call of the Lord in paragraphs two to four is very notable:

"Wherefore, prepare ye, prepare ye, O my people; sanctify yourselves; gather ye together, O ye people of my church, upon the land of Zion, all you that have not been commanded to tarry. Go ye out from Babylon. Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. Call your solemn assemblies, and speak often one to another. And let every man call upon the name of the Lord; yea, verily I say unto you again, the time has come when the voice of the Lord is unto you, go ye out of Babylon; gather ye out from among the nations, from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."

"Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations; firstly, upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. And behold and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakés may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about; yea, let the cry go forth among all people; awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour. Let them, therefore, who are among the Gentiles, flee unto Zion. And let them who be of Judah, flee unto Jerusalem, unto the mountains of the Lord's house. Go ye out from among the nations, even from Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon. But verily thus saith the Lord, let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you; and he that goeth, let him not look back, lest sudden destruction shall come upon him."

The visible church of God, that which is identified by clearly drawn lines of divinely appointed, official organization, the visible "kingdom," "fold," "gospel," "net," "house," "body," "commonwealth," etc., is such not only by its organic forms, defining and providing its bounds, limits, authorities and jurisdiction, but also by the character and quality of its members. But "the Church of the Lamb of God" of which Nephi speaks in 1 Nephi 3: 46, 48, is that people who seek to do good, live justly and uprightly, honor and serve God and his Christ to the best of their ability and understanding irrespective of denominational forms, names, creeds or organizations.

The Saints should ever remember that "wickedness" . . . "is spiritual Babylon," and that wherever wickedness exists, there is "spiritual Babylon," and that it is "the church of the devil" wherever its members are found, and in whatever age of the world, also that it is the only "church" they are authorized to "contend against."

Jesus revealed to John that in Smyrna some who claimed to be Jews, were not, but were "the synagogue of Satan;" and of "the church in Philadelphia" Jesus said, "Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee."-Rev. 2:9; 3:9.

The wicked ones here mentioned are such as compose "the church of the devil," for they serve him.

In a revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants given March, 1829, over twelve months before the church was organized in this dispensation, we find instructions given concerning the "three witnesses" to the Book of Mormon, and saying: "And to none else will I grant this power, to receive this same testimony, among this generation, in this the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness," etc., etc. And in Doctrine and Covenants, 84: 1, we are told in explanation of the parable of the wheat and the tares, how and when Christ's Church went into the wilderness, for he says: "Behold, verily I say that the field was the world, and the apostles were the sowers of the seed; and after they have fallen asleep, the great persecutor of the church, the apostate, the whore, even Babylon, that maketh all nations to drink of her cup, in whose hearts the enemy, even Satan, sitteth to reign, behold he soweth the tares; wherefore the tares choke the wheat and drive the church into the wilderness."

These texts teach that the primitive church was driven "into the wilderness" into the very condition signified by I Nephi 3: 33-51. The word "wilderness" in this connection evidently means confusion, wildness, disorder, uncultivated, obscurity, darkness and the like. And such was the condition of the church from the sixth century on till the gospel was restored by angelic ministration in the nineteenth century, though heavenly light began to dawn with the labors of the reformers, and they "saw men as trees walking."

The Church of Christ went "into the wilderness" and existed in it till, in this last dispensation, the Lord is bringing it forth "out of the wilderness, clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," (D. C. 4:3), taking on its authority, organic forms, ceremonies, ordinances, spiritual powers, gifts and graces, to prepare a people for the coming Lord and King.

These things being true, the Saints should honor the good and the true of all times and all people, and contend against nothing that is good or which tends to good, but confess all that is good and pure and true to be of God and of Christ as the sacred records all teach.

Finally, let all seek to build up the pure. the true and the good as revealed in the works and word of God, but never seek to tear down and destroy the houses of their fellow men. The Lord will do that if he wants it done, and He will do it in the the right time and in the right way.

FOOD NEEDED TO SUSTAIN LIFE.

It is a curious fact, brought out by the New York commissioners of labor statistics, that prison estimates of the amount of food needed to sustain life are more liberal than estimates for persons dependent on public charities.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. G. A. Davy of Bellevue, Idaho,

thus writes November 15th:

"The Herald, Autumn Leaves and Hope have been faithful visitors every week during the past year. I have read them myself and appreciated their very valuable, and to me, precious contents."

Alta N. Joice of South Boardman, Michigan, writes:

"If an elder in passing, would stop, he could get a place to preach, or could awhile ago, and I think likely could now, in town, and I should be glad to welcome them at our home."

Bro, William Waterman, of Dalas,

Texas, wrote the 15th inst:

"I am doing a little for the cause—as much as circumstances will permit. Have done my best to defend the faith when attacked. The tracts are to be our defense among the Campbellites, as their minister refused me a hearing."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Ar last writing Pres. Joseph Smith and Elder R. J. Anthony were in Ogden, Utah, and were going thence to Plain City, ten miles distant, where they would hold a series of meetings. They were both in good health and excellent spirits, and hopeful of good results in their mission work.

Bro. M. P. Hansen, of Plymouth, Massachusetts, writes requesting the prayers of all the Saints, including the Prayer Union, in behalf of the work in Denmark. The few Saints there have stood by the faith in the midst of great opposition and difficulty.

Bro. Newton Perkins, of Campbell, Indian Territory, asks the prayers of the Saints in behalf of his brother aged thirteen years, who recently was bitten by a

We call the attention of our readers to a very able and valuable article in this issue on miracles. Although quite lengthy, it will richly repay a careful perusal in detail, for it presents many phases of its subject in a most interesting, satisfactory and conclusive manner. Latter Day Saints will at once recognize the applicability and fitness of the facts and logic of the article to these latter times and to the latter day dispensation committed to their hands.

By letter from Elder H. A. Stebbins in this issue it will be seen that Elder John R. Evans has gone to labor in the Rocky Mountain mission. He will be well received there, and the people will find him a competent, humble, trustworthy minister, and we have no doubt success in the Lord's work will be given him.

Bro. John Barnes writes of late from Excelsior, Iowa, that his little daughter Minnie died April 20th, 1888, aged 1 year, 5 months and 9 days; also his youngest daughter, Rose, November 15th, 1889, aged I year 2 months and 20 days, and that Bro. N. Miller spoke word of consolation at the funeral.

"Henceporth be mine a life of action and reality! I will work in my own sphere, nor wish it other than it is. This alone is health and happiness. This alone is life."

OSSIPEE, N. H., Nov. 6th.

Dear Sister Frances: To morrow will be my birthday, and I hasten to send my mite on its errand of duty, and I hope it may do more good that all the words I am able to write. I earned it in my canvassing business, having set apart a day of fasting and prayer for the Home Column Fund, in company with a dear sister who is actively engaged in this latter day work. I wish we could tell each dear sister the blessings of that day to us, that it might be the means of inspiring some more to diligence and to duty, for we fully realize if we have the will to do good. the Lord always opens up the way for us either sooner or later. When Sr. Frances first proposed the Birthday Fund I read it with much interest, and with the power of the Spirit manifesting to me it would be a power for good. Shall we not try to make it a still greater power by saving up our pennies for something that will count in the great eternity. ORILLA SHEEHY.

Accompanying this letter was a Money Order for eight dollars and we tell you that our soul rejoiced within us as we read its history and felt how weighted down with earnest prayers and cheerful labor this offering was. It is not enough for Sr. Sheehy that she resigns her husband to preach the gospel, if there is more which it is possible for human effort to achieve she stands ready to do it. Let no one despair of any just cause which has defenders like this, but let every heart be lifted up to God in earnest prayer and supplication to speedily endow his ministry with power from on high, that they may go forth to prune the vineyard for the last time, for the end is surely drawing near.—ED.

Sr. Lottie A. Dunn, Central City, Iowa, requests your faith and prayers in her behalf, also that her husband may be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Two sisters of Virginia earnestly request your prayers in behalf of their husbands, that they may be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Sr. Hannah E. Cairns, of Scranton, Kansas, desires the prayers of the "Union," that God may restore her to health, if it is his righteous will.

Bro. and Sr. Jamison, Ford, Iowa, earnestly desire your prayers in behalf of Sr. Ellen Clark, whose reason is affected. She was a dear lover of the work, but ill health has affected her mind and she is now in the asylum at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa.

Dear Saints:-My husband and myself are members of the Latter Day Saint Church. I was seventeen years old when I first heard the gospel preached, but had not the privilege of obeying it until I was eighteen. Then I left my home and kindred to follow Christ, and I am thankful for the step I have taken. My parents belonged to the Christian Church and I also was a member of that church for two years. I went to work for a Latter Day Saint and I then had a chance to go to meeting and be with the Saints, and I soon found they were right and I obeyed the gospel, I was married a few months after and we have a little home now and though a very humble one I am very thankful for it. It pleased God to take away our dear little babe. She was our only child and our home is a sad one without her.

I ask the sisters of the "Prayer Union" to pray for me, that I may be a more faithful worker. I am a member of the Prayer Union and I love the work very much, and I long to do more than I ever have done. I have not had the chance to meet with the sisters at the church, but I try to keep the hour at home.

COALVILLE, Iowa, Oct. 27th.

Sr. Frances:-I like to read the Herald and Autumn Leaves. They are so interesting. I thought I would like to write a few lines to the "Home Column." If I could express my thoughts in writing I would write often and give a little encouragement to others. I have been in the church for over nine years and I have never regretted the step I took. I can testify that this is the work of God, and I pray to God for strength that I may be faithful to the end, and that he may keep me in the straight and narrow path that leads to life eternal, that I may gain the crown which is laid up for the faithful I am overcome many times, and I have my. trials to bear. It encourages me to read the letters in the Home Column. How thankful I am to God for his kindness to me when I think of the many blessings he has bestowed upon me. I love the gospel and I will strive earnestly to keep the commandments of God. How often our hearts have been made glad through the administrations of God's servants to the sick in our family. I do not remember the time when the elders laid their hands upon us that we did not receive the blessing and were not raised from our beds of sickness instantly. To God be all the glory. We have just said good bye to Elder D. M. Rudd. He was here with us for a week and a half. He preached eight times and I think good will result. He is a splendid preacher and we feel lonesome since he left. He baptized three children belonging to the Saints and blessed two. He gave the Saints some good instruction while he was here. I hope the Lord will bless him in all his efforts to bring souls unto Christ.

Your sister in the gospel covenant.

GREENBUSH, Mich., Oct. 31st.

Dear Sisters:--We are where there is no preaching. We had Elder W. J. Smith with us. He preached three good sermons that cheered our hearts. There are no Saints here only our daughter and her husband, and one other family. I was born in Guysboro, Nova Scotia. I often see letters from Nova Scotia but none from that part. I was brought up in the Methodist Church and at the age of sixteen I joined that church. Almost four years ago I heard Elder J. J. Bailey, Elder Davis, and Elder J. J. Cornish preach, and I saw I had not obeyed the first commandment. I had never been baptized and did not see any need of it; but I am thankful the Lord ever spared me to obey his word. I was baptized by Elder J. J. Cornish, and I have never been sorry. I have my own share of trouble. Eight years ago I fell and broke my leg and I have not stepped on it since and can not go without crutches, yet I feel I have a great deal to be thankful for. I have my hands that I can work with, and I have a good husband and children who will do anything for me; and the Herald is such a great comfort. We look for it as we would look for a friend. I love to read the letters, and I see there are others who have to bear trouble, but let us put our trust in the Savior. He bore sorrow and death for us, and if we are faithful we will reign with him when he comes. Your sister in the one faith,

SARAH S. GRANTHAM.

GROVETON, Tex., Nov. 4th.

Dear Herald:—I have been quite sick since I wrote before, but thanks be to God, I am once more improving. I was sick for two months and had no relatives to look to my interest, but was a stranger and too poor to hire any one to care for me. Yet I had a "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother," and he gave me many kind friends.

I must tell you of one circumstance that occurred while I lay on my bed of affliction. My husband called in a young doctor to see me. I had a very high fever, and he came several times but I grew worse each day, until all could see I would not live much longer unless a change for the better should take place soon. This kind doctor brought his buggy and carried me to his house and soon broke my fever. His kind lady and himself nursed and cared for me like a brother and sister. I can truly call him a good Samaritan. When I think of that kind act my heart is filled with gratitude to them. I want the Saints to pray for him and his wife. They have never heard the gospel preached in its fulness, and I believe they are the pure in heart. I hope some day we can get an elder here so that those who would obey the gospel can have a chance to do so. My heart's desire is to be in a branch of the chuch where we can meet with the Saints and enjoy the blessings of church privileges. It seems to be God's will for us to stay here. We have tried so hard to get away from here, but it seems impossible, so I think it is all for the best. I want God's will to be done with us on earth as in heaven. Pray for us, brothers and sisters. Pray that when Christ comes to make up his jewels we will be ready. Your prayers strengthen us so much. I know I do not do my duty at all times as I should, but I can but cry, "Lord forgive." Oh, I hope the blessed hour is coming when we can be together and praise God more perfectly.

My health is very delicate and has been for some time, and I feel like I need your prayers. I pray God to spare me to raise my little children, but if it is not his will, I hope to be ready to go when my Heavenly Father calls me.

Your sister in Christ,

S. B. TEAGARDEN.

WHITEMORE, Mich., Nov. 13th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column :- Being much cheered and strengthened from reading your letters from time to time, I feel it my duty to say a few words in order to cheer some one else. I too am still trying to do my Master's will. Since I last wrote to the Column, I have had many reasons to be thankful to my heavenly Father. I feel that I can not be faithful enough to repay him for the great blessings I have received from him. When I last wrote to the Home Column our baby was very sick and not expected to live. I wrote and requested the sisters of the Prayer Union to pray for him and for myself also, for I was sick too at the time, and sisters He has both heard and answered your prayers in my behalf, and through the administration of the elders and the prayer of faith, our baby was restored to us again. He is now three years and three months old and is a strong healthy boy. In times of sickness and trials I always find comfort and consolation in secret prayer before my heavenly Father. I feel comforted while reading and meditating on his word. O, what precious promises in that word to us! And we know that God is not slack concerning his promises. If we will only humble ourselves before him and live faithful we shall receive those promised blessings.

There are only a few Saints in this place, all trying to let their light shine. We have prayer and testimony meeting every Sabbath afternoon and we are always blest in meeting together. We do not have preaching here very often, but we trust that God will remember this part of his vineyard also.

The Lord requires of us humility, and if we wish him to bless us we must certainly put away all vain things, for they only belong to the world and not to Saints of God. When I see a sister arrayed in worldly style, I find myself wondering, will she array herself in this fashion when she goes out to meet the Savior at his coming? We feel by his Spirit that the time is not far distant when the Lord will come to number his jewels. Let us therefore have our lamps trimmed and brightly burning, that we may be ready to meet him with joy. We have no Prayer Union meeting here, there are so few sisters that it is difficult to get together. However if some of them would only take hold and lead, I think we could have a meeting where two or three could get together and we know the promise is to two or three as well as to a larger number. We hope that we may have an elder here soon, and that more may be added to our number. I lend the Herald and other publications of our church, and always feel glad when an opportunity is afforded me to bear my testimony to the truth of this gospel. I feel blest in keeping the hour of the Prayer Union, but am sorry to say I have forgotten it some times. Pray for me sisters, that I may prove faithful.

Your sister in Christ,

AGNES SMITH.

COLEMAN, Mich., Nov. 10th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I am young in this work, but not for one moment would I think of retracing the steps I took when I believed the gospel and went forth and was baptized for the remission of my sins. Shortly after (about three months) I received the Comforter, which testified to me that Jesus was the Christ. Our membership in this branch numbers about twenty-three. None have been added since last June but many are investigating. Bro. Martindale gives us timely instruction each Sunday and some times Wednesday evenings.

This latter day work is indeed a "marvelous work and a wonder" and I thank God that I have ever been brought to a knowledge of the truth, My desire is to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God and to let my light shine, that when our Savior shall come to number his jewels I may be among the redeemed and sanctified of the earth. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and the advancement of the cause I so dearly love, I remain in bonds.

Your sister,

BERTHA McCulloch.

STOCKTON, Cal., Oct. 30th.

Sister Walker:—I want to do all the good I can while my life is spared to me. I was sixty-one years of age on the 19th of last month and I still desire to live it it is my Heavenly Father's will. I never get reconciled to the thought of dying, but want to live until Zion is redeemed. But I realize that only the faithful few will be found worthy to stand in the great day of the Lord.

The November number of Autumn Leaves came this morning and I was glad to get it, for it is full of good reading. Dear brother Green, he was a dear friend, and I heard him relate that incident of his life. I wish you had a better picture of him; I could have sent a better one—the last one he had taken. My husband and self were with him at the time he sat for it; it was in 1873.

How my love and sympathy follows brother Glaud Rodger and his wife in all their trials. They too are dear friends. We were all in Liverpool together, and the last time I saw them was at the October conference of 1873. It was at that conforence that brethren Rodger and Wandell were appointed to the Australian mission.

I will inclose this letter to brother Dancer, and when I feel better I will send you one or two incidents that you can publish if you should think them worthy. I pray God to bless you in your work.

AUNT SARAH.

Correspondence.

Boston, Mass., November 10th.

Bro. R. S. Salyards:—The month of October I spent mostly in the state of Maine. Two nights ride out from Boston, on "old ocean," found me at Jonesport. Brother and sister Norton met me at the wharf and gave me a cordial welcome. They were in expectation of the arrival of brother and sister Parsons from Nova Scotia, but they failed to appear. I became the fortunate guest—just my luck! Thanks. Nothing like being born in due time. I spent a number of days pleasantly with the Jonesport Saints, making my home mainly with brother and sister Walker, who retain the essential qualities of Saints.

At evening a business meeting was held, and on the following one a preaching service. The presence of the Saints manifested their abiding trust and faith in the work.

On the 5th, the district conference convened at Jonesport which was well attended. Brethren J. C. Foss and A. H. Parsons of the general ministry were present. The day was pleasant and favorable for the gathering. A convenient place had been selected in the west end of the town in which to hold it, and ample preparations were made to entertain all who might attend.

The morning hour was spent in organization and preparation, and in the afternoon the business of the conference was transacted. Unity of sentiment and a kindly spirit was manifest through the entire session. I noted that there had been a revival of interest in the district, especially in parts of it, which was attributed largely to the energetic efforts of Bro. J. C. Foss who had been actively engaged since his arrival in the district. The reports were spirited and good; indicating an abiding zeal and earnestness in the cause. The report of Bro. J. C. Foss was of special interest and confirming. Brethren Aaron Kelley, S. O. Foss, Ackerly, Wm. H. Kelley, of Jonesport, J. Walker, C. Sawyer, and some others also reported in person, each expressing an abiding confidence in the faith. Father Steel, though feeble in health, bore a strong testimony in favor of the

In the evening Bro. A. H. Parsons preached with good liberty to a large audience, with signal good effect.

Sunday was devoted to prayer and three preaching services, all of which were well attended, the room being packed at the preaching services. The conference was a decided success and told in the interest of the faith. The Saints were cheered and comforted, and felt much stronger and happier in the faith by having been in attendance. Meetings were continued each evening until Wednesday, when brethren Foss, Parsons and the writer went to Mason's Bay and held meeting in the evening, an attentive audience being present. Brethren Parsons and Foss continued the meetings here, and some thirteen were baptized, making quite an addition to the branch of that place. We were nicely cared for at the home of Bro. S. O. Foss who is a main stay there.

The day following, we went to Little Kennebec to attend to some business assigned us by the district conference, but on account of the rain the preaching service was not held. We were pleasantly entertained at the house of Sister Foss' sister.

On Friday we returned to Mason's, Bay tarrying at Jonesborough a few hours on the way at the house of young brother Gay where we were kindly received by his very pleasant wife and sister, who had prepared (what we were looking for about that time of day) a good noon meal, which was eaten with a relish, as we had been riding in the cool morning air.

We are indebted to Bro. Foss for our ride out to Kennebec, he having provided himself with a horse and buggy for use in the district—a very necessary outfit for that part of the country, gave us the benefit of them.

In early life Bro. John Foss was identified with the Methodist fraternity, and we observed while on this trip that the old adage-"early habits are apt to show themselves in after life" is a true one. for when we returned to Jonesport, there was a big cabbage head under the buggy seat, the fruit of the exercise of that peculiar suavity that invariably secures the prize; and which, as we take it is a rare attainment after some rigid training. Thanks to the donor, with the polite remark that he would call and get the other on his return, relieved us entirely from further concern regarding the well being of our extreme eastern co-laborer; quite convinced that under favorable circumstances our comrade might be self-supporting if put to it. All of this and more of the same kind, presumably, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled: "He that will not provide for his own house has already denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." John got that other cabbage.

On the twelfth I attended the Sabbath School in the morning at Jonesport, taught the Bible class, and in the afternoon and evening preached to fair audiences with just fair liberty.

The time having expired for my stay at this place, on the morning of the 13th, I took the boat (the Richmond) for Rockland, arriving there in the evening. Stayed over night at Sr. Murry's and enjoyed a pleasant visit with her and her son, the latter having just come home from sea. The next morning I met the elder brother down at the lime kiln, where I spent an hour to see how they do it. The burning of lime is hot work. The two young men are friendly to the faith. In the afternoon I went on to Lisbon Falls to find that Brn. Sheehy and Greene were away filling an appointment out of town. Bro. U. W. Greene had just moved to Lisbon Falls and was setting up house keeping for the first time. The writer chanced to be their first guest in the new enterprise-just his luck - Codfish and potatoes to match for supper. Thanks. Sister Sheehy being away, Bro. Frank was making himself right handy about the kitchen. Every thing in appleple-order. I suspect that Ruthie was a main factor in keeping things looking bright, however. While here we attended the dedication of the new Methodist Church of that place. Dr. Hamilton, of Boston, the noted and successful money getter on such occasions, being present to preach the sermon. He gave us a new cue to a successful way of raising church funds. They raised one thousand dollars almost in a twinkling. The money just seemed to come. No trick at all when you know how! He built the large People's Church in Boston by getting people to subscribe one brick each for its erection, the point being to not only erect a church, but to have every person possible to possess a real interest in it with a view of drawing them to that service. Not a bad thought.

On the 18th, in company with Bro. Sheehy, I went to Dixfield Center being met at the North Jay Station by Mr. Eugene Holmon, who took us by private conveyance to his house, a distance of ten miles, where we met with a cordial reception from all the household, who were now earnestly enquiring regarding the faith. Bro. Sheehy has been the pioneer in carrying the gospel into that place, and has been successful in making a large number of friends to the cause.

Sunday following we preached at East Dixfield, in the afternoon and evening to attentive audiences. Was entertained at Dr. Bootlett's, and he and his very kind lady made it very pleasant for us while there. Strong points with the Doctor are toleration, freedom of speech, fair play and worship, and equal rights. A long way ahead of some sectarian bigots whom we meet quite frequently. We were also very pleasantly and cheerfully entertained at Mr. Blanchard's, the family all being in search of light, and if I mistake not will have the courage to follow it when once thoroughly convinced as to where it is. They seemed like Saints already.

We continued meetings at Dixfield Center until the 25th, when becoming confirmed in the opinion that the brethren could meet all demands there for the present, I returned to the Massachusetts district to aid further in the work there.

The next morning after arriving at Boston, Bro. Parsons came in, having had to cease holding meetings at Jonesport, Maine, for the present, on account of the breaking out of diptheria in that neighborhood.

I went into Western Maine to help support the work at the solicitation of Bro. F. M. Sheehy, who had engaged in discussion with a Beptist minister for two evenings and at the instance of the Baptist the debate was postponed one week. At the appointed time Bro. Sheehy was present, but the Baptist Reverend was absent. A card was received from him by Bro. Sheehy, however, stating that if he was not there for him to go on. This was encouraging and showed the current of the future. The debate being off, the writer was put in to occupy the time-being non partisanand we continued preaching services until Friday, a large attendance being had each night. This community has been investigating for something like a year, being anxious to see the claims of the Saints fairly presented along with others, which has been done and there has been a favorable verdict for the position of the Saints by a large number. The true and manly spirit of toleration, free investigation, and fairness prevails largely, and misrepresentation, stander, etc., are readily discovered and denounced as weakness and not a necessary factor in determining the truth or falsity of anything.

I am under obligation personally to a number of the citizens there for extended kindness, and not least to the Ladies Sewing Circle, none of whom belong with the Saints, who contributed to defraying my expenses there, all of which is duly appreciated. But it makes me feel better still to know that so many have stood so valiantly behind brethren Sheehy and Greene and supported them in their defense of the truth. May the Lord bless the people and the laborers, and the good work go on.

When last heard from, the Baptist opponent had a call to a larger and a more inviting field, away from the bother of Latter Day Saint preachers.

We enjoyed this trip up in the mountains of Maine. The weather was fine, the atmosphere cool and healthful and the scenery beautiful and grand; the people hospitable and kind, and untroubled with sectarian bigotry and prejudice; that is, the larger number of them. May they be attracted to the gospel, which is the royal road to progress, peace and safety.

Since beginning this letter, I have learned that six were baptized recently by the brethren at Dixfield Center, and more are to follow.

As ever,

WM. H. KELLEY.

TILBURY CENTER, Ont., Nov. 11th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I desire to ask the brethren in the ministry in England to go to a place where there are two branches of the Utah church within a distance of six miles. I have a sister there and other friends in the Utah church, and I have been trying for three years to learn Bro. Taylor's address, but can not do so. I wrote to Bro. J. T. Davis in Wales nine days ago, but I see by last Herald he had left on account of his wife's sickness.

My sisters and friends have asked me many times to send one of our elders to them, as they can not accept polygamy. But, poor souls, they know nothing nor have they ever heard anything about the Reorganized church, only what I have written them. My sister will find a home for any elder that will go and preach the gospel in its purity to them. Will some of the brethren please see to this and write to me, and also to my sister, whose address is Mrs. Sarah Caffull, Mordiford, Herefordshire. The address on this letter will find me. I hope something will be done as soon as possible.

Your sister in bonds,

M. M. Brooks.

Bro. Blair:—I feel as though I had strayed from the fold, because I thought the actions of people were not in accordance with the gospel of Christ, and to me these things were stumbling blocks and I, not having enough faith to withstand the trials, cast my lot with other people than the Latter Day Saints. But for several years (although I have tried to feel at ease) something seemed calling me back to the only true church.

It was not that I disbelieved the doctrine of the Saints; but could not bear my trials with faith and patience as I should have done. Therefore, brother Blair, I being acquainted with you personally, feel like making a confession and starting from where I left off, wishing to be numbered with God's people.

I have played every tune in the Saints Harmony, and can truly say it is rightly named. A few scattered souls gather together in our village every fourth Sunday at the call of brethren Parkin and Lincoln who are doing what they can for the Lord, and their labors were not in vain because two of our children were baptized, for which we are thankful; and Miss Rachel Stone who lives four or five miles from here, not having any other way to come, walked. So we hope they will not be discouraged. The Lord will bless us if we are but few.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

ROMAN, Virginia, Nov. 12th.

Dear Herald: On the 3rd of this month the Saints' chapel here was dedicated, but the weather was unfavorable and there was not a very large congregation present. On Wednesday the 6th, at nine o'clock a discussion began between Bro. D. L. Shinn and W. C. Thurman, the latter affirming that the Doctrine he taught was the doctrine of Christ in fact, as taught by Christ and the apostles. Four sessions of two hours each were given to this proposition. He tried hard to sustain his position, rejecting water baptism for remission of sins, claiming that a person had to be baptized with wine, that the wine was the blood of Christ which is the blood of the new covenant; but he signally failed, to the minds of most of the hearers. Bro Shinn completly routed him, showing that Christ had his blood in his body when he said "this [wine] is my blood."

But the people were more anxious to hear the other question discussed, viz : Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints the Church of Christ in organization and doctrine? To this proposition were held eight sessions of two hours each. The question did not include the calling of Joseph the martyr, but his claims were closely examined; Bro. Shinn being very willing to bring in that point, which naturally brought the Book of Mormon into the investigation. I think there was much good done. The people were all pleased with Bro. Shinn's deportment during the debate. They said he was the mildest man they had seen in discussion unless it was his opponent. The truth did not suffer by being brought to light. I consider that the doctrine of the church was well sustained notwithstanding Mr. Thurman made a hard fight -- I believe the hardest one I have yet heard. I believe the Saints are all strengthened by hearing the truth tried to be overthrown. Some of the Saints were followers of Mr. Thurman at one time. These especially testify that they were strengthened. Mr. Thurman cleared us of the charge of polygamy and said he wished the Bible was as clear of polygamy as the Book of Mormon is. The congregations were generally large and very orderly. There were six or seven preachers there most of the time. Mr. Thurman is still in the vicinity. Yesterday he met with us in Sunday School and Saints' meeting and took part in both and was at preaching at night.

We are trying to get into some new places, but the way is considerably hedged up, though I think we will get in Mount Sidney, three or four miles from here. We will likely begin there to morrow night. The Lord willing we will try to spread the work here this winter. We have a call south east of Richmond, which we will answer in the near future, if the Lord will.

I feel encouraged in the work and hope to continue to the end. I again ask the prayers of the Saints for the success of this Virginia mission, for it is a hard one; and I ask the Prayer Union to make the success of this mission a subject for prayer, for I have great confidence in them. May the Saints keep the whole law and walk wisely, then God will bless them and hasten his work. I am still in the conflict with hope of eternal life.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Nov. 16th.

Editors Herald: - Since my last communication to your columns I have visited Nova Scotia and Maine. In the first named place I spent the time principally at South Rawdon where I baptized ten prior to my leaving last May. It was quite encouraging to see young brethren and sisters take part in the prayer and testimony meeting. It showed an appreciation of our labors there in our feeble effort to teach them their duties as saints and the necessity of continuing to be saints by a practical effort as individuals, which effort I discovered was not altogether in vain. It is encouraging to me to see that my efforts and those of my co-laborers are having a good effect. I preached over three Sabbaths there, baptized one young man, and others should have been, if they had considered their own souls' interest as they should; but they are the

I called at Lockhartville, preached once to the five Saints there and one lady not a member of any church. Prejudice is very hard against our faith. But the Saints have the full confidence of their neighbors so long as doctrine is not the subject of conversation. Such lives will tell in God's own time. I am quite confident an opening will be made in that neighborhood. Delhaven was our next stop. I think if Christ had been there instead of at Jerusalem his sayings would not have been changed when he cried out "Ye generation of vipers and hypocrites." I do not think I ever met as hard a class of people as some who dwell there. There are some good ones. I preached twice in a hired hall at Canning to a few.

October 2d we bid the Saints farewell and took passage on the Hiawatha for St Johns, New Brunswick, encountering a storm in the midst of the Bay of Fundy which forced us for the first time to bow to Neptune and pay tribute. After two days and one night traveling "without stopping" we arrived at Bro. Samuel Foss's at Mason's Bay, where, in company with Bro. J. C. Foss I preached a number of discourses and he baptized ten or twelve.

Conference at Jonesport was quite good, presided over by Brn. Kelley and Foss. There seemed to be an interest awakened in some to hear more or a repetition of the gospel story, for there has been a considerable amount of preaching there and yet there is some who have not formed an acquaintance with the truth. I am told that Bro. Briggs foretold some things that have taken place since. "The downfall of the conspiracy" against the Saints, and especially of the parties that cried "Mormonism." Jesus truly said, "What measure ye mete it shall be meted to you." Sometimes it seems to be meted out to man here, no waiting for the future. It is sad to look upon such results, but when men dig pits for others to fall in and fall into them themselves, I can not plty them so much as otherwise; But I do not feel like boasting, but meekly follow the Master and improve upon the opportunities offered. After conference Bro. Kelley left for Boston and left Bro. J. C. Foss and myself to continue a series of meetings which seemed to start out in fair shape but soon came to a sudden stop. Diphtheria broke out, and I was called to administer to the child three times. When this was learned my presence was not in such great demand as heretofore, so I bid adieu to Jonesport reluctantly, for I felt a good work had been defeated. And the problem has been ringing in my ears, is this the day referred to in the word of wisdom, "Angels shall have charge concerning you as they did the children of Israel in Egypt?" I am, for one, trying to educate myself "supplemented by the aid of the Holy Spirit" to believe God meant just what he said. Saints (so called) and sinners may laugh and ridicule the idea of trusting God under such and all circumstances, "exercising wisdom;" but for myself I do not understand that we have attained to that degree of faith that is attainable until we can thus confide not only our spiritual life but our physical life to God and to his care in every sense of the term. To this end I desire to strive.

The demand in Maine for preaching is great. It is the best field for an audience I have found in the east. The market for hearing gospel discoursing is not so good in Massachusetts, so far as I have been made acquainted with it, but we want to feel hopeful. Those who are better acquainted think the prospects are much better for the work here than one year ago. God knows there is a grand opportunity for still greater improvement in some places at least; yet it seems as hard for some of us Latter Day Saints to learn the golden rule and live it as it is to get some people to discern the difference between us and the Brighamites. We will commence a series of meetings in Boston next Tuesday night, Bro. Kelley in charge. They will be continued as the interest demands. Those writing me will please remember my address for the winter will be No. 40 Dennis Street, Boston Highlands, Massachusetts. I desire to continue in the faith and see the end of a Christian race.

In bonds I am yourss,

A. H. PARSONS.

CLEVELAND, Iowa, Nov. 18th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—By request of Bro. J. R. Evans I acknowledge receipt of letter from you yesterday regarding his departure for the field again. I had assisted him in getting a half-fare permit, and all arrangements being made he left Lucas this noon for the Rocky Mountain mission. He had a pass on the Denver & Rio Grande so that it will cost him only fifteen dollars to get through to Salt Lake City.

He feels cheerful and full of hope, and has repeatedly expressed his anxiety to get off to the work again. He is confident that the time is now and at hand when the Lord by his servants would perforn good things for the deliverance of the honest lovers of the original faith of the Church of Christ, and when he would turn them back to the old paths, those who will hearken to his servant Joseph and to his helpers in calling them to return. He says that during the past year he has witnessed a marked change in the feelings and actions of many towards the representatives of the Reorganization, and that he knows that in the breasts of many there are different sentiments prevailing from what ever have before.

In this [Lucas] branch the cause of truth prospers quite well, although the depression in the coal-mining work has made many of the Saints, as well as others, seek elsewhere for employment. Bro. John Watkins still presides with honor to himself and the cause. The Saints are blessed in many ways, and I believe that the most of them realize it, and that they are striving to be faithful. From time to time some are baptized, and others are being awakened and moved upon to investigate. Last week I had the pleasure of baptizing Mrs. Hannah Hopkins, Mrs. Hattie Griffiths and Mrs. Mary J. Hendra, who have been long believing, or on the way, and at last made ready.

Various brethren are preaching in surrounding towns and School houses, namely, Elders E. B. Morgan, J. J. Watkins, Frank Izatt, and priests Parley Batten and Isaac Phillips, and they expect to continue the work. I trust that they will do so and use all diligence to magnify their calling.

I was out yesterday with Bro. Watkins and preached at two School-houses to assist their efforts. It was east of shaft number three. There was a good attendance and close attention paid. Bro. James Richardson, though not in the ministry, aids in getting openings and in publishing the appointments.

The general health is better than usual, though Bro. Henry Jones has lung disease, and some others are more or less afflicted. However in nearly all cases the ordinance of the Lord's house has given relief, as I have experienced while I have been here.

Your brother in the truth,

H. A. STEBBINS.

GROVE HILL, Iowa, Nov. 16th.

Bro. Blair: When I last wrote after I had baptized five I said, "Many more are near the kingdom, and I think will soon obey." That thought has been realized, for on the 9th ultimo I led two more precious souls into the water, and on the 13th I baptized five more, making twelve in all that I have baptized since I came here; and still there are more near the kingdom. There are now eighteen members of the church in this vicinity and the outlook for a good work being done here is fair. I have many calls for preaching in new places where I intend to make openings if I am continued in this mission. So you see that God's "marvelous work and a wonder" is onward here as well as elsewhere. I have good liberty in dispensing the word of God. Thanks be to his holy name.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

JOHN SHIPPY.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 14th.

Brn. Joseph and William:—I came to this city on the 12th instant, and am stopping with Sr. Everett, who has moved to this city of late and is the only Saint in this city so far as we know. I hope she may be one of the means in the hands of God of introducing the work here. From where I am sitting I can look over this massive city for miles around and see its towering walls and belfrys that reach heavenward, and then the question comes, Is it possible that the ful-ness of the everlasting gospel has not been preached here? Yes, it is possible; but if the Lord wills, to night at Wright's Hall and tomorrow night at the Seventh Day Adventist Church, some two and a half miles distant in another part of the city, I shall for the first time set before this people some things which we most surely believe and the reasons why we believe them. Through the kindness of Sr. Everett's husband our meetings are advertised in four of the city papers.

Yours in the conflict,

M. R. Scott.

ROMAN, Virginia, Nov. 12th.

Dear Saints: - Our discussion with Mr. Thurman is over and we are pleased to inform you that truth came out of the fire brighter than ever. We found Thurman to be one of the most potent of all the warriors of the opposition that we have yet had to contend with-a man of mental vigor and oratorical power extraordinary, but, like all our opposers, unfair in his mode of reasonings assuming first the premise that our system was in the start a fraud, planting himself upon this hypothesis without ever attempting to prove a true basis. The Holy Spirit dwelt with us throughout and the blessed charity which "endureth all things, and hopeth all things" never failed us. The organization and doctrine of the church were affirmed by us as being identical with the church of Jesus Christ as seen in the New Testament.

Thurman in first proposition affirmed that the blood of the grapes, and not the blood of the cross, was the blood of Christ; that the blood of the new covenant is not the blood of the flesh of Christ—not the blood of flesh, but the true blood of Christ is the wine of the cup: "This is my blood," etc. This Christ said at the last supper before he was crucified while his blood was yet in his veins. He did not argue for transubstantiation, but founded his belief upon the saying of Jesus, "This [wine] is my blood," etc. No covenant here is necessary; we are to believe it because Christ said it.

The reply was, that if this was the blood of the covenant, Jesus need not have died; because he gave the blood of the covenant while yet living, and said, "This is my blood which is shed for you for the remission of sins." His blood was shed for remission of sins before he died, hence his death on the cross was non-essential but really in vain. I write this to present the peculiar ideas of another religious "abomination;" that is to say, the opinion is abominable. The man himself is honest and respectable; I would not speak evil of him, but the opinion leads to a virtual "denial of the Lord that bought" him by the shedding of his blood upon the cross.

He denied that there was one drop of blood shed on the cross until three hours after Jesus was dead. The answer was that the life is the blood, or "the blood is the life" of the body; and it is admitted that the life was taken. Therefore Christ's life was the blood of the cross.

The new church edifice was dedicated on the 3d inst., Bro. Moler preaching and your humble servant assisting. He preaches an excellent sermon on the one body.

The opposition now blame their man for failing to demolish us. They say he did not accomplish what they expected of him. Many people in this neighborhood are changed from enemies to friends, and we have many social calls and invitations.

Before the discussion I dreamed I was on the river fishing and I saw a great serpent lift up his head out of the water. I immediately began an attack on him with my hook and line and pole, using them as a whip, the heavy hook on the end of the line inflicting summary vengeance upon his head. He swam away from me down stream and I saw him no more.

Your prayers for

D. L. SHINN.

VASSAR, Mich., Nov. 15th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Our meetings in the Indian Church are largely attended. Last Sunday I had excellent liberty in presenting the word and am confident good will result. After meeting I baptized two, and others are near. I have preached three times in their church and am to hold meetings again next Sunday.

Just before I went there my wife dreamed the following: She saw me breaking bread and pouring oil upon it. There seemed to be a large gathering of outsiders present and they came rushing to partake of it, etc.

This work is growing brighter and brighter to me every day. When I first entered this church I thought the Bible was all I needed, but I find by reading the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants that I see how clearly they reveal the origin of the American Indians together with other great and grand truths. I am led to exclaim, What a marvelous work! A short time ago I earn a little money, of which I gave the Lord one tenth, and that same spirit seemed to rule in the minds of the Saints in this district, and I know this work will roll on.

TAKE A DAY IN BED.

THERE is no better preventive of nervous exhaustion than regular, unhurried muscular exercise. If we could moderate our hurry, lessen our worry, and increase our open air exercise, a large proportion of nervous disease would be abolished. For those who can not get a sufficient holiday the best substitute is an occasional day in Many whose nerves are constantly strained in their daily avocation have discovered this for themselves. A Spanish merchant in Barcelona told his medical man that he always went to bed for two or three days whenever he could be spared from his business, and he laughed at those who spent their holidays on toilsome One of the hardest worked mountains. women in England, who has for many years conducted a large wholesale business, retains excellent nerves at an advanced age, owing, it is believed, to her habit of taking one day a week in bed.—Boston Traveler

A contribution to the literature of the controversy about Romanism, just when the recent Catholic Congress at Baltimore has revived the subject, will be made by Bishop McQuaid, of Rochester, N. He undertakes to show that the common school system is paternalistic and socialistic in its tendencies, and that a gross wrong is done to Catholic parents by taxing them to maintain the public schools.

SOME CONSIDERATIONS ON MIRACLES.

A LECTURE with the above title was delivered in the Assembly-hall, Collins street, on the 6th instant, by Mr. Andrew Harper, M. A., B. D., in connection with the University Christian Alliance. The lecturer said:

PREJUDICE AGAINST ARGUMENT.

My purpese in addressing you to-night will not be to state the whole case for a belief in miracle. That, it would be quite impossible for me to do in the time at our disposal. I have consequently chosen the narrower, but more modest task of setting before you some considerations in regard to the belief in miracle which have arisen in my mind in reply to the various forms in which the argument against miracle is being put just now. For though I believe in the occurence of miracle, I do not pretend to live always at the height of my own conviction, nor do I come before you as one whom the arguments on the other side do not touch and shake at all. Such a position is not easily attained by any one in these days, least of all by any one of a critical turn of mind. Everywhere about us, in newspapers and magazines, the denial of miracles is being preached. Scientists who, if not always absolutely the most eminent in their several departments, are at any rate sufficiently so to give their words weight, are fighting bitterly for the hostile view, fighting too, with a kind of fury which, with all my endeavors, I can not quite explain to myself. Partly as a result of this and partly as a cause of it, the spirit of the time, or to give it its more awe-inspiring name of the "zeitgeist," is distinctly against the view that miracles have ever happened, or, indeed, can happen. No one, therefore, escapes the contagion of such a state of things, and I freely confess that I have been startled at times to find with what repugnance my mind is brought face to face with some of the less important miracles of the Old and New Testaments. But I have not found any reason to regard this feeling as an inspiration which I ought to follow. On the contrary, when I have probed the feeling to its roots, and made it give an account of itself, I have found it rather a prejudice which I am bound to resist. For if, as our opponents say, we are bound, in examining the evidence for miracles, to remember the bias of the times in which the chief miracles we are concerned to maintain were wrought, and to make allowance for men's manifest readiness to believe in the occurence of such things, it is only fair that in dealing with ourselves, in an age when the current runs so strongly in an opposite direction, we should make a similar allowance. We must remember the bias, and scrutinize with rigor the feeling tending in the popular direc-

Just because science is so triumphant, just because so much has been gained by adopting the process of natural development as an explanation of the origin of species and so on, the weak point of the modern mind undoubtedly is a tendency to accept with undue readiness doctrines and explanations which fall in with that way of looking at things. Our business is to keep our feet in spite of the current, and to meet the characteristic propositions of our time with a rigorous demand for proofs of their validity in any new region where they have not yet made good their claims. That clearly is our duty, and just as clearly it is not our duty to spread our sails with a light heart to the breathings of the zeitgest, as Matthew Arnold, with his accustomed infallible airs, has assured us we must do.

THE BASIS OF ARGUMENT.

But in proceeding to inquire whether this feeling of repugnance to miracle which we all feel is justified or not, I must premise that I can deal here only with those who believe in the existence of a personal God. For it is a matter of course that those who deny the existence of a personal God, either on Pantheistic or Materialistic ground, can not admit miracle. For them, there is nothing existent other than nature, and the possibility of any true supernatural is utterly shut out. Consequently our discussion must be limited now to the objections of those who hold Theism in some shape. But on that ground I hope to show that there is no reason to doubt the miraculous; that, on the contrary, belief in it requires no sacrifice of any fact of science or any departure from its spirit, while, on the other hand, the mere hope of Divine self-revelation in this manner, much more a belief in it, as Mill allows, "makes life and human nature a far greater thing to the feelings, and gives greater strength, as well as greater solemnity, to all the sentiments which are awakened in us by our fellow creatures and mankind at large."

THE NECESSITY FOR MIRACLE.

But if there be a God who has brought the world and man into existence, and who has, as we must suppose, at least the best qualities of His creatures, it would seem to follow necessarily that He should have made Himself known to them in some way. Now the men of science who deny miracle are almost as emphatic in asserting that they can find no certain revelation of God in Nature. That He exists may be hinted at, but what His character is, they say, Nature gives us no sort of ground to assert. Mills' tremendous indictment of Nature, in his "Essays on Religion," is only an unusually strong example of the kind of thing they all tell us, differing only in this, that there is in it a cry as of a wounded heart, which is rare indeed among those who occupy his standpoint. Now, I am very far, indeed, from thinking that the case is so desperate as the scientists assert, but I am quite willing to admit that the light which is in nature is but dim, and that further light is not only highly desirable, but to minds darkened by sin, as ours are, is even necessary. In any case, the more thoroughly scientists deny that nature speaks of God, the more clamant becomes the necessity that if His creatures are to know Him, if they are to get any help from Him in their arduous struggle upward to the higher life, it must be by something out of Nature, something beyond nature, something supernatural. In other words, if nature expresses God only in terms of force or power, then something else than Nature must be found to express Him as love and holiness. But how can that be done? That question can best be answered by considering how a man can reveal his moral character to his fellows. They will get but little light on that by seeing him continually throwing huge weights, running swift races, or performing other tests of physical strength, or even skill. To know what manner of man he is, to have a view of him as a moral being, he must enter into relations with them, must reveal himself in conduct towards them, otherwise they can not know him. For a report from others that the man's disposition is good and his moral aims high will not affect them much, if these others can not give instances in which he so exhibited himself. Every one is impatient with Daniel Deronda, in George Eliot's novel, for this reason. She is always telling us that he is morally great, that he exerted a most helpful influence upon others spiritually, but he never does or says anything that shows him to be so, and we call the book a failure and the hero a prig. Now that is an analogy to the case in hand. Nature does not reveal God except in a way which for moral stimulus and help to man is all but useless. How, then, can God reach men, so that their lives may be touched to finer issues by His presence? Only, it would appear, by entering into relations with mankind on another plane, by exhibiting Himself in a supernatural course of conduct with regard to them. Then they will know Him as a moral being; then they will receive the stimulus they need; then, and then only, will the Creator fulfill towards His creatures that purpose for which alone we can conceive that He created man. Now, if that be the case, then it is only by miracle, both external and internal to the mind of man, that he can do so.

MIRACLE NOT THE GUARANTEE OF RE-VELATION-BUT REVELATION.

The other method of regarding miracle, which is to be found in Morley, and in all our opponents up to Arnold and Huxley, is different. According to it, miracles are the guarantee, the evidence, and the accompaniment of revelation which is thought of as a series of propositions about God and man, which the accredited person sets forth as being the truth of God. But that is not the fashion in which we now desire to look at miracle. Miracle is not the guarantee of revelation; it is revelation itself. What men need is that God should reveal Himself, that He should enter into such relations with them that they should learn to know Him, What is mainly needful is that they should see and know him in his moral attributes of love and holiness, and miracles are His acts, the constituent parts of His intercourse, and without them I can not in the least conceive how God could, under the circumstances, reveal Himself at all. It is not, therefore, as last century conceived the matter, nor can the question so frequently raised then and since even come under discussion here. We can not say, Why can we not receive the message, the truths about God and immortality, and so on, without accepting the miracles which were only sent to guarantee them? If we accept the teaching, what do we lose by paying no attention to the guarantee? The question is quite irrelevant, when miracle is seen to be not the guarantee of revelation, but the revelation itself. For clearly, in that case, to ignore the miracle is to ignore the message. In other words, the state of the case is simply this: If God does not do mankind good, if He does not manifest Himself as good and holy by doing good and holy acts lying outside of nature, which is, as all agree, dumb or nearly so on these matters, how can He make himself known at all? Or more briefly put still, our view is this: Miracle does not accompany revelation, it is revelation, and so revelation without miracle is a contradiction in terms. Here, therefore, if at all, Andrew Lang's epigram on the statement in "Robert Elsmere," "Miracles do not happen," is shown to be true. "Miracles do not happen?" he says. "Then it is a miracle if they do not." For their not happening would mean this—that there exists a loving God, who has made creatures whose highest power is love and compassion for beings like themselves, and though they toil along in agony and darkness, endeavoring to realize that which is highest it them potentially, He never reaches forth a helping hand, never speaks that word which it so overawed Browning's Arabian physician even to think possible.

Oh, heart I made, a heart beats here, Face my hands fashioned, see it in myself; Thou hast no power, nor may'st conceive of mine, But love I gave thee, with myself to love, And thou must love Me, who have died for thee.

That he does not, seems a very incredible proposition, and the claim of the Bible is that this incredible thing is not true. We need not trouble ourselves about any individual miracle. We may even withhold our belief from many without seriously damaging our perception of the character of God. One thing we must however recognize, that is, that in the history of the Jewish people there was a series of supernatural events which revealed the moral character of God. We must acknowledge that He Himself mingled here in human history, and that through these external events and the internal illumination which he bestowed upon chosen men of that nation, God made to humanity a revelation of Himself such as alone could be of value to them in the struggle after moral and spiritual life. And no one can deny that the facts as known correspond entirely with the view that the history of Israel was in this way abnormal. Everyone even today follows in the track marked out by them; and, further, while they were pursuing it the Jews always said they were conscious of the Divine presence, and they always asserted that the supreme revelation of God as love would come to view in the line of their history. And that came true. They did find the highest path, for their religion is the religion of the highest races; their morals are the morals of all the most highly civilized men; and in the line of their history there did appear, just as they expected, a quite unique being, whom even one who doubts miracle, like Mill, still describes as a "unique figure, not more unlike all his precursors than all his successors" - so unique, that he further says of Him: "Nor even now would it be easy for an unbeliever to find a better translation of the rule of virtue from the abstract into the concrete than to endeavor so to live that Christ would approve our life." Further, we have the clearest proof that this man, the crown or completion of Jewish history, claimed to reveal God in a quite exceptional way, and that though sensitive beyond measure to sin in others, he never showed the slightest teeling that he himself was in any wise stained by it. Taking all these things together, I think we have so strong a case for miracle that unless there are surprisingly strong reasons against it-reasons so strong as to prove prohibitive—it will only be rational and sane to believe that God indeed was moving here in supernatural and mysterious wavs.

THE OBJECTIONS TO MIRACLES.

But here our opponents meet us with two peremptory denials, which run into each other, doubtless; but which must be kept strenuously apart as belonging to quite separate domains of thought. The first denial is that miracles can not occur. The second is that miracles can not be proved.

Miracles can not happen, for they are contrary to the necessary uniformity of nature. At one time this statement played a great part in the battle against the supernatural; but today it is almost completely withdrawn. The only man of note who maintains it to my knowledge is Professor T. H. Green, of Oxford, who says the assertion of miracle is a contradiction in terms; for miracle must have nature as its background, and in asserting the occurrence of miracles you assert knowledge, and you assert nature, and then deny both. But I do not suppose any one here is affected in the least by that statement. for it rests upon a particular view of the Hegelian philosophy, which seems to me to be substantially pantheistic. If it be so, then it does not lie with us to discuss it now; and if Hegelianism be not pantheism, as Hutchison Stirling declares, we have that great authority's word for it that Hegelianism need not exclude miracle. But among all who hold clearly to personality in God this argument is given up, and even by scientists who have materialistic tendencies. Of course you will hear it loudly proclaimed still in sceptical publications of the second or third rank; but where Huxley yields, we need not trouble ourselves about the smaller fry of sceptics. And he does yield in this matter most thoroughly. He admits that the laws of nature are merely generalized experience, and have no virtue in them to forbid the happening of miracles. The tendency to think that nature has been uniform in the past is, he admits, a petitio principii, since part of the record we have about nature in the past is the assertion that it has sometimes not been uniform. Further, he admits that even if the course of nature had been absolutely uniform in the past, that fact would give us no right to say that it will be uniform in the future. In short, he admits that the uniformity of nature is an assumption necessary, and justified up to a certain point, but beyond that it is incapable of proof, and its acceptance is due only to natural tendendencies of the human mind. Our opponents then being judges, we may with a good conscience join Rothe, one of the greatest and most spiritual thinkers in Germany for the past fifty years, "We are not afraid of the laws of nature. People are always holding these words up to us nowadays as if they were a Medusa's head, but we will look them steadily in the face and not join in the superstitious worship which thoughtlessness so willingly and with such an imposing air offers up to them." Or, we may sum up with Huxley-"The definition of a miracle as a suspension or a contravention of the order of nature is self-contradictory, because all we know of the order of nature is derived from our observation of the course of events, of which the socalled miracle is a part. On the other hand, no event is so extraordinary as to be impossible, and therefore, if by the term miracle we mean only extremely wonderful events, there can be no just ground for denying the possibility of their occurrence." Further, it seems to me, that the whole difficulty in this regard would not have arisen if the Deistic conception of God had not thoroughly taken hold of the scientific mind. Apparently, it finds it easier to conceive of the relation of God to the world as that of an earthly machinist to his machine. God, according to it, completes his machine, and then sends it forth to do its work without any further touch of his hand, and if it needs that touch it is branded thereby as defective. But a much more reasonable conception of the relation is that which denies the world any stability of its own, which conceives of it as owing all its persistence to the ever present action of the Divine power, and which thinks of God as the all-pervading spirit which moves the whole, as we and our will working so mysteriously in the movements of our bodies. If you will only think of it, it is a most mysterious, even an inexplicable thing, that the will should act with such power upon matter that we can move all parts of our body at discretion. No explanation will ever make that a thing easily conceived, and so far as miracles are or may be the result of the action of the Divine will in the world. which is to it as the body is to our wills, I can not see that there should be more difficulty in the one case than in the other. Certainly the one conception involves no more interference with the regular course of of nature than the other.

THE EVIDENCE FOR MIRACLES.

But the real strength of the deniers of miracle lies in the other contention. It lies in their assertion that even if miracles did occur they could never be proved. This, of course, is the strength of Hume's argument, and that argument remains much where it was when it left his hands. Huxley shortly puts his contention thus:-"The more a statement conflicts with previous experience, the more complete must be the evidence which is to justify us in believing it," and with that statement no one can have any wish to quarrel. It is in what follows that ground for objection will be found, for all our opponents go on to speak as if the only possible evidence which can support such facts is the bare word of those who saw the miraculous sign. But this position is defective in two respects. In the first place, it ignores altogether the fact that, in addition to this testimony, we must take into account any preceding likelihood which lies in the circumstances under which the thing is testified to, occurred. In the second, it ignores the fact that we, who have not seen the wonders we believe, but have to trust to the reports of others concerning them, have a compensation in this-that we can trace the effects of the miracle if it be of radical importance, and by that means gain almost as much as we lose by not being the first percipients of it. Now, as we have seen, the case for the miraculous in history does not rest upon individual miracles, every separate one standing upon its own separate basis, and depending for its witness only upon the evidence of those who saw it. Indeed, I distinctly refuse to argue the question on the basis of single miracles, as Hume does. What he really has to deal with is, first of all, a God existing, and presumably desirous of making His existence known to His creatures, so as to exhibit to them, and inspire them with, His highest qualities. But the course of nature, either through original unfitness for that purpose, or through the deterioration of man's perception, has become unsuitable for it. If, therefore, God is to do this, He must do it by miracle, and it is in the highest degree likely that He will do it by entering into a course of action in human history which will bring Him nearer to man than his action in nature does. Now these considerations surely ought to have been weighed by our opponents. They have no right to count up, with scrupulous exactitude, all the unlikelihoods which make for their side, and to ignore the previous likelihoods on the other. Surely, as against the likelihood of an occurence which our want of previous experience of anything similar raises, we have almost or altogether a counteracting equivalent in the likelihood, or even the necessity, involved in the hypothesis with which we start-that if the highest good of men is to be secured, something supernatural must be attempted. The care with which Matthew Arnold and Huxley persistently avoid this point, the skill, with which they select their analogies to miracle-the one taking the change of a pen into a penwiper, the other the appearance of a centaur trotting down Regent streetsuggest that they have instinctively felt the weakness of their case on any other basis. They always contrive to suggest the utter absence of motive, the absence of any previous likelihood, and a certain triviality in connection with miracle. But certainly, however true it may be that almost no evidence could justify us in believing in the two wonders supposed, it is not true at all that the self-revelation of God to His creatures stands on anything like the same footing. For in the Bible miracles we have not single isolated, almost absurd miracles performed; we have a whole history whose warp and woof was supernatural, a history stretching over many centuries, full of the strangest chances, and resulting in the production of an idea of God which was quite unparalleled elsewhere in the world. Further, those who were most actively concerned in this history have unanimously borne the testimony that God did supernaturally reveal himself, and the loftiness of their conception of God is such as would naturally have been the effect of such a revelation had it occurred. All that surely stands upon a different level of probability from the centaur trotting down Regent street, and is in itself so probable as to neutralize greatly, if not altogether, the a priori unlikelihood which experience might be supposed to raise and justify. But if we add to that the other consideration we have referred to above, I think the prejudice should most certainly disappear. We are, it is true, far removed from the time when thse wonders were actually seen, and we are dependent on human testimony in regard to them, and whatever weakness, therefore, attaches to human testimony in things not commonly experienced would attach But, as a matter of fact, that is to this. not all we have to go upon.

