Kensington, the former residence of England's kings and queens, is constructed of brick and has the appearance of additions to main building at various times. Outside, the appearance is that of a substantially built structure of a century or two past; not imposing, but modest and homelike. The surroundings are very fine and I thought it would be a charming residence. The public is admitted to the building and at once taken to the floor above, ascending the Queens Stairway, and then they are permitted to enter the rooms in order as follows:

1. Queen Mary's Library room.

2. Queen's closet.

3. Queen Anne's private diningroom.

- 4 Queen Mary's private chamber. Interesting articles in this room are Queen Mary's writing table; Queen Mary's work table; also the work-table of Queen Victoria. The table is 212 years old, but a very good one, even for the present day. Queen Anne's card-table, 230 years old. This is finely inlaid with ivory and in good condition.
- 5. Queen Caroline's drawing-room. 6. The Cupola room. This is set with a number of statuary pieces.
- 7. The King's drawing-room. This is hung with fine oil paintings, usually | Companion.

of scenes connected with the King's household.

8. To the left of the drawing room is the king's privy chamber, the walls hung with oil paintings, and in the center the king's chair, a very comfortable looking piece of furniture, showing considerable use, but so encircled now that I could not take a seat in it.

9. On the right of the drawing-room is the nursery; and here are noticeable many useful toys for little folks; among them is a finely rigged ship and a little stove with tea set, made of tin or pewter, such as common peoples' children might knock around and not break.

10. The ante-room. All of these rooms finished in walnut.

Queen Victoria's bedroom. 11. This contained many trinkets and toys, seemingly such as a good and intelligent girl may have used in bygone days. Among them I noticed a model loom for weaving and vessel rigged for sailing; and I thought, No. wonder Britain's ships carried the commerce of the world and her spindles were the treasures of the empire. when her young queen had been taught from infancy how to rig her ships, and to thread her own shuttles. and adjust the harness of her looms.

12. The King's gallery! The walls of this are hung with magnificent paintings, usually of scenes in land or naval warfare of distinguished battles. I failed to find in the entire collection, however, a single battle scene of the two great contests between England and America. Americans may well feel proud of a record of such courage and bravery that no former foe cares to have spread before him a single scene of the many contests for supremacy.

13. The King's stairway. broad, spacious, and substantial.

14. The Presence Chamber. Also hung with many excellent paintings, the most prominent being the mar-riage of the Prince of Wales and Princess Alexandra.

But I am to take the train for Dover at 5:30 p. m., and it is now near five. A guard directs me to a station just through the Hyde Park gate, where I am to take the Electric Tube for the railway station. My next will contain sketch of a journey from London to Paris and Rome.

HOW TO KEEP EGGS FRESH.

One good housekeeper told me she always had perfectly fresh eggs when eggs were not always fresh, and this is the way she did it: When they were cheap and fresh she dipped them for an instant in hot, thin, gum-arabic water, draining them in a wire plate-drainer, and then packed them away in the dark .-Mrs. Larned in the November Woman's Home

BIGLOW, Oregon, Oct. 24.

Editors Herald:—It has been so long since I wrote you that I expect some of your readers are wondering whether we are still alive. We are still alive and in the fight. Since writing you the most of our time has been spent in the valley of Hood River, at work with the gospel tent. We digressed from that long enough to attend the Bandon reunion. By we I mean Elder W. A. Goodwin and me. Elder Luff has told you of that event so I will only say that we enjoyed the reunion. As to being "stage struck," we were not so afflicted, as we went in with a loaded team. Our valises rode and we walked, at least forty miles of the way from Roseburg to Myrtle Point. So in our dreams we are not bothered by visions of the three R's, and of romance we had a plentiful supply. Still we enjoyed it for with an occasional effort to entice the wary trout while waiting for the wagon, and a seldom success on that line (fish line), our appetites were good, and what we lacked in fish we were able to supply in bread, vegetables, and fruit.

From Myrtle Point we took passage by boat, and at Bandon found the brethren awaiting us at the wharf. When I say that the first gospel sermon ever preached in Bandon was by the writer, and the first baptisms performed were one year later by the same party, and of the nine baptized by me then, five were waiting to see and greet me, and also at least three who had listened to my preaching, and who had since united with the faith seemed equally as glad to clasp our hand, you may not need to be told that I was glad to be at Bandon once more. The reunion was a busy and pleasant time.

On our way out we yielded to the request of the Saints and friends at Minard's Mill, and stopped to hold a few services there, baptizing one more into the fold, a Bro. Folsome.

Once back to Hood River we again commenced operations with the tent, and have been busy ever since. Of course we have had opposition to meet, but we feel that good has been done there. There have been two baptized, and others are near the fold.

The Adventist Christians there have been trying to get a champion to meet us in a discussion of the issues ever since the middle of July, and at last think they have a man to defend their cause, an Elder L. G. Dix. The discussion is billed for the 4th of November. Eider W. A. Goodwin will defend the cause of truth.

At last the busy season for the interior is about past, and we are just commencing our campaign of the schoolhouses and halls. Came here by invitation of a Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Everett who were at Hood River during the berry-picking season and listened to us there. We commenced operations here the 19th inst., and our audiences have varied from perhaps twenty-six the first sermon, to over a hundred Sunday evening, and Monday and Tuesday evenings over a half hundred present. The interest here is fine. We are trying to do our part faithfully, and trusting to the Master for results.

We shall be on the move now continually, but until further notice our field address will be Hood River, Oregon.

In the battle for the truth,
A. M. CHASE.

HARTFORD, Mich., Oct. 26.

Editors Herald:—In this little town of about fifteen hundred inhabitants, almost every one can be religious in his own way. Here we have Methodists, Free Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptists, Disciples, Catholics, and lastly (and least in point of numbers), Latter Day Saints. Although the Saints here are not persecuted or ostracised socially for their religion, it is hard for the elders to get much of a hearing. The argument is, "Stay away from them."

Brn. Peak and Stroh have been here and given us a week of preaching, including a two-days' meeting. Although not many outsiders were present the Saints were strengthened and edified. Bro. Stroh gave us one discourse on the financial law of the church, which we hope will be the means of much good.

I am glad to be living in these times when God has restored the gospel in its pristine beauty, with its attendant blessings.

I have heard some say, "If the elders have the same power or authority that they did anciently, why don't they do the same miracles? why don't they raise the dead? and so forth. I am glad to be able to believe in the restoration of God's holy priesthood without seeing so great things, though I have known of many wonderful works by the power of God. As Saints we should all strive to so live and keep his commandments, that we may have his Spirit and be able to discern when good cometh.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,
Your sister in the gospel,
ANNA ROBERTSON.

GAYLORD, Kan., Oct. 25.

Editors Herald:—It has been some time since I last wrote the HERALD. Bro. Gurwell and others have mentioned our work occasionally, when writing, hence I did not deem it wisdom to further burden your columns.

The missionary work in Northwestern Kansas district is moving along nicely, and we believe much good is being done. Since the reunion the tent has been used at Scandia, Republic county, and Formoso, Jewell county, Kansas. The weather was unfavorable while the tent was at Scandia, and crowds were small it is said. At Formoso had good crowds most of the time, and splendid interest. Had the pleasure of baptizing two good ladies at the close of the meetings; others are near, and will, I hope, come in soon. Many friends were made to the cause. The Saints also feel strengthened and encouraged. and are making commendable efforts in the right direction. May the Lord bless them.

We loaded tent in a wagon, Bro. Ramsey kindly taking us and it twelve miles across the country to Sr. Stauffer's, where we stored tent for winter in Mr. Stauffer's (who, by the way, should be a brother indeed) large new barn, safe and secure from dampness and mice. Remained over night with them, and as there was no opening there at present we took the train at Randall, four miles southwest of Sr. Stauffer's, for Downs in Osborne county.

Arriving at Downs in the evening we walked out to Bro. Coop's, who lives two and a half miles from town, but we walked three and a half to get there. I enjoyed the walk very much—just nice exercise for me, but Bro. Gurwell did not seemingly enjoy it, especially when he learned we had gone a mile out of the way.

We commenced operations in the Baker schoolhouse, five miles southwest of Bro. Coop's, and preached sixteen sermons. Good crowds and splendid interest. Some there will no doubt obey the gospel if proper labor is bestowed in future. Many new friends were made and a good feeling prevailed among the people for us and the great latterday work. This is a splendid opening, and a good place to build up the work.

The few Saints there have, since our labor there, taken new life and are renewing their diligence in the service of the Master. I hope this will continue, and through their efforts the work be more fully established.

The Saints and friends remembered the missionaries in a financial way, for which the Lord will abundantly bless them. Contributions for Graceland were also received. If the Saints everywhere were as liberal in this regard the college debt would soon be liquidated. And so may it be. Our Graceland must be free—liberated from her present thraldom of debt, that she may move more rapidly and effectually in the educational interests of the young of the church. I expect to cast in my mite—labor and pray to this end.

Bro. Gurwell and I arrived at Gaylord the evening of the 21st. Rode with Bro. Landers, who is conductor on the local freight. He is a live man, has the interest of the work at heart. The Saints had secured the Baptist church and appointments were out, so we commenced our meetings, the writer occupying first evening. Crowds are increasing in size, and interest is good. We expect to close Sunday night, having already made arrangements to go to Edmond on Monday. Would like to stay longer, but the work ahead demands our attention, and there are local laborers here that can take care of the work. Bro. L. F. Johnson is located here, and also Bro. McClure, district president. Bro. Johnson is a son of the old Bro. Johnson who used to run the Whitesville mill near Rea, my home; he is a brother to Chris Johnson. They moved from Whitesville to Independence I believe. Bro. Johnson remembers many of the old settlers around Whitesville and Rea that I am acquainted with, and also many of the Saints at Guilford, Bedison, and Sweet Home. He is not in the missionary work this year on account of poor health, but hopes the Lord will bless him so that he may again enter the active work. So may it be.

I have also met Mr. Lewellen, brother to C. A. and J. P. at Rea. Had a pleasant visit with him. Sr. Landers came out from Stockton Wednesday, attending the meeting that evening, assisting in the song service and presiding at the organ. How good it is to meet with the Saints, and lift the voice in songs of praise to the great Jehovah. Missionaries appreciate this great privilege and blessing.

This is a very large district, and I think the division contemplated is wise. There are many more calls for preaching than we can possibly fill. Will have to labor where wisdom directs, and where the best interests of the work demand.

May the Lord's work prosper everywhere. Hoping to be faithful to the end, I am,

> Your brother in gospel bonds, Jos. C. VAUGHN.

Editors Herald:—Having recently returned from our quarterly conference and reunion, which were held in the Saints' chapel, Oakland, near Ivan, Kentucky, I thought a few items would be of some interest to those who were not in attendance, but are interested in the glorious latter-day work:

Conference convened Saturday, September 28, with Bro. D. W. Cook as president. Everything passed pleasantly. Quite a number of visiting Saints were present and all seemed to come with a desire to build up the kingdom. I don't think I ever saw a more united band of Saints.

On Monday, September 30, we organized the reunion, electing our worthy missionary in charge, Bro. I. N. Roberts, president, who gracefully and wisely performed the duties imposed upon him. Bro. C. L Snow was elected vice president, Srs. Nola Myers organist, and Eila Roberts secretary and chorister. Time and space forbid a minute rehearsal, so I will give the most important items: On Tuesday the prayer service was inspiring, every heart seemed melted to tears of rejoicing. Bro. I. N. Roberts was blessed with an open vision in which was made known to him the calling of three young men to office of elder, two of them, Brn. Henry Fields and Manson McFadden were ordained, but the other refused, waiting for more evidence. I trust it will be given.

We had preaching services at eleven a. m. every day, dinner on the ground; preaching or prayer and testimony meeting at 2:30 p. m., and preaching at 7:30.

The elders present were I. N. Roberts, W. R. Smith, M. L. Sory, D. W. Cook, C. L. Snow, and J. H. Adair. At every service the Spirit of the Master was present.

On the last Saturday, October 5, four precious souls were led into the waters of baptism by Bro. Cook. On Sunday, following, the last day of the reunion, two more noble ladies were buried with Christ by Bro. Smith.

We then repaired to the church to listen to the farewell sermon of the reunion by Bro. Smith. His theme was the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and to you who have heard him preach on that subject it is useless to say it was grand. Both good and evil spirits were present, but the evil would only make a noise in the back of the room and throw a rock on the outside, while the Spirit of God made both saint and sinner rejoice. insomuch that six young men, as the jailer of old, requested baptism at the same hour of the night. By the time we reached the large pond of Bro. Adair's it was past ten o'clock, and there under the soft light of the stars, and surrounded by artificial lights, we witnessed another scene that surely was pleasing to our heavenly Father. Let us all pray for them that they may ever be enabled to resist the temptations brought before them, for truly the Evil One is throwing out snares in which to entrap the young.

Some of the Saints had a tent on the ground and some used the church-house for a bedroom. Otherwise, the kindness and liberality of Brn. J. H. Adair and Spencer Adair and Srs. Alice McFadden, Willis and Jane Sanders, need special mention. To them we feel grateful and wish to tender them our thanks for their hospitality. We are to have a reunion next year, but the time and place are undecided, being left to a committee of five.

The kind, genial smile of Bro. T. C. Kelley was missed at this reunion, for he was president of the one we had last year. Though you are far away, Bro. T. C., you are held in loving remembrance by all the Saints in this district. Bro. Roberts, who has taken Bro. T. C.'s place in overseeing the southern mission, has done nobly. We hope to have him here again next year.

Dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers that I may ever be found faithful in discharging every duty that is enjoined upon me and that I may have better health.

Ever praying for the prosperity of Zion, I am, Your sister in Christ,

MISS ALMA E. ROBERTS.

LOUISVILLE, Ken., Oct. 26.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from a missionary tour through Kentucky and will tell you something in regard to my labors.

I held a very interesting meeting at James chapel, near Roanoke, Hardin county. I am most sure there will be a branch raised up there. I shall return there in a few days. The one that first asked me to come out there is an old Baptist lady, and she has told me that she wants to be baptized into the right church. Her husband is not a member of any church and never went to hear any preaching until I came there. He insisted that I should come back and preach for them and said I should have a home at his house, so I believe he will be baptized at the same time his wife is.

I went from that place to La Rue county where the Brighamites or Utah Mormons had ten or fifteen converts; I got them together and talked to them, laid the law down to them on the lineage question and on other points of difference. They are ignorant of the law and none of them have a copy of Doctrine and Covenants, so they would not listen. There were three families of these people over in Jeffersonville, Indiana, and they came over the river to our meetings. Among them was a well-posted man by the name of Ben Short. He told me, after having heard me preach once on the lineage and tithing question, that he was convinced we were right. I have baptized him and his wife into the Louisville branch; he is a good worker. He asked to have Bro. J. M. Scott come over and hold a meeting at his house; he had all the other Utah members there, so I think they will soon be with us

I closed a three days meeting at Athertonville last Wednesday night. When I went there the sect leaders said I should not preach in their meeting-houses. A man volunteered to furnish me his hall; he said I might use it as long as I wanted to. I held from Monday over Wednesday, and had a crowded house. A Baptist preacher held services also on Wednesday with a congregation of three, while in the hall they carried in chairs, made me stand in a very small place, and by this means they could all get inside. They insisted on me coming back, so I shall go out again in the near future. Bro. J. M. Scott remained with the work in the city while I was gone.

J. W. METCALF.

FAIRLAND, I. T., Oct. 28.

Editors Herald:—My debate with Dr. D. B. Ray, the great Baptist of the entire world, closed here Saturday night. We had large crowds, the debate lasting twelve sessions of two hours each.

D. B. Ray is mean and childish; not so hard to handle as some other men I have met. Such as S. F. Cayce, of Martin, Tennessee.

Bro. W. S. Taylor, of Sherwin Kansas, was moderator for me and did nicely, Bro. J. P. Riley acting until Bro. Taylor arrived. We had large crowds and all I've seen, or heard from, say that Ray is completely knocked out.

D. B. Ray came to Fairland and lectured against us, which resulted in the debate.

I expected to meet an able man on succession of Baptist churches, as I had heard when a boy in the state of Texas, that D. B. Ray was the ablest man on Baptist succession in the world. I could not get him to agree to abide by any translation of the Scriptures, but proposed to use any translation or the original itself.

The second day we reached Acts 2:38: "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." (Greek eise) meaning because of; but when I turned the best lexicons on him and proved it to be false, he gave it up. Next, Romans 6:18. Then not found in the original; which is true, but does not change the sense of the language. Next elder, and bishop, from the Greek episcopus, and is the same office. I showed this to be utterly false. Elder is from an entirely different word, and marked him down Greek mistake No. 1. I heard no more Greek; but he was willing to come back to the King James translation and let it be the standard.

On the first proposition we reached Baptist succession. D. B. Ray held up his book written twenty years ago, reading from that. But having met some of the ablest men on this question before, I was not alarmed by any means, and was ready for bear; opened upon him with Moshiem, volume 1, a complete apostasy by the fourth century; and by the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, not a single branch of the Christian doctrine was left; all Roman Catholics. Gieseler, the great historian, utterly grinds to powder such egotism and ignorance.

We then proceeded to show Baptist origin. The Anabaptists of Germany had no baptism save the effusion of the Roman Church. The Baptists of England none save the sprinkling of English priests. The American Baptists had none save Roger Williams, Holman, etc.-Benedict's History, 462, 463, 465, 450. To this added the testimony of Cramp, Backune, Jeter, etc. Here my opponent was about to give it up, and said, "If I can't prove it by history I can by the Bible; that is sufficient." I admitted this to be true; but the Bible is positively against such a position. I then confronted him with the latest thing out, A. H. Newman, Professor of Church History, in Toronto. American Church History, by A. H. Newman, published by Charles Scribner and Sons, New York City, page 14, says: "Not until the twelfth century can we find any churches we can call Baptist." Pages 79 and 80. Roger Williams and Ezekiel Holman baptized each other and organized the first Baptist Church in American. Introduced immersion three years before it was practiced in England. This seemed to settle Baptist succession with all intelligent people. The Doctor made a very weak attempt to prove Baptist succession, but continually rehearsed Daniel 2: 44, Matthew 16: 17, 18.

We next presented the Bible proof of the complete apostasy. Daniel 7:25; Amos 8:11; Matthew 11:12; Acts 20; 2 Thessalonians 2; Revelation 13:17, and many other places.

We reached the second proposition and the Lord blessed me with the Spirit to bring forth the unanswerable argument, to prove the marvelous work and wonder foretold by the prophets of agone times. Filth and dirt, and an attack against the battle fought in Book of Mormon and the plague of snakes; he called it snake religion.

I am feeling well and preaching here to Saints and friends.

WILBER, Neb., Oct. 28.

Editors Herald:—I am sorry to inform you that Bro. H. W. Belville, last year a missionary in Northern Nebraska, was stricken by lightning and instantly killed, at his home about one half mile south of Hebron, Nebraska, Friday evening, October 25. He left the house during a severe electrical storm, and went to the barn to look after things; failing to return in reasonable time Sr. Edith (his wife) went out to seek him, and found him dead between the house and barn.

A message was sent to the writer to hasten there but failed to reach him at the time specified, so we have nothing more definite; but what we have has cast a gloom over all the Saints. Bro. Belville was favorably known to all of us at Wilber.

Your brother in Christ,

Editors Herald:—We are still in the faith,

Editors Herald:—We are still in the faith, and desire to continue until the Lord shall say, "Time is for thee no more."

We are trying to warn our neighbors, as we are commanded in Doctrine and Covenants, and we think we have succeeded in convincing two or three.

The people around us have but little interest in religion; we are therefore anxious to sell what we have in this country and go into Zion's land, there to settle and remain during our life upon earth.

Saints, remember us in your prayers, that we may ever be faithful, never turning back. If we should turn away from this work where could we go?

May the Lord bless his people and hasten his work.

J. W. WILLIAMS.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Oct. 28.

Dear Herald:—I find in perusing your pages there is much to learn which is very encouraging to one that has no church to go to.

We have been blessed with Elder J. R. Sutton in our midst, who has held forth for two weeks at our house with fair attendances; baptized two, my sister Della Brown, and my daughter Lulu Dulin, both young ladies. We have enjoyed these meetings very much, being blessed with the spirit of peace and unity. Your sister in bonds.

LOVINA DULIN.

OSTERDOCK, Iowa, Nov. 31.

Editors Herald:—I opened a new place some three or four miles west of this town. I will stay over next Sunday, which will make three Sundays for that place. The attendance is very good, and some nights the schoolhouse is filled. Some are investigating, some are finding fault, and some have threatened to use their strongest argument—eggs, to uphold their side of the question. What the harvest will be remains to be seen. Still in the conflict,

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Oct 30.

Editors Herald:-I would like to tell the Saints and friends of our condition in St. Joseph. I have been here almost three years, and if I am not greatly mistaken the branch is in much better condition than when I came here. I would not attempt to say what the reasons are; only one will I mention. that we have been united as a body in supporting Bro. William Lewis as president, and by his kindly and very modest demeanor and influence I think we have been benefitted. But he is gone now, and a good many of the Saints feel as if their father had gone. He left to-day over the Maple Leaf for Chicago with his wife and little daughter Ruth with him. Also Bro. Frank Price accompanied

Bro. and Sr. Lewis were very agreeably surprised on Monday evening, the Saints meeting at the church and preparing refreshments. Bro. Carl Kinnaman made some excuse and conducted them to the church, where about two hundred Saints had gathered, and the evening was spent in singing and partaking of the refreshments. An excellent feeling prevailed. As Bro. Lewis expressed it, "It will be a green spot in my memory." I think there were many there who felt the same.

On Sunday night he preached to a crowded house; every available seat was taken, and a number were standing. The effort was, I think, the best that he has made since he was elected. May God bless him and increase his usefulness.

We certainly have sustained a great loss; however, I believe the Saints here are desirous and anxious to continue the peace and good fellowship which now prevail. It is seldom that any faultfinding is indulged in; at least I hear very little of it. When I came here I found it on every hand. I am hoping and praying for the success of this work.

In bonds,

C. E. GUINAND.

ACORN RIDGE, Mo., Oct. 26.

Dear Herald:—After dining, one often expresses himself as having enjoyed the meal; so after having read a number of HERALDS, by which my spiritual strength has been renewed, I wish to express my thanks to the writers of the articles and the letters appearing from time to time in your columns. The historical lectures given by Apostle Heman C. Smith are truly encouraging to the Saints, and contain much valuable information for the seeker after truth.

The continued article entitled "Precious Pearls gathered from the depths of the Book of Mormon," by Bro. William Hawkins, is enjoyable. The account of the debate held at Davis City between Bro. Elvin and Mr. Ellmore as reported by Bro. J. C. Clapp is very instructive. An account of the debate held by Bro. Joseph Ward and Binum Black at Williford, Arkansas, was also interesting to the writer.

I believe these letters and articles are written by a degree of inspiration. By reading the Bible we see what the church did anciently. By reading the HERALD we see what the church is doing now. 'Tis not enough for us to know what the church did anciently, but we must know what it is doing now.

By the way, I must say I believe Bro. Robert Elvin is doing his duty in writing often about the college, and the debt that should be paid. It seems to me that the payment of the debt on Graceland College is one of the main things to be done by us as a people. It is not a question as to whether we should or should not have built the college, but it's our duty to pay the debt; let's do it. As to our own beloved mission in southeastern Missouri, I will say: Recently we had an egg thrown at us while in the stand, but the citizens went to work right, manifested their desire for law and order, and now the egg thrower is lodged in the county jail for disturbing public worship. That's not all, for we are gaining friends and favor with the people. Some are believing, but when they are going to be baptized I can't tell.

I am trying to learn my duty as a minister, as a member of the church of Christ, and as a citizen of the state. I've no complaint to make for lack of work, but find plenty to do, and I want to do it well.

"O for a faith that will not shrink."

C. J. SPURLOCK.

OWENDALE, Mich., Oct. 31.

Editors Herald:—Last Sunday, the 27th, I led four more down into the waters of baptism. Since coming to this place I have done quite a work; some who were very prejudiced against the work are now in favor, and some of them are in the work. I am still working away, doing what I can to build up the kingdom of God.

Some who have come into the work here will, if faithful, do a grand work for the Master. One man, Bro. B. F. Parker, is ordained to the office of priest. Now his wife, one son, and daughter are baptized. Bro. Cornish will be pleased to learn this. Have baptized seventeen during the summer so far.

Bro. Goodwin has organized a Religio here, and I guess the young people are going to work in earnest. May God be with them to help them do good.

I suppose these few lines will help out those who are looking for a line from Bro. Smith, so they will know he is still living and contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints.

In bonds,

F. C. SMITH.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, Oct. 29.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference held here on the 5th and 6th inst. was very satisfactory. There was a large representation present, and the business was transacted in the main with unanimity of sentiment. Of the general ministry, Brn. A. H. Parsons, D. Allen, F. J. Ebeling, F. G. Pitt, R. Baldwin, H. C. Smith, and S. F. Cushman were present. The weather was fine, the meetings were well attended, and all present seemed to enjoy the bracing atmosphere, the social feeling, the preaching and prayer services.

The Bishop's agent report showed up well, that Saints in the main had not forgotten the financial part of the work, and that Bro. Miller had not been idle.

Bro. and Sr. Pitt were extra, coming from another district, but they received a hearty welcome, and Bro. Pitt, as usual, rendered excellent service as an "all around" helper.

The Saints returned home helped and comforted by the meetings. The worst feature, Bro. A. H. Parsons returned home to Independence, Missouri, immediately after conference, with a doubt in his mind as to his being able to return to this field again this winter. Our laborers are too few already, and this makes a big gap to be closed up by some one. However, taken as a whole, there are hopeful signs for success in the Kirtland district.

There's never a rose in all the world
But makes some green spray sweeter;
There's never a wind in all the sky
But makes some bird wing fleeter;
There's never a star but brings to heaven
Some silver radiance tender;
And never a rosy cloud but helps
To crown the sunset splendor;
No robin but may thrill some heart,
His dawn like gladness voicing:

DESPAIR NOT.

Does life seem weary, labors hard,
And efforts all in vain?
Toil on, oh Soul, with purpose true,
Through pleasure or through pain.
The God of All has placed us here
"To wrestle, not to reign."

And slacken not thy arduous toil, Give no place to regrets, But seek ye first the throne of God For strength, which faith begets; And dews of Christian fortitude, "To wear as amulets."

WHAT I THINK.

I have read much in the different church papers about lying, stealing, etc., but seldom read of misbehavior in church or going to play parties.

Now I have been at church when there were some that made so much noise it was difficult to hear the speaker at all. I think the young, as well as the old, should listen to the speaker, and learn of the higher life, instead of laughing and talking, and then, too, it is very bad manners. Not one of us would think of such a thing in conversation as to keep talking when some one was talking to us.

I have known young Saints to come to Zion's Religio-Literary Society not knowing their lessons, sit and talk about some parties they had been to during the week, and not pay any attention to the lesson whatever. When asked why they did not have their lesson they would say they did not have time, as they had to study their day school lessons at night; but they had found time to go to parties at night.

Now I think it desirable to have a good education, but should we not be educated in heavenly things as well as things of this world? I think so?

A SISTER.

ALPENA, Michigan.

Dear Home Column:—"You can make whatever you will of life; you can have the thing you desire." Can I do this is the question? Desiring would never bring it about. It is plain that the desire is the force that causes the action. My daughter is merging into womanhood. There is the irritable temper, the tendency toward wilfulness, and the insubordination threatened if I oppose anything on which she has set her heart, and yet these are so often the things in which I dare not let her have her way. I have not for months been free from care and anxious thought. This girl in her young womanhood, or in the flower of her girlhood, is treading on the very brink of a precipice. Will I be able to save her? The question is, Can I have the thing I desire? Those words, oh, how they echo in my ears, and from the very depth of my heart I say, Can I save her? can I have the thing I desire? O I wish they were true, and that I dare believe them! Listen to the words contained in the sacred book: "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." O, my heavenly Father, help me to believe and to put in force and action and to have that faith that will take no denial; that I may have sufficient instructions to persuade her to keep away from evil associations.

May the Lord preserve our youth from every evil, and that an answer to our prayers may be hastened let us supplement them with a persistent purpose inasmuch as the Evil One is continually on the alert to lead the young astray.

Can I have the thing I desire? But faith is not only the principle of action but of power in all intelligent beings, and that when God would undertake to raise up men for his service he would teach them the necessity of living by faith, and the impossibility there was of their enjoying the blessedness of eternity without the aid of faith. So it is a mother's duty to contend for that faith, that it will influence her children by its power, to render obedience, and also to watch and pray over them. There is so much responsibility resting on a mother.

Many, if not all mothers, will freely admit that if life reveals to us any one of its secrets it is surely that we are placed in this world for the formation and development of character; such a character as shall fit us for usefulness, because usefulness is the key to open the door into the hall of happiness. Recall then one by one the strong appeals made upon the heart of every one who becomes a parent; to the development of those very characteristics which assimilate us with Christ our living head. Let each mother recall and mention the fountains unlocked in her soul by baby fingers, the lesson taught her by her little ones, of whom Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Wishing an interest in your prayers, ELIZA A. LESTER.

Dear Column:—It has been so long since I wrote that some may think I am dead. I have been doing what I could in my way to help the church. I love the church more all the time, but other things besides writing have had my attention. Since writing last I have had many trials and troubles, also many testimonies. I am satisfied and have assurance that the Lord is merciful and kind to me, and is willing to bless. He is blessing me in many ways.

I am one of the little members, considered by some few (whose trials are in the future) to be worthless. No one should think less of another because his trials or troubles are different from their own or for the reason that they themselves have none. No one ought to think he can go to heaven on flowery beds of ease, while others fight to win the prize. The latter-day work is intrusted to us all and we each have something to do. If we are not called to preach the free and restored gospel to the world we can invite people to come to hear those who are called to preach, and we are to hold up their hands by our faith and prayers, pay our tithing, and do other work; keep the commandments, and put our trust in our heavenly Father. I have found it impossible to please all, so I made up my mind to do right, let others do as they would.

My patriarchal blessing was a good and grand thing, and it gave me renewed courage. It said I was "of Ephraim, and shall be recognized as a child of God." This is equivalent to saying that I had not been so recognized by some. I am thankful that this promise is being fulfilled to me to some extent. It was last February that I got my blessing.

I will tell you another thing about how good the Lord was to me last summer. I was holding a bad horse from running away, got my arm hurt on the muscle, had an ulcer five inches by five in size. I suffered badly, was administered to, and received some benefit. I lost six months from work. The last time the doctor operated upon it he said, "It will take it a year to get well." I went to church and was administered to by Bro. R. Etzenhouser and others, and got well and sound in two months, after the doctor said a year.

I don't know what I am living for, unless it is to help the church and loved ones. You will say to "love all." Yes, it was preached in our reunion to "love all, but not love all alike." I will let this question rest with you to write about.

The reunion at Bushrod Park, Oakland, California, had been in session five days when I got there, and the remaining five days were a grand good time. My prayers before it commenced, that unity and the Spirit of Ged might be there, were pretty well answered, and three were baptized, this also answering the prayers of many. I met many dear brothers and sisters that had known me for twenty five years, and to multiply my joy and happiness, Brethren Joseph and Alexander Smith were there. The gifts of tongues, interpretation, prophecy, songs, faith, and brotherly love were manifest. We bought the big tent at one hundred dollars and adjourned to meet at San Jose, Cali-

I then went to see San Francisco as I had never been there. It is a great city for business. As I rode up Market street on the cars there were thousands of finely dressed people hurrying to and fro. I went on to Golden Gate Park. This is a beautiful park four and one half miles long. I had no time to go balf way through, but returned and stopped for the night at the Winchester Hotel. Next morning I went to see the Cliff House, which is well named, but more to see the great salt waters. Some of my readers have not seen the sea. I only saw it once before; that was in 1870, at the Anaheim Landing, Orange county. It is nothing nice from the Cliff House and other points. It is only a large amount of dirty, angry looking water, terribly agitated; the waves running towards the shore rising higher and higher till they fall, creating a great many white sparkles, while others dash against the dark and ugly rocks, and the many drops are thrown high in the air and fall back into the water; then running back they are met by other large waves that overwhelm it. The only pretty thing I could see was the white sparks of water as they fall, and the sand upon the seashore. It is very fine sand, and there is no end to it. I wanted to taste the water to see the amount of salt in it and in trying to get a handful of water I got my shoes full also. It is full of salt and tastes very badly.

I began to think how good the Lord is when he has declared that the time shall come when there "shall be no more sea." (Rev. 21:1) And I thought how good and wise he is to destroy such a dirty and bad looking lot of water; and the fine sand and no end to it caused me to wonder at the declaration that the people of the nations of the earth shall be as the sand upon the seashore for numbers." (Rev. 20:8) Then I remembered that our great city is but a handful of the human creation of God, and I hurried back to see the large steamships from Oregon and other places; they were interesting to me, and I found I only had time to catch the train for Sacramento.

About the only grief I had either at the reunion or my visit to San Francisco was that I was alone; none of my beloved relatives with me. Your friend and brother.

PRIMARY TEACHING.

It is not my purpose in this brief paper to bring forth anything new or startling in this particular line of Sunday school work; for well I know it has been discussed from every side of the question, and the noble instruction and careful training received from time to time through the different channels devised for this purpose, make the work of the primary teacher comparatively easy.

Primary departments require perhaps a greater amount of CAREFUL STUDY AND EARNEST ENDEAVOR than any other part in the great arena of the Sunday school. The work of the primary teachers requires skill and patience as well as a thorough understanding of the work intrusted to their care. Child nature must be one of their first studies and a knowledge of the individual dispositions of their pupils. To do this they must watch carefully the maneuvering of each child, and when once they understand the child, they will be able to form plans for its particular advancement. It may take weeks of earnest, patient effort to learn just how to manage one child, but when once done, you feel tenfold repaid in the happy consciousness of a "battle fought, a noble victory won."

In every child there is somewhere

which if properly struck, will awaken in the little one new thoughts, new ideas, and will bring the little mind in touch with the teachings of Christ and create a desire for good, a thirst for knowledge hitherto unknown, undeveloped. To teach children successfully one must feel with each pupil and he with you. I have heard people say, who ought to know better, "It is not good for a teacher to be too well acquainted with his pupils," urging that they lose control, etc. No more serious mistake can be made. You can no more become too well acquainted with your class than a mother with her child. It is absolutely necessary in successful teaching. The true-hearted teacher develops with her primary class as readily as though she were teaching a higher grade. The sublime lessons taught by the meek and lowly Jesus can be just as easily learned when telling them to the little ones of his fold as by discussing it with the older ones, if we only keep in harmony with his divine injunction, "Search the Scriptures."

WELL ACQUAINTED

The primaries will soon be the intermediates, the intermediates the seniors, and it is in the primary department the

for future work is begun. System must prevail in the primary department, and order is an absolute requirement. Every teacher has his own rules to work by and right here let me tell you something of

MY PLAN.

When I go to class I always let the children get properly seated, handkerchiefs, hats, muffs, etc., adjusted, and everybody looking out for "next." Then usually we take up our collection, every one being informed just how many pennies there are. A penny requires a great deal of care if left in the hands of its little owner, as every primary teacher will testify.

After this we find before opening the Quarterly how many know the golden text and subject of the lesson. When this is done we open the Quarterly, and if all have not learned the golden text we have them do so and endeavor to have them able to recite it in concert.

We then proceed to the lesson story. According to the wishes of the class I am teaching, we read the lesson over, each one reading in turn. Previous to this I ask what the lesson is about, and you will in this way learn who has prepared the lesson at home.

In our school we have lately adopted the plan of each month and the star scholar of the month is the next month placed at the head of the class.

We read the first paragraph and then I ask what we have learned in this. After gleaning the thought conveyed in this we proceed to the next. They seem to grasp the thoughts more readily by this means than to read it all over before reviewing.

After we have finished reading we talk a little about the lesson and then have them close the Quarterly and I ask them the questions, being careful to cover the whole ground of the lessons. I do not confine myself to the questions in the Quarterly. Sometimes I leave some out, but more often add to the list. Neither do I confine myself to the lesson alone. If some one has a little story to tell I allow him to do so, if possible applying it to the lesson or bringing out some other moral point. Let the children lead out. Find the mood they are in, and fall in with them as much as possible without departing from the original idea of the lesson. By illustration and story is nearly always the best way to teach children.

We have usually covered the ground of the lesson before treasurer or librarian approaches. If not, we stop and give our collection. Of course it takes but a moment to give in our books, re register, or order another, as the case may be. After this if we have learned our lesson well we usually get a Hope and read something to the children, the Christmas offering adding a new charm just now.

Before the general review I ask again for the golden text and lesson subject, and I find how many have looked up the Bible question given the previous Sabbath to be answered to-day, and when the bell taps we feel pretty well prepared for the review work.

This is of course a simple outline of our class work. Primary classes where children can not read, the better plan is to tell them the story. To read it to them requires your eyes on the paper which is a ### DANGEROUS PLAN.

They should always be on the little group around you. It holds the attention of the little ones and you can teach them with much greater success by being thoroughly conversant with the lesson yourself and telling it to them as a story.

Teachers must of course use their own methods of entertaining. Most of all, give plenty of time. Do not hurry the children. Give them time to think and form words and sentences. Avoid formality. Ease and freedom are indispensable in a well-regulated class.

Discouragements arise in the path of the primary teacher, strange to relate. Ofttimes they feel discouraged over perhaps "little things." But did you ever stop to think that after all "'tis the little things that sting."

Occasionally speak a word of kindly encouragement or commendation to the primary teacher. Don't fear of making him vain. I am a primary teacher and know whereof I speak.

And, primary teachers, yes, and intermediate and seniors, do not become discouraged. Trudge on.

"Little drops of water, Little grains of sand, Make the mighty ocean And the pleasant land." And if you do not see the fruits of your labor at once, or if you sometimes think your efforts are not appreciated, remember to "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days."

After completing an organization and disposing of routine business, ministerial reports from the following brethren were read: E. A. Sted-man, F. A. Russell, D. S. Holmes, J. S. Patterson, O. H. Bailey, C. J. Clark, C. L. Holmes, and John Chisnall. The district secretary gave a report of her efforts to trace missing reports; also stated that the district records were in a very bad condition. Report was accepted and motion made and carried that the secretaries of the various branches be requested to forward branch records to the district secretary, in order that a comparison of branch and district records might be made and the district records corrected to correspond with the branch records. (Secretaries please take note.) Bro. F. A. Russell, in behalf of the tent committee, gave an itemized statement of the moneys received into and paid out of the tent fund. The report showed all expenses paid and a balance on hand of sixty-three cents. Report was accepted and committee discharged. The Kewanee delegates presented a request asking the conference to consider the advisability of having two conferences a year instead of three. After a lengthy discussion, pro and con, it was decided to refer the re-After a lengthy discussion, quest to the several branches for their consideration, reports to be made at the next conference. (Please take note of this also.) Saturday evening and Sunday were devoted to preaching and prayer services, which were held in the tent at Davenport, Iowa, just across the river from Rock Island. Russell and Bailey having been holding a series of meetings in Davenport and succeeding in arousing considerable interest, it was thought best to transfer the devotional meetings of the conference to that place. It was very pleasant and peaceful conference throughout, and was apparently enjoyed by all. At 9: 30 Sunday evening conference adjourned to meet at Kewanee. ### GRACELAND COLLEGE.

Dear Saints:-We of the Northwestern Kansas district are called upon to bear our part of the burden of liquidating the Graceland College debt. I have conferred with the Bishop's agent, Bro. Arthur Smith. He is heartily in accord with the movement and has appointed a man in his part of the district to solicit for Graceland, and I appeal to all scattered members to cast in your mite that we may all bear the burden together in executing God's will.

We as Latter Day Saints (the church) do as God intends; viz., ask him when we are in doubt. A few years ago we were in doubt about the Sabbath question. The Lord soon decided it for us. (Read D. C. 119: 7.) Again we were at one time disputing about the time of administering sacrament, we acted like Saints and asked God what about it. He decided the matter. (See D. C. 119:5.) We were also troubled about the musical instrument being used in the congregations of the Saints. Again the Lord settled the question (D. C. 119:6), as also organizations of quorums, laws for governing branches, districts, and every question arising in the church. Where there is need of light, the Lord gives it at the proper time, and thus we "are the light of the world."

As the body ordered the college built, the law provides for majority rule. All, or nearly all, of the districts were no doubt repnearly all, of the districts were no doubt represented by delegates when the decision was made to build the college. Now honor says, "Pay the debt." Yet we were not all satisfied about it, and we acted like Saints and asked the Lord about it. The answer, "The college debt should be paid," is in harmony with God's law, and no Saint need be troubled about it. But as a test we can say, "Who is on the Lord's side?" and it will be demonstrated by our acts in this the time of need.

If you have the means, we are as willing to receive five hundred dollars as five cents, and as our district fund is known as the "Every name Graceland fund," we hope to have every member's name enrolled in a few days,

Saints of the district, you have done nobly in donating for the tent. The tent is paid for, and I find but two or three who are opposed to the college, and, brethren, you consider and be converted, that unity may prevail throughout the district.

Your brother, L. G. GURWELL.

WE have word from Bro. J. B. Roush in which he says that the condition of Bro. C. R Duncan's health is so much improved that he is up and around some. We are glad to hear this.

WE have long since reached the conclusion that age and experience do not always give wisdom; i. e., that the passing of years and the engaging in the affairs of life do not of necessity bring to the average man the power to rightly use knowledge. Why this is we do not know; we are only interested in the fact. We believe, however, that it results largely from a failure to appreciate the importance of events, and give them due thought as to their effect on life.

APPARENT DISCREPANCIES.

We have received the following from a brother in the field, which we publish with our understanding of the matters inquired of as we see them:

1. Matthew 27: 56, 57, Inspired Translation, seems to make it appear that the "bodies of the saints which slept arose" at the time of the crucifixion of Christ, and not after his resurrection, as in the King James Transla-tion. How do you reconcile this with Paul's statement, Acts 26: 23; that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, etc.; and with I Corinthians 15: 20, where it is said that Christ, being risen from the dead, became "the firstfruits of them that slept?"

2 In the Inspired Translation there is the same discrepancy between 1 Kings 5: 16 and 2 Chronicles 2: 2, as in the King James Version. One says the number of men sent by Solomon to oversee the workmen who were sent to prepare material for the temple was three thousand three hundred; the other says three thousand six hundred,—a difference of three hundred. Is this a typographical error, or can you explain it otherwise?

1. We have always understood that the account of the occurrence as given in Matthew was in effect that at the commotion in the physical world at the crucifixion of Jesus there was more or less of disturbance in the earth's surface, and that while this was taking place the graves of many of the Saints were opened and the occupants of them came out, gathered themselves together, and at the resurrection of Jesus came into the city and were seen of many. The latest revision of the scriptures has the passage in this form.

And behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake; and the rocks were rent; and the tombs were opened; and many bodies of the saints that had fallen asleep were raised; and coming forth out of the tombs after his resurrection they entered into the holy city and appeared unto many.-R. V., Matt. 27:51-54.

We incline to the belief that the resurrection of the Saints referred to occurred as stated by both the King James Version and the Holy Scriptures, at the general cataclysm that occurred at the death of Jesus; but that the appearance in the holy city was after the resurrection of Jesus.

The only apparent difference seems to be that the one places the coming out of the grave and the going into the city as taking place together; while the other allows for an interval of time between the disturbance in the physical world, including the opening of the graves, and the going into the city. To us the latter is the death at the rending of the veil, were better understanding; and permits the idea of a communication between Christ in the spirit and the Saints before the coming forth of Jesus from the tomb.