THE RATIONALITY OF MIRACLE.

In addition, we reply, partly, upon historic evidence of another, even of the best kind, and partly upon evidence which is actually before us now. For we can now look back over the whole development. We can trace its course, we can judge of its claims by the history of its growth, and we can see how, in the main, and taking the great outlines of things, the chief claims advanced by the teachers of this nation supposed to be supernaturally guided have been justified. Further, we can trace the effects of these supposed supernatural events in institutions, in memorials, in beliefs, which originated in them, and we see that on the whole the outcome of it all has been for the highest good of mankind. We see that, taken altogether, the results flowing from this movement, said to be supernatural, have constituted the main stream of moral and spiritual advance. Lastly, we have had this experience—that wherever the belief in these supernatural dealings of God with man has died out, there, too, the beneficial results which we visible before, the glow and impulse which have proved contagious to force men upwards, have pined and dwindled, so that even Green, who denies miracles as impossible, bears witness that without a belief in the miraculous facts. the Christian faith which he seeks to retain would not have been what it is. In comparison with events possessing such a splendid claim upon the attention and belief of mankind, the penwiper and the centaur cut a somewhat sorry figure; and the demand which Professor Huxley makes that, as "nothing short of a careful monograph by a highly competent investigator, accompanied by figures and measurements," could convince him about the centaur, so here he can not believe without the same things, looks even ridiculous. For though he says he can hardly tell what evidence would convince him about the centaur, I think I can tell. He would not need the monograph and the measurements he speaks of if the centaur did not stand so isolated and unattached. If it had proved to be a necessary link in the chain of proof for the establishment of Darwinism, we may be sure a very little evidence would have satisfied him. Did he not himself invent and cherish Bathybius because it fell in with the general scheme of his thought, and did not Hachel invent, and even give drawings of various forms of life, which no man has ever seen or heard of, because his view of the antecedents and consequents seemed to demand them, because they must have existed if his general view of the universe were true. Now that is not ridiculous at all on their part if their scheme of things be the true scheme, and if they are right in their reading of the antecedents and conse-If these conditions have been fulfilled I do not see that the absence of specimens of such forms should hinder men believing that they once existed, however remote they may be from what experience gives us now. But if so, how much less is it ridiculous for us to believe that events which are necessary, according to the theistic scheme of the universe, are true when we do not need to imagine them, but have only to trust to what witnesses, who are in themselves at least respectable, have attested in the manner I have pointed out. Further, just as Huxley and Haeckel would scorn any one who should say, I won't believe in any of those forms you say must necessarily have existed unless I can experiment upon them, and would point out to them that it was the very nature of the case that these should now be extant, just so we would meet a similar demand made here by them. For it is of the very nature of the case that the thing we believe in should occur in this fashion once, and only once. If God has revealed Himself, and if the nature of man be such that he can only receive the revelation gradually, line upon line, precept upon precept, by education that is, and if this gradual revelation culminated in the highest possible revelation of God that the nature of things on earth would permit, it is only natural that when the whole movement has come to perfection in Christ it should not be repeated. All that then remained to be done could be left to ordinary means to the activity of men, and the experience of life. By these the knowledge of God could be spread abroad in the To refuse to believe in such a supernatural manifestation, therefore, because it did not occur in our own time, or because we can not experiment upon it, seems to me unreasonable. One might almost as well refuse to believe in the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, with all its wonders and all its horrors, because it did not occur in our time, or because it can not be rehearsed for our benefit now. The fact is, any such demand means practically this, that unless a modern man can see the event himself, or have the evidence of some of his friends, he need not believe anything he does not wish to believe. But on that principle belief in history becomes a matter of mere arbitrary choice. Our whole conception of the past depends upon belief in facts on which we can make no experiment, and in experiences so extraordinary that the appearance of a centaur would seem to me ordinary in comparison. Yet all men accept the past, and their readings of it are not radically different. partly because they believe the witnesses, but much more probably because the events of the past are still traceable in their consequences, and because they fit in with the general framework of our conceptions.

THE RESURRECTION.

To insist that we shall believe nothing that seems strange to us, except we have had the actual holding of the inquest, so to speak, is consequently a mere surrender to prejudice, and how obstinate such a prejudice may become is seen in Professor Huxley's refusal to believe in the resurrection of Christ. In one respect, indeed, testimony seems to have made an impression on him. He apparently thinks it not incredible that our Lord appeared to his disciples after his crucifixion, and denies the resurrection because he does not think Jesus was really dead. To establish the fact of his being dead, he says, he would require an inquest, and a certificate from a duly qualified practitioner, and even in that case he would like to know what kind of qualification the practitioner had. He says he can not get that, and so he declines to believe. But, curiously enough, this event which he discredits is just the one case in history in which we have clear evidence that an inquest was held, for it is distinctly stated that when the executioners came to give the crucified the coup de grace they found Jesus already dead. Now, these executioners, whatever they did not know, knew a dead man when they saw one. They had seen too many not to know that; and further, they were much better acquainted with the symptoms of death from crucifixion than Professor Huxley himself. Moreover, they stabbed the victim in the side to make sure of him, and further we must remember that they wished not only to ascertain but to make sure that he was dead, for they were the agents of a murderous hatred. Still further, they had plenty of time to finish their work. They were not murderers who may let themselves be balked in their purpose because they are suddenly disturbed. They had the law What inon their side and ample time. quest of modern time could give us a greater security that death had taken If a man now were said to have been seen after his death, even though an inquest in the best modern form had been held, I feel sure Huxley would be more able to pick holes in the evidence than he can be in this case. Yet he rejects all that with a mere wave of his hand. In doing so, he seems to me to reduce the matter to this: That unless he can hold the inquest himself he will not believe in such a case as we have here, and as he can not hold the inquest, he virtually says that he will not believe anything of this kind, or any evidence, because of the depth of his pre-Perhaps, after what I have said, it is hardly necessary to refer to the famous squire and his book on the history of testimony invented by the author of "Robert Elsmere." But as I have met people who seemed dismaved by the imagination, I may say that the whole conception seems to me an incoherency. The idea is, that men at the beginning of their career on the earth were quite incapable of relating facts as they occurred; that they have slowly been becoming capable of it since, and that now the cultured can do so with accuracy. Consequently, any event that is borne witness to by men in this century and the last may be safely accepted; but anything before that can not be accepted, because of the inability of men to see accurately or to speak accurately. squire's book was to prove this, and he read the Vedas and early Arabic literature, and so on, to ascertain what the attitude of the human mind to facts was in the remote ages when these writings came into existence. But in order to test an attitude to facts, you have to know the facts from some other source than the statements of those whose attitude you are criticising. That knowledge you are totally without in the case supposed, and the result is that you estimate the attitude of the human mind to facts in those ages by your a priori belief that miracles do not happen, and your huge and portentous volume thereby becomes merely a portentous petitio principii.

THE QUESTION OF HISTORICAL CREDIBILITY.

But there still remains one other aspect of the case, which I should like to deal with before concluding, because is it one which was put forth a century or more ago by Lessing, the greatest of modern Germans, and which has been re-stated by Professor Green in his sermon on faith. The argument may be put in various ways, but probably the form in which it appeals to the modern mind is something like this. This debate about miraculous facts in the past is a question of history, and like all questions of that kind where there are strong interests at work to accredit or discredit them, the debate seems interminable, and at any rate the thing in question can never be demonstrated. Now, can we not judge the ideas which have grown out of these real or supposed facts? Can we not accept them on their mere self-evidencing power, and live in the light of them without troubling ourselves as to whether miracle is possible or not? May we not go further, and say that there is something incongruous in linking together as necessary parts of one whole "a certain intellectual assent of a kind which. if the propositions assented to concerned any other events than those purporting to convey a Divine revelation, we should say could make no difference to the heart or spirit or character." and a certain "attitude or disposition which belongs distinctively to the inner man, and gives us our worth as moral or spiritual beings." Now, I think we must deny that these things, congruous, or incongruous, can be separated, for practically the proposition amounts to this: can not we believe that a Being is a loving and holy Being equally well, whether we believe that He ever showed Himself to be such or not? Translated into a human analogy, the question is this: suppose you take a child born after a father's death or departure to a distant country. Could such a child continue to believe in its father's love and goodness through hearing the elder members of the family speak of the many loving acts he had done, and of his uniform goodness in their daily intercourse with him, if he said to himself, "I can not be sure about this evidence. I have noticed that there are a good many differences as to the times when and the circumstances under which these good deeds were performed. I have heard eager disputes as to whether some of them were done by my father or some one else, and I really do not see how I can ever be sure when they occurred, or even that they did occur. But it is a beautiful idea that they have suggested. The relation between a tather and his children so conceived is a very noble one, and I will honor and cherish my father's memory on that account, not on account of anything so incongruous and external as mere historical facts." Now I would simply ask whether you think this a very hopeful state of mind for a child who wished to have a warm and loving regard for his father to be in. Certainly not, you would say, for you feel at once that the faith and love a child under such circumstances possessed would be like a flower cut off from the soil. It would bloom under favorable circumstances for a little while, and then must inevitably wither away. However incongruous it may appear to philosophy, therefore, it is true that human nature is reached by what it regards as facts, as it is reached by nothing else, and that not individuals only but nations have been brought to a far higher state as regards the inner man, by belief in the truth of the history in which God is said to have revealed Himself as supreme love. Pro-fessor Green himself seems to me to acknowledge implicitly the very thing he explicitly denies. For he admits that the fupposed facts have determined the form and the fate of Christianity hitherto, but he thinks that now they can well be done without, and must be done without, because they are not true. But putting aside the tremenduous paradox involved in supposing that the right ideas could only have come into the world by belief in facts which are no facts, does it not seem clear that while it may be possible for people denying the facts to keep up the glow which they caused, so long as they live among a multitude of people who are still kept warm by their belief in them, it would be quite impossible to keep it up when the fire has once been altogether withdrawn from everyone. In fact, we ask, as Dr. A. B. Bruce in his admirable book on the "Chief End of Revelation," asks, "Does the kernel remain after the so-called shell is cast away. It may, on the eighteenth century idea of what the kernel consisted in-abstract ideas of reason about God, duty, and immortality—or on the notion of Christianity current in in our own day, as consisting simply in an ethical spirit. But if, as we have contended all through, it be God manifesting himself in grace, then we can not part with the shell without at the same time parting with the kernel. Self-revealing grace is history, or it is nothing at all."

THE A PRIORI PROBABILITY OF MIRACLE.

On all grounds, therefore, however the prevailing dislike of miracle may affect me unconsciously, I must confess, with Rothe, "that up to this hour I have never been able to make clear to myself where my thinking could come into conflict with the conception of miracle." As I have said, miracle seems not only a priori likely to me, but necessary if there be a God, and He wishes to be known by man; and I can not see anything in the hindrances which are supposed to stop the way. The dogmatic statement that miracles can not happen is given up by those who are most accredited on the opposite side, and the objections to miracles on the ground of evidence are already largely met by the likelihood and necessity of revelation. Taking that into account, I can not see that the difficulty in believing the facts of the historic supernatural is greater than the difficulty in other cases of accepting historical testimony. Indeed, it seems to me that, unless we are going to reduce our beliefs to the narrow limits of what we see, and touch, and handle, and experiment upon ourselves, these facts, both from their antecedents and their results, are among the most satisfactory attested in history. It is true, of course, that miraculous stories, which we do not believe, occur in every country, and that with every popular upheaval, and every spasm of popular emotion, stories of a supernatural kind do arise. But that does not invalidate all narratives which include the supernatural. It only justifies us in exercising extreme caution in accepting them. When the miracles recounted are trifling or unworthy in their character, when they stand isolated and have no consequences, they may be set aside. But when they have in every respect the opposite characteristics, when they have an immensely strong probability behind them, and a most beneficent series of effects as their results, then the falsity of others does not affect them at all. So clear do these things seem to me, that I can account for the fury with which the idea of supernatural revelation is assailed only by supposing that what we should almost natur-The scientists ally expect has happened. who write have steeped themselves so constantly and so exclusively in the realm of physical nature that that side of their minds which should respond to the supernatural has become atrophied by want of use. In the chief of them all, in Darwin himself, we see how his absorption killed all his imaginative delight in poetry, and it is on that side of the mind that the affinities with religion and the supernatural lie. In the minds of students of science who are still young this absorption has not yet done its work, and I feel sure that if they will keep themselves thoroughly exercised on that side of their nature, and refuse to shut their eyes to all evidence and all probabilities which can not be justified on merely physical grounds, their faith in miracle will not suffer, and the channel of intercourse with a wider life and a purer world will remain open, to the great benefit of their spiritual and moral health.

HEBREWS IN OFFICE.

SOLOMON HIRSCH, a Hebrew gentleman, has been appointed by President Harrison to the important diplomatic position of minister to Turkey. As a class the Jewish race has not been numerous in politics, but an investigation shows that these people have creditably held important positions in national, state, and municipal

One of the most distinguished members of congress of former years was Henry M. Phillips, a Hebrew lawyer of Philadelphia, who served in the Thirty-fifth congress. He figured conspicuously in the debates, especially during the discussion of the admission of Kansas as a state of the union. Though frequently urged to stand as a candidate for the mayoralty of Philadelphia he always declined to do so.

Ânother able congressman was Lewis . Levin of the first district of Philadelphia, who was elected for three successive terms to the national house of representatives. He served with great credit, and while holding the chairmanship of the committee on naval affairs was instrumental in the building of the dry-dock at Philadelphia. Mr. Levin was one of the founders of the native American party. He was a Charlestonian by birth, and while residing in Mississippi fought a duel with Alfred Bynum, Jefferson Davis acting as Mr. Levin's second.

In Louisiana Henry Michael Hyams was elected lieutenant-governor some years ago. He was also a Charlestonian by birth and reached New Orleans in company with Judah P. Benjamin. Mr.

Benjamin's record is too well known to call for extended observation, but one fact of peculiar interest has escaped the attention of most of his biographers and possesses some fascination for students of American-Hebrew history. Benjamin is said to have developed such remarkable talent as a youth in Charleston as to attract the attention of one Moses E. Lopez, a member of the Hebrew Orphan society, who, from his own means, bestowed a classical education upon his protege.

Franklin J. Moses, the late distinguished chief justice of South Carolina, was the son of Myer Moses, an officer in the war of 1812, and in 1841 was elected to the state senate over two competitors, and reelected for thirty years. Emanuel B. Hart was elected to congress in 1851, and was subsequently appointed surveyor of the port. David Levy Yulee of Florida, who was born David Levy, was United States senator from Florida for many years prior to the civil war. His wife was a daughter of Gov. Wickliffe of Kentucky.

By appointment of President Pierce, Isaac Phillips was made general appraiser of the port of New York, which position he occupied for fifteen years. William Lovenstein is and has been for the last twenty years a member of the Virginia legislature. Raphael J. Moses has been a conspicuous figure in Georgia politics for the last forty years, and has served in the legislature of that state, where he attracted attention as a legislator and orator of uncommon ability. Samuel Weil has been for many years a prominent member of the Georgia legislature. Dr. Herman Bendell of Albany was appointed by President Grant as superintendent of Indian affairs and afterward consul to Elsinore, Denmark. Philip Schloss was for many years state senator in Indiana, as was also the late Bernhard Schweitzer. Isaac Rusnosky of Boston has served in the Massachusetts legislature, and Henry Muck is now serving in the Ohio senate. In Oregon Louis Fleischner and Edward Hirsch have both occupied the office of state treasurer.

Marcus Otterbourg was the first American Hebrew to occupy the high office of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, in which capacity he represented this country in Mexico as the successor to Thomas Corwin, by appointment of President Lincoln. Oscar S. Straus was the second American Hebrew to occupy the office of minister, being appointed to the Turkish mission by President Cleveland in 1887. The state of Louisiana was for several years represented in the United States senate by Benjamin F. Jonas. Leopold Morse of Boston served for five terms as a member of congress. Joseph Blumenthal, now the representative of the I wenty second assembly district of New York city, was also a prominent member of the assembly in 1870-71. It is generally conceded that Jacob A. Cantor, senator from the Tenth district of the same city, is one of the ablest representatives the city has ever sent to Albany. He was chosen a member of the assembly for three terms, and while a member of that body introduced numerous important bills, including many in the interest of various Hebrew institutions, in which he has always evinced a warm interest.

Judge Simon M. Ehrlich of the city court of New York was elected to the bench in 1884, and during his incumbency has won the respect and esteem of his brethren at the bar and the public. Theodore W. Myers, controller of the city of New York, was elected to office in 1887 by a majority of 40,000 votes. Philip J. Joachimse was appointed assistant corporation attorney of that city in 1840, and fifteen years later was made assistant United States district attorney. During his term of office he secured the first conviction for slave-trading. By direction of President Pierce he received the thanks of the government for the ability with which he discharged his official duties. Godfrey Morse of Boston was counsel for the United States in the court of commissioners of the Alabama claims.

Benjamin F. Peixotto has attained high rank as a diplomate. He was nominated by President Grant as consul-general to Roumania during the frightful massacres of Hebrews in that country, and his presence at once checked the tide of persecution. He declined the appointment of consul-general to St. Petersburg in 1877, and was consul to Lyons, France, during the administrations of Presidents Haves, Garfield and Arthur. At Lyons he displayed a degree of fidelity and intelligence rarely found in consular service, and his official reports to the government rank as the most valuable of their kind in the national archives. The Hebrews of Albany are justly proud of Simon W. Rosendale, who has been assistant district attorney, recorder, and corporation counsel of that city.

Adolph L. Sanger was president of the New York board of aldermen in 1885 and and presidential elector in 1880 and 1884. DeWitt I. Seligman has been a commissioner of education since 1884. Ex-Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer derives his title by appointment to the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Florence McCarthy of the Marine court. He was a presidential elector on the republican ticket in 1860. Few Hebrews in this country have attained a greater degree of prominence than Simon Wolf of Washington, D. C. He has been recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia and consul-general to Egypt, and has been on terms of closest friendship with the leading men of the day of both parties.

The following are some of the prominent Hebrews who have occupied public office: Philip Walter, for fifteen vears clerk of the United States court of Florida; Michael W. Ash, member of congress of Pennsylvania; Adolph Brandt, served two terms in the Georgia legislature; Edwin Einstein, member of congress from New York city in 1876; Moritz Ellinger, coroner for New York city; S. H. Fishblote, mayor of Wilmington, N. C.; Morris Friedsam, internal revenue collecter, New York; Solomon Heydenfelt, justice of the supreme court of California; Julius Houseman, member of congress from Michigan in 1880-82; Leonard Myers, member of the Thirty-eighth, Thirtyninth, and Fortieth congresses from Philadelphia; Phillip Phillips, member of congress from Alabama, 1853-55; Charles H. Schwab, comptroller of Chicago; Edward S. Solomon, governor of Washington territory; Myer Strouse, congressman from Pennsylvania; David Eckstein, consul to Amsterdam; Gerson N. Herman, coroner of New York; Isidore Raynor, Baltimore, state senator and congressman; Leo C. Dessar, civil justice Eleventh district New York; Henry M. Gelfogle, civil justice New York; Jacob Hess, commissioner of charities and correction and commissioner of electrical subways, New York city; Joseph Koch, civil justice, deputy county clerk, school trustee, dock commissioner, state senator, and excise commissioner, New York city; Samson Lachman, civil justice, New York city; Ferdinand Levy, alderman-at-large 1872, and coroner of New York city since 1882; Jacob Shroder, judge of the Court of Common Pleas, Cincinnati; Alfred Steckler, civil justice, New York city; Samuel D. Rosenthal, assemblyman, New York city, 1887; Myer S. Isaacs, judge of the Marine court, 1880, and Reuben Trier, assemblyman, New Jersey, 1889. The secretaryship of the treasury was tendered by President Grant to the late Joseph Seligman, the banker, but it was declined by him.

Adolph Krause, Chicago, Illinois, was tendered a foreign general consulship by President Cleveland, which he declined.

GOOD OBSERVED BY PREJUDICE.

DR. H. W. THOMAS preached yesterday morning at the People's church. His text was:

"There be many who say, who will show us any good."—Psalm 4: 6.

The preacher said in substance: is conditioned in the three-fold life of sense, intellect, and morals. In each of these he is a learner; and this is a world of questioners and questions. Many are saying who will show us the earth and the stars; explain the mystery of life, of reason, of spirit, and God? And in response to these questionings up rise the chemists, the astronomers, the psychologists, the theologians. After thousands of years there are to-day more questioners and more questions awaiting the final answer than ever before; not that men doubt their senses, or their reason, or that there is a meaning in life and an end to which all things tend, but that every question grows with the growth of thought, and hence the answers of the past do not satisfy the questions of the present.

"The mind does not create, but perceives; it can not make the true false by denial, nor the false true by affirmation, and hence all should desire an open, honest vision of things as they are. The scribes and pharisees could not see the good in Christ because of the prejudices of aristocracy and learning. Bruno was burned for heresy nearly 300 years ago. The present pope of Rome feels that an insult has been offered to his holiness because the free Italians have erected a monument to commemorate Bruno's sacrifice in the cause of lib-The pope sees in the freedom of reason the fruitful mother of heresy and that which unsettles all true religion and morality. All the world rejoices in the liberty of Italy and in the amazing progress of man in the last 400 years: but the pope sees only evil, and justifies the burnt ing of Bruno, and we must suppose that he thinks the tenth and fifteenth centuries better than the nineteenth, and that the persecutions waged by the holy church, of which he is the august head, were nowrong—that the massacre of St. Bartholomew was a blessing to mankind.

"Bruno believed in the new astronomy. He was an Italian philosopher, and his views of God were quite similar to those of Spinoza. Not an atheist, not in the lowest sense a pantheist, he believed that laws resulted from wisdom, and that all wise laws were for the good of the world. Morally he was far better than many of the popes of his own and earlier times, but he would not consent to let the church do his thinking, and, rather than give up his reason and his liberty, he gave up his life. Compare the results of liberty in England and Germany with any country ruled by the papacy. And in the United States the people have elected presidents all the way from Washington to Harrison of far more intelligence and moral worth than were the popes in any hundred years of the dark ages. The freedom of thought in this land sends 10,000,000 children to school; there are 2,000,000 women marching under the simple banner of non-sectarianism in religion, no sex in politics, but all for home, and country, and God. To see the good it must be studied in the broad relations of the harmony of man's three-fold life. Honest toil is goodness in action. All the struggles and attritions of thought are working out the final harmony of truth. There are thousands of good priests and good preachers and people in all the churches, and the good is outside of all and in pagan lands, but it takes a large charity to see it.

'Twas sad to part with father dear, Although gray hairs adorned his brow; God called him from this world of care, His work on earth is over now. Many years he toiled with patience, For to do his Master's will; And though we've said farewell, dear father Thon art in our memory still.

May you sleep a peaceful slumber—Till our Savior comes to reign, Then with all of those departed, We hope to meet with thee again, F.

Little Vidia sweetly sleeps
In the Savior's loving arms,
And we know he safely keeps
Our lost loved one from harm.
Sad the parting was to us.
When the parting was to us.
When they took her from our arms
And they said "She is no more."
We would fain have kept her here,
But the Lord who knoweth best
Called her to a happier sphere—
To the mansions of the blest.
When our labors here are o'er,
And our earthly race is run,
May we to those mansions fly
Where our lovely babe has flown.
May the Savior guide our feet,
Ever t'ward the radient shore,
Till our loved one we shall meet—
Meet in heaven, to part no more.

"HE SAID NOTHING ABOUT TITHING."

THE foregoing is one of the remarks made by a good sister on her way home with others from one of our services at Richmond, Utah, and overheard by Brn. Anthony and Nilsson.

Sure enough we said nothing about tithing in our evening's discourse, not a

Whether this good woman thought a sermon without an exhortation to pay tithing was an unfinished production and we remiss in duty as a minister; or that the remark was a comment on an unusual occurrence, a sermon without tithing, and intended as a bit of sarcasm on what they had listened to customarily, we really do not know; but certain it is we said nothing about tithing.

It is not a usual thing for the elders of the Reorganized Church to preach tithing.

There has been so much and so long continued abuse of the principle that the elder in the field, honorable minded as he is, shrinks from incorporating it into his gospel sermons, and leaves the task of the Bishopric and his agents to now and then present a set service on the topic, when some necessity for money looms up in the way of progress. The elder shrinks from presenting tithing for another reason, and that is this: he is constitutionally not a beggar, and the abuses of the past make him to hesitate to talk of finances and the duty of Saints to help the work along, for fear it may be construed as asking for money on his own behalf, or on behalf of his family. He is as conscious of his duty to see that his family has a sufficient and proper support as any other can be; but while duty is present with him, the duty to preach the gospel imposed upon him by his call and ordination and the appointment of the church is also present with him. If he leaves the field to labor for and look after his temporal interest, in support of his family, is charged with having an undue love for "filthy lucre," and lacking in the faith which a minister should have, and is afraid to trust the Lord. He feels this criticism keenly, and if quite sensitive he is hurt, sometimes to the degree that he not only leaves the field as an active laborer, but quite ceases to take interest even in local effort. If, however, he decides to keep in the active field, he is sometimes mortified by the fact that the church coffers are not plentifully supplied, and those dependent on him by nature's ties, but whom the church has proposed to look after, are but scantily and irregularly supplied. It may be true that if he were at home and at labor to care for his family there might chance to be no better condition of things; but his family would have the comfort of his presence in their cramped circumstances, and he would have the satisfaction of honorably sharing their unfortunate burdens. Poor as that satisfaction might be, it would at least convince his neighbors that he was willing to abide with those he loved There is in their weal or their woe. another condition attaching to the life of a minister in the field. He has consecrated his life to the service of the Master to preach the gospel. His thoughts, his time, his talents, his studies, his inquiries are all directed into those channels in which he may most effectually prosecute his mission and perform his duty. This unfits him for temporal pursuits, and though he may be a good preacher, he is a "poor financier," "a bad manager;" so his brethren say. This may be true, but where is the remedy?

Trust in Providence is an excellent thing; but Providence works her benefactions by means more or less natural and human. And it sometimes happens that trust is made faint and doubting by betrayal on the part of the human instruments through which Providence should have been able to confer her care and blessings. It is aptly though rudely pictured in a story running like this: A circuit rider in the south going to his appointment one Sunday morning saw a negro at work in his little garden patch:

"Hallo, Pompey! what are you doing

"O, Massa, just hoeing my garden sauce." "Why don't you work it on a week day, Pompey?"

"Can't, Massa, have to work for Massa then."

"Well, you might do it morning and evening,"

"No, Massa, have to go to work for Massa soon as its light, and too tired to work garden when I gets back."

"Well, Pompey, you ought not to work on the Sunday, anyway."

"Why, Massa, who would hoe my garden, then?"

"O, just trust to Providence."

At this the Negro indulged in a hearty laugh and said:

"Ah, now, Massa, you'se out, for Providence is the laziest nigga on this plantation."

It would appear that there was a field hand on the farm that wae called Providence, and that he was very lazy. Providencies should be timely; and those who are among the aids to her good offices should not be lazy in the sense of being dilatory in their helps. And while praying for the success of the elders in the field, remember that the "effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much."

If the faithful man of God preaches the gospel and teaches that the diligent and willing and obedient shall obtain the blessings and the Good Spirit bears witness to his ministry by testifying of Christ and giving the peace of the life to come; it would seem as if he had preached all that was needful to cause disciples to be anxiously engaged in a good work and render it unnecessary to say anything about tithing. For the Saint to impart of his substance for the spread of the gospel, the sustaining of the ministry and the poor of the church ought not to be an irksome task; nor should it be needful for them to be constantly reminded of this duty by persistent preaching from the stand, to the exclusion of other and spiritual "meat in due To pay the tithe of rue and mint and cummin was easy for the Tew, who neglected the weightier things of the law.

No; we said not a word about tithing.

THE RESURRECTION .-- No. 3.

Some oppose the idea of all being resurrected, because they think there would not be enough room. This is one of the great Infidel objections. Let us see what it is worth. The probable number of the human family from Adam to the close of this century, (by or before which it is probable Christ will come and the first resurrection take place), is about 70,000,-000,000, in round numbers. We arrive at this conclusion by allowing that there are now upon the earth over 1,000,000,000 of souls, and that the mean average for each generation from the time of Adam till now is about 500,000,000, and that for the first 1656 years there were sixteen generations; (the average age of man then, judging by the patriarchs, was about 840 years,) and since the flood to A. M. 6000, there will be about 124 generations, making 140 in all—140 x 500,000,000—70,000,-000,000. Allowing ten square feet of there shall be no night there."-Rev. 21: 23-25.

ground for the burial of each person, (which would be quite enough, averaging small and great,) we would have a total of 700 000,000,000 square feet, or about 2,568,807,340 square rods, or about 16,-055,046 square acres, or about 25,086 square miles as a burying ground, an area less by one sixth than the state of South Carolina, or about 1,993 and 1-7 times less than the total land area, or about 7,978 times less than the area of the globe. should be borne in mind that at the end of the thousand years reign, and by the time the unjust are resurrected, there will be "no more sea;" and furthermore, it is highly probable that then, at the great and last change, this planet will be greatly enlarged, and who knows but that it then will become a sun to some system?

And of the capacity of the New Jerusalem, the capital city of the "new earth" after the thousand years reign and the "little season" mentioned in the Revelation to John, chapters 20 and 21, we present the following calculation, based on chapter 21:16, which is both curious and interesting. It is copied from the Charlottesville **Jeffersonian*:

"And he measured the city (New Jerusalem) with the reed, 12,000 furlongs. The length and breadth and the height are equal.

"Twelve thousand furlongs—7.920,000 feet, which being cubed is 943 088 000,000,000,000,000,000 oco-000,000 cubic feet, and half of which we will reserve for the throne of God and the court of heaven, half of the balance streets, and the remainder divided by 4096, the cubical feet in a room 16 feet square and 16 feet high, will be 30,843 750,000,000 rooms.

"We will now suppose the world always did and always will contain 900,000,000 of inhabitants and that a generation will last 30½ years—2,700,000,000,000,000 persons. Then suppose there were 11,230 such worlds, equal to this in number of inhabitants and duration of years—then there would be a room 16 feet long, 16 feet wide and 16 feet high for each person, and room to spare."

Those who have time and inclination and are well versed in mathematics can readily test the solution here given.

Of this all may rest fully assured, there will be no lack of room on this planet in its celestialized state for all who are born upon it, when resurrected.

When men jump to conclusions they are likely to go wrong; but when they reach them in the direct line of well established facts and figures and logical deductions, they then are found to be true and sound and thoroughly reliable. The figures we have given are not far from the exact truth.

When this planet reaches a state of positive, absolute perfection—when it is fully celestialized—it probably will no longer need the light of the sun, the moon, or the stars, but similar to a degree with the "holy city:"

"And the city had no need of the sun, nor of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for "And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which quickeneth your underslandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.

things are governed; even the power God who

"Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it. Therefore it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it forever and ever; for, for this intent was it made and created; and for this intent are they sanctified.

"And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom. For he that is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, can not abide a celestial glory; and he who can not abide a terrestrial glory; he who can not abide a terrestrial glory; he who can not abide a telestial kingdom, can not abide a telestial kingdom, can not abide a telestial glory: therefore he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory.

"And again, verily I say unto you, the earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore it shall be sanctified: yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it: for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body: they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body which was a natural boby: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same even a fulness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same even a fulness: and also they who are quickened by a portion of the telestial glory, shall then receive of the same even a fulness: and they who remain shall also be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received."-D. C. 85: 3-6.

The glory that made the face of Moses to shine so that Israel could not look upon it; the glory that made the face of Jesus to "shine as the sun;" and that made his raiment "white as the light;" the glory that appeared to Saul of Tarsus, "at midday," "above the brightness of the sun"— when this shall be given to this planet in its fulness—then shall it become, indeed, a sun. How grand the idea! how sublime the thought! how worthy is such a work of God! Progression from chaos to absolute perfection—to a fulness of the glory of God! Here is Almighty power; here is infinite wisdom; here is boundless love.

"O the depths of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" The faith of God's children smiles at seeming impossibilities, and rests secure in His promises; knowing that he that hath promised is able also to tulfill.

Another objection that is urged against the literal resurrection of the body, is, that the particles of which the body is composed at death, will, at the resurrection, be found in other bodies. Paul tells us that "thou sowest not that body that shall be, but grain, it may be of wheat, or some other, but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."—I Cor. 15: 37, 38: The wheat that is produced, is the same in form and elements as that which was sown; so is the body. It is not accessarily composed of the same identical particles.

HOW ARE THE DEAD RAISED UP?

By the Spirit of God, for,

"If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead, dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. 8: 11.

Christ took his body from the grave by the power of the Spirit. He says:

"Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father"—John 10: 17, 18.

Paul says, Heb. 9: 14, that Christ "through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God." The "eternal Spirit" was the "power" by which Christ offered his body to the icy embrace of death, and it was the "power" under the command of his Father, by which He took it up again.

"AND WITH WHAT BODY DO THEY COME."

We have already seen that the bodies: of the resurrected come forth from the "dust," "the grave," "the sea," and that "the earth shall cast out the dead." We have also seen that those "brought up out of their graves," have bodies composed of "bones, "sinews," flesh," and that "the skin covered them above." We have also seen that they are "restored to their perfect frame"-their perfect form-that they are spiritual bodies," "immortal," "incorruptible," and "can die no more," and that the spirits and bodies of the resurrected can never be divided, and we have already seen that Jesus was the pattern, as also the pledge of the resurrection. Christ took the same body he laid down-a corporeal body. His disciples at first did not believe it, however, for when the women who saw him testified that they had seen him, "their words seemed to them as idle tales." (Luke 24: 10). But our Savior soon dispelled their doubts on that point, for he soon after appeared unto the eleven, and some others, as they were assembled at Jerusalem, and were conversing about the matter.

"And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and said unto them, Peace be unto you. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. And he said unto them, Why are you troubled, and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands, and my feet, that it is I, myself. Handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have. When he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and feet."—Luke 24: 35-39.

Doubtless the amazed and wondering disciples examined, with mingled sorrow and, delight, the traces of the cruel nails with which his hands and feet were torn, and as they "handle" him, make careful inquiry for the spear thrust in His side. What a scene! The smiting, the scourging, the terrors of the cross, the earthquake, and the pall of darkness, the burial, the Roman guard at the tomb, the three days of mourning and despair-how vividly and thrillingly must these have passed in review to the minds of the disciples as they feasted their gaze upon their risen Redeemer! Death had been vanquished; the grave invaded, and its lawful captive delivered; victory had been secured by the victim and "captivity led captive!" Reader, can you, by faith, see the hands, the feet, the side, of that crucified and risen Savior? And do you realize that all this shame, this suffering, was endured by Him for you? that here, at these cruel, gaping wounds, poured forth that precious blood by which our guilt is cleansed, and we are saved?

Jesus often appeared to his disciples, "to whom also he showed himself alive after his sufferings by many infalliable proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God."—Acts 1: 3.

Paul says:

"For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures; and that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve; after that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time."—I Cor. 15: 3-8.

Peter says:

"Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly; not to all the people but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even unto us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead."—Acts 10: 40, 41.

Here then is a literal body of flesh and bones, in the person of Jesus, raised from the dead by the power of the Spirit. But Jesus had not yet appeared in his glory. He ascends from the Mount of Olives to His Father's throne, and not long after His ascension, Stephen, who was then being stoned to death by the persecuting Jews, "looked up steadfastiy into heaven and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God."—Acts 7: 55.

7: 55.

And Paul testifies that "when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." (Heb. 1: 3). For the Lord had said unto him, "Sit on my right hand until I make thing enemies thy footstool."—verse 12.

thine enemies thy footstool."—verse 13.

Of His personal appearance after He ascended to his Father we have but a limited account. Probably we would not be able to comprehend it if it were fully described to us. John says he saw him in His glory, when on the Isle of Patmos, which was about sixty-three years after His ascension. He describes His appearance thus:

"I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; and, what thou seest write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea. And I turned to see from whence the voice came that spake to me; and being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and hairs were white like wool, and white as snow, and his eyes were as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice is the sound of many waters, . . . and his countenance was as the sun shining in his strength."-Rev. 1: 10-16

In this last quotation we have a most vivid description of our Savior's personal glory. It is far beyond human conception; and after it has been given us, the weak mind of man fails to appreciate it in all its fulness, for the Spirit alone can enable us fully to comprehend it. Pause and consider it well; and then know, if you are saved in celestial glory, you will have just such a body, with the same glory.

Paul says:

"Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his most glorious body."—Phil. 3: 20, 21.

Again he says:

"When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 4.

John says:

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—I John 3:2.

This is an engaging, encouraging and a glorious hope. As the very same elements of which the unattractive charcoal is composed is made glorious in the beautiful, brilliant diamond, so the elements of which our weak, vile, corruptible bodies are composed, are made indescribably glorious in the celestial resurrection. John says: "Every men that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he [Christ] is pure."

WHERE ARE THE SPIRITS OF THE DEAD BETWEEN DEATH AND THE RESURRECTION?

The Spirits of the righteous are in paradise, or "Abraham's bosom," which is in the presence of Christ, and is a state of peace, "comfort," and joy; while on the other hand, the spirits of the wicked are "turned into hell"—the "prison"—a place and state of punishment, of "torment," from whence they can not come until the time of their resurrection. Hell is always represented as being "beneath," and is probably in the central part of our earth.

Some have represented that hell and paradsse are one and the same place; but this is neither reasonable nor Scriptural. When the wicked rich man "died and was buried," he went to hell. "And in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torments, and saw Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Luke 16: 28.

"And Abraham said, son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus, evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And besides all this, between us and you, there is a great gulf fixed; so that they who would pass from hence to you, can not; neither can they pass to us that would come from thence."—16: 30, 31.

By this we learn that one was fully conscious of his comfort, and the other of his torment; and further, that they did not mingle one with the other, but were positively debarred from going to and from each other. And in verses 32 and 33, we learn that however much the wicked desired to communicate with the living, they could not do so, neither would the righteous do so for them. It was contrary to God's order. In connection with the above, the following passages cited show the place and state of the spirits of the wicked: Isa. 24: 21, 22; Ps. 9: 17; Ezek. 32: 18-32; Luke 12: 4; and the following show the place and state of the righteous: Rev. 2: 7; 2 Cor. 12: 4; Luke 23: 44; 2 Cor. 5: 6-8; Phil. 1: 23; Ps. 116: 15. The Book of Mormon fully corroborates the above teachings, and renders them quite plain:

"O how great the goodness of our God, who prepareth the way for our escape from the grasp of this awful monster; yea, that monster, death and hell, which I call the death of the body, and also the death of the spirit. And because of the way of deliverance of our God, the Holy One of Israel, this death, of which I have spoken, is the temporal, shall deliver up its dead: which death is the grave. And this death of which I have spoken, which is the spiritual death, shall deliver up its dead; which spiritual death is hell; wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits, and the grave must deliver up its captive bodies, and the bodies and the spirits of men will be restored. one to the other, and it is by the power of the resurrection of the Holy One of Israei.

"O how great the plan of our God! For on the other hand, the paradise of God must deliver up the spirits of the righteous, and the grave deliver up the body of the righteous; and the spirit and the body is restored to itself again, and all men become incorruptible, and immortal, and they are living souls, having a perfect knowledge like unto us in the flesh; save it be that our knowledge shall be perfect; wherefore we shall have a perfect knowledge of all our guilt, and our uncleanness, and our nakedness; and the righteous shall have a perfect knowledge of their enjoyment, and their righteousness, being clothed with purity, yea, even with the robe of righteousness."—2 Nephi 6: 4, 5.

"Now concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection. Behold, it has been made known unto me, by an angel, that the spirits of all men, as soon as they are departed from this mortal body; yea the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life. And then shall it come to pass the spirits of those who are righteous, are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise; a state of rest; a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles, and from all care, and sorrow, &c. And then shall it come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea, who are evil; for behold, they have no part nor portion of the Spirit of the Lord; for behold, they choose evil works, rather than good; therefore the spirit of the devil did enter into them, and take possession of their house; and these shall be cast into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth; and this because of their own iniquity; being led captive by the will of the devil. Now this is the state of the souls of the wicked; yea in, darkness, and a state of awful, fearful, looking for, of the fiery indignation of the wrath of God upon them; thus they remain in this state, as well as the righteous in paradise, until the time of their resurrection."-Alma 19.

We are often asked, if in the intermediate state, and in the resurrection, we will retain a recollection of friends and former friendships, etc. It would be folly to think we will not. Both Lazarus and the rich man were fully conscious of the scenes they had witnessed on earth; Mary at once recognized the voice of Jesus, after his resurrection; and his affection was no less for her than when in natural life. In the resurrection we shall know as we are known, and see as we are seen. (1 Cor. 13:9, 12.)

We have every reason to believe, that

We have every reason to believe, that those who have passed into paradise have as ardent love for their dear friends, and for their race, and for Christ and God, as when on earth; aye, and far greater; and that they have a yearning anxiety for our welfare here, and hereafter; and that as many as are commanded or permitted of God, minister for us at times, though we may not be conscious of it.

Joseph the Martyr taught that many of our forefathers who are saved, are now angels, ministering for the salvation of man, and that "their bowels yearn over us," and that "at times they are pained with our actions." But mark, these are the righteous. The spirits of the wicked are in "hell," (Ps. 9: 17,)or "the prison," (Ps. 3: 19, 20,) and are therefore prevented from returning to communicate with the living. The souls that were under the altar were fully conscious of the scenes on earth through which they had passed, and of the fact that they had been persecuted and martyred for Jesus, "and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, doest thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?"—Rev. 6: 10.

No doubt the mental—spiritual—powers of the righteous are greatly augmented after death; and that their capabilities, and enjoyments, are vastly beyond what they could be in this life.

THE following item we take from a late Chicago Times. It will be read with interest by the Saints.

In the Book of Mormon, (2 Nephi 7:2), is a prediction in respect to affairs in America at the time of, and after the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, in which occurs the following:

"But behold, this land, saith God, shall be a land of thine [the "brethren" of Jacob. Ed.] inheritance, and the Gentiles shall be blessed upon the land. And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles, and there shall be no kings upon the land who shall raise up unto the Gentiles; and I will fortify this land against all other nations, and he that fighteth against Zion shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish; for I, the Lord, the king of heaven, will be their king, and I will be a light unto them forever that hear my words."

Brazil, since 1824, has been a hereditary and constitutional monarchy, an empire having four powers in the State,—the legislative, executive, judicial, and the "moderating" power, or royal prerogative The senators and representatives were chosen every four years by the whole of the free population except minors, monks and servants. The executive power resided in the emperor, assisted by his ministers and a council of state. From this it will be seen that Brazil differed but little from a republic, except in name. But by the decree of heaven, even that vestige of monarchial government must cease for God wills that America "shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles," and that "there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles.'

In this connection we may remind our readers of the speedy, tragic downfall of the empire sought to be established in Mexico by the kings of France and Austria in 1864-66. Disaster and defeat marked the course of that movement from the time Maximilian departed, April 14th, 1864 for Mexico at the instance of Napoleon III, till he was publicly executed at Queretaro, June 19th, 1867, by the authority of the Republic of Mexico under the intrepid Juarez, its native Mexican Presdent.

All America has caught the inspiration of the divine idea, expressed in the immortal Declaration of Independence, where it says that governments among men derive "their just powers from the consent of the governed;" and that truth, like an all-glorious sun-burst, is flooding all kingdoms and nations abroad with the blessed light of human freedom and the inherent, inalienable rights of man, so that all may hope that soon, not only in Europe, but in all the earth abroad, mankind will have no king save "the king of heaven." Present conditions indicate that the prophecy we quote from Jacob is in process of speedy fulfilment.

NO KINGS IN ALL AMERICA.

When Dom Pedro, long emperor of Brazil, sailed from Rio Janeiro to Lisbon, the home of his fathers, the last throne on the western hemisphere tottered to its fall.

Certain portions of this most favored division of the globe, the land opened by the genius of Columbus to the knowledge of Europe and all civilization, acknowledge the sway of a personal monarchy. The most important of these are Canada and Cuba, but neither is hampered by its allegiance to old world kingdoms, and Canada particularly, though it is subjected to the humiliation of a viceroy at its capital, is emancipated from the payment of tribute to the older land. Indeed, it is almost as free as if it were a republic. When the time shall come for Canada's shaking off England, as come it will, the revolution will be as bloodless as that which in the largest, most prosperous, and stable of the South American countries deposed Dom Pedro and set up a republican form of government.

Only a little more than a century ago there wasn't in all the new world an independent civilized government. This mighty hemisphere and the peoples that had gathered here from the days of Columbus were subject to Spain, and France, and England. Everywhere regal authority. Everywhere a demand for tribute in the king's name. Almost all of Central and South America was in the grasp of Spain, once the most powerful nation of the globe, more aggressive, more enterprising, more grasping than even the England of to-day. The entering wedge of disintegration was the American revolution. The little leaven of republicanism has at length leavened the whole lump. From the confines of Canada—which is a republic in everything but name and could cast off England to-morrow if she would—to the farthermost point of Terra del Fuego there is not in this hemisphere a crown, a throne, or a vestige of the divine right of kings. All have been swept by the board. The great result has not been reached without tremendous upheavals, through awful trials and much bloodshed. Dictators have taken the place of vicerovs. Regal power has been exercised by patriots who denounced kings. In Mexico emperors have arisen, and reigned, and fallen. None of the republics south of us has been so firmly established and so habituated to order that repeated revolutions have not been easy of accomplishment, but year by year the people have grown stronger in their capacity for self-government. The example of the great republic of North America has been of vast importance in shaping the destiny of the other countries of the hemisphere. If it had not survived and flourished Brazil would hardly have ventured the experiment of dethroning a popular monarch who had succeeded in maintaining a stable govern-forming the chief political divisions of the Americas and note the vastness of the empire. Compared with it Europe shrivels into insignificance. And every one of these states, Canada excepted, is a republic:

Run through the following list of countries

In all America there is no king. Within little more than a century he has been banished, obliterated root and branch. Within another century there will probably not be a king in all Europe. Whether the human race shall be better for this emancipation will depend upon itself.

DEDICATION AT CRESCENT.

WE have never witnessed a better feeling by the Saints and their friends and neighbors than was exhibited and enjoyed on the 24th instant at Crescent City, Iowa, on the occasion of the dedication of the neat, new church at that place. services at 11 a.m. and 2:30 p. m. were blessed by a large degree of the Holy Spirit and all seemed cheered and joyful. A goodly number of the ministry were present, and we called to our aid elders Hansen, Peak, Davis, Carlisle and Smith. Brn. Peak and Davis, by our advice, will probably spend a few days holding services in the new chapel ere they go on to their field in Minnesota. Prospects for the future welfare of the church in and about Crescent are good.

Both there and in Council Bluffs and Omaha the opportunities to preach the word of life are unsurpassed, and those in charge should see at once that they are well and wisely occupied. We held service Sunday night (the 24th inst.) in Council Bluffs, also the two evenings following, and we were requested earnestly by the branch officers to see that a capable minister is sent to labor actively there in gospel work.

Western Iowa never offered better inducements than now to the worthy worker to preach the gospel of Christ. May the Lord of the harvest send forth efficient, spiritual laborers into that field at an early time. These are stirring times, and all around are signs full of excellent promise for the Church of God.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

From Manchester, England, November 11th, Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., writes: "We held our quarterly reunion meeting at Leeds, on the sixth of last month. Had a very successful time from a spiritual point of view, and I believe much good has been done thereby."

SPECIAL REQUEST.

IT is necessary that those who have occasion to write the Herald Office should address all matter of a business nature to David Dancer, the business manager. All matter designed for publication in the Herald such as communications, letters and selections should be addressed to the Herald editors. The business and editorial departments are entirely separate, and neither have the time to attend to the work of the other. Please remember this when writing that precious time be not wasted, and that order be had.

All items designed for publication in the Home Column, Autumn Leaves and Hope should be addressed to their editor—Sr. M. Walker. But all remittances, changes of address and other purely business matters concerning them should be addressed to D. Dancer.

Writers are requested to be reasonably brief and to prepare their writings as correctly as possible. This done, we will do our best with their manuscript. "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In this issue will be found important extracts from the official report of the Governor of Utah, Arthur L. Thomas, to the Secretary of the Interior. The Governor has long been a resident of Utah, was for years secretary of that territory, has been a member of the Utah Commission, and was appointed to his present position by President Benj. Harrison. He is a first class citizen, an honorable and efficient officer, and an upright Christian gentleman. With those well acquainted with him his report will carry great weight; and while it is quite possible that his views on some points may not be found thoroughly correct, it is probable, nevertheless, that in the main they are quite reliable. Many of our readers will be deeply interested in the facts and views and recommendations which the Governor presents.

In Herald editorial in the issue for November 16th, page 742, in fifth line of third paragraph, the word "not" was omitted. It should read, "In what way God may have designed to preserve the church by the laws of the United States in accordance to which laws it was governed in its organization we may not comprehend."

We acknowledge the receipt of the Brooklyn edition of the New York World of the 18th inst, which contains an account of the World's expedition to the ancient American city of Palenque. As we discover no new items of particular import we omit publication.

The attention of delinquent subscribers to Autumn Leaves is called to the notice of Bro. John Scott, the foreman of the mechanical and mailing department. It will be found in our miscellaneous column.

We acknowledge the receipt of the Denver, Colorado, Times of November 15th; the Boston, Mass., Herald of the 10th, and the Valley Virginian, of the 21st, published at Staunton, Virginia. The Herald contains quite a fair and lengthy account of the faith of the Saints in Boston. The Virginian denounces in strong terms the meanness of some persons who "egged" some of the residents for attending the meetings of Brn. Shinn and Moler at Mt. Sidney, Virginia.

What is the significance of the clipping below? What has called these chief dignitaries of the Utah Church to make a lengthy journey in the beginning of winter, to that cold, desolate and far away country, Winnipeg? Time, the revealer of secrets, may explain by-and-bye.

MORMON VISITORS IN WINNIPEG.

Winnipeg, Man. Nov 18th.—A number of leading Mormons from Salt Lake City are at present visiting the Mormon colony near McLeod. The party of visitors include President Woodruff of the Mormon Church, and Mrs. Woodruff, George Q. Cannon, late territorial representative for Utah in the American congress, and Mrs. Cannon, Brigham Young, Jr., and a Mr. Smith, [probably Joseph F.], a nephew of the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Can a person who acts as bartender in a saloon be regarded as a member of the church in good standing?

Ans.—We think not; for a person to be free from censure must not only do no evil, but do nothing which tends to evil.

Mothers' Kome Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"He findeth not who seeks his own; The soul is lost that's saved alone."

LOOK UPON THIS PICTURE AND THEN UPON THAT.

THE letter from the wife of an elder, from which we gave an extract lately, has, as we anticipated, struck a chord and produced vibrations in many a heart. Yesterday's mail brought us a letter from a friend whom we have known ever since we came into the church. Now her soft brown hair is interlaced with silver threads and time has ploughed deep furroughs on cheek and brow, where then the rose and the lily vied for each other. She was then the mother of children who are now married and have homes and families of their own. In regard to her daughters' marrying elders she says: "I wish, Sr. Walker, that I could feel as you do about it, but I can not. I do not want my girls to suffer as I have. Everything in the way of poverty, hard work and loneliness, is the portion of an elder's wife. Add to this the care of a family, the fault finding upon every hand and so much expected of her and her children. . I have just been reading the sisters letters in the Herald. How I pity her and the little girls, too. Poor little one, I know just how she feels about it. Tell her to be good and learn to work real well and she can soon earn herself a new dress. . . . I do not think it is right to in any way speak of a child's hat or clothes as being cheap.

was said to one of my children not long since. I know the hat is cheap, but I am trying to pay off old debts and it is slow work, but I am gaining on them, and so we must dress cheaply until it is done. But this is not interesting to you, so forgive me for troubling you with the cares and vexations of my life."

It is well at all times to view things from every available standpoint and in every possible light which can be reflected upon them, but especially is this the case when the matter under consideration involves eternal consequences. As Saints of God we talk of celestial glory and expect to inherit it, but it is, or should be, a solemn thought to each one that those who do inherit a celestial glory must abide a celestial law. We are followers of Christ (if indeed we are not deceived or deceiving ourselves). How then is it that we overlook the first requirement made of those who would follow him; namely: "Let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily." Following the Savior, as his life is recorded by the evangelist, we find that it was one life-long sacrifice, crowned with a cruel death, and let us, when we have fully taken in and comprehended this fact, remember the declaration: "He that climbeth up any other way is a thief and a robber." Thieves and robbers will not dwell with Christ, therefore it follows that if Christ dwells in a celestial glory, those who dwell with him will have done celestial works even as he did: "daily."

Faith, repentance, baptism and laying on of hands are but the gate opening upon the narrow path leading to everlasting life. Upon this path we must walk from day to day, and each morning we are to take up our cross and follow him.

Let us do this in perfect, in loving submission to his will, for if we do we will find his words verified—"My yoke is easy and my burden light." We have proven God true to his word many and many a time, and if we can not trust him in this, how can we trust him with our soul's salvation? Has he not done enough for us to win our love and confidence? Surely we treat no earthly friend so ill as to doubt him without cause when we have proved them true a thousand times.

Let me give you a simple illustration: "When my girls were going to school there would always be a heavy day's work to be done on Saturday. I would frequently say to them: "Now, girls, there is a big day's work to be done today, but if you will just let mamma plan and you do just as she tells you, we will get along splendidly and be through before night." when they conceded to this arrangement we never failed to have a pleasant time and always finished the work in good season; but when for some cause either one of them felt disinclined to do this and wanted to do their own planning and work in their own way, the result was always delay and many times failure with no end of needless worry and vexation, for, to constrain obedience where it ought to be lovingly rendered is always an unpleasant task.

If we want peace and success to crown our efforts, let there be but one will—God's will—and we be found working in harmony with that. It is loving and infallible and will lead to perfect results, and when our confidence, our love is abundant, we will do it cheerfully, willingly, gladly, and, what is yet more difficult, we will suffer it to be done in the same manner.

Sisters, it is because the plane upon which we are living is too low, that we do not enter into the sanctuary of peace. We are out of the way —the narrow way—which leads to him, and many of us instead of denying self have wrapped up a large share of it carefully and bound it to the cross we take up from day to day. This is why the burden we carry is so heavy and the yoke galling. Let us love God supremely and then, no service done for him is grievous, but in that service be found our joy and delight. Resign fully and unhesitatingly the things of this world. God's service demands this, because if we do not resign these we can not obtain eternal life. The heart will be where the treasure is. We will love whom we serve. Oh for that love which will enable us to say, "As for me and mine, we will serve God!"

Is it because God is to receive honor and glory, that we must pass through the fires? Nay, verily! If the dross is not consumed, how can the gold be purified?

We recall the words of a song by which in the midst of care perplexity and sore trials, we were many times cheered and comforted. One couplet is like this:

"For as gold is tried by fire, So a heart must be tried by pain."

You have, we doubt not, in the course of your life each one of you seen the child of luxury, ease and folly take a seat of idleness and dishonor; and you have seen the child of poverty, privation and toil, bidden to come up higher. Why then should we murmur or rebel, when we know that it is in this eternal fitness of things that it should be so. God leads us in that way because it is the way to eternal life and there is no other way. Do we want eternal life—a home where God and the Savior are, then let us be willing to pay the price, to obtain it upon God's terms, for we will never get it upon any other.

This is a probation and God is trying us to know whether we are worthy. We read that when Christ reigns, some are to reign with him as priests and kings. There is a valid reason why Christ is to be anointed above all others even as there was for his being found worthy to take the book and open the seals, and dear sisters, if ever we inherit eternal life there will also be a valid reason for it. The kings and priests who reign with him, will reign because they are like him, and we will inherit because we have followed him, and followed, bearing our cross. will be no favorites, no exceptions, for the God we serve is a just God, therefore if he requires one to pass through the furnace, he will require it of all, just in proportion as we need it. It is folly in us to measure the justice of God in a balance made by the hands of man. To love him, because he first loved us; to serve and obey him, because we shall by so doing work out the greatest good for ourself; to trust him implicitly, because he can not make mistakes, is our duty and should be our chief joy.

Is the way hard? Let us say to you, sister, the service of self is far harder. We have tried it and affirm only what we know. Looking back now over our past life, how many years we count as lost—utterly lost! None do we contemplate with any sense of pleasure, only those given to the service of God. Let us keep our eyes fixed steadily upon the goal we desire to gain and let our desire to reach it be so earnest that we would prefer to be just what Lazarus was and gain it, rather than live as the rich man lived, and fail to reach it.