Nor does this idea detract from the statement that Christ should be the first that should rise from the dead, according to Paul, Acts 26:23. For certainly he was the first, decidedly, to whom any power over death and the grave had been given. Nor would we think it competent to correct a historical statement of Matthew by a statement of opinion by Paul, as given by Luke. It is noticeable that while both Mark and Luke in their Gospels make mention of the fact of the disturbance in the physical world, neither states anything about the rising of the Saints at that time. These note the period of darkness over the earth, the rending of the veil of the temple, but not the opening of the graves. The same relation is found in the Holy Scriptures, the King James version, and also the late revision.

The rising of Jesus was in quite another fashion. He had laid in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, and a watch set over the tomb by the governor, at the solicitation of the Jewish priests, who in their contention against Jesus, urged that if this were not done the disciples would steal the body away and hide it; then get some one of their number to impersonate Jesus and by this means deceive the disciples as a body and claim his resurrection. But the guard was overpowered by sleep, the seal was broken, the rock rolled away, the sepulcher opened, the graveclothes folded, and the occupant of the tomb gone, all in a quiet way and in the early hours of the morning.

It must have been that those risen saints came into the city and appeared to many of the brethren, possibly to some others, which is not likely how-

Christ was even in this display the first to be seen and known of his disciples, and by his coming forth had won the right to be accounted "the firstfruits of them that slept." was first in this as he was first among many brethren, first in the priesthood, first with the Father, first in all that constituted him as the Son of God.

Those who rose at the time of his his at his rising, as those who shall rise at his second coming will be "his at his coming;" and their rising was but a part of the whole plan of procedure.

If the cataclysm had occurred after the body of Jesus had lain in the grave for its allotted time, and upon the rising of that body, it would hardly have been needful for the angels to roll the rock away; this would have been done by the action of the earthquake, and the second testimony to the fact that he was the Son of God, to wit; his resurrection in the manner it occurred would have been lost to the world. The first at the time was the rending of the veil, the seismic disturbance of the earth's surface, the rending of the rocks and the rising of the saints, all as stated.

We see no difficulty in so understanding the matter.

2. As to the matter of difference between the statements in 1 Kings 5:15, and 2 Chronicles 2:2, all we can say is that the passages so occur in the King James Version, the Holy Scriptures, and the Revised Version alike: so we have not grounds for saving that it is a typographical error. It would appear that the passage is given as it was in the original, and was the mistake of the writers of the original. We would not pretend to say which is the correct number. It has been written alike by all of the translators.

AN ACT OF PROMISED JUSTICE.

In the November, 1901, copy of Improvement Era, a journal published for the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, in Utah, we notice a republication of the first three chapters of Mother Lucy Smith's work, "Joseph Smith the Prophet." It is stated in the introduction, written by Pres. Joseph F. Smith, one of the editors of the magazine, that it is to be published from a carefully revised and corrected manuscript of the original work as written at the dictation of Mother Smith and published in Liver-pool, England, by Elder Orson Pratt, and put in circulation by him; which edition was not pleasing to Pres. Brigham Young, and was at his discretion "suppressed or destroyed." This revision and correction it is stated was made by Pres. George H. Smith and Judge Elias Smith, and the manuscript left in the hands of Pres. Joseph F. Smith, who now proposes to publish it.

It is a long time to wait before publishing a purported correction of alleged errors, after the principal persons involved in the narrative are all dead. Grandmother Lucy died forty-six years ago. Both George A. and Elias Smith, the revisers, are dead, and we are not sure but that Mrs. Corey, the amanueusis of Grandmother Smith, who wrote the work from the dictation of its author, is dead.

We shall be interested to see and note what the alleged errors which have been corrected are like.

UTAH IN JAPAN.

Heber J. Grant, an apostle of the Utah church, with a corps of elders, is in Japan intent upon missionary purposes. The Literary Digest for October 19, page 470, has this about it, under the caption of "The Mormon Propaganda in Japan."

Heber J. Grant, of the Church of Latter Day Saints, who is now in Yokohama, late last August issued a manifesto to the inhabitants of Japan from which the Springfield Republican (September 21) quotes this extract: "By His authority we turn the divine key which opens the kingdom of heaven to the inhabitants of Japan. We say to them all, come to the light which has been shed forth from the sun of righteousness! We offer you blessings that are beyond price. . . . We bring to you the truth in all its effulgence, direct from the great Luminary of the

The Republican states that this is the first Mormon invasion of the Oriental field, and thinks that the reception given the new apostles by the Japanese is a matter of general interest. It says:

"Missionary Grant and his associates from Salt Lake City will find the most ample tol-eration for all religions in that pagan land, although the other Christian missionaries refused to permit them to live in the same boarding-house with themselves in Yoko-hama. The Japanese will give them a rehama. The Japanese will give them a respectful hearing, if only because of their insatiable curiosity,' as the Japan Weekly Advertiser expresses it. Of the outcome, however, what may be expected? In this connection the editor of the Advertiser, who is evidently an Englishman of somewhat extended residence in Japan, pronounces the opinion that the Japanese people will care just about as much for the theological doctrines of the new sect as they do for those of the old ones whose teachers have already in-vaded the land.' The people will closely watch the personal character of the newest missionaries, 'and the new faith will be judged entirely by its practical fruits.' But, 'apart from this, when the question is raised whether Mormonism is to bring about a revolution in the religious thought of Japan, the means for accomplishing such an object are perhaps more ludicrously inadequate than any which have ever been tried by foreign propagandists.' A people which has failed thus far to be much impressed with the dignified supernatural substructure of Christianity will be likely to be interested, yet at the same time immensely amused, by the supernatural claims of a religion that rests upon the curious adventures of Joseph Smith with a hole in the ground, in the State of New York, early in the last cen-

A further difficulty in the way of the promulgation of Mormon belief in Japan is indicated in the following, taken from the Japan Weekly Mail (August 31):
"An official of the Department of Home

Affairs has been interviewed for the purpose of ascertaining officialdom's views as to the propriety of allowing the propagandism of Mormon doctrines in this country. The answer elicited was circumspect. Its gist was that the Mormon missionaries had not yet taken the steps prescribed by law for persons desiring to establish a place of worship or expound a creed, and that if they attempted to do either the one thing or the other without satisfying the requirements of the regulations, it would of course be necessary for the authorities to interfere. On the other hand, when they make application, steps will be taken to ascertain whether their doctrines are likely to prove inimical to the preservation of good order and public morality. If they can satisfy the authorities on those points, they will have a constitutional right to preach their creed. The interviewed official added that according to what he knew, the Mormons no longer preached polygamy, but that they still practised it."

"THE ONLY WAY TO BE SAVED."

In the year 1851 the late president of the Utah Mormon Church, Lorenzo Snow, at that time "missionary from America, and president of the Italian. Swiss, and East Indian missions." wrote and published in London, England, a pamphlet, or tract, bearing this title: "The Only Way to be Saved." Under this title on the titlepage occurs this quotation: "The wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein."

The title is used as a running head to each page of the tract. At the close Elder Snow bore his testimony that the angel of Revelation 14: 3, 6, had been sent with the proclamation of "the fullness of the everlasting

In the Editor's Table department of the Improvement Era for November, 1901, writing of President Snow, the editor gives a short sketch of his life: in which this occurs:

In 1836, he was baptized into the church, and in the following year he began his ministerial career. Three years later, he went with Parley P. Pratt to Europe on his first mission, and while in England published a religious pamphlet, "The Only Way to Be Saved," a work that has served to familiarize more people, in more languages, with the first principles of the gospel, than any other publication of the kind ever written, and through which, though dead, he will continue to bear his testimony to the nations.

This tract contains no teaching nor hint of plural marriage, and was published a year prior to the publishing of the dogma of polygamy in Utah, August 29, 1852.

Which testimony will stand?

SAN FRANCISCO SETTLED.

The strike between the Teamsters' Association, of San Francisco, California, and the Draymen's Association, which was in progress while the editor of the HERALD was in that city last September, and which lasted some three months, and finally involved a number of other trades unions, was settled through the ef-forts of Governor Gage to bring about a settlement by agreement between the contestants, which effort was successful. And now, by a copy of the Examiner, for October 3, we notice that a commercial and industrial peace is established, which the Examiner thinks will be permanent.

We thank the brother who kindly sent us the Examiner, and apologize for this late notice, but we have just reached the paper through the pile of matter awaiting us on our return

It is likely that the city of San Francisco may become an object lesson for the labor union cause, not long hence. The labor unionists have elected the mayor in the late municipal election.

Things looked rather threatening and discouraging for the prosperity of the city and the state during our stay there, by reason of the strike; and we note with pleasure the settlement of the conflict, and trust the Examiner's hope that it is a permanent adjustment of the matters in contest will be duly realized.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Editor Saints' Herald:—"Build upon my rock, which is my gospel," is the command of the Savior to Bro. Hyrum Smith. (Doctrine and Covenants 10: 11.) Waile Bro. M. R. Scott, Sn, in SAINTS' HERALD of August 14, positively affirms that Christ is that rock instead of the gospel or revelation. Who is correct, Christ or Bro. Scott?

Please answer through the SAINTS' HER-

ALD, and oblige,

Yours for truth and consistency, CARL W. LANGE.

Bro. Lange mistakes the tenor of Bro. M. R. Scott's article. The question of Bro. Scott's article is, What is the rock referred to in the citation, "and upon this rock I will build my church;" and he rightly concludes that it is not the method of the revelation, but the thing revealed that is meant.

Besides this, Bro. Scott concludes his article thus:

But the electricity is not the message; neither is revelation (the means used to communicate) the rock; therefore the church is not built on revelation (the method of communicating), but on the Christ revealed, Christ the rock.

It is Christ in both instances, the one in Matthew 16: 13-20, and section 10, paragraph 11, Doctrine and Covenants.

A NEW REVISION OF THE BIBLE.

The Business Manager, Bro. John Smith, laid on the Editor's desk the other day a copy of the Revised Edition of the Bible, in which the American renderings are given in the texts, with an appendix in which the English preferred renderings are put into an appendix, so that the reader may see and make his choice.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

SOLILOQUY OF SATAN.

Heigh-ho! Try as I will to hinder, the kingdom of God is advancing. The leaven is working wherever it gets in contact with the meal. That is it. If I only could keep the leaven from being mixed with the meal! But these people who know that Joseph Smith is indeed a true prophet of God, sent in these latter days, with a pure and unadulterated, and fresh supply of the leaven of the everlasting gospel, these people I say, are so bent on getting the world to throw away their old leaven, with which I have mixed my narcotics and stupefying mixtures, spiced with such pleasant and piquant flavors, so as to destroy their taste for the simple, unadulterated bread of life, and they are so active in their efforts, they keep me ever on the alert.

It is "quite the thing" now to profess faith in Christ. It is even popular to join a church and pose as a Christian since I have got the churches to drink so deeply of the wine of worldliness, which I have drugged with my narcotic that puts them to sleep so that they do not hear the call of the gospel, or if hearing, so stupefies them that they can not sense the true situation of things. Then my soothing syrup, which I have got the great D. D.'s to administer to those whose consciences are troubled, has such a pleasant effect that many are induced to partake of science is lulled to rest and often put to sleep beyond waking.

That soothing syrup is a wonderful compound. About all the orthodox doctors use it now. Main ingredients: a faith in God's mercy, with which I have mixed indifference to truth, carelessness as to the gospel requirements, ignorance of the true meaning of the word, over-confidence in their manmade creeds, and blind obedience to their teachers, whom they have chosen for themselves rather than those who were sent of God. Also a belief that the name on a church book is all that is required to become a Christian, and that obedience to the gospel law is not required now, or is of small importance. These, well sweetened with the honey of flattery, spiced with compliments, and garnished with smiles and congratulations, and handshakes, etc., after having been well simmered over the fires of an artificial zeal, kept burning through a "protracted effort," and called a revival of religion. (I don't know why, as I see but very little religion in it.) Taken according to the directions given by these man-sent and man-taught doctors, this never fails to have the desired effect.

But these Latter Day Saints somehow have gotten into the secret of my plans, through God's sending them this latter-day prophet, and they are always warning people against me and my remedies. My hardest task in trying to keep the kingdom of God from advancing, is to keep the people from accepting this latter-day prophet and the revelations God has given through him. Although I tried all my powers upon him, I never accomplished his downfall until the work he was sent to do was accomplished. which work was to clean the old paths of the rubbish that had been accumulating through the centuries, thrown there by my friends and allies. This rubbish, man made creeds, dogmas, traditions, ceremonies, and "private interpretations" of the scriptures, so covered and filled up the old paths that they could not be found. Here and there some who could not accept all these things have tried to go around, or to find a way through them, but failing to find the old path after all, have beaten out a path for themselves, and gone into the wilderness of uncertainty; finally, finding others were following them, they even decide that theirs must be the old path indeed.

But along comes this prophet, and with the blade of truth he cuts his way through these obstructions, and waving the shining weapon aloft, shouts with a cry that rings, down the years and across the continents, "This is the way! Walk ye in it, and ye shall find rest to your souls." And with a "Thus saith the Lord, If ye go forth and preach this my gospel as it was given in the days of my apostles of old. I will even confirm that preached now by you, with the same signs following, as I did the word preached by them." And he did confirm their preaching with many signs and wonders, insomuch that many people believed, for they saw it was the same gospel as that recorded in the word.

Oh! that word! How hard I have tried to overthrow it, but somehow it seems to have in it the germ of an indestructible life, the veritable Word of Life.

Once I thought I had about made an end of the advancement of the kingdom, when I got all the great ones to withhold the word from the common people, and to give their own private interpretation; and it was kept so high-priced and scarce that only the rich and great could get it. But what is hard to be obtained is the more highly prized. With wonderful avidity the hungry people took in any fragment of the word that came The troubled con- in their way, and so thoroughly masticated, digested, and assimilated it so they all thought they were indeed that it became a part of their lives; nothing could rob them of it.

Then one Luther got hold of the whole word, and how he read, and pondered, and concluded the people should have it is a matter of history. In him I met more than I could conquer, and in spite of all I could do to hinder, though I kindled the fires of persecution, and did all I could to exterminate those who were trying to advance the kingdom of Christ, and though, as always, those who called themselves Christians, were my right hand allies, and were the fiercest persecutors of those who dared to step from the beaten path to follow on after the Christ, yet somehow for every martyr slain ten would arise in his place. Finally Bibles were plentiful, no need now of any one perishing for lack of the bread of life, as contained in the word. What now? thing more must be done, for well I knew the establishment of his kingdom meant my own overthrow. Ah, I thought, my only way now was to blind them to the true meaning of the word, that it might even be as if they had no word, like having a guide-book in a foreign language which none understood. It was an easy matter, as the people having itching ears began to choose for themselves teachers. Being so fond of their own opinions, and wise in their own conceits, they were left to themselves, their Teacher, who was to be their guide into all truth, withdrawing himself more and more, as his services were not sought. Soon there were many ways, all claiming to be the true way of life. When one setting out to "seek for the kingdom of God and his righteousness.' commanded, came to the parting of the ways, he was soon confused. At the entrance of each way would be some one of my allies, (though often, as I said, unknowingly mine,) who would cry, Lo here, or, Lo there. The old sign-boards were so mutilated and disfigured with man-made directions, that it was not easy to discern the way. Soon the entrance to the true way was so completely hidden under all the rubbish and debris, creeds, dogmas, ceremonies of men's devising, perverted truths, and forms of godliness with no power, etc., that none could know of a certainty his whereabouts. So some would choose one path and some another, all thinking they were in the right way. The food that was given them, drugged as it was with my mixtures, soon caused their troubled consciences to rest in a form of peace that they mistook for real peace. Here and there all along these many ways I had caused lamps to be placed, lit with some portion of God's word of truth, walking in the light of the word.

Aha! I thought, I shall soon conquer. The kingdoms of this world shall yet be mine. Then God raised up this man Joseph Smith and sent him out with the search-light from heaven, and with the blade of truth assisted by the Spirit of truth that accompanied him, he rid the entrance of its debris, and cried out to all seekers for the kingdom, "Come on! have found the old paths, wherein if ye walk ye shall find rest for your souls. Here is rest for the weary, food for the hungry, drink for the thirsty, balm for the sorrowing, wine and oil for the faint and bleeding." Those that entered in that way found it was even so, and joining their voices with his their testimonies rang ever the prairies, across the mountains, and beyond the seas, until this gospel of the kingdom bade fair to be preached in all the world, and my doom seemed inevitable and imminent.

At last this thought presented itself, Could I not introduce that among them that would work their own ruin and downfall? As usual I found a willing helper. J. C. Bennet came along, and with his bland smile and wily insinuations, wove a firm and tangled web of deception, and cunningly laid the snare, and placed lures here and there, baited with carnal pleasures and fleshly delights of all kinds, and some whose souls were not weaned from these things, though their feet were in the way, were allured by these fair deceits, and charmed by the siren song of passion and lust until their feet were entangled in the mesh of this cunningly laid snare. With shame when discovered they cried out, "We are not alone in this thing, others are entangled as well as we," and though the man who laid the snare was cast out, the snare remained; many souls were caught in its deceitful meshes, and so poisoned by the alluring baits that the life they had formerly lived was destroyed, and from hence they lived only after the flesh. Of such it may be truly said, "He is dead while he liveth."

Hard indeed did I strive to capture Joseph and Hyrum and many others of the church, but too clear was the snare made manifest to their eyes, and fearlessly and without respect of persons did they endeavor to rid the church of it. In trying to pull it up, lo, here and there were found many entangled in it, and all such, by my counsel and suggestion, helped to weave a snare for them, and as was the case all along, when I wanted help to thwart these men and their teachings, I found all classes only too willing to join hands with me for their overthrow.

The men claiming to be preachers of righteousness, and the women who pose as patterns of purity and virtue, would readily join hands with the drunkard, the gambler, the harlot, and the murderer, to help me in my warfare against these men and their doctrine, which was indeed the doc-trine of Him who lived, and walked, and taught in the streets of Jerusalem and on the shores of Galilee, nineteen hundred years ago. The same doctrine. Did I not know it well? Well I knew what reason I had to fear it. So those men became the victims of the malice and spite of those who were banded against them, and gave up their lives for the sake of these truths. My friends and allies, the ministers and pillars of all the manmade churches, rejoiced, thinking they had conquered.

Well, it did seem so for a time, but short lived was their triumph. I had never felt to triumph, for well I knew there were those among this people who held the true knowledge of the way, and had not been entangled or poisoned by my many devices.

A truer line was never written or sung than this,

"Satan trembles when he sees, The weakest saint upon his knees."

Many a time have I been made to tremble for what I knew was coming. Oh, it is a good thing for me they do not realize the power there is in their prayers, or they would spend much more time on their knees than they do. Not only the prayers on their knees do I fear, but the prayers they live out in their lives. It seems as if each act of a true saint is performed with reference to the coming of the kingdom of Christ, and he has promised such the desires of their hearts. I know the desire of their hearts is my overthrow, and the advancement and establishment of the kingdom of their King, even Christ.

About the time when it seemed to the world that they had brought upon themselves destruction, by the accepting of the evil and pernicious teachings of my emissaries, concerning polygamy, many gods, Adam their God, etc., and the very name of Joseph Smith, or of the church, became hateful to those outside, even to those who were really striving to follow the Christ of whom Joseph taught, when it seemed as if I need fear no more from them, a few Saints here and there banded themselves together, and began to pray to their God, who never fails to hear and answer their cry, that they might again be granted a prophet and a leader. Then Joseph, the son of the Martyr Joseph, as his father predicted, stepped forth, and raised the banner that had been trailing in seeming defeat, all besmirched though it was with the foul stains of infamy and uncleanness put upon it by his father's enemies. He held it aloft, and taking his father's position again he waved the same banner. Albeit, it has been fully cleansed from all these foul stains. The only stains now upon it are the stains of the blood of martyrdom, which only make it doubly dear to its adherents. Again the cry goes resounding down the vears, over the land, and across the seas, "This is the way, walk ye in it, and ye shall find rest to your souls."

The very things by which I had intended to weaken their forces turned out to be their strength, for only those who love Christ enough to bear all manner of reproach for his sake are apt to enlist under this banner, thus keeping out the weak and unstable element. Here and there are a few brave souls ready to accept truth at any cost, and only such have the courage to step out and enlist under this banner, that the world says is stained with sin and impurity. But the search light of truth shows those who want to know the truth the nature of these stains, which, as I said before, make the banner the more precious in their sight.

No cross at all now to join the many man made churches, for they are so amalgamated with the world that there need be no difference in the life, only just submission to some ordinances of their own choosing or fashioning. Having their name recorded on the church book is all that seems necessary. They can even join the church that appeals most forcibly to their nature or their tastes, or with whose pastor or membership they seem to have most affinity, or the one which will bring them into the highest circles of society, or will be the best stepping stone to a successful business life, or will give prestige and power and position, and a vantageground from which to scale the heights of their ambition, or soar to the summit of fame. Strange way indeed to follow the Christ, who was meek and lowly in heart, and had not where to lay his head.

But I don't bother such church members as those much. They give me almost no trouble at all in securing or keeping. My baits and my lures have so captivated them that I can rest quite comfortably so far as they are concerned. But these others, who are willing to dare and to do all things for the sake of the truth, put me up to all my powers. In all ages I find God's people have had some crucible to test the purity of their profession and the sincerity of their love and the very things I had meant to be their overthrow, shame, ignominy, and reproach, have been welded into such a crucible for this age, and, alas for my plans, I find too many who are willing to be tried in this crucible.

is to blind people to the fact that Joseph was a true prophet, that the gospel has been restored in its simplicity and purity, and that God's kingdom is indeed beginning to be established. Scattered all through the world here and there are these Saints, the leaven hid among the three measures of meal. Now if by means of falsehood, misrepresentation, or appealing to their love of popularity, I can only hinder the leaven from working among the people, I may hinder the advancement of the kingdom for a while, for I well know I can not kill the power of this leaven, it is inde-structible, and it seems impossible now to adulterate it, as they have three standards of comparison now, instead of one, as did the saints of old. Anything claiming to be truth must stand the test of all three. So my only plan seems to be to cry loudly on every occasion, "Beware of the doctrines of Joseph Smith. It is the poison of 'Mormonism.'" That word is usually enough to stagger the ordinary investigator. Then by getting them to take the leaven of my own mixture as found in the different churches, I counteract, to a great extent, the action of the other.

If it were not that now and then one can see that this leaven of the restored gospel does produce good results, I might hope for more success. But, alas, my powers are failing, my resources are getting weak, and my only hope is to rally everything, Christian or Anti-Christian, in one grand onslaught. But then, past experiences show me that even this is futile, for the God of heaven fights their battles for them, and turns my weapons of attack into shields of de-

Ah me! I have only one comfort left. As yet the many who profess to be Christ's followers, although not united on any other subject, will all join hands with me against these people, against whom can be laid no charge save that they really believe in God and in his Son, and that he is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; that he gives prophets when needed, now as well as of old. Of course he does. How else could he warn the people of my devices, and guide them on in safety through the snares I have spread for them?

But alas! the elect can not be deceived, even though I transform myself into an angel of light, for the Spirit of truth dwelleth in them, and doth guide them "into all truth."

Alas! mine is a hopeless task, and yet I must work on until the end, knowing that my destiny is sealed and certain, and at the best all I can do is to retard the advancement of the kingdom of Christ, which means my final overthrow and destruction. Here in R,—, as well as intend to make a fierce struggle for in other places, are a few who are being affected by this leaven, and are in danger of accepting it. In fact it is being preached by many in more or less purity, who will not recognize as brothers those to whom this leaven was first intrusted. Here and there are a few who have this leaven of the gospel of the kingom unadulterated. just as received from the hands of the Prophet, who received it direct from God, through his angelic messengers. And my one great effort must be to keep these people from seeing that. Whenever this leaven works if I can just get them to believe it is "Mormonism" they want no more of it. If they think Joseph Smith taught a doctrine it is enough to condemn it as false. So come on, all my friends and allies, to do battle against Joseph Smith and his doctrines. "Down with the teachings of Joseph Smith," shall be the battle-cry. Ah! as I thought, they will rally at that cry. Good Christians and vile sinners, the pure maiden and drunken debauchee, all join hands in a common cause against the doctrines of Joseph Smith, when if they would prove all things for themselves they would find them to be the doctrines of the Nazarene who is the avowed leader of such of them as claim to be Christian.

So long as I can keep all who believe these doctrines from uniting in one body I am measurably safe. The seed of the woman can not do much at crushing my head with all its members disjointed and separated one from the other. So when I hear these people saying, "Organization is not necessary," "I have the Spirit and am therefore in Christ," etc., I rejoice, for I know the Spirit hath his dwelling in the organized body as well as in the individual. "Ye are the temple" when builded into the temple.

If they were wise, as my allies are, they would all come together, and make a grand rally around the cross, and raise the blood-stained banner of him for whose kingdom they are praying and working, though against one another, and would all march in perfect unison at the command of their leader. An army of stragglers and rebels against discipline, trying to substitute other rules and orders for those of their captain. Their situation, as I view it, is ridiculous. All enlisted to fight me and my army, and vet at war among themselves. Ah, if they knew it, that is because among their number are so many who are really mine. And this would encourage me to hope for ultimate victory if I did not know that he against whom I am opposed is the Almighty, the Lord God omnipotent.

Already his angel stands ready with the key to the bottomless pit in his hand and the chain to bind me, but I liberty, though a hopeless one. I am doomed, doomed, doomed.

IN NEW ZEALAND.

Away in the Southern Pacific, near enough to Antarctic waters to feel the cool breezes, yet in a latitude that makes its average climate most countries would envy, protected by a rugged coast line of cliffs, lies New Zealand, the principal gem in the tiara of the famous Pacific Islands. Situated, as it were, at the ends of the earth, its people are removed from the great hives of industrial pursuits, and have become self-reliant to a degree; and, like the onlooker who sees most of the game, they have been able to draw conclusions from their observa tions of things in older lands and consequently have sought to avoid the social abuses that therein exist; and no one can deny the fact that they have succeeded to a remarkable ex-

The fact that this isolated people, whose nearest neighbor of importance—Australia—is 1350 miles distant, should have kept so well in the vanguard of progress, can be ascribed only to their remarkable characteristics. Founded by men whose social and intellectual attainments were of a high order, it attracted a most desirable class of colonists, and to-day its people form a little nation to which the eyes of scholars and statesmen often turn when in need of a moral to adorn a tale.

It is, practically, at liberty to make any laws it sees fit, the imperial government reserving the right of veto in a few cases, such as those having reference to foreign powers; but its internal administration, even to taxing British and American goods, is free of any parental control. It is governed by a parliament elected by its citizens triennially, the only qualification of voting being citizenship and legal age, so that the poorest man or woman—for the women vote equally with the men at the parliamentary booths—has as great a voice in its government as the richest.

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

The female franchise has been in operation some years. Before its incorporation in the laws of the colony many were the prophecies of disaster to follow its introduction. The effect, however, has not been disastrous either domestically or politically. It has satisfied a great many of the more progressive women of the colony and there is not the slightest domestic unhappiness traceable to it; nor has the women's vote—and the majority do vote—caused any appreciable change in the results of the elections. The sweeping reforms, especially those of a moral nature, the women's vote has not yet brought about; and such reforms as have been accomplished are due mainly to the vote of the male portion of the community.

TWO POLITICAL PARTIES.

There are two great political parties in the country, the Conservative and the Labor, though of late years a third party of considerable strength known as the Left Wing or Independents has arisen. The ideas of the former two parties are explained by their names; the Left Wing makes moral reforms its principal object and its sympathies are with the Labor party. Though political feeling runs high it has not yet been disgraced by scenes of violence or by bribery. For many years past the Labor party has held the reins of government; each election sees it grow stronger and the predicted reaction against its remarkable laws has yet to manifest itself, to the discomfort of its political enemies! Though some of the legislation passed by this party is highly experimental it is an extraordinary fact that none of it has so far proved anything but beneficial. The whole object of its legislation is to escape those conditions of the older lands which have brought enormous wealth and abject poverty at one and the same time. The mass of the peo-ple recognizes the high motive for which the party is striving, and though apparently many individual hardships are caused, the good already accomplished has given the Labor party the firmest stronghold that any political party could desire.

ARBITRATION.

After the whole world was convulsed with the great strikes of a few years ago, the New Zealand Government introduced the conciliation and arbitration act-a piece of legislation in itself sufficient to make the country famous to political economists. This act provides for the settlement of all industrial disputes by arbitration. The two sides of any industrial dispute appoint representatives who constitute a court, and the decision of this court has, in almost all cases, been fair and accepted by both sides. When acceptance of the award is notified by both sides the award then becomes law; appeal, however, can be taken to judges of the supreme court. It is safe to state that since the adoption of this act, a strike has become an impossibility in this colony. Sometimes the powers of the court are invoked for trivial affairs; but since it has made impossible the disorganization and demoralization of commercial affairs this disadvantage is not of importance when the great benefits are considered. Since the foundation of boards of conciliation and a court of arbitration, six years ago, there has virtually been neither strike nor lock out. The object of the country's socialist government is not as is commonly supposed, the prevention of the accumulation of wealth by any individual. It is primarily to protect the people; if a man can make wealth under its laws he is encouraged to do so-but he must obey the laws. Any interference with enterprise is not from a motive of robbing the rich man, but because such interference is demanded for the good of the people as a whole. It is an axiom with the government that monopolies are harmful to the community, and on more than one occasion it has taken steps to break up what was intended for a trust. The Conservative party naturally calls this an unjust interference, but the government replies that it is a duty and they are justified on humane principles. When the great European and foreign shipping companies trading to New Zealand kept freights high by a mutual understanding, the government subsidized steamers to compete, the whole country reaping the benefit. another occasion a threat of competition from the government was sufficient to prevent a trust in the great frozen meat industry. As another example of what would appear an interference with the liberty of the subject, a few years ago a law was passed making it compulsory that all stores, factories, etc., should keep one half day a week as a holiday. Merchants, manufacturers, and storekeepers bit-terly opposed the bill when introduced into parliament, but it passed, which is equivalent to saying it was also observed as intended. Each city is at liberty to choose its own day and then all those in that city who come within the province of the act must keep that day. If Thursday be the day chosen by one city then on Thursday afternoon every store is closed and the city is silent and deserted, but the seaside resorts and the country roads teem with life for a few hours. In this case, as in others, the prophets were mostly false; instead of disorganizing, it made no difference whatever to commerce, and was a veritable godsend to the majority of the population. It is certain the act will never be repealed; an attempt to do so would undoubtedly wreck any government. There is not much danger, however, for the Conservatives have many times said, should they ever again obtain the reins of government, they will not attempt to repeal any of the Liberal party's laws. The government has also taken upon itself to protect the young of both sexes from the avarice of employers. Apprentices to trades and professions have to be paid small wages and the dangerous habit that prevails in so many countries of pretending to teach a trade (especially with women in dressmaking and other crafts) without wages for the first year and then turning the learner adrift has at last had the strong hand of the law throttle it.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

All the railways, public telephone and telegraph systems in the colony are the property of the government. A return of two and one half per cent interest is all the government looks for; with regard to telephones the abomination of party lines is unknown. a specific charge per annum of $25 (average) being made for each individual line, entitling the subscriber to call as many times as he desires. The government possesses its own railway workshops, employing thousands of men, though it has imported many powerful locomotives from America. The latest systems of telegraphy are in operation and in all these respects the public is as well served as anywhere in the world. The tendency of the government is continually to make the people the owners of all large enterprises. As time goes on it will undoubtedly own all the car lines, all the coal mines (of which it already owns a number), and many other things necessary to a civilized people.

GOVERNMENT LIFE AND FIRE INSURANCE.

For many years the government has had in operation a state life insurance department. Though great American and English offices have their branches in the country, the state office is considered to offer better inducements and to be a generally safer one in which to take out a policy. The state fire insurance is now a matter of great public interest and will probably be in operation in a very short time. The government also owns a number of hotels at the medicinal springs, lakes, and other resorts, which give their patrons greater advantages than private enterprises previously offered.

EDUCATION.

The system of education is in keeping with other things. Magnificent public schools adorn the larger cities, and smaller ones are in the country. Every child is compelled to go to school till a certain age or a certain standard has been passed, and truant officers are employed to enforce this law. The teachers receive good salaries and I have yet to hear of a case where a teacher's salary warrant was not good for immediate payment. Its university degrees are "entitled to full recognition throughout the British empire, its colonies or possessions."

The university professors are chosen by competition from amongst the finest scholars, the high salaries paid causing eminent men to compete, and on appointment the professor, having an ample salary, is to give his whole attention to the university. Degrees in law, arts, science, or medicine can be obtained only through this state university. It is supported by large endowments of land so settled in "boards of governors" as to make the institution and its professors independent of any political influence what-ever. Its degree examinations are conducted through the great English universities, principally to maintain a high standard and give the degrees a positive value in the outside world.

PROHIBITION.

The question of "prohibition" is an important one; it is the chief plank in the platform of the Left Wing party, and four years ago the election was fought very largely on this issue. The Prohibition party has gained strength steadily of late years and it appears as if the near future will see the abolishment of the liquor traffic by will of the people. The liquor laws are already very stringent. A hotel must be kept in connection with any drinking bar, so that many who would be only too pleased to open a "saloon" are deterred owing to the large establishment to be maintained with it. Breaking the liquor law is a serious crime, punishable by imprisonment and heavy fines, a third offense generally cancelling the license in

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

No matter how objectionable a law or laws may appear to any individual or party, the obedience to them is one of the most remarkable characteristics of the people. A law is a law and has to be obeyed, for neither social position nor wealth will save one the consequences of an infraction. The almost complete absence of scandals either in the judiciary or other lines of life is a tribute to the integrity of this island nation.

The labor and ballot laws are so well known and so universally praised as to need no more than mentioning.

As an attempt to find a solution for the "poverty problem," old age pensions have become an established institution-and New Zealand is justly proud of being the first country in the world to inaugurate so advanced an idea in legislation. Should the provisions of the "Old Age Pension Bill" be found to work satisfactorily, as there is every indication of their doing, judging by the few years the bill has been a law, its scope will be made wider. At first it was necessary to try so radical a measure on a more or less limited scale, as much to see how its principles would work in practice, as to bring about an immediate alleviation of distress. It provides that a man or woman who is a British subject, whose income is less than £50 per year ($250) can claim the pension, provided he or she has been in the colony twenty years and is sixty five years of age. Habitual drunkenness, conviction of crime, etc., are sufficient to cancel a pension order. The colony has been able to bear the expense (the estimate for this year is £200,000 or $1,000,000), and the bill seems to have accomplished a vast amount of good. It has removed the stigma of poverty in some measure, and later, when it can be claimed by colonists of requisite age and time of residence in the country, irrespective of income, it will be claimed as a right by those who have spent their money in and helped to build up the country.

The people of Australasia are industrious, satisfied, have a high average intellectuality, and are extremely patriotic. The freedom of their life, and the breadth of mind such freedom has generated, makes them resemble their American cousins in a great many ways. Both have the same love of pleasure, both have broken away from many ideas that are still implanted in the British youth, and both have the daring originality that has carried them away from conservatism, either in politics, religion, or intellectual pursuits.

A consideration of the evidence furnished shows plainly that the only system that will work well is one that has the strong arm of the law back of it, and not one depending on individual good will to the rest of the race. We can only hope to approximate a satisfactory state by altruistic yet common sense laws.—F. A. Black, in The Co-operative Journal, Oakland, California, August, 1900.

CLIFF DWELLER RUINS.

The Colorado Cliff Dwellers' Association is making every effort to preserve the ruins which lie on the Mesa Verde, in southwestern Colorado. There are from three hundred to four hundred cliff dwellers, including the cliff palace on this Mesa. As these ruins are in the Ute Reservation, the state and national government does not have any direct control over them. A ten years' lease has been obtained by the association from the Ute chiefs. The Secretary of the Interior has ratified the lease, and the association now has charge of the ruins. A toll road will be established, and the money received will go in part to pay for the rent which the Indians receive and also to keep the ruins from weathering and to protect them from vandals. -Scientific American, September 21,

COLDWATER, Mich., Nov. 1.

Editors Herald:—I went to Knex, Indiana,
October 11 to meet with the Saints there in a two-days meeting, finding the Saints all well at that place. Now the old saying is, "A poor beginning makes a good ending," and as it began to rain Friday evening and kept it up until Saturday evening about eight o'clock, you can see the beginning was poor, and I will leave it to others what the ending was.

We had three services on Sunday and occupied each evening until Thursday.

I found Bro. J. B. Prettyman and wife, where I made my home, very highly respected here.

The Saints there are very kind to an elder, and before leaving they seemed to realize that the "chariots that jostle through our streets that run like lightning," will not carry God's servants without some of the "Mammon of unrighteousness," so they kindly assisted me in this way; and may the kind Father own and bless them for the same is my prayer.

Thursday, October 17, I left for Galien, Michigan, where I expected to meet with the Saints in their hall, but to our sorrow we found that on Monday morning, October 14, at about four o'clock, their hall and a greater part of its fixtures, went up in flames and smoke, along with four stores and the postoffice; Bro. E. A. Blakeslee and Mr. Charles Clark's large store included. The Saints there feel the loss of their hall, where many of them have worshiped from their childhood, as it were. I believe we can here see the effect of living the life of a true Saint, which we believe many of them there have, and have thereby won respect of others. The Baptist and Methodist friends have kindly offered them the use of their churches.

Elder Vanschoick, the presiding elder of the Methodist Church, wrote them a very nice letter, saying their district would give them five dollars to help build a church. Their kindness is appreciated by the Saints.

Am glad to say they are not sitting down and saying, We can do nothing, but are trying to make the best of it. When I got there they had arranged for services at Bro. and Sr. Green's. I occupied Thursday and Friday evenings, as they had arranged for; I also received help to carry me to my next point, which was Hartford, Michigan. When I reached this place on Saturday about eleven o'clock, a. m., I found Bro. Peak at his post presenting the word of God. He stayed with me till Monday, when he went home to make some arrangements for winter. The twoday's meeting at this place was a success, and the little band of Saints is feeling well in the work. I stayed with them until Wednesday when we bade them good-bye and left for Grand Rapids, Michigan. Just before taking train I spoke the words that sent Sr. Estella Bevelhymer and Mr. Hoadley out on the ocean of life together. May peace and prosperity attend the young couple through life. The Hartford branch paid the iron horse to draw me to the Rapids, where I held a cottage service the same evening at Bro. Naab's. The balance of the week I visited with Saints at Alpine, Englishville, and Sparta; had a good visit with all whom I met. Back to Grand Rapids and met three times with the Saints on Sunday. All who met with us seemed to enjoy themselves. They also aided me financially. I left for home Monday, October 28.

MILLERSBURG, Ill., Nov. 1.

Editors Herald:-By appointment I was to labor in what is know as the Tri-cities of Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island and Moline, Illinois, the population of the three being about one hundred thousand, -enough, apparently, to keep one man busy. Before leaving home for my field of labor I received notice by a telegram not to come until further orders; and this from a member of the church at Rock Island. It came as a surprise to me; but I knew by the tone of the message that something was wrong, so concluded to await further developments. I waited about two weeks, and not receiving word, concluded to go and see what the trouble was. I got there the 14th of May, in time to attend the wedding of Bro. W. Crull and Sr. Edith Lloyd, at the residence of the bride's parents, in the city of Moline, Bro. J. W. Adams officiating. A very pleasant time was had; and it also gave me a chance to get acquainted with some of the members of the church in the Tri-cities.

As Bro. Adams was to stay over Sunday, we concluded to hold three services that day, and so advertised in two of the daily papers, the meetings to be held in the Odd Fellows' hall, the same being in the third story of a large brick building. Sunday morning came, and at the appointed hour a few of the Saints came, and I preached my first sermon in the Tri-cities, none but members being present. In the afternoon at two o'clock the Saints met for Sunday-school, and at three o'clock Bro. J. W. Adams was the speaker, with a few more out than at the morning service. Preaching again in the evening by the writer, the congregation being mostly members. I was somewhat disappointed, thinking that the advertising of the meetings in the papers would bring out more. However, we concluded to make the best of it, and wait developments, which were not long in coming. I soon found out why the telegram was sent to me not to come until further orders. I found that there was a division among them as to what should be done with the missionary when he should come. Some wanted him to board around like the oldtime district school-teacher, which meant that he would have to spend near one half of his time in looking for something to eat. Others wanted a regular boarding place, and wanted a man and his wife, as she could cook and care for him, and they would thus be relieved from all responsibility in the matter. Some wanted a man that could work during the week, and preach on Sundays. Thought that would be a nice thing, as he could support himself and wife that way. Some wanted only one sermon a week, and that on Sunday at three p. m. That would save trouble and expense, and they could sleep a good long time on Sunday morning. I told them at once that I could not afford to stay there and preach only once a week; that it would not be doing justice to the church nor to myself, and that I wanted to so arrange my work that I could preach at least four sermons a week; that if we could only use the hall on Sundays I would preach in private houses, and would like to start missions in both Moline and Davenport. But I received no encouragement in this, only one house being offered me, so I had to give that up.

Meantime, the hot weather came on, and it was just impossible to get the public into a third story hall. In fact, I would not have gone there myself if not compelled to. Several times I came near being overcome with the heat, and never suffered so much in my life from its effect. But I did the best I could under prevailing conditions, hoping the future would bring forth better things. I did some work outside of the city, assisting Bro. F. A. Russell in a series of meetings at Carbon Cliff and Pleasant Valley, and finally aiding him and Bro. O. H. Bailey in starting a series of tent meetings in Davenport. Preached the first sermon there, but was so affected by the heat that I had to give up and ask to be relieved for a time. These brethren held forth some five weeks, the result being two baptisms.

Prejudice was removed from the minds of some, and a better understanding had concerning our faith. I am firmly of the opinion that it does not pay for the church to keep a missionary there under present conditions. Too much expense for results obtained. There are some worthy members in the cities, especially among the young people; and were it not for them the work could not be maintained there. I am now touring the district, Bro. F. A. Russell taking my place in the cities while I am away, Bro. Heman C. Smith granting me this privilege and placing Bro. Russell there.

As I become acquainted with condition of things I find that spirituality is at low ebb in Kewanee district. There is, I believe, a reason for this, which should not exist.

Brn. J. A. Davis and O. H. Bailey held a series of tent meetings at Illinois City, and made many friends to our cause there. In fact, they had the best attendance all through of any tent meetings I ever attended. No baptisms were had at the close, but there will be an ingathering there if the work is cared for in the future.

Bro. Davis and I are now in the midst of a series of meetings here at Millersburg and Joy, with a fair attendance so far; and we believe some good is being done. The members are being revived and outsiders are hearing the word. We intend to visit all the branches in the district and hold revival services where we can; also get the gospel before as many outside of the church as we can. I find Bro. Davis not only an agreeable companion but the most unselfish one I have ever been associated with; one that believes in keeping the law in preferring others before himself.

Brethren Russell and Bailey are acquitting themselves well as servants of God, and I am of the opinion that the work in this district will be in better condition at the end of this conference year than when it began. Shall labor to that end, at least.

For the right,

E. A. STEDMAN.

NEW CASTLE, N. S. W., Oct. 8.

Editors Herald:—We have arrived, safe and well, and have been received back in royal Australian style; public welcome and tea meetings in both Sydney and New Castle. The reception with which we have met is all the heart could desire, and more than we expected or deserved. The writer desires to labor in such a manner in the future as to retain the esteem that has been manifested; and I have that confidence in the Saints' love of right that I'm sure I will not have their confidence if I depart from the lines of right and justice.

Our trip over was an exceptionally smooth one; the Pacific is always good natured. Have crossed it three times and have not once seen a storm at sea. This immense "pond" is properly named. There is aside from this an improvement in my health every time I go on the sea. The first time I was sick the whole trip, as were Bro. and Sr. Kaler. Bro. Kaler has declared that he would not cross again till the waters had all dried up. Not so with the writer; the second trip was fair, and this last time he did not "pay tribute" once.