HAVE THOU THY WAY.

"Have Thou Thy way with me, O God! Although I beg my own; Heed not the body's noisy cry, But the soul's undertone.

Have Thou Thy way with me, O God!
This is my spirit's choice.
Though stubborn greed of present good
Drowns all with deafening voice.

Have Thou Thy way with me, O God! Nor let me dread the proof Thine unguessed way may put me to For some divine behoof.

Have Thou Thy way with me, O God!
Until my life attest
That just the will to do Thy will
Is, of all gifts, the best.

Have Thou Thy way with me, O God! And, O my soul, take care To have thy daily attitude In keeping with thy prayer!"—Sel.

Faith is more than reason, but faith is not unreasonable. 'It is the most reasonable thing in the world,' says Mark Hopkins, 'to believe that God, being what he is, will do as he promised to do', and Jeremy Taylor suggests, that 'it is impossible for that man to despair, who remembers that his Helper is omnipotent.' An unshaken confidence in God is, to the Christian believer, a reasonable hope."

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Sr. Polly A. Morris, Sweet Home, Oregon, requests your prayers in her behalf that God may be pleased to restore her to health.

Sr. Mary C. Hannah, of Los Angeles, California, requests your faith and prayers for her mother, Emily Brown, and also her little babe which is suffering with the dropsy.

Sr. Rebecca Humphrey, of Massachusetts, requests your faith and prayers, that if it is his righteous will God may restore her to health.

OAKDALE, Neb., Nov. 17th.

Dear Sister Frances: - While reading the letter in the Home Column in Herald of November 16th written to you by "a sister," and what you had to say in connection with it, the very depths of my sympathy was stirred, and my mind went back over some similar experiences of my own such as the sister mentions in regard to her little daughter's dress. Yes indeed it is thought by the majority (it would seem) that this is a small matter; but let me ask all who have scarcely ever known a want of the comforts of life to mentally picture such sad and lonely scenes as the sister mentions, putting themselves in her place, is it a small thing, the faithful, helpful husband and father gone to perform his labor of love as a minister for Christ, leaving behind him the dearest objects of life in the hands of God and humanity. But alas for the human help. We are able to bear this testimony of the faithful watchcare of God: when all earthly help seemed so deficient and our hands were limp with fatigue, our heart aching with the sadness of our surroundings, and future prospects so far as the comforts of this world are concerned, God's blessings have ever been ours to enjoy. The sweet whisperings of His Holy Spirit reviving our desponding hopes and enabling us to realize that we were not making our sacrifice in vain. Oh, sisters, you whose companions are in the ministry, take courage. Read and reread the parable of Lazarus and the rich man. It is but human to feel the sacrifice and trial it naturally is of being an L. D. S. elder's wife, but we believe and testify that God is the author of this work. If this is a fact then your reward is sure. But I must say it has seemed that the majority of the laity of the church poorly realized how to sympathize with the elders' families. How keenly we remember of going into an assembly of the Saints and meeting the happy faces of unbroken families; groups where the husbands were tenderly helping the wives with their little ones, of their taking seats in church with the affectionate husband and father who responded to the needs of his little flock, while our helper, our companion and protector, where was he? Oh, he had only gone for a year or fifteen months on a mission, that was all!

How was it about your's and the little one's comforts? We answer, so far as God could help us we were abundantly supplied, but if you mean in regard to our wardrobe, we must confess we sometimes felt the blush come to our cheek when coming in contact with Saints so amply supplied while our own supply seemed so scant.

I often think if the law of tithing was lived up to by all of the church, there would be no such sad feelings as these on the part of elders' families, I mean in regard to temporal things, and the church members would be far more prosperous in all their business pursuits. I can not believe God ever called men to the ministry because he wanted to make paupers of their families. I believe God delights in the knowledge of the ministers' families being made comfortable, and it gives cheer and renewed energy to the elder who can take the parting hand of his wife and know she and their little ones are going to be amply supplied. Is the church afraid to take God at his word and prove him and see if he will not keep his word to her? It sometimes looks to me as though she was. But thanks to the Giver of the temporal law, there is once in a while one able to rise up and testify he has proven God and found him true to his word. In what way, somebody asks? Why I have observed the law of tithing and I am blessed in basket and in store. Yours in the interest of Zion's cause,

SR. C. H. D.

Dear Herald:-While looking over your columns to-day, after returning from church, I felt my indebtedness to you for the many consoling thoughts you have brought to my mind. It causes my heart to rejoice to read over the letters from my sisters. Although we may never meet in the flesh, yet we have the promise, if we are faithful, of meeting in a better world than this. When I hear of the many trials some of you have had to endure, and who, like myself, have been led to become submissive and say, "God's will be done and not mine," it makes me rejoice. I too have had much to endure and great cause to mourn. I once had a family of six little children, all bright and promising, as youth could expect, to live long upon earth. But oh, how sad when I tell you how the angel of death came to our door, and took them one by one until he had taken all. You can but imagine my feelings when the last one was taken from my once happy home. I could not hear those little pattering feet on the floor, no one to kneel by mamma's side and say their little prayers, or say "Good night, mamma." All were still and cold in death. Oh, where could I go to find peace or a balm for my poor broken heart! Dear readers, I could not find it anywhere, only in and through that loving One who suffered this great chastisement to come upon me. It was in him I found peace and rest to my soul. Why? Because I have had many precious promises that if I was faithful I should meet them all again where parting is no more; and I want to say I know this work is true and it will stand while all else must fail. Pray for me when it is well with you. From your sister in the one faith,

MRS. L. E. SOUTHWICK.

BEATTIE, Kans., Nov. 2d.

Dear Sisters:—I have long thought of writing, for I have a testimony of this work, and I know for myself. I feel to praise God for his mercy to me and that he has spared me to live to embrace this gospel. It is now about sixteen years since I came into the church, and if I could have lived near the Saints I would have been happy. I ask the prayers of the sisters, and of all Saints that I may be healed. I have catarrh of the head and throat. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain your sister,

E. HIGHTOWER.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Strang sends this to the Home Column. "A cure for dropsy. Put two heaping table-spoon-fuls of cream of tartar into a bowl, pour a pint of boiling water on it, then stir it, and let it settle until it is cold. Drink all the water when going to bed, but leave the sediment in the bottom, and pour more hot water on it to drink the next night. Take a dose of jalap in the morning. It will carry all the water of from the body. Repeat the dose of jalap the second morning. I have never seen this fail."

SILVER HILL, Ark., Nov. 15th.

Bro. Blair:—My health is still poor but I am doing the best I can under the circumstances. I have had twenty-one chills since the first of July. I would have left the mission some time ago, but with the continual pleading to hear the gospel, coming from every quarter, I could not leave. Trusting that I might regain my health I have continued on, and though weak in body the good Lord has blessed me with his Spirit in declaring the gospel to the people. I have held a series of meetings of Coal Hill, Benton and Stuttgart and have baptized some at all three of the above named places. I am now engaged here.

The church here is in a poor condition spiritually, but bids fair for a revival, of that divine influence that gladens the heart and enlarges the understanding of the honest in heart everywhere. I think the prospects are good for the Saints here to revive and a work be done that will be lasting. They are a good, generous hearted people as far as I am able to judge I am taking great pains to teach each one their duty, and can truly say that all seem to appreciate my feeble efforts. The troubles that have existed here so long are of a trivial nature and I think can be easily settled.

As far as I have been over this state it bids fair for an ingathering of souls. Brother J. D. Ervin has opened up some places of interest where it bids fair for a harvest in the future. The weather is cool and considerable rain has fallen which is very much against our holding meetings in this country. It is also hard on me, the condition my health is in. I shall do what I can to get things in order then work my way to the north and work there if able to do so.

May the good Lord bless all his people, is my prayer. Saints, pray for me.

In bonds,

I. N. ROBERTS.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 17th.

Bro. R. S. Salyards:-At the request of Bro. George H. Hilliard I went from the scene of the Smith-Throgmorton debate to Tunnel Hill, and began work October 29th. The situation was not very cheering, but the command to labor in faith and hope with energy was remembered. The crowds on several occasions over-ran aisles and other available space, rostrum included. The interest grew, reached and was held at what might be properly termed, intense. Bro. Hilliard joined me after the first week. We then held day as well as evening services, all being well and some very largely attended; and though we had a number of rainy times not an hour was missed. Baptism was deferred three days because of bad weather and additional candidates when on November 9th eight were baptized a large number being present, and on the 10th another was buried with Christ in baptism, and still more present.

If any difference, the day services under Bro. Hilliard's ministrations on duties of Saints including the temporal law were fraught with the most spiritual power. We do not remember ever facing the unseen though clearly felt powers of darkness so continuously and long as during two weeks there. Among the outward demonstrations of it were the throwing of a large stone through one of the doors after service one night, the moving and hiding of Mr. A. Kelley's team another, while it was on constant duty in other senses all the while. We recognized some of the agencies at sight before a single demonstration had been made.

When needed most Bro. Hilliard was under an old and peculiar affliction that yielded only at the last point; and to add to all else, as he took the stand at II a. m. on the 10th tidings came of a son severely ill. In the opening prayer we felt that all would be well and so assured him, and since returning home he has so written us.

The first candidate for baptism was Sr. Martha E. Kelley, cousin to Brn. E. L. and W. H. Kelley, who is as promising in woman's sphere as they in man's, if spared. Sr. Martha had long felt the necessity of obeying the gospel, but peculiar hindrances had environed her and now that the dread disease, consumption, had almost completed its task her position was peculiar indeed, as obedience might be interpreted as an act done when all possibility of deferring it was over. Strength was given her in answer to prayer each day so that for three weeks she attended all but three services, being hindered then by rain. On the night before her baptism she saw herself in dream on an old-house crumbling and almost down, where she sat, and possibly one other spot firm. From this she went with the writer down a slope where, in the minds of most surrounding, disaster awaited her. She felt calm and that all was well. Though naturally frail and now but a shadow as compared with the other candidates, her calmness over all the others in baptism was apparent to all, none of whom faltered or made an unseemly move. This plain and striking dream she saw in its true light. We made a special case in fasting and prayer of Sr. Martha's condition, and when the hour for administration came were much blessed, and received the witness of the Spirit that if her faith fail not she should be restored to health. We therefore ask the ministry, Prayer Union, and other Saints to remember her.

On November 13th a Sunday School was organized with Bro. Wm. A. Kelley in charge, which will be watched with deep interest. That cast of intellect found where seven out of nine of one family are the most successful school teachers of a locality can not fail in the Sunday School: it is simply a matter of the motto we saw in a school room there: "Never say fail; try, try again." The seven school teachers referred to are Sr. Martha, her brothers, and a sister. The realization of the late work were mentioned as surpassing any other occasion for many years, and since Brn. W. H. Kelley and J. W. Gillen had lately ministered there, Bro. Hilliard and myself felt complimented as well as highly favored of God. Bro. Robert Ouldcott of Metropolis, Illinois, was with us and lent good cheer and courage all around. He said that in thirty years his cup of joy had not been quite so full. He with others repaired the church building somewhat inside and out, underpinning among the rest. It was both pleasant and profitable to labor with Bro. Hilliard.

En route to this city a leading Baptist who attended the late discussion volunteered the statement that Elder Throgmorton failed to sustain his canon of Scripture, but that he took the fort on the Book of Mormon; to which we rejoined that in the first a just estimate was made, and as for the second Bro. Smith's arguments were unscathed. I was then asked if Hilliard and Elder Throgmorton would ever debate, to which I replied that it was not likely, as a splendid opportunity to so arrange was passed by at the close of the debate referred to, where the (to us) come off, "That where the Baptist brethren would demand it, it would be seen to where harm was likely to be done by the L. D. S." was used. "Wit the mother of invention" has its counterpart in "necessity the mother of such expedients." It is sometimes hard to be patient, but it is more apparent all the while that those who have the truth can do so, for it will prevail.

Brethren of the Fifth Quorum of Elders will each be mailed circular letters this week. The late work away from any publishing centres has delayed it. Please excuse us for once being tardy.

In bonds,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

LAMONI, Iowa, Nov. 26th.

Editors of the Herald:—I shall not undertake to report all my labors since I last wrote for publication, not because I have done so much, but because (1) it has been quite a long time; and (2), it is not necessary.

I have gone where I thought I was most needed, and have at least made an effort to do what I could for the advancement of the good cause. Have been blest and tried, comforted and afflicted. These things are common to us all; but we feel our portion more keenly, and hence are apt to think that our trials are greater that those of others. One thing is quite clear; it is our privilege and duty to learn as we move along; and although the lessons learned bring grief as well as joy, yet the ultimate will be the enjoyment of solid peace in God, if we love him and abide in his truth.

On October 29th, according to previous agreement with Bro. W. W. Blair, I left home for Thurman, (Plum Hollow,) Iowa, to continue a series of meetings which were to be introduced by him in the new church, and of which you have already heard. I arrived on the grounds on Thursday morning in time to say "good bye" to Bro. M. H. Forscutt, who had been called to assist Bro. Blair. Bro. Henry Kemp, in charge of Fremont district, as a "field," also president of the district, was on the grounds too, ready for duty, as usual.

On account of rain and snow, we were not permitted to commence our work till Saturday evening. We continued for nine consecutive evenings, including two Sunday's. The weather was beautiful; the attendance all that could be expected under the circumstances, interest fair, and both continued to increase till the close. The measles had broken out in the immediate neighborhood, and, as we learned, kept many away. However, the meetings were a success. All seemed to be satisfied, and we felt assured that our work was accepted by our Heavenly Father. Bro. Kemp did part of the preaching and rendered valuable assistance in other ways.

In this series of meetings were represented four of the leading quorums of the church, viz:

First Presidency, Twelve, Seventy and High Priests. So that if success depends upon the amount of priesthood authority brought into requisition, there can be no question about the result of these meetings. But right here I will risk the expression of a conviction which has been with me for years. I do so with ill feeling to none, and a desire for the general good. When the respective duties of different church officers are better understood, and there is a corresponding willingness to act in harmony with the law and order of God as laid down in the books, there will be a great saving of time and money to the church, neither of which have we any to spare. To this end may God move upon his people with the Spirit of wisdom and revelation!

Tuesday, November 12th, found us in Macedonia, ready to respond as best we could to a Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us."

Through the intervention of Bro. James M. Kelley of this place, and the kindness of the M. E. Church, we were permitted to occupy their chapel for five evenings, and once on Sunday. The attendance was fair, and with the interest manifested in the expression of our faith, continued to increase till the close. At our last meeting one young man presented himself as a candidate for baptism, and the next day, before leaving for home, another man told me he had made up his mind to obey the gospel. I referred them to Bro. Kemp who was laboring near by, and whose meetings they expected to attend.

Physically, I had a hard struggle while at Macedonia; but spiritually it was a feast. To God be all the glory, for we know He is worthy, and we are safe only when we give it to Him.

It was, I believe, a mutual pleasure to meet two young men who were students at the Fort Madison, Iowa, Academy, at the same time that my brother D. F. and I were attending school at that place. Messrs. Dye and Stempel are their names, and they are both business men of Macedonia. I visited with them, and, from the pulpit, preached to them God's saving truth. I should be glad indeed to learn that they have not heard in vain. May God bless the kind friends who cared for us at Macedonia and Thurman.

The work we so much love is moving, it is true: but not so fast as it would move were we a wiser and better people. "Zion might have been redeemed even now," etc. But why was she not redeemed? Let him that readeth understand. We have made progress, but are not yet out of danger, nor will we be till the composition of the church, the human, becomes more like her Author, the Divine Being, and He whose right it is to reign shall come and take the reins of government into his own hands. My ideas of the work are well expressed in a communication lately received from one of God's noble workers in the field. It reads as follows: "We are having good attendance here, and much interest, but it seems hard to convince them of the necessity of personal obedience. One obstacle in the way is the lax living of some of our members, who seem to be converted to the theory of the ordinances of the gospel, but fail to comprehend the necessity of Christ-like living; converted on the spiritual side of character, but not on the moral side. When we can get the Saints to put into practice the righteousness of the gospel, we can then go to the world with a far greater degree of assurance and power. The existence of this condition of things only shows more plainly the urgency of the ministry being instant in season and out of season." So we shall strive to continue to "rebuke, reprove and exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine;" and we hope and pray for the speedy success and triumph of the truth. In gospel bonds,

Joseph R. Lambert.

COLDWATER, Mich., Nov. 18th.

Editors Saints' Herald:—Our courage is renewed for the great spiritual conflict as the evidences of progress in the good work of the Lord appear all along the line. From all quarters where the field is occupied come joyful tidings—salvation to the obedient—the cause of Zion is onward. And we, too, here "on the sides of the north" are made to rejoice because of the kindly remembrance of our Heavenly Father and his fayor to us.

I had the pleasure of attending the conference of the Northern Michigan district on the 12th and 13th ult., with Bro. E. C. Briggs, and noted a marked advancement in the numbers and spiritual growth of the Saints in attendance. The grace of God in spiritual endowment rested on the Saints during the session, and the testimonies were strong and edifying. The preaching was spiritual, stirring, and seasonable.

Elder Briggs gave much timely, spiritual, and encouraging instruction relating to the work. One of the encouraging features of the work to me, is, quite a number of young preachers were present, who, if studious in the word of the Lord, humble, prayerful and diligent, trustful in God, will yet be hosts in the army of the Lord, and we shall expect good results from their faithful labors.

The Saints of the Juniata branch, having built a neat little house of worship, and desiring it to be dedicated at conference, we by invitation arranged, and attended, delivering the sermon, Bro. Briggs offering the dedicatory prayer. The Saints of the branch met my expenses, on the tour, and I hereby acknowledge and tender obligations.

I had intended to remain longer in the district, but circumstances ordered otherwise, and I came on to my field of labor.

On the 2d and 3d insts. the conference of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district convened here, and was held in the New Saints' chapel just finished, a neat, convenient house, but hardly large enough for conference occasions; and, by the way, I rejoice that the numbers of the Saints are so increasing that our houses of worship are too small to hold them.

Brn. Briggs and Rathbun presided at conference, and the session was spiritual and refreshing. On Sunday, the 3d, the church was dedicated, brethren W. J. Smith, H. Rathbun, E. C. Briggs, L. Scott and myself participating in the exercises as arranged by committee. The Lord was present by the Holy Spirit to own, bless and accept. Marked prayers were offered by Brn. Rathbun and Briggs. Two young persons were baptized during conference. A committee was appointed, consisting of Bishop G. A. Blakeslee, William Lockerby, and Ella Houseman, to consider the propriety and feasibility, conjointly with other committees who may yet be appointed, of holding a Re-union meeting in this mission some time in 1890, asking the co-operation of Saints of Eastern Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Canada West, and all other Saints desiring to join in the enterprise.

Brn. Smith, L. Scott and Rathbun did the preaching for the conference, Bro. Briggs chromatizing in interludes as wisdom seemed to direct.

The church is a brick building twenty-eight by forty, sixteen feet ceiling, with a neat basement, being warmed with the lately invented Boyington heater and registers. The building is a very easy one to speak and sing in, and does credit to the Saints and friends who built it. Most all the children of the Saints have given one dollar each toward the building, and the sisters Mite Society here have devoted two hundred and eighty dollars to it. Truly we may ask, What may not the Saints accomplish in righteousness, where they labor unitedly?

A number of meetings have been held in the new church since conference, and yesterday two more young persons were baptized and confirmed; and so the good work moves on hitherward.

The reception that Bro. Joseph is meeting among those astray from the fold, away on the mountains-the opening of their doors to himreminds me of an open testimony given me some four or five years since when he was there before and was received so coldly. I was riding along alone, in a buggy, thinking of that cold reception. I saw Joseph standing in the presence of vast congregations of those people, and their hearts were so cold that their faces presented a rigid, stony appearance; but as Joseph stood pleading with them, I saw the power of God in or through him touch their flinty countenances, and they were softened. May the Lord open the hearts of the honest wherever the truth is sent, to its reception, is the prayer of

Your co-laborer in the kingdom,

C. Scott.

GRAND BLANC, Mich., Nov. 17th.

Editors of the Herald:—I wish to inform the traveling ministry that we are situated near the F. P. M. depot, in the village of Grand Blanc, and would be pleased to have them call on us and make an opening here. We are ready to assist in getting them a house and we will give them a home as long as they will stay.

Yours in faith,

A. B. Anable.

FREMONT, Neb., Nov. 19th.

Bro. Dancer:—Perhaps some of the Saints had wondered what had become of me, as I have not appeared in the Herald for some time. Well, I still have confidence in the work, but was compelled to leave the field in July because of financial difficulty; as the amount allowed me failed to meet demands. It was quite a trial to me in having to change my plans through the oversight or carelessness of others. I feared that it would shake my confidence, but it has not, thank God; as I have passed through it and am again in the field, and I desire to do what I can for the cause of Christ.

Four were baptized at our late conference at this place and a good time was had. I would be glad to hear from any living in the field assigned me where it is thought good could be done in presenting the word. Address, Box 477, Fremont, Nebraska. In gospel bonds,

W. M. RUMEL.

ELLIOT, Mo., Nov. 19th.

Editors Herald:— There was a little interest created here through the mission and preaching of Bro. M. Turpen of Lamoni, Iowa, some time ago. He was well liked by both Saint and sinner in the way he divided the words of the gospel. The Saints are looking for his return in a short time. One was baptized while he was here. He also ordained Bro. Thomas D. Williams to the office of a priest and he has baptized two more since Bro. Turpen returned home. A number of others have united with the Renick branch whose hearts are in the work of God. There are also a goodly number of Saints at Higbee, Missouri, six miles from Elliott. They are waiting for Bro. Turpen's return, that he might set them in order.

O, that the Saints might so live that others would see their good works and follow in the good old path, the gospel of Christ.

Yours in the faith,

THOMAS LILLY.

SALTCOATS, near Glasgow, Scotland.

Dear Bro. Dancer:—The Herald and Autumn Leaves reach me regularly here and are my close companions wherever I go. I have not yet come into any town or district where any of the members of our church hold meetings. Bro. Dewsnup kindly supplied me with addresses of some of the elders, most of whom are in the counties of Lancashire and Yorkshire.

I am glad to say my health has improved very much of late, for which I am very thankful, and I hope God will continue to bless the little work I am trying to do for His church as I travel from place to place. The people in this part of Scotland are very devoted Christians, and I think an elder of our church could do good work among them.

At this house at which I am at present stopping are seven young men belonging to the Evangelical Union, preparing themselves for missionary work in Morocco, for which country they intend starting about the end of the year. They are all total abstainers and non-smokers, and seem very earnest in their work; they take neither purse nor scrip to provide for themselves whilst preaching what they know of the gospel to the inhabitants of Morocco. I enclose their names as I wish you to send them some of our papers and books before leaving for the seat of their labors.

On the enclosed slip I give you the names of several others to whom I wish you to send some of our publications; I also send my list of subscribers to the Herald and Autumn Leaves for next year. I may have one or two more before the end of the year, when please forward me my account altogether for payment. I am going from here to my mother's in Westmoreland, and ask you to still continue your prayers in my behalf, for I often feel lonely, and get discouraged at times. I hope that Bro. Joseph is in good health and that his time spent among the Utah church be followed by good results. What I try to do with regard to the latter day work in which I rejoice is this: I try to impress upon the minds of all those I think are honest hearted and are searching for truth that there is a Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints that never was taught polygamy as one of its doctrines, and that does not believe in one man having more than one wife, and that the Book of Mormon does not teach polygamy but speaks in the strongest language against it. This fact seems to be known to but very few here, and whenever this stumbling-block is removed they are anxious after to hear some of our teachings, which I make known to them as well as I can; and should an elder of our church come amongst them in the near future they will not be able to give polygamy as an excuse for turning a deaf ear to him.

GILBERT J. WALLER.

SAGINAW, Mich., Nov. 21st.

Brn. Joseph and Blair:—Since coming to Saginaw I have been blessed in preaching the word to fair sized congregations. On Sunday, the 17th, seven were baptized for the remission of their sins, and I suppose when E. Day Bennett learns that his two brothers and his sister were three of the number he will feel to rejoice and thank the Giver of all good for His Spirit to draw them into the fold of Christ.

On Monday, the 18th, Bro. E. Delong came down and preached in the evening and confirmed them members of the church. There are others believing, and if care is taken will before long come into the church.

In gospel bonds,

TESTIMOMY OF ELDER JOHN LANDERS.

GIVEN SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 3D, 1889, AT THE SAINTS' CHAPEL, LAMONI.

After speaking a few words Bro. Landers said: "I know that when the Lord said to me, 'If you will go to New Brunswick and preach my word I will give you many sheaves,' I performed my mission. I never felt that I did anything so poorly; but God did reward me with many sheaves.

"It pleased the Lord when I first came into this cause to endow upon me a special gift of healing. I have been called upon to admintster to a great many, and there may be some one under the sound of my voice to day that knows that when Father Landers laid his hands upon them they felt the power of God to heal. I want to say to you that God is in this work, and I know that when physicians have failed and announced that people would die, the Lord has heard me when I laid my hands upon them. I have known five or six whom when the doctors pronounced them incurable, and said they must die, the Lord has raised them up by the prayers of faith under my administration.

"I could talk to you for two hours and tell you what the Lord has done with this poor instrument. There are those in this church that know that the power of God attends the ministrations of his work, and ordinances, and is manifested in they various gifts of the gospel; the gift of tongues and interpretation, of prophecy, of vision, that God has bestowed upon his Saints. And I pronounce it in your hearing that all the Saints of God that will live godly in Christ Jesus will receive greater blessings than God ever bestowed in any age of the world upon any of his people, and will multiply blessings upon the heads of those who serve Him.

"I beseech you to mend your ways and live nearer to God, that you may receive of that Spirit which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that is saved in the kingdom of God; of the glorious Redeemer when he comes to select his jewels; and it is that Spirit that will testify against every man that does not serve God faithfully.

"May God bless you all and bring you to enjoy eternal life is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen."

LAMONI, Iowa, Nov. 27th.

Editors Herald:—Please permit me to request brethren John W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth, one or both, to call upon my aunt, Mrs. Sarah Patterson, No. 166 Princes Street, Sydney, New South Wales. I have sent some of our tracts.

In bonds, R. M. ELVIN.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF UTAH.—EXTRACTS.

TERRITORY OF UTAH, SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 20, 1889.

SIR:—In compliance with the request made in your letter of July 19, 1889, I respectfully submit the following report of affairs in Utah Territory.

There has been no census of the inhabitants of the Territory since the National census of 1880. It is now estimated that the total population of the Territory is 230,000.

LIST OF UTAH MINERALS.

An adequate idea may be formed of the generous manner in which nature has lavished her treasures upon Utah from the following statement of minerals found in the Territory:

Gold—Occurs in placers in Bingham and in lead, copper and silver mines in various parts of the Territory.

SILVER—Native wire silver, silver glance, brittle, horn and ruby silver occur in the different mines, mixed with lead, iron and copper ores.

ANTIMONY—Has been mined at Marysvale, and occurs in lead-silver ores in the form of sulphuret.

Arsenic—This occurs as mispickle in lead-silver ores.

COPPER—Native copper occurs at Tintic and many other places. Various forms are found, such as carbonate, azurite and malachite. Silicate and pyrite of copper are found in the mines at Tintic, in central Utah, in the Wasatch Mountains and on the western border.

IRON—This is very abundant throughout. In Iron county there are several million tons of hematite, magnetite and limonite running over 60 per cent metallic iron, occurring in one locality. At Tintic there is a large body of hematite with some ilmenite. In various parts of the Territory there are large deposits of oxides of iron of all shades, valuable for paints.

Nearly all the forms of iron occur in our lead-silver and copper-silver ores.

LEAD—Is the most abundant metal in the mines. It is most commonly found as galena, though anglesite and wulfenite occur. Lead is found in almost every mining camp in the Territory, and is the chief source of all the precious metals. Were the production of lead to become unprofitable, nearly all the mining in the Territory would cease.

MANGANESE—This occurs in several places. In Central Utah there is a large bed that will doubtless become very useful in making manganese iron.

MERCURY— Cinnabar occurs near Camp Floyd and at Marysvale, where it has been made into metallic mercury.

MOLYBDENUM—Occurs in ores.

ZINC BLENDE—Occurs in many ores and is often a troublesome element.

COAL—Exists in vast quantities along the east side of the coal range and on both sides of the Uintahs, from the northern limit to Arizona. It belongs to the cretaceous age. Some of the veins are 40 feet thick. Some veins make a fair quality of coke, and are being utilized now.

BUILDING STONE—Of every grade from the finest quartzose granite, marble, limestone and sandstones of every hue, are abundant and accessible.

SALT—Occurs both as rock salt and as a part of the Great Salt Lake. Unlimited quantities can be procured annually.

SULPHUR—Occurs at Ceo Creek and in the mountains in seemingly inexhaustible quantities.

ALUM—Is found in many localities.

Asbestos-Also occurs.

ASPHALTUM—Also occurs in many places in vast deposits or lakes. Ozocerite occurs at Colton in small seams. Uintahite (gilsonite) is found in a four foot vein near the Uintah reservation, and now supplies the world with Japan varnish. Elaterite a closely allied product is also found in a large vein on the reservation. Petroleum occurs at Green River and gives indication of being valuable.

CEMENT — There are several places where there is a natural Portland cement.

FIRE CLAY—Is found in many places. GEMS—Are found, such as topaz, garnet, chalcedony, amethyst, etc.

GRAPHITE—Is found in paying quantities in three places.

GYPSUM—Occurs in endless quantities: also alabaster and silenite.

KAOLIN—Is found of very pure quality and would make very fine ware. LITHOGRAPH STONE—Occurs in several places.

MICA—Is abundant, and in a few places valuable.

OBSIDIAN—Occurs abundantly in the volcanic regions.

Saltpeter—Is found in two places.

SILICA—Of a quality to make the finest glass is abundant.

SLATE—Good for mantels is found at Utah Lake.

TRIPOLI—Of fine quality is mined near Salt Lake City and on the Promontory.

PUBLIC AND DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOLS.

Under the provisions of the Edmonds-Tucker Law, the Territorial superintendent of public schools is appointed by the Supreme Court of the Territory. He is required by law to make an annual report to Congress, and to give in his report detailed information respecting the schools. I shall therefore only refer to the subject in a general way. The importance of free public schools and an efficient public school system in which the youth may be edu cated, is universally recognized. Utah has a very fair system of public schools, they fall far short of what they should be. The tax collected for the support of the schools does not pay one-half the expenses of maintaining the schools, consequently the pupils must pay tuition fees or the schools be closed. In many of the poorer districts the children are denied school privileges for many months of the year.

There is but little prospect, in fact there is no prospect, that this will be changed. I am led to this conclusion by the fact that the Mormon people with almost entire unanimity are quietly preparing for denominational schools, in which their children may be taught Mormon theology in addition to the ordinary branches of educa-

Stake or county academies have been established under church auspices, and in some of the school districts the Mormon children have been withdrawn from the public schools and placed in church schools.

The following extract from a letter written by Wilford Woodruff, the President of the Mormon Church, shows very clearly the object and purpose of establishing these church schools:

"We feel that the time has arrived when the proper education of our children should be taken in hand by us as a people. Religious training is practically excluded from the public schools. The perusal of books we value as divine records is forbidden. Our children, if left to the training they receive in these schools, will grow up entirely ignorant of those principles of salvation for which the Latter-Day Saints have made so many sacrifices. To permit this condition of things to exist among us would be criminal. The desire is universally expressed by all thinking people in the church that we should have schools where the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants can be used as text-books, and where the principles of our religion may form part of the teaching of the schools."

It is very plain that the church has decided to take its place as an enemy of the public school system and the principles which are at its foundation. The remedy for such an evil is obvious. Congress should at once place the control of the public schools in the hands of those who are disposed to be friendly to the public school system. If the Mormon church leaders are determined to oppose these schools by establishing denominational schools, their power and influence should be destroyed so far as the administration of school affairs is concerned, and this can only be done by taking the management and control of these schools out of the hands of its members. The free public schools have justly been regarded as one of the strongest pillars which support our political fabric, and it is a strange perversity which prompts the dominant power in Utah, in this age of enlightenment and progress, to attempt to break it down.

The different denominations had in Utah for the year ending June 30th, 1889, the following schools:

Denomination.		188	9.		188	8.
Baptist	2	3	150	2	30	140
Catholic	6	50	900	7	50	1,000
Congregational	24	48	2.490	22	38	1,883
Methodist	21	35	1,396	20	61	1,649
Presbyterian	32	62	2,150	33	61	1.925
Protestant Episcopal	6	27	800	5	22	800
Swedish Lutheran	2	5	75	1	3	45
Total	93	230	7,961	90	265	7,442

Or the 2,490 scholars enrolled in the Congregational schools, 1,035 were the children of Mormon parents; of the 1,396 scholars enrolled in the Methodist schools, 291 were the children of Mormon parents.

Bishop Abiel Leonard of the Episcopal church in his report says: "I am persuaded, that the religious schools planted in this Territory have done very much to bring about the change in public sentiment as to the bounden duty which rests upon every true man to uphold the government of the United States, and to compel respect to the laws enacted by the highest legislative authority. The work of our schools is not yet completed, but I believe the day is not distant, especially in the larger towns, when we may feel that our mission in sustaining free schools has passed."

It is but a small tribute to the unselfish work of the various denominations to say that they have performed a great work in prompting the emancipation of the people of Utah, and that they have supplied a need that could have been met in no other way; and yet, I can not but feet that the presence of the denominational school is not consistent with the principle upon which our government rests. I believe the non-Mormons in Utah will welcome the day when they will give way before the rise of a free public school system.

CERTAIN OFFICERS TO BE APPOINTED.

There is an imperative necessity for some action that will help to build up a population in sympathy with the Government in those parts of Utah where a Gentile is as much a stranger as he would be were he in a foreign land. A great many people have apostatized from the Mormon Church; by so doing they have deprived themselves of all association with their Mormon neighbors, and experience has shown that when a man becomes an apostate, as a rule, he leaves the Territory. Thousands have apostatized who would now, had they remained, have been a power in the Territory. Among the reasons which they give for leaving the Territory are these: They say they were socially ostracized; that they were made to pay taxes on a larger proportionate assessment than their neighbors; that they were deprived of the means of obtaining a livelihood, etc., etc.

It is of vital importance that something should be done to keep them in the Territory, and if they can be made to feel that the officials will deal with them fairly they will probably do so.

Some Federal agency should be authorized to appoint the following county officers: Selectmen, Clerks, Recorders, Superintendents of District Schools and Assessors.

THE SITUATION.

Recent events of a political and business nature which have transpired in the Territory during the past year, have led many people to believe, especially outside of Utah, that a marvelous change has taken place, and the downfall of Mormon domination practically assured.

If this were true, the need of Federal supervision over the political affairs of the Territory would no longer exist. I am forced to express the opinion that it is not true, and feel that I will be performing a grateful duty, if I can give the facts concerning the Utah of to-day, in such shape and form as to enable Congress and the country to form clear opinions concerning them. It must seem strange to many that public officers in official political reports, constantly intermingle political and church affairs, and in considering the importance and effect of political action, refer to contemporaneous action of church officials as interpreters of the acts, when in this country church and state are separated by law, and in political discussions religious beliefs are almost a prohibited subject.

If the change referred to has taken place, it means: 1. That the non-Mormons are now in the majority and control in political and business matters; or,

2. That the Mormon Church has ceased to sanction violations of law, and the people have abandoned their hostility to the Government and its laws.

THE GENTILES STRENGTH.

The facts are, that at the last municipal election the Gentiles carried the city of Ogden by four hundred and thirty-three majority. Six months later an election was held throughout the Territory for members of the Legislative Assembly. The Gentiles elected two of twelve members of the Council and six of twenty-four members of the House. At this election the Gentiles again carried Ogden and also carried Salt Lake City by forty-one ma-These notable victories awakened the wildest enthusiasm, and were hailed with delight by the people of the country, and many expressed the opinion that the Mormon power was at an end in Utah.

I regret to say that they were in error. The time may come when the Gentiles will be in a majority, but it will be many years hence. The facts are, that outside of Salt Lake City and Ogden the Gentile population is found in the mining camps and in the small railroad cities and towns. They are principally settled and engaged in mercantile and professional business. In Salt Lake City and Ogden they own more than one-half of the real property. As a rule, they do not own or occupy any of the agricultural lands and are not engaged in agriculture.

The strict Mormons regard the invasion of Utah soil by Gentiles somewhat as the Crusaders regarded the occupancy of the Holy Land by the Saracens, and are advised by their leaders not to sell their lands to Gentiles.

In 23 of the 24 counties, and in 253 of the 278 election precincts, the Gentiles were in the minority at the last election. The great bulk of the population of Utah is and will always be in the valleys. The agricultural lands lie in the valleys and comprise a very small part of the whole. The total land and water area of Utah is 54,380,000 acres. From reports made to me by the county courts, it seems that not more than 500,000 acres were under cultivation during the present year. Probably 500,-000 acres more could be brought into cultivation if some way were provided to store the surplus water during the wet season. Nearly all the land under cultivation, and all the water that can be used to irrigate it without great expense, is owned and appropriated by the Mormons, and as they hold and own the land and water, they hold and own Utah.

That this is so is shown by the fact that they have been sending out colonies into the States and Territories adjoining Utah. This is an overflow, and in this they do not go singly, as settlers usually do, but the neighborhood where they intend to settle is explored, a few families sent to be followed by others and a colony established, and exclusive occupation taken, so far as they go, and so far as such occupation is possible. In this way they have colonized Utah, and with the aid of assisted immigration have acquired the agricultural lands, and appropriated the waters which can be easily reached to irrigate them.

While it can not be denied that progress is being made, and more rapidly, too, than at any previous time in the history of the Territory, it will be seen that those who are of the opinion that Utah has passed from under the Mormon power are mistaken.

THE PRESENT ATTITUDE OF THE MORMON PEOPLE.

In passing to the consideration of the question whether the Mormons have ceased to enforce the doctrine of plural marriage and have abandoned their well-known hostility to such Federal laws as are in conflict with what they claim to be religious belief, let us look at the character of the Mormon people and their leaders.

The early Mormons were mainly native Americans and religious enthusiasts. Under a vigorous system of proselyting by missionaries, they have been largely recruited from all parts of the world. Either by chance or from policy their missionaries have mostly been to the parts of the country where the average rate of intelligence is the lowest, and they have made many converts from people of American birth or from those of foreign birth who had first settled elsewhere in the United States. For a long time the bulk of their converts have come from the lower classes of England and Scandivavian countries, and they are yearly brought over by ship loads. missionaries say nothing of plural marriage and some converts hear of it for the first time when they reach Utah. are picked up by a process of natural selection; the doctrine as expounded by the missionary fits the mental condition of the convert. He is told of the new and wondrous revelation, the intercourse with and guidance of spirits and angels, the power to work miracles, heal the sick and cure the deformed. That God has not only taken his chosen people under his care, but has given them a fine country where everyone can have fertile land, the association of a Brotherhood of Equals, and separation from the wickedness and oppression of the world. The doctrine thus put forth by shrewd leaders is accepted by the illogical, and those who give credence to the marvelous, to miracles, the portents of dreams and those in whom the imagination is not controlled by strict methods of reasoning.

The hope of a better worldly condition and the offer of aid to reach it are not without effect. They are not without intelligence sufficient to utilize their general experience in practical affairs; they are industrious in a slow, plodding way, frugal and easily governed. A firm religious enthusiasm is their leading characteristic. As a rule, they are law-abiding, especially as far as the law is confirmed by the Priesthood, but they accept the doctrine of plural marriage in all sincerity and as a radical and necessary part of their religion, and any civil law punishing polygamy and kindred offenses as crimes is considered wrong.

They have accepted the doctrine of polygamy and will probably adhere to it as long as they live, and it is but a very poor tribute to their honesty to say they have abandoned it. The women are as devotional as the men, probably more so. An intelligent woman probably expressed the sentiment of her sex in regard to polygamy by saying: "It is a cross, but I suppose it is true, and we must bear it."

MORMON SINCERITY.

While the Mormon masses are too sincere to voluntarily make false pretenses, they could be induced to accept and adopt any form of words however contradictory, if advised to do so by their authorities, for obedience to the Priesthood and to obey counsel is diligently inculcated as a first duty, and should they be told to sign a declaration that they were Mohammedans, that the Priesthood understood the matter, and it was for the advancement of the cause and the glory of God, they would probably do it.

In other communities every man feels a consciousness of personal equality and independence and personal responsibility, and a strong love of country as against everything else. In Utah among the Mormons, this is not the case. That instinctive love of country which is the distinguishing characteristic of the American people, does not find a responsive sentiment in Utah. The orthodox Mormon, in every political and business act, puts the Church first, the country afterward. It can not be otherwise, for the priesthood claim all government but its own to be illegal, and claim a "separate political destiny and ultimate temporal dominion and by divine right."

Of political and official Mormonism I can only say it is probably sincere. There is insincerity, but it is not the rule. It is illogical to suppose such a body can be substantially held together on any theory of combination to support what they consider a mere imposture. It may as well be understood that the strength of Mormonism, both in its masses and officials, is in its sincerity and not in its imposture. In official Mormonism there may be some insincerity, but not enough to affect the question, and it may use its position for selfish ends; but this can be done by force of the position, and as well if it be sincere as if it be insincere, for human nature is not changed by the kind of church it en-

A fair degree of sincerity is the only virtue I can ascribe to political and official Mormonism. When it has any point to attain in behalf of Mormonism it deals in evasions, or words of double meaning, meaningless words, hypocritical pretenses, false assertions and every helpful evasion of word or act. Its attitude in regard to the status of the Mormon people in regard to polygamy is delusive to the last degree. It knows there is no material change of opinion on the subject; but it seeks to convey the idea that there has been. It will not come out with a clear expression on the subject; but seeks and uses evasive expressions, intended to convey the idea abroad that the declaration has been made, and it is irritated when something express and definite is asked. The position it assumes is this, we have numbers and wealth sufficient to be released from Federal control; there formerly was opposition in the Territory to the law against polygamy, but see the present loyal attitude of our people. They have taken the registration oath, have put in their proposed Constitution a condemnation of polygamy as a crime. What more can you ask? If the express question is put, do you and your people still believe that polygamy is right and the doctrine one of divine origin? the answer is evasive; it will at once be said, you should not inquire into our religious views; those are mere opinions, and so long as we swear loyalty to the laws and offer you this Constitution, and thus fulfill all proper political conditions, you have no right to intermingle church and state and ask our religious views, or suspect the bad faith of what we have sworn. When other Territories have applied for admission, and given you the evidence that they have fulfilled all political conditions, you did not enter upon an unconstitutional inquiry concerning the religious belief of its inhabitants, and how can you in our case? we demand Statehood as a right always accorded when political conditions are fulfilled.

This sophism, accompanied by suggestions of oppression, unjust prosecutions, agitation against them for the sake of plunder, and that there is no Utah question because polygamous marriages have ceased, entangles many who can only give the question a passing thought, and they are apt to think there are really two sides to the question.

No Territory has ever applied for Statehood or release from any measure of federal control with the great body of its people devoted to social crimes, and firmly believing such crimes are either commanded or permitted by revelation; and no Christian church has ever taught any such doctrine, so that Congress has never had occasion to enter upon any such inquiry.

LOCAL POLITICS.

In regard to the political affairs of Utah, one side claims the inquiry as to the loyalty of the people to the laws of their country is a proper political inquiry. The other side claims that this is bringing in a religious discussion and you have no business with a religious belief. There is such a wide difference in the use of terms that a harmonious conclusion is impossi-

One example will illustrate the distinction, and show the agitation of the question is not, as has been asserted, the work of jealous priests or rapacious laymen. The Josephite Mormons are understood to accept all the doctrines of Mormonism, except the revelation concerning polygamy, which they have claimed is a forgery, and they have intermingled with other religious denominations in the States and Territories, undisturbed, and enjoying all the immunities and privileges of law-abiding citizens. They have not withdrawn by themselves, organized crime, sanctified it to the people by revelation and called it religion; hence there is no political discussion concerning their belief.

(At one time it was thought the Josephite doctrine might be an important factor in Utah, but its influence has been crippled by the later proof, that at Nauvoo in the lifetime of Joseph Smith, polygamy was practiced by the leaders, and that men could and did marry two women by one ceremony, until the proof was made; and perhaps it was permitted to come out to meet the growing influence of the Fosephites, and their assertion that the revelation was a forgery concocted in Utah; the Mormons had persistently denied they were guilty of any violation of law, and were driven out without excuse, at the instigation of priests and for plunder, though there are still living in Utah those who practiced polygamy at Nauvoo. The incident shows that mendacity and deceit are not new characteristics of orthodox Mormonism.)

ADHERENCE TO POLYGAMY.

The last official expression of the Mormon people in regard to polygamy, other than the proposed State Constitution, was made May 2d, 1885, and is as follows:

"As to our religious faith, it is based upon evidence which to our minds is conclusive; convictions not to be destroyed by Legislative enactments or the judicial decisions. Force may slave the body, but it can not convince the mind. To yield to the demand of the Legislature or judge the rights of conscience would prove us recreant to every duty we owe to God and man. Among the principles of our religion is that of immediate revelations from God; one of the doctrines so revealed is celestial or plural marriage, for which ostensibly we are stigmatized and hated. This is a vital part of our religion, the decisions of the courts to the contrary notwithstanding."

This candid admission of their position is as true to-day as when it was first made, and expresses the situation at this time. Some young Mormons, probably one hundred and fifty, at the late election broke away from the ancient discipline and voted as they pleased. I hope the number will be increased on the next election. In that way the church is losing a few adherents at the outer side, but there is no change in the position of the leaders and the sincere Mormons will never renounce polygamy until they are convinced that God has commanded it; and they will, whenever they have the power, enforce and practice polygamy, and every other interest of the church, whether it conflicts with law or not, and will believe that in doing so, they are serving the divine will, and will gladly accept any punishment which may come to them because of this, in the spirit of martyrs. This fact stands out very clearly. There has been no change in the doctrines of the church or its teaching and it will not do to claim they have assumed a loyal attitude because they refuse to sanction violations of law. They must teach their people that the law is supreme and cease to honor those who violate it.

CHURCH AND STATE.

The claim is made that the church does not now interfere in political matters, but, like all other religious organizations, leaves its members free to act for themselves.

The Gentiles claim that the past and the present history of the church does not support this claim; that the church is a political organization with aims that are political, and that it manifests greater zeal in preserving and perpetuating its political power than in promoting the religious purposes for which it was ostensibly organized.

They call attention to the fact that the money which it collects from its people, as tithing, under the plea of religious duty, is mainly used in promoting political ends in and out of the territory, and notably at Washington City, the Capital of the na-

The Mormon people are constantly advised to be united in their temporal and spiritual matters. This advice does not come from the laymen; but is given from the pulpit. A union of temporal and spiritual affairs means that the people must be "obedient to counsel," and the "counsel" always emanates from the high priesthood.

The non-Mormons are amazed that the fact of the church interfering in political matters should be denied. Every apostate Mormon in the territory bears willing testimony to the fact, and the acts of the Mormon leaders confirm it. At the last legislative election there was a contest in the Ninth Council District, between two Mormons, one the candidate of the Mormon party and one who ran as an independent candidate, and whose candidacy was a protest against the political methods of the Mormon Church. In a letter received from a prominent citizen of the district occurs the following statement:

"Apostle John Henry Smith made his appearance in our county on Friday, the 2d instant. The people at Huntington were drummed together on said evening, and Smith called their attention to the fact that he was an apostle of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; that they had chosen and sustained him in that position, and had covenanted to sustain him as their counselor and advisor, and he now wished them to thoroughly know and understand that he was there to see, to counsel and advise, and to persuade all to sustain the People's (Mormon) ticket."

In Davis county at the same election there was a contest between two Mormons for the office of selectman. One nominated by the people's party, the other as an independent candidate. A prominent citizen of the county, and an official, in a letter makes the following statement: "I had the pleasure of listening to him (Geo. Q. Cannon) the last day of the meeting. He dwelt wholly upon politics, and among other things said, 'Now brethren you will shortly have an election here (referring to the county election) and how will you act, after the order of the world to stir up strife and contention, or will you do it after the order of God, and elect the men whom God wants?' That sermon, with a visit from Penrose, editor of the Deseret News, settled the election. If you will turn to the returns from Davis county, you will see David Stoker was run for selectman by the Liberals. The priesthood prevented his election."

Another well known citizen of Davis county makes substantially the same statement, with the further statement that it occurred at a "priesthood meeting," and that "on election day teachers were delegated to see that every one of the People's party voted the straight ticket."

A CHURCH MATTER.

I submit these statements for consideration in connection with the assertion that the church does not interfere in political matters, but leaves its members free to act for themselves, and will only state that Mr. Cannon is not a member of any committee of the People's party, and had no other relation to the people of Davis county than that given by his official position as an apostle in the church.

If a member of the church acts indepently of the People's party, he is made to understand in a very pronounced way that he has displeased the church; that he has taken a step which is wrong, and is frequently declared "an enemy of his people." The result has been that few men have had the courage to avail themselves of the opportunity to be independent under ouch circumstances. While there are many Mormons who would gladly welcome some action on the part of the church abandoning polygamy and remanding the church to its appropriate sphere as religious organization, the greater number still adhere to the old faith with all its teachings and practices. The church and people stand to-day where they stood when the first colony was planted in Salt Lake valley. In conversation with a Mormon member of the Legislative Assembly on this subject, he said, "Well, this is God's work. If it is right, it will go ahead; if it is wrong, it will not. It is in His hands, and he will take care of it." This probably expresses the opinion of the orthodox Mormon.

It will now be seen why political officers in political reports, refer to church doctrines and practices. It is because they involve the body of the people and are disloyal and hostile to the laws, and hence the subject becomes in the strictest sense political. In fact, the church doctrines and their practices are so intimately interwoven with the political affairs of Utah that they can not be considered separately.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Elsewhere in this report I have recommended that the public schools be placed under the control and authority of some Federal agency; that certain county officers be made appointable by some Federal authority; that a new Legislative apportionment be made after the taking of the next census, and that prisoners confined in the Penitentiary be placed at work.

I believe it is the intention of the American people to extirpate polygamy and its kindred evils from their land; and that Congress is determined to give force and effect to this intention by appropriate legislation.

The reports made by previous Governors of the territory, and by the Utah Commission, recommend special measures for consideration by Congress, all of which, so far as they are now essential, have my hearty endorsement and support. Encouraging Gentile immigration has been suggested. The walls are up against it, unless a great increase in mining, the establishment of manufacturing on a large scale, or the founding and enlargment of industrial pursuits, other than agriculture, take place. The founding, example and teaching of Christian churches has been recommended. Several denominations have established churches, but the converts from Mormonism are none too numerous. There is a self-sufficient complacency in the Mormon, which entirely satisfies him with his religion. Establish schools throughout the territory, others say. This has been done to some extent by various religious denominations, but the progress is slow in producing any marked result. It has been suggested that the courts should be increased and offenses vigorously prosecuted. The Government has been for years well represented by able and efficient officers, and the result has been important but not decisive. This course has not changed opinion, but has caused greater care in concealing offenses.

OFFICIAL DIFFICULTIES.

Officers have great difficulty in making arrests in the agricultural districts, and are forced to find out the residence of the person wanted, approach and surround his house in the night, or come upon it at some unexpected hour of the day; and at times, after getting in sight of the man, ability as a hurdle racer is more serviceable in making the arrest than their warrant or official character. If they run down their man, and return to his house, the witnesses wanted have disappeared and inquiries made of men, women or children, are met with a universal "don't know." If the witness is placed on the stand, and questioned as to facts of recent occurrence, his mind is a blank. Mothers have frequently testified that they did not know their daughters were married, and when asked if the fact of their daughter having children did not at least excite some interest as to the fact of marriage, the answer would be, "It was none of my business," or "My daughter is old enough to take care of herself." Members of the Priesthood have denied facts while on the stand which were notoriously known to be true.

A REMEDIAL MEASURE.

Others suggest the taking of all political power from the Church, and call attention to the fact that this power is used by the church to strengthen the position of its leaders socially, politically and financially. They point with emphasis to the fact that the most lucrative county offices in the Territory are continued in certain families, descending like the priesthood, by inheritance from father to son, to the exclusion of the "common people," and also say that a high position in the priesthood is generally accompanied by an equally high position in the political and business world, secured by church influence, until religion, politics and business are so intermingled that it is difficult to draw the line where the one begins and the other ends, and this will continue to be so until the strong hand of the Federal Government is interposed to force an effectual divorce of Church and State.

The suggestion to strip the church of political power is met by the objection that it is an attempt to punish the Mormon people for their religious views, and because of this is unconstitutional.

In a discussion of this character we must be careful that both sides understand and employ terms in the same sense, otherwise the discussion will run on lines so far apart that no definite result or understanding can be reached. It is well here to see what is meant by religious belief and unconstitutional inquiry about religious belief and church affairs and doctrines. In this country, under constitutional guarantees, it is impossible for the law to encroach upon the domain of religion while the latter keeps within its true boundaries, but if a religious sect can adopt and practice something prohibited by law and claim immunity on account of religious belief, it may, or other sects may, extend religious belief and practices to cover the whole domain of criminal law, and crimes and religion would become synonymous terms. The Mormons believe in and practice polygamy and claim it is justified by revelation, and, therefore, a part of their religion. The United States punishes the offense and calls it a crime, and what the Government calls crime, the Mormon Church calls religion—claims immunity for it as a religious belief, and to that extent swallows up the domain of the law.

A CHANGE NEEDED.

I believe the great majority of the people will welcome any change that will end the long struggle, which has only brought sorrow and suffering to them, while their leaders have enjoyed plenty, and apparent immunity from punishment. With them it is not a question of political power. They care nothing for the offices, but they do want peace, and if they were left alone would have peace.

I recognize, however, how serious the situation is, how much is involved in the duty of changing the attitude of a perfectly disciplined host. I do not care to interpose any suggestions beyond echoing the voice of the loyal people here, which insists that which is unlawful in the Mormon system must be extirpated; that there must be no relaxation; on the contrary should the present laws prove inadequate, and the Mormon people continue in their present attitude, then the Government should not fail to provide some form of government for the Territory which will be patriotic and wise enough to do what is right.

In my opinion, expressing to the Government my best judgment, which it is entitled to, and should have, I do not hesitate to say that any temporizing policy which leaves the church in a position to control the political policy of the Territory, is only delaying the final settlement, and that future legislation should be aimed at the political power of the church, which has been the main pillar of its strength in Utah.

In the meantime, it will be seen the Utah problem is wholly new in America, and not so easily solved as those unacquainted with all the facts might suppose, and its laterals reach to the mooted questions of unrestricted immigration, cheap citizenship, and whether in this country personal rights have not been hedged so closely that at times public danger may ensue.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, I desire to say that so far as I have been able to learn, the Federal officers in Utah are performing their duties faithfully and efficiently. The courts and District Attorneys are enforcing the laws with vigor. The election laws have been ably enforced by the Utah Commission. I take this opportunity to say that the presence of the Commission and its work have been of material aid to the Government.

I am, sir, very respectfully, ARTHUR L. THOMAS, Governor

Hon. John W. Noble, Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

The committee to examine into the Laguna branch matter reported the organization effected on February 2nd, 1889, regular and legal, and recommended that said organization be considered a coutinuation of the former Laguna branch, and that members of the former branch be considered members of the new. This report was referred to a committee for final action, which committee reported. After hearing arguments concerning the case, that the organization and election and election on Feb. 2, 1889, not being in harmony with branch rules adopted Dec. 18, 1884, was null and void, and they therefore rected the report of the former committee. notice that the case would be appealed to the general conference was then read. ## Miscellaneous.

A PROPOSED REMEDY FOR DIVORCE.

The Hon. Edward J. Phelps, ex-Minister to England and Lecturer on Law at Yale, has turned his attention to the subject of Divorce in the United States, with an effort to discover a practical means of lessening the evil. How great that evil is may be seen at a glance from the fact that during the last twenty years more than 500 000 divorces have been granted, whereas, during the preceding twenty years. only a few more than 325,000 were granted. This rapid increase is the main fact which has directed the attention both of social and legal reformers to the subject. Mr. Phelps treats it from a practical, legal boint of view, and considers the means whereby the law may be best used as a preventive.

A uniform divorce law in all the States he regards as impossible ever to obtain, and his view of the Federal Constitution is that it would be illegal for the United States to enact a law on this subject, this being a matter which falls within State jurisdiction. He addresses himself, therefore, to State laws; and, after a discussion of the main features of all these laws, reaches the conclusion that the remedy will be found in a prohibition of marriage by either divorced party so long as the other lives. He shows historically thal it is the liberty to marry again that has caused such an increase in divorcess; and he concludes that it is the desire for another marriage alliance that is the main cause of most separations between husbands and wives. Phelps contributes this study of the subject to The Forum, and it appears in the December number.

Sister, my love, bow down thine ear, My rhythmic tribute fully hear; Nor from thy heart let wrath erase Its silvered cadence from its place. Where heart joins heart in living coal, Though broken be "the golden bow!".