All are looking forward to the coming of the Patriarch "as one of the Presidency." Australians generally seem grateful that they have been favored thus, and many are sanguine that his counsel and appointments result in permanent good to our movement here. The ordination of a bishop will mean much to the work, and give us a stronger denominational standing in the eyes of the people.

There are some encouraging signs in the missionary field, and the leading workers have never been more united than they are now. The day is not far distant when we will have a paper to assist, and added to all this is a noble little band of members upon whose willing shoulders the financial burden lies, from which you will conclude that the general outlook is fair. Of course, there are some drawbacks—something we have never seen absent anywhere.

After being entirely cut off from the world of news for three weeks, it was unpleasant tidings and rather a shock to hear of the taking off of our President at the hands of an anarchist assassin. It is pleasant to note the manifestations of sorrow by the people here, and officially expressed by the Federal Parliament. There are times in the service of a good cause when it seems necessary that some one or more must die; but it seems too bad when a noble man gives up his life when there is no such exigency, when totally uncalled for. And the fact that the inflammatory and treasonable utterances of a woman are partly responsible for this awful act which leaves an invalid widow in bereavement suggests what a powerful poison there is in the elequence of some speakers. Regretable, too, that a woman, whose nature and powers are capable of influencing mankind to do good, should be responsible for such as this. Earnest words never die, whether uttered for the expression of good principles or bad. This is suggestive to gospel preachers.

Am feeling well in body and spirit. A special measure of that influence that enticeth to do good has been with me since landing. A mail has just arrived and the account of the European conference is read with deep interest. GOMER R. WELLS.

DEER LODGE, Mont., Oct. 30.

Editors Herald:-After my arrival here, October 3, the brethren being busy thrashing, I set to work to collect moneys subscribed to pay off the last part of the debt on our new chapel. The debt was soon paid, and on Sunday, the 20th, the chapel was dedicated. Bro. Gomer Reese, of Bozeman, came over and assisted me. I think Bro. Gomer Wells would have enjoyed being present, for we had an enjoyable day, good attendance, and a good spirit; and I am sure we would all gladly have shared the enjoyment with him and Sr. Wells. Present were representatives of the Utah and Morrisite churches, all being very friendly towards us. Of the last named party, but few now remain, a number having united with us in the past; but they are a kind-hearted, God-fearing people, and always welcome us to their homes with the same cordiality characteristic of our own people.

The next day I began preaching in a schoolhouse near Anaconda, the town of many smelters. I continued a week, had fair attendance, and on Saturday I baptized one, a sister of nearly seventy-seven years of age.

To-morrow I start for Bitter Root country, to labor for about ten days. There are many opportunities of doing good in this State, as also in Idaho, and I want to do all in my power while here; but the departure of our highly esteemed and faithful brother, D. W. Wight, will increase my labors and responsibilities in the mission, and tend to shorten my stay in the north somewhat.

I am pleased to see some of the brethren advocating visiting and distribution of literature among the people. I commenced that kind of work nearly twenty years ago, and have done a good deal of it since. In many places, where an opportunity to publicly present our work was denied me, I have gone from house to house distributing tracts, and I know that good has been accomplished in that way. Being very timid and bashful by nature, it was hard for me to bring myself down to that kind of work: but I realized the force of the statement, "Let him that is warned, warn his neighbor;" also, "Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves" (D. C. 58: 6; also 85: 22); and by dint of perseverance I finally succeeded.

I have noticed that some Saints destroy their HERALDS and Ensigns. This is wrong, and would not be done if all were diligent in cultivating the missionary spirit. All Saints could do something in this direction. The statement, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," should not apply to us. I think we could present our claim to the people more urgently, persistently, and diligently, without interfering with agency, freedom of thought, etc.

What about our Religians? One of the charter members of the first society stated to me, last year, that one of the prime objects of the organization was house to house visiting and distributing of literature. This would be healthy exercise for all members, and tend to develop and increase spirituality more surely and quickly than much of the so-called Religio work that I have been permitted to witness, and, in a practical manner, acquaint all with the fact that this is a work of sacrifice and warning, rather than many words and much discussion.

In order to properly and effectually carry out the instructions in the late revelation relative to tracts in the different languages mentioned, all Saints should consider that they have a duty to perform in procuring and distributing tracts in their respective localities. Tracts can be furnished on short notice. There are thousands upon thousands of Scandinavians and Germans, scattered all through the United States, who could be reached through our literature if we only put forth an effort to reach them. All branches should have a tract fund, so that the ministry, and others, might find a supply of tracts whenever needed.

Hoping for the advancement of the work all along the line, in bonds,

PETER ANDERSON.

WHEATLAND, Mo., Oct. 31.

Dear Herald:-The battle with Carlin is now over, and he has gone to other parts, no doubt to continue his work against Latter Day Saints. I accepted his own propositions; then he claimed that he had me in his trap, -Mormonism was ripe and he was going to pick it, etc., etc., also declaring I was so ignorant I could not see his trap. For six days the discussion was on, two sessions per day, the country stirred to its depths. At the end Carlin discovered he was in his own trap, and could not extricate himself from his hopeless condition. The universal opinion of intelligent and unprejudiced people is that Carlin signally failed in every point. The most effective argument used by Carlin that seemed to please his supporters most was that he branded me "a nasty, stinking, lying Mormon." That I. N. White and Chatburn were liars and no part of gentlemen, and he would never debate with either again. The Saints are rejoicing, thinking men are convinced of the truth of our position, and we stand fairer than ever before. We will erect the tent and continue meetings for a time. Some are to be baptized.

Yours happy in the fight, T. W. CHATBURN. WHEATLAND, Mo, Nov. 4.

Editor Saints' Herald:-Elder T. W. Chatburn, of Independence, Missouri, or from the Wisconsin mission, has been with us Hickory county Saints for the last two weeks, having been sent here by Elder I. N. White to meet Elder A. Carlin, of the Missionary Baptist Church, in public discussion. Elder Carlin had put up notices in most of the towns and public places in Hickory county, that he would lecture against "Mormonism" as he seemed pleased to call it. Almost in the locality of the Wheatland branch, for six nights, Mr. Carlin classed the factions, apostates, Mountain Meadow Massacre, and all together as having originated in the church organized in 1830, and tried hard, with loud, harsh emphasis and sophistry, to make the people believe we were all the same. We attended and took notes all through his tirade, and also wrote Bro. White to come himself or send some one to attend to our work. As Mr. Carlin challenged us from the first to get our best man, we tried to please him. Bro, Chatburn came and held a discussion of six days and nights duration, lacking four speeches on each side of fulfilling the time agreed, because of Mr. Carlin being in such a hurry to get home, and because of him and his moderator wasting time in trying to frustrate our man in the affirmative argument.

The result of the discussion, however, is that Bro. Chatburn achieved a signal victory in defense of our work, in many ways. Two were baptized, others are near the kingdom, and our work is in the advance. Saints are rejoicing in the truth.

F. L. SAWLEY.

MOBILE, Ala., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:—We had the pleasure of attending both the Mobile and Alabama district conferences. Business matters was our excuse for attending the Alabama conference. We were pleased and encouraged by the inspired words of comfort and counsel given us by the missionary in charge, Elder I. N. Roberts. We think his labors will greatly benefit this southern portion of his field. It certainly will if heed is given to his wise and kind instructions.

It had been many years since we had met the Saints in the Alabama district, and a number of kind faces were missing. They have passed over the river to the spirit land. We were pleasantly greeted and kindly cared for, and believe it did us good to meet them and be with them in their services. It was a kind of oasis in the journey of life.

Tuesday morning, whilst trying to sell goods to one of the merchants in Garland, he remarked that "that neighborhood" (pointing over where the conference was held) "is the best in the country." "I have been in business here fifteen years, and have never lost a dollar from them. They don't get into law suits and trouble with one another. And," he added, "they practice their religion, too. Why," says he, "George Sellers over there sold a thousand dollars worth of timber, and gave the church a hundred dollars of it."

I thought this was pretty good from an outsider, and made a note of it.

Your brother in Christ, FRANK P. SCARCLIFF.

WHITE-BRADEN DEBATE -No. 2.

I know a debate has an atmosphere, a spirit, which can not be conveyed through the medium of cold type; but we trust the reader may be able to catch an idea of what the debate was by carefully reading my report of it.

I opened the debate in an hour's speech upon, "Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God?" I used as a foundation, Isaiah 42:9: "Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them." I contended there were but two men in this debate-Joseph Smith and Alexander Campbell. It is claimed by these men's followers, that they were restorers. I claim that Mr. Smith came in the right time, and in the right way. Mr. Braden, I suppose, claims as much for Mr. Campbell. At any rate we have him saying on page 220 of the Braden-Kelley debate, "that Thomas and Alexander Campbell undertook a restoration of apostolic Christianity, and not a reformation of any or all existing denominations, which was all that Savonarola, Wickliff, Huss, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and other reformers attempted."

I contended that Mr. Smith was not alone in his restoration movement, but was divinely assisted. Mr. Braden's church claims as much for Mr. Campbell. Who is right, if either, is the question to be settled in this debate.

My church claims Mr. Smith was a prophet in the truest sense—called and sent of God to restore primitive Christianity—the church. All of this, I am here to contend he did. Mr. Campbell is to the Christian brethren much like what Mr. Smith is to us,—a restorer of primitive Christianity,—the church. Braden's brethren say of him:

"The age had waited for his advent long;
For time had come and gone on weary wing

Since one before, a stalwart man of God, Had risen with an unction from on high To do the church's work of great reform. . . .

Behold him challenge error's countless hosts,

And rush where angels well might fear to tread.

Behold the victories of the cross once more,

And rising up again to glorious life,
A church revivified from touch of death.
Grand man of God, though dead, thou speakest yet."

This eulogy of Mr. Campbell and his work, is found in the Christian Evangelist for May 30, 1901. Mr. Smith hardly stands higher in the hearts of his followers as a restorer of the church, than does Mr. Campbell to his. Elder W. L. Neal, writing for the Christian Standard, for June 30, 1900, says of Mr. Campbell: "The time demanded a great message, and we believe Alexander Campbell had it from God to deliver to the people." This language, if it means anything, means that God had a "great message" to deliver to man, and he made choice of Mr. Campbell to carry, or deliver it. We hardly claim more than that for Mr. Smith. Hence, a Biblical test of these claims will be the order of this debate.

Both Smith and Campbell claimed to speak where the Bible speaks. It is claimed for them that they filled a "missing link" by bringing a message from God to man. Mr. Smith claimed there had been a great apostasy-a falling away from primitive Christianity; that the church went into the wilderness, and lost its former organization with many of the primitive ordinances of the church. He claimed that an angel appeared to him at a time when he was greatly exercised over religion-while pleading with God for light after having read, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."-James 1:5.

Mr. Smith claimed this angel brought the great message that he was to carry to the people. In a word, it was the angel spoken of in Revelation 14:6, 7, showing him the "things which must be hereafter," spoken of in Revelation 4:1. John says this angel was to "fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

This brings Mr. Smith's claims before the people backed by the predictions of the Bible prophets. These claims should be examined in fairness, to see if these predictions made by the former prophets had their fulfillment in Mr. Smith's message, or in Mr. Campbell's.

It will not do to say that such exalted claims were never made for Mr. Campbell. I read from the Christian Evangelist for December 6, 1900, an article written upon "The Elijahs and the Elishas of the Restoration," and delivered before the Georgia convention, Augusta, November 20, 1900, on the Jubilee anniversary of the introduction of the Reformation in that state. This article takes for its texts Matthew 17:11: "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things;" and 1 Kings 19:16: "And Elisha, the son of Shophat of Abel-meholah, shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room." This article says in part: "But it accords better with my immediate purpose to say that Alexander Campbell was the Elijah of our nineteenthcentury restoration, while his venerable father, the benign, the gracious, the tender and loving Thomas Campbell, was its typical Elisha. When our Elijah came Protestantism had reached its lowest degree of spiritual decadence."

Again, speaking of Alexander Campbell, it says: "Venerable patriarch of the clean heart and the silver tongue! Faithful servant of God, and apostle of Jesus Christ!" Thus, you see, Mr. Campbell's followers denominate him the "Elijah" of this generation, and an "apostle of Jesus Christ." This is as much as we claim for Mr. Smith. No other men of this generation who have claimed to be church organizers (unless it is John A. Dowie of Chicago) have had such stupendous claims made for them.

We are conversant with what God has said many centuries ago, of how he would call men to his aid, when he had some "great message" to deliver to man, as the friends of Messrs. Smith and Campbell claimed they have received. God, in speaking of just such work as this, says: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets."-Amos 3:7. I contend in this debate that there had been a "falling away" from the "faith once delivered to the Saints:" hence a necessity had arisen for a restoration of that faith again, and God made choice of Joseph Smith, revealing unto him, as a prophet of God, the great message he had for man-a restoration of the church with all of its ordinances.

That such was contemplated by the prophets of old, is foretold in Isaiah 29:14, where God says, "I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder." This was to be, says the prophet, "a very little while" before Lebanon, or the land of Palestine, would be turned into a "fruitful field." History teaches on every side that this turning of Lebanon into a "fruitful field" occurred in A. D. 1852 and 1853.

In connection with this prediction Isaiah says a "sealed book" was to be delivered to an "unlearned man." I contend that book was the Book of Mormon. Its coming forth was certainly a marvelous fulfillment of that text. (It is fitting to say here: That when I pressed this point so hard, and showed the "words of the book," had been taken to Professor Anthon by Martin Harris, and Anthon confessed he "could not read a sealed book," that Braden in his answer said: "Harris and 'Jo' had gotten this thing up and visited Professor Anthon on purpose to fulfill prophecy.") I took advantage of this, and showed how this illiterate, backwoods boy, had "fixed up" many other prophecies to their fulfillment. Showed how unreasonable it was for this boy to have known all of these passages that relate to his work so fittingly. Surely, if that were frue, he must have been a prophet.

That Braden's church is now advocating the restoration theory, headed by an "Elijah," I have only to read from their late church journals. One of their eminent writers, in the Evangelist of December 6, 1900, says: "That every great restoration movement, proceeding from the Divine Will and guided by the Divine Spirit, will, in its beginning and earlier stages, have its God-sent Elijahs." This gives us a prophet for the nineteenth century; and it is only to be proven, who he is. I contend that Mr. Smith filled these predictions, hence he is the man. Mr. Braden will, I suppose, contend as his brethren do, that Mr. Campbell is the man. My "foundation text" was: "Before they sprang forth, I tell you of them." This I have already proven by numerous texts that pointed to Mr. Smith and his work. He came at the right time-a little while before Lebanon is turned into a fruitful field. He also came in the right way-with a "sealed book"-a "marvelous work and a wonder" to everybody, because it was claimed to be a "message from heaven," brought to him by an angel. Isaiah 29: 14-17; Revelation 14: 6, 7.

In confirmation of an apostasy having taken place, hence the need of a "restoration," I shall now introduce other testimonies.

Alexander Campbell, in Christian System, page 3, says: "Since the full development of the great apostasy foretold by the prophets and apostles, numerous attempts at reformation have been made." This gives me the apostasy from Braden's own side, which he will hardly attempt to deny. Barton W. Stone, once a Presbyterian, says: "By comparison of the present state of Christianity with what it was once, all are brought to the conclusion that we are yet in the apostasy, under the reign of the man of sin; yet in Babylon, yet in the wilderness." Roger Williams, the founder of the first Baptist Church in America, says: "I conceive that the apostasy of Anti-Christ has so far corrupted all, that there can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant churches anew." Rev. D. C. Haynes (Baptist), quoting Rev. Professor Knowles, says: "The church lost her simplicity and purity, her ministers became ambitious, and the darkness gradually deepened into the long and dismal night of papal despotism." Page 39. This Rev. Haynes, in his eminent Baptist work, on page 55, quotes D'Aubigne's history in proof of an apostasy having taken place, as follows: "Ignorance and superstition took possession of the church, and delivered it, fettered and blindfold, into the hands of Rome." With such testimonies as are these, we are forced to the conclusion that Christ's and Paul's prediction are fully verified in regard to an apostasy.

Christ predicts just such an event in these terse words: "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."-Matthew 11:12. Paul has it this way: "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock."-Acts 20: 29. In speaking of Christ's second coming he says: "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first."-2 Thessalonians 2:3. All of this fully establishes a need of a restora-

Mr. Campbell says: "We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the old order of things."—Christian System, page 234.

Roger Williams says: "There can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant churches anew."

Rev. H. H. Hawley, one of the leading lights in Mr. Braden's church, when speaking about the "restoration of the primitive church" and "ancient order of things," said: "We must restore the gifts of Christ (apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers) to their proper place and power if we would have his peace rest upon us and be once more in him."-Christian Evangelist for July 17, 1890.

I here informed Mr. Braden that I drew largely from his own church, in order to save to receive and acknowledge his own witnesses

I here introduced a few witnesses to prove. What was a restoration of primitive Christianity." Christ said church organization consisted in this: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."-1 Cor. 12: 28. Christ is here introduced as my first witness to prove what primitive Christianity was. Apostle Paul, my second witness, says: "Wherefore he saith, When he [Christ] ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. . . And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, pastors and teachers."-Eph. 4:8, 11. Paul then names the kind of work imposed upon these men. He says: "For the perfeeting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Then he tells how long such officers were intended to remain in the church to preach and advocate "primitive Christianity." He says: "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Now, that a restoration of primitive Christianity covers all of the ground here introduced by my witnesses, is apparent from Braden's own witnesses that I shall now introduce. I read from the Evangelist for May 30, 1901. Rev. A. W. Kokendoffer, when writing upon, "Wherein do we differ from others," says: "First. The movement itself differs, and from all others, in that restoration and not reformation was the supreme ambition of the pioneers. This word and the spirit of it belongs exclusively to the Disciples. No such inspiration was ever possessed by others. If so, it was neither permitted opportunity of expression nor recorded upon the pages of any history."

This man must have been ignorant of Mr. Smith's claim to restoration, or was not honest enough to acknowledge it. However, he says further: "By restoration we mean a complete return to apostolic doctrine and life as a model for the church of to-day, a reinstatement after a divine pattern rather than an attempt to reform any existing church that may or may not have diverged from the path plainly set forth in the chart." This witness sets forth just what I claim Mr. Smith did. He took for his "chart" the Bible, and recognized and patterned after the "model" found therein when attempting to "build the church" by divine appointment. The "model" church of the New Testament had apostles in it, Mr. Smith's has; the "model" church had prophets, Mr. Smith claims as much; it had evangelists, pastors, teachers, deacons, etc., Mr. Smith has all of this. The "model" church had superhuman knowledge, wisdom, gifts of healings, tongues, miracles, etc.; all of these Mr. Smith stoutly claimed were in his restored church. The "model," or New Testament church, preached for doctrine, faith, repentance, baptism, and the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit; Mr. Smith's reunnecessary controversy, as I expected him ! stored church clings too close to that for my opponent. The "model" church practiced bantism for the remission of sins, the laving on of hands for ordination to office, for the reception of the Holy Ghost, for the healing of the sick, and for the blessing of children; Mr. Smith's restored church clings so tenaciously to all of this that it has been said of them that they unchristianized all other churches by it. I have another important witness to introduce from Mr. Braden's church. This time it is the Rev. W. T. Moore. This man is a leader in their church. He at one time acted in the capacity of president of the Missouri Bible College, at Columbia, Missouri. I believe he is now in England on some important church work. In an address he draws the following glowing picture of the anostolic New Testament church when it is realized on the earth: "And should the apostolic church finally he reproduced, thereby bringing Christ to the earth again in personal power and rest-giving influence, what would then be the prospect before us? Let me ask you to give the imagination a little play at this point. Try to picture to yourselves, first of all, a united Christendom, thoroughly illustrating the seven unities in Ephesians, with considerable emphasis on the 'one Lord, one faith, and one baptism!' This would give a practical reproduction of the living Christ in every place where there is now a local congregation. Imagine again these places multiplied at least a hundred times: and vet this might not express anything like the increase that would take place. And now think of all these local churches as animated by the divine Spirit, guided by the divine word, walking in the divine commandments, attending to the divine ordinances, living the divine life, and manifesting the divine ministry in feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting those in prison, healing the sick, carrying the gospel to every nation, and preaching it to every creature! Is not this picture enchanting? And yet, is it not within the range of a possible realization? Certainly we can not doubt it. Does not Christ still live and reign in the heavens? And is it not true that he must ultimately live and reign on earth? Surely if the picture I have drawn could be made real, there would then be no need of human organizations to complete the work of the world's redemption. All our social schemes would then be seen to be utterly useless in the light of that socialism of which Christ is the author, and of which his true church is the earthly exponent wherever it exemplifies the divine grace by living and manifesting the divine life. The full realization of this splendid ideal is what the world is waiting for, and until it is realized we must continue to trust, pray, labor, hope, and patiently wait."

Thus, you see, I have Mr. Braden's own witnesses on my side. You see, Elder Moore contends that just such a restoration as Mr. Smith, through the directing hand of God, has brought forth, is "within the range of a possible realization." He says: "Certainly we can not doubt it." I am glad, and I welwitness in favor of Mr. Smith's prophetic calling. Again. Elder Moore frankly admits that they have not realized in their restoration the apostolic New Testament church; neither have they enjoyed that "divine Spirit" that guided the believers of primitive times. But he admits in these terse words the need of just such a restoration. Says he: "The full realization of this splendid ideal is what the world is waiting for, and until it is realized we must continue to trust, pray, labor, hope, and patiently wait." What a frank acknowledgement of the leanness of Campbell's restoration!

I said in the first part of my speech that there were but two men in this debate-Smith and Campbell. But now, viewing it in the light of Elder Moore's testimony, Mr. Campbell is hardly in it. It now seems that Mr. Smith stands alone, as the only man of this generation that has produced a church that harmonizes with the divine model found in the New Testament. In organization he has apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, etc., as are found in the New Testament pattern. (See 1 Cor. 12: 28, and Eph. 4:11.) In ordinances, he has followed the divine chart in every particular. In gifts he makes the very same promise to the believer as did Christ and the apostles. (See Mark 16: 15-17, and 1 Cor. 12)

Rev. J. H. Garrison, editor of the Christian Evangelist, Braden's own church journal, admits the church needs all Mr. Smith claims; and at the same time acknowledges, as did Elder Moore, that they lacked these great essentials in their church. Garrison says: "There can be no question but that the New Testament teaches that an effective ministry or an effective service of any kind is dependent upon the presence and power of the Holv Spirit. . . . The aid of the Holy Spirit in Christian service was not limited to the apostolic age. It is a perpetual and abiding power in the church, and in each individual Christian, who devotes himself with singleheartedness to Christ's service. . . . It is not, then, so strange after all that so many of us have not attained to the fullness of the Spirit. Not many of us are willing to pay the price for this royal gift, or meet the conditions on which alone it is possible for us to be filled with the fullness of God." To "pay the price" to obtain this "royal gift" Mr. Garrison speaks of, is to accept the offer made by those whom God has sent. I have baptized the scores from the Christian Church, and they admit that they have received a peace in the Holy Spirit that they never knew before. This is a proof of Mr. Smith's divine call. Mr. Braden, when attempting to answer me, went completely back on Elders Moore, Garrison, Hawley, et al. He said he was aware how they were preaching and advocating "Holy Ghostism." Yes, says he: "Nine tenths of our people are falling in with that 'Holy Ghostism.'" Said, by thus doing, they tie themselves both hand and foot, and throw themselves into the laps of the Mormons. Here Braden went off on Holy Ghostism at a great rate. It was all hypnotism. People would get on hypnotic drunks and then call it Holv Ghostism. He come so eminent a man as Elder Moore to here acknowledged that the Mormons had reason and logic in their teachings regard.

ing the "baptism in the Holy Spirit." They taught that those that were so baptized should receive miraculous gifts of the Spirit, and that was correct. But a people that taught Holy Ghost baptism, then denied the miraculous gifts, were unreasonable and without logic. Such people only threw themselves into the laps of the Mormons, tied hand and foot.

I took advantage of some of these sayings, and during my speech walked over to Braden and thanked him for his eulogy, and for the information that we had nine tenths of his people converted to the truthfulness of the doctrine of Holy Ghostism. Here I made a feeling talk upon the promises of the Holy Ghost to all true believers, and defended the Baptists and Methodists in some of their teaching in regard to the "influence of the Spirit" with them. I captured that part of the congregation; but I did it with logic and truth; and while doing it I felt the power of the Spirit of the Master with me. Thanks to Him who sent the angel's message to Joseph the Seer.

MALLARD, Iowa, Nov. 4.

Dear Editors Herald:-Bro. W. H. Kephart held meetings at the Randal schoolhouse, six miles northeast of Mallard, the past two weeks. He preached nine sermons. The attendance was good and interest deep. There is a fine opening for preaching in that vicinity, and Bro. Kephart expects to preach there again in the near future.

The young people of the neighborhood were very good in helping with the singing and playing. The prevailing religions are Methodists and Baptists. They were very good to let us have the use of their organ; and with as good a speaker as Bro. Kephart the meetings were fine. There are many anxious to hear the gospel, and those who hear are pleased and desire to hear again.

I love the work, and think it is a glorious thing to be able to work for Jesus.

While I attended the late meetings it seemed to me it was just a little taste of missionary life.

Bro. Kephart is a very enthusiastic worker. and is ever on the alert for new fields. I think that is just what we need; and we as brothers and sisters in the church can help very much.

Of course we enjoy good sermons as well as any one; but there are many souls hungering for the gospel, and we do not want to withhold the bread of eternal life from them if it is within our hands to give.

Our branch is progressing in spirit if not in membership; but we hope to grow in that also. All seem anxious to do good; none have any desire to turn back to the path of -

We have a very good Religio society. The young people seem to enjoy our Religio services. Our membership is increasing. The young people outside of the church are becoming interested, and hand in their names for membership. I wish every branch might have a Religio society. Those out of the church will become interested and it will help the members keep them from wandering. It will cultivate their minds in various ways, and gives them a desire for the good things. I think it also creates a desire for good society; and any one will find it in the Religio, if it is carried on in the right way.

May the good work ever go on, is the prayer of Your sister in Christ.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:-I forward you this day copy of Stamford, Connecticut, Advocate, containing report of the discussion between Rev. C. J. Moon and Elder George W. Robley, at High Ridge, Connecticut. The conditions that gave rise to the discussion are these: Elder D. A. Anderson and the writer have conducted tent services in the surrounding neighborhoods for three months the past summer. Crowds (for country districts) have attended these meetings, and many are deeply interested in the gospel message. At Scott's Corner, during the early summer, seventeen were baptized. These circumstances, together with their liberality in supplying us with provisions and money, have had the usual effect upon sectarians. One gentleman, a devout Methodist, said he had "rather see twenty-five thousand rattlesnakes loose in the neighborhood," than see us there with our tent. No demonstration against the work occurred while we were present. The cool weather compelled us to occupy Mr. Holly's hall on going to Long Ridge. During our stay there the Congregational pastor, Mr. Moon, was reported by the people to have returned from his vacation and to be in town. Never a word from him. By arrangement with Elder William H. Kelley, Bro. Anderson and the writer attended conference in Boston, and prepared to labor for a season in the Massauchusetts district.

It was known by all the people among whom we had labored that we expected to be absent some length of time. Then the "moon arose in all its glory and power in an effort to crush out the gospel lights beginning to shine on High Ridge. He would tell them what we believed. He reckoned without his host. Elder G. W. Robley had entered this field, accompanied by Bishop Bullard, of Boston. Bro. Robley was well front in the church, taking notes. When this challenge came to any one in the house or on Long Ridge to refute his statements, our Providence boy arose and accepted. Mr. Moon stated publicly that he would canvass church propositions; but when visited by the brothren to so arrange, flatly refused. Neither would he affirm his own position, or be governed by any rules whatever.

Bro. Robley was obliged to affirm a negative proposition. A sectarian chairman allowed Mr. Moon to bring in new evidence during all his closing speech, refusing to listen to a point of order and yelling, "You keep still; he didn't interrupt you and I'll not allow you to interrupt him." One point urged by Mr. Moon was that "we were deceiving the people by covering up the Book of Mormon," not preaching it, etc. When it is considered that during the last month of our tent services more than ten consecutive sermons were preached upon the angel's message to Joseph Smith, gospel restoration, gathering of Israel, Book of Mormon, etc., using charts and Book of Mormon map thus better to enable people to understand, and that the "Voice of Warning," "Book of Mormon Vindicated." "Book of Mormon and its Translator," together with hundreds of HER-ALDS and Ensigns and tracts, with a dozen copies of the book itself were scattered through those regions, it is not difficult to see that Reverend Moon did not know what he was discussing. He remarked that he had a tract here called "Faith and Repentance," and that did not mention the Book of Mormon, hence they were frauds. Great wisdom, that! Many people knew he was making statements that lacked truth, and the Moon stock fell rapidly in consequence.

Bro. Robley did well, and is to be commended for his Christian deportment and able defense of the work. Additional friends were made. Already invitations are coming to him to preach in other neighborhoods. We feel that great good will result from the efforts of the brethren there.

Respectfully,

U. W. GREENE.

Dear Herald:—Our reunion in Kentucky was a very pleasant one. Twelve were baptized, and the Lord blessed his Saints with the presence of the Holy Spirit to the comforting of their souls. The preaching was uplifting and edifying to all. Three fine young men were called to the eldership and ordained. They are now preaching.

Bro. S. H. Fields is with W. R. Smith and is doing well; Bro. C. L. Snow has Bro. Luther M. McFadden with him, and I hope they are having success. Bro. J. R. McClain is preaching at his home near Fulton, Kentucky, and is blessed in his efforts.

After the reunion I visited at Sedalia, Kentucky, with Bro. D. W. Cook and family; spoke twice in the church there; had a pleasant time. The hard rains hindered our meetings, but I needed the rest, as my hoarseness was bad.

From Sedalia I went to Fulton, Kentucky, held one good prayer meeting with the few Saints living near there, also ordained Bro. McClain, before mentioned. On the 17th of October I left Fulton and set off for Alabama, arrived in Mobile on the morning of the 18th. Met Brn. Scarcliff, W. L. Booker, and others, whose names I have forgotten, on their way to Bay Minette to attend conference.

Saturday, the 19th, conference began at ten o'clock, W. L. Booker presiding. He did his work well, business passing off in good shape. The good Spirit was with us all through our meetings. Five were baptized on Sunday. Meetings were well attended by outsiders, and Sunday night the house was full and a number outside who could not get in. The writer held forth until Tuesday night, leaving a good interest at close.

I visited a few days with the Saints at their homes, enjoyed myself in so doing, and I hope they are none the worse for it.

On Friday, the 25th, in company with a number of others, we left Bay Minette for Garland to attend the conference of the Alabama district to begin Saturday, the 26th. Here I met a large number of Saints and was kindly received. By vote I was called to preside. Business passed off in a very pleasant way. The preaching was fraught with the Spirit of light, and much good was done. I never met a better behaved lot of young people in all my travels; they did good singing and are interested in the work. Some young men whom I am satisfied will in the near future be strong pillars in the church. On Sunday the large church would not hold the people. Aisles and all were full, and about forty or fifty were on the outside. The crowd was estimated at four hundred or more.

I am feeling more hopeful for the work in my field than ever. New life is coming to some who have been cold for a long time. There are some things to look after that are not pleasant to the missionary, but duty must be done lest greater evils come upon the church. My heart is rejoicing in the work, and my desire is to continue.

I came here Monday; will begin work here to-night. I am stopping with Bro. M. K. Harp, whose heart is in the work. My missionaries are busy and doing a very good work. Onward, brethren, to victory.

With love to all, and ill will to none, I am still in the faith, I. N. ROBERTS.

HAMLET, Ky., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:—Have baptized five more to-day at Davis Chapel, all heads of families. Others interested. So the work still rolls on, if Braden did "annihilate Mormonism." We go from here to Pugh school-house to-morrow. Hope we may have the waters to trouble again. Am feeling well. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

W. R. Smith.

OUNGAH, Ontario.

Editors Herald:—Just returned from the waters of baptism, where I administered the solemn ordinance to five very respectable and promising people. Others have expressed their desire, and I expect more next week. Had four school-teachers out to hear me the other evening; the Methodist preacher out last night and one night before. He took references and is investigating. I have been here over three weeks. Am having good liberty in private and in public. Elder Green, district president, is to be with me next Sunday. Hastily, ALVIN KNISLEY.

BEAVER, Utah, October 28.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Pender and the writer are still in the fight, and "the end is not yet, but by and by." We hope to go south from here, if the way opens. Now that the smoke has cleared away, we see that all seems to have settled down as before. There was talk of debate, but it has condensed itself into fine air. In bonds, PREPARNO READING FOR DECEMBER MEET-INGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION LOCALS.

In this day of rustle and hurry, when men and opinions are rushing to and fro on the earth, when mankind strives to live a week in a day, and when the great demand made upon the nervous strength is resulting in almost universal nervous cripples, a halt should be called long enough to catch a glimpse of the end toward which we tend. Eibert Hubbard, of East Aurora, New York, a gifted author, an elequent speaker, and a singular and unique character, is the author of "A Message to Garcia," which tells the truth so frankly and so plainly that none can mistake his meaning; and since it is the same thought that I would present to the Mothers in Zion. I quote it in full.

"In all this Cuban business there is one man stands out on the horizon of my memory like Mars at perihelion. When war broke out between Spain and the United States, it was very necessary to communicate quickly with the leader of the Insurgents. Garcia was somewhere in the mountain fastnesses of Cuba—no one knew where. No mail nor telegraph message could reach him. The President must secure his coöperation and quickly.

"What to do.

"Some one said to the President, 'There's a fellow by the name of Rowan will find Garcia for you, if anybody can.'

"Rowan was sent for and given a letter to be delivered to Garcia. How 'the fellow by the name of Rowan' took the letter, sealed it up in an oil-skin pouch, strapped it over his heart, in four days landed by night off the coast of Cuba from an open boat, disappeared into the jungle, and in three weeks came out on the other side of the island, having traversed a hostile country on foot, and delivered his letter to Garcia, are things I have no special desire now to tell in detail.

""The point I wish to make is this: McKinley gave Rowan a letter to be delivered to Garcia; Rowan took the letter and did not ask, 'Where is he at?' By the Eternal! there is a man whose form should be cast in deathless bronze and the statue placed in every college of the land. It is not booklearning young men need, nor instruction about this and that, but a stiffening of the vertebrae which will cause them to be loyal to a trust, to act promptly, concentrate their energies; do the thing—'carry a message to Garcia!'

"General Garcia is dead now, but there are other Garcias.

"No man, who has endeavored to carry out an enterprise where many hands were needed. but has been well-nigh appalled at times by the imbecility of the average man-the inability or unwillingness to concentrate on a thing and do it. Slipshod assistance, foolish inattention, dowdy indifference, and halfhearted work seem the rule: and no man succeeds unless by hook or crook, or threat, he forces or bribes other men to assist him; or mayhap, God in his goodness performs a miracle, and sends him an angel of light for an assistant. You, reader, put this matter to a test: You are sitting now in your office -six clerks are within call. Summon any one and make this request: 'Please look in the encyclopedia and make a brief memorandum for me concerning the life of Correggio.'

"Will the clerk quietly say, 'Yes, sir,' and go do the task?

"On your life, he will not. He will look at you out of a fishy eye, and ask one or more of the following questions:

"Who was he?

"Which encyclopedia?

"Where is the encyclopedia?

"Was I hired for that?

"Don't you mean Bismark?

"What's the matter with Charley doing it?

"Is he dead?

"Is there any hurry?

"Shan't I bring you the book and let you look it up yourself?

"What do you want to know for?

"And I will lay you ten to one that after you have answered the questions, and explained how to find the information, and why you want it, the clerk will go off and get one of the other clerks to help him try to find Garcia—and then come back and tell you there is no such man. Of course I may lose my bet, but according to the Law of Average, I will not.

"Now if you are wise you will not bother to explain to your 'assistant' that Correggio is indexed under the C's, not in the K's, but you will smile sweetly and say, 'Never, mind,' and go look it up yourself.

"And this incapacity for independent action, this moral stupidity, this infirmity of the will, this unwillingness to cheerfully catch hold and lift, are the things that put pure socialism so far into the future. If men will not act for themselves, what will they do when the benefit of their effort is for all? A first mate with knotted club seems necessary; and the dread of getting 'the bounce' Saturday night holds many a worker to his place.

"Advertise for a stenographer, and nine out of ten who apply can neither spell nor punctuate—and do not think it necessary to.

"Can such a one write a letter to Garcia?" You see that book-keeper,' said the foreman to me in a large factory.

"Yes, what about him?"

"Well, he's a fine accountant, but if I'd send him up town on an errand, he might accomplish the errand all right, and, on the other hand, might stop at four saloons on the way, and when he got to Main street, would forget what he had been sent for.'

"Can such a man be entrusted to carry a message to Garcia?

"We have recently been hearing much maudlin sympathy expressed for the 'downtrodden denizen of the sweat-shop' and the 'homeless wanderer searching for honest employment,' and with it all often go masy hard words for the men in power.

"Nothing is said about the employer who grows old before his time in a vain attempt to get frowsy ne'er-do-wells to do intelligent work: and his long patient striving with 'help' that does nothing but loaf when his back is turned. In every store and factory there is a constant weeding-out process going on. The employer is constantly sending away 'help' that have shown their incapacity to further the interests of the business, and others are being taken on. No matter how good times are, this sorting continues, only if times are hard and work is scarce, the sorting is done finer-but out and forever out, the incompetent and unworthy go. It is the survival of the fittest. Self-interest prompts every employer to keep the bestthose who can carry a message to Garcia.

"I know one man of really brilliant parts who has not the ability to manage a business of his own, and yet who is absolutely worthless to any one else, because he carries with him constantly the insane suspicion that his employer is oppressing, or intending to oppress, him. He can not give orders, and he will not receive them. Should a message be given him to take to Garcia, his answer would probably be, 'Take it yourself.'

"To-night this man walks the streets looking for work, the wind whistling through his threadbare coat. No one who knows him dare employ him, for he is a regular firebrand of discontent. He is impervious to reason, and the only thing that can impress him is the toe of a thick-soled No. 9 boot.

Of course I know that one so morally deformed is no less to be pitied than a physical cripple, but in our pitying, let us drop a tear, too, for the men who are striving to carry on a great enterprise, whose working hours are not limited by the whistle, and whose hair is fast turning white through the struggle to hold in line dowdy indifference, slipshod imbecility, and the heartless ingratitude which, but for their enterprise, would be both hungry and homeless.

"Have I put the matter too strongly? Possibly I have; but when all the world has gone a-slumming I wish to speak a word of sympathy for the man who succeeds—the man who, against great odds, has directed the efforts of others, and, having succeeded, finds there's nothing in it: nothing but bare board and clothes.

"I have carried a dinner-pail and worked for day's wages, and I have also been an employer of labor, and I know there is something to be said on both sides. There is no excellence, per se, in poverty; rags are no recommendation; and all employers are not rapacious and high-handed, any more than all poor men are virtuous.

"My heart goes out to the man who does his work when the 'boss' is away, as well as when he is at home. And the man who, when given a letter for Garcia, quietly takes the missive, without asking any idiotic questions, and with no lurking intention of chucking it into the nearest sewer, or of doing aught else but deliver it, never gets 'laid off,' nor has to go on a strike for higher wages. Civilization is one long anxious search for just such individuals. Anything such a man asks shall be granted; his kind is so rare that no employer can afford to let him go. He is wanted in every city, town, and village-in every office, shop, store, and factory. The world cries out for such: he is needed, and needed badly-the man who can carry a message to Garcia."

A half century ago, if the parent asked the child to do any certain thing, he did not ask why, or what for, but answered "Yes sir," and went at it. To-day, instead of this being the rule, it is the exception. "Why?" "What do you want that for?" etc., etc., are substituted for the "Yes sir," and prompt obedience of fifty years ago. I do not say that children should not be told the why of any requirement made of them by their parents or instructors; rather, I should say that if enough of the reason can be stated when the request is made so that the child understands the meaning of his labor, it is better to so state it; but, when lack of time or pressure of circumstances is such that it is not convenient for the parent to state briefly the reasons when a request is made of a child. the child should never be permitted to delay obedience by so much time as it would take to ask why. If he really and truly wants to know why, let him wait until time for rest is granted him and then bring his "whys?" which should be as fully satisfied as is possible on part of the parents.

The great danger confronting the church as a church, the nation as a nation, is the growing disrespect for law-the rebellion against authority. The child of to-day does not hesitate to question the necessity of requirements made of him, but goes so far as to assert, and put such assertion into action. "that no one has any right to direct or restrain him." Mr. Hubbard says what the young men need "is a stiffening of the vertebrae which will cause them to be loyal to a trust, to act promptly, concentrate their energies; do the thing-'carry a message to Garcia.'" There is a deplorable lack of firmness and strength of will and character which the child needs if he would become a man. That lack of "stiffening," that lack of strength, comes from their lack of training in prompt and willing obedience.

A MODEL SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

There should be

in the Sunday-school work. All should try to realize that what the Sunday-school is doing is the work of Christ, and let this be uppermost in our minds at all times. It is well understood that cooperation of Sunday-school officers and teachers is very necessary; for without cowork in all departments a school will not be a success.

The parents can do much toward a model school, by giving their children

INSTRUCTIONS AT HOME.

I once attended a Sunday-school where, when the teachers were ready to take up class collections, a dozen or more little ones had to promenade around to their parents to get their offering for the class. Not only once has this been done in the same school, but repeatedly. But alas! that was not a model school. Children should be supplied with their offering before school is called to order. Teach them not to rattle pennies or whisper when some one is offering prayer.

TEACH THEM TO TAKE PART

in responsive reading-those who are old enough-those who are not should be instructed to keep quiet. Parents should make it a point to attend Sunday-school; and instead of staying at home to rest and sleep, come with the children, and thus encourage the young; and those that are inclined to be noisy and mischievous will know just how far to go, when parents' eyes are upon them. Sometimes the younger ones get careless when they find that parents take no interest in the Sunday-school. This is one way the children get discouraged. One great help in the Sunday-school is for every one to come prepared. Let the parents or brothers or sisters interest themselves in helping the little ones at home to learn the lessons assigned them. The parent can do much to help the child by studying the lesson with him. If the lesson has been well studied at home, how quickly you can tell it by the sparkling eye and eagerness to answer each question. Many of us think we have but little time for this study, with the hurry and worry of household cares; but may be we had better use a little of our precious time with the child, so that it may bring forth fruit in its season. Fathers and mothers who take an interest in the Sunday-school work, not only benefit themselves, but by their example the children are encouraged to greater diligence.

Sabbath-schools should have a PLENTIFUL SUPPLY of song books, so that every child may have the opportunity to assist in song service. Nearly all children love to sing, and will gladly do so if encouraged by parents and teachers. Cards to the little ones and papers to those who can read should be reckoned among the indispensables.

A model school should be

PUNCTUAL.

Why not be on time, and especially the officers and teachers? I see by glancing over my paper that I have come far short of the subject, and have merely made mention of but a few things that will help to make the school a model one. SUSIE WOLF.

For the Far West, Missouri, district convention.

TEMPERANCE.

I believe we should be and think it also our duty to be temperate in all things; but first we should all understand what temperance is. Temperance is a total abstinence from that which is harmful, and a moderate use of that which is needful.

I believe there are some people in this world who think temperance is only abstaining from strong drink, but I beg to differ with those who believe this, for God admonished the Saints in former days to be temperate, so he certainly requires it of us now.

We are especially commanded in Doctrine and Covenants to be temperate in all things. I believe we should be temperate in eating, dressing, our conversation, and everything.

Many people are not temperate in dress, which many times leads them to pride and selfishness. We read also in Doctrine and Covenants, that our garments should be plain.

There are many sinful pleasures in the world which lead us to intemperance, such as going to dances, attending theaters, going to ball games, and many others which are not suitable for those to attend who are trying to serve God.

Let us remember that God does not look on sin with the least degree of allowance.

Some young men have an idea that they do not look like gentlemen unless they smoke cigarettes, cigars, and a filthy pipe, and also drinking a glass of wine occasionally; but we hardly ever see a young boy start out in life like this unless he becomes a drunkard, and even before he realizes that he is on the downward road, he is so far gone that he has lost all the confidence of his parents, his friends, and almost every one. How often this is the case with young mer! They do not think of the harm that is hidden in smoking the first cigarette, which is probably offered them by a friend, and is accepted, which of course if it were not, would be taken as an insult.

But suppose for instance, it were refused, saying they did not care to indulge in the habit of smoking, as he had never tried it, certainly his friend would take this as an insult, and probably with the help of others, who indulged in it, they would persuade him to smoke one, they now think they have done their work, and are well pleased to think they have converted one more. Now our friend has taken the first one, and certainly he now craves for one more, and so on till he finds he can not stop.

In smoking, he of course craves a desire for strong drink, and after the first glassful is taken, this desire is increased as much as that for smoking; and starting in this way they nearly always continue from bad to worse, till at last it seems they are lost entirely. Now they certainly must reap what they have sown; and sad it is indeed.

But alas! They are not the only ones who suffer, and have suffered, from their condition. Think of their parents who must see them spending their lives in such a sinful way.

In regard to conversation, I would say we should also be temperate. I believe it is very sinful to use slang words, use a great deal of of idle talk; in these things, and a great many others, I believe we should all try to be temperate.

WHY I USE THE QUARTERLY.

I find the Quarterly of great benefit to me in teaching. Many have not time to take subjects and study up references, their business life requiring so much of their time. Then weariness following, very little time is left for study of any kind; but one can learn much by looking over the lessons in the Quarterly a little at a time. One thing, it is condensed and the most essential references given. Others can be looked at another time. And if not, enough can be learned to be of great benefit to the scholar. Enough so if one never reads more, he can have quite an understanding of the Bible. Then there is the historic value to be considered of the Quarterly. Many have no histories of value in their homes; and we feel we can rely on what we have in the Quarterly. And very many times no other is ever read. Many have time to study but little.

Again, the Quarterly is so well arranged that much can be learned in a few minutes. Time being so limited in Sabbath-school hour, I find the Quarterly the very best thing to use.

Verbal reports were then given by district superintendent and assistant; also by Charles Forney, superintendent of Thurman school. The secretary then read the report of the schools; all schools of the district having reported. A discussion followed and a motion prevailed that the time of the local secretaries' reports close two weeks previous to conventions and be approved the Sunday previous. It was farther moved that district secretary be authorized to send a copy of this resolution to each local secretary. District treasurer, M. E. Pace, reported $10 56 in the treasury. Decided by vote that we meet at same place and the Thursday night previous to next district conference. Remaining time was devoted to talk and blackboard outline on "Preparing to teach the lesson," J. F. Mintun. Afternoon session was drill on parliamentary law in charge of C. Fry. ### BISHOP'S NOTICES.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Texas and Choctaw District, Greeting:—As the current year is drawing to a close, I thought perhaps a brief report of the condition of our district, along with one or two other suggestions, might not be amiss.

At our last conference, at Douglass, Texas, the attendance was good and the Saints seemed to receive strength and encouragement. The preaching and testimony services were all, as I believe, highly satisfactory and entertaining from first to last, and all seemed to return to their homes feeling that good had been accomplished.

The reports from Brn. Erwin and Henson, who labor in Northern Texas, have been encouraging. Bro. J. W. Jackson and the local forces have not been idle in Western Arkansas, all laboring as best they could under the circumstances, and we believe that good has been accomplished.

Bro. H. O. Smith held forth for a number of days at Cove and Grannis, and some were baptized at the latter place. The work there seems to be in a fairly good condition and some are interested. Lam highly pleased to state that the Wilburton branch is in a much better condition than it has been for a long time, and all seem to be working with a renewed determination to push forward the work. Bro. Grimes has been in charge of the work there for some time with good results. They now have the material on the ground and a good house of worship partly under construction, which we hope will be finished by the time that our next quarterly conference convenes at that place, which will be November 22, 1901. We hope to have a good attendance. The president of the mission, Bro. H. O Smith, will be there, and we rather expect Bro. W. N. Robinson, who is an able Sunday school instructor, to be in attendance. Also some of the Saints at Independesce expect to be there to assist with the music.

As the funds in the general treasury of the church, for the support of the missionaries, are at this time very low, we hope the Saints will remember the necessities of the work along temporal lines. In the past you have come nobly to the rescue of the financial arm of the service, and while the present year has not been one of great prosperity, still we hope and believe that through individual effort enough tithing will be forthcoming to prevent any of the missionaries having to leave their fields of labor for lack of assist-

Trusting that we may have a full attendance at our coming conference and that a profitable time may be had, I am,

Your brother, ELLIS SHORT, Dist. Pres.

WGYPT.

Traveling in Egypt is picturesquely set before the readers of the Catholic World in the November issue of that magazine. Describing the great temple of Rameses, the author

"Our course along the upper Nile led through Nubia, giving the sight of many ruins—the temple at Abu-Simbal proving the most noted object. In fact there were two of these rock-temples, built by Rameses II., the inscriptions in Greek dating from 502 B C, telling that when Psammeticus came to Elephantine the writers—giving their names—also went to that place by way of Kerkis. But far more grand and imposing was the one that met us at Abu-Simbal, being cut from the solid rock, or rather, built into its steep face. The facade itself is formed by cutting away a square space of one hundred feet, having a cornice of seated cynocephali—truly, a magnificent setting for so imposing a structure. The entrance is flanked by four colossi of Rameses, while over the portal, in a niche, stands the Sungod Ra, towering in majesty above the others. One can form an idea of their size by saying that one big toe-nail of Rameses by saying that one big toe-nail of Rameses. The figures are well preserved, one figure alone being minus its head and arms. From the many photographs so accessible the benignant and life-like expressions can be readily recalled.

"Equally so are the faces looking forth from the eight Osiride columns in the entrance hall, on which are sculptured the memorable deeds of the great Rameses. rooms leading from this grand vestibule are always seen mural sculptures similar to the preceding. A smaller pillared hall opens into another, bringing to view what seemed Here were seated statues of a sanctuary. Amen, Ptah, Borus, with Rameses the Great, or Sesostris. Various lateral chambers and halls are ever and anon seen, all with their historic sculptures telling in mute language of the long buried past, rousing wonder and admiration as we trace the footsteps of that ancient people, walking the earth centuries

"The excavation for this magnificent temple reaches a depth of two hundred feet. Others still are much larger; but being built of stone, in blocks, excite less wonder than if hewn from the solid rock. We climbed through deep sand to its summit, and were abundantly repaid for the toilsome ascent by the magnificent view up and down the river, illuminated by a gorgeous sunset.'

Every member of the household, and every part of the house, has been considered in these remembrances, which will appeal as much on ac-count of their ease of construction as their beauty and their utility.

WHAT IS INTERNATIONAL LAW?

It is this question as between natural and positive law which, more than anything else, has given rise to so much confusion in treat ing of the law of nations. Is international law the code of conduct actually observed by nations, or is it that which they ought to observe—all too often radically different things? In other words, does the law come first and practice afterwards, or vice versa?

It does not seem necessary to accept either of these propositions wholly to the exclusion of the other, though it must be confessed that complications arise when we attempt to combine the two Such an attempt was made by Wheaton (1785-1848), one of the standard writers on international law, who defined his subject as consisting of "those rules of conduct which reason deduces, as consonant to justice, from the nature of the society existing among independent nations; with such definitions and modifications as may be established by general consent." The work of Robert Phillimore, perhaps the greatest in the English language, is based upon essentially the same idea, having for its object to establish that states as well as individuals have a sphere of duty assigned to them by God and in the fulfillment of which they are to be guided by great fundamental principles of right not of their own making." The safest conclusion upon this whole matter would seem to be that the science of international law must be evolved from the actual relations of nations brought into reasonable conformity with generally recognized principles of justice. Natural law is thus conceived to form the more or less vague and shadowy background, while positive law stands out in bold and unquestioned relief. The division which some have made between natural law of nations (ethical and moral) and positive law of nations (usage or practice) may prove permanently helpful. The continental school of writers lays special emphasis upon the former, the English, including the American, upon the latter. The one is more logical and systematic, the other more practical and systematic, the other more practical and sensible.—From "The Law of Nations," by Frederic Austin Ogg, in The Chatauquan Magazine for November.

Those interested in the "American standard I nose interested in the American standard Edition of the Revised Bible," will find in the October number of the Biblical World an ar-ticle by Clyde W. Votaw, of the University of Chicago, in which a history of the revision is given, together with a description of what the text is the text is.

Besides this, the October number contains other well-written and interesting articles.

Doubleday, Page & Co., announce that their magizine, Country Life in America, has found a welcome of unexpected proportions and enthusiasm. The published announcement has led to orders for more than the first edition and of advance subscriptions from wouldbe readers in unexpected numbers. One prominent gentleman in New York so approved of the idea as told of in a newspaper that he sent fifteen subscriptions for himself and friends weeks before he could possibly receive the first issue. Not only does the idea of Country Life in America appeal to all who love the country, but the name of the Editor, L. H. Bailey, of Cornell, gives solid assurance that the magazine will be popular, interesting, beautiful, and of high standard. Certainly, no more superbly illustrated magazine has ever been printed.
To make sure of a "fair start," the publishers issued a complete sample number and have improved vastly upon this, now that they have finally issued the initial number. Among the contents is an article by the editor on Abandoned Farms, what they are and what may be done with them, with charming illustrations; an illustrated account of Ex-Governor Levi P. Morton's place, Ellerslie; a two page collection of suggestive pictures of Pleasant Country Homes; the history of the frog from tadpole to froghood, with remarkable photographs by A. R. Dugmore made from life; articles on planting the lawn, the art of letting things grow, the newest fruits, and a vast amount of practical matter about the garden, the greenhouse, and even the window box, all of which is abundantly illustrated.

The Christmas number of the Woman's Home Companion will contain the beginning of a series of articles on "Women in War." They will deal with the heroism and devotion of women in the battles of the Rebellion. Honorable Albert J. Beveridge, United States Senator from Indiana, has spent the past five months in the Far East investigating commercial and political conditions, studying international relations, appraising National resources, and conferring with men who are establishing the Eastern policy of the European powers. The vast amount of information thus secured at first hand Senator Beveridge will embody in a series of noteworthy papers, the first of which will appear November 16 in The Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia.

Senator Beveridge is a trained writer and a trained observer, and he has infused traordinary interest into subjects that mi make dull reading if less brilliantly hand

By advice from Bro. Kelley, we learn that he will leave England November 16, and will reach home about December 1.

Advices from Wellington, New Zealand, dated November 18, state that a severe earthquake has occurred in Canterbury province, in which considerable damage was done. Cheviot township was devastated, a child killed, and several persons were injured.

PLATTE D. LYMAN, son of the former Apostle Amasa Lyman, of the old church, died at San Juan, Utah, November 13, of cancer. He succeeded Elder F. A. Hammond in the Presidency of the San Juan Stake, Utah, who was killed by accident. He is highly spoken of by those who knew

In a recent speed contest on Long Island, Henri Fournier, the famous French chaffeur, went a mile in 51% seconds.

IS THE CHURCH RESPONSIBLE?

It is not often that the HERALD has anything to say about the local happenings at Lamoni, other than some events of general importance to the church at large. But, conditions sometimes change policies, and it is so in this instance.

Some few years ago, Dr. J. W. Crofford, a practicing physician, moved into Lamoni, and began the practice of medicine. After awhile he established an institution in a building erected on one of the principal streets by Bro. Thomas France and sons, which he called Crofford's Sanitarium. Here the doctor set up his medical family and advertised for business.

Last January a young woman by the name of Maud Stone, the daugh ter of a farmer living near Decatur City, a town some ten miles north of Lamoni, was brought to this sanitarium for treatment, and in a few days she died.

The friends of Miss Stone, including her mother, demanded that a post mortem examination be made to ascertain the cause of death, if it could be discovered. This was done, and the result of the coroner's inquiry was that Dr. Crofford was indicted upon the charge of murder, upon the technical ground that the woman had died from the use of unclean instruments used by the doctor in producing an abortion.

Upon this indictment the doctor was tried at the November term of the Circuit Court of Decatur county, before Judge Towner, and was by the jury sitting to hear the case found guilty of murder in the second degree; and was sentenced by Judge Towner to thirteen years' confinement in the penitentiary. From the result of this trial the doctor has appealed. Whether this appeal will be heard and allowed, is not yet decided.

This is a brief story of the case, so far as Dr. J. W. Crofford is concerned. There is a young man whose name is Ira Hammond involved in the case. who has not yet been tried, though he is charged with crime in connection with it.

The reason why we notice this case

There has been in Decatur county a class of citizens, which from the first of the settlement of the Saints in never been. Neither are her parents, the county have tried, like others of the same sort in the past history of the church, to attach blame and liability to crime to the church as a body, whenever any wrong doing has been done in the neighborhood where the Saints live. This has been done notably in regard to Lamoni. So, in the case of Dr. Crofford.

Now that the case has been heard and Dr. Crofford found guilty, the fact of the establishment of the sanitarium in Lamoni, the irregular practices charged against the doctor, and the fatal outcome of the sickness of Miss Stone, are in a sort of moral way laid at the charge of the church.

A reporter writing from Leon, the county seat, while the trial of Dr. Crofford was going on, reported to one of the papers at the state capital, that the doctor is a medical practitioner in a little town in the south part of the state celebrated as the place where there is a considerable settlement of "Mormons." This was a slur upon the church, whether the reporter so intended, or not. there was no more necessity to so describe the town in connection with Dr. Crofford and his crime, than there was to describe the county seat as being a town in which there is a considerable number of Christians, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Methodists, in connection with the same case.

Dr. J. W. Crofford is not a member of the church; nor is any one of his medical household that we are aware of. His sanitarium is his own personal and private venture. His practice as a physician has been conducted by him in his own way; and he has conducted his affairs without any reference to the church, or any of its officers or members. He has neither asked the church, nor any of its officers, for advice or counsel in regard to the establishing his institution in the town, or in regard to its conduct after it was established. Nor has any officer of the church interfered in the business, or medical affairs of the Doctor. The church has minded its own business and allowed Dr. Crofford to attend to his, the same as it has done the other business men of the church, or those out of the church.

Neither the young woman nor the young man who got her into trouble is a member of the church, and have nor the friends who were involved in the case.

But it is whispered by the class of mischief makers first referred to, that "the Mormons," the "church at Lamoni, are backing Dr. Crofford in his fight to escape justice; and are keeping back what they know of his practices in order to shield him."

This is not true of the church at Lamoni, referred to in the slanderous statement, no more than it is of the Methodist Church and its following in Lamoni. Whatever any single member, or any members may have known in regard to the practices of Dr. Crofford, by reason of their proximity to his place of business, is known to them as citizens of the county and state, the same as their neighbors of the M. E. or the Holiness Church. And it is the act of thoughtless and idle viciousness, or it is the act of wicked and evil-minded men to charge the church with any sort of complicity in the crime of Dr. J. W. Crofford.

As a member of the Reorganized Church, to whom the membership of the church at Lamoni is almost all personally known, we, for them and in our own behalf deny any knowledge of or responsibility for the actions of Dr. Crofford in his criminal practices.

The crime with which Dr. J. W. Crofford has been charged, that of abortion and murder as a result, is specially abhorrent to the church. Its teaching is that infanticide is murder; that no murderer will inherit eternal life; that unlawful cohabitation, infanticide, incest, abortion, are crimes, dark and damning, of which the courts should take cognizance and punish the criminals.

We have no fellowship with that sentiment of morbid proscription prevalent among certain classes of society, of which Decatur county has its share, which ascribes blame for crimes committed in vicinities where Latter Day Saints may chance to dwell, to the church. Such charge is not true, nor are those who make it manly and honest in making it.

The citizens of Lamoni, belonging to the dominant church, are as a class as good citizens as there are in the county. They do not control the whole community, nor do they try to; but what efforts they can lawfully make to prevent evil and wrong doing they put forth. The church teaches the best of morality; and if any in the village stray from right paths, it is not the fault of the teaching of the church, nor the result of the example and advice of its officers.

If Dr. J. W. Crofford is guilty, he should be punished to the extent his crime deserves. If he is not guilty, he should not be punished. The court has said that he was guilty, and it is not the province of any man, churchman or non-churchman, to stay the edict of the court.

We respect the court and the sentence of Judge Towner.

A NEW WRITER ON THE LAMON! SAINTS.

Mormonism and polygamy are not synonomous, as most persons believe. There is today a large and apparently permanent organization of Mormons, commonly known as Latter Day Saints, with almost 50,000 communicants, who not only disbelieve in plurality of wives, but actually oppose and denounce the practice.

This sect resembles the Utah organization in many respects. They claim to be the only true Mormons and the only faithful disciples of Joseph Smith. With headquarters at Lamoni, a small town of about 2,000 inhabitants, located in the choicest part of Decatur county, Iowa, and under the leadership of Joseph Smith, Jr., who is a son of Joseph Smith, the "seer," these people send out elders and missionaries to every state and territory in the union, and to nearly every nation of the earth, including the islands of the seas. Under the direction of their President they founded this colony or settlement in 1881, when a committee, consisting of David Dancer and Elijah Banta, came from Piano, Illinois, then their headquarters, to the prairies of Southern Iowa, where a company was formed, which purchased all the land it could secure. This same land was afterward sold to their brethren who followed within a few years. Forty-seven families came at once. Lamoni was founded and named from a familiar character in the Book of Mormon. Mormons then came within a short time by the carload and even by the trainload from every part of the United States and at present there are several thousands of them living in Decatur and surrounding counties.

LAMONI A SACRED TOWN.

Lamoni is a wonderful and even a sacred town in the eyes of the average Mormon. They speak of it as "Zion." In this little out-of-the-way village lives Joseph Smith, Jr., President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as they believe, one favored of God, whose father blessed and transmitted to him all the powers of prophecy, healing, of receiving revelations and performing miracles, which the elder Smith claimed to possess. Bishop E. L. Kelley also resides here and is next in order of the great and powerful men chosen of God of the great and powerful men chosen of Gouto lead his people in these latter days. He is first counselor to the president. Then comes Alexander Smith, Patriarch, son of Joseph Smith, Sr., and also counselor to the President. These three are known as the First Presidency. To these men all true members of the church singerchy believe that God of the church sincerely believe that God, through his angels, appears and reveals his will and pleasure concerning his chosen peo-There is also a Quorum of Twelve who ordain elders, baptize, and claim to have the gift of administering the blessings of the Holy Ghost. The seven quorums of seventy are the elders and missionaries who preach the "truth" to the world. There is also a quorum of high priests and many other minor officers. The organization is patterned after the early church. Nearly every man who belongs to this church is either elder, priest, or teacher. Mormons are aggressive and they want members. They are all well stocked with a knowledge of their church and its doctrines and every possible means is used to convert to their faith those who happen to live among or near them.

SOME MORMON INSTITUTIONS.

Lamoni has a Mormon college, a large tabernacle, an extensive publishing house, where the SAINTS' HERALD, a weekly paper, and many other periodicals and books are published. It has three public school buildings, a "Saints' Home," and no saloons, although intoxicating drinks often find their way through the borders of Zion.

All aged saints who have not the means or ability to support themselves may go to the home, where they are clothed and fed. If they desire, they are allowed to do light work in the various departments. David Dancer, who died some years ago, was the originator of the idea of building a home for the aged poor and gave liberally toward its establishment. His plan was to make it as nearly as possible a self-supporting institution.

STORY OF JOE SMITH.

Many persons have heard the story of a young man born in Vermont in 1805, who, when but 14 years of age, became intensely interested in his sou.'s welfare and failed to find comfort in any of the churches of his day, having joined several of them. It is said that this young man was one night out in the woods praying for guidance in the matter, when an angel from God appeared to him and in a wonderful and powerful voice informed him that he had found favor in the sight of God, and that he was chosen to give to the world again the only true religion of the latter days, which had been taken from it many years before. He was told where there were buried near Palmyra, New York, a set of golden plates, which he must dig up and with them he would find the "Urim and Thummim," two transparent stones set as a pair of spectacles and by the aid of them only would he be enabled to translate the message from God. This is said to have transpired in 1819 and it was not until April 6, 1830, at Manchester, New York, that this man chosen of God was enabled to found the Mormon church.

The Book of Mormon purports to be a sacred history of the aborigines of the American continent and the Mormons believe that Christ preached to these Mound-Builders during his forty days' absence from the Old World, and that after his ascension these people fought with the Indians, who were a wicked and cursed race, until 384 A. D., when a decisive battle was fought on the hill of Cumorah, in western New York, in which the Christians were defeated and annihilated. A man by the name of Mormon is said to have written a history of this people and was directed of God to bury it until he should see fit to bring it forth. This history they believe is the Book of Mormon.

Smith found followers and in 1831 settled in Kirtland, Ohio, where a temple was erected. In 1838 they pushed west to Missouri, but were driven out in 1839 and went back to Nauvoo, Illinois, where another temple was built. January 27, 1844, Joseph Smith and his brother, Hiram, were killed by a mob at the jail where they were confined in Carthage, Illinois. The Mormons then had differences and troubles among themselves in that community. Brigham Young, with about 10.000 followers, went to Salt Lake City in 1847. There were no less than eighteen men ambitious to succeed the dead leader and as many divisions were made, each with its president, every one claiming to be chosen of God by revelation to succeed Smith. The Josephites, as they are sometimes called, and which is the Lamoni branch, was not permanently organized until June, 1852, when they held their first conference at Zarahemla, Wisconsin. Their annual conference is now held in April of every year. Last spring they met at Independence, Missouri, which is another Mormon stronghold, and next year they will meet at Lamoni. They expect to make public at their next annual conference their plan for the organization of "stakes." They will measure or stake out sacred tracts of land, one at Lamoni, and the other at Independence, where they believe that Christ will first appear on earth when he comes again to his elect.

These Mormons believe in the Old and New Testaments, the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, which they claim are latterday revelations from God. They believe in miracles, revelations, prophecies, the interpretation of unknown tongues, the anointing of the head with oil and laying on of hands to heal the sick and to receive the bicssings of the Holy Ghost. They believe that immersion is the only true mode of baptism and that they will inherit the earth as an eternal abode after the millennium. They claim not to believe in the sealing of spiritual wives, but their enemies say that they encourage this practice secretly. In receiving their revelations from God the church takes a vote on each one separately and decides on its genuineness. Sometimes two revelations on the same subject submitted by different men conflict in every respect.

NORMAN W. LAWHORN.

The foregoing appeared in the Omaha Bee in a late September number; and as we happen to know the writer, we think a reproduction of the article in the HERALD may interest the readers, and possibly benefit Mr. Lawhorn.

As will be seen, much of the article is fair; and were it not for some inaccuracies it might be left to take the usual course of such articles. Mr. Lawhorn is a young man who was raised in Decatur county and has had a partial home at Lamoni, which we suppose has had something to do with giving his article place in the Bee's columns. He studied law from the county, and his mother and other relatives reside near Lamoni.

The article contained protographs of Pres. J. Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, "Matcheora" (Metuaore), one brother from the South Sea Islands, and brother Noah Karahoo, a Cherokee, whose name Mr. Lawhorn gave as "Korah, a Comanche Indian, who is a Mormon elder."

Mr. Lawhorn errs in the date of the settlement founded at Lamoni, as it was in 1871, ten years earlier than he gives the date. The Editor of the HERALD came in October, 1881, and there was a town of some four hundred and fifty people at that time. Forty-seven persons came in at the time the HERALD plant was established in the place, but not forty-seven families. No such large immigration at one time took place that we ever knew of.

Mr. Lawhorn errs again in calling the settlers at Lamoni "Mormons." It may be the handiest name for a writer outside of the church to use to designate the people to whom he desires to call attention; but he should know, as we think he does, that the church of which he wrote does not acknowledge the title. It is not their distinctive appellation.

The writer errs again in stating that Lamoni is a "sacred town," and that it is spoken of as "Zion" by the people of the church of which he writes. The members of the church have a decided interest in behaving themselves as citizens in such way as to keep the town clean and healthy, in both a temporal and spiritual sense; and in that sense, not only Lamoni, but every other town in which the members may have homes should be sacred, and places where "Zion, the pure in heart," should dwell.

Righteousness is not a product of the soil, whether it be the soil of Iowa, or of Palestine. It is the righteous acts and lives of the people which make earthly places holy. Not every hill was eligible for a Golgotha, nor a site for the Temple. There was divine purpose in the choosing of the spot whereon the tabernacle was pitched and where the ark rested. And there may be such purpose held in the choosing the places to which God's people, and those who choose to heed his holy word, "Stand ye in holy places" in honor, may gather and build their homes and establish their altar fires. In this sense and only this do the Saints hold any place sacred.

The writer errs again in writing that the "young man" "joined several" of the churches. Joseph Smith's name was placed on the class book of his brother-in-law, Stephen Morse, as a probationer; but before the term of probation had expired, class leader Morse was directed by the pastor to drop Smith from the roll, reason not assigned.

It may be just possible that to such act as this might be traced the strong dislike entertained by Joseph Smith and his associates and successors against injustice in any form.

against injustice in any form.

The "pushing west," referred to by this writer, began in 1831-32, and it was in 1833 that the church was mobbed in Jackson county, Missouri, their press destroyed, a number of their men tarred and feathered and beaten; and it was in 1838 that they were driven out of Missouri and sought a refuge in Illinois.

The writer errs again, in giving January, 1844, that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed at Carthage, Illinois. This killing of these men took place June 27, 1844.

Mr. Lawhorn seems not to believe in the prophetic afflatus, but indulges in a little forecasting in the sentence, "They will measure or stake out sacred tracts of land, one at Lamoni, and the other at Independence, where they believe that Christ will first appear on earth when he comes again to his elect."

We regret that Mr. Lawhorn should have ended his article in which he evidently tried to be fair, with two quite unnecessary and possibly mischievous statements. He writes:

They claim not to believe in the sealing of spiritual wives, but their enemies say that they encourage the practice secretly.

Mr. Lawhorn has lived among the people at Lamoni whom he has essayed to represent in his article, and if at the time of his residence there he knew of any such "secret" encouragement, or had his information from reliable sources, as a good citizen he should have exposed those guilty, by a proper action at law. The people of the church are but a moiety of the citizenship of the county of Decatur. have not a member in the leading offices of the county, except the treasurer, and county attorney; and could not resist legal enforcement of the laws for the peace, tranquility, and safety to the morals of the county, if they would; and there has not been a single case of resistance to the legal enforcement of the laws by any member of the church since the settlement at Lamoni was made. And it is notorious that it was by the efforts of the church that the liquor traffic was stopped in the town; and by their efforts that it is kept out, except for the surreptitious introduction of intoxicants through the "borders of Zion," referred to; which if it be done, we are pleased to believe is not done by the members of the church. but by those who are "in Zion," but not of Zion.

Who are these "enemies" of the Latter Day Saints, who say that these people secretly encourage "sealing of spiritual wives" while openly claiming to believe in the evil practice? Why should this writer spoil his effort to be fair by throwing in at the close of his article so manifest a thrust at the sincerity and honor of the people of whom he writes? Are such enemies the ones from whom the public should be informed in regard to their neighbors?

Again, this writer mistakes: There has never been "two revelations on the same subject, submitted by different men," which conflicted "in every respect."

We have been an active participant in the church councils for over forty years, and have yet to witness such a case. The writer must have written out of his imagination, or has been willfully misled by one of the "enemies," of which he wrote.

In the clipping from the Chicago Record-Herald for November 10, sent us by Bro. W. E. Messenger, we note:

JAPAN.

Mr. Na Tung, Chinese envoy of apology, brought with him a great many valuables which he intended to present to the emperor, but unfortunately the greater part of them were found to be broken on their arrival in this country. Mr. Na Tung also brought 10,000 copies of books which he presented to libraries and other institutions. It may be added that the police authorities did not take any particular steps about guarding the person of Mr. Na Tung during his stay in this country, except on the occasion of his visiting the cemetery, where the late Mr. Sugiyama is buried when a few mounted sergeants were in attendance.

ERNEST W. CLEMENT.

TOKYO, Oct. 6.

The Mormon missionaries who have arrived in Japan on a mission of propaganda have submitted their application for permission to preach and teach in Japan and to enjoy the privileges extended to other religious bodies. It is stated that their application contains a solemn declaration in the sense that plural marriages are no longer sanctioned by their creed, and that the doctrine of plural marriage will not be taught by them in Japan.

ELDER F. J. EBELING'S BOOK.

We have just finished a brief examination of the published discussion between Bro. F. J. Ebeling and H. M. Riggle on the following propositions:

The disputants occupied the time of thirteen speeches each, and the story is told in a book of some five hundred pages, and is quite readable.

A LETTER and a number of clippings from Bro. W. E. LaRue, 3431 North Front street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, indicate that the brethren are not idle in the "City of Brotherly Love," and that the work is not standing still there. Elder Joseph J. Gill, of the Utah eldership, at work in the city is reported in the North American for Tuesday, November 5, thus:

We do not teach polygamy now, although we believe it was right for certain people under certain conditions. It was never practiced by more than two per cent of our people. Rather a doubtful prospect for the salvation of all, which only two per cent of all could practice.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY. NO. 7.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, October 20, 1901.

Reported for HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen.

When we closed our last effort in this series we were speaking in regard to the mission to the Lamanites, or what are generally known as the American Indians. All who are readers of the book of Doctrine and Covenants are familiar with the revelation which commanded Oliver Cowderv. Parley P. Pratt, Peter Whitmer, and Ziba Peterson to go and carry the message to the Lamanites; but all may not be so familiar with the manner in which they performed their duty. In our last effort we mentioned their travels as far as Kirtland, Ohio, where they stopped and presented the Book of Mormon and the message they had to bear to Sidney Rigdon and others, because of the fact that Parley P. Pratt and Sidney Rigdon had been associated before, and as an old friend Elder Pratt wished to present the new found truth to Mr. Rig-

To night we want to say just a few words in regard to this mission. It is true that but little was accomplished so far as results among the Lamanites are concerned, and it may be thought by those who have investigated the matter that this is rather an adverse comment upon the mission; that the Lord certainly would not have sent these men through so much privation and suffering into the far West for the purpose of visiting these people, when he must have known that but little would be accomplished thereby; but to such we wish to say this, we need to learn that success is attained by each individual when he discharges his duty, whether there are visible results or not. Whatever may be the effects that he produces upon us, an individual has succeeded and succeeded grandly, too, when his duty is performed, and especially is this true where they sacrifice and suffer for the purpose of performing that duty; and further, all the more credit is due an individual who labors faithfully and diligently and performs his duty well when he sees but little result. not a difficult thing to discharge one's duty when he sees the result, and when that result is very apparent. There is another thing in connection with this, and that is, a great deal more good is often done than is appar-What the result of this misson will be when the final accounts shall be rendered, how much benefit shall have been derived from the efforts these men made, we do not know,

I will take occasion to say that not only the four men named went west upon this mission, but when they arrived at Kirtland, Ohio, many united with the church. Among others was one whose name was Frederick G. Williams (a man whom you will hear more of), and this man accompanied these men into the western wilds to visit the Indians; so there were five, instead of the four named in the revelation. They passed through much trial and suffering, for they went most of the way on foot, and in the cold, bleak winter, traveling through snow and through an uncultivated country, and over unbroken roads.

When they arrived at what is now Kansas, not very far from where Kansas City is now, they visited the Delaware nation, or tribe, as it was When they first conversed called. with the chief and desired him to call together his people, he was reluctant regarding it. He gave these men to understand that the work of missionaries to his people in the past had not been very satisfactory. He did not favor missionaries visiting them for some reason, it may have been the fault of the missionaries. But finally, when they told him in regard to a book that had recently been published, which gave an account of his forefathers, an account that he himself knew nothing of, and that had been lost to his people, he became more interested, and finally called together the council. I wish to-night. if you will bear with me, to read to you a speech that was made by Oliver Cowdery to the chief of the Delawares and the council and also the reply of the chief. Elder Cowdery said:

"'Aged Chief and Venerable Council of the Delaware nation; we are glad of this opportunity to address you as our red brethren and friends. We have traveled a long distance from towards the rising sun to bring you glad news; we have traveled the wilderness, crossed the deep and wide rivers, and waded in the deep snows, and in the face of the storms of winter, to communicate to you great knowledge which has lately come to our ears and hearts; and which will do the red man good as well as the pale face.

Once the red men were many; they occupied the country from sea to sea—from the rising to the setting sun; the whole land was theirs; the Great Spirit gave it to them, and no pale faces dwelt among them. But now they are few in numbers; their possessions are small, and the pale faces are many.

Thousands of moons ago, when the red men's forefathers dwelt in peace and possessed this whole land, the Great Spirit talked with them, and revealed His law and His will, and much knowledge to their wise men and prophets. This they wrote in a Book; together with their history, and the things which should befall their children in the latter days.

This Book was written on plates of gold, and handed down from father to son for many ages and generations.

It was then that the people prospered, and were strong and mighty; they cultivated the earth; built buildings and cities, and abounded in all good things, as the pale faces now do.

But they became wicked; they killed one another and shed much blood; they killed their prophets and wise men, and sought to destroy the Book. The Great Spirit became angry, and would speak to them no more; they had no more good and wise dreams; no more visions; no more angels sent among them by the Great Spirit; and the Lord commanded Mormon and Moroni, their last wise men and prophets, to hide the Book in the earth, that it might be preserved in safety, and be found and made known in the latter day to the pale faces who should possess the land; that they might again make it known to the red man; in order to restore them to the knowledge of the will of the Great Spirit and to His favor. And if the red man would then receive this Book and learn the things written in it, and do according thereunto, they should be restored to all their rights and privileges; should cease to fight and kill one another; should become one people; cultivate the earth in peace, in common with the pale faces, who were willing to believe and obey the same book, and be good men and live in peace.

Then should the red men become great,

Then should the red men become great, and have plenty to eat and good clothes to wear, and should be in favor with the Great Spirit and be his children, while he would be their Great Father, and talk with them, and raise up prophets and wise and good men amongst them again, who should teach them many things.

This Book, which contained these things, was hid in the earth by Moroni, in a hill called by him, Cumorah, which hill is now in the State of New York, near the village of Palmyra, in Ontario county.

In that neighborhood there lived a young man named Joseph Smith, who prayed to the Great Spirit much, in order that he might know the truth; and the Great Spirit sent an angel to him, and told him where this Book was hid by Moroni; and commanded him to go and get it. He accordingly went to the place, and dug in the earth, and found the Book written on golden plates.

But it was written in the language of the forefathers of the red man; therefore this young man, being a pale face, could not understand it; but the angel told him and showed him, and gave him knowledge of the language, how to interpret the Book. So he interpreted it into the language of the pale faces, and wrote it on paper, and caused it to be printed, and published thousands of copies of it among them; and then sent us to the red men to bring some copies of it to them, and to tell them this news. So we have now come from him, and here is a copy of the Book, which we now present to our red friend the chief of the Delawares, and which we hope he will cause to be read and known amonghis tribe; it will do them good.

The writer of this, Elder Parley P. Pratt, says:

There was a pause in the council, and some conversation in their own tongue, after which the chief made the following reply:

We feel truly thankful to our white friends who have come so far, and been at such pains to tell us good news, and especially this new news concerning the Book of our forefathers; it makes us glad in here—placing his hand on his heart.

It is now winter, we are new settlers in this place; the snow is deep, our cattle and horses are dying, our wigwams are poor; we have much to do in the spring—to build houses, and fence and make farms; but we will build a council house, and meet together, and you shall read to us and teach us more concerning the Book of our fathers and the will of the Great Spirit.

I believe we mentioned upon a former occasion this interview with the Delawares, and the knowledge becoming spread about the country, (for they were interested in this message,) friends in the Christian Church, I would like to say, that because of so many conversions from their ranks in Ohio, others that were not convinced of the truth of this message became the Indian agents and the ministers, missionaries of other denominations, began to raise objections; and the result was that those in charge, agents of the government, ordered these men to leave. Mr. Pratt says of this:

The excitement now reached the frontier settlements in Missouri, and stirred up the jealousy and envy of the Indian agents and sectarian missionaries to that degree that we were soon ordered out of the Indian country as disturbers of the peace; and even threatened with the military in case of non-compliance.

I mention this that you may readily see that these men did all that they could under the circumstances to carry out the instruction that had been given them in the revelation sending them there, and that somebody else is responsible for this work stopping where it did, for they were ordered out by authority. They went back across the line into Missouri and began to labor in and around Independence, but we shall not follow them farther at present.

Coming back to Kirtland and the work they planted there upon the way, we learn that Sidney Rigdon united with the church while these missionaries were there, and another gentleman living near Mr. Rigdon, at Painesville, by the name of Edward Partridge, was considerably interested, but did not obey. Shortly after these men went on their way west, Mr. Rigdon and Mr. Partridge started to New York where Joseph Smith was, and with him investigated more fully and completely the claims that were made. The result was, so far as Mr. Partridge was concerned, that on the 11th day of December, 1830, he was baptized in Seneca River by Joseph Smith. These two men afterwards, as you will see, became quite prominent in the affairs of the church, as well as many others who united with the church in Northern Ohio.

It is known by many of you that the people in that region had paid considerable attention to and had become largely interested in what is now known as the Church of Christ. or the Disciple Church, or what is vulgarly called the Campbellite Church because of the connection of Alexander Campbell with it; and many of these men had associated with this organization. Sidney Rigdon was largely responsible for the establishment of the Christian Church in Northern Ohio. There were many others who had been gathered into this organization that afterwards united with the Latter Day Saints, who became strong pillars in the church; and without disrespect to the friends in the Christian Church, I would like to say, that because of so many conversions from their ranks in Ohio, others that were not convinced very bitter, and the opposition from them was stronger perhaps than from other people with whom the church missionaries came in contact, and a great many stories were told in regard to these missionaries. I do not say the better class of these people originated these stories, but there were false statements made, and some of these statements have been received by well-meaning people from that time until now, and they are yet reported. Though many of them were exploded at the time, they have been repeated from time to time and we have them to meet yet. We can trace many of these false statements back to the time when these leading men left the association of our friends of the Christian Church and associated themselves with the Latter Day Saints. I am sorry such means were resorted to.

After Mr. Rigdon and Mr. Partridge went back to New York, a revelation was given at a conference which convened at Fayette, New York, Sunday, January 2, 1831, and in that revelation the church was commanded to go to the Ohio, not a very definite statement, but to the Ohio. Because of the planting of the work by Oliver Cowdery and Parley P. Pratt and others in and about Kirtland and Painesville, and in that section of country, they decided to go there. When they were commanded to go to Ohio, they made preparations immediately to go. I want to invite your attention to some statements made in this revelation. Here is one:

That ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless; wherefore, for this cause, I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law; and there ye shall be endowed with power from on high, and from thence, whomsoever I will, shall go forth among all nations, and it shall be told them what they shall do; for I have a great work laid up in store, for Israel shall be saved, and I will lead them whithersoever I will, and no power shall stay my hand.

It seems that it was necessary to make a change of location, for the enemy was upon the alert, and, that they might escape the power of the enemy they were commanded to go to Ohio, there a law would be given, and in this same revelation. I believe, the Lord tells them there were things had in secret chambers, even things to bring about their destruction in process of time. Already there were councils in secret chambers to bring about the destruction of the church, and they were warned that that condition of things was imminent, and they were put upon their guard by this revelation.

He says:

I say unto you, that the enemy in the secret chambers seeketh your lives. Ye hear of wars in far countries, and you say that there will soon be great wars in far countries, but ye know not the hearts of men in your own.land. I tell you these things because of your prayers; wherefore, treasure up wisdom in your bosoms, lest the wickedness of men reveal these things unto you, by their wickedness, in a manner that shall speak in your ears, with a voice louder than that which shall shake the earth: but if ye are prepared, ye shall not fear.

Now, as was characteristic with Joseph Smith, he immediately began a preparation to go. I want you to notice how quickly he made his arrangements to go to the place he was appointed to go. I believe this was the secret of his success; that when he became convinced that a thing was his duty, he immediately went to work to do it. He did not wait, it would have been natural for him to do so. I do not know but some of us would have followed a different plan; we probably would have inquired, "What are we going to do when we get to Ohio?" We would have made ar Ohio?" rangements for a home where we were to locate and have considered the matter from a business standpoint; but not so with this man, the only thing that was in his mind when he was told to go was to go, and trust in the Lord to take care of him.

In the latter part of January, Joseph and his wife accompanied Sidney Rigdon and Edward Partridge to Kirtland, Ohio. Do you notice how short a time it was? The revelation was given January 2, and in the latter part of the same month he was on his way to Kirtland. He says of this:

The latter part of January, in company with Brethren Sidney Rigdon and Edward Partridge, I started with my wife for Kirtland, Ohio, where we arrived about the first of February, and were kindly received and welcomed into the house of Bro. N. K. Whitney. I and my wife lived in the family of Bro. Whitney several weeks, and received every kindness and attention which could be expected, and especially from Sr. Whitney. The branch of the church in this part of the Lord's vineyard, which had increased to nearly one hundred [this evidently should read one thousand] members, were striving to do the will of God, so far as they knew it, though some strange notions and false spirits had crept in among them.

That perhaps was one reason why Joseph was commanded to go to Ohio. These people, in their new found faith, had made some mistake, and some false notions had crept in among them. But you remember that they were told when they got to Ohio a law would be given, and I want to invite your attention to that law. A revelation was received soon after they got there on February 4, which said:

Hearken and hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord and your God, ye whom I delight to bless with the greatest blessings; ye that hear me: and ye that hear me not will I curse, that have professed my name, with the heaviest of all cursings. Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me.

Now the law he had been preparing them for was to be an important law; it was to be a law by which they were to know how to govern the church and have all things right before God. I need not say, that this being true, if the law were not followed all things would not be right before God. If the authorities of the church did not execute that law they were not properly governing the church, for the law was given that they might know how to govern the church and have all things right,-two very important things. Soon after that the promised law was given. I have not time to read it in detail, but I want to read a few extracts:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, who have assembled yourselves together, in my name, even Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, the Savior of the world; inasmuch as they believe on my name and keep my commandments; again I say unto you, Hearken and hear and obey the law which I shall give unto you; for verily I say, As ye have assembled yourselves together according to the commandment wherewith I commanded you, and are agreed as touching this one thing, and have asked the Father in my name, even so ye shall receive.

Receive what? Let your minds turn back to the statement made in the former revelation, and you will remember they were to receive a law by which they were to govern the church and have all things right before God. And again in this same revelation in paragraph 5 we read:

And again the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.

So a part of the law by which the church was to be governed and have things right before God was the Bible and the Book of Mormon. These the elders and priests and teachers were commanded to teach. They were also to observe the church articles and covenants to do them.

From the seventh paragraph we read:

And again, I say, Thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die. Thou shalt not steal; and he that stealeth and will not repent, shall be cast out.

I want to call your attention to these commandments. It is said that if this law is executed all things will be right before him, and by reading this paragraph you will observe that if this law is executed no murderer could be found in the church, for it says here, he shall die. It provides not that we shall kill him ourselves, but he should be delivered unto the laws of the land. It says further, he that stealeth and will not repent shall be cast out. If the law is executed there will be no murderer or thief in the church. And he that lieth and repenteth not shall be cast out, and hence there would be no liars in the church. And further, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out."