No common slab should mark the place That covers o'er that sacred face:—
Sacred? Ah; well! The word allowed To him who's of a sister proud;
That face whose pressed together lip Of sweets beyond expression sip;
That face whose sight from earth now toru, Looks upon scenes to us unborn;
Those hands so lily-like and fair, And all so lowly resting there.

Why should my pen one soul annoy,
The legal argument employ,
How justice claims her right with Him
Whose mercies running o'er the brim!
Let time and fortune rule the way
For her to realms of endless day,
And so for all, let justice be,
My Father, swallowed up in Thee.

We wish to announce to our friends and patrons that with the beginning of Vol. III we purpose adding

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEPARTMENT

To our magazine; and as this department will be exclusively in the interest of the young, we hope to awaken in them a more lively interest in helping to sustain—both by contributions and by helping to increase the circulation—the work inaugurated especially for their benefit.

This department will be under the charge of

PROF. J. A. GUNSOLLEY, B. S.,

And will be devoted to an interchange of thoughts and ideas upon all topics of interest pertaining to mental and spiritual growth, the study of God in nature as well as in the Bible.

The Latter Day Work is increasing wonderfully in magnitude, and it behooves him who desires to keep pace with its rapid strides to embrace every opportunity of informing himself not only with reference to the standard works of the church, but things transpiring in the world at large, which have a direct bearing upon the grand march of events, pointing to a culmination in the secong coming of Christ.

In addition to this there will also begin in the February number a

DOMESTIC DEPARTMENT,

Which will be taken charge of by "MARTHA." and will be devoted strictly to such matter as will aid the mother and housewife in her toilsome labor of love, and help her to realize how high and holy is her calling, and how much of the abstract comfort and peace of the family is dependent upon her.

Brethren and Sisters, will you aid us, by helping to enlarge our subscription list? If cash commission suits you better than premiums, write us for our terms. Less than a month now remains before the January number will be ready for sending out, but much can be done in a month, by persistent and earnest offort. We could furnish you many testimonials of the work the magazine is doing, especially outside of the church; but we do not believe it necessary. We look for a largely increased subscription list the coming year, and hope we shall not be disappointed.

Yours gratefully,

M. WALKER.

N. B.—A request for renewal of subscription or to have the magazine sent on time will be all that is necessary, if you are not prepared to pay now. We want to accommodate all, but can not afford to continue it to parties who do not request it. Remember it will only cost you a postal card to keep your name from being dropped, and inure you the magazine for 1890.

UTAH MORMONISM COME TO JUDGMENT.

Below we present our readers with essential portions of a recent decision of Judge Anderson involving the civil standing of the members of the Brighamite "Mormon" church, and reserve our comments thereon till our next issue:

In the District Convt for the Third Judical District of the Territory of Utah.

In the matter of the application of John Moore, Fred W. Miller, Henry J. Owen, John Berg, Walter J. Edgar, Charles E. Clissold, Nils Anderson, Carl P. Larsen, Thomas M. Mumford, John Garbet and Arthur Townsend, to become citizens of the United States.

OPINION.

Anderson, J.

In these applications the usual evidence on behalf of the applicants as to residence, moral character, etc., was introduced at a former hearing, and was deemed sufficient. Objection was made, however, to the admission of John Moore and William J. Edgar upon the ground that they were members of the Mormon Church, and also because they had gone through the Endowment House of that Church, and there had taken an oath or obligation incompatible with the oath of citizenship they would be required to take if adadmitted. The admission of the other applicants was objected to solely on the ground that by their own statements they were members of the Mormon Church, although they had not gone through the Endowment House, and had not taken the oath usually administered there, nor in fact any oath incompatible with citizenship.

The claim is made by those who object to the admission to citizenship of these persons, that the Mormon Church is and always has been a treasonable organization in its teachings and in its practices, hostile to the government of the United States, disobedient to its laws, and seeking its overthrow, and that the oath administered to its members in the Endowment House binds them, under the penalty of death, to implicit obedience in all things, temporal as well as spiritual, to the Priesthood, and to avenge the death of the prophets Joseph and Hyrum Smith upon the government and people of the United States. The taking of further testimony at this time is for the purpose of determining whether or not these allegations are true.

The third sub-division of section 2165 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides that in order to entitle an alien to be admitted as a citizen of the United States, it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court admitting such alien that he has resided in the United States five years at least, and within the state or territory where such court is at the time held, one year at least, and that during that time he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same. Those objecting to the right of these applicants to be admitted to citizenship, introduced eleven witnesses, who had been members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly called the Mormon Church. Several of these witnesses had held the position of Bishop in the church, and all had gone through the Endowment House and participated in its ceremonies. The testimony of these witnesses is to the effect that every member of the church is expected to go through the Endowment House, and that nearly all do so; that marriages are usually solemnized there, and that those who are married elsewhere go through tho Endowment ceremonies at as early a date thereafter as practicable, in order that the marital relation shall contitue throughout eternity. That these ceremonies occupy the greater part of the day, and include the taking of an oath, obligation or covenant, by all who receive their endowments, that they will avenge the blood of the Prophets, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, upon the Government of the United States, and will enjoin this obligation upon their children unto the third and fourth generation; that they will obey the President in all things, and will never reveal the secrets of the Endowment House under the penalty of having their throats cut from ear to ear, their bowels torn out, and their hearts cut out of their bodies. The right arm is anointed that it may be strong to avenge the blood of the prophets. An under garment, a sort of combination of shirt and drawers, called the endowment robe, is then put on, and is to be worn ever after. On this robe, near the throat, and over the heart, and in the region of the abdomen, are certain marks or designs intended to remind the wearer of the penalties that will be inflicted in case of a violation of the oath, obligation or covenant he or she has taken or made.

"On behalf of the applicants fourteen witnesses testified concerning the endowment ceremonies, but all of them declined to state what oaths are there taken, or what obligations or covenants are there entered into, or what penalties are attached to their violation; and these witnesses when asked for their reason for declining to answer, stated that they did so "on a point of honor," while several stated they had forgotten what was said about avenging the blood of the prophets. John H. Smith, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church, testified that all that is said in the endowment ceremonies about avenging the blood of the prophets is said in a lecture, in which the 9th and 10th verses of the sixth chapter of Revelations is recited, as follows:

"And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God and for the testimony which they held. And they cried with a loud voice saying, how long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth."

Other witnesses for the applicants testified that this is the only place in the ceremonies where avenging the blood of the prophets is mentioned.

John Clark, a witness for applicants, testified he took some obligations, made some promises, entered into some covenants in the Endowment House, and wore his endowment robes, but did not know the significance of the slit over the heart. E. L. T. Harrison, another of applicant's witnesses, testified he had a clear recollection that his right arm was washed, and something said about it being made strong to avenge the death of the Prophets, and that the names of Joseph and Hyrum Smith were not mentioned, but were understood to be among the number whose blood was to be avenged; and E. G. Woolley, a witness for the applicants, testified they were to pray to the Lord to avenge the blood of the Prophets. Every other witness for the applicants who was asked the question stated that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were understood to be included among the prophets whose blood was to be avenged.

The witnesses for the applicants, while refusing to disclose the oath, promises and covenants of the endowment ceremonies, and the penalties attached thereto, testified generally that there was nothing in the ceremonies inconsistent with loyalty to the government of the United States, and that the government was not mentioned. One of the objects of this investigation is to ascertain whether the oaths and obligations of the Endowment House are incompatible with good citizenship, and it is not for applicants' witnesses to determine this question. The refusal of applicants' witnesses to state specifically what oaths, obligations or covenants are taken or entered into in these ceremonies, renders their testimony of but little value, and tends to confirm rather than contradict the evidence on this point offered by the objectors. The evidence establishes beyond any reasonable doubt, that the endowment ceremonies are inconsistent with the oath an applicant for citizenship is required to take; and that the oaths, obligations or covenants there made or entered into are incompatible with the obligations and duties of citizens of the United States. The applications of John Moore and Walter J. Edgar, both of whom were shown on the former examination to be members of the Mormon Church, and to have gone through the Endowment House, are therefore denied.

As to the objection made to the admission of of the other applicants upon the ground solely of their being members of the Mormon Church, a large amount of evidence, mostly documentary, has been introduced, only a small portion of which can be noticed in this opinion without extending it to too great a length. The evidence consists mostly of the sermons and writings of the Mormon rulers and leaders, published under the direction of the church.

Then follows much of the evidence in the case upon which the Judge bases his opinion, which we omit; and the following is the closing part of the document:

As further showing how the Mormon Church honors those who violate the laws of the United States, it is only necessary to look at the cases of some of its leaders. John Taylor, lately one of the presidents of the Church, was indicted for unlawful cohabitation, and died while in hiding to avoid arrest, still retaining his position as president.

George Q. Cannon who is now one of the presidents of the Church, was indicted for the same offence, and was convicted and served a term in the penitentiary. Apostle John Henry Smith, a witness in this case, testified that he is a polygamist, and that he married his plural wife since the law of 1862 was passed prohibiting polygamy. Chas. W. Penrose, who was a witness in this case, and who was indicted for unlawful cohabitation, and was pardoned by the president of the United States, is today the Editor of the newspaper organ of the Church. Joseph F. Smith, who is also one of the presidents of the Church, is and has been for several years, under indictment for unlawful cohabitation, and has been hiding from the officers in order to avoid arrest.

It is claimed by counsel for applicants, and some evidence was introduced tending to show that in the Doctrine and Covenants and other church publications, obedience to the laws of the land is taught, and also that the Constitution of the United States is an inspired instrument; but the evidence discloses that the reason the Constitution of the United States is considered an inspired instrument is that it is construed by Mormons to prohibit the passing of any law against polygamy, and all such laws are considered by them as in violation of the Constitution. As to their teaching obedience to the laws of the land, it is only taught in general terms. During the ten days this investigation lasted, not a word of evidence was introduced or offered showing that any preacher or teacher of the church ever, in a single instance, advised obedience to the laws against polygamy. On the contrary, the evidence in this case, and the whole Mormon Church in Utah show that it has persistently refused obedience to at least a portion of the laws of the Government, has insulted and driven United States officers from the Territory, has denied the authority of the United States to pass laws prohibiting polygamy as unwarranted interference with their religion, and generally has antagonized and denounced the Government in almost every possible way. Undoubtedly there are many members of this church who feel friendly to the Government, and would gladly break the shackles that bind them to the Mormon priesthood if they felt that they dared do so; but with an organization the most thorough that can be imagined, which can be wielded against them, they remain in the church rather than take the risk of financial ruin and social ostracism.

The Mormon Church teaches: First: That it is the actual and veritable kingdom of God on earth, not in its fulness, because Christ has not yet come to rule in person, but for the present he rules through the priesthood of the church, who are his vice-gerents on earth.

Second: That this kingdom is both a temporal and a spiritual kingdom, and should rightfully control and is entitled to the highest allegiance of men in all their affairs.

Third: That this kingdom will overthrow the United States and all other governments, after which Christ will reign in person.

Fourth: That the doctrine of "blood atonement" is of God, and that under it certain sins which the blood of Christ can not atone for, may be remitted by shedding the blood of the transgressor.

Fifth: That polygamy is a command of God which if a member obeys he will be exalted in the future life above those who do not.

Sixth: That the Congress of the United States has no right under the Constitution to pass any law in any manner interfering with the practices of the Mormon religion, and that the acts of Congress against polygamy, and disfranchising those who practice it. are unwarranted interference with their religion.

Can men be made true and loyal citizens by such teachings, or are they likely to remain so surrounded by such influences? Will men become attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States when they hear the government constantly denounced as tyrannical and oppressive? It would be as unreasonable to expect such a result as it would be to expect to gather grapes from thorns or figs from thistles.

It has always been and still is the policy of this government to encourage aliens who in good faith come to reside in this country, to become citizens; but when a man of foreign birth comes here and joins an organization, although professedly religious, which requires of him an allegiance paramount to his allegiance to the government, and organization that impiously and blasphemously claims to be the kingdom of God, to control its members under his immediate direction, and yet teaches and practices a system of morals shocking to Christian people everywhere, and under which the marriage of a man to two or more sisters, or to a mother and daughter is sanctioned, an organization that sanctions blood atonement as a means of grace, and murder as a penalty for revealing the secrets of its ceremonies, and which for nearly half a century has refused to acknowledge the supremacy of the United States or render obedience to its laws, it is time for the courts to pause and inquire whether such an applicant spould be admitted to citizenship.

The evidence in this case establishes unquestionably that the teachings, practices and aims of the Mormon Church are antagonistic to the government of the United States, utterly subversive of good morals and the well being of society, and that its members are animated by a feeling of hostility towards the government and its laws, and therefore an alien who is a member of said church is not a fit person to be made a citizen of the United States.

The applications of Fred W. Miller, Henry J. Owen, John Berg, Charles E. Clissold, Nils Anderson, Carl P. Larsen, Thomas M. Mumford, John Garbett and Arthur Townsend, to become citizens are therefore denied.

THE RESURRECTION .- No. 4.

ONLY ONE EARTHLY PROBATION.

This life is a probation—a trial state—in which we are to be fitted for the joys, powers, and dominions of the eternal world. It is appointed unto all men to have but the one earthly probation. Of Christ, who "was made like unto his brethren in all things," Paul says:

"But now once, in the meridian of time hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this [one death] the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many."—Heb. 9:26-28.

Alma says that this life is man's only earthly probation.

"And we see that death comes upon mankind, yea, the death which has been spoken of by Amulek, which is the temporal death; nevertheless there was a space granted unto man in which he might repent; therefore this life became a probationary state; a time to prepare to meet God; a time to prepare for that endless state which has been spoken of by us, which is after the resurrection of the dead. . . . But it was appointed unto man that they must die; and after death, they must come to judgment, even that same judgment of which we have spoken, which is the end."—Alma 9:4.5.

"For behold, this life is the time for men to prepare to meet God: yea, behold the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors."

—Alma 16:30

We saw in a former quotation from 2 Nephi 6: 4, 5, that, after death, the spirits of the righteous go to paradise, and the spirits of the wicked go to hell, where they remain "until" their resurrection.

This precludes, then, forever, the idea of more than one earthly probation. God determined the probation of man before the world was; for Christ was as a Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world. Then the whole scheme of the creation, the fall, the redemption, and the eternal glory were all foreknown and provided for. (1 Pet. 1:19, 20; Rom. 16:25; 2 Tim. 1:9; Tit. 1:2.

Of this probation the Book of Abraham says:

"And they who keep their first estate, [in the spirit, before they receive earthly bodies,] shall be added upon; and they who keep not their first estate, shall not have glory in the same kingdom with those who keep their first estate; and they who keep their second estate, [earthly probation,] shall have glory added upon their heads forever and ever. And the Lord said, Who shall I send? And one answered like unto the Son of Man, Here am I, send me. And another answered and said, here am I, send me. And the Lord said, I will send the first. And the second [Satan] was angry, and kept not his first estate, and, at that day many, [spirits—spirits of devils,] followed after him."

All these passages go to show plainly, that man has but one earthly probation.

WHEN SHALL THE DEAD BE RAISED?

Alma said long before the resurrection of Christ:

"Behold there is a time appointed that all men shall come forth from the dead. Now when this time cometh, no one knows; but God knoweth the time which is appointed. Now whether there shall be one time, or a second time, or a third time, that men shall come forth from the dead, it mattereth not; for God knoweth all these things."—Alma 19:4.

Since the days of Alma much additional light has been given upon this subject.

We have seen that all the righteous dead, before Christ, were with Christ in His resurrection (D. C. 108:10), and that they received their crowns of glory. (Gen. 7:63.) Paul says concerning the future resurrection of the saints:

"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain until the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

Again:

"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God: neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I shew you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."—I Cor. 15: 50-54

Again:

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—Vs. 22, 23.

"For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."—Phil. 3: 20, 21.

"And I say thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first rusurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Rev. 20:4-6.

From the Doctrine and Covenants we learn that:

"The great day of the Lord is nigh at hand. For the day cometh that the Lord shall utter his voice out of heaven; the heavens shall shake and the earth shall tremble, and the trump of God shall sound both long and loud, and shall say to the sleeping nations; ye saints arise and live; Ye sinners stay and sleep until I shall call again."—Sec. 43:5.

Again,

"But before the arm of the Lord shall fall, an angel shall sound his trump, and the saints that have slept, shall come forth to meet me in the cloud. . . . Then shall the arm of the Lord fall upon all nations, and then shall the Lord set his foot npon this mount, [Olives], and it shall cleave in twain, and the earth shall tremble and reel to and fro; and the heavens also shall shake, and the Lord shall utter his voice and all the ends of the earth shall hear it, and the nations of the earth shall mourn, and they that have laughed shall see their folly, and calamity shall cover the mocker, and the scorner shall be consumed, and they that watch for iniquity shall be hewn down and cast into the fire. And then shall the Jews look upon me and say, What are these wounds in thy hands, and in thy feet? Then shall they know that I am the Lord; for I will say unto them, these wounds are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. I am he who was lifted up. I am Jesus that was crucified. I am the Son of God. And then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their King.

"And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them; and Satan shall be bound that he shall have no place in the hearts of the children of men. And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived; verily I say unto you, they shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, and shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver."—D. & C. 45: 7-10.

"And the graves of his saints shall be opened, and they shall come forth and stand on the right hand of the Lamb, when he shall stand upon Mount Zion, and upon the holy city, the New Jerusalem, and they shall sing the song of the Lamb, day and night forever and ever."—D. & C. 108: 10.

"And again, we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandment which he has given, that, by keeping the commandments, they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power; and who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true; they are they who are the church of the first-born; they are they into whose hands the Father has given all things: they are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fulness and of his glory, and are priests of the Most High after the order of Melchisedec, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the only begotten Son; wherefore as it is written, they are gods, even the sons of God; wherefore all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present, or things to come, all are theirs, and they are Christ's and Christ is God's; and they shall overcome all things; wherefore let no man glory in man, but rather let him glory in God, who shall subdue all enemies under his feet; these shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ forever and ever: these are they whom he shall bring with him, when he comes in the clouds of heaven, to reign on the earth over his people; these are they who shall have part in the first resurrection; these are they who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just; these are they who are come unto mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly place, ths holiest of all; these are they who have come to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and the church of Enoch, and of the first-born; these are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all; these are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood: these are they whose bodies are celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God the highest of all; whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical."-D C. 76: 5.

"And there shall be silence in heaven for the space of half an hour, and immediately after shall the curtain of heaven be unfolded, as a scroll is unfolded when it is rolled up, and the face of the Lord be unveiled; and the saints that are upon the earth, who are alive, shall be quickened, and be caught up to meet him. And they who have slept in their graves, shall come forth; for their graves shall be opened, and they also shall be caught up to meet him in the midst of the pillar of heaven: they are Christ's, the first fruits: they who shall descend with him first, and they who are on the earth and in their graves, who are first caught up to meet him; and all this by the sounding of the trump of the angel of God."—D. C. 85: 27.

By the foregoing quotations we learn that the saints will be resurrected just before the thousand years' reign, just before Christ's glorious appearing on earth, and that they will be caught up into the cloud to meet him in the air, and will stand at his right hand, enrobed like himself, and be crowned with his glory. We also learned by the quotation from section 45: 10, that at the time of Christ's coming, the "heathen nations" shall "be redeemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection." This would embrace little children, for they "know no law."

"Sin is not imputed when there is no law."—Rom. 5: 13.

"For where no law is, there is no transgression."—Rom 4: 15.

Abinadi says, those who have part in the first resurrection are those "that have died before Christ came, in their ignorance, not having salvation declared unto them. And thus the Lord bringeth about the restoration of these; and they have a part in the first resurrection, or have eternal life, being redeemed by the Lord." (Mosiah 8: 6.)

After this comes the redemption of those who have received the gospel in the prison:

"And after this another angel shall sound, which is the second trump; and then cometh the redemption of those who are Christ's at his coming; who have received their part in that prison which is prepared for them, that they might receive the gospel and be judged according to men in the flesh."—D. C. 85: 28.

The unjust, or wicked, they who negligently, or wilfully persist in sinning against light and truth, are not resurrected until the end of the thousand years, or the end of the millenium:

"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. . . . And I saw a great white thone, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was no place found for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which are written in the book, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the secand death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20: 5, 11-15.

"And again, we saw the glory of the telestial, which glory is of the lesser, even as the glory of the stars differs from that of the moon in the firmament; these are they who received not the gospel of Christ, neither the testimony of Jesus; these are they who deny not the Holy Spirit;

these are they who are thrust down to hell: these are they who shall not be redeemed from the devil, until the last resurrection, until the Lord, even Christ the Lamb, shall have finished his work; these are they who receive not of his fulness in the eternal world, but of the Holy Spirit through the ministration of the terrestrial; and the terrestrial through the ministration of the celestial; and also the telestial receive it of the administering of angels, who are appointed to minister for them, or who are appointed to be ministering spirits for them, for they shall be heirs of salvation. And thus we saw in the heavenly vision the glory of the telestial which surpasses all understanding; and no man knows it except him to whom God has revealed it. And thus we saw the glory of the terrestrial, which excels in all things the glory of the telestial, even in glory, and in power, and in might, and in dominion. And thus we saw the glory of the celestial, which excels in all things; where God, even the Father, reigns upon his throne forever and ever, before whose throne all things bow in humble reverence and give him glory for ever and ever. They who dwell in his presence are the church of the first born; and they see as they are seen, and know as they are known having received of his fulness and of his grace; and he makes them equal in power, and in might, and in dominion. And the glory of the celestial is one, even as the glory of the sun is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is one, even as the glory of the moon is one. And the glory of the telestial is one, even as the glory of the stars is one, for as one star differs from another star in glory, even so differs one from another in glory in the telestial world; for these are they who are of Paul and of Apollos and of Cephas; these are they who say they are some of one and some of another, some of Christ, and some of John, and some of Moses, and some of Elias; and some of Esaias, and some of Isaiah, and some of Enoch, but received not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus, neither the prophets; neither the everlasting covenant; last of all, these all are they who will not be gathered with the Saints, to be caught up unto the church of the first born, and received into the cloud; these are they who are liars, and sorcerers and adulterers, and whoremongers, and whosoever loves and makes a lie; these are they who suffer the wrath of God on the earth; these are they who suffer the vengeance of eternal fire; these are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God until the fulness of times, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, and shall have perfected his work, when he shall deliver up the kingdom and present it unto the Father, spotless, saving: I have overcome and have trodden the wine-press alone, even the wine-press of the flerceness of the wrath of Almighth God; then shall he be crowned with the crown of his glory, to sit on the throne of his power to reign forever and ever. But, behold. and lo, we saw the glory and the inhabitants of the telestial world, that they were as innumerable as the stars in the firmament of heaven, or as the sand upon the sea shore, and heard the voice of the Lord saying: These all shall bow the knee, and every tongue shall confess to him who sits upon the throne forever and ever; for they shall be judged according to their works; and every man shall receive according to his own works, and his own dominion in the mansions which are prepared, and they shall be servants of the Most High, but where God and Christ dwell they can not come, worlds without end. This is the end of the vision which we saw, which we were commanded to write while we were yet in the Spirit."—D. C. 76: 7.

"And again, another trump shall sound, which is the third trump; and then cometh the spirits of men who are to be judged, and are found under condemnation; and these are the rest of the dead, and they live not again until the thousand years are ended, neither again, until the end of the earth.

"And another trump shall sound, which is the fourth trump, saying, These are found among those who are to remain until the last day, even the end, who shall remain filthy stil."—D. C. 85: 29, 30.

And again, of those who will not repent it is said:

"I, the Lord, have said that the fearful, and the unbelieving, and all liars, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, and the whoremonger, and the sorcerer, shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Verily I say, that they shall not have part in the first resurrection."—D. C. 63: 5.

How terrible must be the condition of those who are denied resurrection until the end of the thousand years reign! How great their shame and contempt, who, by their rebellion against God, have forever deprived themselves of the Father and the Son, and the society of the just! And how unspeakably awful the fate of those who "remain filthy still"! Their fate is sealed—misery is their doom. They perish forever, self-reproached, self-condemned and self-destroyed. But "the righteous shall shine forth in the kingdom of their Father," forever and forever.

THE following, which we take from the Salt Lake Evening Times of the 27th ult., will interest our readers, especially those who see the need of having the lines made plain which so sharply and widely mark the differences between the genuine doctrine of the Saints and the Brighamite apostasy. Pres. Joseph Smith is setting forth the true light in respect to what was, now is, and ever must be, the authorized, genuine faith of those worthy to be called Latter Day Saints, and this serves to reveal, by contrast, the errors, evils, and blindness of Brighamism, or, in other words, the latter day apostasy, of which Brighamism is the chiefest and most prominent part. The Times editor, it will be seen, introduces the article of Pres. Smith in such a just and proper manner as gives marked emphasis to it. Here is what he says:

"So much has been preached in Utah upholding the doctrine of polygamy in direct violation of all laws of civilized government, and said preaching has been done under the name of Mormonism, that The Times again sought Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church, for his teachings on the subject of obeying all laws of the land.

"There is another strong point to show that the earlier teachings of Mormon doctrine were loyal to the government in the fact that a brother of Joseph Smith, the prophet, over fifty years of age, carried a musket through the entire war of the rebellion, and scores of other relatives done the same. From the Utah branch of Mormonism not a solitary oath-bound member served in either the Union or the Confederate army, but earnestly prayed for the destruction of both. Mr. Smith shows strongly the teachings of the church in its early days and the teachings yet of the many thousands of the Reorganized Church who live at peace with all people in many parts of the world as follows, under the head of, Is conservative Mormonism disloyal?"

And here is the article referred to:

IS CONSERVATIVE MORMONISM DISLOYAL?

Both contending political parties in Utah claim to be loyal to the United States government, but each charges the other with being at enmity with the Constitution. The Peoples' party claims that in the church in Utah the real friends of the American idea of constitutional and guaranteed liberty are found, and that in some way not yet defined, there is to be found in the church the saviors of the Constitution when that instrument and freeman liberties under it shall be in extreme danger. The Liberal party claims that while the church in Utah has been professing great reverence for the Constitution and for the government, there has been and is now a persistent disregard of the law and contempt for its executors, and an active effort to evade its provisions.

The conservative element in Mormonism will claim that while other sects are held to allegiance to the government and the law by reason of citizenship and the implied teachings of the New Testament Scriptures, the Church of Jesus Christ, organized in 1830, is held by these; and also by them to other and .qually strong obligations; these are, that God has chosen America to be the land upon which the experiment of a government by the people is to be demonstrated and carried to a grand and successful issue; and is also the land upon which the "new evangel" is to be revealed and taught, and to finally reach all men unto a due preparation for the righteous reign upon earth of a rishn and glorified Christ, unto whose rule all nations shall be subjected. That to accomplish this, the same Divine Ruler inspired men to embody in the Constitution, the foundation principles of a human government that would permit the preaching of the new evangel, and preserve the liberties of those who should be called to do such preaching. To enhance the sacredness of an observance of those principles and secure obedience to the laws that should be enacted under them, the church was commanded to keep the laws of the land.

The church was organized "agreeably to the laws of the country" in accordance with commands accepted as coming from God through revelation, in keeping with a cardinal feature that God could, had, would and did reveal his will directly to men upon the earth for the purpose of carrying out his designs, touching the redemption of man from the consequences of sin. Of this organization the history of the church states that it "was regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God in the fourth month and on the sixth day of the month which is called April." The church being organized by the command of God in recognition of the law, no member of that church is at liberty to suppose under any circumstances that he may do what God did not do, that is, to violate the laws of that country,—their country, whether by birth or adoption.

The law was still further recognized, when in 1831 the elders of the church were to be gathered together to receive charges concerning their work. The command to them then was: "They shall go forth into the regions round about, and preach repentance unto the people; and many shall be converted, insomuch that ye shall obtain power to organize yourselves, according to the laws of man."

That there might be no dubiety in the minds of those to whom this came, it was told them why they should so enter into association as religionists by law. It is as follows: "That your enemies may not have power over you, that you may be preserved in all things, that you may be enabled to keep my laws, that every band may be broken wherewith the enemy seeketh to destroy my people."

Whether there was or was not an organized effort to destroy the church at the time this instruction was given, there was considerable bitterness exhibited against some of the leading members, and some lawless prosecution. Some of those most bitter and relentless in urging this prosecution, would have been pleased to have had just cause against those leading men upon which to have arrangeed them in the courts, for violation of statutory enactments, the penalty for which would have been fine and imprisonment. As a precautionary measure to be observed by the elders of the church, and as a protection to the membership, respect for the law was counselled. Further than that, and of really better significance are the conditions named, preservation in all things, and the keeping of God's laws, both to result from such observance of the laws of man. This principle is equally positively enjoined by a charge given the church in August, 1831, which is as follows: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God, hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore, be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hands are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth."

The language and the import of the foregoing command are clear; and the command must first be repealed, or its import be utterly broken and rendered nugatory by a change in the purpose and design of God in establishing the church by revealing his will concerning it, before any member of the church is absolved from obligation to keep within the pale of the law by which his personal liberty is preserved. The length of time during which this command was to continue in force is stated; hence no other conclusion can be drawn from the words but that it was for all time.

Whatever may have been claimed by any one since 1831 respecting its being the duty of man to obey God rather than the laws of man, the members of that church which preceded the one in the valleys of Utah, and its rightful succession in the title of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, can make no claim not in keeping with the plain expression, "He that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land." This rule was given to American subjects, citizens of the Republic, dwellers upon the land on which they believe the laws of God were to be kept. There was not then and has not been since any reason to suppose that God would change or has changed the purpose or design; and none to suppose that he would be, or has been so unmindful of the rule given by himself as to give that people a command that would require them to break the laws under which he commanded them to organize and live, and which he said they had no need to break, while they kept his laws. One of the principles held by the church, said to have been given by revelation unto them, old as the world and good as all principles of light and truth are, states: "That which is governed by law is preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same."

The troubles and persecutions which have fallen upon Latter Day Saints have not been the result of their obedience to the statutory laws of the states where they lived. The charges made against them upon which they ware harassed and tormented, were for violations of law. If they were guilty punishment ought to have followed. If they were innocent the laws of the land enforced no penalty. The really just cause of complaint the Saints have had against the government of the United States, or any one of them, is that the executors of the laws failed to extend to them the protection from lawless oppression that was their due as citizens; the laws were not the channels through which their persecutions came; these persecutions were urged upon them contrary to and in disregard of law.

That this article may not fall pointless for want of application in the controversy between the parties named at the beginning of it, the following is offered as an illustration directly in point:

In the law given to the church in 1831 are the following rules of government: "Thou shalt not kill." "Thou shalt not steal." "Thou shalt not lie." "Thou shalt not commit adultery." "Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm." "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else." "Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not shall be cast out."

Again: "Whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordoined of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."

This was the law under which the rite of matrimony was to be celebrated, and the martial relations entered into and observed in the church according to the revelations understood and acknowledged to be of God. From them a declaration upon the subject was promulgated and published in 1835, which declaration runs thus: "All legal contracts of marriage made before a person is baptized into this church, should be held sacred and fulfilled."

"Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication and polygamy, we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again."

Polygamy, plural marriage, the practice of men having more than one wife with whom they live in the marriage relation at the same time, is one of the principal differences existing between the two parties in Utah as causes of political quarrel. The People's party claims sanction for this practice under a command of God authorizing it, and that for this reason neither the Liberal party nor the law should interfere with men who practice it. The Liberal party claims that the government of the United States is a human government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," and as such holds paramount claims upon the allegiance of all people who dwell in the regions of the earth over which that government extends; and that no citizen has right or privilege, either upon the motions of his own will, or upon a commrnd of God, to practice what is forbidden by that government.

It is fortunate for conservative Mormons and those who maintain it, that in the issue thus joined between these two parties in Utah, there is no necessity to argue whether men should obey the command of God, or human laws; for it is shown in this article by quotations from the laws given of God to the church which the Utah Mormon body claims to succeed and be identical with, that no such contingency could arise in the legitimate prosecution of the mission of that church. Obedience to the law is enjoined in every enactment of divine will touching the conduct of the members of that church as citizens of the land of America. And in regard to the domestic relation the rule is specific and clear; hence, he who has accepted those laws given to the church, has no need to ask himself whether he will obey a command to marry more than one wife, or observe the law of the land which makes such an act a crime; supposing the former to be a command from God, and the latter to be human only: for no such supposition can be raised. The law of the Lord to the church, and the laws of the land though they are human enactments, are in unity; to keep the law of God on the subject is to observe the laws of man; to break the laws of the land is to disregard the law of God.

The space given to this article does not permit a discussion of the origin and human author of the dogma of plural marriage in Utah; the design being only to answer the question: Is conservative Mormonism disloyal? No matter when, or by whom such tenet originated, it has no warrant in the law of the Lord, and no claim upon the faithful and consistent believer in Mormonism. The duty devolving upon true believers now, is to return at once to allegiance to the laws of God, and the laws of the land, in the willing obedience to which alone there is safety and continued and ultimate preservation. To persist in disregarding the provisions of the civil code and in breaking the laws of the land, is to continue in rebellion to the long accepted rules which should prevail in the church and with all true believers. It is high time that the conservative and saving element in Mormonism should awake to the magnitude of the issue now upon the people, and asserting itself put a stop to the painful spectacle being presented to the world, believing and unbelieving, devotee and heretic, of apostles and prophets, evangelists and teachers, high priests, seventies, priests and deacons being arraigned before the courts and condemned to prison for crimes of which they are guilty. If accused and condemned when they are innocent, imprisonment would be martyrdom; but being guilty, it is shameful. If they were innocent they would have the sympathy of the good everywhere; but guilty, the doors of pity are closed against them, and sympathy has no place for them; they suffer justly the penalty of outraged law, and justice with stern countenance and unmelting heart must punish them as evil doers. IOSEPH SMITH.

"The Methodist missionary convention which met in Kansas City, recently appropriated over $1,000,000 to foreign missions. It must be discouraging to the advocates of missions to read the following complaint of the decline of Methodism in New York and Brooklyn from the Rev. Dr. Roche. "Try as we may," said he "and use every endeavor, it is impossible to get a congregation. This state of affairs is not the fault of the ministers engaged in the work, for I have filled my pulpit with the most able preachers and the body of the church has not been half filled. There is no use trying—employ every device—you can not secure a congregation."—Kansas City Fournal, November 25th.

Does the Rev. Dr. Roche mean to say to Christianized (?) America, "Seeing ye count yourselves unworthy of Methodism, lo, we turn to the heathen"? Will it yet come to this? If after many years of growth and education modern Christendom rises up and rebels against the glaring inconsistencies of creedology, will not the heathen do likewise as his perceptions are also quickened by education and reflection?

How hardly shall they who are unwilling to believe in present inspiration arrive at the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth! Verily the modern religious teacher trusts in his learning and scholastic perceptions rather than in Him who declares himself to be "the same yesterday, to-day and forever," and who declares "the end from the beginning." "Tis true 'tis pity; 'tis pity indeed 'tis true."

"Man by his own wisdom can not find out God!"

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

This from Bro. E. C. Brand, Atchison, Kansas:

"Baptized a fine young man (Methodist) last week in Atchison; his wife nearly ready. Am now preaching at Oak Mills."

Bro, John G. Holman of near Conneautville, Crawford county, Pennsylvania, wrote, the 25th ultimo, as follows:

"Brn. Griffiths and Powell were here a short time ago and preached for us, baptizing one and leaving others investigating."

Thus the gospel wins its way in the vicinity of Conneaut creek, the former residence of Solomon Spaulding. The wisdom of Solomon the Hebrew is not always justified of his namesakes. "What's in a name!"

Bro. and Sr. Holman were baptized a few years after the death of the Martyrs. Remaining firm in the faith and refusing to follow the fickle fortunes of self-constituted religious leaders, they rejoice in the fruits of their steadfast labor and constancy, which now appear in the organization of a branch in their neighborhood, with good prospects of others being added to the church there. A few members who are steady and sensible in their religious course furnish a better basis for the establishment of a successful branch than fifty or a hundred who are either hot, cold or lukewarm in the faith. The light of truth includes the inspiration of common sense. That followed, things move along smoothly; and all things work together for good. Let us cultivate that worthy virtue and thus build with gold, silver and precious stones. Paul commended some of the Saints in his day, and we may properly commend others if we do not descend to flattery-the garb of hypocrisy, deceit, and that which is foreign to the spirit of sincerity and frankness.

Bro. Wm. Chapman of Scranton, Kansas, wrote the 2nd inst. as follows:

"I believe if more of the Saints would do as I have done more of the church publications could be sold. Some of the brethren could not pay all at once, so I let them pay in installments."

The efforts of Bro. Chapman are commendable. Such aid the HERALD office and give others a knowledge of the work.

Elder J. A. Currie Jr. writes from San Antonio, Texas, the 27th ult.:

"Elder H L. Thompson and the writer will leave by train for Gonzales county tomorrow. We expect to hold a series of meetings there. God is certainly blessing our efforts and the work is moving onward."

SR. MARY WINSHIP of St. Marys, Elk county, Pennsylvania, wrote the 24th ultimo, asking prayers for herself and family who are by isolation debarred from the full privileges of communion with the church. She desires to correspond with some Saints living in a branch where there are coal mines, as she desires to rear her children in the faith—we suppose by removing where she can better do so.

Sr. Winship also asks an explanation of the mysterious references to Melchisedec in King James version of the Bible. In reply we quote from the Inspired Translation and Doctrine and Covenants:

"For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation king of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is, King of peace; for this Melchisedec was ordained a priest after the order of the Son of God, which order was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life. And all those who are ordained unto this priesthood are made like unto the Son of God, abiding a priest continually."—Heb. 7: I-3.

"There are, in the church, two priesthoods, namely: the Melchisedek, and the Aaronic, including the Levitical priesthood. Why the first is called the Melchisedek priesthood, is because Melchisedek was such a great high priest: before his day it was called the holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God; but out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the church, in ancient days, called that priesthood after Melchisedek, or the Melchisedek priesthood."—D. C. 104:1.

TO DISTRICT SECRETARIES.

THE HERALD editors find it necessary to again call attention to the manner of preparing minutes of all district conferences. It is strictly necessary in order to economize the space in the HERALD, and which the growing demands of the church require should be carefully used, that these matters receive close attention. In reports of districts, Sunday School associations, and all business matters, it is not necessary to publish reports of officers, or lengthy constitutions and by-laws. Secretaries are requested to hereafter omit every unnecessary item, such as the approval of minutes, reports of officers, etc. It is only necessary to state who have reported, the number baptized and the statistical reports, when refering to officials and branches. Cut all items down as closely as possible in order to make room for more important The items omitted in the publication of minutes should be recorded on the local records. They are only of interest to their respective districts or associations.

OF LATE we have received numerous large orders for papers, books, pamphlets and tracts. Some of the largest of these came from brethren Brand, Forscutt, Bond, Bohall, Cornish, Waller, Roth, Short, Caffall, Clapp, H. C. Smith, Edward Rannie, etc., etc. These parties are building up the work of God in this manner rapidly and effectively, and this, added to their ministerial work in personal teaching from the pulpit and elsewere, makes their ministrations particularly prominent and valuable in advocating and forwarding the interests of the church of God.

This is as it should be. Every one who procures the distribution of our church works are fellow helpers in the Lord, and such, whether ministers or members, male or female, old or young, are worthy and will receive the reward of the Lord's workers according to their deeds. We would be glad to see others, and all who can, exhibit the same wisdom, zeal and industry in this direction as the aforementioned.

Our letter register for the ensuing year shows a gain of more than fifteen per cent over last year in the number of business letters received, and indications show that that ratio will be largely increased in the near future.

The wheels of progress are increasing their speed and momentum in the various departments of the church, and the publishing house is anxious and determined to keep full pace with the demands and opportunities of the times. Those helping this department help the church in all its work, for when one department prospers, all are partakers of the benefit.

THE business manager, Bro. D. Dancer, desires all who are in arrears on subscriptions for church publications to pay up therefor by next January 1st, or as near so as they can, and thus begin the year 1890 free of any indebtedness to the printer for church publications. He is likewise desirous that all the saints, and their friends, and especially the ministry, including branch officers, do the best they can, and as early as they can, to get subscribers for the church papers, and purchasers for our books, pamphlets and tracts.

All business letters with the office should be sent to D. Dancer, all letters for the editorial department should be sent to the editors, and all letters and documents pertaining to the First Presidency should be directed to either Joseph Smith or W. W. Blair. Please don't fail to observe this order, for by heeding it confusion, delay, misunderstanding and loss will be avoided, and the work of the office will be facilitated. These suggestions are offered in the interest of orderliness and systematic methods, and close observance of them will benefit both the senders and receivers. Try them according to directions; and if they don't pay well no charges will be made.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. M. H. BOND wrote "Thanksgiving day" from Providence, Rhode Island, that he would leave the day following for New York or Brooklyn to hold a series of meetings. The Empire state offers a choice field for some of our ministry. May it soon be occupied, and, so successfully, that from New York City to the Hill Cumorah the honest in heart therein may rejoice and walk in the light. Reorganization will yet reach all those localities where once the faith was preached and in which many converts were made. Not westward alone does the rising star of Christ's spiritual empire wend its way: "All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.'

A brother wrote us from Utah the 1st inst., that the late decision of Judge Anderson is in effect that, "No alien who is a member of the Mormon Church [Brighamite] is fit to be an American citizen, and is not entitled to naturalization;" also that "the Endowment oath is incompatible with the duties of an American citizen." He further says: "This has fallen like a thunder clap from a clear sky and has startled the community as nothing has for years."

Bro. Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, England, wrote the 18th ult.: "The work in this mission is moving on and prospects are encouraging."

"Preaching nearly every night. Now and then one comes into the church," writes Bro. A. J. Moore from Ross Grove, Missouri, November 28th.

Bro. J. L. Boyd, of Detroit, Minnesota, writes: "The church papers give me much joy,"

Bro. Lucien B. Richmond, of Wellsville, Kansas, wrote of late, expressing the satisfaction he feels in and the blessings he derives from being associated with the latter day work. He feels desirous of coming up higher and also to aid the good cause, as best he can.

A sister asks where it is written that the nations will grow weaker and wiser in the latter days. We know of no such prediction.

Bro. Thomas Matthews, of Syracuse, Ohio, wrote the 26th ult., that himself and little daughter were very sick, and have been for three weeks seriously so. He desires to inform the brethren and Saints in his mission of his condition and the cause of his non-appearance among them. Let Bro. Matthews and family be remembered before the Lord in their severe sickness.

Bro. A. P. Larson, of Nephi, Utah, sends for Herald, Autumn Leaves, Inspired Translation of the Bible, and tracts. He expresses profound gratitude for the light and comfort he derives from our church publications and is anxious to disseminate the light so far as lies in his power. This is well.

Sr. McIntyre, of St. Joseph, Missouri, renews for HERALD in good season. We trust it may throw comforting rays of heavenly light on the pathway of her lonely widowhood.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"The summer warmth has left the sky,
The summer songs have died away;
And withered in the footpaths lie
The fallen leaves, but yesterday
With ruby and with topaz gay."

DEAR SISTERS:—I am now in the central part of California, away up among the hills of San Benito, where we lived when the gospel came to us.

When my husband and I abandoned the seafaring life, and came with our little family across the continent to California, and wended our way over and around the many hills until we entered this, then unsettled valley, save by one farm only, we felt that we were lost to both the pleasure-seeking and the religious world. But none are so lost that the loving Father can not find them. Nay, his watchcare is ever over them though they know it not. And it often becomes necessary for him to remove them from all dazzling allurements of worldly life, that he may lead them to something higher and better. "Come away into the desert and I will speak with thee." And so it was with us; our being lost to the world proved to be our finding in Christ,

Yes; it was here among these hills that He sent his servants, saying in answer to their inquiring prayer, "Show us this night whether we shall go onward, or return?"

"Go on yet farther, for there are some even now praying for the gospel, and I will go before you and prepare their hearts."

It was in the morning of the selfsame night in which that answer to prayer was given, that I was shown in a vision the "shining city" and the road which led thereto; and also that I was not in that road. That I must return and do my first works over — repentance and baptism — ere I could enter.

It was here, too, that about three months later, when wearied with my days' work, and being all alone in the house, I took up the little Herald (the first number we had ever seen) and read an article on the gift and power of healing the sick. All this was new and strange to me then and I became lost in wonder concerning the "great work in these last days." The elders had told us of this power being in the church, but as yet we had not seen it manifested.

I tried to read another article but my thoughts wandered from it. Being in a reclining posture, I laid the Herald over my face and gave myself up to thought concerning what I had been reading, and what a wonderful thing it was that the diseased and suffering ones could be healed in these days just the same as in the days of the apostles, when the words, "You shall have it." were loudly whispered in my ear, and I felt the warm breath on my face as it came forth with the words. I sprang up in astonishment, believing it to be my brother George, and wondered within myself how he could have entered the house without my feeling his step on the floor; but was still more surprised when I saw no one in the room. Then I thought he was playfully trying to give me a bit of a scare, and had skipped into the other room; still wondering how he could have made his exit so quickly, but never doubting that it was he-for my husband was thirty miles away and the children were at school. I went in hasty persuit into the front room. There was no one there. Well, thought I, you are giving me a chase at "hide and seek." And out I ran through the open front door and made the circuit around the house as fast as I could, but still did not sight him till I came around to the front of the house again and stood for a moment wondering if he had entered the house by the back door. Just then I looked over towards his place and saw him at work in his own yard, and there was not a living soul on our place except myself. The silence suddenly became oppressive, a strange feeling of awe took possession of me as I entered the house and only had strength to cross the room when I rank into a chair trembling like a leaf; for now I knew that the voice and the breath was from some being, not of earth. But it was a voice and it was breath that suffused my cheek, as warm and natural, as if it came from a human

But where shall I stop? The foregoing is only one link in the chain of events that makes these dear old hills now looking so green and beautiful, spotted over with majestic oaks—a place of almost sacred memory.

But what I have written was not in my mind to write when I first took up my pencil. No, I have digressed. My intention was to tell, for the encouragement of some weary mothers who have to stay at home nearly all the time, of what a great and good work one sister, a mother who lives a few miles from here, has done for the church. Her work did not consist in giving financial aid, though I believe she did all that was required of her in that line, for her means were very limited. Nor was it in writing, for she never wrote more than three or four letters to the Herald, (but they were good ones), nor did she ever go on a mission. Oh, no! She had so many children she never went anywhere scarcely, except to church or to attend a district conference. Then she made it a point not to let any work keep her from taking as many of the children as was practicable and going. Perhaps some mother who has a large family is wondering how she could havn done such a great work for the church, seeing it takes about all their time to see to their children. Well, that is just what she did. She saw to it that her children were instructed in the principles of the gospel. It never became an old story in that house as it has in some. Yet it is a truth that the warm love and earnest desire that is first felt in the work, is lost sight of after a time by many. They allow the cares of the world to choke out much of the good seed sown in the heart. But not so with this family. The gospel, the latter day work, has ever been first in their minds. All else is made secondary, and they have so instilled it into the hearts of their children that it has brought them not only into the church, but forward in the work. Her young men are a credit to the class. All the family who are old enough are members of the church, not silent members, but active. Two have been called to the priesthood, one ordained. One is district secretary, but the voice of the Spirit to him is full of promise for a noble and useful life in the gospel work.

At home these children are obedient and kind to each other, and thoughtful toward their mother. The young men do not think it beneath them to take up their little baby brother and amuse him to rest their almost worn out mother This work looks more strikingly creditable because circumstances and surroundings, in many ways, have been adverse to the proper training of their children. Nor did they naturally inherit religious principles from either of their parents. I have heard the father say "when the gospel came to him he was a most unpromising subject." But the fruits of the gospel took deep root in their hearts, and they both became, through grace, what they were not by nature. He is an elder and has assisted much no doubt in the rearing of the family, but as he is away from home often that work devolves largely upon the mother.

She now looks weary and worn with the years of trial and privation that have filled up her life. Whether she realizes the fact or not, others can see that she has wrought a good work. Few mothers have accomplished so much. And though there may be but little rest for her head, the rest and the reward will come on the other side of the river. What joy to be able to say at the great day of reckoning, "Father, here are my children, all that thou has given me, I have kept them and not one is lost." Truly "her children will rise up and call her blessed," and her sons will be her crown of rejoicing.

Oh, mothers! each one of you have a little missionary field of your own in which a glorious work can be done, and in that work is the light of the gospel made to shine forth to the world.

SISTER EMMA.

SAN BEN: To, Cal., Nov. 22, 1889.

Blessed, aye thrice blessed, is the child born into a home like this. Welcomed as a gift from God and trained up to be an heir of glory and immortality. It is a very small thing to say, "I would rather be that mother, than the Queen of England," for the humblest saint of God has nothing to envy Queen Victoria for. I would as soon be that mother as Michael the archangel. for she has done her appointed work nobly and well—the angel has done no more. And just here the thought occurs to us, had every father and mother done this, could we number the church of God today without going beyond the tens of thousands? O my soul, what a mighty host have been lost to her of those born in her own fold! There comes to us a wail of sadness from young wives into whose keeping God has entrusted no little ones. Their hearts like Hannah's of old are bowed down and refuse to be comforted. Into our listening ear is poured the dread, the sorrow of yet others who feel that the cares of maternity laid upon them are greater than they can bear. Oh, mothers in Zion! shake your garments from the sins of Babylon. Put your trust in the living God and accept as sacred charges the children he sends you. Train them up in his fear and in the morning of the resurrection they will be gems in your crown of rejoicing which will outrival the sun in his brightness. Let it not enter the heart of any mother that this work is small, for it is great and when we are faithful to our trust great will be our reward.-ED.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Oct. 30th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I am still strong in the faith and my desire is to see God's people stead-fast and humble before him. I have many trials and dark clouds pass over me, but the Lord has been good to me when I was humble and trusted in him.

Dear sisters and members of the Prayer Union, I ask God to bless you all and that you may prove faithful and continue in well doing and God will answer your requests. Pray for me that I may prove faithful and that God will remove the dark cloud from me, and send one of his true servants to break the bread of life to us again, for we do not have much preaching here. This field is not much cared for by the elders and we do feel so forsaken in Cedar Rapids without the church.

MINNIE LEMBURG.

NEW PARK, Pa., Nov. 3d.

Sister Frances:-I have felt many times to write to the Home Column and tell the sisters and mothers in Zion how much strength I have received through their instruction. I can truly say this work is of God and the signs do follow them that believe. I feel it my duty to bear my testimony to the readers of the Home Column. My little boy who has been afflicted with a spinal disease for three years, and could not walk. is, through the kindness of God, almost as well as he ever was, and is gaining strength every day. He wanted me to write to the sisters to ask Jesus to make him well; and I wrote some time in the summer; I do not know what time now, but in two or three weeks after I had written he was by my side and said to me, "Mamma. Jesus has made me well," and he got better from that day. Oh how I thank my God for his kindness! I also thank him that he gives me an understanding of the gospel, for I know this gospel is true, and oh, how I love it! Our branch is scattered so that but few can meet, but we meet once a week. We have one priest and one teacher, but our teacher is some distance away and can not meet with us very often. We would be glad if Bro. W. H. Kelley would visit us. He would find a home with us, and I think much good could be done. My prayer is for the welfare of Zion. I remain,

Your sister in the one faith,

MOLLIE S. MATTHEWS.

Correspondence.

EUREKA, Kans., Nov. 28th.

Dear Friends:—It has been two years the eleventh of this month since my husband and myself were baptized into the Church of Christ by Bro. Moses Turpen. I have never regretted the step I have taken, but I thank my Heavenly Father that I ever came to the knowledge of this great latter day work, for I know it is a marvel and a wonder and God prepares the hearts of some even beforehand.

I will relate a dream I had two years before I had any knowledge of this church: I dreamed I went to the post-office and at the door on the outside there were a great many men, women and children. Some were weeping bitterly. I was at a loss to know what this meant. I thought they had come out of the post-office. I went on into the office and called for my mail, and as I did so my voice sounded and echoed back very solemnly and mournfully. I thought the office had been moved from the north side of the house to the center. As I called for my mail two men came from the north side. One went to where the letters were and handed me one with just my given name on the back: but when I opened it there was nothing but a clean sheet of paper in it. I did not know what this meant. I would like very much for some one if they can interpret my dream to do so.

Your sister,

CYNTHIA CATO.

COLDWATER, Mich., Nov. 20th.

Dear Herald:-I want to say a word to encourage your readers to make special efforts to supply themselves with the literature of the church, and answer many of my correspondents who inquire about the merit of the Autumn Leaves. I was really surprised in visiting some parts of my mission to find so many who had never seen the magazine, and I wish to illustrate its estimated value by one new subscriber for this month. An energetic, deserving brother, R. Hartnell, of Juniata, says: "The first number of Autumn Leaves has come and is mostly read. I did not expect to find in it such valuable and instructive reading. I would refuse ten dollars for this number if it could not be replaced. I shall do all I can to procure subscribers, for it ought to be placed in every family of the Saints, and also among the world as a

And we may add, and is more than necessary food for the intellectual child of God, to keep pace with the stirring events of the church, and yet keep out of the contentious battle fields that bring so many harsh feelings into the ecclesiastical conflict. It sharpens the appetite and rounds up the religious knowledge of those who are thirsting after righteousness.

The Herald gives more details of current events, elders' reports, and withal, deals with the unpleasantness of the abominable latter day apostasy and unsavory things connected therewith, while Autumn Leaves, in a word, helps the student to keep in memory the wonderful maxim of the great apostle when he said: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

And, dear Saints, it is almost indispensible for real, living faith in God, that you have the brilliant magazine, so elegantly and ably edited by the philanthropic educator of Zion's children, sister M. Walker. She was born in the church, reared in its love, saw its glorious and rapid strides from conquering to conquer, with its tens, yea, hundreds of thousands flocking to the standard of Prince Emanuel until its fall in 1844 and during that dark and dreadful day of despondency that followed, when most of the Saints hung their harps on the weeping willow, to mourn, she, true to her indomitable nature, entered one of the great institutions of learning in our glorious republic, as though by inspiration led, for renewal of strength to write and prepare for the reorganization of the Church of God, to gather its forces to consummate the work in robing the bride for the marriage supper of the Lamb. And then O, how quickly and with what courage she again rallied to its side that Zion's banner might be unfurled aloft to every nation, kingdom and people.

And there are hundreds and thousands of young men and women in the church who ought to have the benefit of her careful culture and efforts, that their minds may be well stored with the history of the church, and with the real spirit of the latter day work in all its grandeur, unalloyed with stupidity of foolish apostates, or sectarian cant. Or if you wanted to hand anything to your friend to read and elucidate the beauties of the gospel of Christ, without bringing anything before them to crimson your own cheek with shame, the Autumn Leaves is just the thing to hand to them, brim full of the choice literature of the church, interspersed with doctrine good for the most fastidious, and fascinating to the young and growing mind. The sage and would-be teacher of the popular religious world is challenged with admiration in reading its glittering pages, and we fear no attacks upon its real worth from our most bitter enemies.

And now is the time for every family in the church to quickly subscribe for it, so as to secure the third volume without the loss of a single number. If you expect to make any holiday presents there are none so valuable for lasting good as a volume of Autumn Leaves.

I have often been informed of conversions to Christ through its balmy influences, and I feel to exhort you all, for your own good, not to neglect it. Let every one who is interested in the salvation of souls resolve themselves into a committee of one to work in the interest of the church publications, not for any money there is in it, but for the everlasting and eternal good that will surely come to the perishing world; it is the cheapest and best manner to introduce our glorious hope in a silent yet effective way to the most prejudiced against Christ's gospel.

Now is the time to strike for victory and glory, and thus help in ministering the word of life and gain the reward of those who shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

With great esteem and love, I am, your fellow-laborer in this last kingdom,

E. C. Briggs.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Nov. 29th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Yours from Council Bluffs received. For its cheering news accept my thanks; and for Globe and Bee.

A Mr. Mercer, a Liberal, and the owner of "Agnostic Hall," Ogden, assured me week before last that he felt satisfied he could get the Tabernacle in Ogden for me to speak in. I thought not, but consented to let him try. So last week I sent him word I would come up Wednesday of this week, which I did. But his application met with no success. He reported a failure; for those controlling the Tabernacle said: "We are in considerable trouble just now, and he [Joseph Smith] is hostile to us. We prefer not to let him have it." This was a courteous but sufficient denial; so our trip to Ogden failed.

Bro. Enoch King made application for the Ward House at Kay's Ward, but was refused. However, we were offered a hall—private hall—there. Have not yet determined to occupy.

Bro. John Taylor succeeded in getting the "Old School-house" at Plain City for one night; so on Monday, November 18th, I spoke in that place. The audience was not a very large one, though the house was fairly filled. There was some unruly ones who disturbed those who wished to hear, both inside and outside of the house. Some eight or ten men and women got up when I began to quote from the law of 1831, in Doctrine and Covenants, and went out. I waited till all were out and then proceeded with my argument. No one was present from whom to secure the house for further services, so we came away. The weather was damp, snowy and rainy.

We drove to Bro. Weaver's, at Layton, and spoke there Thursday and Friday nights, November 21st and 22d. Audiences small, owing, probably, to wet weather and dark nights. However, as at Plain City, there was some disturbance by whispering and laughing among some young men, while I reproved; the first time I have had occasion for such a course on my entire trip. We occupied a School-house controlled by the Episcopalians, Rev. Young, pastor.