That law was given that they might escape the powers of the adversary, that they might know how to govern the church and have all things right before God, and if it had been kept and executed from the time this was given in 1831 until now, there would have been more harmony and power in the church. There would have been none permitted to remain in it that did not heed the law, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart," etc.

It was by departing from the law that evils crept into the church. It was because men that ought to have executed the law, but went contrary to it themselves were sustained by the body in those violations. Failing to heed the warning given before they came to Ohio, that a law would be given that they might escape the powers of the adversary, we can not wonder that they did not escape, but that darkness came in like a flood, and evil and trouble were the result. How will it be with us? Our safety lies only in keeping the commandments of God. I said upon a former occasion that I did not fear that this church would ever do some of the things that had been done before, because we have learned by the mistakes made by others to avoid them, but there are hidden rocks upon which the ship may be wrecked, if we do not go according to the chart. And we must keep ourselves perfectly in harmony with this law, or it is possible we may be wrecked upon rocks that have not yet been discovered.

Immediately after this law was given (I would advise you to read the forty-second section of Doctrine and Covenants) to the church, and they were put under strict orders to obey it, Satan was on the alert, as he usually is, and was ready to give revelations, too.

Soon after this revelation was given a woman came, pretending to give revelations and commandments to the church; and as she, like all others of great pretensions, found sympathisers, Joseph inquired and received a revelation on the subject.

You will find that revelation in the forty-third section, Doctrine and Covenants. The cause of that revelation was that this deception was being practiced in the church, and Joseph inquired and received the following:

O hearken ye elders of my church, and give ear to the words which I shall speak unto you; for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me.

They were warned not to receive these communications that came through an unauthorized individual, for God had appointed this man, not that he would not commune with others, not that every individual does not have the right to commune with God, but as a lawgiver, a medium through which the law shall be given to the church, he is appointed. No other is to occupy this position unless appointed by him, as the following will show:

But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.

If he does not "abide in me" then the provision is made that he could appoint another in his stead. It conveys the idea, if he be taken away he shall appoint another in his stead. A warning is given that they shall not receive anything that comes as revelation, unless it came through an individual thus authorized.

Now after the death of Joseph Smith an individual rises up over here in Wisconsin, and several in Nauvoo, and claim that they have communications that they received through Joseph Smith prior to his death, and after they had kept them for a time, some a greater length of time and some a lesser, they revealed it to the church and said they had had it since the death of Joseph Smith, and now were ready to make it known. We read in this revelation:

And this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that ye may know they are not of me.

That is plain enough: "You may know they are not of me." If they came in any other way, through any other channel other than the way pointed out.

For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.

Some one is going to follow the one the Lord had appointed, and what shall he do? He shall teach the revelations you have received and shall receive through him whom I have appointed. How could an individual do that if the Lord had said, as we read, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shalt cleave unto her and none else," and at a later date he made provision that you could take to yourselves ten or more? How can any man teach the first and the last? But the successor of Joseph Smith was to teach that which you have received and shall receive. They will have to harmonize; you can not teach opposites. He must have intended that all he gave should be consistent and harmonious, or else he has required something of this man that is impossible.

Now, as I remarked before, there were a great many there in Kirtland that were strong men, able men, that were connected with this movement called the Reformation, in Northern Ohio. I will give you some of their names, as many as I can think of now. Those who became prominent men in the church; there were plenty of others. There were Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams, who subsequently became members of the First Presidency, Lyman E. Johnson, Orson Hyde, John Boynton, Luke S. John? son, and Lyman Wight, subsequently of the Twelve, Edward Partridge and N. K. Whitney, afterwards bishops, and many others; so that many of the prominent men were found there in the Western Reserve, as it was called, who became prominent pillars in the church.

There is one other thing I want to call your attention to, and that is, the report that has been circulated widely that there was established at Kirtland a system of community of property in the church of Latter Day Saints, that they held all their property rights in common. Whether this principle is correct or not, it is not my prerogative to discuss; I want to correct the report, however, for the reason that it is not historically true. No such system was in vogue among the Latter Day Saints. There was a community there that belonged to the Christian Church who had their property rights in common and lived together as one family; in fact they called it "The Family." Because all of them did subsequently unite with the Latter Day Saints, it was heralded abroad that the Latter Day Saints had that system among them. I will give you the words of one of the active participants, to show that this system had its origin before the Latter Day Saints came there. The following is the language of Lyman Wight taken from his private journal.

I now began to look at the doctrine of the apostles pretty closely, and especially that part contained in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, where they had all things common. In consideration of this doctrine I went to Kirtland, about twenty miles, to see Bro. I. Morley [that was Isaac Morley] and —— Billings [that was Titus Billings], after some conversation on the subject we entered into a covenant to make our interests one as anciently.

So you see that this movement to have all things common, so far as property was concerned, originated with Lyman Wight, Isaac Morley, and Titus Billings. Mr. Wight continues:

In conformity to this covenant I moved the next February [1830] to Kirtland, into the house with Bro. Moriey. [The February before the missionaries came there in November.] We commenced our labors together with great peace and union. We were soon joined by eight other families. Our labors were united both in farming and mechanism, all of which was prosecuted with great vigor. We truly begun to feel as if the millennium was close at hand. Everything moved smoothly on till about the first of November. About this time five families concluded to join us in the town of Mayfield, about seven miles up the river. They owning each a miles up the river. They owning each a good farm and mills, it was concluded best to establish a branch there; accordingly I was appointed to go and take the charge of the same. When I had my goods about half loaded, there came along four men; namely, P. Pratt, O. Cowdery, P. Whitmer, and Ziba Peterson, and brought with them the Book of Mormon, which they wished to introduce to us.

Notice this common stock affair was existing when these four men came along.

I desired they would hold on till I got away as my business was of vital importance, and I did not wish to be troubled with romances nor idle speculators. But nothing daunted they were not to be put off, but were as goodnatured as you please. Curiosity got uppermost, and I concluded to stop for a short We called meeting and one testified that he had seen angels, and another that he had seen the plates, and that the gifts were back in the church again, etc. The meeting became so interesting withal that I did not get away till the sun was about an hour high at night, and it was dark before I arrived at my new home. But I amused myself by thinking that the trouble was over, and that I should not see them again for a long time, supposing they would start the next morning for the western boundary of the State of Missouri: but in this I was very much disappointed. But to describe the scenes of the next seven weeks, [in] which one scene would be as interesting as another, would fill quite a large volume. I shall therefore content myself by saying, that they brought the Book of Mormon to bear upon us, and the whole of the common stock family was bap-

You see there was where it started; no church was responsible for it. These parties were all members of the Christian Church, I believe, that were in this common stock arrangement, and when Oliver Cowdery, Parley Pratt, Peter Whitmer, and Ziba Peterson came there, they united with the Latter Day Saints.

Now I turn to the language of Joseph Smith and find he speaks of the same thing. He says:

The plan of "common stock," which had existed in what was called the family," whose members generally had embraced the everlasting gospel, was readily abandoned for the more perfect law of the Lord: and the false spirits were easily discerned and rejected by the light of revelation.

Instead of this originating with the Latter Day Saints, it concluded when these people came into the church. This claim has gone abroad, everywhere almost, that a community of common stock was established there at Kirtland and at other places. I am not saying anything about this system, whether it be good or whether it be bad. They were getting along nicely, so they thought, I simply mention it for the reason that I want this to appear on record. Whether it be good or bad, whether it should have credit or blame, Joseph Smith and the Latter Day Saints are not entitled to the credit, nor should they be blamed. Whatever may be the conclusion of any one regarding the system, Lyman Wight, Titus Billings, and Isaac Morley are entitled to whatever credit or censure may justly attach to the establishment of this system at Kirtland, and not Joseph Smith or the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. They readily abandoned it for the more perfect law of the Lord. Keep these things in mind and do not let anybody deceive you, for such a system has never existed in the church.

We would like to follow the history of the church in Kirtland a little farther, if we had time, but we may mention it as we go along. Of course there were many important events happened there, but for the present we want to leave it with you, and ask your attention to what has been presented. Whatever you may think of the acts of men, let this thought be impressed upon you, that if that law given to the church had been followed in every instance, there would have been no corruption brought into the church, and you can readily see, as proclaimed there, the church would have been right in God's sight,—a pure and lovely people. There would be no murderers, no thieves, no adulterers, no liars, no one husband but what loved his wife with all his heart, and would cleave unto her and none else. Be sure you do not forget the affirmative part of that. Love your wife with all your heart, that is the safeguard. If you do not do that you are liable to go into wrong doing. No man that ever loved his wife with all his heart cares to commit crime against her. He has no desire to do wrong in that respect. If you love your wife with all your heart, you are safe so far as sexual crime is concerned. If there is a revelation in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that needs careful reflection, it is the one contained in the forty-second section, which is a law by which you will know how to govern the church and have all things right before God.

May God's blessing abide with us is my prayer.

PRECIOUS PEARLS .-- NO. II. GATHERED FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

BY WILLIAM HAWKINS.

He that will contend against the word of the Lord, let him be accursed; and he that shall deny these things, let him be accursed; for unto them will I shew no greater things, saith Jesus Christ, for I am he who speak eth. Therefore repent all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me, and believe in my gospel, and be baptized in my name; but he that believeth not shall be damned, and signs shall follow them that believe in my name: and he that believeth not my words, believeth not my disciples; and if it so be that I do not speak, judge ye; for ye shall know that it is I that speaketh, at the last day. And now, if I have no authority for these things. judge ye, for ye shall know that I have authority when ye shall see me, and we shall stand before God at the last day.

Wherefore I, Moroni, am commanded to write these things, that evil might be done away, and that the time may come that Satan may have no power upon the hearts of the children of men, but that they may be persuaded to do good continually, that they may come unto the fountain of all righteousness and be saved; wherefore, whoso believeth in God. might with surety hope for a better world, yea, even a place at the right hand of God; which hope cometh of faith, maketh an anchor to the souls of men, which would make them sure and steadfast, always abounding in good works, being led to glorify God.

Behold it was the faith of Nephi and Lehi, that wrought the change upon the Lamanites, that they were baptized with fire and the Holy Ghost; behold it was the faith of Ammon and his brethren, which wrought so great a miracle among the Lamanites; yea, even all they who wrought miracles, wrought them by faith, even those who were before Christ, and also them who were after; and neither at any time hath any wrought miracles until after their faith; wherefore, they first believed on the Son of God; for after they had faith, and did speak in thy name, thou didst shew thyself unto them in great power, wherefore it must needs be that some had faith in him, for he shewed himself not unto the world.

Behold, it was by faith that they of old were called after the holy order of God, wherefore by faith was the law of Moses given. But in the gift of the Son hath God prepared a more excellent way, and it is by faith that it hath been fulfilled. Because of the faith of men he has shewn himself unto the world, and glorified the name of the Father, and prepared a way that thereby others might be partakers of the heavenly gift, that they might hope for those things which they have not seen; wherefore ye may also have hope, and be partakers of the gift, if ye will but have faith.

Wherefore dispute not because ye see not, for ye receive no witness until after the trial of your faith, for it was by faith that Christ shewed himself unto our fathers, after he had risen from the dead; and he shewed not himself unto them, until after they had faith in him. And again I remember that thou hast said, that thou hast loved the world, even unto the laying down of thy life for the world, that thou mightest take it again to prepare a place for the children of men; and now I know that this love which thou hast had for the children of men, is charity; wherefore, except men shall have charity, they can not inherit that place which thou hast prepared in the mansions of the Father.

Come unto me, O ye house of Israel, and it shall be manifest unto you how great things the Father hath laid up for you, from the foundation of the world; and it hath not come unto you because of unbelief; for if there be no faith among the children of men. God can do no miracle among them; wherefore he showed not himself until after their faith. Behold I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people; behold I am Jesus Christ, I am the Father and the Son; in me shall all mankind have light, and that eternally, even they who shall believe in my name; and they shall become my sons and daughters; yea, when ye shall call upon the Father in my name, with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, then shall ye know that the Father hath remembered the covenant which he made unto your fathers, O house of Israel. And then shall my revelations which I have caused to be written by my servant John, be unfolded in the eyes of all my people. Remember, when ye see these things, ye shall know that the time is at hand that they shall be made manifest in very deed; therefore, when ye shall receive this record, ye may know that the work of the Father has commenced upon all the face of the land; wherefore the remnant of the house of Joseph shall be built upon this land; and it shall be a land of their inheritance; and they shall build up a holy city unto the Lord, like unto the Jerusalem of old; and they shall no more be confounded, until the end come, when the earth shall pass away. And now we can behold the decrees of God concerning this land, that it is a land of promise, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall serve God, or they shall be swept off when the fullness of his wrath shall come upon them.

Come unto me, O ye Gentiles, and I will shew unto you the greater things, the knowledge which is hid up because of unbelief; I am the same that leadeth men to all good; he that will not believe my words, will not believe me, that I am; and he that will not believe me will not believe the Father who sent me.

But he that believeth these things which I have spoken, him will I visit with the manifestations of my Spirit; and he shall know and bear record. I give unto men weakness, that they may be humble; and my grace is sufficient for all men that humble themselves before me; and have faith in my name, then will I make weak things become strong unto them.

And these are my thoughts upon the land which I shall give you for your inheritance. Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, which is Jesus Christ, who hath been manifested by the things which we have written. Behold, I will shew unto the Gentiles their weakness, and I will shew unto them that faith, hope, and charity, bringeth unto me the fountain of all righteousness. Behold, is there not an account concerning them of old, that they by their secret plans did ob-Which had been tain kingdoms? handed down even from Cain, who was a murderer from the beginning; and they were kept up by the power of the devil to administer oaths unto the people, to keep them in darkness, to help such as sought power, to gain power, and to murder, and to plunder, and to lie, and to commit all manner of wickedness, and whoredoms. O ye Gentiles, it is wisdom in God that these things should be shewn unto you, that thereby ye may repent of your sins, and suffer not that these murderous combinations shall get above you, which are built up to get power and gain; and the work, yea, the work of destruction come upon you; yea, even the sword of justice of the eternal God shall fall upon you, to your overthrow and destruction, if ye shall suffer these things to be; wherefore the Lord commandeth you, when ye shall see these things come among you, that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation, because of this secret combination which shall be among you, or wo be unto it, because of the blood of them who have been slain; for they cry from the dust for vengeance upon it, and also upon those who build it up. For the Lord work. eth not in secret combinations, neither doth he will that man should shed blood, but in all things hath he forbidden it, from the beginning of man. For it cometh to pass that whoso buildeth it up, seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations and countries: and it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people, for it is built up by the devil, who is the father of all lies; even that same liar who beguiled our first parents; yea, even that same liar who hath caused man to commit murder from the beginning; who hath hardened the hearts of men, that they have murdered the prophets, and stoned them, and cast them out from the beginning. Behold this is a land which is choice above all other lands; wherefore he that doth possess it shall serve God, or shall be swept off; for it is the everlasting decree of God; he had sworn in his wrath, that whoso should possess this land of promise, from that time henceforth and forever, should serve him, the true and only God, or they should be swept off when the fullness of his wrath should come upon them; wherefore, the Lord would have that all men should serve him, who dwell upon the face thereof.

Behold, thou hast not made us mighty in writing, wherefore when we write, we behold our nakedness, and stumble because of the placing of our words, and I fear lest the Gentiles shall mock at our words. And when I had said this, the Lord spake unto me saying, Fools mock, but they shall mourn, and my grace is sufficient for the meek, that they shall take no advantage of your weakness; and if men come unto me. I will shew unto them their weakness. I praved unto the Lord that he would give unto the Gentiles grace, that they might have charity. And the Lord said unto me, if they have not charity, it mattereth not unto thee, thou hast been faithful; wherefore, thy garments shall be made clean; and because thou hast seen thy weakness, thou shalt be made strong, even unto the sitting down in the place which I have prepared in the mansions of my Father. Wherefore, I know by this thing which thou hast said, that if the Gentiles have not charity because of our weakness, that thou wilt prove them, and take away their talent, yea even that which they have received, and give unto them who shall have more abundantly. And this cometh unto you, O ye Gentiles, that ye may know the decrees of God, that ye may repent, and not continue in your iniquities until the fullness come, that ye may not bring down the fullness of the wrath of God upon you, as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done; the fullness of his wrath cometh upon them when they are ripened in iniquity.

Behold, I am the Father, I am the light, and the life, and the truth of the world; at my command the heavens are open and are shut; and at my word the earth shall shake; and at my command the inhabitants thereof shall pass away, even so as by fire. And there shall be a new heaven and a new earth; and they shall be like unto the old, save the old have passed away, and all things have become new. And then cometh the New Jerusalem; and blessed are they who dwell therein, for it is they whose garments are white through the blood of the Lamb; and they are they who are numbered among the remnant of the seed of Joseph, who were of the house of Israel. And then also cometh the Jerusalem of old, and the inhabitants thereof, blessed are they, for they have been washed in the blood of the Lamb; and they are they who were scattered and gathered in from the four quarters of the earth, and from the north countries, and are partakers of the fulfilling of the covenant which God made with their father Abraham; and when these things come bringeth to pass the scripture which saith, There are they who were first, who shall be last; and there are they who were last, who shall be first. And in the mouth of three witnesses shall these things be established; and the testimony of three, and this work, in the which shall be shewn forth the power of God, and also his word, of which the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost beareth record; and all this shall stand as a testimony against the world, at the last day.

And now I Moroni, bid farewell unto the Gentiles, yea, and also unto my brethren whom I love, until we shall meet before the judgment seat of Christ, where all men shall know that my garments are not spotted with your blood. And now I would commend you to seek this Jesus of whom the prophets and apostles have written, that the grace of God the Father, and also the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost, which beareth record of them, may be, and abide with you forever. Amen.

NANSEN'S PLEA FOR POLAR DISCOVERY.

In an interesting article in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for November the great explorer closes with this appeal:

In our age of avarice and greed, when the nations stand armed to the teeth to fight for power and pelf, and one begins to have doubts as to the moral progress of humanity, it seems like a ray of light to see men setting sail for higher goals. Let us then, wish them godspeed on their several quests in Browning's words:

"Greet the unseen with a cheer!

Bid him forward, breast and back as either should be,
"Strive and thrive!" cry, "Speed,—fight on,

fare ever

There as here."

BOONVILLE, Mo., Nov. 10.

Dear Herald:—More than a year has passed since I wrote to your columns. With pleasure, and a heart filled with love and gratitude to my Father above for the many blessings I have received from his loving hand, I write again.

Brn. J. A. Tanner and W. W. Smith spent two weeks laboring in this part of the vine-yard. They arrived in Boonville October 18. The next day they went six miles in the country and held a week's meetings in my Sister Sophie's home. On the 20th I had the pleasure of seeing Bro. Tanner baptize Sophie and her husband, John Barnhart, and my niece, Naomi Gilson. What a beautiful scene it was! They were confirmed the same afternoon by Brn. Tanner and Smith. On Tuesday evening they had their three darling children blessed.

On Sunday the Saints came to town. We had Sunday-school in the morning and Saints' meeting in afternoon, which we enjoyed very much. Then we had cottage meetings in town the rest of the week.

On Thursday, October 31, I saw my dear brother James buried beneath the wave to arise and walk in the light of divine guidance, as Paul preached. Those of the ministry who have labored here will rejoice to know that the few Saints here do not feel so lonely now.

On Saturday morning we felt sad because we had to say good-bye to the brethren that had strengthened us so much. What a pleasure it is to those who are deprived of church privileges to have the elders call and preach a few sermons; the trials and troubles that come do not seem so hard to bear.

We have been blessed in every effort put forth here, and all are imbued with the Spirit and a desire to learn.

Very truly a sister, CAMMIE COCHRAN.

TEMPLE, Ohio, Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—The Onio district conference held at South Wellston, on the 19th and 20th ult., was fairly attended, and a desirable interest was manifested in the work. Of the general ministry Brn. T. J. Beatty, J. L. and V. M. Goodrich, James Craig, J. F. McDowell, H. E. Moler, S. J. Jeffers, and F. G. Pitt were present. Bro. Pitt was in attendance by request of the missionary in charge. It was anticipated that some troublesome things would be on hands, but the vexatious matters were disposed of without friction, and seemingly satisfactorily, for the time at least.

A kind of apathy, or indifferent feeling, about entering into the consideration of business and helping to dispose of it was apparent. Too many coming to conference to look on and see how others do the business, forgetting that they are a part of the conference, and should exhibit an active interest, show their hand in voice and vote, as well as the others. A little improvement in the way of waking up and asserting their individuality, and doing their own thinking in meetings of this kind, would be for the good of this district, and some others also.

The social and preaching services were well attended. The speakers acquitted themselves well, Bro. J. F. McDowell rather taking "the cake," in his Sunday evening's effort.

Ample entertainment was provided, also a commodious hall; a growing interest is manifest in the district to extend the work. The Bishop's agent (Bro. Jeffers) showed diligence on the part of the agent, and a spirit of devotion and sacrifice upon the part of the Saints and friends contributing to the maintenance of the work.

The work of the conference was comforting and strengthening to the Saints; the spirit of good will prevailed throughout.

After conference the elders met in council, took a survey of the field, agreed as to the best thing to be done for the present, and started out at once into the field. Here again we lost the labor of one man for the summer, that of Bro. J. L. Goodrich, as he chose to remain at home, thereby reducing the ministerial force. Bro. J. F. McDowell was figuring to "lock horns" with a Campbellite preacher. It may have materialized.

By request Bro. Pitt consented to visit Creola, Vales Mills, and Columbus before returning to his own district, the writer accompanying him to Creola and reviewing one enemy, then returning to Kirtland after spending one night with Bro. and Sr. Schofield at Columbus.

Bro. T. J. Beatty is entitled to much credit for the work accomplished in and about Columbus, as he has been an energetic laborer and is well respected.

Bro. Pitt was of material help to the missionary in charge (the latter being a little under the weather physically), as well as to the Saints in general.

The outlook for the Ohio district is good, but the old cry is pressing, "More laborers."

Later.—Yesterday, the 10th, regular services were held in the Temple, the writer being the speaker in the morning, assisted by Bro. D. F. Allen and Henry C. Smith at evening, assisted by Bro. E. Curry. A lingering interest still asserts itself in Kirtland, and people come to church. The 3d inst. was spent with the Saints at Akron. Ohio.

LEEDS, Eng., Oct. 22.

Editors Herald:—The second anniversary of the organization of our (the Burley) branch is the date of my letter. During that time quite a few changes have taken place; some have removed and a few have been added to our numbers. Under the presidency of Elder W. Aveyard a great advance has been made spiritually, though not in numbers. We have lost four of our energetic workers in Bro. J. W. and Sr. Rushton, who are laboring for the Master in Scotland, also Bro. B. and Sr. Green, whose business has called them to Smethwick, Birmingham, where Bro. Green is laboring in the Summerfield branch.

We have greatly missed these Saints but still the work goes on in our midst, and the Spirit of peace and love prevails amongst us, our Bro. Aveyard continually exhorting to this end, to strive after perfection, and to put our whole trust in the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. It is a pleasure and benefit to be in the company of brethren who are putting into practice the love and meekness of Jesus Christ; notably those whose years, and consequently their experiences, are much greater than ours can possibly be. Our brother, Elder James Moir, has seen much of the rougher side of life; he has battled until he has reached the Psalmist's allotted span of life, threescore years and ten. In his spare time he has been a great worker in bringing the restored gospel before the people of this city, many people having spoken of him, saying how well he knows the scriptures and puts them into practice, and if they had any religion at all it would be that old man's religion, for he knows what he says, and his belief is not a blind credulity like most beliefs are. We have a blind brother in our midst, Bro. Sharp, who is also aged. He has not always been without his sight. He is rejoicing in the angel's message. Another old veteran is Bro. Abbott. our deacon, who with our branch teacher, Bro. Horton, are good workers in the Master's cause, and exhort us young brethren to be willing workers in the vineyard of the Lord. We also have some young energetic workers who are striving to learn and to come up higher. The sisters must not be left out; they attend when home duties permit them to do so. Special commendation is due to some who are laboring hard in the work in conversations with friends, and bringing some to the meetings, etc. Our young sister Edith Green is bringing her friend with her, a bright and intelligent young lady who manifests considerable interest in the work, and is now reading the Book of Mormon. May the interest aroused result in her friend seeing the truth as we see it and in her becoming one of us.

We have a religious instruction class every Sunday afternoon, when we meet to exchange thoughts on the Scriptures, under the presidency of the branch priest, J. T. Girdham, the writer being his associate. Whenever we have taken subjects that have been somewhat beyond our reach I have noticed that the Lord has sent some brother or brothers to help us out. We have been going through the revelations, and have derived considerable benefit and greater knowledge of the book thereby. We have had the assistance of Brn. Taylor (of Bradford), Meredith (of Birmingham); also, among others, Bishop E. L. Kelley, who had traveled so far to do the Master's work, and whom we were pleased to welcome in our midst, but whose stay was all too short

It has been a source of great joy to me that I removed to this city. I was a member of the Birmingham branch, but was living in the neighboring town of Wolverhampton, hence I did not get the privilege of meeting with the Saints as I should have liked, but had the companionship of Bro. Lloyd, who introduced me to this great latter-day work. I received good instructions from this brother, which I find useful to me now, and I can now utilize it for the help of my brethren and sisters. I often think of our Bro. F. G. Pitt's visit to us there, and of his beautiful and instructive letters to me. He will see that some of his work in this land is bearing fruit.

We are looking to the forthcoming visit of Apostle G. T. Griffiths; we are always glad to see the faces and hear the gospel message of our missionary brothers from across the ocean.

Your brother in Christ,

FREDK. HARPER.

SCOTT CORNERS, N. Y., Nov. 7. Editors Herald;-On October 18 Bro. M. H. Bond accompanied the writer to the steamer Rhode Island lying at its wharf in East Providence, Rhode Island, en route to New York. I joined Bro. George W. Robley, who was to be my companion in travel. Bro. George H. Gates was waiting at the wharf to bid us God speed and help bear the expenses of the trip. There was quite an excitement on the wharf, by the rah! rah! rah! of the college students who had put in an appearance to give some of "the boys" a send off, who were to enter the football arena at some distant point. There were about seven hundred fifty passengers on the boat; a motley crowd of varied shades of complexion, occupation, and station. The night was clear, cool, and still, just the weather for a night's sail to one whose sea legs are unsteady in a breeze, and whose stomach refuses to settle down to the roll of the disturbed waters.

Every chair in the saloon was occupied, principally by those whose limited means prohibited their procuring a stateroom for sleep. First come, first served, seemed to be the prevailing motto. Through the kindness of Bro. Myron, our stateroom was procured early in the day, so we were well provided for. We arrived at New York about 8:30 a. m. next morning. We were met by a half-brother of Bro. George's, who kindly took us to a substantial repast at a near-by cafe. We then took car for Brooklyn, and were soon domiciled at the home of Bro. and Sr. Squire, where an elder always finds a welcome.

Word had been received from New Canaan, Connecticut, that a Congregational minister was to lecture against the Mormons at Long Ridge, some eight miles from New Canaan, on the next (Sunday) night; and we (one or both) were requested to be present. So Bro. George left for the purpose of being on hand. The writer remained to fill Sunday appointments in Brooklyn, in company of Elder George Potts.

The announcement of Rev. Moon's lecture had been well circulated; and at the appointed hour his church was well filled. Brn. Greene and Anderson had been laboring in that neighborhood for some months, and had doubtless raised the divine's (?) ire by baptizing seventeen or eighteen people. Brn. Greene and Anderson had left there to attend the Massachusetts district conference. The way was considered clear for the Moon to shed his beams upon the works of darkness of these Mormon elders, and so at it he went, making the distinction fairly plain between us and the Utah faction, but making a direct attack upon the Reorganized Church and its work. There being no seat in the rear for Bro. Robley, he was conducted to the front seat, where he took notes on what he considered needed some explanation. The Moon smiled down upon George as he thought he had made a clear point against the Mormons, all this time doubtless taking Bro. George for a reporter.

Before he (Moon) commenced his lecture, and before he asked the divine favor and blessing upon it, he challenged any one in the church, or on the Ridge, to refute any statement he should make. George rose to his feet at close of lecture and asked privilege to make a statement. After some demurs he was allowed to speak, when he said he simply arose to accept the challenge made by the speaker. Then came a change of countenance, and the inflation of a minute before evaporated, and something resembling an eclipse passed over the Moon's face. But the challenge had been openly made, so there could be no complete back down. George asked him if he were willing to affirm for his church the following,-that it was in harmony with the New Testament church in organization and doctrine, George being willing to affirm this for the church he (Moon) had attacked, which he (George) represented. He said he was. So an appointment was made at Moon's house, for Tuesday afternoon. Bro. Roblev, Elder Stone, of New Canaan, and the writer were on hand with resolutions framed for debate. Moon had his largest star present, the senior deacon, bordering on the three hundred pound mark, and another preacher. Mr. Moon positively refused to recognize the proposition before verbally agreed upon. He said he would only debate the statements made in his lecture. He would not put his name to any document. He would recognize no rules but what he made himself.

Two speeches of thirty minutes each.

The proposition written out was: Resolved that the statements made in Rev. C. J. Moon's lecture of Sunday, October 20, are not true. Elder George W. Robley affirms; C. J. Moon denies. No signatures. Debate to take place Wednesday night, October 30, weather permitting. If stormy, the next fair night.

We got the notice of debate, also notice of reply to the lecture October 13, in all the local newspapers, and on the Wednesday following the lecture Bro. Robley replied to it. He met Moon's arguments squarely, and gained friends before the debate came off.

On the night of debate the largest hall on Long Ridge was packed to its utmost limit, and many were unable to get inside. At 7:30, the hour set for opening debate, a chairman was elected, a friend of Mr. Moon's, as the majority there were friendly to him. The main points to be met by George (who, by the way, had to affirm a negative proposition) were: immorality of Joe Smith; the missionaries of the Reorganized Church were dishonest in their methods, concealing their belief in the Book of Mormon; their beliefs were false, being on a par with spiritualism, Christian Science, etc.; we had some truths, which were mixed in to deceive; we quoted scripture, so did the Devil, etc.; we were the offspring of Mormonism; Joseph Smith was sentenced many times for crime, etc.

Bro. Robley opened by proving by reliable and sworn witnesses that Joseph Smith's character was not bad, as affirmed by Moon; but on the contrary he was honest, industrious, and of good character. His material was obtained chiefly from "Church History," "Palmyra to Independence," and other reliable sources. He challenged Moon again and again to prove his statement concerning the elders' deceptive methods, etc.; in fact, in his first speech he tore Moon's lecture all to pieces, as all thinking people must have seen. There was considerable hand clapping when a clear point was made, for many saw the facts were on our side.

Moon in his first speech occupied but twelve minutes. He read from Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi, chapter 1, paragraph 8, Lamoni small type edition: "Adam fell, that man might be; and men are, that they might have joy." Holding up to the people the selfishness in the thought that man is that he might have joy. He also held up to ridicule the account of Moroni writing upon a portion of his coat, leaving out, of course, the purpose for which this was done. He next attacked the account of Shiz fainting, through loss of blood. "Did you ever hear of a man losing all his blood and then fainting?" he asked, and then tried to show the grammar was bad, and said he would reserve for his next speech what other evidence he had, and sat

I want to mention one incident here which showed up Mr. Moon's character. When he was reading from the Book of Mormon, Bro. Robley asked him to repeat the page number he was reading from. Moon said, "Never you mind, the audience heard it," and refused to give it.

In Bro. Robley's second speech he showed how weak Moon's argument was against the Book of Mormon because of its grammar. He showed that the Bible contained many errors along this line; and if the Book of Mormon was to be discredited because of these errors, so must the Bible be discredited on the same hypothesis. Moon had said Martin Harris died drunk, and two other witnesses were shot, and Oliver Cowdery was cut off from the church for adultery. These were next handled by Bro. Robley, he giving the evidence of their character and loyalty to their testimony concerning the Book of Mormon plates, angel, etc. George was greatly blessed by the Spirit in his effort, and clearly exposed the false statements of Moon, and made his points clear. Considerable applause greeted him after his argument.

Moon opened with a tirade of abuse against Joseph Smith, reading from a book of which he failed to give the author, charging all kinds of crimes, but never giving one authentic source. He then used against the Book of Mormon the old, worn-out lie—Spalding story. George arose, and objected to his bringing in new evidence, but was immediately set down by the chairman, who clearly showed ignorance of the rules of debate, or marked partiality to Moon.

If you can rake up the worst stuff used by Clark Braden against this work, you have only a mild sample of what Moon used against this work and its founders. The most far-fetched trash ever used! but of course it suited the element favorable to Moon. He lied with impunity, flatly denying his own statements, which his own people know. This will militate against him. Friends were made for our cause, and he has lost many.

Bro. U. W. Greene was present, for this is his field of labor; and to say he was indignant is perhaps the mildest word I can find to express the look upon his face. Bro. Robley had to meet this issue, unfair as it was, for he would have circulated a back down on our part had we refused.

We have pity for men who will persistently fight this the work of God, and resort to such means to accomplish their purposes; which will insure to them a part with all liars in the lake of fire, unless they repent and make amends for the wrong done.

A number of Moon's former friends have come over to the side of truth, and good will result. May the Master bless our efforts.

Yours in the conflict,

R. BULLARD.

WHITE-BRADEN DEBATE -NO. 3.

This debate, in a measure, follows the line of my other debates with Braden; hence many things that might be of interest to some, will be left out. Inasmuch as nearly all of the debaters that have to be met by our people from the Campbellites, use Braden's sayings, I will give some of his theories and my answers, and shall it benefit any I will be paid for my work.

Braden said Smith was a false prophet because be prophesied: "And I feel like Paul to glory in tribulation, for to this day has the God of my fathers delivered me out of them all, and will deliver me from henceforth; for, behold, and lo, I shall triumph over all my enemies, for the Lord God hath spoken it."-D. C. 109: 2. Says he: "Smith was killed in less than two years afterwards by his enemies; hence they triumphed over him, and Joe's Mormon God was mistaken." I showed by the same parity of reasoning, Paul and his God were in as bad a fix as Smith and his. Paul prophesied, "Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace: for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city."-Acts 18: 9, 10. We will let Paul speak of how things turned out with him afterwards. Says he: "Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool.) I am more; in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen," etc.—2 Cor. 11: 23-26.

This don't look much like triumphing over his enemies in Braden's way of reasoning. Nine years after Paul made his famous statement, "that no man should set on him," he was beheaded by his cruel enemies. Had Mr. Braden been there, Paul and his God would have shared the same fate that Joseph Smith and his God are sharing in this debate. The facts in the case are, Mr. Smith was only writing a letter to his friends when he made this statement. But it was at a time when his enemies were pursuing him in order to put him in jeopardy, so as to stop the spread of the truth as Smith advocated it. But as Paul triumphed over his enemies to the establishment of the truth, so was the promise to Smith.

Paul's final "triumph over his enemies," is expressed in these words: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—2 Timothy 4:6-8.

Just so did Mr. Smith understand "his final triumph would be, and that is the reason he said: "I feel like Paul to glory in tribulation." When going to his death he said: "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter; but I am calm as the summer's morning; I have a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward all men —I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me, he was murdered in cold blood."

Neither Paul nor Smith were to be "set upon" by their enemies to hinder them from establishing and performing the work that God had in his wisdom marked out for them to do. If doing this, faithfully, there was a crown laid up for them in heaven, and hence it was a "triumph over all of their enemies."

The same thought is found in Luke 10:19, when the Seventy were called to do a special and specific work: "And nothing shall by any means hurt you," says Christ, though many of these men afterwards suffered violent persecution and death. Yet they were, where faithful, preserved to fill their mission, and thus "triumphed over their enemies" in being permitted to enter the paradise of God at death.

I crowded Braden so hard on Isaiah 29th chapter, that at one time he said: "There is no book mentioned in the chapter." But, when I read slowly and with emphasis: "And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed . . . and the book is delivered to him that is not learned . . . and in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book." Then Braden stoutly affirmed that the whole chapter was nothing but a "parable!" I then urged its application, if a parable. This put Braden at sea, without even a glimpse of how to get out. It was amusing to see how he tried to get away from that chapter.

Now, Braden goes for "Joe" for adding one thousand verses to the book of Genesis in his "pretended Inspired Translation." This he made a big hobby in his lecture before the debate. I was only waiting for him to reaffirm it in the debate. Presently it came and with emphasis. In my answer I referred to it, and stepped across the stand to Braden and asked if I understood him correctly when he said Smith had added one thousand verses to the Book of Genesis? Yes sir, one thousand verses, said Braden. Turning to the audience I said: "Ladies and gentlemen; There are by actual count less than two hundred verses." Braden spoke up; "I'll see to that before to-morrow morning." I said: "Never mind, Braden, it is true all the same. If you come within eight hundred of one thousand you are doing well. That is about as good as you generally do on anything when pretending to represent our work to the public. If you only miss it eight hundred in a thousand you are doing well. That will tally with about all of your other statements." This was a scorcher. Braden knew full well when I said "less than two hundred," it meant facts.

Braden had forgotten, if he ever knew, how Alexander Campbell had "doctored up" the translation of the New Testament made by Drs. George Campbell, James Macknight, and Philip Doddridge.

In the Christian Baptist, edited by Alexander Campbell, vol. 4., no. 1, for August 7, 1826, there is a statement from the pen of a man signing his name "A Friend to Truth," which says: "There are contained in it (New Testament) upwards of one thousand and five hundred variations from the translations of the learned doctors whose names are on the title-page, although numbers of our wise men in Kentucky imagine that we have it almost verbatim from these translators." A. Campbell, in answer to this, says: "Now, lovers of truth, he has not been half as ostentatious of his calculating powers as he might be; for, in fact, there are more than one hundred and twenty 'alterations' in the first six verses of the third chapter of this epistle!!! In other words, I have given six full verses of 'aterations' from the translator of this epistle." [Hebrews.] "But what are they?" Campbell asks. I ask: Had not Smith the same right to translate the Bible as Campbell? Hundreds of translations have been on the market, and no two read alike. I have five, and yet no two agree. I here read a dozen passages or so, to show the superiority of Mr. Smith's translation. I did not tell Mr. Braden just how many short of two hundred verses were in the book of Genesis. I left him to find that out. But now, for the information of the reader, I say, just one.

For further information on this subject, I submit the following table: The Old Testament in King James' translation has 39 books; Inspired 38, Solomon's Songs being left out. King James has 929 chapters; Inspired 921—a difference of 8 chapters in favor of King James. King James has 23,214 verses; Inspired 23,232 verses,—a difference of 18 verses in favor of Inspired Translation. Add to that 117 for Solomon's Songs, were they put in, makes 23,349 verses,—a difference of 135 verses in favor of Inspired Translation. The New Testament in King James' translation has 27 books, and so has the Inspired. Each have 260 chapters. King James has 7,959 verses; Inspired 8,029 verses,—70 verses in favor of Inspired.

Taking both the Old and New Testaments, the Inspired Translation has 88 verses more than is in King James. If we add Solomon's Songs to Inspired we then have 205 verses more in Inspired than King James. There are 50 chapters in the book of Genesis, both in King James and Inspired Translation; 1,533 verses in King James, and 1,732 in Inspired,—a difference of 199 in favor of Inspired,—yes, "less than two hundred."

Thus, you see, in the mildest way you can look at it, Braden in attempting to tell one truth, tells 801 falsehoods! Every verse over the 199, is just that many falsehoods. I told Braden that I did not say he intentionally lied; that was not my way of doing business. But in telling his story of one thousand he just missed it a little over eight hundred. I don't think he will repeat his story again before a Latter Day Saint debater; he may do it in his lectures, provided our elders are six hundred miles away. Don't think I have my confidence shaken. I never had much to shake in that direction.

I contended that there were historical facts regarding statements made by the apostles and prophets of the Bible, that should appear in the book of Genesis that were not there unless we accepted the Inspired Translation, which I believe supplied the missing link. It is a fact that a large portion of the 199 verses added to that book, were statements made by the Prophet Enoch regarding Christ and his work, both of his first and second coming, while not a verse in all of that book can be found in King James' translation, intelligibly pointing to these wonderful events. All that can be found there, are only inferences to these striking and important events that were to take place sometime in the future, for the salvation of the race. That the apostles of Christ had access to Holy Scriptures that contained the sayings of Enoch upon these great and important subjects that I have referred to, which are found in the book of Genesis of the Inspired Translation, made by Joseph Smith, is apparent from statements made by them in other books of the Bible. and recorded in King James' translation. This kind of proof alone will harmonize the text and defeat infidelity.

The Prophet Enoch lived in the time that is covered by the history found in the book of Genesis, and it is said of him in King James' translation: "And all the days of Enoch were three hundred and sixty and five years: and Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him."—Gen. 5: 23, 24. Here is one of the most noted prophets of the Bible; a man that "walked with God" for "three hundred years"! And yet, not a finger's length of written history have we either from him, or of him, in King James' Bible!

I ask: Where did Jude of the New Testament get such a statement as the following, if the apostles of Christ had no written scripture in regard to Enoch's sayings? "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." It here states that Enoch "prophesied" of these sayings. It could not have come up through tradition to the apostles, as Enoch lived before the time of the Flood. Hence, we are forced to the conclusion when Moses took in hand to write of Enoch and his sayings, as is found in the fifth chapter of Genesis, in King James' translation, he must have continued the history as found in the sixth and seventh chapters of the Inspired Translation, which embrace the historical events or "prophesyings" found in the book of Jude. Could this illiterate Joseph Smith have known of all this and fixed up a "job," as Braden says, "on purpose to fulfill Scripture"? Certainly this would have made him a prophet, as nothing short of the Spirit of inspiration could have brought such intelligence to his mind.

We have in 1 Corinthians 15: 3 (K. J. T.): "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." There was no New Testament in use at this saying; but the Old Bible Scriptures are the ones here alluded to. Where in all that book (K. J. T.) will you find such a statement, "That Christ died for our sins"? We can find only faint inferences. Such passages as are found in Psalms 22:16; Isaiah 53:5, 6; Daniel 9:26, and Zechariah 13:7, are quoted in proof of that apostolic text. I don't wonder at the Jews not knowing Jesus was the Christ from the things "written of him" in the "Old Bible," if they had nothing more than what is found in the King James Version. Christ said: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." "Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me."-John 5: 39, 45, 46. Now in all the five books of Moses, as found in the King James Translation, there is hardly one plain, coherent verse that can be quoted to sustain Christ in his adroit condemnation of the Jews, because they would not receive him as the Messiah in fulfillment of what was written by Moses the prophet concerning him. But, when you supply this "missing link" from "Joseph the prophet," as found in the Inspired Translation, where he claims to have restored some of the "many plain and precious parts" that have been taken away from the Bible, you can easily see how Christ was justified in condemning the Jews, because they would not believe in him, by reason of what was written of him in "Moses and the prophets," which they pretended to be their sacred guide.

These are points, when well pressed, that Braden has never been able to answer, nor any other debater I have ever met.

Braden tried hard to make a conflict between the Book of Mormon and Inspired Translation, because the Book of Mormon says, "I never knew you," and the Inspired Translation says, "ye never knew me." I contended both statements were correct. For instance: man can not know Christ, in a spiritual sense, without the Holy Ghost, hence "Ye never knew me." 1 Cor. 12:3; John 17: 3. Christ, on the other hand, recognized none as his children in a spiritual sense, unless they were "born again," hence "I never knew you." John 3: 5: Romans 8: 9, 16. I contend that the inspired writers throughout the Bible could be made to contradict each other upon many important points, if we were so technical in regard to their phraseology. For instance: Matthew 6: 11 says: "Give us this day our daily bread." Luke 11: 3 has it: "Give us day by day our daily bread." Matthew says: "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." Luke has it: "Forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us." Matthew says: "For thine is the kingdom. and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen." Luke leaves this out. Now the Inspired Translation and Book of Mormon, even in the Lord's prayer, differ, but not any more than do Matthew and Luke. The Book of Mormon prophet differs in his phraseology even from King James and Inspired Translation too. Just such difference in phraseology will we find in Matthew 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21, when relating the signs, etc., of Christ's second coming. So also a difference in the phraseology in Joel 2: 28-32 and Acts 2: 17-21. Now, I believe these men all told the truth; but, because they differ in the way they tell it, are we to call them false prophets? I think not.

Braden tried to make a point on me because our Book of Covenants did not have in it all the revelations Smith had received. He said: "They go back on their own prophet." And the reason we had not put in the revelation on the war, was, we were afraid it would never come to pass. Hence we doubted our own prophet. I asked him to tell me the reason why all the revelations given by the Bible prophets and apostles were not put in the Bible. Was it because they had gone back on the Bible prophets? Afraid that their prophecies would never come to pass? Why did they not put in the Book of Jasher as mentioned in Joshua 10:13: 2 Samuel 10:25? Yes, the Book Jehu, 2 Chronicles 20: 34? Isaiah's History of Uzziah, 2 Chronicles 26: 22? A book written by Jeremiah, Jeremiah 36:2, 32? Daniel's Sealed Book, Daniel 12:4, 9? Paul's previous epistle to the Corinthians, 1 Corinthians 5:9? And his epistle to the Laodiceans, Colossians 4:16? And Jude's previous epistle, Jude 3? There are more than twenty books mentioned in the Bible that are left cut of the book. Does that invalidate its claims? And shall I brand the prophets that gave these revelations as false prophets, because all of their prophecies failed to get into the Bible? Certainly not.

The revelation on the reballion came in for its share of controversy. I introduced it in proof of Smith being a prophet, and quoted Deuteronomy 18:22 as being God's standard to try men that claimed to be prophets. Deuteronomy says: "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord. if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken," etc. Hence this was tantamount to saying, If the thing that was spoken by the prophet came to pass, it was of God. From this basis would we try Smith on his revelation given December 25, 1832, in regard to a coming war. The revelation says, war will commence, "at the rebellion of South Carolina," which thing came to pass in about twenty-eight years afterwards. But, Braden said. "'Old Hickory' brought South Carolina to time and Joe's prophecy fell to the ground." I showed while "Old Hickory" was bringing "South Corolina to time," there was no war commenced between the South and the North, and instead of "Joe's prophecy" proving false, time went on and war did commence by South Carolina rebelling, notwithstanding "Old Hickory's" efforts. I wanted to know if "Old Hickory" "knocked Joe's prophecy out of time" by preventing the Southern States from dividing against the Northern States. Did "Old Hickory" prevent the slaves raising up against their masters, and being marshaled and disciplined for war, as the revelation said they would? Other objections urged against this revelation utterly failed, and Braden was glad to drop it.

Braden then brought what he called "that stealing revelation." (D. C. 64: 6.) He contended it gave the Mormons license to steal. I showed the paragraph alluded to was to the bishops of the church. Hitherto they had been forbidden to get in debt to their enemies; but now as peculiar circumstances surrounded them, they were granted liberty to borrow money even from their enemies. as "agents on the Lord's business," and he says to them: "Whatever ye do according to the will of the Lord, is the Lord's business, and he hath set you [the bishops] to provide for his saints in these last days, that they may obtain an inheritance in the land of Zion." The Lord taking when he pleases, and paving as seemeth him good through his agents, embraced some system to get means to "obtain an inheritance in the land of Zion;" but this had to be done "according to the will of the Lord." This "will of the Lord" is expressed in a former commandment (Doctrine and Covenants 57:1, 2), "Wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased. . . . And let my servant Sidney Gilbert [the same bishop who was spoken to in Braden's "stealing revelation"], stand in the office which I have appointed him, to receive moneys, to be an agent unto the church, to buy land in all the regions round about, inasmuch as can be in righteousness, and as wisdom shall direct." But the Saints' poverty being such, and lands on the raise because of the gathering of the Saints to Zion and the regions round about. the Lord now gives Braden's "stealing revelation" to the bishop, giving him authority to purchase lands on credit from "their enemies" that the saints might have an inheritance, which very thing was done in many cases. Had these saints stuck to their lands, and kept all of God's commandments, they could have easily paid their "enemies" for their lands "as seemeth him [God] good," as is commanded by him in section 101: 13: "And again, verily I say unto you, concerning your debts [this is some three years after they were allowed to get in debt by purchasing lands from their enemies], Behold, it is my will that you should pay all your debts; . . . and inasmuch as you are diligent and humble, and exercise the prayer of faith, behold, I will soften the hearts of those [their enemies] to whom you are in debt, until I shall send means unto you for your deliverance." Now, this is the way the saints carried out the stipulations found in Braden's stealing revelation; and if it gave license to steal, some one else did the stealing, and not the saints.

Braden then jumped onto the Book of Mormon and condemned it because, said he, "It teaches that Christ and the gospel with baptism, were taught in Old Bible times. Our Bible don't hint such a thing being preached before Christ came in the flesh."

I contended that the Bible was in exact accord with the Book of Mormon on this, and it was Braden and his doctrine that were out of the way, and in his blind zeal he opposed the "law and the prophets." I introduced Paul as one of my witnesses, who said: "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant; how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ."-1 Cor. 10:1-4. Here I contended we have not only Christ the Rock taught, but baptism too.

Braden in attempting to remove this rejoinder, said: "It was not Christian baptism at all; because all the beasts and the children were baptized too." He attempted to throw discredit upon the baptism, as White would have all the oxen and cows baptized and drinking of that spiritual Rock.

When I got the floor I read slowly and with emphasis: "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all bantized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." Did I read of any oxen, cows, and children being baptized? No! But those that were baptized and drank of that spiritual Rock, were "fathers" not cows nor children. This was one of my scorchers on Braden, and I made him feel its force, too. If Braden rejects the Book of Mormon because it says the gospel was preached in old Bible times, will he be fair and honest enough to tell the people he also rejects the New Testament and its writers for teaching the same thing? Let Braden and his church at least make an attempt to be consistent in their method of rejecting things. Now, here is a statement I wish to read from the New Testament, and what will Braden and his church do with that? Remember Braden's church has indorsed him as "sound in the faith as they hold and teach." They have kept up their hobby from the beginning, "Where the Bible speaks we speak, and where it is silent we are silent." They have rode this "blind horse" and waded through sectarianism for more than seventy years without even a check, till they struck what they please to call the Mormons. We have cried, "halt!" and have forced them to dismount. Now, here is that New Testament statement I alluded to a few minutes ago: "For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. . . . Seeing therefore it remainsth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief."-Heb. 4:2, 6. Here it emphatically says that the gospel was preached unto them (in old Bible times) as well as unto us (in New Testament times). Again: "They to whom it was first preached [in old Bible times] entered not in because of unbelief." Let me remind Mr. Braden and his church who have indorsed him, that there is but one gospel known to the Bible prophets. Paul was so tenacious in regard to this, that he writes: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."-Gal. 1:8. And be it remembered that it is Paul who says: "Unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them." First "preached" unto "them:" and second "unto Braden admits that something was preached unto them, but says he: "Our Bible don't hint that Christ was preached back there." I here introduced Christ's own savings, to wit: "Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets [old Bible prophets] have spoken. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets [old Bible prophets] he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures [old Bible scriptures], and said unto them, Thus it is written [in old Bible], and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."-Luke 24: 25-47. Here we have it from Christ's own mouth, that the old Bible prophets did preach him; and this is the very reason they were baptized in Moses' day in the "cloud and in the sea" and drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them, which was Christ. Hence, it was "first preached," says Paul, "unto them" (in old Bible times), but did not profit them, not being mixed with faith. But, says he: "Unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them." What more proof could we ask to prove the statement made in Book of Mormon to be true and in harmony with the Bible?

I wish to make one statement in regard to "Christ and him crucified," being advocated in Old Bible times. It is where Paul is making his defense before Agrippa, even as I am making mine. Paul says: "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continued unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles."—Acts 26: 22, 23. This statement needs no comment—all can see that "Christ and him crucified" was preached by the old prophets, hence the Book of Mormon statement is true.

Braden attempted to have some sport over the words "more part," as found in the Book of Mormon, page 329. I turned this dart aside by showing the Book of Mormon was in good company when it had so eminent a work as the Bible as its companion. I read: "And the more part knew not wherefore they were come together."-Acts 19: 32. "And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart."-Acts 27:12. Braden dropped this at once, and took up Moroni's rent coat, pages 326, 327. He was very careful to read only the latter part of the narrative where it says: "He went forth among the people, waving the rent of his garment in the air." Here he made a great ado about a man "waving a hole in the air!" It wasn't so laughable when I showed Braden up in his trickery. I asked: If the statement is so ridiculous, why not read it as found in the book? Here I read the first part of the narrative: "And it came to pass that he rent his coat; and he took a piece thereof, and wrote upon it." Then he went before the people "waving the rent [the piece] of his garment in the air." reminded his church members that they must not forget that this was the man whom they indorsed as being "sound in the faith" as they "hold and teach it." I wanted to know if they indorsed Braden in such trickery as that? Here I had a good opportunity to expose Braden in his trickery practiced in his lecture before I got on the grounds. He had attempted to read the statement found in Book of Mormon, page 532, where the armies of Shiz and Coriantumr fought. When coming to the statement. "And it came to pass that they fought all that day," he would read for the word "fought," "and they fit, and fit, and fit, and fit, and fit all that day, and when night came they slept upon their swords; and on the morrow they fit, and fit, and fit, and fit, and fit." Then he stops and shakes his head and says: "What balderdash!" I read the verse very slowly and distinctly where Braden pretended to get his "fit and fit" from; but it was not there. What Braden read there, he called it all "balderdash." I walked over to where Braden sat and said: I want to acknowledge, sir, that what you read into that passage was as you stated, "all balderdash." because it was all Bradenism, as there is no such stuff in the Book of Mormon. I did not fail to remind him that he eame "indorsed" as being "sound in the faith." That "indorsement" proved a boomerang to its signers, just as I intended it should. (Continued.)

THAMESVILLE, Ont., Nov. 9.

Editors Herald:—Thinking a few thoughts from this side would be read with interest, prompts me to pen this letter. Elder A. E. Mortimer and the writer are engaged in a series of meetings here. Bro. Wm. Lively is the only Saint in the place, but others live near. Although a modest and somewhat timid man, he takes an anxious and active interest in the salvation of his fellow townsmen. The attendance is rather small so far, and some boys have been rude and ill-behaved. One night some time after church they threw eight stones through the front windows of the hall.

Bro. Mortimer is an old man,—more than twice my age,—but is younger than I in some respects. He is very companionable and sees "the funny side" first if not most. We are making ministerial calls and distributing tracts.

Bro. Knisley and I, who have been together all summer, are now laboring apart. It will be interesting to the Saints and his particular friends to learn he is doing very well. His prospects for future usefulness are good. In him is a young man of unimpeachable integrity, who considers the field of missionary labor full of honor and worthy the best there is in any one. This fact was nicely emphasized by Bishop Kelley in a recent HERALD. It does my soul good to hear my fellow ministers and their labors commended.

By special permission of Bro. Evans, and financial kindness of young and zealous Religians I was permitted to attend both fall conferences; otherwise I could have gone to one only. They were well attended and interesting. Bro. Evans, assisted by district officials, presided in his usual happy manner. In storm he is oak and rock; in sunshine he is vine and flower.

Space will not permit mention of all the pleasant things the writer thought and felt about those he met. As one act of businsss transacted it was decided to publish a paper entitled "The Canadian Messenger." 'Twill soon be here, too. "The world do move," and so does God's work.

GLADSTONE, Ill., Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—I have been improving my home a little, painting and putting down carpets, perchance some weary, traveling elder might want lodging. My eldest son is day operator for the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy at this place. We would be glad to entertain any of the elders at any time. My health is very poor.

The HERALD is a welcome guest at my house. When I read it I give it to my neighbors and friends.

Let us as a church stand firm in the faith once delivered to the Saints, the gospel of the Son of God, the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. Yes, it is the power of God. Then let us run with patience the race set before us, shunning every appearance of evil.

Your brother in bonds,

ALBION, Idaho, Nov. 10.

Dear Saints:-After a sojourn in various places in Western Idaho I find myself at home again. I can not say I have accomplished great results this year, but have endeavored to present the truth to the people in public and private conversation wherever I have been preaching to other people, while a part of the duty of the ministry, is but one feature of "winning souls to Christ." I can see more clearly the more I see of the world. Experience convinces me more and more of the necessity of setting our own house in order, too. When I see others careless about their manner of conversation and conduct before the world, I find myself looking inward and at my past life with more shame than pleasure. How very circumspect I should have been every day, everywhere, that the cause of Christ be not reproached by my slothfulness in business or lack of fervency of spirit in Godly zeal for the prestige of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. When I hear it said of our people, "They are worthy," I feel they are "friends of my Master;" but how different I feel when stories (true or false,) are told of those "called to be Saints," which reflect discredit on the name and cause I am there to maintain and defend. No amount of lip service in song, prayer, or elequence in logic can supply the lack of example. "Be ye doers of the word and not bearers only," has a wonderful significance. I wish I could blot out of the memory of man and from my own record and memory every foolish word or deed of my past life, for they often cloud my skies, and burden my mind.

O, Saints, let us be wise wherever we are, and thus preach the gospel, and win souls to Christ,—lead sinners out of darkness into light. "Let your light shine." The world needs gospel light more than all things else. "Have salt within yourselves," or how shall the world be salted. Moreover, the salt is needed among the people, "as a dew from the Lord."

While attending conference at Lamoni and Independence, I could not but think Saints are needed elsewhere, and I felt more determined to try more earnestly to set my own house in order and do what I could to make holy my own habitation, that the peace of Christ may be in it. There is an element for good in doing all things in honor to the Lord; and surely the Lord will hear and honor every soul who strives thus to set in order his own house in honor to the Lord. When I see those called to be Saints, sipping their tea and coffee in their homes, smoking and chewing tobacco, and wondering how soon the gathering will occur, and how hard it is for Saints to live right among the worldly, I can not but feel like telling them to wash their eyes, and anoint them with eye salve. My eyes never were so dark that I could not see better than that.

I do not aim to write as a fault-finder, but that we may come to more unity, that we may come to the standard that divine wisdom has suggested for even the least of those who may or can be call Saints; that we may be examples to the world, a light to those who sit in darkness,

Laborers are sadly needed out in these everlasting hills, -those who preach by word and deed, with much long-suffering and patience. Even then they may feel as Isaiah, "Lord who hath believed our report, and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?"

Since writing to the HERALD, I have held meetings in Connail, Salubria, Middle Valley, Washington county; also Boise City and Albion, besides visiting other points. Whatever good results from the seed sown, the Lord be praised. I find the people all absorbed in getting gain, pleasuring, and lodge matters. In posting notices and inviting them to meeting I am met on every hand, "lodge matters and daily toil take up my time," so I find no time for churchgoing except Sunday night. This is another evil in the land, even among "our folks." This substitute for the gospel and its work-the secret society. "Seek first the king dom of God, and to establish its righteousness," is reversed by seeking first the lodge and its interest, thus showing where our interest and love rest. Every soul who obeys the gospel has accepted a mission from the great Captain to set his house in order, keep it in order by day or night, and by good words and works maintain the dignity and honor of the gospel. "Let every one that nameth the name of Christ [obeys], depart from iniquity." This means priest or people, all alike, as there is no respect to persons or privileged class in the church.

Ever for Zion's weal, CHARLES ALBERTSON.

Original Poetry.

TO MY WIFE.

BY AMANTE LUCE.

A heavenly voice comes now, love, to me And imbues with sensations divine. They twine round each thought and take them unsought

And carry them all, love, to thee. They center them all upon thee.

This voice, oh so strong, it urges me on Like the surge of a great rising tide. Its sound is unheard for it utters no word. But it carries me, love, to your side. It carries me back to your side.

This still, wordless voice, without my choice, Distills on my soul like the dew, or the breath of my love,

Till it fires my soul to reach its goal, Its goal at the feet of my love;

At the feet of my stainless love. PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, July 30, 1901.

"A Man of Letters in the White House" is the title of a paper in the November Critic in which Joseph B. Gilder critically reviews President Roosevelt's work as an author, and discusses the probabilities of any further contributions on the part of President Roosevelt to the literary world. Mr. Roosevelt is more widely known as an author than any other United States president, and hence his works form a fit subject for the critics.

"The power to love is one of the greatest gifts to humanity. It generates the sunshine of the moral universe. without which life would be a desert waste.

"Use this divine power without stint. Be prodigal of your love. Let it radiate freely. It will brighten the dark places. It will gladden the sorrowing. It will lift you above the petty, grinding cares that so soon corrode the mind and sap the energies. It is the golden key that will admit you to the palace of the true life.'

WE'LL ALL BE TOGETHER AGAIN.

When dear ones have left us to journey afar O'er mountain or prairie or sea,

Our thoughts travel oft where the loving ones are

And lonely we often must be. But sweet is the thought of the home-coming time To women and children and men; It rings, like the bells, with a musical chime; We'll all be together again!

When sickness and trouble break into our lives,

When cares throng in manifold ways, When many a wearisome burden contrives To mar the sweet peace of our days. 'Tis blessed to hope there'll be happiness yet; That shining will follow the rain; That those who now hate will forgive and forget, And will all be together again.

When lives have been sundered by death's cruel hand.

When dear ones no more have our care-All happy and safe in the beautiful land;

So safe they no more need our prayer-Oh, blessed the thought of the meeting once

Beyond all the sorrow and pain; Where nothing is wrong on the heavenly shore

And we'll all be together again! -Mrs. Frank A. Breck.

THE OLD SCOTCHMAN'S PRAYER.

I was pleased the other day with a story which an aged Scotch minister told me about an old Scotchman who, many years ago was on his way to a meeting of the people of God held in a tent, or some such temporary struc-

The old pilgrim was poor and ill-clad, and partly deaf, but he trusted in the Lord, whom he served, and rejoiced in his kind providence. On his way to the meeting he fell in with another Christian brother, a younger man, bound on the same errand, and they traveled on together.

When they had nearly reached the place of meeting it was proposed that they should turn aside behind the hedge and have a little prayer before they entered the meeting. They did so, and the old man, who had learned "in everything to let his requests be made known unto God," presented his case in language like the following:

"Lord, ye ken weel enough that I'm deaf, and I want a seat on the first bench, if ye ken let me have it, so that I can hear thy word. And ye see that my toes are sticking through my shoes, and I don't think it is much to your credit to have your children's toes sticking through their shoes, and therefore I want ye to get me a pair of new ones. And ve ken I have nae siller, and I want to stay there during the meeting, and therefore I want you to get me a place to stay."

When the old man had finished his quaint petition, and they had started on, his younger brother gently suggested to him that he thought his prayer was rather free in its form of expression, and hardly as reverential as seemed proper to him in approaching the Supreme Being. But the old man did not accept the imputation of irreverence.

"He's my Father," said he, "and I'm weel acquainted with him and he's weel acquainted with me and I take great libertles with him."

So they went on to the meeting together. The old man stood for awhile in the rear of the congregation, making an ear-trumpet with his hand to catch the words, until some one near the pulpit noticed him and, beckoning forward, gave him a good seat upon the front bench.

During the prayer the old man knelt down and, after he rose, a lady who had noticed his shoes said to him:

"Are they the best shoes you have?"

"Yes," said he, "but I expect my Father will give me a new pair very soon."

"Come with me after the meeting," said the lady, "and I will get you a new pair."

The service closed and he went with her to her house.

"Shall you stay during the meeting?" said the good woman, as they went along.

"I would, but I'm a stranger in the place and have nae siller."

"Well," said she, "you will be perfectly welcome to make your home at our house during the meeting."

The old man thanked the Lord that he had given him all the three things he had asked for; and, while the young brother's reverence for the Lord was right and proper, he might learn that there is a reverence which reaches higher than the forms and conventionalities of human taste, and which leads the believer to "come boldly to the throne of grace" to find all-needed help in every trying hour .-Baptist Weekly.

THE FAITH OF A LITTLE CHILD.

Every one smiled when his father carried him into the car-this little lad of three, who taught me so sweet a lesson in faith. The car was crowded, but there was a corner between door and window where the child could stand, and there his father put him down.

"You stay still there, Herbie; papa is going to stand near you. You won't be afraid?"

The wee man shook his head very decidedly, and catching hold of a brass rail with his chubby fist, stood contentedly watching his father with trustful, happy eyes. At every corner new passengers came on board and crowded between father and child. Herbie was much more comfortable in the sheltered nook where his father had put him than he would have been even in his father's arms on the crowded, jolting platform. Little by little the new-comers hid the father from Herbie's sight. He did not look like a child who was accustomed to be alone, and I watched him closely, ready to comfort if need be. I saw his lips moving, and bent toward him. This was what he said, "I can see my papa's foot and I can see my papa's hand."

Precious little heart; comforting itself!

The crowd jostled back and forth. I heard another whisper, "I can see my papa's foot. I—can—see—my—papa's—foot!"

Then the foot was no longer visible to the patient watcher. Trouble clouded his serious eyes for a minute, followed by a sudden happy smile.

"I can hear my papa talk!" Sure enough the father was talking to some one. But the conversation was not long. The blue eyes were growing shadowy again.

"Herbie," I whispered, "I can see your papa. I am taller than you. I can see your papa's face, dear."

For a brief space my face was subjected to a searching glance. Then the content came back to the boy's face. He watched me and I watched that other face, nodding assurance to my little friend. In a few moments people began to leave the car, the father sat down and took his child on his knee.

"Were you afraid, Herbie?"

"No-I knew you were there all the whole time!"

Oh, for the faith of a little child, that whatever comes the heart may say, "I was not afraid, for lo, I knew that all the time thou wert there!"—Sel.

BENEFITS OF SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

We often hear the Sabbath-school spoken of as "the nursery of the church." If this is the position it occupies, it will be well for us to find the definition of nursery. We find in one place that it is "a place where young trees, vines, and shrubs, are cultivated, and prepared for transplanting." If I should ask a question as to what real benefit there was derived from this nursery work or from the process of cultivation, or ask if the nursery stock would not be just as good, make as fine a growth, as healthy, unblemished trees, vines, or shrubs, if left to grow up without care or cultivation as they would where so much labor and care had been expended upon them, you would in all probability say, "What a foolish question!" and think that I must be very ignorant in regard to such matters. For all who are posted in regard to the work, know that it is very necessary that nursery stock should be constantly cared for, and cultivated, to prevent the weeds from choking out the stock. They must also be pruned of all useless, worthless branches, that those considered necessary to make perfect trees, could get all the strength there was in the root and thereby make a far better growth and more perfect stock in every There is a grand lesson in this for Sabbath-school workers to think about. And who can estimate the good the Sabbath-school work is doing? when we stop to consider the constant cultivating process that is going on in our Sabbath-schools, from Sunday to Sunday, the beautiful lessons of obedience, truthfulness, purity, faithfulness, honesty, and charity that are being instilled into the minds of the young, never to be eradicated or forgotten; then add to this the pruning process that is constantly in operation, by the eradication of all erroneous ideas as well as those things of an evil character-the results of evil doings, the suffering and sorrow all must expect who commit sin, and at last be deprived of a rest in the kingdom of God-when those things are constantly kept before their eyes, can they help but create an earnest desire within them, to put away everything of an evil nature, and strive more earnestly to resist temptation in the future, the contrast of good and evil is so great, that it causes a feeling of disgust for evil-doers, as well as their deeds, and creates within them a desire to shun the very appearance of evil. If all could estimate the actual benefits of gathering the children together into the Sabbathschool there would none be found outside who could possibly get there, for the precious truths taught to them while young will remain with them, and will become a part of their very being. I am confident that every person who loves that which is good, and is interested in the progress of truth and righteousness, would be led to exclaim, How wonderful are the benefits of this Sabbath-school work! If we could have the number of noble deeds, kind, loving acts performed by those who have been taught in the Sabbath-school and actuated by the noble examples of those who had spent their lives in the service of God; the faithful, earnest prayers that have been offered up to a kind, loving Father by even the lambs that have been taught and urged to go to him with their trials and for help to resist evil. I will give one instance out of thousands, perhaps, of the good results of such teaching: A teacher invited one of her scholars home with her for a pleasant visit.

The mother of the child was also invited; but a storm arose before she could get there. The child was very unhappy, fearing her mother was out in the storm, and would be injured in some way. Suddenly the child left the room for a short time. When she returned she asked her teacher if she knew what she had been doing. The teacher told her she did not. Then the little one said: "Do you not remember the lessons you taught us in the Sabbath-school, about talking to Jesus about our troubles? That's what I've been doing."

Do you not think that teacher felt to rejoice when she saw the good seed she had tried in weakness to sow, had not been sown in vain? The teachers as well as the scholars have been greatly benefited.

We can see the effects of this great work on every hand. Even the little ones can tell more about the plan of salvation than many who have been in the church thirty or forty years and have failed to attend the Sabbathschool. They can give every one a reason for the hope that is within them.

Then when we see so many of our young men and women graduates of this work (if such a thing be possible), going into different localities, taking places of responsibility, using their talents in helping to forward this work, and all other good works; then hear of the young soldiers who are out preaching the gospel, we can not help but see that the benefits of this work are indeed numerous, and that the amount of good accomplished can never be really estimated while here in mortality.

I am sure those engaged in the work should take courage, for the work is a grand one. You may feel your weakness, and think that the little good you are trying to do can never amount to much. But it surely will if you continue; for those littles are accumulating, and the number increasing; then when your work is ended, and those littles are added up, you will find that they do amount to something, and you will then know your labor has not been in vain, and you can then comprehend to a greater extent than ever before the actual benefits of the Sabbath-school work.

On page 935 of the HERALD issue for November 20, 1901, there is a serious blunder in expression, as follows: "Who are these 'enemies' of the Latter Day Saints, who say 'that these people secretly encourage 'sealing of spiritual wives,' while openly claiming to believe in the evil practice?" It should read, "While openly claiming not to believe in the evil practice," the word not which should have been in the sentence was inadvertently left out. Please read as corrected.

On November 23, in the evening, at Greenport, New York, the submarine boat Fulton, one of the "Holland" type of torpedo boats, went below the surface, and remained under until 10:30 the following morning, or about fifteen hours. Six men were on board. and they passed the night at the bottom of the bay pleasantly, unconscious that above them was raging one of the fiercest storms which had visited that port for many years. The air was kept quite pure, and the men experienced no inconvenience. Submarine navigation seems assured.

TROUBLE at Colon, and gunboat threatening the town. President Roosevelt has sent notice that American property in the city must be protected.

EARTHQUAKE IN UTAH.

On November 14 a number of earthquake shocks occurred in various places in Utah. From the Descret News of the 14th we gather the fol-

Beaver, Utah, Nov. 14.-A tremendous earthquake occurred here at 9:33 last night. Much damage done to public and private buildings.

Court house and "Mormon" meeting-house badly injured, the buildings at the Beaver Branch Academy badly wrecked, particu-larly the Murdock building, and in town, plate glass windows broken, chimneys down, houses badly cracked. No fatalities. A number of slight shocks since morning.

The Beaver Woolen Mills are in very bad shape, in fact almost collapsed.

There is scarcely a building of any size, but has received more or less injury.

The meeting-house here has the ceiling badly wrecked, and a large quantity of the plaster has fallen, and the chimneys will have to be rebuilt.

Filmore, Utah, Nov. 14.—An earthquake of considerable violence visited this city last night at 10:45 o'clock. Windows, doors, dishes, and individuals got a severe shock. In many instances the plaster was shaken from the houses and it was almost impossible for a person to maintain a standing position.

Cedar City, Utah, Nov. 14.—A severe shock of earthquake was felt here about 9: 30 last night, as in all the surrounding country.

The first indication was a low rumbling sound as of a mighty wind, then followed a sudden terrible shaking up as of a mammoth upheaval.

Oasis, Utah, Nov. 13.—A heavy earthquake shock was felt at this place at 9: 37 p. m., and lasted for about twenty-five or thirty seconds. Seemed to travel from the northeast to southwest. People were frightened out of their beds and general excitement prevailed for a short time.

SHOCK IN SALT LAKE CITY.

A well-known gentleman in this city remarked some time ago that nothing short of an earthquake would bring about the moral reforms that were more or less contended for during the last campaign. It now seems that the elements have accepted his conclusions and are acting upon his suggestions, for about 9: 30 last night the solid earth began to shake and a few people were brought to their knees voluntarily and otherwise. Three waves passed over the city, each one being stronger than the one preceding it, so that the last shock was no trifling matter. The earth-quake, for all the experts pronounced it so to have been, seemed to concentrate around the Wey hotel, where it come nearly precipitating a panic.

The guests on the third floor felt it most. In fact they felt it so badly that some of them ran out into the hall. Some people from California were in the hotel.

They were old hands when it came to California earthquakes, but they didn't know anything about the Usah article. They felt that they were on strange ground and were not certain as to how long they would be on any ground stall. In front of the hotel the shock was very distinctly felt by some Knutsford guests who happened to be standing there. But nothing was felt at the Knutsford, or indeed immediately across the street, indicating that an earthquake like a cyclone travels on a more or less narrow path, and that outside of those limits no disturbance is felt.

Whenever an earthquake visits a large city of course the tall buildings seem to be their special toys. Last night the Dooly block began to vibrate, but it was only for a moment. It was pronounced enough, however, for several men who were in the building to notice it. The quake then proceeded diagonally across the street and entered Smith's drug store, gave the stove a shake, and the clerk a scare, and a customer said, "Wouldn't that jar you?"

When next discovered it was in the University club on the third floor of the Jennings' block. H. B. Windsor was sitting with his chair tilted against the wall, when suddenly bis head was lurched to one side and then to the other. The disturbance was over in a flash and Windsor was beginning to wonder if it was paresis, when Professor Eaton and Mr. Parsons, who were present, remarked upon the shock and then Windsor knew he was safe, in the head at least.

The shock was distinctly felt in other sections of the city, including the Hooper building and the New Grand theater. Although the shock was slight and the first one felt here for years, any such elemental dis-turbance is portentous, and has had the re-sult of throwing some of the citizens into a somber frame of mind.

Salt Lake, however, was not the only section visited by the earthquake. Reports have come in from various parts of the state, telling, of some very pronounced shocks. At Lund it stopped clocks and jostled the cars on the railroad tracks. It was felt very sensibly at Elsinore, also at Manti and other points.

TITHE-PAYERS IN UTAH.

According to President Joseph F. Smith, in a sermon delivered at the conference of the Utah church, April 7, 1901, held in Salt Lake City, there were at that time "sixty-nine thousand tithe payers who have paid all the way from one dollar to hundreds of dollars per year;" and ten thousand names on record as "reputed members of the church who are non-tithe payers."

President Joseph F. Smith said that he hoped to see the day when the ten thousand non-tithe payers would become tithe payers, and so help the

Is there in this a lesson for us?

From the Deseret News for November 15, we quote:

"King Edward's Mormon Subjects," is the heading of an item in the Liverpool Echo, which we find thus copied by the Millennial

"Apropos of the death of Lorenzo Snow, the President of the Mormon Church, it is not generally known that King Edward VII. has some five thousand Mormon subjects. They occupy the Cardston district of Western Canada, and in a recent report presented to the Dominion House of Commons they are highly complimented for their industry, sobriety, and good citizenship generally. They are polygamists in theory, monogamists in practice. That is to say, they believe in polygamy as a revealed doctrine of their church, but have the sense to perceive that there is no possibility of its translation into fact under British law and sovereignty."

THE following appeared in the Chicago American for November 18:

Samuel Stevenson to-day filed a bill in the Circuit Court against John Alexander Dowie, asking the appointment of a receiver for the lace industry at Zion City.

Stevenson a brother-in-law of Dowie asks for a dissolution of the partnership, making allegations of fraud.

THE following was received by Bro. H. C. Smith, concerning his recent book, "The Truth Defended":

LAMONI, Iowa, Nov. 9.

ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa;

Dear Brother:—I have just read with care and much satisfaction your work "The Truth Defended; or a Reply to Elder Bays' Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonand I wish to congratulate you on your effort, and your complete victory over this would-be annihilator of our faith. To easy that Elder Bays has failed, is putting it very mildly. He has proven himself a reckless writer, an unreliable chronicler of facts, and a weak critic; and in my judgment you have met and vanquished him at every point, and left him no solid ground to stand on. And the only harm I can wish for Elder Bays is that he and the Christian Church may give the book as careful a reading as I have done. I am sure that no Latter Day Saint who feels interested in defending the cause of truth should be without a copy of the book. J. C. CLAPP.

Dear Brother:-Enclosed please find one dollar for Graceland.

Have been waiting for some time, thinking I would be able to send more; but winter coming on, and a large family to help pro-vide for, have failed. But like the widow, will give all I have, trusting it will be as acceptable as was hers.

I suppose it would not be out of order to tell you how I earned my money for Graceland, although I fear it would make some fair maidens blush if they knew.

My husband was compelled to have his harvesting done July 4, in order to save it. And as hands were scarce on that day, I And as names were scarce on that day, I thought, Now is my chance to earn a dollar for Graceland. So, much against the wish of my husband, I deprived myself of celebrating the glorious 4th of July, and made a hand in the harvest field, feeling none the worse for it, but thankful I could be numbered with thousands of others who are trying to free Graceland of her indebtedness.

Hoping that Graceland may soon be free, and ever prove a blessing to humanity,

Your sister in Christ. MRS. SOPHIA POWELL GUNSOLLEY.

WE note with regret the death of Bro. Charles R. Duncan, at Colorado Springs, Colorado. We get the news by the following letter from Bro. A. B. Hanson:

Editors Herald: — Elder C. R. Duncan passed away in death last night, November 7, about 11:30, after a lingering sickness of three or four months. He was conscious to the last, and bore a faithful testimony to the truthfulness of the latter-day work a few minutes before he died. His remains will be shipped to-morrow to Coal Hill, Missouri, accompanied by Bro. Baker, his widow's father. Short funeral services will be observed here to-morrow morning.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Under date of November 5, Bro. S. B. Kriebel writes from Union Furnace, Ohio:

We can not get along without the papers, as we are fourteen miles from nearest branch, and have few church privileges, as we can not get people interested enough to come out to hear even when we have an elder to preach for us or have prayer services. Bro. L. R. Devore is with us at present, but can not get a hearing—always some excuse for people to stay away. We often wonder what excuse they will try to give at the judgment bar, when they have to appear. No excuse will prevail then—they will have to appear. We are trying to get the gospel before the people, that all may be warned. We distribute HERALDS, Hopes, Ensigns, and Autumn Leaves, wherever we think they will be read, and ask people to hand them to their neighbors when done reading. We have the Book of Mormon loaned out all the time. A minister of the United Brethren Church is reading it now, and another man has asked for it. We will keep it moving, ever praying that God's Holy Spirit may accompany it to lead the reader into the way of truth. We ever pray for the welfare of Zion.

Last advices from Bro. R. C. Evans. November 11:

I am here at new church opening, John Shields will write you for publication. New stone church, out of debt. Not seating room yesterday. I remain here from 9th to 18th. Owen Sound, to organize a branch; billed from 19th to 28th; Toronto, 29th to December 4; Waterford church dedication, remain 6th to 24th; home for holidays. Elder R. C. to 24th; home for holidays. Elder R. C. Russell is in Meaford, the hotbed of Campbellite Church in Ontario.

Bro. J. B. Wildermuth writes from Niwot, Colorado, November 16:

I am alone at present; have been preaching each evening to large, attentive, and apparently interested audiences. I am contented to travel alone if it be God's will. I have made many friends, and hope I have made many to the cause. Will finish my series of meetings here Sunday evening. I expect then to move on northward.

Sr. Alice M. Case, of Redmoon, Oklahoma, under date of November 17, writes the Historical Department concerning the recent debate at Matthewson, Oklahoma, as follows:

October 22, 1901, a debate was commenced between Elder A. H. Parsons and one Denton Collins of the Christian Church. The debate included the usual church propositions, and one on the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Debate lasted until Saturday, November 2, resulting in a victory for our cause. The Okarche Times prints the following: "The debate at Matthewson between Elder Collins of the Christian Church and Elder A. H. Parsons of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was very interesting. After an investigation among the unbiased people who have watched the debate closely, and who should be competent judges, we find that Eder Parsons is given the victory which is deserved.'

Bro. Duncan Campbell writes from Pleasanton, Iowa, November 19:

Things are going fairly well with us at present. A revival meeting under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church is in full blast at Pleasanton.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In the Telegram, of Providence, Rhode Island, for November 10, Bro. M. H. Bond appears in an article in which he defines the Reorganized Church, and enlightens the readers of the Telegram on the difference between the Utah church, presided over by Joseph F. Smith, and our church, which has been presided over for over forty years by Joseph Smith, the true successor to Joseph Smith, who was killed at Carthage, Illinois, in 1844.

The Ensign for November 14 was a very interesting and readable number. The report of the review of Reverend Stephens at Roxburg, Ontario, near Cedar Grove, by Bro. R. C. Evans, written up by Bro. A. E. Mortimer, is an excellent and instructive article.

So is "zig-zags," by Bro. Gilbert.
Bro. G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii, sent to the Editor a copy in English of a late tract written by Bro. Robert M. Elvin and printed in the Chinese language for dis-tribution among the Chinese. He also sent us some copies of the Chinese version. Bro. Waller was to leave home for San Francisco in the week beginning November 11, to remain there some time in December. Bro. Ingham would have charge at Honolulu, while Bro. Waller would be absent.

Bro. E. L. Kelley and wife left England for home on Saturday, November 16, on the Campania. At present writing, Wednesday, November 20, they must be nearing New York.

Under date of November 16, Bro. W. E. LaRue sends us program of an entertainment given in Philadelphia by the district Sunday-school organization. Bro. LaRue speaks of it as being the best of its kind he ever attended. The attendance was large, and many tracts were distributed. The brother also sends us clippings from three Philadelphia papers for November 16, in which the coming convention is spoken of, and brief mention made of the work of the Reorganized Church in Philadelphia. Bro. LaRue is pleased with the treatment being accorded him by the press of Philadelphia.

Calendars for 1902 are already making their appearances. We are in receipt of one from the Publishers' Collection Agency.

Sr. M. A. Faulk in remitting from Austinburg, Ohio, for her HERALD, says she can not do without the HERALD and Ensign. She is isolated from the Saints, but is striving to live as a Saint should.

M. J. Ryerson writes from South Omaha, renewing for HERALD and Hope, saying that it is much easier to do without other things than it is to do without the HERALD.

Bro. A. Whitehead wrote from Cadillac, Michigan, some time ago that he had been enjoying the blessings of God. Sometime in August he was requested to go to Kalamazoo, Michigan, to administer to a sister who, the doctors said, could not live. She was suffering from cancer. Though something of a trial to Bro. Whitehead, he went, having been told by the Spirit he would meet Bro. Peak on the train. He did, and together they administered. Bro. Peak left at once. In less than an hour after the administration the sister sat up, ate dinner, and declared she was healed. The next day she arose and dressed herself, -something she had not done for months previously. The blessing caused them to rejoice much.

"The Devil; His Origin and Overthrow," is the title of a ninety-six-page booklet we have received. It is written by Laurence W. Scott, and published by the Acme Publishing Co. of Morgantown, West Virginia. The author deals with "erroneous" and "true" theories of Satan's origin, and gives a theory of the "origin and nature of demons," together with a "history of the Devil." The destiny of the Devil and his angels is also discussed. The writer is certainly ingenious in accounting for the origin of Satan and his imps.

The November number of the Paradise of the Pacific comes to our desk in its usual bright form.

Bro. W. E. LaRue writes from Philadelphia under date of November 23 asking us to announce that their new church on Ontario and Howard streets will be open December 1. Bro. Pitt will preach the opening sermon, and it is expected that Brethren Parsons and Kelley will be present. Bro. LaRue expects to hold a series of meetings the week following.

The last installment of Bro. I. N. White's report of his debate with Clark Braden is crowded out this week. It will appear next.

Sr. Flora J. Chute has sent the senior Editor two photos,—portraits of himself and his brother, A. H. Smith, taken on the grounds of the Oakland, California, reunion. They are excellent specimens of photographic art, taken on 6½ by 8½ plates, mounted on heavy card-mounts. Sr. Clute has the Editor's thanks.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.
NO. 8.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, October 27, 1901.

Reported for HERALD by Sr. Apple Allen.

It will not be practicable in pursuing the history of the church to speak of events in the order of their occurrence from this on, for the reason that shortly after the church removed from New York to Kirtland, Ohio, a portion of the church went from there to Missouri, and during the transpiring of some of the important events at Kirtland there were also events of equal importance transpiring in Missouri. It will be best, we think, to speak to night at least, in regard to the happenings at Kirtland, Ohio, and vicinity, and the east, and leave those in Missouri for a future time.

There is one thing I wish to mention in regard to the revelation to locate at Kirtland, and I will be glad for you to think about it. You are all aware that in the early days of the church, while they were yet at Kirtland, a theory was advanced by the opposition claiming that the Book of Mormon, then attracting so much attention, was but a remodeled romance written by Solomon Spalding. It is said that the romance was written at Conneaut, Ohio; and you who have taken the pains to look this matter up, have doubtless noticed that this place is not more than fifty miles from Kirtland. I want to invite your attention to this consideration. It seems to me improbable, if that theory were true, and that Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, knowing that this romance started there and that they had used it for their purposes, would have transplanted the church from a distant place to the neighborhood where it was most easily detected. If this story had been true, and they had used this manuscript written at Conneaut, they never would have located right where detection was possible. Those who practice fraud do not do such things as that. They evidently would have gone in some other direction, or to a greater distance. far western country was before them, and they could have located where detection would not have been so easily accomplished. I am satisfied that this is a strong circumstantial evidence that this theory is untrue. It is not at all reasonable that they would go there to locate.

Most of the events that transpired in the building up of Kirtland and the history of the church there, we will have to pass by, for we have not time to consider them fully. But to some of the most important events I wish to invite your attention.

In June, 1831, there was a conference of the elders held in Kirtland, Ohio, in which conference something transpired which will require a little explanation. Joseph Smith says of this:

On the sixth of June the elders from the various parts of the country where they were laboring came in, and the conference before appointed convened, in Kirtland, and the Lord displayed his power in a manner that could not be mistaken. The man of sin was revealed, and the authority of the Melchisedec priesthoood was manifested, and conferred for the first time upon several of the elders. It was clearly evident that the Lord gave us power in proportion to the work to be done, and strength according to the race set before us; and grace and help as our needs required. Great harmony prevailed; several were ordained; faith was strengthened; and humility, so necessary for the blessing of God to follow prayer, characterized the saints.

This statement seems very peculiar when we remember the office of elder as belonging to the Melchisedec priesthood, and men had been ordained to the office of elder before this time. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ordained on the 6th of April, 1830, and it is especially stated they were ordained to the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood by the authority of Peter, James, and John. This history, supposed to have been written by Joseph Smith himself, says: "this was manifested and conferred for the first time upon several of the elders." At one time we thought this might have been a mistake—a typographical mistake. or something of that kind; but while investigating this, we had recourse to the journal of one of the prominent elders at that time, Lyman Wight, and he makes about the same statement only with a discrepancy of two days in the date. He says:

On the fourth of June, 1831, a conference was held at Kirtland, Ohio, represented by all the above-named branches. Joseph Smith, our modern prophet, presided. Here for the first time I saw the visible manifestation of the power of God, as plain as could have been on the day of Pentecost; and here for the first time I saw the Melchisedec priesthood introduced into the Church of Jesus Christ, as anciently, whereunto I was ordained under the hands of Joseph Smith, and I then ordained sixteen others, such as he chose, unto the same priesthood.