From Bro. Weaver's we drove to the city Saturday the 23d, where I spoke Sunday at two and 7:30 in the afternoon, the audience in the evening being quite good and very attentive; only one, and he a young man, going out during the service.

Monday, the 25th, drove to Bro. Weaver's, and Thursday to Ogden; spent one day there and drove back to this city yesterday.

The weather the last two days is splendid. .

I surmise no reasons for the refusal of houses at Ogden and Kaysville. The authorities in charge preferred not to let me occupy, for reasons good to them, doubtless, and we complain not.

We, all of us, regretted that we were disturbed at Plain City and Layton, but think it likely that it was simply youthful exuberance and ill manners. We venture to express the hope that children of members of the Reorganized Church have been taught better behavior, and have within themselves more noble spirits than we saw exhibited at the two places named. Who the parties were, or what their parentage, we do not know; we do know, however, that they need discipline of both brain and heart.

The elders of the Reorganized Church traveling in Utah, Idaho and Montana, as well as everywhere else, most earnestly trust that no house controlled by the church which they represent will be refused to any properly accredited minister of a believing body of worshipers, when it is possible to grant such use, no matter how widely the faith of those ministers may be from our own. And when such use is granted, we hope, and request, that our officers will see that the services are not disturbed, either by hoodlumism, or grown up indolence. Bro. R. J. Anthony has been with me the entire trip; joining in its labors and its services.

In bonds,

Joseph Smith.

BAY VIEW, Washington, Nov. 7th.

Dear Herald:—I live out here away from all the branches of the church. There is but one other family besides mine that belong to the Saints. I think if an elder would come here he would reap a rich harvest. A great many never heard the gospel as we teach it. I often wish I had the strength to tell them of God. I am weak and need the prayers of the Saints and I ask you to pray for us that we may be faithful. Pray with me that God in his goodness will send a messenger here to tell us how to be saved. I have not been to a Latter Day Saint meeting or heard a sermon as our elders used to preach for over five years. I sometimes grow weak in faith, but I know this is the work of God.

Your sister,

ETTIE HILSINGER.

McKinney, Wis., Nov. 22d.

It rained here here yesterday, snowed last night, and is blustering to-day. The tall Norway Pine—straight as an Indian, and as elegant and symmetrical as many fondly-cherished liberty poles, or the mast and yard of a well-equipped sail-ship—rocks to and fro, and echoes forth a plaintive, doleful, lonesome rhythm. The stately sentinels of the hills and margins of the marsh, call to their white wood evergreen genus and species of the low-lands and bogs; while the german cousins join the sad cadence. The solemn sounds remind one of the dirge of dissolving nature, or the requiem of a dying world.

"The fir trees shall be terribly shaken," [see Nahum 2d] for lo! the hand of man is upon the forest; while wind and fire contribute to mutilate the woods, and mar and despoil the glory of "God's first temples." Two mills within a few rods of my temporary studio, and less than half a mile apart, are using up, on an easy average, a log to the minute; and soon they are to run night and day.

All modern improvements are brought into ready use; and thus lumber, shingles, and laths are manufactured with wonderful rapidity. The camp is generally irreligious, and the few that have a faith are damaged thereby; because a false devotion is a positive injury.

I do not think the gospel had ever been proclaimed in this county till the 14th instant, when my co-laborer and I appeared on the sandy scene. We opened up six miles south of this place in a rural district. This settlement was originally occupied by the dispersed followers of the polygamous apostate, James J. Strang. This portentous fraud arose to public notoriety after the death of the two martyred brothers had sealed their testimony and mortal toils with their blood. He began his arrogant career of usurpation in Voree, now a quiet suburb of Burlington, Racine county, Wisconsin.

He moved his heretical crew, en masse, to Beaver Island, situated in Lake Michigan. There he arose to the zenith of his transitory power and despotic rule. A member of the politico-ecclesiasticism, by the name of Thomas Bedford, because he divulged their thievings, was whipped with forty lashes save one, as per the penalty of the pseudo king; for forsooth, the false prophet claimed kingly prerogatives, and had been duly crowned.

The Johnny Bull blood that coursed warm through the Briton's veins, grew hotter still under such radical, unhallowed treatment. He secured the co-operation of two sympathizing friends, viz., Alex. Wentworth and Bro. McCullough. An iron clad war-ship came to the island port, anchored in the harbor, and Strang was sent for, by, it is thought, the captain of the vessel. Having been drawn into ambush the three confederates opened a deadly volley, and several shots took effect, in the head and chest, and proved fatal; for he lingered and died in a few weeks, being brought, ere his demise, back to Vorce. The unfortunate colony was soon after broken up, their houses were burned, and their goods and chattels purloined, under the plea of confiscation.

The Brighamites struck a rich harvest here among the dispirited, disappointed Strangites that held substantially to the same theory as touching marriage. They have convened several conferences in the McMett neighborhood, and have had a score of elders, on one occasion, at the aforesaid meeting. Several families, and parts of the household bands have gathered, and the remainder have the fever to go to the fat (?) vallies of Ephraim. A man named Doty took two sisters to wife, propagated from both, left them on the grass, and absconded for parts unknown. One of these women united with the Utah hierarchy, and is now over in Michigan trying to convert her sister. Her daughter married one John Shelhammer, now of Viroqua. They had a child, the mother in the meantime connected her fortune, or rather misfortune, with Utah Mormonism. She abandoned her husband, but he came to see his only child, when it was six months old, and when he got his hands on the prize he beat a lively retreat, and protested that he would slaughter some of the emissaries that thought to interfere. He thus stood them a bay, for, troth, they saw vengeance and blood in his eye. He holds the child, while the once happy wife is in Salt Lake Clty. Her sister married a Mr. Ketcham of Presbyterian sympathies. They have two small children, but the wayward young wife is at Grand Rapids, Michigan, with her mother, trying to influence relatives and friends to behold the beauties of polygamous wedlock. She too will gather, it is believed; but her husband is not made that way.

The son of Strang parted from his wife, but she heard the "celestial law of marriage," accepted the philosophy, gathered, and wedded one of the missionaries. And thus confusion and odium heap disgrace, even on the fair fame and name of our church.

The harem has withdrawn its missionaries from Dakota, Minnesota, and this state, and say for their membership to flee to the valleys, for, zounds! they are doomed. I am stopping with a family that belong to the Utah church. They are ever so kind, have ten children, poor in worldly goods, talk up plurality strong, have two sons in Ephraim, Colorado, and think to go there soon. And thus you have a birds-eye view of my uncanny surroundings.

Bro. William S. Pender left me all alone last Monday, and is now in Vernon county, where he hoped to co-operate with and be joined by Elder A. L. Whiteacer. These two good men have worked together some hitherto, and have been greatly blessed.

Bro. Pender baptized five at the Valley Junction recently. The church there is less than a year old, and numbers thirty-six. The Saints are all exremely poor there, and the land is sandy and light. When the blue and cranberry season is passing they betake themselves to the hills for the former, and to the swamps for the latter, and in this way help to earn a livelihood. They are generous for their ability, and kind and clever. They intend to erect a chapel for Sunday School, and to worship in. And by the way, I wish those full handed, and humane would aid them in this laudable enterprise, by sending your liberality to Elder Jonas W. Hancock, Valley Junction, Monroe county, Wisconsin.

I also appeal, most earnestly, to all the Saints throughout this Western Wisconsin district, to send your sysematic benevolence to the Bishop's Agent, at once and from time to time; so that the financial custodian of the church, and your humble servant, can perfect arrangements, upon a cash basis, to have our esteemed Bro. A. L's hands untied, so that be can go forth, and remain in the active field service from henceforth. He is ready, willing, ardent and devoted; and withal, the most available man, to my knowledge, throughout the state. He is both apt to teach, and willing to learn, as also of a cheerful disposition, and of a hopeful heart. He stands first class as a citizen, and is noted for his integrity; and if the church members do not raise the pittance, I will feel hurt, and as though I had bestowed toil, time, and means on you you all in vain. I know of several with experience and application who, with time, chance and opportunity would speedily become able representive ministers. If our people loved this work at all times, as well as their testimonies would indicate by times, there would be enough money raised to defray all lawful expenses. How would it do to first obey, second pay, and third pray. The treasurer writes of lean coffers, but hopes for the better. The poor ought to come to the rescue, for the rich seldom will. Some rely upon what they have done, but, forsooth! the "water that is past never turns the mill." Others are "just a going to Massa," forgetting that while "the grass was growing the horse starved to death." I would spurn any church, or people, that would ask the head of a family to leave home, and loved ones, and allow the wolf of poverty, and distress, to show his white teeth, and howl around "home sweet home." My spirit would be broken, my tongue would cleave to the roof of my mouth, and my oft weary feet would bend homeward at once and forever, did I not know that the loved household band had ample.

The elder's families should practice decent economy, while they ought, in all good faith, to ever thrust in their sickles and in this way the sacrifice and blessings would be mutual all around.

The only loophole I can see out of wholesale rejection and a complete forfeiture of our claim to being the people of the living and true God, is that to the church, the bride, the Lamb's wife "was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white, for the fine linen is the righteousness of Saints." Bye and bye all the faithful will exclaim, "Let us be glad and rejoice and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."

Should I fail of the "robe and crown," after all the long years of anxiety, pain and missionary labor, I would feel "perfectly awful," I trow. I oftentimes tremble and fairly reel beneath the heavy cross, but thus far, thanks be to God most high, I have been upheld.

One additional day has brought clear skies and balmy air for the season and this high latitude. A full fortnight since we called on and spent several hours with the Winnebagoes. Some lived in houses, while many domiciled in miserable wigwams or rude tents. They were eking out their aimless lives in ignorance, sloth, filth, indolence, drunkenness, and bestiality. We assayed to preach the gospel to these "noble Reds (?) but there was a destitution of books, and they did not appear to have any reverence, knowledge, or concern for a Supreme Being. They had buried a four-year-old boy that morning, and as usual, without song, prayer or any ceremony whatever. The children were almost nude in some instances, and many of the adults were highly ornamented, yet shabbily attired.

I once before undertook to break the bread of life to a camp of Utah Indians, in Salt Lake City. When they came up from the south they called a halt on Provo River, secured a quantity of fish and had them for use, which had become putrid.

When I asked the leading spirit if they had come up to join the polygamous church he evasively said: "Me don't know; maybe so," whereupon I opened out by their campfires, about an hour. They paid marked attention, but what they thought or done with my pointed testimony I can never, as yet, tell.

Excuse this lengthy epistle about this, that and the other, and I will try and do better next time.

M. T. Short.

DILLON, Colo., Nov 24th.

Brother Dancer:—I am one of the scattered Saints in Colorado. I have lived here nine years and have never heard a sermon preached since I came. If any of the ministers or Saints come near here my home is theirs as long as they will stop.

When I married my husband he was a class leader in the M. E. Church. Thank God the scales have been lifted from his eyes. He says there is no church preaches the true gospel but the Latter Day Saints. He has not obeyed yet, but I think he will if a minister will come here.

I desire the prayers of all the Saints and Prayer Union in behalf of my husband and two boys, that they may be gathered into the fold of God. My desire is to live faithful and "come up higher." Your humble sister, MRS. BETTIE JETT.

BALM, Mo., Nov. 24th.

Dear Herald:—I was baptized September 11th by Bro. Curtis, and now the Spirit urges me to write my testimony and send it to the Herald. The Holy Spirit of promise, the Comforter that was promised to the true seeker after truth, I can say with all my heart, I have found that Comforter in the restored gospel. It is the glorious gospel of the kingdom of God. I know that it is true, for God has shown it to me by his great power.

I feel my weakness and littleness in the sight of God, although this is precious truth to me, for the Lord has shown me a marvelous light and a wonder. I had been afflicted for fifteen years with rheumatism and spinal trouble, but was healed almost instatly through the obedience of baptism. I was administered to by the elders two or three times about seven or eight months ago. The disease attacked me again while I was praying for relief. I felt about the weight of a man's hand on my shoulder. It remained about one moment, then I looked to see if any one was near. I could not see any one. The pain ceased and has never returned. I think that the good Lord sent one of his administering angels to my relief. There is no tongue can express or pen write the thankfulness that I feel to the Master for the blessings that he has bestowed upon us since we came into the church. My husband and I and four of our children are in the church. We have two others out but hope to see come in some time.

I belonged to the Baptists twenty-one years, but by reading the Scriptures I became dissatisfied about seven years before I heard the true gospel. I was praying earnestly to God if the same gospel that Paul and Peter and Christ himself taught was or ever would be preached on earth in my time that He would send it this way. And thanks be to God he sent Bro. I. N. White here to preach. The first sermon I ever heard I believed it. The Holy Spirit bore witness with my spirit that it was true, although I was slow to obey.

CO, brothers and sisters, this is a grand and noble work if rightly lived up to. We think the law of tithing is as just and binding on God's people as it ever was. We are poor, but we expect to pay our tithing as soon as we can. Pray for us, that we may be found among the faithful.

Yours truly,

MARY RITTENHOUSE.

MINNEAPOLIS, Kan., Nov. 25th.

Dear Herald:—As I promised in the Herald of August 31st to write again and relate a portion of my experience which might be a little amusing, I will now try to fulfill that promise.

Ever since becoming a member of a church I always made it a point when going to a strange place to remain a little while, to find a place of worship where I would find a welcome and feel at home, regardless of name; where I could go to worship and keep the Sabbath. So on coming to Kansas City I was inquiring and trying to find a place as above described, but before I had made up my mind where to go a gentleman—whom I shall refer to as Friend-with whom I was working, said to me one day, "There is a Latter Day Saint church up Troost Avenue a little way. Suppose we go and hear them." As I had heard considerable about the Saints or Mormons, and was at the time reading a book, a United States Marshal's experience among the Mormons, I of course felt a curiosity to see and hear them; so I told my friend I would be glad to go whenever he wished.

The next Sabbath evening we went to the little, unpretentious church and went in. A few of the Saints had gathered when we got there. We took a survey of our surroundings and also took notice of those that were still coming in. As for myself, I kept watching for some one that I might pick out as the minister; but in this I was disappointed, as my idea of the minister did not come in, for when the time arrived for the services to begin one of those sons of toil (as their appearance showed them to be) filled the stand and preached the first Latter Day Saint sermon that I had ever listened to. But before services began my friend gave me a nudge with his elbow. I leaned over towards him to hear what he had to say. "Why," said he, "these are an intelligent looking people; see what intelligent heads they have!" I replied that I saw nothing wrong with them, but I concluded from his remark that he expected to find an ignorant, unintelligent class of people, probably because they were Mormons.

After services while we were going home my friend remarked that he did not see or hear what he expected, but was favorably impressed with the services and the people. As for myself I hardly knew what to expect or what to look for. I expected, however, to hear some strange doctrine, different from what I had ever heard. I was agreeably surprised on hearing the doctrine as presented by the Latter Day Saints, which made such an impression on my mind that I continued going and took part with them until I finally became one of them by being obedient.

Dear Saints, I do not regret the step I have taken, but feel to rejoice that I have been permitted to hear the gospel in its purity. Let us all be faithful to the charge committed to our care. Although the world may speek disparagingly of us it will be all right when the Master comes if we are only faithful. Remember me in your prayers, for I feel that I need them.

The Herald is the only preacher I have, and am made glad by its arrival each week. I have the promise of a school house and also the promise of one of our ministers to come and preach for us; so that ere long I expect the gospel will be preached in this part of the country.

Yours in hope,

HENRY RESCH.

ANIWA, Wis., Nov. 14th.

Brother Blair:--We are still striving to set the gospel before the people. Bro. Waite and myself have preached here and at Elmhurst most every Sabbath since the first of August. There are some that admit that it is the truth, but whether they will obey time will only tell. This is a hard country for true religion to thrive in. This is a small village but we have four saloons to deal out that which many think is necessary for them to have to enjoy life, as they term it. Bro. Wait is at Elmhurst today; there is quite an interest to hear the truth. Sister Pickel lives at Antigo, ten miles from here. She is a live Saint, and lets her light shine, but they reject it. She is strong in the faith. May God bless her and all the scattered Saints.

We have an appointment next Sunday two miles in the country. Have held meetings there and have some hopes for additions to the cause. Our prayer is that the work may roll on till all the honest in heart may be gathered into the fold of Christ.

Your brethren in the covenant,

J. M. WAIT,

W. S. Montgomery.

WILLIAMSBURG, Ill., Nov. 19th.

Bro. W. W. Blair: - Bro. D. S. Holmes and myself have been putting in every Saturday night since last conference with good congregations, and there seemed to be a good interest. Saints are all well in this part of the country. Respectfully,
J. W. TERRY.

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., Nov. 27th. Bro. W. W. Blair:-I have just returned from San Diego county, where I have been laboring some time. It is a good field. It was hard to get some of the people to come out to hear-they are the wholly sanctified, and Methodists. I labored with them and found some good people, and the good will come out. I baptized six of them, and seven in all, and hope more will come to the light. Some told me they would not have anything further to do with the sects.

I have great faith that I will get some from the wholly sanctified people. There are many weak in that faith, and they came to my meetings and treated me well. I organized a branch ant Valley Center with twelve members. Two have been added since by Bro. H. C. Smith, and the little branch is rejoiceing in the gospel. I hope to return in a few weeks, if God will, and that more will be added.

Yours in truth,

WM. M. GIBSON.

TERMS OF COMMUNION.

As this is a subject on which I have seen but little written, I write a few thoughts as they have been presented to me, more for the purpose of drawing out abler minds upon the subject, than of being able to present what is necessary myself. I prefer rather speaking on any subject, than writing upon it, as I can always express myself more fully and satisfactorily. However I make this effort for the benefit of those who may not have given it much consideration.

I fear that with many there is a very mysterious, awful reverence; a peculiar devotion inexplicable by themselves, and unintelligible to others connected with this sacred ordinance, called the "Sacrament." I mean that which is administered as bread and wine in rememberance of the body and blood of Jesus Christ.

I John 1:7 says: "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we hav fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." I have emphasized the pronouns we and us to draw attention to the fact that they refer only to members of the Church, as is further evident from the tenor of the epistle, and more particularly from the fact that it is only those who have "fellowship" with one another, which the Church can not have with the world, and claim that they "walk in the light."

Another consideration is, the words used by Iesus Carist when he first administered it to the apostles: (Matt. 26: 26-28) "And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and break it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."

Mark 14: 22-24 says: "And as they did eat. Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament which is shed for many."

Luke 22:19, 20: "And he took bread and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testrment in my blood, which is shed for you."

The foregoing scriptures teach that only church members are entitled to partake of the communion sacrament, but do not teach the pre-requisites, or terms, otherwise than that they must be members of the As I remarked concerning the pronouns "we" and "us," so also I ask the reader to notice the pronouns "they," "them" and "you," and further notice that in speaking of the wine as in remembrance of his blood, he said of his blood, "which is shed for many," "which is shed for you."

Matthew is the only one of the three who says that his blood was shed for many "for the remission of sins;" but Paul tells us in Heb. 9: 22, "Without shedding of blood is no remission." From what has heen quotec, it is evident then that as members of the church only are proper subjects to partake, that by partaking it is an evidence that they are walking in the light (or trying to). They also evidence their remembrance of Christ's death. They also evidence that they desire fellowship one with another, which they could not enjoy unless they are in unity of spirit. So that by having fellowship they further evidence that they entertain no evil, malice. They further evince that they are in union with Jesus Christ the head of the body; and as his entire life and mission was love,-"For greater love hath no man, than that he lay down his life for his friends,"—so they who eat that bread in remembrance of his broken body and drink the wine in remembrance of his shed blood evince thereby their reciprocity of That love on our part is born of the fact that God first loved us and gave his Son a ransom to redeem us-John 3: 16; also 1 John 3:1; 4:16, 19; John 13:1; 15:9; 16:27; 17:23, 26; Eph. 2:4; 5:2, 25. Then it follows that as none but members of the church are proper subjects to partake of the sacrament, how are they to become members? On what terms?

Faith is certainly necessary to cause repentance, and repentance is as necessary to prepare for baptism, and by baptism we are grafted into the visible body of Christ. For no one can repent who knows no law, or who has no knowledge of law; and no one could be induced to repent even when they have a knowledge of law until they are convinced that they have transgressed that law, and when that is shown, they believe that law has been transgressed by them, so then they are sorry for the violation and now retrace their steps, so that sorrow leads to repentance. now that the offenses have been committed how are they to be got rid of? must either be punished for the offenses, or have them remitted; therefore was baptism instituted, for the remission of sins when they had faith and brought forth fruits of repentance. It follows then that faith, repentance any baptism are terms of communion, or fellowship.

This must very naturally lead to inquiries, such as, Can a member of the Church of Jesus Christ sit down and commune with members of other churches and be in the faith? No. Neither can members of other churches sit down and commune with members of the true church and they believe their own faith to be right. Nor can the members of Christ's church believe themselves to be right who permit others to partake and have fellowship with them. For if I sit down to the communion table of another sect they, for instance believing in infant sprinkling, a God without body, parts, and passions, that "faith only" is a good and wholesome doctrine, etc., do I not verily evince by my fellowship with them that I endorse their doctrines? If not I am not in unity of faith, hence not in unity of spirit, with them, therefore I do but act a lie when I say I have fellowship by communion with them whose faith and doctrine I do not believe. Paul says in 1 Cor. 10: 16, 17: "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread, and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread."

Paul here declares that they who hold communion together are one body. And if I sit down to commune with those who sprinkle infants, I am told that such infants are, and were made members of the body of Christ by baptism. So then I sit down to partake in fellowship with the unconverted, with infants, and with the unregenerated; yet Paul asks in I Cor. 10: 19-21, "What say I then, that the idol is anything, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is anything?"

What is a God without body, parts, and passions but an idol? Yes, and that of the meanest and worst type of idolatry. Then how can Saints sit and partake of that typical emblem of the broken body of Jesus with a people who declare he has no body nor parts; for be it remembered they declare that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are "one in substance;" so that such as the Father, so is the Son, such is the Holy Ghost.

Again: If infants are members by baptism, why are they not allowed to commune? By not allowing them to do so the lie is given to their being members by baptism. Paul says, "Let every one examine himself and so let him eat." The infants are not capable of self-examination.

Again: "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation to himself," etc. The opposite of this would be true in the other case, that whosoever ate and drank worthily, would eat and drink blessings to themselves. Then why deprive the infants of such blassings? For except ye eat my body, and drink my blood ye have no life in you, is the sentiment of Christ. So that by keeping back infants from communion (if this last reference alludes to it) they are deprived of life, of what benefit can their baptism or their membership be to them?

"The word was made flesh." So we do not eat the literal flesh under a transmuted mystery, but as Christ said, "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after right-eousness, for they shall be filled." Then by eating the bread, and drinking the wine, we are put in remembrance of him who gave the word, which is manna to the hungering soul, and the Holy Spirit which is as a well of living water springing up into everlasting life to the thirsty soul.—John 4: 10-15; also John 7: 38, 39: "He that believeth on me . . . out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive," etc. Also Amos 8: 11: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord."

I conclude from the foregoing that the word must be as diligently searched, sought after and labored for in order to feed the hungry soul, as we must labor for the bread that perishes; and just so in regard to the waters of life-the Holy Spiritwe must work faithfully and diligently in harmony with the revealed word in order to obtain the indwelling of the Spirit which will quench our thirsty souls. Paul says in Rom, 1:20: "For the invisible things . . . are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made.' Also 2 Cor. 4: 18 to the same intent. Then I conclude that faith, repentance, baptism are the first things necessary as terms of communion; next, a good conscience, or as Paul says, (1 Cor. 11:28), "But let a man examine himself," etc., and not to partake unworthily (v. 27, 29) is also a strict term.

No one can justly claim the immunities and privileges of any kingdom until they have either been born or adopted into that kingdom. And the law of adoption into the kingdom of God is, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

The eucharist is an exclusive privilege of the children of the kingdom that any one who has not been adopted into the church by the law of adoption has no right to partake of the children's meat. Jesus said in Matt. 7:6, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs," etc., and the sacraments are that which is holy, and the dogs are they who are without the church. For proof see Matt. 15: 21-26. A woman not of the church is here called of the dogs; see also Mark 7:27. It may be said that this woman did receive a blessing, how-True, but not of the table; but of the crumbs under the table. So she and all others would have to become an adopted child before having the right to partake of the benefits of the table. Paul also warns the brethren to beware of dogs. Phil. 3:1, 2: "Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision," (the concision are they who had been cut

Now to settle the question as to the dogs being those out of the kingdom, turn to Rev. 22:14, 15: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. For without are dogs," etc. Nephi, chapter 8, page 456, Sec. 6, 7, informs us that they were only the believers or disciples who partook, and by doing so they witnessed "unto the Father that ye are willing to do that which I have commanded you." Par. 9: "Ye shall not suffer any one knowingly, to partake of my flesh and blood unworthily," for if any did, they but ate and drank "damnation to his soul." "Therefore if ye know that a man is unworthy to eat and drink of my flesh and blood, ye shall forbid him." "Nevertheless ye shall not cast him out from among you," etc. Also D. & C. 46:2; Nephi 9, page 461:7; 12, p. 470; 1; p. 480:8; also 500:7. Each of the above are very definite in stating that but disciples are proper subjects, and that the "unworthy" whether in or out of the church, are forbidden.

Ezra 2:61-63. Certain men on the return from the Babylonian captivity who belonged to the priesthood: "They sought their register... but they could not be found, therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood. And the Tirshatha said unto them that they should not eat of the most holy things," etc.

Ps. 1:1, 5: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. . . . . Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous." Neh. 9:2: "And the seed of Israel separated themselves from all strangers," etc. See also Neh. 13:1, 23-31, which shows an exclusive communion.

Isa. 8:12: "Say ye not a confederacy to all them to whom this people shall say a confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid." Also 16th v.: "Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples." See also Ezra 4:1-5. Judah and Benjamin refused to allow their adversaries to help them build the house of God, although they professed to worship the same God. (Verse two.) How much less should latter day Israel refuse to allow our adversaries to help us build the true "house made without hands" seeing that they do not even worship the same God? (Iob. 30:1; Ps. 22:16.)

Deut. 32:15-17: "But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked; thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness; then he forsook God. . . . They provoked him to jealousy with strange words, with abominations provoked they him to anger. They sacrificed unto devils, not to God; to gods whom they knew not. to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not." This agrees wonderfully with 1 Corinthians 10. The new gods that "your fathers knew not" are called devils (or idols) and the fathers knew not of a God without body, parts, or passions; therefore all who sacrifice to him (if there be any such) sacrifice to devils, and ye, brethren, can not partake of the tables of the Lord and the table of devils.

2 Chron. 11:5: "And Rehoboam dwelt in Jerusalem." He built many cities and fortresses, and cast off the Levites "from executing the priests' office unto the Lord." "And he ordained him priests for the high places and for the devils, and for the calves which he had made." "And after them [the Levites] out of all the tribes of Israels, such as set their hearts to seek the Lord God of Israel came to Jerusalem to sacrifice unto the Lord God of their fathers." So ancient Israel who only had the works of the law refused to sacrifice with their king unto other gods, or to commune in any other way than according to the law, with another people. How much more the true Israel after the Spirit should refuse to commune with others who sacrifice to other gods. Paul has warned us in I Timothy 4:I "That in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils," etc. Therefore take heed that none of you be found doing homage with them, in partaking of the table of devils, (or idols). This idol worship will go on till the very end, or till the plagues are poured out. See Rev. 9:20: "And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues, yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and wood; which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk." Neither can the imaginary God without body, parts, or passions, see, hear, nor walk. The eternal fitness of things must adjust themselves: for the people having eyes they see not, and ears they hear not; so like the people, they must have a God that has no eyes, nor ears, nor any other

The building of God is progressive; it is upward and onward. As faith is necessary to repentance, so repentance is to baptism. So also is faith, repentance and baptism to communion in the eucharist; so are all these to the washing of feet on the part of the priesthood—one round after another till we reach the top of the ladder. But to reverse the order is rebellion; to administer baptism before faith and repentance is reversing the command, hence is no baptism, to say nothing about the mode, nor anything else. Seeing these be lawful terms of fellowship, "let us walk in the light," then the blood of Jesus Christ his Son will cleanse us, as it was shed for many, not for all in this sense.

"FEED MY LAMBS."-JOHN 21: 15.

ONE deeply interested in the Sabbath School has requested me to pen an article on the above subject.

The injunction at the head of this article was given by Jesus Christ to Peter, and he had also given to him the keys of the kingdom of heaven (Matt. 16: 20), and it undoubtedly had reference to the care necessary to be exercised in watching over and properly instructing the membership of the church of Christ. In the spiritual fold, as in the literal fold, there are the lambs and the sheep; the "babes in Christ" as well as those of mature experience. Both of these classes need the superintending care of those whom God has made overseers in his church, and it is their duty to see that both the lambs and sheep are properly fed and nourished.

The lambs need "the sincere milk of the work." They are not prepared to receive strong food, dealt out in large quantities, with deep and learned reasonings; hence the general methods of preaching the gospel are too high and difficult for their comprehension. Moreover, they are apt to conclude that the preaching is intended for their elders without any special reference to them; hence they are not likely to be benefited by it. Therefore it becomes the duty of the shepherds of the flock to see that means are provided specially adapted to the wants of the young, and for this purpose the Sabbath School has been originated as an auxiliary in the great work of the world's conversion, and it has been found to be of great benefit to every rising generation since its first establishment. I am reminded that it did not originate with our church; that there is no mention of such an order in This truth I either of the three records. cheerfully concede; but realizing that "all good comes from God," and having seen and felt the power and influence of the Sabbath School for good to my own heart, as well as to hundreds of others, I recognize it as one of those means originating in the providence of God for the preparing of the way for the kingdom of God by the diffusion of scriptural truth and imbuing men with a love for the divine word. It is no argument against it to say that errors have been taught in it. one questions the divine mission of preaching the gospel, and yet errors have been inculcated by this means, and by some whom God had called as his ministers. It is the work of Satan to defile the channels of truth; it is ours to keep them pure and clean, Were it possible he would pollute the very fountain of truth; but we rejoice to know that he is powerless there. No intelligent observer can doubt the power of the Sabbath School for good. Its history, the history of the church, and even the world, gives abundant proof of that fact, and this is evidence that it has divine approval. Why, then, should we for a moment hesitate to use this mighty lever by which we may prepare the young mind to see and comprehend the truth, and thus hasten the rolling forth of the divine kingdom?

Can the adult minds of the church find any better, nobler work to engage in than that of gathering the young together on the Sabbath day, and instructing them in the truths revealed from God, helping them to understand the origin of our race by the creative power of God, the great fall of humanity from the exalted condition in which man was created—the cause and nature of that fall—the infinite love of God in providing for our redemption from the thralldom of sin and death by giving His Son Jesus Christ as a ransom for all, that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life?" Can there be a holier work than teaching the young the glorious principles of the gospel, obedience to which secures us an interest in his blood, and a right to be called the children of God? God and Christ and the Holy Ghost are engaged in this work! Archangels, angels, and all the heavenly host rejoice to be co-workers with them! Prophets and apostles of all ages have been thus engaged and have sought out every means for the unfolding of God's purpose to the young and old. And shall we neglect to enroll ourselves as co-workers with them wherever and whenever opportunity presents itself because we have not been directly commanded? It is writen, "It is good to be zealously affected in a good cause."—Gal. 4: 18.

And God has declared through his prophet in these last days: "Behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things; for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant: wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in no wise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded. and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness is damned."—D. C., 58: 6.

God has further said, "Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands, when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized."—D. C. 68:4. While this is a duty of every parent at home, it will not dispense with the work of the Sabbath School, but will aid in its advancement.

I think it will be found, as a general thing, that youth can study and exercise to greater advantage in concert than alone. But let that be as it may, there is great advantage to the young mind in attending the Sabbath School, for they not only read the word of God, but they are lead to study it and find out its true meaning, their mental powers are called into action, they learn to think independently, and to express their views intelligently and weigh their own views by the expression of those of their fellow students, besides having the benefit of the more enlightened minds of their teachers, and crowned with the larger experience and more complete intelligence of the superintendent. Moreover, if every teacher is truly a child of God they will point out and impart lessons of spiritual excellence, and thus lead the young mind in the footsteps of their dear Redeemer; for this is the real object of the Sabbath School. Thus it is made a great auxiliary to the Church. It may indeed be called a nursery to the Church of Christ wherein the tender plants which God has given us may be prepared for transplanting into his kingdom. Shall we as a church, or as individuals, permit these tender plants of priceless worth to become stunted for lack of culture, or grow wild and useless, only fit for the burning, when it is in our power, and is our imperative duty to lead and train them until they become bright ornaments, yea, more, glorious pillars in the kingdom of God? Shall we leave them to the blighting influences of the world, to be corrupted and poisoned by the deadly sirocco of sin and folly? God has forbidden it; and shall we not carry out his high behest and thus throw the mantle of love and light around them and feed them with the bread of life that they may grow in grace and every excellence of the divine character that they may become valiant soldiers for truth, humility and God? If we will not care for our own, the world,—the God-hating, Christ-despising world will! If we will not feed them with the bread of life, the world will feed them with corruption! If we will not seek to clothe their minds with light, the world stands ready to enshroud them in worse than Egyptian darkness! If we will not teach them faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, together with all the precepts of godliness and the gracious promises of God, the world will eagerly instill into their minds and hearts the poison of unbelief and rebellion against God! If we will not teach them virtue, meekness, love, holiness and mercy, justice, purity, love and truth, the world will see to it that their entire being is cankered with pride, vanity and burning lust that consume to the lowest hell; and instead of being prepared for companionship with God and Christ in glory, it will fit them for companionship with demons, and Satan will gather them into his dark domains; and the terrible consciousness that gnaws like a worm at the vitals of his victim will gnaw at our hearts until we are consumed with the self-condemnation and the damning knowledge that we have basely neglected our duties and must be held responsible before the awful bar of a just God.

Fathers, mothers, guardians, will you awake to your responsibilities and the sacred duties you owe to God and to your children, and to the race at large? Will you take the tender plant and nourish it for God? Will you shield the helpless lambs from the yawning jaws of the wolf and feed them with food convenient for them that they may be gathered safely into the fold of God? If you will, then avail yourselves of all the means that God has in his allwise providence placed in your possession for their instruction, spiritual growth and eternal salvation; and be assured that the Sabbath School is not the least of the means in the economy of God whereby we may carry out the injunction of the Great Shepherd, "FEED MY LAMBS." #### AN APPEAL.

To the Saints of the Mission, Greeting:

I teel constrained to appeal to your generosity for means to carry on this grand, glorious work in which we are engaged. Being one of the ministers upon whom God has placed the responsibility of teaching the temporal law, I beg of you to investigate this matter and consider well this appeal by reading and re reading it; also by seeking the Lord in earnest, fervent prayer, that his Holy Spirit may direct you and impress upon your minds the responsibility resting upon each and every one.

I have been informed by those whom the Lord has placed in charge of the finances of the church, that the treasury is empty and unless there are means forthcoming some of our able and most worthy ministers must return home. What a pity and what a sad state of affairs in view of the fact that there are now so many urgent calls and so many wide and effectual doors open to us on every hand! Now, dear Saints, let us remember that as many as have accepted and obeyed the gospel have placed themselves under bonds to be governed by the law of the gospel; and one part of that law is, that the ministers shall live of the gospel: "Even so hath God ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel "-1 Cor. 9:9

Again it is written: "Muzzle not the ox that treadeth out the corn . . . the laborer is worthy of his reward."-1 Tim. 5:18

Of course, it is only those who spend their entire time in the ministry who are to receive that support which is needful for themselves and families, also the poor and needy are to be provided for out of said treasury. (1 Cor. 16:12; John 12:4-6; 13:28, 29; Rom. 15:26, 27; D. & C., page 150, par. 3; also 231, par. 3. It is not my duty to say how much you shall give, for the Lord hath said that all shall pay a tenth of their increase. Now, brethren, we are very strict in the enforcement of the law designed to make us citizens of God's kingdom and insist upon a full compliance with every one of them. When we have become citizens of that kingdom there are laws therein for our government, and among these is the law of tithes and offerings. Can we be good citizens of God's kingdom and disregard this law any more than a foreigner can be a good citizen of this country and not obey its laws, though he may have become a citizen through obedience to the laws of naturalization?

This temporal law was well understood and observed by the ancient worthies. Abraham paid tithes of all he possessed to Melchesidec, (Heb. 7:2-11); also the children of Israel observed it: "The tithe of the land shall be the Lord's." —Lev. 27:30; "The tenth of the herd and the flock shall be holy."—Lev. 27:32; "And the Levites paid a tenth of their tithes to the priests."—Num. 18:26-28; "Thou shall surely tithe all the increase of thy seed."—Deut. 14:22, 23; "Israel brought tithes of all abundantly."—2 Chron. 31:

5, 6. Christ recognized the law of tithing: "Woe Pharisees hypocrites; for unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites; for ye pay tithes of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith; these ought ye to have done and not to leave the other undone."

Matt. 23:23.

While we boast of judgment, mercy and faith, have we paid our tithes? If so, we have kept the whole law and stand justified before God; if not, we, like they, have observed but a part of the law, and Jesus condemned them because they had failed to keep all of the law, which included judgment, mercy, faith and tithes. For he says: "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into my storenation. Bring ye all the tithes into my store-house, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith saith the Lord of hosts if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a bies, ing that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Mal. 3:8-10.

From the above we glean that God charges this nation with robbing him in not paying their tithes and offerings. If it be true that God is no respecter of persons, and we fail to pay our tithes sand offerings, are we not guilty of the same sin?
Some say, "I am not rich, therefore I can not pay tithing."
It is not absolutely necessary to be rich to pay tithing. For instance, if a man owns a house and lot valued at $200, clear of all incumbrance, he owes $20 to the Lord in tithes on that property. If you have a bank account of $100 as a surplus, you owe $10 of that to the Lord in tithes.

Again: If you during the year earn $500, and it requires $400 of that amount to support your family, there would $100 of a surplus on which you should pay tithing. But if you have no property, bank account nor surplus, you can not be tithed. But remember that those who the law of tithing does not reach come under the law of "free-will offerings, oblations and sacrifice." The nation that robbed God in not paying their tithes, robbed him also in not bringing their offerings, so one is as binding on God's people as the other.

Again it is written: "God loveth a cheerful giver;" also "that we should lay by in store as God hath prospered us." And we often sing:

"And all is fair and all is bright, And all is well when we do right,"

Therefore if we do that which is right we will observe the temporal law of God, and He has promised that if we do, He will pour out a blessing upon such, as we will not be able to contain.

I am aware that there is a great depression of business which has affected the channels of trade and commerce by which the financial rescources of the country are crippled. It is also a fact that many of our brethren are poor who have to toil and work hard and receive but a small pittance for the labor performed, which make it difficult for them to do much for the church financially; nevertheless, the Lord expects them to do a little. and all the littles put together make quite a sum. In the language of the poet:

"Little drops of water, little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean and the pleasant land."

We have an incident on record where a poor widow cast her mite (little) into the treasury and the Savior who witnessed it said that she had done more than they all. (Luke 21: 1-4). And will not the Savior commend all the poor Saints who will follow the example set by this generous though poor woman. The Lord informs us through the "Seer" that this "is a day of sacriwhich implies that we should deny ourselves many of the pleasure's and luxuries of life. It also suggests that we should be economical in our mode of living, for it is written that God will hold us accountable for our stewardship.

We should bear in mind that Christ will not come to earth until this gospel of the kingdom shall have been preached in all the world for a witness to all nations.

Again: We often hear the Saints praying, "O Lord, send forth more laborers." Does it occur to the minds of those who pray thus, that God can not send forth laborers unless there is ample means in the treasury wherewith to support the laborers and their families? Many of our able ministers have been dropped from the ministerial list for want of means to support them and their families.

Many of the dear Saints have done nobly in the last year, and we hope and pray that those who have been negligent of their duties in the past will awaken to a full realization of what the law demands of them.

Please send your tithes and offerings to the Bishop's agents in the mission, whose addresses

AN ENTIRELY NEW DEPARTMENT

To our magazine; and as this department will be exclusively in the interest of the young, we hope to awaken in them a more lively interest in helping to sustain—both by contributions and by helping to increase the circulation—the work inaugurated especially for their benefit.

This department will be under the charge of

And will be devoted to an interchange of thoughts and ideas upon all topics of interest pertaining to mental and spiritual growth, the study of God in nature as well as in the Bible.

The Latter Day Work is increasing wonderfully in magnitude, and it behooves him who desires to keep pace with its rapid strides to embrace every opportunity of informing himself not only with reference to the standard works of the church, but things transpiring in the world at large, which have a direct bearing upon the grand march of events, pointing to a culmination in the secong coming of Christ.

In addition to this there will also begin in the February number a

DOMESTIC DEPARTMENT,

Which will be taken charge of by "Martha," and will be devoted strictly to such matter as will aid the mother and housewife in her toilsome labor of love, and help her to realize how high and holy is her calling, and how much of the abstract comfort and peace of the family is dependent upon her.

Brethren and Sisters, will you aid us, by help-to enlarge our subscription list? If cash ing to enlarge our subscription list? commission suits you better than premiums, write us for our terms. Less than a month now remains before the January number will be ready for sending out, but much can be done in a month, by persistent and earnest offort. #### REFLECTIONS.

A Missouri editor thus addresses us: "I would be pleased to have you send me the 'Prophecy of the Rebellion' by Joseph Smith, also copy of Herald and Book of Mormon. These I am anxious to read but have never had the opportunity."

It is significant and comforting to note the increasing inquiries for our church publications. After a careful reading of them no one who loves truth can satisfactorily explain away its manifest presence in the doctrines and general teachings of the standard works of the church; and no one will do so who is earnestly seeking the kingdom of God. Jesus said: "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me."

It remains with us as a people, members and officials, to so study the word as to be able to properly present it to them. duty does not end here, for the whole tenor of the word teaches us that in addition to presenting the truth, we must live by it, and thus convince the world, by ex ample as well as precept, that "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from" the convenient and general errors, follies, sins and selfishness common to humanity. Personally, the longer we live the more forcibly comes to us the solemn conviction that we must be continually making a very careful examination into the duties enjoined upon us as individuals. The early church, as a whole,indeed the major portion of it,-failed to reach the requisite degree of faithfulness in obeying the written law. They "treated lightly" the express commands of God, and were told that "this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all, and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the Book of Mormon and the former commandments, not only to say, but to do according to that which is written."

When we do according to the above we shall be prepared to receive what the Lord contemplated giving the church (and in fact did give to some) in the days of the Martyr, and shall enter in and occupy those higher and richer blessings and endowments of spiritual power which the church received of in part, and which the Lord designed to give them in full, in the Martyr's day; but which they failed, as a body, to become worthy of.

If faithfulness in them was the cause of their failures and disasters, faithfulness and obedience will prove the only means whereby we shall be successful and finish the work left undone by careless, modern Israel. Conditions of life in opposition to the will of God brought the people of God into a condition of opposition and inharmony with Him, as they must inevitably and irrevocably also do with us if we individually or collectively assume and remain in such opposite conditions. For the domain of law is to bless, or punish and correct; and he who would receive its benefits must be obedient to it; while he who is a transgressor must suffer, be corrected and finally rejected and fail of justification if he abides not in the bounds and conditions of principles designed by heavenly wisdom to sanctify and preserve. "Return unto me and I will return unto you," is the beneficent admonition of the Lord; and by this He means "not only to say but to do according to that which is written."

Among the early church individual faithfulness existed, as it does it the present church; but its existence was too limited to reach the desired end, for "Zion can not be redeemed except it be according to the laws of the celestial kingdom," "otherwise I can not receive her unto myself;" and this applies to spiritual conditions as well as temporal regulations, and the latter will never be put in operation until the children of Zion are not only in name but in fact "THE PURE IN HEART."

Another feature: In the days of the Seer certain revelations were given for the temporal and spiritual preparation of the ministry; the establishment of the people, etc., etc., all of which, so far as revealed and preserved to us, are contained in the later revelations of the Book of Covenants. We must build according to that pattern and not attempt to deviate from it; for every means but those instituted of heaven will fail and miserably fail in their intended purpose.

Let us make the preparation necessary by living peaceably together, and by becoming united and obedient in our scattered condition, that we may be disciplined and prepared while among the various branches for the gathering time, when we must possess the qualifications necessary to abide in "the holy hill of Zion." If thus we do we shall each and all, "him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work" be laboring "together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all;" and the work will be firmly established in the different branches of the church, others be raised up, and the gospel be preached unto all nations, and we be able to abide the presence of Him who shall then come to reward every man according as his work shall be.

Let us "occupy" until He comes.

JUDGE ZANE ON MORMONISM.

By recent Utah papers we have the late ruling of Judge Charles Zane, in which he holds that a member of the Brigham-ite Church, "in good standing," is not fit to be a citizen of the United States. This is upon the theory that the spirit, genius, and teaching of that church, for the past near fifty years, has been not only out of harmony with democratic, American principles and sentiments, but that it has also been and is actively hostile to them. And while he, like Judge Anderson, holds B. Young, H. Kimball, J. M. Grant, Geo. A. Smith, John Taylor, G. Q. Cannon, C. Penrose, W. Woodruff, etc., to be the chief sinners in these matters, he claims that those who uphold these men in their teaching, giving credence, aid and comfort to them in their unlawful and anti-American conduct and conversation, are unfit for and unworthy of citizenship, probably on the ground that he who bids the evildoer Godspeed is thereby "made partaker of his evil deeds,"—as the loving John teaches us in holy writ. Here is what the Judge says on the points involved,—we italicize essential portions:

"An alien before the court for naturalization has rights that must be respected, and in order that these examinations may be conducted with dignity and propriety, fairness and impartiality, I will request the District Attorney or his assistant to appear at the times I have mentioned, and aid in the examination of applicants and their witnesses. This will prevent so many examin-

There has been a decision of this court, Judge Anderson sitting, in which it has been held after quite a protracted and thorough investigation, consuming nearly two weeks, that a member of the Mormon Church in good standing is not a fit and suitable person to be naturalized; that the ob-ligations of a member of that organization to the Church are inconsistent with the obligations of an American citizen.

The court found and adjudged that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints is an unpatriotic organization, that to become a member of it and to retain that fellowship obligations must be assumed and beliefs and professions made, and conduct required in conflict with and opposed to that devotion and attachment and to those du-ties exacted of a citizen of the government of the United States. The government of the United States will not divide its allegiance with any other government or any other organization, and unless the court is satisfied by the evidence offered that the applicant has resided the required time in the United States, that he is a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same, it will not admit him, but on the other hand, if the court is satisfied that any applicant having the other qualifications, and residence, is of sufficient intelligence to understand the principles of the government, is well disposed towards it, is of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution, it will admit him.

But this Court having held that the Mormon Church is an organization of such a character that membership and fellowship in it disqualifies an alien for citizenship, for the present, at least, the Court will respect that opinion. The purposes and character of the Church taint and characterize all of its members and disqualifies them for citizenship, according to the judgment of the Court; its members must be regarded as precluded for the present, by the trial in which it was condemned. The Church was not condemned by Judge Anderson on account of religious faith, doctrine or worship, but because of its moral, social, and political doctrines and the unlawtul practices and conduct that it enjoins. Therefore, it can not be said that the effect of the decision is to interfere with religious beliefs or the free exercise of religion."

BRUNO AND THE POPE

The papal allocution on the Giordano Bruno statue in Rome was read at every mass in all the Catholic churches of the Chicago diocese. Everybody has read some of the excerpts from the document as it was originally printed in Rome, and Cardinal Gibbons' fiery letter upon the matter excited much attention some weeks ago. In a nutshell, the allocution is the pope's protest against the Italian government for permitting the erection of a statue to Bruno in

The reading yesterday was preceded by the following encyclical from Archbishop Feehan: [We omit part.]

"Also a solemn triduum of prayer for the intention of the holy father will be held on the 8th, 9th, and 10th of November, the exercise to consist of the litany of the blessed virgin and benediction of the most holy sacrament.

"A plenary indulgence, on the usual conditions, may be gained on that occasion.

"On Sunday, Nov. 10, the annual collection for the pope will be made in all the churches. Please announce it beforehand and forward the proceeds to the chancellor as soon as possible. in Christ, P. A. FEBHAN,

"Archbishop of Chicago."

The allocution is a very lengthy document. It begins by declaring that since the Italian revolution and the usurpation of Rome the apostolic see has been exposed to a long series of outrages. It says:

"He whom they load with honors is a man twice apostate, judicially convicted of heresy, and a rebel to the church up to his last breath. Much more it is for these very reasons that they have wished to honor him, for it is evident that no real merit is found in him.

"It is painful to state—it is almost a prodigythat in this holy city in which God has established the home of his vicar the eulogy of human reason in rebellion against God should be heard, and that where the entire world has been taught to seek for the pure precepts of the gospel and counsels of salvation there today, in consequence of a criminal subversion, culpable errors and even heresy should be consecrated with impunity by statues. Events have led us to this point that we see the abomination of desolation in the holy

"Seeing, then, the baseness of such deeds, inasmuch as the government of christendom has been confided to us, together with the guardianship and defense of religion, we declare that Rome has been outraged; that the sanctity of the Christian faith has been odiously violated, and with grief and indignation we denounce to the entire Christian world the sacrilegious crime."

His holiness goes on at some length to describe the renewed exigency that such an outrage raises for the re-establishment of the temporal sovereignty, and declares that the Bruno statue shows the futility and falseness of the promises made at the time of the Roman occupation-the law of the papal gurrantees.—Chicago Times.

Like every question this one has another side. That other side has many features, but we mention only a few of them, suggested by quotations from the foregoing documents themselves, as follows: "He whom they load with honors is a man twice apostate, judicially convicted of heresy, and a rebel to the church up to his last breath." . . . "Events have led us to this point that we see the abomination of desolation in the holy place." . . . "Inasmuch as the government of christendom has been presented to us, together with the guardianship and defense of religion."

We merely make terse notes of what these extracts suggest, and also quote part of what a distinguished writer has written of Bruno:

"On the demand of the apiritual authorities, Bruno was removed from Venice to Rome, and confined in the prison of the Inquisition, accused not only of being a heretic, but also a heresiarch, who had written things unseemly concerning religion; the special charge against him being that he had taught the plurality of words, a doctrine repugnant to the whole tenor of Scripture and inimical to revealed religion, especially as regards the plan of salvation. After an imprisonment of two years he was brought before his judges, declared guilty of the acts alleged, excommunicated, and, on his nobly refusing to recant, was delivered over to the secular authorities to be punished as mercifully as possible, and without the shedding of his blood,' the horrible formula for burning a prisoner at the stake. Knowing well that though his termentors might destroy his body, his thoughts would still live among men, he said to his judges, Perhaps it is with greater fear that you pass the sentence upon me than I receive it.' The sentence was carried into effect, and he was burnt at Rome, February 16th, A. D. 1600.

"No one can recall without sentiments of pity the sufferings of those countless martyrs, who first by one party, and then by another, had been brought for their religious opinions to the stake. But each of these had in his supreme moment a powerful and unfailing support. The passage from this life to the next, though through a hard trial, was the passage from a transient trouble to eternal happiness, an escape from the cruelty of earth to the charity of heaven. On his way through the dark valley the martyr believed that there was an invisible hand that would lead him, a friend that would guide him all the more gently and firmly because of the terrors of the flames. For Bruno there was no such support. The philosophical opinions, for the sake of which he surrendered his life, could give him no consolation. He must fight the last fight alone. Is there not something very grand in the attitude of this solitary man, something which human nature can not help admiring, as he stands in the gloomy hall before his inexorable judges? No accuser, no witness, no advocate is present, but the familiars of the Holy Office, clad in black, are stealthily moving about. The tormentors and the rack are in the vaults below. He is simply told that he has brought upon himself strong suspicions of heresy, since he has said that there are other worlds than ours. He is asked if he will recant and abjure his error. He can not and will not deny what he knows to be true, and perhaps-for he had often done so before-he tells his judges that they, too, in their hearts are of the same belief."

We have, in this quotation, an account of what Bruno's apostasy consisted of, of what the Roman Catholic Church, past and present, regards a "judicial conviction of heresy," and how it dealt with "rebels."

"The abomination of desolation in the holy place." By this language the Pope refers to the city of Rome, the principal seat of the hierarchy. The statement naturally recalls the original, as recorded in the book of Daniel, in which reference is made to Jerusalem, the holy city; also the words of the apostle Paul to the church at Galatia, some of which had turned from the "law of liberty"—the "new covenant" in Christ-back to the "yoke" of the Mosaic economy of Sinai:

"Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us. all."—Gal. 4: 24-26.

Rome represents bondage, spiritual and civil. "We have no means of judging the future but by the experiences of the past," was the statement of Patrick Henry, one of the most eloquent pleaders for liberty. And under the ecclesiastical and civil domination of Rome resulted the dark ages and the semi-civilized conditions of society which then prevailed. "Looking backward" we behold her in her true light, past and present; and can now justly say, this Agar is Rome in Italy: obsolete, antique and unprogressive. Not on the banks of the Tiber do we see the forces that are moving the world upward and onward into higher conditions, but on the Thames, the Siene, the Hudson and the Mississippi; where freedom and toleration are enjoyed and guaranteed by the Divine overruling Providence which is taking away the dominion of ancient Rome "to consume it unto the end."

The world has had enough of Rome's "government of christendom" and "guardianship and defense of religion" which for centuries so ruled the Christian (?) world that its population decreased, commerce dwindled, and public roads were, as a general thing, almost impassible, while the masses existed in superstition and ignorance.

It has been truly said that "Catholicism, as a system for promoting the well-being of man, had plainly failed in justifying its alleged origin; its performance had not corresponded to its great pretensions; and after an opportunity of more than a thousand years duration, it had left the masses of men submitted to its influences, both as regards physical well-being and intellectual culture, in a condition far lower than what it ought to have been."

"We are not going again to Canossa," nor to Rome. The world has learned better by bitter experience. Those things which political and ecclesiastical, ancient and mediaeval Rome has personified and represented are purely Gentile, and their consequent, final destiny is linked with Babylon the great which shall fall.

But Jerusalem, the beloved city of the great king, though afflicted and downtrodden, represents eternal, enduring truth and He who is its embodiment. While Rome—Babylon—falls Jerusalem must rise; while Rome is falling we behold Jerusalem awakening and preparing for temporal and spiritual rehabilitation. The contemplation is significant; the finale is inevitable and near.

THE RESURRECTION .- No. 5.

THE DOMINION, GLORY, POWER, CAPAC-ITY, AND HAPPINESS OF THE SAINTS IN THE RESURRECTION.

THE dominion of the saints will be the earth in its renewed and eternal condition:

"We, [the saints] according to his promise, look for a new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless."—2 Peter 3: 13, 14.

"And thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed."—Heb. I: 10-12.

"Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind."—Isa 65: 17.

"For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain."—Isa. 66: 22.

Here are some of the promises that God will change the present heavens and earth, and make them "new" for the saints. Paul in speaking of this present creation, and in view of the new one, says:

"For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time [life] are not worthy to be named with the glory which shall be revealed in us. [Evidently at and after the resurraction.] For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. [i. e. of their reward, inheritance, power and glory.]... Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves [saints] also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, towit, the redemption [in the resurrection] of our body."—Rom. 8: 18-23.

Here the "whole creation" is represented as travailing in pain, in view of putting off its corruption, and participating in "the adoption," "the redemption" of the body. And we are here told that "the creature itself also [as well as the saints] shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." When the saints are "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God," their "adoption" is effected in its completeness by "the redemption," or resurrection of their bodies—their bodies being renewed by the power of God. So with "the whole creation;" when the sons of God are fully manifested by the resurrection, "the creature" will be delivered from "the bondage of corruption" also; and hence it will be a new creation-"a new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Jesus promised, saying, "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." (Matt. 4: 7.) The hope of the saints, that they should "inherit the earth," gladdened their hearts not only while living, but after they had ended their Christian warfare on earth, after they had gained their last victory, heaved their last sigh, and after they had passed into the joys of the paradise of God, they still hoped to possess the earth for an inheritance:

"And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. 5: 9, 10.

In Ezekiel 37: 1-14 we learn that, when God resurrects the house of Israel, He will give to them the land of their fathers:

"And I shall place you in your own land; then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it saith the Lord." verse 14.

The Lord promised unto Abraham, and unto his seed after him, the land of Canaan; and yet "he gave him none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child." (Acts 7:5.) God can not lie; and how is this promise to be fulfilled? We answer, By Abrahamm's resurrection, and the restoration of the earth:

"And Abram said, Lord God, how wilt thou give me this land for an everlasting inheritance? And the Lord said, Though thou wast dead, yet am I not able to give it thee? And if thou shalt die, yet thou shalt possess it, for the day cometh that the Son of Man shall live; but how can he live if he be not dead? he must first be quickened" [resurrected].—Gen. 15: 9-11.

The Psalmist David says of this prom-

"He hath remembered his covenant forever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant; saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance; when they were but a few men in number; yea, very few, and strangers in it."—Ps. 105: 8-12.

Paul said:

"For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."—Rom. 4: 13.

We will now quote from Doctrine and Covenants 85:4, 5, 6, 33:

"Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed, that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it. Therefore it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it forever and ever; for, for this intent was it made and created; and for this intent are they sanctified.

"And they who are not sanctifled through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom. For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, can not abide a celestial glory; and he who can not abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom can not abide a terrestrial glory; he who can not abide the law of a telestial kingdom, can not abide the law of a telestial kingdom, can not abide a telestial glory; therefore, he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore, he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory.

"And again, verily I say unto you, the earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore, it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it; for notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body; they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body which was a natural body; even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory shall then receive of the same, even a fulness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fulness; and also they who are quickened by a portion of the telestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who remain shall also be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received.

"And again, another angel shall sound his trump, which is the seventh angel, saying: It is finished! It is finished! The Lamb of God hath overcome, and trodden the wine press alone; even the wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God; and then shall the angels be crowned with the glory of his might, and the saints shall be filled with his glory, and receive their inheritance and be made equal with him."

And again:

"Behold it is my will, that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places, and prepare for the revelation which is to come when the vail of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together. And every corruptible thing, both of man or of the beasts of the field, or of the fowls of the heavens, or of the fish of the sea, that dwell upon the face of the earth. shall be consumed; and also that of element shall melt with fervent heat; and all things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. And in that day the enmity of man and the enmity of beasts; yea, the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face. And in that day whatsoever any man shall ask it shall be given unto him. And in that day Satan shall not have power to tempt any man. And there shall be no sorrow because there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious. Yea, verily I say unto you, in that day when the Lord shall come he shall reveal all things; things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purposes and the end thereof: things most precious; things that are above, and things that are beneath; things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven. And all they who suffer persecution for my name, and endure in faith, though they are called to lay down their lives for my sake, yet shall they partake of all this glory. Wherefore, fear not even unto death; for in this world your joy is not full, but in me your joy is full. Therefore, care not for the body, neither the life of the body; but care for the soul, and for the life of the soul, and seek the face of the Lord always, that in patience ve may possess your souls, and ye shall have eternal life. When men are called unto mine everlasting gospel, and covenant with an everlasting covenant, they are accounted as the salt of the earth, and the savor of men. They are called to be the savor of men. Therefore if that salt of the earth lose its savor, behold it is thenceforth good for nothing, only to be cast out and trodden under the feet of men. Behold, here is wisdom concerning the children of Zion; even many, but not all; they were found transgressors, therefore they must needs be chastened. He that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that abaseth himself shall be exalted."-D. C. 98: 5.

Enoch saw the time when the heavens and the earth would be renewed, and when the saints would enter upon their glorious inheritance:

"And the Lord said unto Enoch, then shall you and all your city meet them them there, and we will receive them into our bosom, and they shall see us, and we will fall upon their necks, and they fall upon our necks, and we will kiss each other, and there shall be my abode, and it shall be Zion which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest. And it came to pass that Enoch saw the days of the coming of the Son of Man, in the last days, to dwell on the earth in righteousness, for the space of a thousand years. But before that day he saw great tribulations among the wicked; and he also saw the sea, that it was troubled, and men's hearts failing them, looking forth with fear for the judgments of the Almighty God, which should come upon the wicked. And the Lord showed Enoch all things, even unto the end of the world; and he saw the day of the righteous, the hour of their redemption, and received a fullness of joy."-D. C. 36: 13, 14.

We have now shown that the Saints will inherit the earth in its restored state, and we are led to enquire, over what else will they have dominion? We answer, Everything else upon the earth under Christ; for they are joint (equal) heirs with him (Rom. 8: 17).

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."

—Rev. 21: 7.

"Therefore let no man glory in men; for all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's."—I Cor. 3: 21-23.

"For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak. For one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man. that thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him."—Heb 2: 5-8.

Again:

"And unto him who loved us, be glory; who washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God, his Father. To him be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen."—Rev. 1: 6.

Also

"And hath made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. 5: 10.

Again:

"And to him who overcometh, and keepeth my commandments unto the end, will I give power over many kingdoms; and he shall rule them with the word of God; and they shall be in his hands as the vessels of clay in the hands of the potter; and he shall govern them by faith, with equity and justice, even as I received of my Father."—Rev. 2: 26, 27.

And this:

"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."—Rev. 20: 4.

These will have dominion over those of lesser glories; for "like sheep they [who are not saints] are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright [righteous] shall have dominion over them in the morning." (Ps. 49: 14.)

And when the thousand years, and the "little season," are past, then "His servants shall serve him; and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign for ever and ever." (Rev. 21:3-5) So their dominion will continue without end.

We have endeavored to present plainly to the reader the fact that the saints, after their resurrection, are to have a literal dominion, "place;" and that it is to be the earth in its restored and glorious condition; that the saints are to reign, literally, with Christ, and that their reign will be, first, for a thousand years, and then, after that, they will enter upon a higher sphere, and commence an eternal reign. But we do not propose to tell the glories and wonders of that reign; we know little, very little, in regard to it; and probably none will be able to fully appreciate it until they enter upon it.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—r Cor. 2:9.

"But," Paul says, "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God," verse 10; and in conclusion we can only say to the Saints, that we pray that, "the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us ward who believe." (Eph. 1:18, 19.)

Truly, the hope of the Saints is a glorious one. How worthy of Him who hath promised! Who of us is sufficient for these things? God alone is able to give us the inheritance and the glory:

"For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be named with the glory that shall be revealed in us."—Rom. 8:18. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."—2 Cor. 4:17.

weight of giory. —2 Oor. 4. 17.

Then let us faitfully follow the Captain of our salvation, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, and despised the shame, and is now set down upon the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens.

As to the power and capacity of the resurrected saints, we are led to conclude that they are infinitely beyond what are enjoyed by mortals. Their power and capabilities must be adequate to the sphere upon which they shall enter:

"For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I [Paul] know in part; but then I shall know even as also I am known."—I Cor. 13: 12.

Paul had attained to great knowledge in the things of God, "through the abundance of the revelations given unto" him; but as compared with what the Saints were to receive in the resurrection, it was like "seeing through a glass darkly"—it was knowing "in part" only. The powers which the saints, including the apostles, enjoyed in this lifs, was but a foretaste of "the powers or the world to come." The powers exercised by Moses, by Elijah and Elisha; by Peter and John; by the angels, and by our Savior while on earth,-great as it all was, is not so great as must be exercised by the Saints after their resurrection. Jesus said to His disciples, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." (John 14:12.) Jesus, no doubt, had reference to all the great works he had wrought in his Father's name. He had healed the sick, cleansed the leper, cast out devils, raised the dead, turned the water into wine, increased the bread and fish, walked upon the water, stilled the wind and the waves, and many other marvelous things; and His disciples were to do "greater things" than He had done. And why? Because He went to His Father. And when should they do these "greater works?" Evidently not during their mortality, but after they should be "raised in power." Jesus is clothed with "all power, both in heaven and in earth." John says "we shall be like him." Paul says the saints "are complete in him, [Christ,] which is the head of all principality and power." (Col. 2: 10.) He further says that "the God of our Lord Iesus Christ, the Father of glory," set Christ "at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his feet." (Eph. 1:20-22.) The resurrected saints are to reign with Christ, hence they are to receive a fulness of his power, for they "are complete in him."

FURTHER ORGANIZATION

What was the nature of the organization spoken of in section 44, paragraph 2, D. C., given February, 1831, wherein it was promised that when certain things were accomplished the church should "obtain power to organize themselves according to the laws of man," seeing that the church had already been "organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country by the will and commandment of God," April 6th, 1830, as see section 17, paragraph 1, D. C.? JOSEPH FLORY.

The commandment in section 44 was

The commandment in section 44 was directed to Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, who were then in Kirtland, Ohio, and related to the gathering in and organizing "the Elders," which took place the 6th and 7th of the next June, 1831, when a more extended organization of the priesthood was had, including a more thorough organization in respect to temporal matters under the bishopric.

The "church" began to be organized April 6th, 1830, in Fayette, State of New York; and this extended organization of "the Elders" took place in Kirtland, Ohio, in another town and state.

It was essential that the ministry should be so organized as to be recognized as within the provisions of civil law in those states wherever the Saints had church organizations, that they might be free from conflict or collision with said law, also that they might have the recognition and protection thereof.

By letters received from Pres. Joseph Smith under date of the 9th and 10th insts., we learn that he has been laboring actively of late; preached seven sermons in eight days, had good attention and interest, and at some times packed and orderly congregations.

At America Fork he had the Young Men's Improvement Hall filled with people who gave excellent attention to the word. Some are eagerly investigating to get at essential facts touching the origin, doctrine and work of the Reorganized Church. He reports snowy, rainy, unpleasant weather, but he is in good health and spirits.

He writes that on the 8th inst. he attended by invitation of the family, the funeral services "of our friend, and one time brother, David Williams, formerly of Canton and St. David, Illinois. Thus I was permitted to take the family by the hand and to look on the face of Bro. Davy Williams for the last time. He was wasted and worn as if his battle for life had been long and hard. I had great respect for him"

He reports that Bro. J. R. Evans was then at Spanish Fork and that the people seemed anxious to hear in respect to the Reorganized church. Prest. Smith has frequent invitations to private interviews with persons interested in the latter day work.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In the published letter of J. R. Lambert, contained in Herald for December 7th, the extract from an elder's letter, furnished by him, should end with the word "truth," at the close of his communication, instead of the word "doctrine," as published. The Scripture quotations intervening should be enclosed by single quotation marks.

"Preaching every night to full houses," writes Bro. J. C. Foss from Maine—his field of labor.

From Brooklyn, New York, Bro. M. H. Bond wrote the 2d inst: "Meetings every night. Good turn out yesterday. Brooklyn picking up." The spirit of the times to us is for progress and cheering tidings of peace and spiritual growth all along the line. We must have it or be left in the rear while the church moves forward. Let all step to the front in the ranks of the workers, joining hands with them; dropping old obstruction weights and hindrances, and erasing all past causes of disquietude from memory, except so far as we remember them profitably. Those who do not will inevitably fall to the rear and suffer loss.

Elder Joseph F. Burton wrote from San Benito, California, November 29th: "I expect to start for San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara counties accompanied by Elder Eugene Holt, who is about to take the ministerial field for life, and is now making arrangements to that end. He has been much blessed of late."

Any one knowing the whereabouts of George Teeples and Alvira Wheeler who "joined the old church in Michigan and started for Utah," will please inform their niece, Mrs. Sarah Jane Pulver—nee Slattery, this office.

Bro. M. H. Bond sends us a copy of the Brooklyn, New York, Eagle of the 6th inst. It contains a lengthy account of an interview with Bro. Bond, in which good points are made for the truths for which the Reorganization is contending earnestly. It draws the line of division between true Latter Day Saintism and Brighamism in no uncertain way. Such articles are timely and greatly aid the public in correctly estimating us.

Bro. E. C. Brand wrote the 9th inst. from Scranton, Kansas: "We dedicated Scranton church yesterday. Baptized two and one to-day. Prospects here bright. Shall return about the 22d."

THE following is going the rounds of the papers:

THE MORMONS IN BOSTON.

Boston has a genuine Mormon Church; not Brighamite, but established and founded upon the principles of the Book of Mormon as written by the prophet, Joseph Smith. It is known as "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Church of Latter Day Saints," and its attendance has increased from its organization with six members in June, 1866, to a present roll of 100 in active service, while the converts who have been baptized within its precincts during this interval, have been counted by hundreds, and are now scattered through every section of the country for the conversion of still others to their faith.

This church dates its origin back to the time of the first prophet, Joseph Smith, Sr., "who," so say its records, "instituted the church because of instruction he had received from a heavenly visitant." He is its "first president," and to him, the whole body, including the branch at Boston, looks for its primary instruction. The church in Boston belongs to the eastern mission which embraces the New England States, New York, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, with adjacent islands. In many of its articles, the "Epitome of the Faith and Doctrines" of the Boston branch, as of the others, is quite similar to the creeds and confessions of faith in the other churches, while in some it differs widely, as follows: Confirmation, following baptism, is administered by the elders. There will be two resurrections; the first is for "the just", who, with Christ, will inhabit and control the earth for a thousand years. The second resurrection is the final judgment which will condemn all those who have "knowingly" done evil. The article relating to marriage proves quite conclusively that there is a great done evil. difference between the Brighamite faith, as regarded polygamy, and their own beliefs. It reads: "We believe that marriage is ordained of God; and that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock, for either man or woman, except in cases where the contract of marriage is broken by death or transgression." The church is said to be reorganized because it believes that all other religions are schisms from the original body and that it alone is founded on the Word-

"I AM WITH YOU ALWAYS."

"Lo! amid the press,

The whirl and hum and pressure of my day, I hear Thy garments sweep, Thy seamless dress, And close beside my work and weariness Discern Thy gracious form, not far away, But very near, O Lord, to help and bless.

"The busy fingers fly, the eyes may see Only the glancing needle which they hold, But all my life is blossoming inwardly, And every breath is like a litany; While through each labor, like a thread of gold, Is woven the sweet consciousness of Thee!"

THERE is at the sweet Christmas tide a song of the heart, welling up from its secret fountains, giving voice to the lips and as it echoes out upon the world it falls upon the ear of the careless passers by and they pause, as if held by a spell, to listen to its notes of sweet gladness and thanksgiving. "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men" is the measure of its strain, the notes of its gladness.

The benediction of its presence falls upon the earth as a mantle of vapor and when the sunshine sparkles upon it not the lofty branches of the forest trees only, but the low-growing shrub, the tender grass just springing from the earth, even the tiny weeds by the way-side are covered, crowned with diadems of pearl and in sparkling drops send back an answer of praise and gratitude to the Giver of peace. As the crystal tear springs to the eye when the heart is too full for utterance and thus becomes the soul's medium of speech, so the dew silently distilled in the hour of darkness, becomes the voice of nature's gladness when the morning sun shines upon it, with life and brightness in every quivering ray.

But this song of peace, where was it chanted first? Did it echo amid the vaulted chambers of the richly decorated temple? Was it chanted by the angels, to the robed priest in attendance at the altar? Did it sound above the Levite as he slew the bleeding sacrifices in the outer court of the temple? Nay, not there; but to the humble shepherds in the lonely fields keeping watch over their flocks by night! "The poor have the gospel preached unto them" was the message sent by him who spake as never man spake, to comfort the heart of his faithful prophet and forerunner in the gloomy prison where priestly hatred had cast him.

Tell it again to John, "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." Let the song ring out from your hearts today! Lift up your heads ye who have found no mercy in the heart of man, for your cry has come up into the ear of the Lord and lo! I have sent Him-the Son of my bosom, to declare the gospel unto you.

Listen! Do you hear it? Oh, wondrous change, wondrous humility! "I am among you as he that serveth . . . I am come as a light that men who love light need not walk in darkness. One is your Master, all ye are brethren." Again the angel messengers have brought to earth the tidings chanted by the angel choir more than eighteen hundred years ago; and soon upon the world will ring out the voice of Christmas chitaes waking the echo from the river to the uttermost parts of the earth, "Glory to God in highest, on earth peace, good will to men!" Men have gone forth commissioned to preach this gospel to the poor. There can be no change in the gospel and if it requires meekness and humility upon the part of the humblest member, it requires more upon the part of the minister. "He that will be greatest?" Let the answer come from the volume of his word, for the heavens and the earth must pass away, but the word of the Lord endureth forever.

To the poor among men, the outcast and the humble the Lamb of God was sent. To those burdened with sin; heart sick and weary of its tyranny, he came with messages of grace and peace. His mission was to serve to strengthen to upbuild and cheer. Could heart of man desire more than this? Could mortal ask for nobler work. This ministry can be done only in humility for the Psalmist has truly written, "A wounded spirit who can bear?

Weary Saints; toilers toward the promised rest, through a stranger country, open your hearts at this Christmas-tide and let the peace of God enter them and forever abide. Listen amid your cares for the "sweep of his garments," for he has promised to be with you and he will never forget to fulfil that which he has promisednever.

There are some by whose firesides this Christmas tide an empty chair is standing, and yet some whose arms are empty though they still feel the touch of those clinging little hands about their neck and the tender little head nestling upon its soft pillow. Let us take heart and press on for we shall find them when we reach the end of our journey. There is a sweetly comforting thought in the lines below to those who have found it hard to part with their loved ones:

LIFTED OVER.

"As tender mothers guiding baby steps, When places come at which the tiny feet Would trip, lift up the little ones in arms Of love, and set them down beyond the harm, So did our Father watch the precious boy, Led o'er the stones by me, who stumbled of Myself, but strove to help my darling on; He saw the sweet limbs faltering, and saw Rough ways before us, where my arms would fail: So reached from heaven, and lifting the dear child. Who smiled in leaving me, he put him down Beyond all hurt, beyond my sight, and bade Him wait for me! Shall I not then be glad, And, thanking God, press on to overtake?

Yes; thanking God, we will press on to overtake, whether the "Lifted over" was the babe clinging to our breast, or the strong arm upon which we leaned. There come places upon life's journey where the feet which have long stood firmly trip, and who shall say to an all-wise God, "What doest thou?" Alas, the selfishness which shrinks from pain the purifier, and welcomes joy which often leads ours souls astray. The sweet peace of the Christmas-tide brings on its wings the hope which enters within the veil. Let us, then, renew our dilligence and press on.

St. Louis, Mo., October 30th.

Deal Sisters of the Home Column: A few of the sisters of Cheltenham branch have formed a Prayer Union and wish to have their names enrolled. The Union is for the strengthening and enlightening of the sisters as well as the purpose of praying for the sick and afflicted, and we ask an interest in your prayers that we may be able to do our share of the work allotted to us, and that we may ever have the Holy Spirit with us in our daily walks.

There are so few of us that we don't expect to do a great deal just yet, but we hope by pushing onward and upward we may let our light so shine that it may attract the attention of some of earth's weary pilgrims who are watching for a gleam of light to lead them to the path of truth.

Dear Saints, what a blessing it is for us to be allowed to come together to worship and sing praises to that gracious Lord who is so kind and indulgent to his weak and erring children when they stumble or fall.

Let us pray that we may all be watching and praying lest we should incur his displeasure and be left to fight our battles alone. We feel our inability to do anything of ourselves, for without his Spirit we can accomplish nothing.

We have a few in our branch who are doing all in their power to build up and elevate the Saints in this place, and our prayer is that they may reap the reward of the faithful.

Your sister,

LOTTIE COOK.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Catharine A. W., of Delaware, writes:--"I want to tell the sisters of the Home Column how much good their letters have done me and to exhort them not to grow weary in well doing, for many times I have been cheered and strengthened through their efforts to persevere. I rejoice in this work of God. Pray for me that I may be prepared to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb."

Sr. Mary C. Hannah, Los Angles, Cal., writes: -"I rejoice in the good news of the numbers who are being added to the church from time to time, showing how the gospel is winning its way. I am, as yet, alone in the work, as God has not answered my prayers in behalf of my husband, but my faith is not shaken-in his own due time he will answer. The longer I am in this work the more I love it, and I desire earnestly to do my whole duty and keep all His commandments."

Sr. E. A. Gill, of St. Edward, Neb., writes :-"I tried for some time to observe the hour for prayer each week, but was so often interrupted that I had to give it up. I have been sick all summer and now have a cancer on my thumb. I think the Home Column Missionary Fund was better arranged with the name of the town given, as it helps the elder and others to find the scattered Saints. It was in that way Bro. H. O. Smith found us. He staid one week and preached for us. I feel strong in the faith and am determined to press on until the victory is won."

Sr. Peter Hansen, of Plymouth, Mass., writes: "I send $1 50 to renew my subscription for Autumn Leaves. I am sorry I did not subscribe from the first, for I would not be without it for double its cost. It is the best magazine I have ever read. I can not understand how any true Latter Day Saint can get along without it, but every one knows his own business best. I hope for the day to come when the Saints of latter days will realize that they can not make progress without studying all the publications of the church. Oh, dear brothers and sisters, let us not forget this great truth that when we help the church publications we are really helping ourselves. I for one know that the more I study this gloriou work, the more the Spirit of the Master influences my heart and enlightens my understanding, so that I can fully comprehend the meaning of the words of Jesus "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive what God hath in store for them that love him and keep his commandments." May the Herald and Autumn Leaves live long and accomplish much good."

Sr. Hannah, of Riverside, Cal., writes: "I can bear a faithful testimony to the loving kindness and goodness of God which has been with me all the days of my life. I with my father, mother and brother were driven from our home near Nauvoo, but I thank the Lord we never went to that wicked place where many honest-hearted Saints were led. I am thankful for the church papers, for they strengthen me to persevere and I rejoice in the spread of the work."

Sr. Elizabeth Robinson, Angus, Iowa, writes: "We have prayer and testimony meetings at our house twice a month. The Holy Spirit meets with us, and we have blessings long to be rembered. We also have a Sunday School and Bro. Thompson is our superintendent and is doing all he can to teach the children. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may have patience to endure to the end."

SAN BENITO, Cal., Nov. 29th.

As one gazes on the face and form of a departing friend they are wont to recount their virtues and the deeds they have done in their life. So with the year that has nearly run its course, ere it passes away I turn my thoughts backward to see if during its months there has been any marked evidence of an onward and upward progress. "Come up higher" has been the message borne by the heavenly agencies to the children of the kingdom here below, till it became the watchword for the year.

Which one of all the children who heard it or read the message, did not feel a heart-thrill of joy? For in the very invitation there seemed to be a realization of getting nearer to God and Christ, and to all that was high, and noble, and good. And with the inspiration of the moment, the vision of the mind was able to grasp a little of the brightness of a higher sphere. One gleam only, but in that one gleam all the wealth of the world sank into insignificance. But like Moses of old, we may view the offered position without ever entering therein.

Entrance is only secured by "doing noble deeds, not dreaming them."

As children of the kingdom here below, we are still of the earth, and to go upwards to a higher plane, there must be a constant effort put forth on the part of those who climb, and then it is slow work. Probably many of the zealous. energetic ones who not only are continually ascending themselves, but putting forth untiring efforts to raise others on a higher plane also, may often have felt dissatisfied in not seeing at once as great a degree of success as they would wish. But who shall say there has been one effort put forth in vain through the fruits, may not yet be fully developed. (I speak only of events within our own circle, as "helps," not governments.) None can read the Sunday School reports in Hope of November 15th without feeling sensible that the efforts put forth in that direction have been crowned with success. Better methods have been adopted during the past year than heretofore. Yes, the Sunday School work is being placed on a higher plane and becoming a prominent feature in the latter day work. With all my heart I say, God bless all the faithful laborers in that noble cause! Would that I was qualified for such, and had the satisfaction of knowing that I had done something in the past year towards bringing about the good results.

Prayer Unions also have increased during the past year, not only in number, but in spiritual benefit. Those who can not meet with others, but give the hour to humble, earnest prayer and self-examination, realize that it strengthens and invigorates the mind just as a good, wholesome meal does the hungry; and through this channel we trust many have gained the strength that has enabled them to cast from them much that bound them down, and so have "come up higher."

Something over two years ago an excellent article appeared in the Home Column, headed "Steadily Forward." This caption seemed so appropriate for the saints of that time, that it was reiterated from time to time till it became the watchword for the "army of the Lord." And the sounding forth of this watchword from time to time nerved many a heart to a more firm and permanent action, while many a brave "soldier of the cross was cheered in his onward march. But to press "steadily forward" evidently was not all that was required by "our our great Commander," for, lo! there came a voice from above in words "sounding all along the line of march," "Come up higher!"

The invitation is sounded to all. But if the whole army is not obedient to the call, individuals may be. And what does such a message purport? "Come up hither and I will show thee things which must be hereafter," was the message of the Lord Jesus to his servant John, when he desired to show him things which must shortly come to pass.

True, only half the sentence was given in this our day, but may not the great unchangeable God have a like purpose in view? Among other important events John was told of an apostasy, and a restored gospel. Ere long we believe the angel will again be sent to communicate to the servant of God, a like sad and joyful message, saying: "The dispensation of the Gentiles is fully come in, and the time has come to send the gospel to the Jews."

Oh, sad indeed, when there shall be a "famine for the word of the Lord!" When religious darkness shall overshadow the western world. (save those who have the light within them), when people shall meet in their churches as has been their wont to do, but there is no spirit of worship, when they shall pray, and there comes no answer and the heavens are as brass above their heads, when they shall make an effort to win souls to their churches, and what they call to Christ; but men's hearts are hardened and they will not hear. And ere long their light shall go entirely out, for they have no oil in their vessels to replenish their lamps, and all will sleep in darkness. Yes, a sad time, indeed, for the Gentiles who have not heeded the gospel, and despised the name of "Saint."

But oh, the joyful news of those who have been the outcast for years though once so loved of God, even his "chosen people;" they who indeed rejected the Messiah, but never forgot the God of their fathers; they who for ages have continued their pitiful cry, "How long, oh Lord! how long!" and ceased not to bewail their departed glory.

What joyful news, I say, for them when their Father speaks again, telling them that though in his anger he hid his face from them for a little moment, he now returns to them with everlasting kindness, and for all their sorrow they should be rewarded double. Yes, his ear is tender to the entreaty of his children, and he will not long resist the cry of his first-born. For all of this we should indeed "come up higher" and enter into the full spirit of the day in which we live, a day in which if the pen be allowed to trace unseen events it would write: "Angels are ascending and descending, moving rapidly hither and thither; the heavenly hosts and the powers of the air are marshaling their armies for a mighty conflict; the Spirit of God is stirring in the hearts of men and they too are marshaling their forces and making ready, girding on the armor of righteousness with which to resist the enemy and fight for Christ."

But what can we sisters do in so great a conflict? We can "keep the lower lights burning." We can bring refreshing draughts to the soldiers. We can often bind up their wounds. And though we may not wield the sword or enter into the conflict, we can minister to those who do. Oh, yes; there is much for women to do on the field of battle if we are only willing. But what for those who remain at home?

A far greater and more important work. Rear up your sons and prepare them to take the place of the veterans who fall in the conflict, and so fill the ranks, that the "royal banner" may never suffer loss.

SISTER EMMA.

KENTON, Tenn., Oct. 26th.

Dear Mothers and Sisters of the Home Column:
—It is a little over three years since I enlisted in this glorious army, and I do greatly rejoice that I have been brought out of darkness into this great light. Tongue nor pen can describe the joy and peace it brings. It is balm to the weary soul.

I am the mother of a large family and am striving to teach my children to do right. All mothers know what trials mothers have and how difficult it is to get children to act just the way they would have them to. I will admit that I did not realize how to teach my first children, and I rarely ever think of it without great remorse. I desire your prayers in behalf of my children, that they may be converted and brought out of darkness into the light of the gospel. I have four little ones gone to a better land, and two daughters married. I often have felt the need of the common comforts of life, and my surrounding circumstances would render me very unhappy if it was not for the comforting Spirit which so often tells me of a happy future. There are no saints here, except one brother and sister, my husband and myself. The people here are very much prejudiced. I would like for an elder to come here and preach to them. Brethren Griffin and Seaton were the first of the saints I ever heard preach. Brethren Griffin and John Thomas were here last fall, and brethren Griffin and Gillen were here in the winter. I would be glad if they would remember us and come again. I do greatly desire to live near some branch of the church, for I do love the saints better than all other people. I love the latter day work, for the Spirit beareth witness with my spirit that it is of God.

Sisters, how is it that we are so anxious for that great day of the Lord, and so far from being united? Let us not be carried away with the fashions of the world, and let us not be covetous, as I fear some are. We can not serve God and Mammon. Let us be neat and plain as becometh saints, and let us all examine ourselves and see if we have that charity spoken of by Paul? Ah, how greatly I desire that charity! Let us strive to come up higher. May God bless every true Latter Day Saint.

Will some one please explain the 11th and 12th verses of the eighth chapter of Matthew?

Your sister in bonds of love,

JANE WILLIS.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column: -- I will try and write a few lines, hoping to encourage some lonely one like myself. I have received so much strength and courage from your letters that I am thankful for the Home Column. Do not get weary, dear sisters, you are doing a great work, encouraging the weary, strengthening the weak, upholding the tempted and tried; not until the judgment day will be revealed the magnitude of that work, therefore I am constrained to cast in my mite, weak though I am. I feel it a pleasure as well as a duty, if I can but say one word that will encourage or help the weary scattered saints who have not the privilege of meeting with their brothers and sisters to worship God, and be strengthened by their faith and prayers. We believe we are remembered, but Oh, it is so good to know it, to see and read your letters of love; they are precious food! I speak from experience and feel there are others who can testify to the same.

Dear saints, pray for the scattered ones. Pray for the afflicted ones, the poor and the needy, and for the families of those who are away on missions, also for us whose husbands are not on missions and not even in the church. We need your prayers and sympathy, also your encouraging words to enable us to prove fait! ful and have patience and grace sufficient for the day, for verily we find it a day of trial and great temptation, causing us to be always on the watch-tower, if we would gain the crown laid up for the faithful; therefore I ask again your faith and prayers for the scattered ones. I hope you will all remember Autumn Leaves and encourage your friends and neighbors to subscribe for it the coming year, for it is worthy of your support and is doing much good both in the church and out of the church.

May the Lord bless you all, is the prayer of Your sister,

AUNT PAMELIA.

FLORILLA, Mo., Nov. 14th.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union:—Will you allow me to enter at this late hour and tell you what we are doing down here in this corner? There have been three families of Saints moved in here this fall, and all seem well pleased, and today promptly at two o'clock, we met at Sister Sparling's and organized a Prayer Union. Sister Judkins president, Sr. Sparling treasurer, Sr. Tucker secretary. The Spirit was with us and we felt strengthened from this our first meeting. We are few in number, but we know if we walk upright before God and do the commandments of our Lord and Master, he will bless our every effort to do good. Dear Sisters, I want you all to remember us who are here among the Ozark mountains in your prayers, that the Lord will bless and strengthen and guide us to do our duty so that we may be as a city set on a hill that can not be hid. We hope to have a branch organized here in the near future; there are enough here now ready and waiting to organize. Sisters of the Union, will you please remember Sr. Judkins' husband who is afflicted with paralysis, that if it is the Lord's will he may have the use of his limb restored. I will bid you all good night, and will come again in the future,

SR. M. E. TÜCKER.

Correspondence.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Nov. 28th.

Bro. W. W. Blalr :- I have read with interest the investigation by the United States Court in Salt Lake City, of the Anti-Mormon oaths taken in the Endowment House. It carries my mind back to the time when I took the same satanic oath. The course pursued by the court is getting at the very foundations of Brighamism. I can certify to the statement made by Mr. Henry W. Lawrence on the sixth day of the investigation as being in nature and substance the oath taken by myself in company with others at the endowment house in Salt Lake City. For many years I looked upon that work as being an acceptable work in the sight of God and angels. And from the feelings caused by the misreprerentations of the officials of Brighamism concerning the will of God being binding upon such as had received their endowments to defend the priesthood under all circumstances appertaining to its counsel, we were made to believe, and in good faith, too, that it would be in the service of God. Hence the cause of the Mountain Meadow Massacre.

There is no need for me to state the nature of the oath, nor the different purposes for which it was enjoined, for it is already in print. But I will state, however, that such oaths of secresy comes down to us from the devil through Cain, the murderer, and that polygamy is of a like nature. Such doctrines will in time be broken up, for their stench is felt from sea to sea, throughout the land. Such doctrines are no part of genuine Mormonism; and this being the case, such as believe and practice them are in fact Anti-Mormons, for they are in opposition to true Mormon principles.

And in regard to the answer of President Wilford Woodruff to the associate press of Chicago the 23d inst., concerning the investigations in progress in the court in Salt Lake City, it makes me think of a remark found in one of Brigham Young's sermons, where it says that the English language is so constructed that a man can "talk one way and mean another, when he feels disposed to do so." It was but natural for Mr. Woodruff in his position to give the deceptive answer he did to smooth over, as much as possible, his treacherous acts and those of his people toward the Government, and also to mislead the minds of those less informed of his own people in regard to the Mormon religion. First, it is true as he stated that the "Mormon religion is consistent with the most patriotic devotion to the Government of the United States," but polygamy is not Mormon religion, as the following from the Book of Mormon, page 118, will show:

"Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken unto the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."

Now, it is a well known fact from Brigham Young's usurpation in 1844 to the present time their works prove them transgressors of this strict law of the Lord, and that since 1862 they have been transgressors of the law of the United States forbidding polygamy.

Mr. Woodruff would have the press to believe that he and his people are patriots devoted to the United States government, and Mormons of the first class order, by quoting the commandments to the church given through Joseph Smith enjoining the Saints to keep the laws of the land. And in regard to secret rites and ceremonies, he acknowledges that such has been administered to members of his church; and this being a fact, too, as in the practice of polygamy, is not genuine Mormon religion, for the Book of Mormon condemns that practice. But Mr. Woodruff claims it as Mormon religion as follows: "The Mormons on the stand decline to disclose the formula of the endowment, because secret religious rites and ceremonies are the property of the individual citizen."

I will again quote the Book of Mormon and see if it is Mormon religion: "And it came to pass that they formed a secret combination, even as they of old; which combination is most abominable and wicked above all, in the sight of God; for the Lord worketh not in secret combinations, neither doth he will that man should shed blood, but in all things hath forbidden it from the beginning of man."—Page 531. Mormon here declares that the Lord doth not work in secret combinations; and this being the truth, as also in regard to the word of the Lord forbidding polygamy, how can Mr. Woodruff and his people claim to be Mormons when they thus set aside the very teachings of Mormon? The fact is, they are the "apostate Mormons," which name Mr. Woodruff misapplies to those who leave his church.

Mormons, otherwise Latter Day Saints, are strict monogamists whose practice is "consistent" with the law of our nation, and the "commandments to the church" by Joseph Smith during his lifetime. And I would respectfully invite President Woodruff and his people to return to the old paths, the pure doctrine of Christ, lest the hand of God scatter them still more and they be like sheep without a shepherd. I was a resident of Utah for twenty years and a zealous Brighamite most of that time. I went through the Endowment House twice, and am well acquainted with the inside works done to bind honest, confiding people to serve and defend a perverted priesthood. I am often led to ask myself why I did not detect the cunning craftiness sooner. The answer is, my zeal was greater than my knowledge of the doctrine of Christ, being blinded by the craftiness of men. But, thank the Lord, I now see the true light, which light shines brighter all the time. The Reorganization has done and is doing a wonderful work in and for the redemption of Zion.

Yours in the one faith,

SIMON SMITH.

COLDWATER, Mich., Nov. 29th.

Bro. D. Dancer:—Please send me some tracts—all you can—for the sake of the work in this part of the vineyard. We are trying to open up some new places just now and the would be very religious are trying to freeze us out in the town of Quincy. Five have been baptized here recently. Four were children of some of the Saints; baptized by Bro. C. Scott.

The articles written by Bro. Joseph reviewing the abominable corruption out west are good. The times are hard and it is going to be hard to get subscribers for church works; but we will do our best. All is well. Will write you something for the Herald soon, so you will see how we are on the situation.

Very truly yours,

E. C. Briggs.

OSCEOLA, Iowa, Nov. 29.

Bro. Blair:—I came into this church last March, and I can testify to its being the true Church of Christ. Things I once hated I now love. It is a pleasure to me to read the testimonies of others, and of the good work that is going on. As I am the only one in the family that belongs to the church I have a heavy burden to bear, but I am thankful that I have the prayers of the Saints and there is One above who is able to lighten the burden. Although I have not had the opportunity of being with the saints much in the time past, yet it drew me closer to my Savior, and now, while with them, I know how to appreciate them.

There are but three families of Saints here, and we have our prayer meetings every Sunday afternoon. We feel that the Lord is with us, if there is but few of us in number.

Pray for me that I may gain more wisdom and knowledge of the truth.

Your sister in Christ,

Eva.

COOK'S POINT, Tex., Nov. 27th.

Brn. Smith and Blair:—The good work still moves on in this section. I baptized another lady and blessed three children since my last report to the Herald. We have also had two weddings in Cook's Point branch, namely, J. W. Sherrill to Sr. Frances Nunley, and Robert Milam to Sr. Chloe M. Tarber, all members of said branch.

Our members in Texas have taken a notion to scatter this fall instead of gathering together. Nearly every branch in Central Texas has lost nearly one-third of the members, or in other words, about one-third of the members have moved off from the branches from one to two hundred miles.

There is no one that knows how hard it is to build up the church in Texas but those who have tried it. It is hard to get openings, and then hard to build up branches; and then still harder to hold them together, for most of the members in Texas are transient people, and have no farms. I will let you hear from this section again before long.

I am yours in bonds,

E. W. NUNLEY.

BEAVER, Ohio, Dec. 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:-Having hung my "harp upon the willow" for the past few days, owing to a physical and mental depression produced by over exertion, this morn my mind reverberates back some seven months agone, when as spring in its incipiency was putting forth its budding tendrils, I donned the ministerial armor and with bated breath and silent misgivings I bade adieu to home and dear ones and ventured out into the "great harvest field," since which time I have been constantly at work. Immediately after the terminus of the General Conference I repaired to my home, made a satisfactory adjustment and disposal of temporal affairs and mounted "Nahum's Charlot" enroute for the east, destined for the historical and once sacred stake of Zion, namely, Kirtland. From here, in company with Bro. Griffiths, we departed for the various branches of the district, preaching as time and opportunity afforded, also making several new openings. In company with Bro. L. W. Powell we succeeded in opening up the work at Sharon, Pennsylvania, a city of about ten thousand inhabitants. The few Saints here donated liberally, raising forty-five dollars to pay for hall rent; held meetings nearly five weeks, resulting in the baptism of seven. Held protracted efforts at Diamond, Washingtonville and Warren, Ohio, securing several sheaves for reward, and seemingly meeting with divine and human favor, when like a thunder-bolt came the news of David Powell's untimely death. This caused the departure of my traveling companion, leaving me alone, since which time we have not labored to-

I attended the Kirtland district conference and delivered four discourses while there. Then the missionary in charge and the writer visited the stamping ground of the noted Solomon Spaulding and succeeded in making an opening in near proximity thereto. Thence by instruction of the Spirit we came to the South-Eastern Ohio and West Virginia district, attended the annual conference and reunion, assisting in dispensing the word as wisdom and prudence directed; afterwards visited the several branches of the district until the departure of Bro. Griffiths some five weeks ago, he returning home, and I remained to labor as time and wisdom would permit. Learning from Bro. L. W. Torrence that a new opening could be effected at Beaver I immediately repaired to this place. First, I essaved to secure the use of the M. E. Church and was met with the astounding rebuttal, "It is against our discipline" (?) Our second and more favorable attack was upon the United Brethren faction of christendom, which resulted in permission to use their house. The announcements were made for preaching. The news spread like wildfire that a ravening wolf (Mormon), had entered the sheepfold, and soon the cry of "Mormonism," "Impostor," "Egg 'em," rang out on the still Pike county air, but Dame Curiosity accomplished her purpose and I had a good audience. Held eight services here with excellent attention and growing interest, audiences ranging from twenty-five to two hundred, as weather permitted. I was then invited to step "down and out," as they did not wish to have their church polluted by any more Mormonism. But God was at the helm, and the Protestant Methodists (near town) threw their doors open and said, "Come." Gratefully accepting the invitation we commenced services there, and so far have preached eighteen discourses there, making twenty-six sermons in this vicinity. Scarcely had I resumed my meetings when the "Disciples" attacked us in the shape of a local preacher and "one-come-for-the-purpose," We held a confab of three nights' duration resulting in their withdrawal and leaving the field again to ourselves; and notwithstanding I challenged them to continue the investigation and debate the issues between the two churches, they backed down and out, leaving me in far better condition than they found me, and the work held in higher estimation by the people. The minister left with a, "I-can't-but-father-kin-cry," saying they would get somebody that would bebate with me; but so far they have failed. I informed them as they had made the attack I would remain on the defense. One has been baptized and many are near the kingdom; but the doctrine being so new it will retard their immediate entrance. I have, however, accomplished our purpose, namely, to remove prejudice and bring the truth fairly before the people.

Persecution has at times reigned almost supreme; but by wise deportment, and desisting from unnecessary attacks on others, we have won the sympathy of the people, and upon every hand the cry is heard, "Come home with us," etc.; and in the expression of an enemy, "There are men here who would like to cut that boy up and throw him out of the window, but it is hard to do, when he preaches and comports himself as he does."

A Methodist friend said, "Yes, he'll preach fine for awhile, until he gets you where he wants you, and then he will lift the curtain and show you the elephant!"

I will visit Wellston, Radcliff and Hartford City, all new openings, and put forth an effort. Expect to return to North-Eastern Ohio, about January 1st to remain until conference.

The Lord has abundantly blessed me in my labors, giving assistance wherever needed. The Saints have been courteous and kind wherever it has been my lot among them, and when depressed and worn out we have received new vitality and strength on receiving kind words and cheering exhortations from them. Bro. Torrence and family, also Bro. Allen and family, are noble examples of what Saints should be; and it is a pleasure to represent the cause with such living witnesses to attest its effect, and, although isolated from any branch of the church, are noble and faithful workers.

I will remain here another week and then leave the work as it is for the present, trusting that the ministry who reside at Limerick, when on a furlough, will come over here and spend a few days in recreation.

As time advances and I become more adapted to the work of the ministry, I feel to labor more strenuously and make it my life's work. And while life is not a bed of roses, neither is everything which glitters gold, yet the gratification realized in showing others the light and in representing a cause which becomes brighter the more it is examined, thoroughly compensates me for all labor and time expended.

Yours in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

POMONA, Cal., Dec. 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair and the Church in General:-I have the sad intelligence to impart to you of the death of my brother H. P. Brown. He died at his home, No. 619, 19th Street, Oakland, California, on the morning of the fourth of the present month, being sixty-four years, three months and eight days old, having preached the gospel of Jesus Christ forty-five years, and having given all of his best days to the cause he loved the best of anything on this green earth, both by voice of mouth and pen. His wife should receive the sympathy of the whole church, not only in their prayers, but in purchasing the many volumes of the Expositor now left on hand, which volumes in the hands of live Saints are worth double the cost-fifty cents per volume.

Sister Margaret is now nearly worn out in her untiring care for him for the past year, since he had the paralytic stroke by which he lost the use of the limbs of his right side from his head to his feet.

It should be remembered that he was one of of the elders that helped build up the Zarahemla branch—the first germ of the Reorganization.

In the Expositor will be found Adventism reviewed, except the very cause of Wm. Miller's getting so interested in the second coming of Christ. I being older than Bro. H. P. have a better recollection of what took place in those days. The first cause of Wm. Miller's advocating the second coming of Christ was his hearing Jared Carter and another elder preach on the setting up of the Church of Christ and preparing for His second coming. The teaching of Miller was so glaring in those days that many lost their senses. My own sister at the discovery of the falling of the stars in 1833 went into hysteric fits.

H. P. Brown was the first person I ever heard preach the gospel as it is recorded in the Bible. That was in 1845, in his twentieth year. My sister was so afraid that he would make a balk that she would not go into the building, but remained outside and listened. After that she was not afraid.

His earthly work is now done, and his reward is sure. He has worked faithfully for an inheritance, and died with full faith of a call in the first resurrection. I am the only one of my father's family that have stood by him in the faith of Christ.

My mother also died in the faith, but was not baptized. I promised her on her death bed that I would be baptized for her, not knowing at that time but the ordinance was in the church. And now at the present day I think I will live to see the day that the Father through Christ, will restore that ordinance, that I may fulfill that promise.

I am now the last one living of my father's family, and January 5th, I will be seventy years old, if I live to see it.

My love for the cause is undimmed, although my ears are dull of hearing, which hinders my preaching.

Please do not forget the widows in their afflictions; and my prayer is for the cause, and the prosperity of the true church. With love to all and hatred to none.

I am, as ever, in bonds,

E. C. Brown.

GALENA, Ind., Nov. 20th.

Brn. Foseph and William: - My stay at Indianapolis was short, owing to not having means wherewith to pay hall rent; however, I think good will result from our mission. Through the kindness of sister Everett's husband my meetings were advertised in three of the leading papers of the place. Mr. Everett also assisted me in looking out a hall for future use, in which our elders can hold meetings free of charge by addressing Rev. G. R. Sturgeon, No. 133, Yandes street, Indianapolis, Indiana. He requested that he be notified some time before coming as he publishes a paper denominated, "The Gospel Truth," in which he gives a notice of our meetings. He also said he would have notice given of our meetings in the Times.

Sister Everett also authorized me to say that any of the elders passing that could stop and hold some meetings would find a home at her home, which can be found in Ryan block, room 2, fourth floor. Sister Susan is heartily endorsed by her husband, Mr. Arther C. Everett, if he is a free-thinker. If there were more free-thinking people there would be less of that intolerent spirit which is so prevalent, especially in the larger cities.

As there is now an opportunity to have the work permanently introduced there, I hope the church will look after its interests.

Yours in the conflict,

M. R. Scott.

This is a reply to our request for the use of the Adventist Church:

INDIANOPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 14th.

Arthur C. Everett, Esq., Dear Sir:—As per agreement, I hereby reply to your request for the use of the "Seventh-day Adventist" Church.

We appreciate your situation, knowing you have much trouble in securing places wherein to hold meetings and worship. We can sympathize with you because of similar experiences. We are a people disposed to liberality, and a kind of liberality that becometh the followers of Christ.

Knowing what you do of Seventh-day Adventists, you need not be told that our views are decidedly distinctive.

Our church property here is not the property of the Indianapolis church but is built by the state at large and is under the control of the State conference, and matters of this kind necessarily must come before the State Committee.

We are disposed to move cautiously in this instance, because of the stigma which attaches to your name and people. And while you may not have any connection with or be in harmony or sympathy in any way with the "Mormon Church" you have credit for the same.

We sympathize with you in this from the fact that we know what this "credit" work is. Seventh-Day Adventists get credit for all the fanaticism of the entire Advent world, and there are sects, many. Individually I would not encourage you, although I have very little right to either encourage or discourage you. We are compelled to work cautiously in this city (as everywhere else for that matter) because of the prejudice that exists against us. We have been classed with Mormons, Atheists, and almost every other evil combination that exists. All without cause. And we feel it necessary to avoid giving cause for any such things.

In conclusion I would say that the president of the State Conference is expected in the city to-day, and you might call on him to-morrow, and explain yourself, your faith, work and methods, and if you can satisfy him that you have no connection with the "Mormon Church" and that your faith and methods are in harmony with the word of God, you will no doubt get the use of the church.

I leave the matter here and refer you to Elder F. S. Starr, who you can see at No. 175, Central avenue, to-morrow, November 15th.

Very respectfully for the church, L. M. Dunlap, Dea.

VALVERDE, Colorado, Dec. 1st.

Bro. Blair:—Our hearts have been made glad by the addition of one to our number by baptism, a young man of sterling quality, who, if faithful, will, without doubt, make a number one Latter Day Saint. The little branch here meet together every Sabbath and the Spirit of the Master is with us to comfort and cheer, for which we are very thankful.

This is a hard place to get a hearing. People do not seem to have time to seek the life hereafter; the mind is too much occupied with the things of the present. Others are so narrowminded that they will not let the light of truth shine into their hearts. Among this class are our Methodist-(I was going to say friends)-but they are anything else but true friends. I had been associated with them as assistant superintendent of the union Sabbath School for nearly a year, and things moved along smoothly, with the exception of a disagreement on doctrine once in a while, until they got their new church completed and the union Sabbath School was turned over to them. They then had no use for a Latter Day Saint superintendent. They could come and ask us to subscribe to help build their church, but when I asked for the church for Bro. Caffall to preach in they would not let me have it, and when I asked their reasons for refusing, one of the trustees said it was on account of the doctrines we taught, among which was polygamy. The minister, who was the main one in deciding the question, has said in our house that he had been in Utah and knew the difference between us and the Utah church; but in the trustees' meeting he carried the idea that we were all the same. One of the trustees gave her consent and said she would use her influence with the other members of the board in our behalf, but when the board met she stated that she only gave her consent knowing that there was enough of the others that would vote against us to carry the question. She said she did not want us in the church any more than the rest of them; and so it goes. But I do not think they are making anything by the procedure, as the matter has become noised around and created quite an indignation among thinking people. One consolation, if we are not making many converts our Methodist brethren are not doing any better, and for my part I would rather have one of Bro Caffall's converts than all our opponents make in a year. When such things transpire it gives us a chance to state our position, and when so stated to thinking minds the cause loses nothing, and I am almost led at times to think that those that are so bigoted and narrowminded would not be much account as Latter Day Saints; but we know that when the light shines into the heart it makes different men and women, and so we strive on, hope on, that some may see the light. Your brother.

E. F. SHUPE.

MEDINA CITY, Texas, Nov. 21st.

Dear Herald: Our conference convened on the 1st of this month, and continued for several days, peace and harmony prevailing. Preaching and testimony meetings continued until the 10th. The Spirit was enjoyed, God's blessings were poured out, and all returned home declaring they were ten times paid for coming. Our new chapel was very much appreciated by the saints. Bro. H. L. Thompson of Bell county, seventyfour years old, was with us through the entire meeting and bore his part in the preaching services with that energy of Spirit that would do credit to a younger man. Our joy was full to overflowing when, on the 8th, our beloved Bro. O. P. Sutherland, of Missouri, arrived, for our childhood days were almost like that of our family. After maturing into manhood our lot was cast together in the army of the late confederacy, and now after a separation of about fifteen years we meet and strike hands under the banner of Christ our divine commander. Here we leave you, dear reader, to imagine our joy and heartfelt gratitude to God.

Last Sunday, the 17th inst we attended meeting below Bandera, and on our return we called on our aged sister, Helen Bell. She gave us her testimony as follows: "I am nearly eighty-two years old; was baptized in 1840 in Scotland, and emigrated to Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1841. I was in Nauvoo when Brn. Joseph and Hyrum Smith's remains were brought to the city, and remember well the night before, when the long roll-beat called to arms and all nature seemed distressed. The saints had received the sad news of the death of their beloved prophet and patriarch, the great leaders of modern Israel. The entire city was thrown into confusion and mourning; even the animal creation seemed distressed. Horses simultaneously neighing, cattle lowing, sheep bleating-in a word, everything was in an uproar. I saw them the last time in life that they were permitted to look upon the city and the people they loved. I joined the Reorganized Church in 1866, and have received many blessings and bright assurances of the truth of this gospel, and can bear my testimony to-day that I know it to be of God."

If the above lines are published, many will read them that can testify with us of the faithfulness of this aged sister through all those long years. At present she is quite feeble in body, but her mind is quite active for one of her age.

I shall make this letter short, thinking that, perhaps, some brother or sister will write more fully the spiritual condition of this country. I shall only say, the work moves onward. Two were baptized, two children blessed and the sick administered to with good effect during conference; and one baptized since. Meetings are held in saints' chapel the second and fourth Sundays in each month, and prayer-meeting every Wednesday night. Traveling elders will meet with comfortable conveyance from Centre Point depot, if they will let us know in time of their com-Will let us a...

FULTON, Iowa, Dec. 4th.

Dear Herald:-()ne chancing to come into the midst of the little band of Saints resident in this vicinity, knowing naught of the marked changes which have taken place in the last eighteen months, would per force exclaim in astonishment at the apparent improvement in order, number, spiritual understanding, manifestations of God's favor in and out of the branch. The earnest, zealous devotion, punctuality in attendance, evident familiarity with text of the law and usages of the kingdom, unity and peace characterizing the lives and conduct of officers and members alike, certainly entitling Fulton branch to the palm as the Banner branch of the Eastern Iowa district, whose conference session has just closed. Its late session was unprecedentedly united, hearty, business-like, orderly successful, spiritually and financially, the Saints needing only the opportunity to make liberal deposits in the hands of worthy representatives of the church finance department.

The cheerfulness, heartiness and generousness of the Saints' obedience to this most wise provision for the work's advancement bespeaks an earnest faithfulness on the part of the officers in teaching it, as well as a consistent readiness on the part of Saints to obey all God's law as a means of obtaining the maximum of blessing.

The good Lord has wrought mightily with and for this noble flock; many bright soulenlightening testimonies have been given; the visible gifts have been copiously bestowed, and, we should opine, wisely exercised and acted upon, judging from the almost marvelous progress in spiritual knowledge made by all. The esteemed president, Bro. Jno. Heide, takes pardonable pride in saying in commendation of his flock, "We haven't a drone among us, they are all workers."

An air of intelligence, culture and manifest determination to obey the Spirit's invitation to "come up higher" pervades the whole household here. To such a volume has the army of the Lord swelled here that no private house can seat, conveniently, the branch and its friends desirous of attending its weekly prayer-meetings. So at the suggestion of Bro. J. S. Roth, missionary to this district, the branch this evening takes under advisement the project of building a Saints' Church. We heartily wish this plan succes and hope the good work may not stay nor tarry till a commodious, neat and comfortable edifice is a their disposal.

My old traveling companion, J. S. Roth, still throws the hot shot of heaven's artilery into the enemy's strongholds to the demolition of his ramparts, the comfort and edification, instruction and admonition of God's elect, whose confidence in his sturdy integrity, dauntless courage, and plain, impartial, uncompromising administration of the celestial law, remains unshaken by the clamors and railing without and the sneer, covert, inuendo and exparte complaint of a few grumblers within. God pity the spiritual "dyspeptic."

The ordination of three zealous, faithful and most promising youthful members to the Aaronic priesthood has enlarged the official roster and thereby very materially increased the importance of the branch by making it a considerable factor in the missionary force of Eastern Iowa district. While we hope good things of these our noble brethren, we would point to the fact of good results depending upon the individual obedience, diligence, faith and humility of each and all. May the best results accrue.

Such a season of spiritua I refreshing as this conference occasion afforded is without equal in the history of the Eastern Iowa district. Some whose spiritual sands were nearly run, whose altar fires had nearly flickered out, were on this bounteous occasion filled to the full, fanned into vehement flame, and to the Father above be the praise. At His hands may we often be so boun-WM. T. MAITLAND. tifully fed.

Editors Herald:-I have not addressed you for some time for several reasons, the principle one being that my travels, trials, experiences, failures and successes, are common occurrences in the life and travels of every missionary of the latter day dispensation, and to enter into a detailed account would only be a rehashing of an old, old story and a sort of a self-advertisement, especially if I only write up the goody goody side of the picture. Therefore I will only give a brief account of myself.

I left California on the 21st day of July for Oregon; found friends in waiting for me at the landing who welcomed me back. I also found that the seeds sown by myself and others had not been rooted up, but were producing fruit: prejudice had been allayed, and places were opened for preaching that were closed when I was there three years ago. I stayed in Oregon a little over two months when pressing calls came from Gilman, this state, where I labored for two months in conjunction with Bro. John Davis, lately from Lucas, Iowa, and Bro. Alfred Tarling, of Streator, Illinois, both of the lesser priesthood, and with other brethren and sisters of that place. Prejudice was allayed and three were added by baptism, Bro. Davis officiating; five children were blessed, the sick were made whole by the prayer of faith, others renewed the covenant who had been on the background for years. And on the 21st of last month I left them for Portland, Oregon, where on the 24th five of us met to partake of the sacrament, when a sister of mine, who had been baptized by Joseph Smith in 1843, and who had stood aloof from the church for over thirty-five years, came forward with tears and renewed her covenant. This was in answer to prayer, and is a great encouragement to go on.

On the 25th I came to this place where I found one of the scattered sheep who had been driven from the fold by the false shepherds of Utah, Luke Storey, by name, waiting to welcome me to his home. On the next day I was called upon to administer to a son-in-law of Mr. Storey's who was very bad with pneumonia, bleeding profusely from the lungs, with other evidence of near dissolution. The Lord heard our prayers in his behalf, and he is now sitting up. Last night we had a school house full of people to talk to, with reasonable liberty, good attention, and with several invitations to call upon families. I have another appointment out for tonight but the weather is bad-snowing. I expect to remain here for a couple of months, and would like to hear from Bro. Newton Fields and other Saints in eastern Oregon and Washington.

My address for the next two months will be Latah, Spokane county, Washington.

My health is about as usual; my faith and knowledge increases day by day, and I am trying to fight the good fight of faith.

Yours in gospel bonds,
A. Haws.

GREENVILLE, R. I., Dec. 2d.

Dear Herald:—Bro. O. A. Vickers and myself have been holding meetings here for over a year. We first held them in the School house, but as prejudice was raging so we were refused the privilege of meeting there. I made up my mind not to give up but press on, so I opened my house and have had good meetings, and the Lord has blessed us with his Holy Spirit. We have baptized five, one lady being a member of the Baptist Church. Her husband has also obeyed and others are believing our report.

Last Saturday night my brother and myself with our companions went to Cranston to Bro. and Sr. Surls. We were very kindly received, and held a meeting there in the evening. Quite a number of neighbors and friends were present. We also held a meeting next morning and had good attendance with good liberty to speak. We arrived at the usual place of meeting of Cranston branch. Bro. O. A. preached with good liberty.

EMORY F. VICKERS.

TABOR, Iowa, Dec. 4th.