The fourth or the sixth of June. 1831, over a year after Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith were ordained Both these authorities say elders. the Melchisedec priesthood was bestowed for the first time. I think about the only explanation of that is that the office of elder does not carry with it the full power of the Melchisedec priesthood. We are told in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that it is an appendage unto the Melchisedec priesthood. In this connection I invite your attention to a statement made by another participant in that conference. It seems to me this idea is the one intended to be conveyed by the other two. I will read a quotation from the autobiography of Parley P. Pratt. He gives the sixth of June, also, that the conference assembled, and says:

Several were then selected by revelation, through President Smith, and ordained to the High Priesthood after the order of the Son of God; which is after the order of Melchisedec. This was the first occasion in which this priesthood had been revealed and conferred upon the elders in this dispensation.

They all agree this was the first occasion; but Parley P. Pratt explains that "the office of an elder is the same in a certain degree, but not in the fullness." He says that on that occasion he "was ordained to that holy ordinance and calling by President Smith."

It seems to me that Parley P. Pratt has explained what the other two failed to explain, but which they doubtless intended; that the fullness of the Melchisedec priesthood was conferred at that conference in June, 1831, when they were ordained to the high priesthood, or the office of high priest, conveying the idea, as Parley Pratt expressed it, that the elder did not hold the fullness of the priesthood, and the fullness of the priesthood was conferred for the first time at this conference at Kirtland in June, 1831.

The next day after this conference a revelation was given, and in that revelation men were commanded to go up into the land of Missouri. Their names were given in detail, and they were sent two and two. I believe there were four in one company; but in the most of the instances two were to travel together. They were to travel by different routes to Independence, Missouri, and sound the tidings of the gospel as they went, so that the most of the regions of country between Kirtland, Ohio, and Independence, Missouri, were to be made acquainted, on that trip, with the principles of the gospel, for there were so many going they would visit almost all localities where there were then settlements. You will notice that they did not tarry very long. When they were commanded to do a thing they went to work and did it. We are told on the 19th of June, if you will notice, a very short time after the revelation was given, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Martin Harris. Edward Partridge, W. W. Phelps, Joseph Coe, and A. S. Gilbert and his wife left Kirtland on this mission. Others went about the same time or shortly after, some a little while before, each taking different routes; and they met by and by at Independence, Missouri. Of the journey there we will have something to say in the future, if we continue these efforts.

They remained there in the land of Missouri for a short time, and on the 9th of August Joseph Smith and ten other elders of the church left Independence, Missouri, going by water down the river in a cance, leaving Independence landing on the 9th of August, 1831. They traveled partly by land and partly by water, and arrived at Kirtland on August 27. It seems to me rather a short time, for those days, for the mode of transportation they had, to leave Independence on the 9th of August and arrive at Kirtland on the 27th. There were no railroads at that time, and traveling was done sometimes afoot and sometimes by stage sometimes by stage. On September 12 of this same year, Joseph removed with his family from Kirtland, Ohio, to the township of Hiram, about thirty miles in a southeasterly direction from Kirtland, where he was invited by one John Johnson to come and make his home, while he engaged in the important work of translating the Hebrew Scriptures. This work had been begun before. He commenced the work in June, 1830, and in December, 1830, when Sidney Rigdon went to New York to visit him, Rigdon acted as his scribe, and they worked at this translation for a time. But the call came by revelation as we have before stated. to go to the Ohio, and when that call came they went directly. And now in September, 1831, they renew the work of the translation of the Scriptures, Joseph living in the house of Mr. John Johnson with his family, Sidney Rigdon again acting as scribe. This John Johnson was the father of Lyman E. and Luke S. Johnson, who afterwards became members of the Quorum of Twelve. While engaged in this work at Mr. Johnson's at Hiram, they were mobbed by a company of men, who, Joseph says, belonged to the Christian or Campbellite Church, and Methodist and Baptist. I presume he had some reason for saying so; but in making this statement we do not wish to reflect upon these church organizations. presume they would not uphold such an act as this. But these individuals partook of the spirit of persecution, that spirit that has opposed the truth in all ages of the world, and tried to stop the work by violent means. will read you a short description of that incident in the language of Joseph Smith. I do this simply for the purpose of mentioning as we go along the many adverse circumstances these men had to meet in the prosecution of this work, and of the trials they had to endure. I think it necessary to mention this, for this reason: I do not believe any sane man, after considering all the circumstances, would conclude that these men passed through all these things with no hope of reward, for the purpose of practicing an imposition and palming it off on the people.

He says:

On the 25th of March, the twins beforementioned, which had been sick of the measles for some time, caused us to be broke of our rest in taking care of them, especially my wife. In the evening I told her she had better retire to rest with one of the children, and I would watch with the sickest child.

These twins were not their own. They had lost a pair of twins, and these twins were the children of John Murdock, whose wife was dead. Emma Smith, Joseph's wife, took these twins and took care of them in the place of her own, taking, as nearly as could be, the place of the mother of these little ones.

In the night she told me I had better lay down on the trundle-bed, and I did so, and was soon after awoke by her screaming "Murder!" when I found myself going out of the door, in the hands of about a dozen men; some of whose hands were in my hair, and some hold of my shirt, drawers, and limbs. The foot of the trundle-bed was towards the door, leaving only room enough for the door to swing. My wife heard a gentle tapping on the windows which she then took no particular notice of, (but which was unquestionably designed for ascertaining whether we were all asleep,) and soon after the mob burst open the door and surrounded the bed in an instant, and, as I said, the first I knew I was going out of the door in the hands of an infuriated mob. I made a desperate struggle, as I was forced out, to extricate myself, but only cleared one leg, with which I made a pass at one man, and he fell on the doorsteps. I was immediately confined again; and they swore by God, they would kill me if I did not be still, which quieted me. As they passed around the house with me, the fellow that I kicked came to me and thrust his hand into my face, all covered with blood, (for I hit bim on the nose,) and with an exulting horselaugh, muttered: "Ge, gee, God damn ye, I'll fix ye."

They then seized me by the throat, and held on till I lost my breath. After I came to, as they passed along with me, about thirty rods from the house, I saw Elder Rigdon stretched out on the ground, whither they had dragged him by the heels. I supposed he was dead.

I began to plead with them, saying: "You will have mercy and spare my life, I hope." To which they replied: "God damn ye, call on your God for help, we'll show you no mercy;" and the people began to show themselves in every direction: one coming from the orchard had a plank, and I expected they would kill me, and carry me off on the plank. They then turned to the right and went on about thirty rods further, about sixty rods from the house, and thirty from where I saw Elder Rigdon, into the meadow, where they stopped, and one said: "Simonds, Simonds," (meaning I supposed Simonds Rider,) "pull up his drawers, pull up his drawers, he will take cold." Another replied: "A'nt ye going to kill im? A'nt ye going to kill im? A'nt ye going to kill im? Simonds, Simonds, come here;" and Simonds charged those who had hold of me to keep me from touching the ground (as they had done all the time) lest I should get a spring upon them. They went and held a council, and as I could occasionally overhear a word, I supposed it was to know whether it was best to kill me.

Suffice it to say that they decided not to kill him, but they tarred and feathered him, put tar upon him, and sprinkled feathers upon him.

I have a word to say in regard to this man Simonds Rider. I would not say anything to injure the memory of any man, but I simply point out this incident of history that you may see how shallow and simple are some men's views in regard to inspiration. This man Simonds Rider had become converted, and united with the church. and was ordained an elder. He and some others had united with the Christian Church when the work of Alexander Campbell was carrying all before it in the Western Reserve. Subsequently he united with the Latter Day Saints, but later renounced the faith and united again with the This man was Christian Church. supposed to be in the crowd that did this lawless work. When Elder B. A. Hinsdale preached Mr. Ryder's funeral sermon on August 3, 1870, in relating his experience, said:

Ryder was informed, that by special revelation he had been appointed and commissioned an elder of the Mormon church. His commission came, and he found his name misspelled. Was the Holy Spirit so fallible as to fail even in orthography? Beginning with this challenge, his strong, incisive mind and honest heart were brought to the task of reëxamining the ground on which he stood.

That was his idea of inspiration. Now to some of my friends here who have had more experience it will be no wonder that Simonds Rider apostatized, for it is not reasonable that inspiration would go to the extreme of dictating in orthography. What do you think of a man who would reject a spirit which did not spell correctly but would let his "honest heart" accept a spirit that led him to put tar on a man?

There is another very serious aspect connected with this case, and that is that this very mobbing was the cause of an innocent life being taken. One of the children spoken of took cold at the time, when the door was thrown open, just having partially recovered from the measles, and died. The boy died, the girl, the other one of the twins, lived to womanhood, was cared for by Joseph Smith and Emma, and continued with the family until she was married. Thus a life was taken by these men who laid violent hands upon others simply because they differed from them in faith, probably thinking it was right and they were doing God's service in maltreating individuals of opposite faith, and doing violence with the hope of discouraging them in their work.

The next Sunday (by the way, I believe it was the next day) Joseph notwithstanding the treatment he had received, appeared in public and preached with his face scarred where they had scratched him; and some of those very mobbers were in the congregation to which he preached. He did not seem to be very much intimidated. Soon after, he started to Missouri, walking, going by boat, and by stage via Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, and St. Louis to Independence, passing through many trials and much suffering. Did this man and his companions do all this with no pay, endure all this persecution, for the purpose of perpetrating an imposition and palming off on the people something that was untrue? I can not believe that. I might possibly be made to believe that Joseph Smith was deceived: that might be; but to say he would do all this and suffer all these things, knowing there was nothing in it, and they were getting nothing out of it, is too much for my credulity. They evidently believed in the work they were doing.

In the summer or fall of 1832 he returned again to Kirtland and again resumed the work of translating the Hebrew Scripture—what is called the Inspired Translation-but later, while engaged in this work, he was told to go to the East to visit some of the cities there. Leaving his wife in delicate health, he pursued his mission. and visited the places he was appointed to visit, and did what he could. I want to read you a part of a letter which he wrote to his wife and adopted daughter, Julia, at the time he was on this mission to the East. This letter was not one he would write for the purpose of deception, because is was not written for the public to read—a letter he would not have any idea would go farther than the home circle, no more than you or I would when writing to the folks at home. this private letter, this letter that was written not for the public to look upon, when he was not upon his guard and thinking what people would say about it, is important, for such letters are the ones that show the character of men. In writing to them he says in his letter written from New York dated October 13, 1832:

I returned to my room to meditate and calm my mind, and behold, the thoughts of home, of Emma and Julia, rush upon my mind like a flood; and I could wish for a moment to be with them. My breast is filled with all the feelings and tenderness of a parent and a husband, and could I be with you I would tell you many things. . . . I hope you will excuse me for writing this letter so soon after writing, for I feel as if I wanted to say something to you, to comfort you in your peculiar trial and present affliction. I hope God will give you strength that you may not faint. I pray God to soften the hearts of those around you to be kind to you and take the burden off your shoulders as much as possible, and not afflict you. I feel for you, for I know your state and that others do not; but you must comfort yourself knowing that God is your friend in heaven, and that you have one true and living friend on earth, your hushand. JOSEPH SMITH.

I need not comment upon the letter. You see at once the spirit which it breathes. He hurried home as soon as he could, expecting if possible to reach his home before the peculiar trial that was awaiting her, but did not arrive until the sixth day of November, 1832, the day that his son,

Joseph Smith, the present president of the church, was born. A few hours after after his birth the father came home. This no doubt, was the peculiar trial he speaks of in the letter in which he remembered her and was praying God to comfort and care for her. He reached there in the hour of her affliction, and was with her until she gained strength again. This was the first child of their own that lived. They had lost three before. The first died in infancy, and also the twins in place of which they adopted the two spoken of before. This fourth child was the first to live, and you may know that this was not only such a trial as comes to all women at such times but it was a peculiar trial, for the reason that she had lost all her children before, and must have been peculiarly anxious regarding this one. This letter was not intended for the public eye or ear, and hence it could not have been written with any thought of deception; but you must recognize the sentiments of a tender and affectionate husband and father, and also of a man who could put supreme confidence in God, and trust his loved ones to him. You must recognize that, and recognize, too, that under the circumstances it would not come to him to deceive. And hence he felt the confidence and trust and repose of faith in God, and was enabled to commend all to God's care and pro-

Shortly after this the revelation that we have heard quoted so often was given, on the 25th day of December, 1832, in which is portrayed so clearly some of the events that transpired in our late war between the North and South. I have not time to read it here to night, but it would be well for you all to examine it and see how clearly some of the events that happened in the history of this war are portrayed by him prior to their happening. Some have thought that the revelation was caused by the attitude of South Carolina at that time, for South Carolina had, the November before, passed the famous Nullification Act, and there was talk of hostilities between the Government and South Carolina. The Government was preparing to invade the State, while South Carolina was preparing to defend. I frankly admit it may have been the cause of it to some extent. I can readily see that in the event of a cloud of war rising Joseph Smith would go to the Lord and plead with him for light, to know what was going to be the end of all this. So far as this would have an influence upon Joseph Smith it may have been the cause of the revelation. Joseph says the Lord spoke to him and said there would come a time when war would be poured out upon all nations, begin-Joseph might have thought the unpleasantness existing would culminate faster than it did; but that particular danger was averted soon after, early in 1833, by the Compromise Act of Henry Clay, which was passed at that time. But Joseph Smith did not think his prophecy had failed. He wrote to Mr. N. E. Seaton, on January 4, 1833, notwithstanding this settlement was in progress at the time, and boldly declared:

And now I am prepared to say by the authority of Jesus Christ, that not many years shall pass away before the United States shall present such a scene of bloodshed as has not a parallel in the history of our nation; pestilence, hail, famine, and earthquakes will sweep the wicked of this generation from off the face of the land, to open and prepare the way for the return of the lost tribes of Israel from the north country. The people of the Lord, those who have complied with the requisitions of the new covenant, have already commenced gathering together to Zion, which is in the State of Missouri; therefore I declare unto you the warning which the Lord has commanded me to declare unto this generation, remembering that the eyes of my Maker are upon me, and that to him I am accountable for every word I say, wishing nothing worse to my fellow men than their eternal salvation; therefore, "fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." Repent ye, repent ye, and embrace the everlasting coverage of the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the same and the s nant, and flee to Zion before the overflowing scourge overtake you, for there are those now living upon the earth whose eyes shall not be closed in death until they see all these things, which I have spoken, fulfilled. Remember these things; call upon the Lord while he is near, and seek him while he may be found, is the exhortation of your unworthy JOSEPH SMITH, JR.

He believed still that there would be trouble culminating in war. In 1843 he is represented to have repeated the same thing in conference at Nauvoo. John Hyde published a work in 1857 in which he cites a statement of Joseph Smith to the church, in which he claimed that it was God's word to him, Joseph Smith, while he was earnestly pleading with God on the subject in 1832. It was fulfilled. and the rebellion of South Carolina terminated in a scene of bloodshed. unparalleled in the history of our country. His words were fulfilled exactly. This was one of the many peculiar revelations that were given to Joseph Smith, that have been literally fulfilled in our own time.

Now I wish to call your attention to one other point: It occurs to me that an impostor would not place himself in a condition that he could be overruled by anybody else. He would not confer authority and power upon other individuals that his judgment and his words could be set aside. This is just what was done through Joseph Smith. A revelation was given, and I will read you an extract from it. A revelation given March 8, 1833, in which occurred the following:

And again, verily I say unto thy brethren Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams, Their sins are forgiven them also, and they are accounted as equal with thee in holding the keys of this last kingdom; as also through your administration the keys of the school of the prophets, which I have commanded to be organized, that thereby they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion, and of the nations of Israel, and of the Gentiles, as many as will believe, that through your administration, they may receive the word, and through their administration, the word may go forth unto the ends of the earth, unto the Gentiles first, and then, behold, and lo, they shall turn unto the Jews; and then cometh the day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed in power in convincing the nations, the heathen nations, the house of Joseph, of the gospel of their salvation.

Here were two other men this revelation says should be equal with Joseph in holding the keys of this last dispensation. Read the history of the past; read of Mohammed, or any other false prophet, and you never see men dividing authority like that. They held the power in their own hands, and were the dictators of those who chose to follow them. Here is a quorum of three: Joseph was one of three, and the other two could overrule him. He could not become a dictator of the people while this first presidency existed called by this reve-This First Presidency was organized in the School of the Prophets, on the 18th of March, 1833. And nearly a year afterwards, on February 17. 1834, another council was organized. It was composed of those three and twelve others, and the function of that council was to try important cases in the church and differences that should arise. The three were to decide cases that came before them. vet their decision was not final until it was confirmed by the voice of the This was quite a other twelve. dividing up of authority, and Joseph Smith would not be in a very fair condition to be a dictator. People who say that Joseph Smith dictated to these people what they should do. who say we are absolutely under the power of one man, do not know what the organization of this church is. But we are not through yet. Another year lapses with this imperfect organization. Here is a Presidency existing almost a year when the High Council is organized. On February 14, 1835, another quorum is organized, the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; and hear what the revelation says in regard to it. Here is another quorum, of twelve apostles, whose duty was to organize and set in order churches in all the world, and to be especial witnesses of the name of Jesus Christ, and have especial charge of the missionary work in all the world. Joseph was reserving nothing for himself absolutely. It is put in the hands of others; others have as much to say in regard to church affairs, general and local, as he. So there is no absolute

Twelve was organized, on February 28 there were certain men chosen, and another quorum began to develop. There were several men chosen and ordained to the office of Seventy, and it finally culminated in the organization of the Quorum of Seventy. Let me read you now what the revelation says in regard to the Twelve and Seventy:

Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church. The twelve traveling counselors are called to be the twelve apostles, or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world; thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned.

As I said before, Joseph Smith is only one of three. In the Quorum of the Presidency he has not absolute power. Here is a declaration that the Twelve have equal power and authority with the Presidency. There is still another quorum with equal authority with the three. There is no chance for dictation. There is no chance for a man to gain absolute authority in such an arrangement as that. Let me read a little farther:

The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world—thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling: and they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses, or apostles, just named.

Here now are seventy others. Should he happen to control a large portion of them, he can not then control, for all must agree. Here is the Presidency, of which he is only a third, and the Twelve equal in authority to the Presidency, and the Seventy equal in authority to the Twelve. And yet men say church is absolutely under the control and dictation of one man. I do not want you to lose sight of the fact that an impostor would not thus divide up and give away all the power he had to control absolutely. Every decision made by either of these quorums must be by a unanimous vote of the same; that is, every member must be agreed. Every member of the Presidency must agree or their decision is not equal to the Twelve. The Twelve must all agree or their decision is not equal to the Seventy. And all the Seventy must agree or their decision is not of equal importance. So that in these Presidency, Twelve. three. Seventy, at least eighty-five men, there must be a unanimous agreement; and yet some say we are controlled by one man. It is hardly possible to make the charge of one man power to apply under such an organization as we have here; and if I were called upon to night to locate where the balance of power is in this church, though I have had some experience, I have studied some, read some, yet I do not know where it is. I have never been able to locate it. There is no such thing as the balance of power being anywhere, in any council or quorum organization, to say nothing about its being in one man. No quorum can control, no person can control; but this is so arranged that there is only one possibility for these quorums to agree, and that is by their being led by the same spirit. Men differ too widely in their natural makeup, in their views on every subject that is presented, for there to be an absolute agreement, and thus a decision be passed by all these quorums, without their being led by some power not their own. There is no possibility of their doing it any other way, and the organization is an admirable one, for it is so placed that the controling power must come from somewhere else beside from men, or there will be a failure. There has been conflict in the past, when they have not entirely agreed. I trust that more progress will be made in the future as we see more and more alike. But neither in a right nor a wrong direction can the work go very far, while this theory is adhered to, by the dictation of any one man. If any one man has dictated to the people called the Latter Day Saints, it is because other men have not occupied in the position they were called to, and I sav again that it is impossible for man to conceive of an impostor trying to deceive the people by forming an organization like that, taking the power out of his own hands and putting it where others can control the people. If he were trying to deceive he would have held the power in his own hands. Just think of it. You can not explain it any other way, only that the man was sincere. Impostors did no such work as that.

We have not time to pursue this any farther to night. If we continue in this line, propose we to speak in regard to the building of the Kirtland temple, and incidentally, with that history to speak of other efforts at temple building, and the principle involved in temple building. I thank you for your attention.

No story which has appeared in recent numbers of McClure's Magazine was more gengenerally commented upon than Kate M. Cleary's, "The Stepmother" Editors throughout the West discussed certain points of it, one going so far as to question whether in Nebraska there is such a thing as a "rustred stone." In the November numa "rustred stone." In the November han-ber of McClure's will appear another story by the same author, entitled "The Mission of Kitty Malone." This Thanksgiving tale breathes the same deep, sincere features which distinguished Miss Cleary's earlier story.

"TWO BY TWO."

Vain repetition in prayer is spoken against by our Savior; but we trust that repeated articles written under the above caption will not be by HERALD readers considered vain.

The giver of the law of God repeated this admonition to go two by two, both to the disciples or followers of Christ in ancient and in modern times, thus emphasizing the necessity of observing this order in traveling and preaching the word to the nations of the earth. This order has not always been observed by us; hence confusion of mind, darkness. and even apostasy have been the results. I know some of us may think we are so strong that we can travel in the ministry alone for years and not teach heresy or apostatize from the faith. It is true some might, but all are not so strong. It is also well to remember the injunction, "He that thinketh be standeth take heed lest he fall." No one need boast of the strength God has given him.

When the Lord gave instructions in this matter he doubtless had reasons in his mind other than that of keeping us from apostasy. There are certain weaknesses existing in every minister sent out, which he is not likely to observe if alone; while if another is with him he discovers his own weakness is such as he had not before When these evils are observed. found to exist the one who possesses them can by faith and works get rid of them. But such a work as getting rid of errors is not accomplished in a week; it may take years of association to get free from them. Some men want most everything their own way, and especially if they have been traveling alone for some two or three years and are not used to counseling with others. In such case should he be chosen to travel with one who like himself had been traveling alone for years, they would find it hard to agree.

The truth is, whether there be two, a dozen, or even the whole church, we must learn to counsel together, bear and forbear with each other, and thus aid in the development of that Christlike nature that must be in us before we can live with Christ and reign with him in his kingdom.

Men of different natures often travel together. One may be quick and impulsive, the other slow and easy. One may have much temper, the other but little. One may be a high priest, the other a seventy or elder. One may think he has more authority in certain cases than the other, and thus room for contention is given. One may be a good speaker and the other slow to speak. These various differences exist in us, and the way to overcome these weaknesses is to travel "two by two," as the Lord directs. Each one lillustrated by a number of very fine cuts.

must learn his duty and to prefer one another as the Scriptures direct. do not mean by this that one should wish his traveling companion to do what he himself should perform.

In traveling together we should converse freely on important topics pertaining to the work, and not spend our time joking and in other idle talk. We must not talk so much, however, that we have not time to spend in prayer and deep thought on the work of God. In conversation we should be cheerful and courteous, but not light-minded. This will tend to elevate character; and when others are through us converted, they will start in the work on a high plane of Christianity; but if the ministry have not both by word and act set a good example before them, their idea of what a Saint should be is very imperfect. hence they start wrong in the work and it is hard to change them for the better.

Once in seven days at least the Saints who are not of the ministry are to associate together. By so doing they may see each others' faults, confess and forsake them. The time is to be when the Saints not only associate together once a week, but every day. So the subject here broadens till we not only consider the law of association as applied to the priesthood, but to the laity as well. We must be together that we may have the chance to find fault, yet not in such a way as to cause offense.

If we ministers don't love each other now, so that we can travel together agreeably, and if the laity can not now visit each other at home once in a while on week days, and meet together and worship in peace on Sundays, how shall it be when both the ministry and members are together in Zion to associate with each other continually?

To the ministry I say, Let us travel as the law directs, that we may learn wisdom; and to the laity I say, associate with each other, borrow and lend, use each other when necessary, but always pay back what you borrow, and use that which belongs to a brother or sister as though it were

Let us be more ready to give than to receive. By so doing we may learn the first principles in the law of cooperation, learn to obey the golden rule, learn the basic principles of the Order of Enoch, by which the Saints of God are to be united in one.

That we may do the right in all things is my prayer in Jesus' name. C. J. Spurlock.

"INDIAN MOUND OPENED.

"St. Louis, Nov. 8.—Two of the Indian mounds on the World's Fair site in Forest park were opened to day under the direction of Professor D. I. Bushnell, the well-known archæologist. In one mound were found the skulls and fragments of five human beings in a very bad state of preservation. Mixed with the bones were pieces of pottery. Nothing was discovered in the other mound."—K. C. Journal.

November 9.—Sister Henry Etzenhouser, who departed this life yesterday, 1:30 p. m., was greatly beloved by those who were best acquainted with her. She will be missed by those who assembled with her in the Willing Helpers' Society, where she was ever ready to do her part in relieving the necessities of the needy; and her kindly words of advice and comfort to many will never be forgotten. She was indeed a mother in Israel.

Rarer than all the delights that Colorado can afford, to Grandma Davison (who has returned home), are the balmy breezes on Mt. Zion's hill at old Independence. She is feeble and can get about a very little; but we are happy to know she is here, and the desires of her cheery dear old heart to come home are now satisfied.

We are beginning to look quite citified around and especially in front of the Stone Church, with our brick pavement and granitoid sidewalks. Many internal improvements of the church building are also on tapis, such as pipe organ, piano, and other furnishings. It's the young people who are doing all this.

We may don the flimsy garments which Fame and Fashion afford; but it is the gospel alone that brightens and smooths the pathway of life. And what is there so desirable as a loving heart that yearns to bless and a God-given mind receiving light and intelligence and reflecting its heavenly rays over all earth's creations.

The sculptor Kraus is dead, and his adored model of Belshazzar is crumbling; but if he has soothed some troubled soul, if he has uttered the word that gave in some dark hour hope and cheer to the despairing, the act and word will live to bless forever.

One of our writers, Sr. S. A. Dake, has lately accepted a civil service position as matron in an Indian institute situated near Albuquerque, New Mexico. It is stated that fully 25,000 people have settled in "the Sunshine State" since October of last year. With her pluck and endurance, Sr. Dake will be able to do a good work among the maidens, young braves, and papooses of that patriotic and progressive territory. It must require considerable tact also to know how to manage the Indian children.

Bro. I. N. White, not long ago told us from the pulput about the "tackey ministers" he has to tackle in debate occasionally, and what they try to accomplish; but we never heard of "tackey parties" before till we read of one being held by the Epworth League lately. Wonder if they are candy pulls? But what of the "tackey ministers"?

The club women of some of the larger cities seem to be agitating the question of the organization of an "associated charity." In talking of good works, why not let the women of "the church" and of the churches associate and let them discuss such subjects as the above, something that ought to interest every mother and woman in the town. Take a soloist along and help to make a good work attractive to all. Nothing interests a coterie of women like "charity work," and all the young mothers would be glad to come out and hear sung "The Heaven of Love" or "My Redeemer and my Lord," or other sacred song.

One of the best works we have heard of, planned by women, is the Industrial School that is intended to graduate skilled laborers and artisans. Such an institution is the school for boys at Birmingham, Alabama. In less than two years four hundred acres of land were bought, and a building erected. All the women of the state became interested, and prevailed upon the legislature to give twenty thousand dollars for maintaining the school two years. An old cynic somewhere says this was better than meeting from time to time and discussing such subjects as "fathers' mistakes." They say: "There's the trouble of it!" Young mothers don't like to hear about such pottering ideas as heredity and prenatal influences, and the older matrons think they knew it all without studying Trumbull or Froebel when they raised their families. So few of them will come out to meeting very often, unless you are a little bit "tackey" and make your meetings attractive as well as instructive.

There seems to be a little lack of interest in meetings, generally. Sister McNichols, secretary of Mt. Zion Sunday-school, reported November 10 the smallest attendance for months, there having been only 296 present.

The "history class," with Bro.

Frank Criley as teacher, holds its own, however, and financially is sometimes the banner class of the The fact that there are several cases of contagious disease in town may account for the slight falling off in both Sunday-school and church; although there was yesterday, the 10th, a goodly number out both morning and evening. We listened to a most instructive discourse by Bro. O. B. Thomas at evening service, on the "Hope of the Saints." It was full of food for thought; and the funeral sermon of Sr. Ellen Fisher Etzenhouser who passed away in the bright hope of the gospel, preached in the morning by Bro. George Hulmes, was most solemn and impressivé. No flowers with softly bending petals lay as earth's fit tokens on her casket; but as the choir in subdued voices sang the beautiful words of Whittier's hymn,-

> Another hand is beck'ning us Another call is given, and as the minister depicted in glowing sentences the ending of a faithful life, every one present listened intently and a calm and peaceful presence filled the place. Surely, troubles and sorrows only bind the hearts of the Saints more closely together.

In Josephus, liber 2, chapter 9. it is said is where we may find that the Egyptian King set the Israelites to building pyramids. And these wonders of the ancient world still stand as monuments, after nearly forty centuries, to the Hebrews who endured such sufferings. Is there anything in these modern times that can compare with this? Not only our natural human sorrows, but the persecutions which the people of God have endured have served to bind them as a family more strongly together.

The great and wonderful events which are in the future shall surely tell how true it is that God's hand is not only over this nation, but because of their faith it will ever guide and defend his chosen people. In the British Museum are specimens of clay, we are told, bearing the picture of a half-clad Hebrew "bending under his burden, while over him is lifted the lash of the task master:" So, too, the rocks and mounds will help to tell the more sacred story of these latter days; and though no orator can fitly portray it nor human pen illuminate its pages, nor magnificent monuments immortalize its heroes, yet the same divine hand which began "the work" will finish, perpetuate it before the eyes of all the people.

SEVENTEEN DAYS A TRESPASSER.

Editors Herald:—As per her request I left Council Bluffs at 4:25 p. m., November 2, over the Union Pacific Railroad, arriving at Egbert, Wyoming, at 6:35 a. m., mountain time, November 3, and found Maude Limpus, daughter of Sr. M. E. Limpus and sister of Bro. Frank Limpus, sick. She was being cared for with all the tenderness and solicitude it was possible for a loving mother and an affectionate brother to evince. I had formed an acquaintance with this family during July of the present year, while ministering the word at Hershey, Nebraska.

Sister Maude had decided to unite with the church before being taken down by this spell of sickness, and her present condition tended to greatly increase this desire. On my arrival it was apparent that the comtemplated baptism must be deferred for the present.

Some of the neighbors, upon hearing of her intention, because quite apprehensive as to the consequences that might ensue from such an exposure. A Mr. Gilland offered the use of his tank, twenty-four inches deep and eight feet across, and a team to convey Sister Maude to and from the tank, which was about one and one half miles distant. He suggested that some rocks be collected, heated, and used to make the water in the tank tepid. This exhibition of kindness was appreciated, but upon due consideration the sister decided to enter the water in its natural state, trusting God as to results.

On Friday, November 8, the team being ready, Brother Frank, with strong and willing arms, carried his sister from her room to the spring wagon, and after making her as comfortable as possible with wraps, we started for the water. Upon our arrival Brother Frank again brought into action his physical strength, carrying his sister from the conveyance and placing her in the water.

The holy rite of baptism was administered with due solemnity without a struggle or sign as to any ill effect arising from an immersion in the chilly waters. Miss E. Hedey, a school-teacher who went with us to witness the baptism, stated that the time consumed going to and from the waters of baptism was twenty minutes. Mr. Gilland had said not to spare the team but get Maude home as soon as possible.

Confirmation was attended to the same evening, observing instructions given in section 17, paragraph 18, Doctrine and Covenants. Three or four persons, non members, were present.

Sister Limpus received no injury from being carried from her warm bed to the water, although she had been confined to bed several days before the event. At this date she is feeling better and I think is gradually gaining strength. We feel quite anxious that God may grant her a prolongation of years, believing that by his grace she may be instrumental in doing much good.

Under the circumstances I presume Bro. J. B. Roush will deal tenderly with me for daring to trespass on his territory. I believe the Saints have the right of choice in baptism, marriage, funerals, etc.

I have held but few meetings here. This district is sparsely settled. Being a stock or cattle country, the people are far apart and night meetings are out of the question. But Sr. Limpus is a watcher, embracing every opportunity to warn her neighbors and to advocate the truth. Herself and boy Frank have been harbingers of the gospel in several localities in the western country. They left a good impression at Hershey. Precepts and godly examples have their influence. Latter Day Saints who preach by example are in great demand.

I have been royally treated during my sojourn here, and with the poet I can say, "In such society as this my weary soul would rest."

I must say to the body, my labors during October and the present month have been meager. I go from here to Merriman, Cherry County, Nebraska. In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 19.

Editors Herald:—Last night about thirty of the Saints surprised Sr. Amelia E. Sprague at her home, and had a very enjoyable time while together. Sr. Sprague and family are to move to Lamoni next week, where she will join her husband, who is one of the HERALD Office employees at present.

Bro. Charles S. Kennedy made a nice presentation speech, and handed our worthy sister some small boxes filled with silver knives and forks, and a bunch of silver spoons, as tokens of the high esteem in which she and her family are held by the members of the Omaha branch. Sr. Sprague responded feelingly, while tears of gratitude glistened in her eyes. Surely such meetings are evidence of the true Christian love which burns on the secret altar of the heart within the breast of each true disciple of the sympathizing and loving Jesus.

For one to move may seem like a very little thing to many of your readers; but when it is understood that our sister is about to leave her place of birth and the scenes and associations of her childhood, youth, and early womanhood, her feelings upon this occasion will be much better understood. The church and Sunday-school will miss her presence and help, and the association and help of her family. Her Sunday-school class will miss their teacher and her example. All join in wishing the family peace, love, joy, and prosperity in their new home among the Saints at Lamoni, where their surroundings will be much better than in this city.

Church work here in Omaha is moving along very nicely, and a good feeling seems to prevail, so far as the writer can discern. In addition to the regular services of the branch, we are holding some cottage meetings, which we trust will result in good. Bro. Edward Rannie and his helpers are about to commence a systematic distribution of some epitomes of our faith and invitations to attend services, by which it is hoped to increase the attendance at church services and lead some souls to Christ.

Brethren Oscar Case and James Huff have been busy at Decatur and vicinity for some weeks, and are now commencing ministerial work in Cedar county. Sunday and young people's meetings are doing nicely.

Bro. Halen and wife are passing through a severe trial this season. In the spring Sr. Halen had her arm broken, and suffered much for a long time; and at this writing Bro. Halen is quite ill. The old saying is again verified, "Troubles never come alone." However, we hope that for them the cloud overhead will soon part and show its silver lining, while the sun shines on as brightly as before.

Hopefully yours, C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

TABOR, Iowa, Nov. 18.

Editors Herald:—There is nothing that gives a greater development, or gives more peace of mind and joy, than to be actively engaged in the Christ work. Activity properly directed brings to our aid the powers of heaven by which the greatest results will be attained. I sometimes feel that I can not or do not do all I should; and yet in looking over the work of the past year I hardly see where I could have done more.

Bro. Mintun with myself began in the new gospel tent at Bartlett in the early part of July, keeping it in continual use until the middle of October, with the exception of two weeks at the time of our reunion. I can truly say to the Saints of the Fremont district who donated so liberally toward the missionary tent, that their offering has been the means of doing much good and the bringing of souls into the kingdom. Bro. Kemp was with us a portion of the time; and while the tent was near Tabor had charge of the work while Bro. Mintun was laboring elsewhere.

We attended the district conference at Thurman, on October 26, which will be a historic one in the records of the district. As secretary we have recorded about fifty names of persons baptized, a large portion of whom united at the reunion.

On Sunday, November 10, we were privileged to attend the organization of a branch at Bartlett under the direction of Brn. H. Kemp and J. F. Mintun. Samuel Orton was elected president and John Garver secretary, after which the following were ordained and elected to the respective offices: John Houston, priest; Moroni Ettleman, teacher; William Eyler, deacon. John Garver was also ordained a priest and elected assistant priest of the branch. This branch starts out with bright prospects, and we trust that all may continue steadfast in the work.

For the last three weeks we have been laboring as local historian. Searching the records for the history of the district is like digging in the ruins of Egypt and Babylon for their ancient history. If branch and district officers, with the missionaries also, would report all important events transpiring in their district to the conferences in writing, and secretaries put such reports on record, then the books would give a proper record of the past. A complete history of our district can not be made because so many important things have never been recorded, and those who knew of them have either passed away or have forgotten them. Progress has been made by our secretaries, but there is still room for development. Branches should hold regular business meetings at which all such things as building of churches, dedications, debates, special meetings, deaths or funerals of prominent persons, and in fact everything of historic value, should be reported and recorded, giving all necessary particulars. Branch secretaries should keep a full record of all business done, such as the election of officers, and resolutions passed, etc.

On Sunday, the 17th inst., I was called to preach the funeral sermon of "Aunt Hannah Grove." She united with the early church, and later with the Reorganization and remained faithful to the gospel. She was a sister to Father John Leeka's wife, who preceded her some years. Both lived to a ripe old age, Sr. Hannah being in her ninety-fifth year.

Our district is now supplied with a patriarch, bishop with his counselors, two traveling missionaries besides the patriarch, and with the regular corps of district officials. We believe the Saints are advancing in the work; and if they will sustain these various officers in their several callings, spiritual and temporal blessings will follow them. We sustain the bishop by devoting of our means for the work; we sustain the patriarch by living worthy of the spiritual blessing God may see fit to give us through him, and we sustain the district officials by actively laboring in harmony with the law for the building up of the work.

Notwithstanding the opposing powers are great, I see new beauties in the work daily; I have new joys, new hopes, and new aspirations, and pray that I may have strength to continue faithful in the work of the Master.

In gospel bonds,

HENDERSON, Ill., Nov. 18.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Davies and myself have held forth in this place for two or three days; but the people seem to know all they desire about the gospel.

We have encouraged the Saints all we could; but it seems that when they are scattered from ten to twelve miles apart it is hard to hold meetings regularly.

From here we expect to move into new fields and open up the work. Two-days meeting at Millersburg was well attended, all enjoying themselves.

Editors Herald:—Just returned from the water where I baptized two more, which makes seven with the five last week. And I expect to administer the ordinance to more next week. Last Sunday Elder Green was with me, and attended to confirmation of those who had been baptized. He is to be here to-night to confirm again. I may be here till near Christmas. There is a general awakening. The Lord is with me. Good liberty on the average. Bro. Green is a grand old man. He comes to assist—not to rule.

SCOTT-DILLON DEBATE.

The debate between Bishop Dillon, of the United Brethren Church, and the writer, has now closed, and passed into the current of history. It occupied eighteen sessions of two hours each. Two propositions were canvassed, with nine sessions devoted to each proposition.

The conflict began October 29, and closed November 8, at Sugar Grove, Indiana, and was held in the church building which the Radical wing bought of the Liberals. Two sessions per day. Two p. m. and seven p. m.

The discussion grew out of a lecture delivered by Bishop Dillon, at Sugar Grove, August 10, at which we were specially invited by card to be present. The invitations were embossed with, "Elder Scott, a believer in the Book of Mormon, Coldwater, Michigan." The message side of card read: "Elder William Dillon, Bishop, also D. D., will lecture on Mormonism, August 10, at Sugar Grove. Lecture includes Reorganized Latter Day Saints. Said Dillon is 59 years of age, a trained scholar, and is red hot for debate. The times and seasons demand it. Please be present."

August 10 came and we were present; also a large audience of Saints. The lecture was only the ordinary material offered on such occasions, and we did not wish to be bluffed down with either plug hat or a fuctionary of the United Brethren Church with prefix or appendix to his name. We had previously formulated and written propositions, and during his lecture he challenged "any living man prove the existence of the priesthood in the church we claimed was there." He gave "Joe Smith and the Elect Lady," some scorching encomiums.

At close of lecture we asked him if he would permit his challenge to spur him on to friendly discussion of these matters? Told him that I held in my hand propositions embodying the debatable ideas of his lecture, and if the "times and seasons demanded" such an investigation, the people would love to hear both sides. He wished to hear the propositions read. He was gratified, said "yes," accepted, and signed them.

We affirmed that "the church known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the Bible in faith, doctrine, organization, ordinance, practice, and worship." He affirmed the same for the United Brethren Church. He chose Elder Mason for his moderator, I selected Elder G. A. Smith as my best man. The two did admirably; good order and decorum were maintained throughout, and eighteen sessions were opened and closed, and no chairman seemed necessary.

The argument seemed clean-cut from beginning to end. 'Twas different from the Bradenic attacks, which are so stale and repulsive. The people are glad to hear something more in taste with Bible culture. Bishop Dillon is a scholar; as able, if not the very ablest in the United Brethren ranks. He boasts of being "a gladiator in the arena of debate." He has met Universalists, Spiritualists, Campbellites, Skeptics, Adventists, including Miles Grant of Boston, and triumphantly poses behind his knowledge of Hebrew and Greek. But, doubtless, he never ran up against the tower of strength consolidated in the latter day work.

His fine scintillations of scholarship, and cute little arrows of translation, which constituted his weapons, fell harmlessly, and it was evident that Bishop Dillon had selected his ammunition to kill a certain kind of game, and the game was not what he had anticipated. He would make a feint toward the affirmative, but utterly failed to move the pesition of the Reorganized Church. It stood as solid as a thunderbolt, resisting the attacks of arrows hurled by the silly Thracian.

"The most fatal item of your system," said he, "is baptism to secure the remission of sins." Then followed the translation of the Greek preposition eis, and its application to Matthew 8:4. But we exposed his sophistry on this and showed that for has for its object the testimony for which the effering of himself to the priests was had, and not for the leper's "cleansing" after the cure was performed, as he tried to argue. We showed that for, when not used as an introductory preposition or a conjunction, is a word which shows the relation between its object and some other word; that it helps to form an adjunct, and that adjunct modifies the verb or participle on which the adjunct is predicated. That the passage, Acts 2:38, has a compound predicate-repent and be baptized -and the object of both is to secure the forgiveness of sins. Peter did not say simply "repent for the remission of your sins," for both repentance and baptism stand related by the preposition eis, for, to the object, remission of sins. We introduced Young's Analytical Concordance, which agrees with this position on the three texts: Mark 1:4; Luke 3:3; Acts 2:38. We also introduced the Emphatic Diaglott, and the voices of six college professors, who translate eis in the texts referred to, as meaning "in order to the remission of sins."

With all his keen analysis, Bishop Dillon could not get the old body of sin destroyed until after the repentant sinner had gone into the water of baptism. He failed to separate the old life from the new life until the candidate was in the act of "putting on Christ," and he ignominiously failed to show that repentances inducted the sinner into Christ, "for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, (Galatians 3: 27,) and "if any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature,"-"old things are passed away," (2 Corinthians 5:17,) was kept constantly before him. We argued that God's children are a new creation, and that Paul had said that such were [are] God's workmanship, and that the creation or creative act was [is] completed in Christ Jesus:" Eph. 2:10, and Col. 2:10, 13; the word of God declares that we can not get into Christ without being baptized, or being "born of water and the Spirit." We also showed that the

''life more abundant' was [is] in Christ, 1 John 5:11, in ''the true vine' and 'without [outside] of me [Christ] ye can do nothing," John 15:5, and can not come in contact with the stream of eternal life, and that this stream flows through ''the principles of the doctrine of Christ," which includes baptism as the law of adoption into the body of Christ, and he that abideth in the doctrine . . . hath both God and Christ, and he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life, but is under wrath.

We also argued that men are made free from sin after obeying from the heart that form of doctrine which Christ and his accredited ministers delivered. "Being then [not before] made free from sin."—Rom. 6:17, 18. That we are not heirs of life until we are children, and we are not children until we are adopted, and after we are adopted, we are heirs and receive the earnest, the deed, the pledge, the seal of adoption, and that as legal papers do not receive the seal until after they are acknowledged, so we do not receive the seal of our adoption until after we are acknowledged as the adopted property of Jesus Christ.