Bro. Blair: Since our camp-meeting held at Wheeler's Grove, I have labored continuously until vesterday. I went from the camp-meeting to the Richards' Settlement with Bro. Hougas and we preached alternately in the Union School-house to fair audiences. I continued there for one week, after which I preached one week in the Central School-house, three miles east of the Richards' Settlement; had good congregations who listened very attentively and did good work for me in song service. In both of these places there are some who believe the doctrine taught and are almost ready to obey. I was trated well, and nearly all say, "Come again." I visited the Saints in Hamburg and held services over two Sundays: had good liberty in preaching the word to both Saint and sinner. In administering to the sick the Lord was with us in power to heal. One man, not a member of the church, was healed. His arm had been afflicted for six months. His wife testified in our meeting that he was healed. She is a member of the South Methodist Church. Here I baptized three who live east of this place ten miles.

I visited Mill Creek and Shenandoah and was blessed in both places. Preached every night to the people, doing the best I could. The Saints in all these places are doing well generally; some are very active, zealous workers. Elders Mortimore and Calkins have been helping all they could both in their own branches and in the Richards' Settlement. Bro. Donelson and family have attended these meetings.

The Shenandoah branch is doing well; Bro. Cline presiding, with Brn. Wilcox, Leadingham, Gaylord and others helping. They have paid off the debt on their church. Bro. James Calkins met with a sad accident by a runaway team, but through the prayers of the Saints and the ordinance of God's house he is making rapid progress.

Our church dedication at Plum Hollow was conducive of much good. After you and Bro. Forscutt left Bro. Lambert came and continued the meetings with what help we gave him over two Sundays. We had good audiences who paid the best of attention. We are hopeful for the work in that vicinity. God bless the faithful Saints of that branch for their never tiring zeal, labors of love and sacrifice of time and means for the work of the Master.

Tuesday, November 11th, I accompanied Bro. Lambert to Macedonia, where previous arrangements had been made by Bro. James Kelley of that place for preaching in the Methodist Church. We commenced our services the same night. The sweet singers of Israel from Wheeler's Grove and Farm Creek put in an appearance, and, to their credit, greatly assisted in our song service. Our congregations steadily increased during the week, and Sunday atternoon we had a house nearly full of very earnest and attentive listeners. Some of the leading citizens of the place thanked Bro. Lambert for coming and for the good word spoken and hoped he would come again. Since he left some expressed. themselves very sorry to think they missed the opportunity of attending, others telling them of the noble effort put forth.

One person was baptized the following Sunday at Farm Creek by Bro. D. Hougas. A favorable impression was made and others are almost persuaded to be baptized.

I preached six sermons in the church at Wheeler's Grove and six in the Farm Creek School-house. These Saints are alive to the interests of the work.

Since you were in attendance at our conference held last June, eight or ten have been added by baptism to the Farm Creek branch. That branch is in good working condition and may build a church next summer. May God help them in this very much needed and laudable work. From thence I went to Emerson and held two meetings with the good Saints of that town. In this place they want you to come and preach for them, for there are those who made your acquaintance in an early day. With these you can do more, I think, than any other minister can at present. They are holding you to your promise and say to you "Come."

I then went on to the Keystone branch, preached Saturday night, the 30th, and twice on the Sabbath, assisted by Bro. George Kemp.

These Saints are a faithful little band of good workers spiritually, and have never failed to do their part temporally. They have done nobly in paying their tithing. We shall be with the Saints here until after next Sunday, expecting to preach in the church at Plum Hollow, and next week go home on a short visit, as we have not been home since April conference. Let me say to the Saints, Let us be up and doing while the day lasts, for the night is surely coming when no man can work. Let us "lay up treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust can corrupt."

Brethren and sisters, let me exhort you not to forget "the Lord's storehoure." Pay in your "tithes and offerings as God has prospered you," and you shall in no wise lose your reward in time nor eternity.

Yours in bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

CHRIST.

THERE is a clear and positive tradition of the conception, life work and crucifixion of the Redeemer. On this Lord Kingsborough says: "How truly surprising it is to find that the Mexicans, who seem to have been quite unacquainted with the doctrines of the migration of the soul and the metempsychosis, should have believed in the incarnation of the only son of their Supreme God, Tonacatecutle. For Mexican mythology, speaking of no other son of that God except Quecalcoatle, who was born of Chimalman the virgin of Tula, without connection with man, and by his breath alone, (by which may be signified his word or his will, announced to Chimalman by word of mouth of the celestial messenger, which he despatched to inform her that she should conceive a son), it must be presumed that Quecalcoatle was his only son. Other arguments might be adduced to show that the Mexicans believed that Quecalcoatle was both God and man. that he had previously to his incarnation existed from all eternity, that he had created both the world and man, that he descended from heaven to reform the world by penance, that he was born with the perfect use of reason, that he preached a new law, and, being king of Tula, was crucified for the sins of mankind, as is obscurely insinuated by the interpreter of the Vatican codex, plainly declared in the traditions of Yucatan, and mysteriously represented in the Mexican paintings." Mexican Antiquities, vol. 6, p. 507-8.

Here is another legend of the same character. Bancroft says: "In Nicaragua proper they adored Tomaoteot, the great God, whose son Teotbilche was sent down to mankind. This looks like another Christ myth, especially when we read of attendant angels who had wings and flew about in heaven."—Native Races, vol. 3, p. 492.—He further tells us: "The Nootks, like so many American peoples, have a tradition of a supernatural teacher and benefactor, an old man that came to them up the sound long ago. He landed and instructed the men of that day in many things; telling them that he came from the sky, that their country should be eventually destroyed, that they should all die, but after death rise with him above."

Bancroft says of the tradition just related above: "by which visit is not improbably intended to be signified an avatar or incarnation of that chief deity or Great Spirit, worshipped by many California tribes, as the 'Old Man Above.'"—Ibid p. 151.

The visitation of Christ to the American continent seems to be indicated in the following traditional legend. Wood, in speaking of a spot held sacred by the Indians, between the Minnesota and Missouri rivers, says: "On this sacred spot the Great Spirit is said to have stood in the ancient times, and to have called together all the Indian nations."—-Uncivilized Races, p. 1313.

Here is an important testimony in the same line: "In very remote times, about the era of the apostles according to the padres, an old white man, with long hair and beard, appeared suddenly at Huatulco, coming from the southwest by sea, and preached to the natives in their own tongue, but of things beyond their understanding. He disappeared shortly after as mysteriously as he had come, but left as a memento of his visit a cross."—Ibid, p. 454

Here is the affirmation of the Book of Mormon, as to the visitation of Christ to the ancient people of America: "Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are."—Nephi 1:8.

While on the monuments of Central America there are found the representations of bearded white men, I might ask, how could the beardless American Indian have imagined a bearded race? Simply out of the question without the association or visitation of said white bearded man. Quetzalcoatl was the chief character of the Nahau family. Of him John T. Short writes: "From the distant East, from the fabulous Hue Hue Tlapalan, this mysterious person came to Tula, and became the patron god and high-priest of the ancestors of the Toltecs. He is described as having been a white man, with strong formation of body, broad forehead, large eyes, and flowing beard. He wore a mitre on his head, and was dressed in a long white robe reaching to his feet, and covered with red crosses. In his hand he held a sickle. His habits were ascetic, he never married, was most chaste and pure in life, and is said to have endured penance in a neighboring mountain, not for its effects upon himself, but as a warning to others. He condemned sacrifices, except of fruits and flowers, and was known as the god of peace; for, when addressed on the subject of war, he is reported to have stopped his ears with his fingers."—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 268.

Whosoever professes love for and confidence in the revealed word of God, will find in the following not only substantial evidence of the Book of Mormon, but likewise more than a shadow of a foundation for the traditions that have been discovered among the aborigines of North and Central America. God "made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." This most certainly includes the inhabitants of America. "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold," reveals the divine understanding, and perfect knowledge that was possessed by Christ. He was no stranger to the words of the prophet, "The Lord God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him." —Isa. 56:8.

I have established by irrefragible evidence that the aboriginal inhabitants of America were of Jewish origin, and they are therefore outcasts of Israel, with the promise of God vouchsafed unto them, be it remembered, that neither let or hindrance standeth in God's path, but all his promises are yea and amen. The Father extends to the Son an invitation and says: "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." -Psa. 2:8. These are not idle or empty words and well might America be considered the "uttermost parts of the earth" from the locality at which David was when he wrote these words. He says again: "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him. For the kingdom is the Lord's; and he is the governor among all nations."—Psa. 22: 27, 28.

How hard it seems for some who profess a belief in the Bible to accept the truthfulness of the above, and admit the work of Christ among the ancient people of America. Once more hear David: "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust."—Psa. 72:8,9. These quotations, as also that statement of the Book of Mormon, and the several traditions of the Indians, all unite to clothe with greater beauty the universality of the mission of Jesus Christ, whose work of redemption was, is, and shall be unto all nations, tribes, and people.

The Nahua tradition of the departure of Quetzalcoatl, as given by Short, is as follows: "He was skilled in many arts; he invented (that is, imported) gem-cutting and metal-casting; he originated letters, and invented the Mexican calendar. He finally returned to the land in the East from which he came; leaving the American coast at Vera Cruz, he embarked in a canoe made of serpent skins, and 'sailed away into the East.'"—North Americans of Antiquity, p. 271.

THE CROSS.
Another strong witness in favor of the visitation of Jesus Christ to the American continent and equally, a strong proof of the divine character of the Book of Mormon, is the finding the cross as a relic of the ancient civilization of America. Wood said the cross was left as a memento by the "old white man" who visited Huatulco.

Speaking of a skeleton taken from a mound in Ohio, Priest says: "On the breast of this person lay what had been a piece of copper in the form of a cross.

The cross on the breast of this person excites the most surprise, as the cross is the emblem of the Christian Religion."—American Antiquities, p. 180.

Cronise says: "Humboldt refers to the Mexicans having some confused idea of Christianity." The New York Herald, in November, 1866, contains a communication from Mexico, concerning a discovery made by a person named Lyon, about three hundred miles to the northeast of Jalapa, of ruins of Christian places of worship, which had been abandoned before the conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards. Among these ruins were found the statuette of a man with the emblems of Christianity—the cross, lamb, etc.—carefully carved. Grijalva, who was in Yucatan in 1518, states that there were many great stone crosses in the country at that time, and that the people worshipped them. The Spaniards under Cortez found many such crosses in Mexico."-Wealth of California, pp. 30, 31.

Bancroft says: "One of the most remarkable emblems of Maya worship, in the estimation of the conquerors, was the cross, which has also been noticed in other parts of Central America and in Mexico, although less prominently than here."—Native Races, vol. 3, p. 467.

Native Races, vol. 3, p. 467.
Speaking of a table at Palenque, Stephens says: "The principal subject of this tablet is the cross."—Incidents of Travel, vol. 2, p. 346.

Chamber's Encyclopedia says of the cross: "And the Spanish conquerors were astonished to find it an object of religious veneration among the natives of Central and South America."—See article Cross. And the American Encyclopedia says: "The Spanish conquerors of the New World found crosses of stone and of wood erected in Mexico and Central and South America. The Muyscas and Mayas reverenced it, and among the Toltecs it was called the 'tree of nutriment,' or 'tree of life.' In the ruins of Palenque and in those of some of the Central American cities, of unknown antiquity, it is often met with on sculptured stones, with surroundings which prove its sacred characacter."—See Article Cross.

Baldwin says: "Casa No. 2 of Mr. Stephens, is usually called La Cruz, because the most prominent object within the building is a great bas relief, on which are sculptured a cross and several human figures. . . . The cross is supposed to have been the central object of interest.

. . . The cross is one of the most common emblem present in all the ruins."—Ancient America, p. 109.

In speaking of the funeral rites of Nahua or Mexican nations, Bancroft says:

"On the small flag was a cross worked in red thread."-Native Races, vol. 2, p. 619. And in speaking of a department of a Nicaraguan Temple he says: "It was surrounded by an enclosure, in the middle of which stood a cross nine feet high, representing the god of rain."-Ibid p. 793. Without rain we would soon be without food and in a starving condition, therefore rain, or water may be the true emblem of life; and without Christ we have no eternal life. The Nicaragua tradition is within the lines of sense and truth, viewed from a logical standpoint.

Of a Mexican god Bancroft says: "His symbols were the bird, the serpent, the cross and the flint."-Native Races, vol. 3, p. 268. He tells us that: "In a tablet on the wall of a room at Palenque, is a cross surmounted by a bird, and supported by what appears to be the head of a serpent."-Ibid p. 135.

Of one of the Mexican "culture heroes" he says; "He always wore a long white robe; which according to Gomara, was decorated with crosses."—Ibid p. 274. Of the Mexican God Tlaloc he says: taking leave here of Tlaloc I may draw attention to the prominence in his cult of the number four, the cross and the snake." —Ibid p. 348. In describing a Mexican festival he says: "The Toci priest spread out his arms and stood like a cross before the image of the war god; this he did four times."—Ibid p. 356.

All nations do homage to the female character, and of a Mexican goddess Bancroft says: "In her right hand she held as a sceptre, a vessel in the shape of a cross."—Ibid p. 369.

Of the god of fire he remarks: "On the left arm was a shield, almost entirely covered with a plate of gold, into which were set in the shape of a cross five chalchiuites."—Ibid, p. 385.

Bancroft gives the explanation of the cross in the Mexican language: "The cross is to be found in Mexican Manuscript, and appears in that of Fejervary with a bird, which, as an inhabitant of the air, may be said to accord with the character of the symbol. The Mexican name of the cross, tonacaquahuitle, 'tree of one life, or flesh,' certainly conveys the idea of fertility."—Ibid, p. 469.

He tells of an observance at another Mexican festival: "The principal feature of the feast was a tall straight tree, which was stripped of all its branches except those close to the top and set up in the court of the temple. Within a few feet of its top a cross-yard thirty feet long was fastened; thus a perfect cross was formed."

–Ibid, p. 508.

In speaking of Palenque he says: "The T shaped niches are of very frequent occurrence throughout the ruins, and have caused much speculation by reason of their resemblance of the Egyptian tau and the cross."-Native Races, vol. 4, p. 312.

Of an enclosure at the same place he says: "Fixed in the wall at the back of the enclosure, and covering nearly its whole surface, was the tablet of the cross, six feet four inches high, ten feet eight inches wide, and formed of three stones.

The subject doubtless possessed a religious signification, and the location of the tablet may be considered a sacred altar, or most holy place of the ancient Maya, or Tzendal priesthood."-Ibid, p. 334.

Surprise and astonishment await us, as we search among the antiquities and ruins of the ancient people of America. Mr. Bancroft tells of a building at Mitla: "Under the northern building of this palace there is a subterranean gallery in the form of a cross."—Ibid, p. 407.

In life or death, at peace or in war, those ancient people seem to have never neglected the cross.

Bancroft says of the shape of a tomb at Mitla: "One of these tombs was in the form of a cross."—Ibid, p. 412.

Speaking of ruins in Vera Cruz he says: "This stairway, as is more clearly shown in Esteva's view of this side than in my cut, is arranged in the form of a cross."-Ibid. p. 438.

It can hardly be supposed that the erection or forming of all these crosses was a mere accident upon the part of the ancient Americans.

Of the relics found in the ruins of Vera Cruz Bancroft says: "The only movable relics found were the figure of a female bearing a sculptured cross, a representation of a mummy closely wrapped as if for burial and having features of a different type from those ordinarily found in Aztec idols, and the form of a man with arms crossed and legs bent."—Ibid. p. 461. Of a building at Xochimilco, Mexico, he says: "Within the circle is a very perfect maltese cross."-Ibid, p. 498

Bancroft says there was found a five branch cross at Otoncapoloc, Mexico: "In connection with which was found a flat stone over six feet long, bearing a sculptured five branched cross."—Ibid, p. 503.

Mr. Bancroft quotes that: "Veytia also speaks of the cross of Meztitlan, sculptured together with a moon on a lofty and almost inaccessible cliff."—Ibid, p. 544.

He tells of a cross and altar at Zacualtipan, Mexico: "The room contains the remains of a kind of altar and sculptured cross."—Ibid, p. 545.

The Incas were the lords or chiefs of Peru. Of them Bancroft writes: "I may mention here that the Incas possessed a cross of fine marble, or jasper, highly polished and all of one piece. It was three fourths of an ell in length and three fingers in thickness, and was kept in a sacred chamber of the palace and held in great veneration."-Native Races, vol. 5, p. 48.

Ellen Russell Emerson says: "The Indian's crux capitata is seen in the outline of two mounds here given. In the next device which is that of an Indian Mound the cross of the winds common use The construction of the next cross, which is another form of an Indian Mound, seems to be the labor of an artist of some training, rather than that of a savage."—Indian Myths, pps. 20, 21.

The true value and merit of the cross and religion of Christ, as understood by the Book of Mormon writers, are reflected in the following: "Now behold, my beloved brethren, this is the way; and there is none other way nor name given under heaven whereby man can be saved in the kingdom of God."—Nephi, 13:6.

Another writer uses this forceful expression: "There is no other way nor means whereby man can be saved only in and through Christ."-Alma 18:3.

Rev. M. T. Lamb and others in their inorginate and vehement opposition to the Book of Mormon deny that the cross is the symbol of Christ and the Christian religion, notwithstanding I am confident, after on extensive reading and meditation upon the subject, that the cross and Christ (this includes the Christian religion), are inseparable and indivisible, and its antiquity is not derogatory to the meaning and divine character, but confirmatory thereof. Sir Gardner Wilkinson, explaining the meaning of the circular cross in Egyptian legend, says: "The crosscake was their heiroglyph for civilized land;" upon which Mr. Wilkinson remarks: "Obviously a land superior to their own, as it was, indeed, to all other mundane territories; for it was that distant traditional country of sempiternal contentment and repose, of exquisite delight and serenity, where nature, unassisted by man, produces all that is necessary for his sustentation."—Atlantis, p. 322.

So much for the Egyptian tradition. Here is the signification to the Greek:

"This same mild season gives the blooms to blow, The buds to harden and the fruits to grow." (To be continued.)

EXCEPTIONS.

IT is not just to judge a man's life by its exceptions. A single brick, if it be an exceptional brick, is not "a fair test to the whole structure." It is true, whether the brick is far above or far below the average. Because a man has once in his life sunk down below his true character, if he has risen again never more to sink, it is not fair to sneeringly single out that blemish as a specimen of his manhood; and because a man has risen once in his life to extraordinary lofty achievement, if he has fallen back to his own level never more to rise, it is not fair to refer with pride to that achievement as a specimen of his strength. While it is true that a man is no stronger than his weakest point, when that point is involved in the testing, yet that weakest point may be now entirely eliminated from his character, leaving behind nothing but the ugly surface blemish on his record; and while it is that what we have done once we can generally do again, yet if, as a matter of fact, we have never succeeded in doing it again, it is not fair to credit ourselves with a present ability which does not in reality appear to exist. To ferret out past mistakes, and fasten them to another's character as its label, or to herald an isolated past achievement as a sample of our present power, is to reverse the first principle of truth, and make the exception the rule. How much harm and injustice are done by such unsound judgment? To be fair, and to make legitimate deductions, one must judge a character, a principle, a tendency, at its normal best, not from the highly forced single success,-still less from its poorest illustrations.—S. S. Times.

THE INCREASE OF TRUTH.

"His truth endureth to all generations."

-Psalms, chapter 5.

The mental struggles in the world of religious faith and doubt may find illustration in the experiences of four great minds. Gibbon went from the Anglican to the Roman church, then back to the Protestant faith, and then to at least a partial infidelity. Cardinal Newman in defending Protestantism reasoned himself into Romanism. Huxley from a scientific standpoint has landed in agnosticism, while James Martinson, from the psychical, is a profound theist.

Projected into the larger world these debates take place in organized forms and may be classified as the ultra ultra-conservatives, who believe that wisdom is a child of the past and hence resist all innovations of thought. In politics these are royalists, and in England oppose home-rule in Ireland, and in France the Boulanger party would restore the power of the pope and the clergy. In religion such conservatives as Dr. Hodge oppose the revision of the confession of faith, and in the Episcopal convention only one, Mr. Judd of Chicago, voted against making the Nicene confession obligatory upon the clergy because many did not believe it, but for that reason the convention thought it wise to make them repeat it.

The ultra radicals in politics are the anarchists who would destroy the past and present to rebuild anew. In religion they are the atheists who deny God and a future life. But between these extremes are the determinists or eclectics, who would discard the worn-out and save the good in both church and state and go on to the new and the better. These are the Gladstones, and Castellars, and Victor Immanuels, and Washingtons, and Lincolns; the Coleusoes, [Colensos? Ep.] and Stanleys, and Farrars, and Charings, and Freeman Clarks, and Bushnells, and Beechers, who would make religion a great reasonable faith and a divine life and the church a welcome home for all.

The great and decided changes of the past have resulted in more light, as in the new astronomy, and geology, and evolution, and in the reformation; and such scholars as Drs. Schaff and McCosh favor revision of the Presbyterian creed; and the president of the Baptist Theological seminary in our city declares these old dogmas make God a monster; and a Baptist pastor has the courage to deny a personal devil, though Drs. Goodwin and Withrow still hold on to the old belief.

The facts of life are hard enough to bear without carrying along dark superstitions. Once the swamps and all dark places were filled with satyrs and fauns and the grave-yards with ghosts. The red devil in the swamp is reclaimed, and the cure is tiling and draining and not in Latin prayers. The devil of wars, and fightings, and oppressions is in the pride and love of power of money; the devil of lust is in the carnal desire; the devil of intemperence is in bad whisky and not in some outside power, and all these wrongs are the abuse of a possible good, and the remedy is in better thinking and living and seeking in prayer the saving love and power of God.

We must get back of surface forms of truth into the great sources. The bible did not make truth or the church religion; truth and religion made the bible and the church. God is truth, and truth waits for a clearer revelation in the hearts and minds of our great century. - Selected.

The Latter Day Work is increasing wonderfully in magnitude, and it behooves him who desires to keep pace with its rapid strides to embrace every opportunity of informing himself not only with reference to the standard works of the church, but things transpiring in the world at large, which have a direct bearing upon the grand march of events, pointing to a culmination in the secong coming of Christ.

In addition to this there will also begin in the February number a Brethren and Sisters, will you aid us, by helping to enlarge our subscription list? If cash commission suits you better than premiums, write us for our terms. Less than a month now remains before the January number will be ready for sending out, but much can be done in a month, by persistent and earnest offort. We could furnish you many testimonials of the work the magazine is doing, especially outside of the church; but we do not believe it necessary. We look for a largely increased subscription list the coming year, and hope we shall not be disappointed.

Yours gratefully,

N. B.—A request for renewal of subscription, or to have the magazine sent on time will be all that is necessary, if you are not prepared to pay now. We want to accommodate all, but can not afford to continue it to parties who do not request it. Remember it will only cost you a postal card to keep your name from being dropped, and insure you the magazine for 1890.

All magazines will be sent out as soon as names are received. Premiums will be awarded the last of April or first of May. Keep your lists open, as you may add other names before that time; but don't fail to keep a list of all names you send. If you fail to do this, delay and trouble will surely result.

N. B.—Parties sending in list of names for Autumn Leaves will be credited with all names, but commissions can not be allowed until payment is made. To insure commission the money must be collected and sent to the office.

THAT "OPINION."

In HERALD for the 14th inst. we presented our readers with the decision of Judge Thomas J. Anderson in the District Court for the Third Judicial district of Utah involving the right to citizenship of members of the Brighamite Church. As to the legality of that decision we have nothing to say, for the laws of our nation have wisely provided suitable tribunals in which and by which the decisons of inferior courts may be examined and finally adjusted; and besides, we are uncompromising advocates of the eleventh commandment, "Mind your own business," which, "being interpreted means," do not meddle with the affairs of others.

We have long known that the Brighamite leaders, from 1844 up to the present time, were teaching and practicing the very things the sacred books and early traditions of the Church of Christ emphatically forbade and denounced; and we have also known that ultimately, and at no distant day, the God of heaven would bring them into judgment therefor, make their folly and evils manifest "upon the housetops," and break their power to mislead and oppress.

Some of the leading men of the Reorganized Church have long ago seen the storm gathering to burst upon Brighamism like a whirlwind, to its overthrow; and they have sought to be instant in season seeking to reach the ears and hearts of that blinded people and help them out of their delusions and away from their dangers ere it should be too late. Thousands have been reached and rescued to their joy and prosperity; but others would not hear, while some indulged in mocking and even violence toward the ministry and membership of the Reorganized Church, resisting, misguiding and misstating the kind and persistent efforts made, at great sacrifice, to inform them and do them good.

In view of these efforts no one, Brighamite or otherwise, can say now or hereafter that the "Josephites" did not seek to warn and help the erring ones out of their dangers and difficulties in due season and save them from impending wrath and But when the Brighamites shut their ears against the pleadings, warnings and persuasive efforts of the Reorganized Church, their leaders and many of their people utterly refusing them, it remained to be seen what virtue there was in repressive and compulsory measures directed by the rigorous hand of civil law and wielded by the ministers of justice for our nation. The Brighamite leaders can blame themselves, first and last, for the shame and smiting which has come and is coming to them.

It is too late for the present leaders to go back on the teachings of Brigham Young and his follows and claim that such were merely and only "the opinions" of those leaders and not the doctrine and faith of the church, and attempt to prove it by appealing to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, for it is notorious that the Brighamite Church from the first has been led into its apostate, pitiable, repoachful condition by its radical and continuous departure from the plain and most prominent teachings of those books, following the dictation and example of those old "file-leaders" and exhorting the people to do the same.

It is well, even at this late date, for the Brighamite leaders to seek shelter and safety beneath the protection offered in the teachings of the Book of Mormon and the authentic revelations given through Joseph the Seer, but how much better it would be if their conduct and teachings had always been in harmony with them.

It was a sad spectacle to see the teachings and conduct of the Brighamite leaders laid bare in Judge Anderson's court by written and oral testimony, and note their utter condemnation by the word of God and the law of the land. But while this served to hold up the transgressors to public and richly merited rebuke, it served also to bring into essential prominence the righteousness and all-worthiness of the laws which God has given in these last days for the government and salvation of his Saints. In this God makes the wrath and wickedness of men to praise him.

Certainly, God will overrule all these things for his glory, and for the salvation of his faithful, humble Saints. He has foreshown through his servants, anciently and modernly, the great latter day apostacy; and whoever will patiently examine the sacred books of the church will find no difficulty in locating it both as to time, character, and people. Saint Paul said of

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared as with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth."-1 Tim. 4: 1-3.

This prophecy teaches, 1, that this important prediction was given "expressly" for the benefit of the Saints; and 2, that it would have its fulfilment "in the latter times;" and, 3, that only "some" (not all the Saints), "shall depart from the faith;" and, 4, that this departure would be effected because this "some" would give "heed to seducing spirits," and to the craftiest, most deceptive and abominable forms of Satanic delusion, viz., "doctrines of devils," which are in fact and working directly opposed to Christ and his redemptive work; and, 5, that those thus deluded would be marked by their "speaking lies in hypocrisy;" (that is "assuming a false appearance of piety and virtue;" "concealment of ones real character or motives;" feigning; intentional deception, etc., etc.); and, 6, as a consequence of their delusion and deceptiveness, "having their conscience [their moral sense of right and wrong seared as with a hot iron;" and, 7, "forbidding to marry" [according to the legal, common, proper customs as set forth in the accredited "faith" and word of God]; and, 8, "commanding to abstain from meats."

Now, the Saints are the only ones among whom this apostasy could occur in these "latter times" for the very good reason that they alone have accepted "the faith" of the gospel in its fulness, and therefore only they could "depart from the faith." We repeat it, that only Latter Day Saints could fulfil this prophecy of Saint Paul. And to this we add that those called to be Saints in these "latter times" have fulfilled it exactly, for some of them, in the different factions, have done precisely what is set forth in the prediction; and it is manifest that spirit-power, of the Satanic kind, has inspired, corrupted, blinded, hardened and misled the predicted "some," so that Brighamites and others have made the "abominable" doctrine of plual marriage a virtue and a means of salvation and exaltation; made Adam or some other creature to be the God and "the only God" they should serve; made their religious systems to combine both civil and religious powers and prerogatives. thereby causing conflicts between themselves and the laws of the land; and one (if not more), of the apostate factions, namely Baneemyism, commanded "to abstain from meats."

None of the various sects of Christendom in these "latter times," nor all of them combined, have fulfilled this notable and very important prophecy of Paul; but "some" who have departed from "the faith" delivered to the faithful Latter Day Saints, as contained in their sacred books during the life-time of Joseph the Seer, have fulfilled it. They could fulfil it; but the sects could not. And all who claim to be Saints should see if they are in this apostacy or not. Is is a certain fact, that a great division and numerous subdivisions have occurred among Latter Day Saints, and that, too, in respect to essential, fundamental doctrines; and herein is conclusive evidence that Paul was correct when he prophesied that "some shall depart from the faith," etc., etc. Who are they who have departed from the original, authorized "faith" as set forth in the accepted, authentic books and records of the church prior to the death of Joseph the Seer and the division and scattering of the Saints! Be honest. Be just.

Examine yourselves; see if you are in "the faith" or not. Don't delay this selfexamination, for much, very much depends on where you are in this matter. It is not at all surprising that God has foreshown both the fact and the character of the great latter day apostacy and its consequent divisions. But it would be very surprising if he had not done so, and that, too, in great plainness. Paul, in 2 Thessalonians 2: 1-12, foretells "the working of Satan with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish," and says it will affect a certain class "because they received not the love of the truth" "Thy word is truth"—Iesus in John 17: 17]. This event, as the contexts show, relates to affairs just prior to "the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," (verse 1), and applies primarily to a certain evil class among the Saints, as well as to others, who will resist and reject "the truth." And of these it is said (in verse 11) that, "because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved" by it, "God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned who belived not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—verse 12.

Paul calls this "working of Satan" ("man of sin," "the son of perdition"), "the mystery of iniquity." How perfectly this harmonizes with what we have already seen of Paul's prediction in I Timothy 4: I-3? And Joseph the Seer tells us "the man of sin" is Satan, and that when the high priesthood, in its higher offices was conferred, in Kirtland, June 6th, 1831, "the man of sin was revealed, and the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood manifested." Satan here sought and obtained great power over some, as many have testified to the writer. But the "choice seer" detected Satan's wiles, exposed his "working," and, by faith rebuked and cast him out in the presence of many witnesses. In view of all this it is not strange that Satan would again ply his crafty "working" in the times of distraction, darkness and division which befell the church upon the persecution and martyrdom, of the prophet and patriarch, June 27th 1844; and that he would inspire ambitious souls and ensuare them in "a strong delusion," and, among other things, by spirit forces cause Brigham and those in like disordered condition, to usurp the presidency of the church and invade offices, councils and quorums, with which they, as apostles, had no right or authority under the law and order of God, and causing Brigham to imitate, in voice and manner, (like a common spirit medium) the martyred Seer. God is not the author of either arrogance, unlawful claims or methods; but Satan is, and that is one of the distinctive features of his "working."

In all the foregoing Paul points out with precision the chief characteristics of the apostacy of "the latter times," and in 2 Tim. 3:1-9 he supplements it by this very particular text:

"For of this sort are they which creep into houses [as was done by "some" at Nauvoo, and since, who taught that women could not be saved and exalted except through plural marriage, and in some instances teaching wives that their husbands were not of the right tribe, priesthood or affinity to save and exalt them ], and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers [various] lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, It is said these were those Egyptian magicians, who withstood Moses by their craft in the hall of Pharaoh], so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate [to reject, abandon, disown] concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further; for their folly shall be made manifest unto all men."

While it may not be proper to limit this prediction to apostate Saints only, it is quite evident that they fulfill it in a most direct and striking sense; and it is notable that the prophecy foreshows a point after which "their folly shall be made manifest unto all men," and beyond which "they shall proceed no further" until that is done.

While it may be truly said that the "folly" and evils of apostate Mormonism began to "be made manifest" in some degree prior to 1858 when the United States army entered Utah against the boastful protestations and wrathful predictions of Brigham Young and his fellows, breaking into their "secret chambers of the Lord" and loosing the bands in some measure from the oppressed and blinded Saints, yet since then, at different times, as in 1863, 1868-9, 1879, and now in 1889, the evils and errors of Brighamism-"their folly"has been and is being "made manifest unto all men" throughout the civilized world, and the Lord is placing bounds and limits to the work of that "ism" by exposing its secret as well as its public "working," and in this the courts in Utah are playing a most important part. will read Book of Mormon 4:4, page 514, also Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1; 56: 1, 2; 63: 2; and 64: 7, with 105: 5, 9, 10, etc., etc., will find much additional testimony on the points involved, and what God will do with "the rebellious."

In conclusion, we believe the "Opinion" of Judge Anderson will prove of great weight in solving the Brighamite apostacy. And while we do not propose to argue the legality or propriety of Judge Anderson's course (that being a matter with which competent courts alone are authorized to deal), yet it must be apparent to all well acquainted with the situation, that the transactions had in said court will largely influence public sentiment, the national government, and future decisions of courts on similar issues. Destiny is now rapidly shaping affairs in Utah.

The lessons being evolved out of the Utah Mormon problem, though at the cost of great trial and distress to many upright souls, also to the everlasting reproach and condemnation of others, and to the disgust and indignation of our nation and good society everywhere, are likely to prove of universal benefit, both locally and throughout the civilized world by reason of the important social, moral and local questions forced into discussion by the doings and teachings of the Brighamite leaders.

We have long held that the God of heaven would yet be glorified in the resultant good to come of His chastenings and corrections in purging out the evils of apostate Mormonism, and that in doing so He would make bare His arm in the eyes of all nations, thereby manifesting His. will and the eternal principles He has ordained for the government and general well-being of the race. The questions of marriage and divorce; the rights of conscience as related to religion and civil government; personal rights and duties as related to the rights of society at large; the delegated prerogatives and powers of civil governments over the citizen; these and many other questions fundamental to the good of mankind, are likely to be brought forth in shapely, clearly defined forms, from the fiery furnace through which Brighamism is being forced.

The late decision of Judge Anderson, concurred in by Judge Zane, which, it is generally thought, will be sustained by the Supreme Court of our nation, is very farreaching in the principles it enunciates, for it says in effect that all who will be citizens, must give their allegiance first, last and all the time to their nation, and to that government whose blessings they enjoy.

In respect to the strictly religious phases of the problem, the Reorganized Church is in the proper position to define and demonstrate the errors and evils of Brighamism to all men, and to point out the remedy, and the only remedy for them.

Joseph the Seer said in Nauvoo, January 20th, 1844, in a letter to Hon. John C. Calhoun, in Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 395: "I or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence;" and the following article from the pen of Pres.

Joseph Smith, which we clip from the Salt Lake Evening Times of the 14th inst., is but one of a host of efforts made in that direction in the past, and is a striking and comforting proof that the prediction is having a most literal and notable fulfillment. Read the article carefully and profit by what it teaches:

LS POLYGAMY PRODUCTIVE OF GOOD RESULTS?

One of the chief claims urged in defense of the practice of plural marriage in Utah is that under a provision of the Constitution Congress is restricted from prescribing a form of religion and from proscribing any person for exercising the right of conscience and the worship of God so long as he does not interfere with the rights of others in the exercise of that right to worship.

In order that no inquirer may be misled, as some claim that there is a distinctive difference between polygamy and plural or celestial marriage, the identity of what is complained of in Utah is determined by the statement of Apostle and Associate Historian Franklin D. Richards, who, in a chapter of history on Utah Mormonism, furnished last year for George J. Hager's work "What the World Believes, the False and the True," calls it "Mormon polygamy," though insisting that they prefer that it should be called celestial or plural marriage.

Thos who have occasion to study Mormonism from the outside, whether as a neophyte seeking light and knowledge with a view to unite with its fortunes and faith, or to measure it with the claims of other faiths, is entitled to examine the faith, doctrines and practices as the same are presented in the teachings, precepts and examples of the chief disciples. It is but natural to look to these as the proper exponents of the system. And, though it may be true that the bad acts of a man do not necessarily disprove the divinity of religious precepts or his good acts prove the divine nature of his assumed mission, there is a sort of justice in the adage "Actions speak louder than words."

The United States census shows that in 1850 the population of Utah numbered 11,380; in 1860 it had increased to 40,273; in 1870, 86.786, and in 1880 to 143,963.

Of the numbers thus given the excess of the males over the females is given in 1870 as 100 to 96.7, and in 1880 100 to 93.21%.

93.21/2.
The numbers in 1880 were as follows:
Males 74.509; females, 69,454; excess of males, 5,055.

The consideration of these numbers will show that in Utah, where it is claimed that the right of men exists by reason of religious belief to marry more than one wife, the sexes are nearly equal in number, the excess being in favor of the men. If the right to marry inures to man by virtue of creation, the same right extends to woman for the same reason. The equality in numbers argues this. It follows that if one man is privileged to marry more than one woman at the same time, all other men should be permitted the same privilege.

If ten men of every one hundred in the population marry each two wives and all of the hundred women marry, including the twenty who are mated with the ten, there are necessarily ten of that one hundred men who are wifeless, deprived of the liberty to marry by the ten who have more than their proportionate number. Each man who marries more than one woman commits a wrong, constructively, against some other man, one or more. To illustrate this: In a household of forty persons there is placed a basket containing a corresponding number of oranges, one for each member of the family; if each member is contented to take from the basket the one portion of fruit provided for him, all will share equally, as the giver designed; should any one usurp the privilege to take from the basket more than the one evidently his by design, he does so to the injury, direct or constructive, of some other equally entitled to receive as himself.

Some who defend plural marriage assert that there is a great excess of women folks in the world and that the principle providing for polygamy was intended to operate to the benefit of this excess—as for instance, say they, in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and others of the manufacturing States there are great numbers of women who, under the monogamic institutions of the State, are deprived of their God-given right of wifehood and motherhood, and that plural marriage is designed to remedy this grave wrong.

This statement and the argument, if it were not absurd, would be ridiculous for this reason: The excess of women is in States where the logic of Mormonism does not obtain. If disparity of numbers is good as an argument it should hold where plural marriage is claimed as a right. Using the census of 1880 as an illustration, the following is seen: Males, 25.518,820; females, 24.636 963; total, 50,155,783, with an excess of males of 881,857. How these are divided in the several States and Territories does not matter for the purpose of this article unless the census of Utah should reverse the figures, which is not the case.

There were in Utah in 1880, between the ages of 15 and 29 years: Males, 19,367; females, 18,315, showing a difference of 1,052 more men than women of these possible marriageable ages. The logic of these numbers is incontrovertible. If the excess of marriageable women in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island is an argument in favor of polygamy in those States, then the excess of marriageable men in Utah, Idaho and Montana is an equally strong argument in favor of polyandry; more wives than one for the man in those States, more husbands than one for the woman in the Territories named. Will polygamists accept this idea?

To avoid the inevitable conclusion which the consideration of the equal or nearly equal numbers of the sexes forces upon the enquirer, those who are the adaocates of plural marriage assume that it is a privilege—a sort of reward of merit which God grants to the most worthy.

"Only those considered worthy were permitted to engage in it." So states Apostle Franklin D. Richards. ("What the World Believes," p. 604).

The power to determine who was and

The power to determine who was and who was not worthy is vested in local authorities, endorsed by the general church authorities. Apostle Richards states: "'Celestial Marriage,' as the plural system is called, is only for persons of elevated character, recommended by the local and endorsed by the general church authorities."

This statement gives the inquirer to understand that the power to dictate who was worthy, possessed of that elevation of character to entitle him to marry more than his created half of mortality—to take more wives than one-was vested in Utah in President B. Young during his lifetime; after his death in President John Taylor, and now in President Wilford Woodruff. That these men were the ones who might reward worth, estimated by themselves, with wife or wives according to the merit of the receiver, and withhold from others a similar need of reward because of unworthiness. All that need be said of such a power is, that it could not fail to work perniciously, and the history of Utah will furnish ample proof of this. That worthy men, as worth went, may have accepted authoritative clemency and enjoyed the peculiar reward may be admitted; but who will care to assert that no unworthy men received those marks of favor?

One of the results which grew out of the equality of numbers between the sexes was an almost total disregard of the rules of the Mosaic law, which the teachers of plural marriage affirm made provision for polygamy. The teaching of the wise man was to get "wisdom." "With all thy getting get understanding" was his counsel to his son. This teaching was apparently travestied in Utah by quite a different formula. "Get wives, brethren. With all your getting get more wives."

In attempting to follow this counsel a species of panic to marry seized many, and mother and daughter or daughters, aunt and niece or nieces, and two or more sisters, were taken to the altar and borne away triumphantly as wives. Middleaged and aged men divided the claims of vounger men and arrogated to themselves the superior right to make wives of marriageable young women because of a higher priesthood, and even immature girlhood was immolated upon the altar of the desires of these hoary-headed men to "enlarge" their earthly and celestial kingdom. Nor were all of them over-careful in selecting wives, and women of impaired and weakened bodies and brain were added to the household number. To use the trite saying of a good sister, "the elders seemed to be more anxious for quantity than for quality."

Nor was this all. Women who had become wives and mothers in the days when no such dogma as plural marriage was known to them or taught in the church which they joined, and in whose ritual of things "lovely and of good report" virtue and marital fidelity in wedlock meant one husband and one wife only in the circle of love and home and heaven, were taught, and coaxed, and wheedled, and threatened, and tormented, and vexed, and finally coerced into sacrificing their sense of personal purity and possessory right unto consenting that husbands, to whom they had been married in love and to whom they had vielded life-long devotion and wifely duty; husbands who had sworn before God and in the presence of earthly witnesses to cleave unto them and to them alone, should take to their bosoms other women to serve them as wives. And if any wife unable to so make sacrifice of herself refused consent, her husband, her lord, her "savior," whose celestial exaltation depended upon his marrying other than herself, set her consent aside, crucified her and put her to an open shame by marrying one or more, as his desire demanded and opportunity offered; while she was neglected and ignored, her successor and rival was favored, petted and caressed, to be in turn set aside if caprice and opportunity served. There are too many wives now living in Utah and elsewhere whose names are known, and whose testimonies may be had, whose lives have been blighted in the way named above for it to be successfully denied or its influence to be ignored in the settlement of this vexing question. In addition to this the wife, though fulsomely styled "a queen," was by legislative enactment deprived of her right of dower, and the property, in the accumulation of which she had borne her share of toil and care, was left to the disposal of the husband, subject to the same influence that had already deprived the wife of her sole right to husband and

Such a moral condition of things could not fail to produce heart burnings, bitterness of feeling and unhappiness. wail of it was heard years ago, when a leading elder stated publicly that "the first wives would break the chain cable of the church if they could." It was the revolt of womanly conviction against the prevailing treachery toward them, that caused these wives to so speak and so act that the then presiding officer stated that he would given them "two weeks in which to make up their minds to round up their shoulders" to accept polygamic praccices, "first wives and all." There are now in Utah wives-not a few-who by dint of persistent rebellion against the dogma under which women have been enslaved have been able to keep their husbands out of the meshes of plural marriage, but it has been at the expense of entreaty, tears, anguish of mind and pain of heart, and in instances of fierce and indignant remonstrance; indeed, there are some wives who, after all had failed to save themselves and children from the dreaded degradation, have yielded in despair and never smiled more. Here and there one has refused either to yield or be crushed, and such have gone out from, to them, dishonored homes unregarded and uncared for, preferring to bear the burden of life alone than to share the common blessings of air, shelter and food with those who had robbed her of life's better things - love and peace. Children of first and legal wives are found in whom respect for their fathers is dead. Sharing with the mother in her misery, these children have grown up feeling the isolation imposed upon them. The result in numerous instances has been such that, not only is the mother lost to the church, but the children are turned away from the religion of their fathers-not merely from the dogma and practice which caused the desolation of their home, but from all of it, arguing that if it were false and bad in one feature it must be in its entirety.

Another result not much less to be deplored and which is productive of wrong and evil, and which is easily traced to its source in the doctrine and teaching under which plural marriage is practiced, is the ease with which existing marital relations are broken and new ones contracted. "Utah divorces" have passed into the realm of proverbs. An elder of standing in Utah assured the writer that in no State in the United States, if indeed anywhere, were the women so free to change irksome relations as in Utah.

This is not left to conjecture; the history of Utah furnishes plenty of proof of it; the Historian Franklin D. Richards states: "As there is no rule or obligation that compels a plural wife to remain in relations which she desires to sever, fairness and a proper deportment are rendered necessary on the part of the husband in order to retain her allegiance and her affections."—"What the World Believes."—p. 609.

Of the ceremony of celestial marriage the same man states that "the ceremony of sealing in each case, whether of a first wife or a plural wife, being exactly the same, and solemnized in the name of Deity for time and all eterity, thus laying hold upon the world to come, it came to be viewed as a mark of distinction and a sacred privilege to be practically connected with what was called the "Eternal Order of Patriarchal Marriage," in which were the "blessings of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob."

Putting this and that together, it is readily seen why changes in martial relations are easy to make. The obligation which binds a plural wife to her so-called husband is as frail as her caprice. If she "desires to sever" the relations assumed before the altar and "in the name of Deity," there is no rule restraining her. The fair dealing and deportment towards herself by which her husband retains her wifely affections and duty, are determined by her. It is no wonder then, that first and lawful wives are neglected, while the plural wife receives lavish attention and deference.

But, what shall be said of the bond which holds the allegiance of the first wife? If Mr. Richards states the truth then the ceremony, and as a consequence the obligation, are the same in the case of the first wife as in the case of the plural wife. If there is no rule or obligation by which the latter is compelled to remain in relations which she desires to sever, there is none binding upon the wife. If there is no bond binding upon the wife, can there be any upon the husband by reason of the same ceremony? The only answer possible is, No. If there is in any of the states of the United States a marriage law with rules and provisions looser and more destructive to the happiness and permanency of the family and home establishment, the writer has never read such law.

consideration of the foregoing Tn wrongs, real and constructive, resulting to men defrauded of their equal right to one wife each, made possible and lawful by the act of Creation; the wrongs perpetrated against first, and consequently lawful wives, both in feeling, sentiment, person and property; the wrongs resulting to children in faith; respect to parents and family prestige; the wrongs done to society and the general opinion of the American people, with what propriety and regard to truth can any man say that the practice of plural marriage, celestial marriage in its plural aspect, or polygamy, is not such an infringement of the rights and privileges of others, in fact and constructively, as to take such practice out of the limit and protection of that clause in the Constitution providing for the exercise of the right of conscience?

It has been heretofore shown that there was no warrant for the practice of polygmy in Scriptural teaching or sanction, it is now shown in the light of numbers and facts that it is not only wrong in itself, but that in its practice it is productive of injury and wrong to others; and for these reasons it should receive the condemnation of good men and the decided opposition of those who believe that right should prevail.

THE RESURRECTION.-No. 6.

MEN feel their mental incapability—they thirst for new acquisitions of knowledge and wisdom. They desire to know all of the past, the present, and the future, that relates to the wonderful works of God; and they desire suitable wisdom in order to use that knowledge aright. There are many, no doubt, who, like Newton, have devoted a lifetime in investigating natural philosophy, and who have felt as that great man did when he said, that with all his research he was like the man who walked upon the shore of a boundless sea, picking up a pebble here and there. Man searches and learns, from his cradle to his grave; and when he has done this, and looks out upon the immensity of God's works-the vast, unexplored ocean of intelligence before him, which the mind of man has never comprehended nor conceived of-he feels that he is but a child. His soul is not satisfied. He desires an amount and kind of knowledge that he has capacity now to neither receive nor use. Shall it always be so? Shall man, when redeemed and bearing "the image of the heavenly," still go with these desires unsatisfied? or shall the capacities and powers of his soul be so enlarged, purified, and exalted, that he can read and comprehend all the works of his Maker—their history and their purpose? David evidently saw the time, through the Holy Spirit, when all the longings of a righteous soul would be fully gratified, for he says:

"As for me, I will behold thy face in right-eousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake in thy likeness."—Ps. 17:15.

And so, doubtless, it will be with all who attain unto the resurrection of the just—they will "be satisfied" fully, when they "awake" in the "likeness" of their Lord and Savior.

THE GLORY.

The glory of the resurrected Saints will be the glory of Christ—and his glory is that of his Father. When we now speak of the glory of the Saints, we refer to the heavenly intelligence, grace, power, knowledge, splendor, beauty, and grandeur, that will distinguish their being and personal presence. Ezekiel describes the glory of God as follows:

"From the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of God."—Ezek. I: 27, 28.

John the Revelator says he saw the throne in heaven, and him that sat on it, and gives the following description of his personal glory:

"And he that sat there was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine-stone; and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald."—Rev. 4:3.

When Christ was transfigured upon the mount, and clothed with the glory which shall attend him at his second appearing, "His face did shine as the sun, and his rament was white as the light." (Matt. 17:1). And when he appeared to Paul on the plains of Damascus, there was manifested "a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun." (Acts 26: 13), And when He appeared unto John upon the Isle of Patmos. He was "clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; . . and his countenance as the sun shining in his strength."-Rev. 1: 13-16.

Joseph the martyr has given us his testimony as to the appearance of the Lord, when he, by vision, saw him in at least a measure of his glory. He says when in his fifteenth year his mind became greatly exercised upon religion, and he read the teaching of James, which says that, if any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not and it shall be given him, that he felt encouraged to pray, and accordingly retired to ask the Lord for grace and guidance. He wrestled in prayer before the Lord until, he says:

"I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. . . . When the light rested upon me I saw two personages, whose brightness and glory dety all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, pointing to the other, This is my beloved Son, hear him." — Mill. Star, 14: 2.

He also says that, in the month of January, 1836, he, in a vision, saw the Father and the Son, and the glory of the celestial kingdom:

"The heavens were opened unto us, and I beheld the celestial kingdom of God, and the glory thereof, whether in the body or out of the body I can not tell. I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son. I saw the beautiful streets of that kingdom, which had the appearance of being paved with gold."—Mill Star, 15: 620.

In April following, both Joseph and Oliver had a vision of our Savior in the Temple, in which is vividly portrayed his glorious personal appearance. Of this he

"In the afternoon I assisted the other presidents in distributing the elements of the Lord's supper to the church, receiving them from the Twelve, whose privilege it was to officiate in the sacred desk this day.

"After having performed this service to my brethren, I retired to the pulpit, the vails being dropped, and bowed myself with Oliver Cowdery, in solemn and silent prayer. After rising from prayer, the following vision was opened to both of us: The vail was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding opened. We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit, before us, and under his feet was a paved work of pure gold, in color like amber. His eyes were as a flame of fire, the hair of his head was white like the pure snow, his countenance shone above the brightness of the sun, and his voice was as the sound of the rushing of great waters."—Ibid, p. 729.

In all the foregoing passages the wonderful glory of God and of Christ is presented to us in a striking manner.

The angels appeared at times, clothed with the glory of God. John the Revelator says:

"And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud, [probably of light], and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire."—Rev. 10:1.

"And behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white a. snow."—Matt. 27: 2, 3.

The language of mortals is inadequate to describe their dignity, beauty and splendor. Jesus has said:

"They who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, [the resurrection world] through the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20:35, 36.

Joseph the Martyr says:

"And thus we saw the glory of the celestial, which excels in all things; where God, even the Father, reigns upon his throne, forever, and ever, before whose throne all things bow in humble reverence and give him glory forever and ever. They who dwell in his presence are the church of the first-born; and they see as they are seen, and know as they are known, having received of his fulness and of his grace; and he makes them equal in power, and in might, and in dominion."

—D. C. 76:7.

"And then [after Christ comes] shall the angels be crowned with the glory of his might, and the saints shall be filled with his glory, and receive their inheritance and be made equal with him."—D. C. 85: 33.

Dear reader, have you a well founded hope of attaining unto this, the glory of angels, of Christ, and of the Father!

If you have been "baptized into Christ," and are living in the Spirit and walking in the Spirit, then you may have that hope, and also the "earnest" of that blessed inheritance.

THE HAPPINESS OF THE SAINTS IN THE RESURRECTION.

We may readily conclude that the joys of the resurrected saints would be quite indescribable, for "eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love him." When we consider the dominion, the power, the enlarged capacity of mind, and the wondrous glory the saints are to possess, we must think that their joys will be ineffable,—their happiness above measure. Their position will demand that all their mental faculties, including their senses, be infinitely enlarged, intensified, refined, and exalted.

Some seem to think the saved will not need to use the senses in their future state. They hold that such an idea lessens and degrades the excellency of heavenly joys; and yet they fail to bring one good argument to sustain their objection. Their objection is neither sensible nor scriptural. What can men or angels know, or how can they enjoy, except through the exercise of the senses in connection with the mind?

The senses are the avenues, the means through which joy or sorrow, pain or pleasure, grief or gladness, is received by the person. The Scriptures give account of no other means, -our minds can conceive of no other,—hence we are not justified in looking for any other, either here or in the world to come. The Holy Spirit, "which is the power of the world to come," the first fruits of which,—a mere foretaste of which we obtain in this life,strengthens, purifies, and capacitates the senses, but it does not supersede nor set them aside. It enlarges, exalts, guides, instructs, and qualifies the mind, but does not suspend its office or prevent its action. "They who shall be accounted worthy to attain to that world, through resurrection from the dead, . . . are equal unto the angels." Angels eat, and angels drink. Abraham entertained them at one time on "butter and milk, and the calf which he had dressed," as also with the "cakes upon the hearth," which Sarah did bake. (Gen. 18:1-7.) "Man did eat angels' food."—Ps. 78:25.

"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for some have thereby entertained angels unawares."—Heb. 13:12.

To entertain strangers in the sense alluded to here, one would have, no doubt, to give them both food and drink.

After Jesus was raised from the dead, He both ate and drank. Peter says:

"Us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead."—Acts 10:41.

Immediately after his resurrection He appeared to his disciples, and

"He showed them his hands and his feet. And while they yet wondered and believed not for joy, he said unto them, have ye here any meat? And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and a honey comb. And he took it and did eat before them."—Luke 24: 39-42.

If Jesus after his resurrection did eat, and angels did eat, and drink, and the saints become "like them," then they will eat and drink also. This view of the matter is both reasonable and Scriptural, and must be the hope of every enlightened child of God.

We read that angels and the sanctified in heaven sing:

"And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."—Rev. 5: 9.

"And I looked, and lo! a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps: and they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth."—Ibid, 14:1-3.

"And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest."—Ibid, 15: 2-4.

If the sense of taste is to be gratified with food and drink, and the sense of hearing gratified and delighted with electrifying strains of heavenly music,—transporting, rapturous music, such as mortals never hear,—may we not, nay, must we not conclude, that all the senses,—tasting, smelling, hearing, seeing and feeling,—will, in their purified, and exalted state, be exercised with substantial, holy, heavenly pleasures? It is inevitable; common sense, the common experiences of life, as well as the scriptures, go to show that it must be so. God has created man to be ultimately and entirely happy; and it must be obtained in that way which is ordained of God; and man will fail of this happiness only by his own neglect and disobedience.

THE HOPE OF THE RESURRECTION.

The hope of the resurrection has always been the chief hope of God's people, except when they have transgressed and wandered away into great spiritual darkness. All to whom the principles of life and salvation were taught understood concerning the Messiah, -the Redeemer, -His life, sufferings, crucifixion, resurrection and ascension to glory. Christ, in bis life, death, and final triumph, is the "chief corner stone," "the foundation," and the only foundation upon which any, anciently or modernly, could build and have eternal life. The gospel of Christ, and that only, brings "life and immortality to light;" and that gospel always has, and always must, embrace the literal resurrection of the dead. Paul, that wonderful man of God, teaches that the resurrection is a vital, all-essential part of the gospel; and that without the resurrection the hope of all is vain. He says:

"Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures." "And, the eye can not say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you."

He further says:

"I protest [declare] unto you the resurrection of the dead; and this is my rejoicing which I have in Christ Jesus my Lord daily, though I die. If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die."—I Cor. 15: 31, 32.

By this we learn that the resurrection was his chief hope,—his daily joy,—and the ground, the all-important ground, upon which he based his hope for future rewards and glory. He knew that "to depart and be with Christ" was "far better" for him than to remain in this life, yet he knew that the glory, the power, the dominion, and the eternal rewards could be received only after the resurrection, and after the coming of the Lord Jesus in glory, and after the great last change shall come after the thousand years' reign. Hence he says:

"But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord; for whom

I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith: that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the just."—Phil. 3: 7-II.

His hope was fully and entirely in the resurrection. If that failed, the scheme of redemption failed. If that failed, his faith was vain,—he was yet in his sins,—and all that had fallen asleep in Christmust perish. But Paul knew that his faith was not in vain; he knew the wondrous doctrine of the resurrection was true; and that it was the means appointed of God, and the absolutely indispensible means, by which mortals could attain salvation and glory; knowing this he reasons as we have seen, and then gives the following words of instruction and comfort:

"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."-1 Thess. 4: 13-18.

The resurrection was the hope of Enoch, Genesis 7: 6; of Abraham, Genesis 7: 9-12; of Moses, Luke 20: 37, 38; of Job, 19: 23-27; of David, Psalms 16: 9, 10; 17: 15; of Isaiah, 25: 19; of Hosea, 13: 14; of Ezekiel, 37: 1-44; of Daniel, 12: 2; of Martha, John 11: 34; of Israel, Acts 24: 15; 23: 6; 26: 6; 28: 20, and by the Saints, Colossians 1: 23; Titus 2: 13; 1 Peter 1: 3. And the hope of the Saints in the resurrection, as in all things that pertain to salvation, is "one hope" (Eph. 4: 4), and not a variety or diversity of hopes. If men's hopes are founded on the promises and appointments of God they are safe; but if they are founded on the theories and doctrines of men or devils, they will fail; and they will suffer disappointment and loss.

Dear reader; are you hungering and thirsting for the joys of God's salvation? Are you preparing to live and reign with Christ at his coming and in his kingdom? Do you desire to possess dominion and glory in the new heavens and new earth? and have a body that is "incorruptible," "raised in power," "raised in glory," "like unto his [Christ's] glorious body?" Do you desire to meet and dwell with Jesus and and all they who are saved in Christ?—to be clothed with the same glory, and to receive the same rewards?—to have all your powers and faculties purified, enlarged, and exalted, so as to receive a fulness with the Father, and the Son? If you do, then humbly follow Christ; He is "the resurrection and the life."

HOME AGAIN.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH arrived home on Thursday the 19th inst., looking well, and in the enjoyment of good health and spirits. He left Lamoni over a year ago (December 6th, 1888) for San Bernardino, California, and remained for some months laboring in southern California. Thence he went to northern California where he also labored, but was considerably hindered in both those localities by unusually stormy, forbidding weather. From there he proceeded to Utah where he was assisted by Bro. R. J. Anthony and others in his labors in that territory, also in Idaho.

In Utah, as elsewhere, generally, he was treated courteously and was given a fair hearing. Some additions were made to the church, and many there are investigating. What the final result of his efforts will be remains to be seen, but there is no question but what they will be for great good.

"Rich gift of God! A year of time! What pomp of rise and shut of day, What hues wherewith our Northern clime Makes Autumn's dropping woodlands gay, What songs of brooks and birds, what fruits and flowers, Green woods and moonlit snows, have in its round been ours."

THE NEW YEAR.

ONCE more the dial on the worn and rudely battered face of old Time, points to the meeting of the old and the new year. The new to abide, the old to depart forever. Forever! what a solemn feeling of reverence and awe comes over us as we look upon his worn face feeling that we shall see it nevermore—nevermore! Is not the thought a mistaken one? Shall we never meet these faded, vanished years again? Surely we shall meet them in the great eternity of God, and before the throne of his power stand face to face with the record we have made.

"Rich gift of God! A year of time!

Has it indeed been rich in its garnered treasures of faith, hope, love, joy and peace; rich in its triumphs over self, in its strife for the mastery and its victory too, even though nothing remains to chronicle that victory but apparent loss and defeat? Do we stand at its close amid the wreck and ruin of all the cherished plans and dreams which filled our hearts when it opened its first leaves to our gaze? Is the love of God in our hearts strong enough to enable us to say, as we contemplate these, Thy will be done? Do we look in vain for the triumph of right, as we had surely expected to see it; and have we faith sufficiently unshaken to say, "His ways are not as our ways?" In the midst of trials and loss, persecution and temptation, can we say as exhorted by one of old, we "count it all joy"? Are we richer, are we better, are we really nearer the attainment of that which we seek than we were when the hand of time lifted the curtain and the year which is now old and departing, came in its young strength and unsullied beauty to greet us?

As we say farewell to the old year and turn to welcome the new, what is it that moves us to sadness or joy in the past, or expectation in the future? Both are powers of the mind, but to us the power of one seems infinitely greater than the power of the other. The one is hope, the other memory.

There is always hope in the future, and inspired by hope we labor for the attainment of that which we most earnestly desire. If that labor has been for a righteous cause, if we have "followed right because it was right, in scorn of consequence," then can we calmly, gladly bid the departing year farewell, even though he has brought only apparent defeat and we live on "hope deferred;" for we have made of Memory a joy forever. Let the years hasten on with their record, while clouds obscure our horizon and the waves roll mountain high. Let the bitter blasts howl and darkness enshroud us as with a pall; let every ray of sun-light be obscured and from our hearts well up the bitter cry, "Why hast thou forsaken us?" there dwells within the soul a light no night of darkness can dim; a joy no rolling wave can quench, and an abiding faith unshaken by the war and crash,—the seeming wreck and ruin scattered far and near upon the shore of time! Not I, not you, my fellow toiler upon life's rugged way, shall be held responsible for the result, but "He who spake and there was light"

"The man who knows his cause is just Is armed with forces strong as steel. No fear disturbs his perfect trust Or cools the ardor of his zeal.

'His faith is fixed in living laws, That move the centuries along, And plant the triumph of a cause Upon the right and not the strong.

"He may be jeered and mocked of men, And all his words may seem to wait; The Truth be crucified again. Between the forms of lust and hate.

But in his eye no tear appears; He leans on One to whom alway A day is as a thousand years, A thousand years are as a day."

Before us is opening a new page of the great volume of time. Shall we make of memory a friend-a joy for the years to come? Let us write upon her imperishable tablets only true and worthy acts, acts which are the outgrowth of pure and worthy motives, and when we have done this let us like the captive Hebrews say, "We are not careful to answer this in the matter, for the God whom we serve is able to deliver us but if not-" ah, the grandeur of this God-like trust, this sublime indifference to the result of doing right-"but if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods!" Better thy fiery furnace seven times heated, than this ignoble betrayal of the trust our God has reposed in us.

Saints of God, is this the goal of our ambition. this the plane we are striving to reach? Do we know that before the brightness of his truth all error must fall, all dross be consumed and love of self disappear as dew before the morning sun? Why then should we love, hold to or cherish any of these, though they flourish like a green bay tree and men bow down to them as they pass? Why should we?

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Sr. Rachel Evans, of Sullivan, Missouri, asks your faith and prayers, that if it be God's will he will restore her sister to her reason. She is now in the asylum at Fulton.

Sr. L. E. Fuller, Escanaba, Michigan, requests your prayers for Sr. Swinson, that if it is God's will she may be healed. She is not in the church, but is a suffering child of the Father and has faith enough to ask you to pray for her. May God inspire your souls with his own pitying love for all his suffering children.

Bro. Stephen Huntley, of Newark, Dakota, asks your prayers that God may be pleased to restore him to health.

Sr. Kate McGee, of Potter Valley, California, requests the faith and prayers of the Union that if it be God's will she may be restored to health.

"I wish the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of Bro. W. N. Joiner, of Bandera, Texas. He is afflicted with a cancer on the face. That he may be healed or find grace to bear the affliction, and also for his companion, that she may have courage to obey the gospel, she being already convinced. Your brother in Christ,

"O. D. Johnson."

Dear Sisters in Christ:-Feeling the calm, sweet influence of the Spirit of the Master, and having been asken by quite a number of Saints lately why I do not write to the Herald any more, I feel like telling a part of the old old story of Jesus and his love. I have great cause to rejoice in this latter day work, for truly the Lord does bless me. I can testify to the part given by the Spirit in last week's Herald where it said: "I will bless you with wisdom and strengthen you and give you evidences of my truth." Oh, yes; I have had many evidences of the truth of this work! And again where it says that the prayer of faith of the humble, contrite heart shall be heard and answered. Yes; praise God; when I have been standing alone feeling I had not an earthly friend to give me one pitying look or one kind word the Lord has heard the prayer of his unworthy child and delivered me.

Dear Saints, you who are wounded by the sting of the retailer of scandal and are tried almost beyond endurance, never forget or lose signt of that best of friends, Jesus, for as the Lord liveth and if you put your trust in him he will never leave you nor forsake you, and remember it is those who have gone through great tribulation who will be in the temple of God.

Bro. Scott said in last Herald: "Let us be careful that the arrow of scandal, or what other arrow it may be, has not the barb of truth, then be assured it will rebound into the accuser's face and all will come right in God's own time." Let us hold to our faith in meckness, gentleness and longsuffering. While I am writing the still small voice of the Spirit is saying, "Ye saints of God rejoice and be exceeding glad for great is your reward."

Then, brothers and sisters, let us buckle on the whole armor of righteousness and fight the battle of salvation right through to the end. Then shall we hear the plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and be rewarded according to our works. Let us all remember each other in our prayers, that God may help us to live lives worthy of the name we have taken upon us, and that we may be worthy to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb, is the desire of your sister in bonds,

M. M. Brooks.

P. S.—We had Bro. Leverton with us the last week preaching, and we had the pleasure of having five baptized in our branch. Bro. Leverton endeared himself to us so much that we hated to part with him. He is one of the few who try to do as he would be done by.

WARREN, Ohio, Nov. 17th.

Dear Herald:-I feel prompted to night (as I have been a number of times before) to write a few lines to the Home Column. As I have been so many times encouraged and cheered by the letters, I shall feel doubly paid if my weak effort shall help some of the weak ones if ever so little. I can truly say that I rejoice in the latter day work and I feel to thank God daily that he has brought me to see this "marvelous work and a wonder" and am prepared for one to say that I know this work is of God. I have been healed by His power in answer to prayer and the administration. Will try and give you a statement of the facts. The latter part of last March I was taken with a very serious trouble in my right knee. It came on very suddenly with the most excruciating pain. It seemed I could not endure it. The doctor was then coming to our house to see a sick friend and we consulted him about it. He said it was not rheumatism but a disease called cinavitis. He said I had better go to bed and keep it perfectly quiet for a week or two, which I did, and at the end of two weeks it was no better and two weeks more went by still no better. Then the doctor came and attached a seven pound weight to my foot and told me I must stay there until the swelling had gone and the pain ceased. There I lay for nine long weeks, and at the end of the ninth week it was no better than at first. I felt impressed that if I was administered to that it would get better. Bro. Garrett came and held preaching services at our house. He administered and I was relieved, but (doubting Thomas like) I did not get up, wondering if it would last. This was on Sunday, and I had no pain until Monday, when the weight had to be put on again. The next time Brn. Garrett, Griffiths and Strachan were here, and after the administration I experienced the same relief, then got up and walked from my room into the next without any bad feeling in either limb, and thank God that is the last day I have had to stay in bed since. I have continued to gain ever since and have been doing all my own work for about two months and enjoying better health now than I have for years. Bro. L. W. Powell was with us about two weeks and we enjoyed some gospel feasts. He is highly esteemed here and made many friends. He inducted one more soul into the kingdom, which makes us ten in number here. There are others waiting for the return of Bro. Lennard Scott, whose return we are expecting every day. How Satan, the old arch-enemy of truth, does rage, and all the more when he sees there is good to be done. It is wonderful what he will put in the minds of those who will lend themselves to his use. But with all his cunning we find he overreaches himself. There are more enquiring about the preaching now than ever and saying they want to come. I hope and pray that the little band here may all live worthy of the name Saint, and my daily prayer is that I may have of His Spirit to guide me into all truth, that I may be deemed worthy to live and reign with Christ a thousand years.

Your sister in Christ, CARRIE M. SHAFER.

QUEENSFERRY, Victoria, Aus., October 28th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—Another year is near its close, and we begin to think of the relatives and friends in foreign lands, that the kindly word and wish may reach them by the Christmas tide.

Tho' hitherto, at this season of the year our minds have turned to distant England only, as the home of those dear to us, we now wish to waft a greeting to the land with which is associated the happiest experiences of our life, which have come to us through obedience to the gospel as restored in its purity and fulness upon that land.

As each mail arrives and we receive so much that is comforting, instructive and helpful from the sisters of the "Column," our heart fills with love and gratitude for the encouragement and press on towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God. It is with a thankful heart that we offer all of the Column our warmest, sincerest wishes for a joyful happy Christmas and a glad New Year.

While thinking of Christmas and its rejoicings the thought comes that of all people the Latter Day Saints should look most gladly forward to that time, it being their blessed privilege to be in the enjoyment of the restoration of the gospel, heralded by the angelic messengers on the occasion which we celebrate with the proclamation of "Peace on earth—good will to men." And while this high privilege is ours, ought we not to be very careful of the manner in which we commemorate the birth of our dear Savior, that our pleasures may be pure and in keeping with the event we desire to keep in memory.

It is with heartfelt pleasure that we read in the Column and Herald of the testimonies of the Spirit's power that daily is increasing among us.

We are encouraged thereby to trust God for the fulfillment of His word and promises, to take up our trials with more patience and in fuller faith abide his time and will. Oh, that we might be more faithful! that our Heavenly Father may not stay his hand but send down the blessings he has for us, but can not give till we fit ourselves to receive them.

The writer is but one of the younger ones and is more desirous of receiving instruction than essaying to impart it, yet she feels to have been much blessed in the latter day work and is in sympathy with all who labor for its advancement. That we have received of the power of the same Holy Spirit that has ever been among God's people, when he has had a pure gospel upon the earth assures our hearts and faith and makes us ever prayerful, that we may be faithful and receive of it in fuller measure, that we may grow in grace and knowledge continually until we attain unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. May the Spirit of God ever be with us to lead, comfort and sustain, enabling us to overcome all unrighteousness and to live unto his name's honor and glory is my prayer.

SISTER LILLIE.

LORIMER, Iowa, Nov. 17th.

Dear Sister Frances:-Some time ago I sent a request that the Prayer Union would pray for our little girl, and thinking perhaps that those of the Union would like to hear from those who request their prayers I write this. When I sent in my request she was very low, and feeling that no earthly aid was near I sent in the request. Patiently I waited for the day when those of the Union would send up their petition to Him above in her behalf. Thanks be to Him, for I can truly testify that from that time she has been improving daily, and to-day I feel to thank Him that He has heard and answered the prayers of the Union and I feel to bear testimony to the work, for I can truly say that I know the work we are engaged in is the work of God and that His Spirit is in connection with it, and my desires are to so live that I may be worthy of the promises He has given.

Correspondence.

COLEMAN, Mich., Dec. 1st.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—In many places where we might have Sunday-schools we are idle. Christ said, "Feed my Lambs." What are we doing? Are we not letting pass great opportunities for doing good for the cause by not educating the young?

Many parents are allowing their children to be taught in ways that are abominable in the sight of the Lord, and why? I answer, because we have not enough schools of our own, and they say they must have some way of spending their Sundays. Then why not teach them the revealed will of God and not the doctrines of men? What shall we say when our Master comes to take account of our stewardship? Shall we say we had nothing to do? God forbid! There is plenty of work for each to do, or why did our Savior say the harvest is great and the laborers are few? True, we are not all called to the ministry, but must the ministry do it all, while we sit with folded hands? Nay, brethren and sisters, let us be up and doing, for the night cometh when no man can work. Let us arouse to a sense of our duty and be active in the Sundayschool work, that the lambs of the fold may not starve; then when Jesus comes our lamps will be bright and burning and our Master's voice will be heard saying, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of the Lord."

Fearing that I may take up too much of your valuable time I will close, hoping that a greater interest in Sunday-school work may manifest itself.

In gospel bonds,

SISTER BERTHA.

Spital Hill, SHEFFIELD, England, Nov. 29th.

Dear Herald:—I am pleased to hear of the success of the work of God in every land, and pray that it may continue to the end of time.

It is only a short time since I united with the church and during that time I have received many evidences of the truth of the latter day work, and feel to praise our Heavenly Father for the same.

I know that God blesses his children when they approach him in humility; and it is this state I want to attain to. I love to read the testimonies of my brethren and sisters which are edifying and instructive to me; and I can say of a truth that they are the children of God, because they are led by the Spirit of God.

The work in England is progressing steadily, the Lord confirming his word by signs following; giving peace to many who are low in this world's estimation. I desire to continue in the work to the end, that I may be worthy to enter the kingdom of God with the redeemed to sing the praise of God forever more.

Joseph Arber.

MAKLEEVILLE, Cal., Dec. 12th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I arrived at Dayton, Nevada, September 24th, and was kindly received by Bro. T. R. Hawkins and daughters, Sisters Hart and Walmsley. I found them alive in the work, and by their daily walk and conversation they bear a name worthy to be called Saints. Bro. Hawkins being Justice of Peace for twelve years and under the tongue of good report, he had but little difficulty in procuring the court-house for five nights, which only provided for two nights for any one denomination at any one time.

Mr A. Walmsley then hired the Odd Fellows Hall for seven nights more. I had good congregations, and left some very near the kingdom. Some said they wanted to be baptized, but the water was too cold. I concluded they did not want to very bad.

I went to Mottsville, spoke several nights, thence to Fairview and spoke ten times. Had good congregations. I then went to Diamond Valley where all the Saints were anxiously waiting to receive me. I divided up the time among them so that none would feel slighted. I spoke seven times there and baptized five, three men and two women. I feel that more will obey soon; I had large turnouts almost every night. The district attorney was present one evening and was well pleased.

I had an invitation from Markleeville, the county seat of Alpine county, California, by the county Judge, district aftorney, and county clerk to come and preach for them, and that I should not want for anything. Bro. R. Trimmer carried me here with his team and wagon through the snow sometimes up to the hub of the wagon. He had to get out and get a stake and clear the wheel that was blocked. We arrived about noon. The Judge informed us that arrangements had been made for me at the hotel, where I am quite comfortable.

I have spoken two nights in the court house, and although the weather was stormy the house was filled. I never had better liberty, and I feel that God has a people here. This is a new opening, as no one of our faith has ever preached here.

Surely God is opening up the way before me. I have found the Saints in general strong in the faith, and having a desire to do their duty. Bro, D. R. Jones has truly done well and performed his duty to the best of his ability; also Bro. D. I. Jones. My field-Oregon, Nevada and Northern California-is large. Bro Haws (now in Oregon) and myself are the only ones actively engaged in this field. I have many calls, but can not answer but few, for I want to work the ground well as I go. There is no use traveling over the country preaching once or twice in a place. I believe when I get the people interested I should speak eight or ten nights, and then we are able to determine whether God has any people there or not.

I pray that God will bless the labors of his servants. Yours in bonds,

THOMAS DALEY.

TABORVILLE, Mo., Nov. 26th.

Dear Herald:—I rejoice in this latter day work. I had been a member of the Christian Church for a good many years and was honestly trying to serve God, but at times a vague unrest would take possession of me, and it seemed that God was so far away that he surely could not hear my prayers; but two years ago this summer he directed the footsteps of his servant, Bro. I. N. White, to this place, and I soon saw I was not serving him according to his will. I was baptized by Bro. White and confirmed by Brn. White and Swenson, and I can truly say that the time since has been the happiest part of my life, and if I could see my dear husband come into the fold my happines would be full.

The Lord has blessed me in restoring me to health for I had been in poor health for years, but now am strong and well.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may live faithfully and also see my husband and children in the fold. Your sister,

FLORENCE MASTERSON.

Dow CITY, Iowa, Dec. 14th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I have been reading the article, "Utah Mormon Mormonism come to judgment." I thought twenty-five years ago that it would have come to judgment more speedily than it has, and in a more pronounced manner. But it now plainly manifests the wisdom and mercy and longsuffering of the good Father in giving them space to repent; and also the wisdom of the church in the strenuous efforts put forth against their blind and obstinate opposition to those calling themselves back to the "old paths." I used to think such efforts were throwing away "good ammunition," that they were "joined to their idols." But in a day to come the church can say, in that case at least, we are "clean from the blood of all men." The dark cloud that hangs over the people in the vallies of the mountains no doubt has a silver lining, and we hope and pray that out of the evil much good may come.

Everything seems to be moving along with us smoothly, so far as church matters are concerned; we are having good meetings and a peaceful, quiet feeling seems to prevail everywhere as far as I know. Yours in goshel bonds,

JOHN PETT.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Dec. 9th.

Dear Herald:—After the district conference and reunion held from the 28th of September to October 6th which I was favored to attend (in part). I returned home with my wife for a short time, finding plenty to do in making arrangements for coming into the Pittsburg and Kirtland district at the request of the missionary in charge, Bro. G. T. Griffiths.

I bade adieu to loved ones on the 24th of October and arrived in Wheeling on the 26th. On Sunday met with the Saints in their Sabbath School and social service and at night made an effort to speak to a very pleasant assembly; remained about two weeks holding nine preaching services and visiting among the Saints, not alone to share their hospitality so kindly offered, but to encourage them to attend the regular services and thereby let their light shine. I had anticipated opening up a number of places in that section, or rather urging the brethren to do so, but a card from Bro. Griffths requested me to be in Pittsburg November 10th for forenoon services. In order to "be subject to the powers that be" I boarded a train at 5:40 Sunday morning, the 10th of November and arrived in time to take rest before taking the stand, and was met at the depot by our worthy Bro., Ralph G. Smith. It has been a number of years since I visited this branch. A number of those then present have passed over to the beyond and there were but few whose faces were familiar at this meeting. I have held services, aided by the branch officers, Brn. G. H. Hulmes and E. Thomas, twice each Sabbath since my arrival, at 10:30 and 7:30. The branch has not control of the hall during the week. I have tried to aid the work in this place in every way I could. The branch seems to be in a very good condition spiritually. I have a very high opinion of the ability of its officers; they are men of God, careful in their counsel, wise buildersand the results of their work is manifest. I would we had thousands of such men in the active ministry.

There are qute a number of young men and young women belonging to this branch who have been holding what they call a "young folks' prayer meeting." I have had the pleasure of attending all their meetings held since I came among them. I have not words to express the pleasure it gave me to see the love they have toward each other and the zeal they exhibit in their meetings. Why, it would even do the apostles good to hear the prayers and testimonies, by the Spirit, of these young Saints. One feature of their work is to spend fifteen minutes before the close in reading original essays, those reading having been previously appointed to write. They write upon such subjects as Unity, Love of God, Self-Culture and various other topics which are necessary virtues of the people of God. I will predict that, if they but continue as they have begun, they will render material aid to Sr. Frances in the line of contributions for Autumn Leaves. May the young Saints of many other branches follow and emulate the example of this organization. We have been enabled to reach the ears of some who heretofore have had but little knowledge of our claims, who have expressed themselves pleased with our views. We trust our efforts will not be fruitless.

It was with much reluctance that I came to this place, for I have not been ignorant of the fact that many of our able men have been here, and some of them recently. What can I do there? I am requested to go. I realize my weakness; thought of the ability of my brethren which was far above mine. But I came and have not regretted it.

One in charge of the mission wrote me, "The Lord will bless you." This has been realized already. Am willing to learn and do what I can by the help of Our Father.

During the present conference year have baptized but few; am not so anxious to baptize as I used to be, but ready when candidates "believe with all their hearts" and are drawn to obey. I will close by wishing all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Yours in hope,

L. R. DEVORE.

WESTON, Iowa, Dec. 10th.

Editors Herald:—In 1877 I was obedient to the law of liberty, because the God of heaven had sent a true servant to proclaim His word, and I never regretted that step. I feel to say to the editors of the Saints' Herald. Zion's Hope and Autumn Leaves that I hope to continue in the same faith and I hope the editors will continue to send me these papers. I can not see how any can spend money for luxuries and not take these papers. They are rich in matter to me and worth more than the price. To God be the glory.

Peter Anderson.

DEEPWATER, Mo., Dec. 10th.

Dear Herald:—I see so many cheering letters in your columns. It do s me so much good to read them; they make tears of joy course down my cheeks.

I have been a great sufferer for many years, but the Lord is yet sparing my life. I have been trying to serve the Lord for many years as best I knew how, but still I felt a lack of something and I knew not what. I was a Free-Will Baptist, but for years I had felt a need of something more than I found with them. Still I was better pleased with that church than any other I knew of.

I was baptized last June by Bro. I. N. White, I feel thankful to God that he has spared me through all of my afflictions to embrace the gospel.

I have often thought before I knew much about the Saints that the Lord was sparing me for some good purpose, for I have passed through so much sickness and afflictions, and I think if it was for nothing else it was for the purpose of my embracing the faith.

I had a very severe sickness last spring and was given up by two doctors. We sent for Bro.

I. N. White, for I knew the Lord could cure me. He came and administered to me, and I was better in a few minutes. My aching left and my fever cooled. But I took a backset and it was unhandy to get an elder at any time, so I had a few prayers offered in my behalf and mended along until by the mercies of the Lord I was up again to the surprise of many.

My afflictions prey upon me very heavily now, and I feel that I can not be here very long unless I have a change for the better instead of worse.

I earnestly ask the united prayers of all the Saints, that I may be healed of consumption and other diseases if it is the Lord's will, for I know he is able to do it, also that I may be faithful. I have been blessed many times in answer to prayer.

I would be glad to live to see my husband come into the true church. Pray for him and my brother-in-law, that they may see the errors of their way and come into the fold and be saved.

Your sister.

Amanda J. Huddleston.

NORTH HENDERSON, Ill., Dec. 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—My heart was made glad and I rejoiced while reading the testimony of Father Landers. I do thank my Heavenly Father that He is mindful of that dear old soul, giving him strength of mind that he can still speak words of cheer to the Saints in his extreme old age.

I truly can testify that the Lord has blessed him with the gift of healing. I want to speak of an incident that occurred about the year forty-six. My sister was taken sick with fever and grew worse daily. My father went thirty miles for Father Landers to administer to her. Father Landers replied: "Bro. Black, we will kneel in prayer and ask the Lord to rebuke the disease." They did so, and the next morning Father Landers said: "Bro. Black, I have no need to go with you; your child is better." She got up that morning and in a short time was restored to health. Truly God has blessed Father Landers in his mission of love and mercy. May God bless him.

Our little branch here is still trying to live and holding on to the rod of iron, as best they can, but we are getting very hungry for preaching.

ISABEL GLASS.

WEBB CITY, Mo., Dec. 1st.

Dear Herald:-My husband and I were baptized into the Saints church July 25th by Bro. Hobert. Since then my oldest daughter was sick with the spinal menengitis but through prayer and faith in the Lord and by the power of God she is well, She had strong faith herself; she wanted nothing but consecrated oil. But the saddest of all is I have a boy nine years old who was taken sick before we came in the church. He has the same disease and for twenty-one weeks he has been sick and is now almost a skeleton. He don't have fever now unless it is inward. He wants to drink most all the time. We had two doctors with him but all of no avail; and we have called the elders several times and for a while he seemed to get better, but now he has spells of some kind with his spine. I ask an interest in all the Saints' prayers in his behalf, that as much as in accordance with God's will he may be raised and have his right mind and the right use of his limbs. My desires are to serve the Lord, and raise up my children in the fear of the Lord. Your sister, MATTIE JONES.

WHEATVILLE, Wis., Dec. 9th.

Dear Herald:—I wish to inform your readers of the prospects in this Western Wisconsin district. I am happy to inform you it is onward. I received a letter from Bro. W. S. Pender at Valley Junction a few days ago stating the prospects to be good. He had baptized five at that place and others were near the kingdom.

I have been preaching what I could and the Lord has wonderfully blessed me. On December the 1st I baptized three at Wheatville, and on last Sunday I was at Bell Center, this state, when one more gave their name for baptism. A number more will unite between this and spring.

The calls for preaching are increasing. I opened up a new field last week. Some are believing there and I promised to return soon. Some are very hard against us there and promised us some bad treatment, but if the Lord will we shall go back again. The harvest is ripe in this field. O, may the Lord send the laborers forth! I hope to be sustained in this field next year so I can spend all my time in the labor of the Lord. I have done what I could this year and hope to do more in the future.

In bonds.

A. L. WHITEAKER.

Buchanan, Mich., Nov. 26th.

Kind Reader:—Listen, oh, listen, while I relate briefly some of the miseries, heartaches and crime entailed upon the children of God, at different periods through kissing:

Very recently, while reading from the Book of Omni, and from the words of Mormon, the Spirit of the Lord rested upon me, and showed me that those two mighty races, once so highly favored of the Lord, dwelling upon this continent at two distinct periods, fell by reason of wicked abomination, and the first step to it was kissing.

Oh Saints of latter days, have we observed any indications of such a destructive power among our fair sons and daughters? If we have, let us at once try to stamp out the error before it gains a foothold too strong for us. Lift a warning voice ere we see our innocent ones led into captivity and chains of darkness by its awful deceitful power.

Oh, daughters of Zion, look earnestly to your children, that they are not captivated by it. For they are as costly jewels as diamonds set in gold; their mission, their worth, the good that they will do, the future will unfold.

And forget not your husbands and sons, especially those who are in the field battling for truth; for there is a spirit hanging over them that is trying to cause them to commit acts unpardonable, and thus destroy their mission and labor of love.

Oh, let us not sleep while the enemy of souls is so zealously trying to overthrow the church and kingdom of God by those little innovations, but let us arise with heart and voice and denounce the evil practice of kissing.

Some I know have gracefully folded their arms and said, "There is peace and safety for us." But does not the good book tell us that when those words are spoken, then shall come sudden destruction?. I think it is a mistake to suppose that we may glide along smoothly while others have waded through blood for the sake of the cause that we enjoy.

Examine, kind reader, the prophecies of Daniel, twelfth chapter, and tell me, oh tell me, the meaning of those three dates or ends of some important events evidently referred to. If that figurative language of time, times and a half, points to the termination of the great apostasy of the primitive church in 1830, and the more recent date of 1290 days, has reference to the time of the Reorganization, or the end of the apostasy brought about by Brigham Young and those other like aspirants, in 1860, pray what is the meaning of the last date pointing to 1905? There is a great blessing promised to those who shall wait and come to that date, and Daniel is to rest and stand in his lot at the end of the days. Let us hope also that it will not be the end of an event similar to those of the past; and that those who now stand may stand until the great clock of time shall say it is done and our warfare is Your sister,

EDITH EAGLESON.

RICHMOND, Mo., Dec. 12th.

Editors Herald:—I am doing what I can to spread the gospel in this district. I went into the north-east part of Carroll county to preach the funeral sermon of Mr. Arther White who departed this life August 28th. It was preached in the Baptist Church by the writer to a large congregation for the country. Mr. White was not a member of any church, but professed a belief in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. His wife is a member and is still living in that neighborhood.

While I was in that part I got the use of the United Brethren church and returned in one month and preached five nights to quite a number. I left an appointment to commence December 2d. I have just closed a series of eight sermons at that place. Had very good sized congregations and good liberty, but I was somewhat hoarse on account of cold. The neighborhood I was preaching in is where Bro. Emsley Curtis lived. I have also been preaching five miles east of Richmond in a school house every third Sunday in the month, usually morning and night; also at two different places south of Richmond, in the river bottom.

We held our district conference the last Saturday in November. Only four elders were present and some priests and some of the laity. We have only six members in this district. Most of the members seem a little sleepy. I hope they will thoroughly awake before the Bridegroom comes.

I have not baptized any, but I am satisfied that prejudice has been allayed and a more perfect understanding is had among the people which will bring forth fruit after many days. If the Saints would manifest more zeal by works in the way of love and unity, their light would reflect farther and higher and others could see better. We have several things to contend with down here. There are fears within, but not with me in regard to this work, for surely there is nothing better. So I shall battle along to the end, God helping. Yours for truth,

R. L. WARE.

CENTRAL POINT, Dec. 1st.

Dear Saints:-This is the Lord's day and I had an appointment at our school house but was hindered by the rain, so I thought I might encourage you by bearing my testimony to the latter day work. I know it is of God, for the signs do follow them that believe and obey. I have been healed and have seen others healed by the power that is given the elders of the Church of Christ, and I praise the Lord for the visions and dreams he has shown me. I had a testimony of the Book of Mormon in answer to prayer, May 27th, in reading the first book of Nephi. When I came to the twentieth verse of the first chapter the letters were enlarged and changed to the color of gold with a narrow border of green around each letter, which caused me to praise the good Lord. If any Saint should come this way, please call on a brother.

ANCIENT AMERICAN RUINS.

THE following is taken from "Pitman's Manual of Phonography," edition of 1889.

"A correspondent of the Wooster Spy writes as follows of certain highly interesting discoveries recently made by the Geographical and Geological survey of the territories, conducted by Dr. Hayden:

"'Prof. Hayden has given South-western Colorado a new interest, by discovering and describing ancient ruins in that section, and in south-eastern Utah. The fertile valley Enamas was densely inhabited and highly cultivated by an enlightened race of people centuries ago. The ruins of the houses, towns, fortifications, ditches, corrals, pottery-ware, drawings, etc., show that many arts were cultivated by these prehistoric people which are now entirely lost. Their houses were built of almost every kind of stone, from small boulders to the finest sandstone.

"The finest of these ruins, and the nearest perfect, are situated about thirtyfive miles below Enamas City, in a large valley fifteen miles long by seven miles wide, on the west side of the river. valley has been covered with buildings of every size; the two largest being three hundred by six hundred feet, and about 300 feet apart. They are built of small blocks of sandstone, and in adobe mortar, the outside walls being four feet and the inside walls from one and a half to three feet thick. In the lower stories are found portholes a foot square. There are rooms on the left, and the floors for about four stories high are still standing. About the second story on the west side there was once a balcony along the length of the building. No signs of a door are visible on the outside walls, and the ingress must have been from the top. On the inside there have been passages from room to "'Most of them are small, from eight by ten to twelve by fourteen feet; the doors have been two by four feet. The arches over the doors and portholes are made of small cedar poles two inches wide, placed across, on which the masonry is placed. The sleepers supporting the floors are of cedars, about eight inches thick, and from twenty to fifty feet long, about three feet apart. A layer of small round poles was placed across the sleepers, then a layer of thinly split cedar sticks, then about three inches of earth, then a layer of cedar bark, then another layer of dirt, then a carpet of some kind of coarse grass. The rooms that have been protected from exposure are whitewashed, and the walls are ornamented with drawings and writings. In one of these rooms the impression of a hand dipped in whitewash, in the joist, is as plain as if it had beed made only yesterday. In another room there was drawings of tarantulas, centipedes, horses and men.

"In some of the rooms have been found human bones, bones of sheep, corn cobs, gods, rawhides, and all colors and varieties of pottery ware. These two large buildings are exactly the same in every respect. Portions of the building plainly show that they were destroyed by fire, the timbers being burnt off, and the roofs caved in, leaving the lower rooms entirely protected. The rock that these buildings were built of must have been brought a long way, as nothing to compare with it can be found within a radius of twenty miles. All the timber used is cedar, and has been brought at least twentv-five miles. Old ditches and roads are to be seen in every direction. The Navijo [Navajoe?] Indians say in regard to these ruins that their forefathers came there five old men's ages ago (five hundred years) and that these ruins were here and the same then as now, and there is no record whatever of their origin."

Here is proof of the divine origin of the Book of Mormon which may assist to confirm the faith of some of our members who lately have come into the church. They will be able to see by this the difference between an idle tale and a revelation from God. This was undoubtedly one of the cities of the Nephites. Joseph Smith the martyr was indeed a prophet of God.

TRINE IMMERSION.

In the Herald of August 14th, last I find an editorial on the subject of "Trine Immersion," and as this has revived some of my former conflict, I feel disposed to write.

I think the brother mentioned as having the argument with some of that people is mistaken when he states that "trine immersion and feet washing are their strongest holds." Having been identified with them for ten or twelve years, and having been several years in their ministry, I have reason to believe that they hold non-resistance, non-swearing, non-conformity to the world in dress, the kiss of charity, adjusting church difficulties according to Matthew 18th, and anointing with oil and laying of hands as much as the former principles.

The brother thinks them easily cornered on church organization and authority. This I think to be correct, for bishops, deacons and elders in first and second degree are all the officers among them that I know anything about it; and as to authority, they claim nothing else—to my knowledge—but the written word of the Bible.

This brings to my mind the remark which a certain Dunkard brother made, namely: "The worse the people the more authority they claim." The opposite of this is, the less authority claimed the better the people, and consequently those who have no authority are the best of all; yet we learn that Jesus Christ "taught as one having authority and not as the scribes, and he commandeth even the wind and the sea, and they obey, for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they obey him."-Mark 1:27. "Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils and to cure diseases."-Luke 9: 1.

Paul says: "For though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, . . . (2 Cor. 10:8; see also marginal line of I Thess. 1:6). Paul exhorts Titus to "rebuke with all authority."—Titus 2:15. And now while I have great respect for the Dunkard society and confidence in its sincerity, I nevertheless considered it my privilege and duty to look at its origin and authority. Truth can loose nothing by investigation; error should be exposed, and I pray the Lord that error may speedily be put down.

Supposing it was admitted that trine immersion is correct: who shall administer it? This was an important question in the origin of the Dunkard or Brethren Church. I will herewith send you a clipping from the Microcosm, published by Hall & Co., measurably describing its origin. Please republish it. writer says there were seven at its inception, but if my memory serves me right there were five brethren and three sisters, and these, according to history, were all Pædo Baptists, or those that were simply sprinkled. Now by an examination of Matthew 28: 19 they were convinced that they were not baptized, and did not know of a baptized society. Certainly, according to their own theory, there were none legitimately baptized amongst them. Therefore they cast lots who should baptize first, or be the administrator, and the one upon whom the lot fell (whose name they vowed to keep a secret for fear any should build their hopes on man) baptized Alexander Mack, who then baptized all the other company, the administrator included. Thus we learn that the first administrator of baptism was himself unbaptized, without any direct or present revelation from God, for they claim the last revelation was given on the Isle of Patmos. Now I believe that God is under no special obligation to ratify such procedure, no matter how sincere they are or how much they seek to obey the commands of Christ. I fear the sects of the world have taken to themselves authority which Jesus Christ never gave them, and thus violated instead of keeping the commands. And here no doubt lies the reason why the signs do not follow the Dunkards and other sects. God is under no obligation to confirm their words with signs following, according to Mark 16:20.

It is needless to claim "apostolic succession," as you plainly see. Now if one person or a few are justified in organizing a church, why are not all others thus privileged? Solve the question who may or can, but remember that God is not the author of confusion.

I should dearly love to hear or see two competent men measure swords upon the doctrinal points of both churches, namely the German Baptist and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. I think by the time the discussion was ended some at least would know whether I have been bewitched or not.

We are still laboring steadily. Baptized and confirmed three of Hiram A. Rudd's children. We have but little open opposition, but plenty of silent contempt. May God kindly remember all his children.

CRAWFORD, Neb., Oct. 13th.

COURCH OF THE BRETHREN—GERMAN BAPTISTS.

This body of Christians arose in the year 1708, in Schwartzenau, Germany. The general lack of spirituality in the Established or State Church, at that time, induced seven neighbors to meet regularly for the purpose of reading the Scriptures, prayer and mutual edification, with a view of attaining a higher state of holiness. Not knowing the existence of any organized Baptist church, they were led by reading the Bible to reject pædo-baptism; and, by a strict interpretation of the commission (Matt. 28: 19), to adopt trine immersion.

Among them was a man of liberal education by the name of Alexander Mack, whom they chose as their leader, and organized themselves into a church, taking the name of "Brethren" as their title, in harmony with Matt. 23:8, "All ye are brethren." From their mode of baptizing they were often called Tunkers and Dunkards, from the German word tunken, to immerse.

Their number increased steadily, and two other societies were formed besides the original one, but which were soon driven by persecution to Crefelt and Holland, while the original congregation removed to Friesland. Between 1719 and 1729 they all removed to America, and settled in the vicinity of Philadelphia and Germantown. From these points they spread to Maryland and Virginia; and with the tide of emigration were carried westward to the Pacific. No organized churches of this denomination exist in the Eastern States or in New York; but in all the other Middle, Northern, and Western States, in most of the Southern States, and of the Western Territories,-being most numerous in Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Kansas.

In church government each congregation maintains the democratic form; and all business matters are decided by the majority vote of the whole church. In the District Conferences into which the States are divided, and in the General Assembly of the whole denomination, known as the Annual Meeting, the republican or representative form of government prevails. To the executive committee of the Annual Meeting only ordained elders are eligible. Each church is entitled to two representatives at the District meeting, and each District Meeting sends two delegates to the Annual Meeting or General Assembly.

In regard to the so-called "general principles" of Christianity, the "Brethren" agree with the other Protestant Churches. Their peculiarities are, that they have never allowed their members to hold slaves, go to war, hold any office requiring the administration of an oath, nor to take an oath themselves, to join any secret organization, to go to law with their brethren, nor to indulge in the vanities and fashions of this world. As early as 1781, just one hundred years ago, their Annual Council interdicted the manufacture of ardent spirits by its members. None are received into church fellowship without repentance, faith, and trine-immersion. They hold that the Lord's Supper (deipnon) is always a full meal, and is eaten in the evening, and differs from the bread and wine of communion which were distributed by the Lord "after supper." (1 Cor. 11: 25). At their seasons of lovefeasts (agapais), (Jude 1: 12), they practice washing the Saints' feet (John 13: 14; I Tim. 5: 10), giving each other the right hand of fellowship and the kiss of charity. The different sexes always practice these ceremonies separately. "Anointing the sick with oil, in the name of the Lord" (James 4: 14) is a privilege of which many in this church avail themselves when

Although the first Sunday School ever held was organized at Ephrata, Pa., by one who had been a member of the Brethren, yet the Sabbath School work, until recently, was greatly neglected in this denomination. Foreign missions, Sunday School literature, and Colleges, have received a great impetus during the last five years. A Home and Foreign Mission Board was appointed a year ago at their General Assembly, and a very successful mission is sustained in Denmark, besides numerous home missions. Three Sunday School weeklies, one monthly, six church weeklies and one monthly are sustained by this denomination. One academy in Virginia, another in Maryland, a college at Ashland, Ohio, one at Huntingdon, Pa., and another at Mount Morris, Ill., have recently been established by members of the Brethren Church. The two last named colleges are in a flourishing condition.

The number of communicants can not be given until after the census report is published, but there are 1739 ministers enrolled.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

In writing on this question we shall not undertake to do so with a view to settling the question as to whether the first or the seventh day of the week will ultimately be the true Sabbath day—the day of rest and of worship for the Saints of God to observe.

It is a well known fact that there is a difference of opinion among the Saints on this subject, and I have no doubt but what they differ honestly. There having been a good deal of discussion on the Sabbath question the Lord saw fit to speak to the church on the matter as follows: "Inasmuch as there has been much discussion in the past concerning the Sabbath of the Lord, the church is admonished that until further revelation is received, or the quorums of the church are assembled to decide concerning the law in the church articles and covenants, the Saints are to observe the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest, as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments."-D. C. 119:7.

The Saints having been admonished in relation to the matter it would be well to see whether we understand the admonition correctly or not. To the mind of the writer the revelation of April 11th, 1887, does not settle the question so that there may not hereafter be a change made from the first to the seventh day; but it simply teaches that for the time being, or "until further revelation is received, or the quorums of the church are assembled to decide concerning the law in the church articles and covenants, the Saints are to observe the first day of the week," etc.

If we are to understand as some claim that "the revelation does not teach nor imply that at some future time it may be found that Sunday is not the proper rest-day for the church," why should it be said that they are to observe the first day until certain specified events should take place, if there was no possible chance for a change to be made when those future events should occur? Evidently the language used limits the time of its being in force to the time when those specified events take place. How are we to know beforehand what the "further revelation" on the subject may reveal or what the decision of the assembled quorums may be on that question? It seems to us to be a mere presumption—claiming a point with-out proof—to say that there may not be a change made by future revelation or the further investigation of the matter in the assembled quorums, when they may be called upon to decide "concerning the law in the church articles and covenants" on this question.

Should the writer (as a representative of the church) be questioned by one not acquainted with our faith and doctrine how the church stood on the Sabbath question, he would answer that there is a difference of opinion among the members and the elders on that question; but that the doctrine of the church as given by revelation is that "until further revelation is received" or until "the quorums of the church are assembled" and decide upon the question we are commanded to "observe the first day of the week . . . as a day of rest." After which the doctrine of the church will be as the further revelation or decision of the quorums may have determined. But whether it will be in favor of the first or seventh day as the Sabbath I have no means of knowing before hand.

From the writer's standpoint of view it appears to him that no one in representing the doctrine of the church on the Sabbath question has any right to say that Sunday will be for all future time the rest-day or Sabbath for the church. Whether that representative will present the matter from the pulpit or through the press-in periodical, or tract form—he should be careful in representing the matter and not presume too much as to what the future will or will not bring about. If one has the right to say the future will not make a change because he so believes, another has just as much right to say that the future will make a change because he so believes. The writer believes that none have the right to say what the future will bring about on this question, but each one has the right to his opinion on the matter, and if he must express it let him say that it is only his opinion, and not the doctrine of the church. The revelation was evidently given to stop the discussion in the manner it had been previously conducted, through the press, and to admonish the Saints to observe the first day of the week until the matter would be finally settled by further revelation, or by quorum decision; thus, to the mind of the writer, leaving it an open question as to what the final decision will be on that This certainly seems to us to be the simple, plain and unstrained meaning of the language in which the revelation has been given.

ON THE JERICHO ROAD.

THE subject of the Rev. Dr. J. H. Barrows' sermon at the First Presbyterian Church was "On the Jericho Road." The parable of the good Samaritan was the basis of the many practical lessons which the discourse contained.

Dr. Barrows said it was not for him to deny that the conditions of the modern world are far from right, but were they ten-fold worse so long as one brother was in need and he could help him it would be his duty to do so, even though other men leave their obligations unfulfilled. This parable was a terrible indictment of much that we see in the modern world. With all our growing humanities there is no adequate provision yet made for human need. The bitter cry of outcast London is a modern echo of the wounded man's helpless cries in that rocky gorge of Judea.

No one can read the descriptions which are given of the boundless luxury, the palatial adornments, for example, of the great mansions of New York, and then linger over the descriptions of the vast tenement-houses where thousands in immediate proximity to this luxury are living lives worse than brutal-men. women, children eating, sleeping, dying in narrow rooms and foul atmospheres where every condition of wholesome life is absent, where virtue is almost impossible, where life is robbed not only of interest but of decency-no one can linger over these two pictures and believe for a moment that the parable of the good Samaritan has taken full possession of the modern mind and heart. Men have been so busy bowing down to the laws of political economy, worshiping the Moloch of competition, exalting the claims of the rule of supply and demand, that they have too often forgotten that there are some laws older than Adam Smith, Ricardo, and other economists; that older than political science is the law of mercy and humanity. The world to-day needs most of all, now that the wealth of ours, the richest nation, is more than half of it concentrated in the hands of less than 25,000 persons, to Christianize or Samaritanize the 25,000.

The uprising tide of social discontent which appears in Europe and America has back of it a sense of wrong and has in it in some degree the Spirit of Jesus Christ, and, no doubt, unless in a far larger measure the wealth of the world is concentrated to the relief of humanity, its bodily, mental, social, and spiritual relief, we shall see that general adoption of perilous principles—principles involving a radical change in the type of our civilization. The vast inequalities which are sheltered and defended under the present system are the mightiest forces to-day in the social evolution, or revolution, which so many deplore and so many hail with thanksgiving.

There is no link binding the rich and poor together so strong as kindness on the part of the rich, but the kindness must be personal, it must not be second-hand and far removed, and take on the form of charity. It must come close to people's lives, it must have in it the spirit of self-denial. The good Samaritan lodges today most frequently in the houses of the

The doctor said nothing had touched him more deeply than the case of a poor woman in this city. Her husband was killed on the railroad and she supports her children by washing. Last winter a physician came to see her in her sickness and asked her how she was able to get along now that she could not work, and she told him that the ladies for whom she worked did not know it, but that her children brought home the washing as usual and then her poor neighbors, after their day's washing was done, came to her weary and worn in the evening and did hers, so that her work went on as usual. Isn't there a neighborly kindness which puts to shame all our boasted generosity? Living in our rich and comfortable homes, having no anxieties about bread, clothing, and shelter; toiling desperately, not for a living but to add a few more thousands and millions, what are we, the best of us, but miserable hypocrites and pretenders in the matter of neighborly helpfulness compared with these humble women of the wash-tub?

God may or may not be pleased that we should double our fortunes, but who can doubt that the eyes of Jesus look upon us through the eyes of the good Samaritan with divine rebuke?

FAITH IN OUR TIMES.

"Christianity is no longer an exact science, nor is faith a word with an exact meaning." Prof. Swing thus began his sermon on the unity of faith at the Central Church. "Faith has been taken from the exchanges. It has lost its commercial value. There was a time when people could buy articles with belief—when the church stood in the market place, saying: "If you believe my articles I will forgive your sins and give you heaven."

"Not one church but a hundred denominations stood forth crying the same offer; 'Believe my group of docttines and all will be well with you—believe any other group and all will be ill with you—and forever.' Sometimes the Romanists tortured men and women to make belief more easy. Sometimes the Protestants did the same. In Spain and Portugal was a day set apart for the auto da fe, for the act of faith. Those who had no faith were burned alive to the delight and edification of the multitude.

The first auto da fe was in 1560; the last in 1761, on which occasion a pious old man of seventy, who could express his belief in all the doctrines of the church save two or three, was burned alive in company with fifty-four common persons. Twenty years later a thoughtful heretic girl was burned—in 1781. The fires of the inquisition only died out when those of the French revolution were lit. The reign of terror taught that the power to kill was no longer monopolized by the church. Religion ceased to murder when the other side learned the art.

"In those bloody times the faith of the nations and creeds was nothing like what Christ taught. It was a conformity merely. Faith was a password or sign of membership. Measurably this is true even now. The question is often not 'Do you love and serve God?' but 'Are you one of our company?'

In our day the faith has essentially escaped from this condition and stands for religion. Credulity will no longer atone for a single sin; faith believes not in books or creeds, but in God. To religion it matters not whether the sun is at rest or in motion; ignorance and science are one to it; we Christians want the sun to shine, to raise up the priests of the earth, to make matin and vesper time, but our faith reposes on God's goodness.

"The holiest faith need not go beyond Jesus, for more fortunate than the mind that knows is the heart that trusts. Christianity is one and the same, whether Jesus Christ shall merge in God or stand ever at his right hand. The questions that men raise have nothing to do with faith, which is the Godward movement of the soul. In worship all of these ulterior differences disappear. The hundred become one denomination, just as when a vessel laden with returning citizens sights first the dim shore of this continent they are all filled with one joy, no matter what their condition, what their character, for all eyes look toward that shore as containing the dear home of each.

"Now and then some Presbyterian and Episcopalian shake hands and laugh over the discovery that they believe the same things. They might have had that laugh forty years ago if they had looked sooner for the truth. Christian union, the unity of faith, ran through all creeds and nations just as much then as it does now, but they did not know it. This unity was present when Peter went up to the house-top, and it has been present ever since, but unknown—a hemisphere hidden beyond the sea of untraveled thought.

"There are two paths to unite all Christians—one to make all doctrines and forms alike, the other to grow men and women great enough to recognize the essential harmony that runs through all.

"Reason and death are partners in the work of reform. Reason has taught the young the newer truth, and death has lulled to sleep the old who opposed the truth. Nor is it cruel to say, for the same process is still at work, because death will soon lull us to sleep and leave reason to deal with the still younger.

"Faith is belief with love and peace attached to it. It is devotion at work in religion. When man's soul was detached from God to pass through the phenomenon of death faith was given as death's partner and co-worker, that her words might supplement death's great silence.

"I would advise you to detach your faith from church, creed, or catechism. The church holds but the dried and pressed flowers of faith. Go to God. Look upon your belief as a fresh and personal divine impulse within you, a flower planted into your heart by the hand of Deity himself."

HANNAH—CARROLL.—At Saints' meeting, December 15th, 1889, at the residence of Bro. John Walker, near Lowry City, Missouri, Mr. G. W. Hannah and Sr. Sarah Carroll, by Elder T. R. White.

DIED.

CHANT,-The death occurred October 8th, 1889, of the beloved wife of Mr. William Chant at his residence, corner of Yarwood street, St. Thomas, Ontario, at the comparatively early age of twenty-five years and eleven months, from a complication of diseases, disease of the heart being the principal one. She leaves a husband and one child, three sisters, one brother, a widowed mother and a host of kind and sympathetic friends to mourn her departure. Less than one year ago she was permitted to hear the gospel preached in its purity by the Latter Day Saints in this city, and her honest heart being unblased by prejudice and consequently open to conviction, she readily embraced that form of doctrine once delivered to the Saints, since which time she has lived a zealous, devoted, exemplary Christian, which even the world around her have especially noticed. She was a devoted and lovespeciatry nonced. She was a devoted and loving wife, mother and neighbor. She bore her affliction with much patience and endurance to the end, and strongly admonished those around her dying bed to yield obedience to the gospel, and thus prepare to meet her in her Savior's kingdom. The Saints here miss here constants The Saints here miss her companionship, and her earnest, faithful, and pleading prayers (for her husband especially), but generally for all her relatives, that the veil might be raised from their eyes and thus have them opened to the light of the gospel. Her happy, smiling countenance which lasted to the end of (and even after) life, has passed from our view for the present. While here amongst us however, it seemed to have a charm that would inspire with more zeal for the work in which we are engaged. Thus passed away one of the most devoted of our number. Funeral conducted by Elders R. C. Evans and Wm. Strange, A telling sermon the same evening by Elder Evans.

Brown.-At his residence No. 619 Nineteenth street, Oakland, California, December 4th, 1889, after a protracted illness commencing with an attack of paralysis, our well known brother, Hiram P. Brown, attorney at law and editor of the Expositor, succumbed to the great last enemy, aged 64 years, 2 months and 21 days. Bro Brown was born at Queensbury, Warren county, New York, and became identified with the church by bapt.sm in 1842 in the seventeenth year of his He was a man of more than ordinary ability and a protound Biblical scholar, an earnest, logical and eloquent speaker, and an able expounder of the faith and doctrine of the Saints. He ever cherished in his heart a deep, warm friendship for all true believers in the Book of Mormon and adherents to the original Mormon faith; but was an openly avowed and ever aggressive and uncompromising enemy to polygamy and kindred abominations taught and practiced by the Utah Mormon Church. He leaves a kind, loving wife, affectionate children, and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. Peace be to his ashes! and may his spirit mingle with the spirits of the righteous and rest in the paradise of God until the resurrection of the just. Funeral services conducted by Elder J. B. Price, of Oakland, assisted by Elder Charles Parkin, of San Francisco.

ADAMS.—Sr. Hannah Adams, relict of the late Elder James Marvin Adams, born July 12th, 1808, at Augusta, Oneida county, New York; baptized December 4th, 1836, at Andover, Ashtabula county, Ohio, by Elder John Knapp; died December 6th, 1889, at her home in Woodbine, Harrison county, Iowa. Funeral sermon preached by Elder Charles Derry in the Saints' Church, Sunday, December 8th. Text, John 11:25; Rev. 14:13. Our aged and much beloved sister was truly a mother in Israel. She had been a member of the church fifty-three years lacking two days; and all these years she had been active in the Redeemer's cause, counselling and comforting the weak and cheering on the strong. Full of hope in the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ and with faith in his gospel that wavered not in the darkest hour, she departed this life with a full assurance of a glorious resurrection when her crucified and risen Redeemer returns again to reign in glory on the earth. She was beloved by all who knew her, and loved the Lord. The only regret in leaving was in the sad thought that her children, for whom she had so long and fervently prayed, and with whom she had so earnestly plead, were yet outside of the kingdom of God. Yet there was still a hope burning in her soul that her prayers and tears would not be in vain.

Farewell, mother, thy rest is sweet;
For thee death had no venomed sting.
Through Christ thy triumph is complete,
And Jesus is thy Savior, King.

JONES .- Henry Tilman Jones departed this life at Haley's Creek, Tennessee, November 14th, 1889. He was born December 26th, 1830, in Henderson county, Tennessee, where he has always resided. He joined the Northern Methodists a little after the close of the rebellion; and made them a faithful member and a warm leader up to about thirteen years ago. He was baptized August 5th, 1888, by Elder John Thomas and confirmed by Elder Seaton the same date, and was faithful until death.

RANGE.—At Hollister, California, November 24th, 1889, Naomi E., youngest child of Bro. John and Sr. Ella Range, aged 5 months and 22 days.

HUMPHREY.—At Dennisport, Massachusetts, November 29th, 1889, of dropsy, Sr. Rebecca A. Humphrey, aged 39 years, I month and 7 days. Funeral service with sermon by Elder John Smith to a crowded congregation of sympathizing friends. She had long been a sufferer from disease, but her troubles now are ended and she has gone where the weary are at rest.

A VALUABLE AND UNIQUE BUSINESS CALENDAR.

The most convenient, valuable, and unique business, table or desk calendar, for 1890, is the Columbia Bicycle Calendar and stand, issued by the Pope Mfg. Co., of Boston, Mass. endar proper is in the form of a pad of 366 leaves, each 5½ x 2¾ in., one for each day of the year, to be torn off daily, and one for the entire year. A good portion of each leaf is blank for memoranda, and as the leaves are not pasted, but sewed at the ends, an entire leaf can be exposed whenever desired. By an ingenious device, the leaves tear off independently, leaving no stub. The portable stand, which holds the pad, contains pen rack and pencil holder, and is made of solid wood, brass mounted. Upon each slip appear quotations pertaining to cycling from leading publications and prominent writers, and although this is the fifth year of the calendar, the quota-tions are fresh and new, mentioning the notable facts in cycling, opinions of medical authorities, clergymen, and other professional gentlemen, the rights of cyclers upon the road, advice upon costumes, directions about road making, with occasional mention of the bicycles and typewriters made by the Pope Mfg. Co., and the information therein contained would, if placed in book type, make a fair sized volume.