On the point of being "cleansed by the blood of Christ," it was [is] contingent on "walking in the light as he, Christ, is in the light." We admitted that it is the blood that cleanses, but that the blood does not efficaciously circulate outside the body-the church. That to come in contact with the blood we must get into the body where the cleansing current circulates, and there is but one way, baptism, and he that climbeth up some other way is a thief and a robber. Hence baptism is the door into the body, and introduces us to the blood, which cleanses us from all sin; hence baptism is "in order to the remission of sins." To this position the Apostle Paul evidences as follows: "In whom [Christ] we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace."-Eph. 1:7; also Col. 1:13, 14. In whom do we have forgiveness of sins? In Christ. By what? By his blood. How do we get into Christ? "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

Evidence was piled up to show that the gospel in its fullness is the power of God unto salvation; that it includes faith, hope, grace, blood, water, Spirit, word, Christ, his life, his death, man, and his faithful execution of the law, his preaching, man's willingness to obey, and help save himself, God, his power, the Holy Ghost, and the entire system, to effect salvation.

We laid down this undeniable proposition that God originates all, Christ ratifies all, and the Holy Spirit consummates all; in the system of redemption, and in unity of design, and concurrence of action, "These three are one." And from this fundamental, we pleaded the restoration of the primitive means, and identified the Reorganized Church with the New Testament institution on the identity of principles.

Bishop Dillion asserted that Joseph Smith the Martyr, was lazy; but when we presented the work which he performed in the short space of fourteen years, namely, the translation of the Book of Mormon, the greatest work of the age, the organization of the church, the receiving of two hundred and ten revelations to the church, the translation and correction, by the spirit of inspiration, of the Holy Scriptures, the second greatest work of the age, the writing of his own history, the oversight of the church, the maintaining of his own family, the work of being chief spokesman to the church, besides being the critic of his enemies, the work done is too weighty and massive to cover with the word lazy; and at this the Bishop dropped his apple.

On the second proposition, during which Bishop Dillon affirmed for the United Brethren Church, he seemed to possess no inclination for placing the church on the altar of dissection. He wandered off into mazes and played on metaphysical and abstract strings until we held up to the audience the United Brethren Discipline. We waded into that and forced a defense; but as the investigation progressed the pious groans subsided, the faces grew long, countenances changed, and United Brethren sympathy almost resolved itself into sentimental procession. Some of them could not endure the sound doc rine of, "We the members of the United Brethren Church do, for the perfecting of the Saints, the work of the ministry, the edifying of the body of Christ, ordain the following constitution." And such an ordained document sets to one side the constitution of the kingdom of God at every section. That law originating with God, ratified by Christ, and advocated by the Holy Ghost must be rendered null and void by the commandments

When we proved the Discipline out of joint with the gospel, and hurled the words of Jesus at them, "In vain do you worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men," there was a collapse. When we anchored Bishop Dillon back into the murky sea where Otterbein received authority to move out and organize, silence was painful. When we traced his spiritual pedigree through the daughters back to the mother, and christened the United Brethren Church as granddaughter, and originally made up of half-breeds, religiously, without command or direction from heaven, and told him his authority had originated in that "rotten kernel of the walnut" he had compared the Roman hierarchy to, the Bishop came very near losing sanctification. He was confronted with the fact that the United Brethren were following in the footsteps of Apostate Israel, both ancient and modern, for "they kept not the commandments of the Lord their God, but walked in the statutes of Israel which they made."-2 Kings 17:19. And "the Lord rejected them all, and delivered them into the hands of the spoilers." Also, for being "partial in the law," "departing out of the way," thereby "corrupting the covenant," had caused many to stumble, and were, therefore, made "base and contemptible before all the people."-Mal. 2:8, 9. That "God hath set some in the church, first apostles," but the United Brethren Church had elected as their first officer a "superintendent." That Jesus, the Son of the living God did not, and could not organize his church without commandment and direction from his Father. John 12: 49, 50 and Luke 6: 12, 13, but that in 1752-1789 William Otterbein, Messrs. Boehm, Geeting, and associates, all from the Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Mennonites, being dissatisfied with the "corrupt and formal systems around them," and coming from the Orient to Pennsylvania, did, then and there, move out, and established and crganized a religious society without the command or direction of God, Christ, angels, or the Holy Spirit; also, that the ordinances of baptism and the washing of feet should be left open, to be performed according to the conviction of each, and the Lord's Supper to be left to the judgment of each individual, as to the manner of practice and use. All of which strikes down the unchangeable law of the infinite and unchangeable God, and substitutes therefor the wisdom and precepts of men, which is "foolishness with God."

Bishop Dillon heard the text, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets," Amos 3:7, emphasized, but he saw no place for its application in 1752 or 1789.

He had asserted that "the Discipline is not the word of God," and it caused a stir among some of his brethren, who had held that it was inspired. We used Bishop Dillon's representative statement in the analysis of the "creed." And when such statement was applied to every obligation imposed therein upon either members or officers, in their application for the enrollment of names on the Class Registrar, or ordination to office, they were simply bowing to that which is foreign to, and supplantive of, the law of God.

The Bishop's ears were saluted with the historic fact that Otterbein was a communicant of the religious society founded by Ulrich Zwingli, was his pupil, and as such was overwhelmed with the erroneous doctrines taught, and the false spirit imbibed. That Zwingli was the first to corrupt the interpretation of John 3: 5, for a period of fifteen hundred years, and Otterbein accepted the erroneous interpretation and incorporated the same into the unscriptural system of which he stood as "first superintendent," and which Bishop Dillon was laboring hard to perpetuate.

The proper instructor, the Comforter, was not permitted to abide in Otterbein's building, for the Discipline bars it out, and in its stead sets up, and makes imperative, as well as prescribes "A course of study." That the primitive ministers were better qualified in one hour for the building up of the kingdom of God, by the authorized teacher-the Spirit -than the United Brethren ministry, under the domination of commentaries, would be in a life time; and if Jesus Christ, the great head of the church, had taken the Discipline for his guide in the calling, ordination, and qualification of the ministry, farewell to Peter, James, and John, with their associate laborers. Such a rule bars out of the ministry the original preachers of the New Testament church. Even the learned Paul had to unlearn all of his erroneous learning, and begin at the bottom round of the ladder and learn right, being properly instructed by the Spirit and wisdom of God, after his conversion to the gospel.

Our application of prophecy to the latterday work was a stunner to the Bishop. He fell under the wreckage of old Babylon so deep that he asked several times, "Where are we?" He could not move the date fixed by the Deity in which he was to arise and maintain his cause. He fluttered around the little schooner launched by Otterbein and associates, until compelled to widen the snail shell and include all pious men and women in every age, as constituting the organization of the church.

He argued briskly for the succession of the church in and through the Dark Ages, but could not locate a single apostle or prophet, evangelist, pastor, or teacher, such as the New Testament law provides for, after the first century. He could find no such organism or structure as the body of Christ described in Holy Writ, existing.

We gave him plenty of unimpeachable evidence, that the ecclesiastical government of the church was changed and destroyed. That the woman (church) went off into the wilderness of humanism, and was not measured by the measuring reed for 1,260 years. And if the church had been perpetuated intact, as established by Christ and his accredited helpers, down through the bloody and dark revolutions of the past, his boasted and pious church founder and builder had left the true church, departed from it, pronounced it corrupt, and led off into a new organized apostacy; and Bishop Dillon was a member, representative, and a defender of a system cut loose from the true church in succession, and therefore the United Brethren Church is not the church of Christ.

He also interpreted the angel of Revelation 14:6, having "the everlasting gospel," to mean one of the reformers, who broke off from Rome. But here again he plunges himself into an inextricable difficulty; for if the church continued to exist, then this angel reformer broke away from the true church possessing the true gospel, and established a new departure, and God was committed to this new departure by sending the angel. Moreover, if this angel reformer had the everlasting gospel and broke off from Romanism, it could not mean William Otterbein, for he did not break away from the Roman Church; therefore, William Otterbein did not possess the everlasting gospel, and hence could not perpetuate it through the United Brethren Church, and my opponent had better leave the United Brethren Church and attach himself to the angel reformer who had the true gospel, in order to represent the true church. The rise, organization, and independent progress of the United Brethren Church, as a distinct and corporate body, is a thorn in the jaws of the theory, that the New Testament church has come down to our times intact, perpetuating itself by multiplied succession.

In reference to spiritual gifts, my opponent seemed to have a cinch on the gift of tongues.

He would specify but one gift, and that was tongues. Wanted us to read Hebrew, and asked some of the Saints to come up and read Greek from his "Greek Testament." Said, "Paul presents tongues as a sign;" 1 Cor. 14: 21, 22. We read the text and spoke as follows: In the law it is written, "With men of other lips and other tongues will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord. Wherefore [so that] tongues are for a sign," etc. "For all that, [speaking with other tongues] they will not hear me." Tongues then are for a sign that they will not hear God, not that they are a sign to induce belief. Paul will hardly contradict Christ Jesus his Lord. who says, "These signs shall follow not go before] them that believe," [not those who disbelieve or have no faith] and among these signs, "In my name shall they [the believers] speak in other tongues."-Mark 16: 17. They are a sign that the people will not hear God. So Jesus argues, "A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign," indicating that honest men and women would accept the truth for the truth's sake, and "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing the word of God." So tongues are for a sign to them "that believe not"—a sign that they will not hear God. For when Jesus came with God's word, the religious infidel would not hear, and immediately they cried out, "We would see a sign from thee." But, if they believe (hear) not Moses, they will not be persuaded though one went to them from the dead. See Luke 16: 31

But Bishop Dillion became so vociferous, he did so much desire to hear a specimen to prove that the gift was in the church; i. e., he wanted the Latter Day Saints to give a sign to prove that Christ Jesus told the truth when he said. "These signs shall follow them that believe." And when he was triumphantly defiant we asked all that were present who had heard the gift and could testify that it is in the restored work of God, to stand up. There was a simultaneous uprising by the Saints, and the Bishop looked like he was crushed. Turning to him we said: "Bishop Dillon, we have placed ourselves before the world, just as the church of God did nineteen hundred years ago. We testify that the gifts are in the church, and "you receive not the witness;" it is now your duty to impeach the evidence, or acknowledge the truth-"believe," and permit the signs to follow. Poor man! He did not expect this "cloud of witnesses" to encompass him, and we could not blame him for feeling

But he would rally again with faith and good grace: "Whether there be tongues they shall cease," "prophecies fail," "knowledge vanish." We admitted it all, and inquired "When?" On the first statement, "tongues shall cease," we quoted "I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease," but when? "He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth," but when? Arrogancy of the proud did not cease in the days of Isaiah, wars did not cease in the days of David, nor were tongues to cease in the days of Paul. But when were these things to

"When that which is perfect is cease? And we held up the Discipline and come." read: "We the members of the United Brethren Church do, for the perfecting of the Saints. . . . ordain the following constitution." When was it ordained? In 1800, at Baltimore. Ah! the perfection had not appeared when they ordained their constitution to bring it about. And "when that which is perfect is come," then that partial prophecy and knowledge shall give way to perfect development, the darkened glass will be removed, and the grandeur of perfection be fully realized.

"To one is given the word of knowledge by the same Spirit." "This," says our opponent, "is a key to the 13th chapter, 8th verse, "Whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away." Why, bless you, Bishop, you have been claiming all along that knowledge by the Holy Spirit was in the United Brethren Church, but now you sweep tongues and prophecy away,-they died out of the church nineteen hundred years ago, -and knowledge goes out with them. Pick your flint, Bishop, and try again. Paul is contrasting the eternal duration of charity with the "helps," aids, agencies, God has placed in the reach of man, to advance him toward perfection. Just as we students, when in school, found it indispensably necessary to use maps, charts, globes, blackboards, etc., to advance us to a stage of development; and when we were so developed we dispensed with maps, charts, etc., as unnecessary. So Paul presents the Lord's "helps" and "governments." In our imperfect, darkened condition, here and now, prophecy in part, knowledge in part, and tongues, are all indispensable; but when that perfect condition is reached we shall not "know in part," but "know as we are known." We shall not "prophecy in part," but shall "see as we are seen." Tongues will be rendered unnecessary by the the "Lord restoring one pure speech, that we may serve him with one consent," then. (glorious promise,) the knowledge of God will cover the earth, as the waters cover the channel of the rolling flood. But charitylove-the essence of celestial law-will endure, enthroned amid the blood-washed throng, in the depth and sublimities of eternity-the foundation and ultimate of infinite redemption. When this objection was answered, the last indication of victory was gone from our learned controversialist, and he devoted considerable time to exhortation.

On the question of apostolic and prophetic succession he argued that they were the foundation of the church, and the splendid edifice, the church, was built thereon. But the fatal point to this theory is, "Now hath God set in the church, [not under it, or around it first apostles, secondarily prophets," etc., to continue "until we attain to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." That is, they are to exist as a part necessary to the organic existence of the church, until we attain to the condition Christ is in-a resurrected, immortalized condition. But Bishop Dillon translated the passage in Ephesians 4 wrongly,-"and he gave to some, apostles, prophets," etc. That is, he (God) gave to some (the people of the first century) these officers, but to no other people did he give them. If this theory and translation be true, then, the object for which they were given is confined to the people of the first century. They were given for the perfecting of the Saints, then. And the Saints are to be perfected by something else, now. Oh yes, this theory opens the door for the ordained constitution of the United Brethren Church, to come forward to "perfect the saints." How profound! "Where is the scribe?" "Where is the disputer of this world?" They were given then "that we be no more tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine." But now we are tossed, and can be carried about by every wind of doctrine, can believe and practice what we please, providing we are sincere, conscientious, and honest? How beautifully the modern amalgamates and harmonizes with the ancient. They were given then to "educate the body of Christ." Oh, yes, the Bishop's theory opens the door for the "course of commentaries" to educate and qualify the body. How sagacious! But over against this objection we place the "sure word," "It shall come to pass in the last days saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit on all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." Prophecy and no prophets?

Again, "Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them." Who? Israel. When? In the last days. Who are these "fishers"? "And Jesus walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brothers. Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother: for they were fishers. And he said unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." What did he make them? Apostles! Hence in the work of Israel's latter-day gathering and glory God is to "send fishers of men,"-apostles,-to "catch men." No change in the constitutional provisions of the kingdom of heaven. And further, if these two classes of officers were in the foundation, in the first century, and therefore not in the building (in nineteenth or twentieth centuries), then all officers are in the foundation (the first century), and not in the building, (twentieth century.) Question, then why should the United Brethren Church claim Bible elders, pastors, bishops, and evangelists, out at the roof of the building? (Twentieth century.) But again, if the two classes of officers are in the foundation, and are absolutely "the foundation," then why did not the United Brethren organizers place them (apostles and prophets) in the foundation of their superstructure, instead of electing, and by Canon of Discipline shooting a "superintendent" into the ministerial foundation? for that church never saw daylight previous to 1752-1789.

But Bishop Dillon claimed all the churches of Christendom as organic parts of the church. He embraced them all. But we presented the thought that if they all constituted the Church of Christ, that he could never prove that he was a member of the church until he had joined them all, and according to his logic he was a member of the society which he had denounced as a Mormon delusion. But where in all the Bible do we read, "and God hath set some in the church, firstly Baptists, secondly Methodists, after that Episcopalians, then Disciples and Presbyterians, etc. Strangely organized medley! There is a poem that runs like this:

The church is not in one sect,
But in all the sects, the church;
Therefore, to belong to one sect,
Is not to belong to the church.

The church is not in one sect,
But of all the sects is coined;
And in order to belong to the true church,
You must unto all the sects be joined.

The Bishop may be charitable, but such charity is unwarranted. But why, in view of his above position, he was defending the society of the United Brethren alone, as being in harmony with the Bible, he did not pause to explain.

The usual grounds were canvassed, and the affirmative for our side set up the arguments in favor of the Church of Christ restored. The negative could not and did not overthrow them. He referred to the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Translation, but as they did not enter into the discussion of the propositions agreed upon, I threw the challenge to debate the merits of each and the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith at his feet, but as yet they have not been lifted.

In opposing the claims of his church by the Bible, I presented thirty-seven points of difference between his church and the New Testament church, in nine sessions. This they were not expecting, but they keenly felt the defeat. Bro. Dillon and his moderator broke down and wept like children during our closing speech. Power was there. I sincerely believe he returned to Huntington, Indiana, a wiser man.

Without doubt the leading factors of the United Brethren Church had witnessed the growing prosperity of the cause of Christ in and around Clear Lake with jealous eye, and many of them thought that a little dust thrown into the eyes by professed scholarship would effectually stop the work. Fatal mistake. Truth, the more it is burnished, the brighter it shines. I believe our people are confirmed in the faith and recognize that they have accepted a system which criticism, though learned, can not move.

The discussion was largely attended throughout, and the most intense interest elicited. We used the Authorized Version of Bible, as standard, but other translations were used, including the Bishop's. We used Gorrie's History of Sects in America. A most concise and compact collation is this work. Mosheim's History was in evidence. We also used Gibbon's Roman Empire, Bower's History of Popes, the Diaglott, Young's Analytical Concordance, with other standard authorities.

We lock for good results, as the times and seasons demanded such a measuring of claims. May the heavenly Father give such fruitage to seed sown, as will glorify his name. Cheerfully yours in hope,

DELOIT, Iowa, Nov. 22.

Editors Herald:—The Galland's Grove district conference, held at this place last week, was an enjoyable one. Pres. J. M. Baker resided, keeping the workers busy from the first to the last.

The Religio and Sunday-school conventions preceded the conference, showing good and effective work.

Elders C. Derry, W. H. Kephart, and N. V. Sheldon did the preaching.

I will go to Shelby county to-day in the interest of the church finances.

Sincerely yours,

C. J. HUNT.

UNDERWOOD, Iowa, Nov. 18.

Editor Herald:—All seems moving smoothly in Pottawattamie district. No jealousy or friction among the ministry. Plenty of room and lots to do, and occasionally one baptized. I have been laboring for the past three weeks in the vicinity of the Boomer and North Star branches, preaching as often as practical.

Previously to coming to those places I was assisting in tent work at Council Bluffs, with Bro. F. M. Cooper and our aged Bro. J. S. Strain. Made the acquaintance of many of the Saints at that place, and found them to be very hospitable and full of love for the work. It seems to me that the Saints as a rule are the very best people on earth and I am glad that in the gospel net we are getting so many good fish. But of course among the many we get there are some that can be improved. I may be one of that number. Will I apply that which will bring the needed reformation? I ought to.

In reading the HERALD of November 13, I was pleased with the sentiment expressed by Sr. Della Fish, of Mallard, Iowa, with reference to elders getting outside the limits of branches to tell the gospel story. And it would be well if all the elders would follow the example spoken of by Sr. Della with reference to Bro. W. H. Kephart. I am a little partial towards the Galland's Grove district, because I have lived there since early childhood, and love to hear of its success.

The conference of this district convenes at Wheeler's Grove, the last Saturday in present month. It is expected there will be a good representation of the Saints present.

Ever praying for the cause of truth, I am, Your brother,

R. WIGHT.

RAYMOND, Idaho, Nov. 15.

Editors Herald:—Since I last wrote I have labored in various parts of this the Rocky Mountain Mission. Was with Brn. Peter Anderson and S. D. Condit from the 17th to the 27th of September, laboring in Logan, Utah; Malad City, and Pocatello, Idaho. Left them on September 27, at Blackfoot, Idaho, and came to Thomasfork Valley, Idaho, and remained a few days, then to Cokeville, Kemerer, Hamsfork, Diamond-ville, and Frontier, in Wyoming, but did no preaching except at Cokeville and Hamsfork.

At Frontier I found two true Latter Day Saints, Bro. Edward Rowland and wife, Three members of the church live in Diamondville, Bro. David Kinghorn and wife and Bro. Joseph Simpson.

After visiting the above-named places I came home and labored in that neighborhood for a few days; and on October 21 I started for Star Valley, Wyoming, visiting Smoot, Afton, Fairview, Auburn, Thayne, and Freedom, all in Wyoming. At Smoot I preached once in the Latter Day Saint meeting-house to a fair-sized audience of the Mormon people, who seemed interested in what I had to say. While I was in this vicinity I was kindly cared for by Bro. Sam Martin and family, who used to live near Lamoni, Iowa.

At Fairview I preached twice to interested audiences principally of Mormon people, in their meeting-house. Their choir did the singing for me. At the close of the last meeting I was asked if I would discuss with one of their representatives on church differences. I told them I would be pleased to enter into a friendly discussion with them for the purpose of doing good only; but inasmuch as I was nearly sick with a severe cold and cough I told them I would meet them at a later date provided we could agree on propositions, time, etc. I gave them my address, with a request that they write to me, sending such propositions as they could agree to, and I would consider them, and if I could agree, I would meet them as soon as I could conveniently do so. From there I went to Thayne, where I preached three times in the Latter-day Saint or Mormon meeting-house to fair-sized audiences, principally of Mormon people, making my home with Bro. John Coy and wife of Plain City, Utah, who kindly cared for me. There was quite an interest manifested at these meetings, and at the close of the last meeting some opposition was made mostly in a gentlemanly manner. But there were two or three that were a little bitter in their talk to me, telling me that I was no gentleman, that I had insulted the people, although I had not made any assertions of evil concerning their people. Neither had I produced a particle of evidence from their enemies concerning their teachings or practices in the past, but had simply given them a little of their teachings and practices as recorded by their prophets and apostles and published to the world by those in authority. But I believe a majority of those who have heard me have taken a common sense view of the matter.

At Freedom I was kindly entertained by a Mr. George W. Heap and wife, who to all appearances are not far from the kingdom. And I hope they will ere long unite with the true Latter Day Saints church. I preached three times in the Mormon meeting-house at Freedom, to a small audience the first night, and fair to large audiences the last two nights. The interest was good, some coming six or seven miles to attend the meeting. Here, as at other places, there was some opposition, but it was of such a nature that I could see that the Spirit of the divine Master was moving some of them to ask questions; for at the close of the last meeting I told the people that as I was nearly sick I did not care to answer any questions after I had closed the meeting. I had no sooner said this when the Bishop's wife arose and asked me if I would not answer one question which she wished to ask. I replied that I would answer questions before I closed the meeting, but not afterward. She then began asking one question after another, until we had occupied fully half an hour and perhaps an hour in asking and answering questions. I was glad she asked the questions, for it gave me an opportunity to explain many things that otherwise would not have been touched upon. And I believe it made friends to the cause of truth. For although it was very late when we closed the meeting, yet when we reached home there were three people who called to see me and ask questions relative to what we as a church believe. And judging from what men and women say and do, I am led to believe that some were interested, and that good will result from these meetings. But I was almost sick from a severe cold and cough, and so worn out by talking so late for several nights, that I concluded it best to come home for a few days of needed rest. Since coming home I have preached in Geneva, a settlement in the upper Thomasfork Valley; and if my health continues to improve I expect to visit the Bear Lake country about the 18th inst., to see what can be done for the cause we all love so well.

Yours in gospel bonds.

MITCHELVILLE, Iowa, Nov. 20.

Editors Herald:-I am at present a few miles from Mitchelville, holding meetings in the Christian church. It is an entirely new place, and it is all new to them. It is levely evenings now, and fair turnout, mostly young folks; but last night we had excellent order and attention. Have several invitations now extended me for calls at their homes.

About three weeks ago, while in Des Moines a few days, two Utah elders came to the place where I was stopping. That gave opportunity for a discussion of about three or four hours length; and before we separated they had stated several times that it might be possible that they were mistaken. Whether it was made in good faith or not I can not say, but felt somewhat pleased with the admission.

The same two had a few nights previously stopped at this brother's house over night; and when coming stated that they had had a revelation directing them to go there. The brother had, however, beforehand found out that they stopped at a neighbor's to inquire where this brother lived, and he did not hesitate to tell them from where they had received their revelation.

A good many cases of smallpox have developed here in different localities, which to some extent is a hindrance to missionary work. A good many have been exposed through carelessness of not quarantining in time, and some have disregarded the quarantine after being put under it.

In gospel bonds,

DES MOINES, Iowa, Nov. 15.

Dear Herald:-A short letter from our Des Moines district may be of interest. The work of the church in the district is onward, and progress is being made. Here in our capital city is a good interest. Two have recently been added by baptism. Last week Bro. J. C. Crabb was in the city and gave a series of lectures on the angel's message of Revelation 14. Notices of the meetings were well posted, and a good attendance was had. Bro. J. W. Wight was in the city the 11th inst., on his way to Coalville for a debate, and delivered one sermon at the church. Bro. D. M. Rudd was in the city part of the week, and preached.

The little child of Bro. and Sr. Lilly died October 10, after an extended illness. The church building here has recently had new seats placed in it, and is very homelike and attractive as a house of worship.

District president, H. A. McCoy, has recently been at the Clear Creek branch near Baxter, and some baptisms are reported there. The coming district conference will be held at Grinnell. December 28 and 29, with the Sunday-school convention the 27th, and the Religio work on the 26th. Grinnell is conveniently reached from all parts of the district, and a good attendance at the conference is expected.

Sr. Susie Cooper, formerly of Tama, has located at Talmage, Union county, and thus leaves our district.

The Religio work in the district is progressing. A local was organized at Rhodes in October, with ten members. The home class work of the Religio is being taken up in a way that is most gratifying to all, and several home classes are being formed. The general treasurer's annual call for funds has been sent out to the locals, and it is expected that all will raise the full amount asked for by the general society.

> Very truly, A. A. REAMS.

FORMOSA, Kan., Nov. 14.

Editors Herald:-I see in looking over my journal that I preached thirty-three times last month, and sixteen times already this month. I could have held a very few more services had not other meetings and inclement weather interfered. My audiences have been from fair to good, and attention excellent. My health has been normal, save my voice was somewhat impaired with heavy tribute thereon, some cold, and a local distress of asthma. The infirmities of age, coupled with much ardent labor, and the changes incident to the calling might have floored me ere this did I not try to muster faith, and strive to render myself somewhat worthy of recognition, inspiration, and bless-

At Wayne, in Republic county, is where I last held forth a dozen times in the Disciple chapel, or Christian church, as it is called. The Campbellites kindly played their organ, and furnished the music. They may think it unkind, and discourteous for their guest to call them followers of Alexander Campbell instead of Christians. I like to be urbane and polite, but when there is so very much at stake, and I would have to commit theological suicide in justice to all concerned I can not. Should I cut the vine I was swinging from, or sever a rope that I was hanging to, especially above my hand; or saw off the limb I chance to be seated upon, and that, too, next to the tree, a drop would be the inevitable, and the fall would liably be injurious.

The choir called for privilege to sing an extra as I was about to pronounce the last benediction. Of course I cheerfully, gladly acquiesced in their timely request. The audience joined in with, "God be with you till we meet again." I told the people I did not care to rush back to the door, and shake indiscriminately the hands of all, but all that felt kindly at the close come forward, and bid us good-bye. Men, women, and children all came forward, and with many kind wishes bade me adieu.

I am, I presume, comparatively happy, when my eldest, a daughter, and my only son are away attending Graceland. Mrs. Short, and Ruby Irene, our baby lady, keep the home nest warm at Independence while I am in the Sunflower State to do and dare, etc.

I hear good reports from brethren Joseph C. Vaughn and L. G. Gurwell; but pray what can you expect a seventy, an elder, and a valiant priest to do for, and with, forty-five counties. The branches are few, small, and far between; and the locals are not numerous, handicapped, and not overly industrious and zealous. The Saints as a general thing are poor enough to keep them humble, if there is anything in that philosophy. The wide-spread drought has augmented their anxieties, and imperiled their peace and happiness. It is a wonder and a blessing to note how complacently they adjust themselves to their environments and hope right on.

Two ladies, that are married, were baptized by my colaborers about the time they placed away the tent, and ere they pushed on further westward. By-by,

M. T. SHORT.

EL DORADO SPRINGS, Mo., Nov. 16. Dear Herald:-Realizing that the Saints at large are ever glad to hear of the prosperity of the work, I will write concerning God's dealings with us here. For about two years we have been having promises through the gift of tongues and by revelation, that God was pleased with us, and that, if faithful, we should be blessed with an increase of numbers, also a house of our own in which to worship. Bro. Abner Lloyd, living two miles from us, often met with us and led our meetings, encouraging the Saints by his preaching and exhortation to faithfulness. Last spring a way was opened up for us to buy a house and lot. The house was repaired, finished, and furnished for use first of the summer, and lately the outside has been painted. It is all paid for except $40.

Bro. R. T. Walters held the first protracted meeting in it, followed in about a week by Bro. Moler, our district president, who gave us twenty-two sermons, baptizing two; and there is another to be buried with Christ next Lord's day. Am satisfied still others will yet follow. House was sometimes filled to overflowing, the platform and aisles filled

The Saints are living in much peace and love. Our social meetings are very spiritual, and we are increasing in numbers. Saints moving in from other places.

Brn. Walters and Tucker held a meeting last winter in a rented room, baptizing one.

Bro. Moler's meeting closed November 5, and I think it safe to say he left here very much in love with the Saints of El Dorado.

Our Sunday-school was organized last spring in Mrs. Phipps' dining-room, afterward meeting at Sr. Phaler's, she very kindly opening her front rooms for our use until the church was ready for us. We became a part and parcel of the district organization at Veve conference the last of May. During the following quarter our numbers increased so much that at the Nevada conference, September 28, the banner was carried home to El Dorado in triumph, having gained the largest number of scholars during the quarter.

We have not words to express our appreciation of the work done by Brn. Walters and Moler, and it will not be very long, we trust, before we shall again see the genial countenance of our district president in our midst. In faithful advice to the Saints, he surely excels; and if we live up to his instructions, we shall continue to be a band of humble, earnest Saints.

I earnestly desire that all God's children may so live as to secure the blessing of God, that they may obey the injunction to "Come up higher," and so be preparing for a home on the renewed earth.

I fear we do not always appreciate the sacrifice and labors of those leaving home and loved ones to go out in gospel work. Let us ever make their stay among us as pleasant as possible. Husbands and wives at home in each other's society, and surrounded by their children, can not realize the trials of their preaching brethren, or of the wives left at home with the care of the little ones, and planning ways and means to make both ends meet. Do you ever think when the preaching brethren are with you, and you are having a good time, of their lonely hours of care and worry about home and loved ones, the exposure of the wives by work out doors are in, keeping them awake into the small hours of the morning, while you are locked in peaceful slumber? Too often all this is forgotten, and we are too apt to think what a good, easy time the preacher is having, visiting around and eating the good things of the land. You do not know how gladly he would take even a crust, if only at home with the loved ones. But no! God has called them: they must obey. And surely they will have their reward. But it is our duty to hold up their hands by our prayers in secret, at the family altar, and in public, that God will comfort them, keep them humble and pure, and bless them in their labors, and never forget the families left behind. Those of the ministry have cares, and are subject to temptations that we are not. Then pray, pray earnestly for them. And let our prayers be followed by our works. See that their pocketbook is not empty, and let it not more be said, as it has by some in the past, that they have not a nickel with which to write home. And to the wife I would say, may God bless and comfort you. My heart goes out to you in true love and sympathy; and gladly would I say something to comfort and cheer you if I could. But I can only say, you are in God's keeping care. Pray much, and trust him. O, trust his blessed promises. Only think! Twenty thousand of them in his word! Dark days come to all: then is the time to take some of them, lay them before him, and claim them. Pray for faith that we may claim them in their fullness; for without his help we would faint by the way.

Ever your true sister in the one faith, M. J. PHIPPS.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 19.

Editors Saints Herald:-When last I wrote you I was in Maryland holding services in groves as the way was opened and the people willing to hear. They listened, thought, but of what? I do not know. However, I felt well in presenting to them the way of life, and trust it may be like bread cast upon the water, that after many days fruit may be seen. I closed the meetings and went to Philadelphia, where Bro. Will E. LaRue was holding the fort and making occasional visits to the leading newspaper offices and trying to get the public to understand that we are not as bad as we are painted. Preached in hall Sunday, September 8, and left Philadelphia for Providence on the 10th.

How many changes "ye elders" make, and what numberless incidents happen, sometimes enough to fill a book in a month; but we are reminded we are not to write books when we write letters, although I always enjoy reading the "side lights" as much or more than I do the dry matter of fact, things that are supposed to be interesting to the general reader. I remained at home about a month. and rested by preaching as often as I could. The district conference at Somerville, Massachusetts, was an enjoyable one, at least to the writer; and there were so many good things to talk about I have forgotten whether there were any evil things or not. Bro. Calvin Rich, our promising young missionary, led a beautiful girl to the altar, and under an arch trimmed with beautiful autumn leaves gathered by a host of young friends, Cal and Rena were made one by Bishop R. Bullard. May the light of God and the blessings of heaven attend them!

I tarried a few days in Boston, and then in Providence a little while longer. We made arrangements with Bro. Greene to look out for the work in New York district while he and Bro. Anderson were doing all the good they could in Massachusetts. Bro. Richard Bullard kindly consented to go with me; and it was with a far lighter heart that I set out to follow up the work of Brethren Greene and Anderson than I would have had had I gone alone. On arriving in Brooklyn we found a ripple of excitement had passed over the quiet waters caused by several letters coming from

New Canaan, Connecticut, where our genial Brother Albert Stone watches over the flock, and incidentally looks out for those who would disturb the work. A reverend gentleman, in absence of the missionaries, thought how nice it would be to knock over in one grand effort all that Brethren Greene and Anderson had done in months.

I will not weary you by recounting all that was said and done, especially as it has been told by abler pens than mine. After the debate Bro. Bullard and the writer held services at Long Ridge and Scott's Corner, having previously held services at High Ridge. Bro. Bullard was called to Brooklyn, and the writer went to fill an appointment at Hunting Ridge, where I was very kindly entertained by Mr. Jonas Searles and family, and felt good was done, although some of the good people thought that it was a terrible thing for Mr. Searles to open his house to a "Mormon."

While at High Ridge we were kindly entertained by Mr. Richard Schofield and wife, and at Scott's Corner by our good friend Sands Selects. Brn. Greene and Anderson are spoken of very highly by many of the people, and it does one good to know our brethren are appreciated.

I left for Brooklyn on November 15, and for Philadelphia on the 16th in time to meet with the Saints in Sunday-school convention. It was expected that the new church here would be ready for occupation when the Sunday-school convened; but owing to delays, we had to meet in the hall. However, a nice time was had, and on Saturday night the school gave an entertainment that was refined, elegant, intellectual, and a joy to see and hear. The preaching on Sunday was by Bro. LaRue and the writer. There is considerable sickness in the city at present. Smallpox is the chief disease on the list. I expect to go to Bridgeton, New Jersey, this week. Yours in hope,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, Nov. 20. Editors Herald:-Wouldn't it be entertaining to read a list of all the associations in vogue now-a-days? The National Prison Association whose delegates, both ladies and gentlemen, have been assembled for business and sight-seeing in Kansas City, drew much attention lately while folks generally were talking about the escaped federal convicts. The Congress was in favor of reformatory prison work, and Mr. Leonard, of Ohio, said that "as society demands prison reform, it should remove every obstacle out of the way to meeting that demand. Society has its obligations to the convict." Dr. Neil remarks "Christ was not a reformer but a Savior," and he takes issue with the Congress in regard to education being the great need to make men better.

Then, there are the United Charities, and federated charities, and it is predicted that the time will come when there will be a greater concentration both in the business and philanthropic world. "There will be fewer institutions, and so, greater effectiveness," they say.

Well, we have one college, one Saints' Home, one general publishing house, one General Sunday-school Association, one General Religio, Daughters of Zion Society, Prayer Unions, and Willing Helpers. As in all philanthropies, the generous few bear the burdens, and all are striving somewhat to carry on the work. We think so, here in the Orchard City.

One of our little Sunday-school pupils. Claude Bell, was last Saturday at play at the Missouri Pacific depot, when he slipped and fell under the car wheels, and died soon after. His funeral last Sunday afternoon, conducted by Bro. Earl Corthell, was an occasion of sadness to his relatives and friends gathered at the poor boy's home. He was only ten. Beautiful half-blown roses were on the casket, and a cluster of white blossoms, scarcely excelling in purity and whiteness the fair young brow, lay upon the child's breast. The lovely, child-like form rested in front of our brother, as with calmness and liberty of speech he sought to comfort and inspire with hope those present. Brethren Hulmes and Garrett assisted in conducting the funeral, also a few of the cheir, Srs. Mamie Foss and Jessie Stewart, with the writer, lent their humble services.

Brethren Hilliard and Thomas discoursed morning and evening respectively, and were inspired with their wonted spirit of faith in the work, and of consecration to the Master's service. "A complete consecration" of which we have heard much, both in the fellowship meetings and from the pulpit, is the thought at times possessing us all.

John W. Alexander, an eminent artist, says he has returned home for good from Europe because he wants his boy of thirteen to grow up an American among Americans. The land of Zion always seems destined to be the central point where are being gathered the forces both for good and evil. This artist says we shall see the greatest foreign painters sending their work over here to where there is talk of building a most extensive gallery. He calls it "a new world so far as art is concerned." Let us hear what he says of that great city Paris. New York, he says, is lacking in the proportion and harmony which makes European cities coherent and individual. In Paris, he tells us, you can not put up a building when and where and of whatever sort you please, and every building on the Avenue de l'Opera had to conform to certain lines. He says "they are of uniform height, with the lines of windows the same, the balconies symmetrically arranged, every corner house rounded at the same angle, all forming as complete a whole as if it had been a corridor in a house, instead of a broad avenue in a city." "But in New York the result is disturbing. There is a stretch of buildings of a certain degree of harmony in style and size, when suddenly a sky-scraper pops up twenty stories into the air. It is disturbing; but it is the most inspiring place in the world. It is in the air." We thought as we read this there are spiritual as well as other kinds of forces at work here in the land of Zion urging on to consecration of thought and purpose. One may feel their presence while listening to our ministers, local or from abroad, or to some trembling brother or timid sister, while they tell their desires to devote their entire time and talent to a higher service. All seem to feel the impulse: it is in the air.

Bro. Hilliard told us at the prayer meeting that what we need in consecrating ourselves is the exercise of the will-power; and the earnest Apostle Barnabas exhorted the rejoicing proselytes at Antioch 1900 years ago that "with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord."

So we learn that the principles of the gospel are broad and eternal, that the foundation for our faith is firm, and the superstructure symmetrical; and we now must so build that like the architecture of a city of beauty every lowly temple shall arise, harmonious in every part, and fitly adorned. We shall then be able to sing with the Spirit and understanding.

ARAPAHO, Okla., Nov. 18.

Editors Herald:-I have heard no preaching by our elders since I left Lone Rock, October 7, 1900. All the latter-day talk I have heard was spoken by myself, and those that know me may imagine what it was like.

Have almost given up getting any one to come to Arapaho to hold meeting.

The Advents and Campbellites had a debate at Longview lately. Advents seemed successful. Was not there any, as it is too far away.

I am still a Latter Day Saint, and know the work I am in is of God. Am glad to do all I can to advance the cause of the kingdom.

I have seen a book entitled, "Grandest Century in the World's History." Chapter three is headed "Origin" and Growth of the Mormons." Among other things it states that leading Mormons swear falsely. It mis, represents us in a shameful way. Old Spalding story told as facts, and of course is believed by some. The book is written by Henry Davenport Northrop. It is a pity men of education will claim to be writing history and stoop so low as to write such stuff as I find in his book, and call it history. Mr. Northrop is in no way excusable, as his knowledge of history teaches him better than to make the statements he does and call them facts.

In speaking of Joseph Smith, on page 116, he says that Joseph Smith prevailed on several women to cohabit with him, and in order to pacify his lawful wife and silence the objections of the Saints he had a revelation on July 12, 1843, expressly establishing and approving polygamy. Do we have to just let such stuff go? or is there any way of asking such men to speak the truth.

Hoping truth will always be sought by the people calling themselves Christians, I am

Your brother in the one faith.

WILBURTON, I. T., Nov. 21.

Editors Herald:-Since the last of July I have labored in Northeastern Texas, in company with E. A. Erwin. We have been very busy, could not attend to all the calls for preaching. November 15, at eight a.m., a company of Latter Day Saints and friends, numbering eighteen, started by wagon from Manchester, Texas, to Wilburton, Indian Territory, a distance of one hundred and fifty miles, to attend district conference. We had quite an eventful journey, over river, mountain, and dale, camping out at night, the ladies occupying the wagons and the men sleeping outside by large camp fires. Mrs. Mountjoy (sister to Sr. Jenkins, of Lydia, Texas), of Indianapolis, Indiana, was with us, this being her first experience traveling by wagon and camping out. She said if we were in the North the people would call us gypsies; but such journeys are common to us Southerners. We were five and a half days making the trip. I had a good time; that is, when I was not chopping wood, making a fire, carrying water, harnessing horses, driving for some one else, or doing some other kind of chores for the company.

We arrived at Wilburton without any accident, all in good health. Found the Saints preparing a nice church for meeting. They are calculating to finish to-day. Conference convenes to-morrow, at ten a. m. We are expecting a good conference.

If not otherwise ordered I expect to return to Texas after this conference, to try to do the Master's will. The Saints of Northeastern Texas have amply supplied the necessaries of life, and abundance of raiment to ye missionary since I have been in this part. The interest, so far as I am able to judge, is good. We look forward to doing a great work next summer, when the meeting season opens up. We can not make much progress in Texas in the winter season.

May the Lord prosper his work, is the desire of Your brother in Christ,

E. L. HENSON.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

I know that each sinful action,
As sure as night brings shade,
Is somewhere, sometime punished,
Though the hour be long delayed.
I know that the soul is aided
Sometimes by the heart's unrest,
And to grow means often to suffer,
But whatever is—is best.

GLAD, BUT SORRY.

I am glad that my mind has been directed or impressed to write, and gladder that I have many times yielded to the impression.

Firstly, it has tended to develop my own soul, for if I had not written, and had been entirely unable to use the eye, it seems as though the soul must have shriveled and died for want of nourishment, even as plants and animals die without nourishment. I have had some church privileges, but at times for years have not been favored to meet with those who had met to speak of God and his goodness, and if I had been denied the standard gospel works, I should have been spiritually famished.

Secondly, I am glad that my work has been generally accepted by the reader, and that some have been benefited by the same, and I hope that my thoughts have not been in any case misleading. My design has been strictly in favor of truth and right, yet I am liable to Thirdly, I have had many very encouraging echoes, some through the press, more by letter, and many have been voiced to me. All this has been comforting, and harmonizes with my belief that we need some praise and encouragement while living. 'Tis folly to withhold such from friends while living, and keep them to pour out on the ear that is closed in death.

Sometimes my heart has felt buoyant with gladness on receiving those sweet echoes, but during the last year some of them have given me sorrow. Yes, some of the ideas in the sisters' beautiful letters have given me pain.

"Why so?" inquires perhaps one of my correspondents, in surprise.

I reply, "Because you misurderstand and misrepresent me."

"Of course I have not," you say.

No doubt your motives were pure, but you spoke from impulse more than from knowledge. Your heart was filled with charity towards me, so you understood that I was living on a plane of Christianity that is above the average. Had you known the facts of the case there would have been no misrepresentation. You do not know what a dissatisfied heart I have to deal with. 'Tis too impure to offer to the Lord, and were it not for his love and mercy I should be utterly cast off. I have made it a rule to ask for thoughts that would do good, and they have been given, so give the Author of my thoughts the praise. I am only the way by which they have been spoken. SISTER ALMIRA.

A KINDNESS NEVER TO BE FORGOTTEN.

Traveling by wagon with a family of small children in the month of July, 1878, from St. Louis, Missouri, to Wilson County, Kansas, was not a pleasure trip in all respects. I distinctly recollect one hot sunny day when our little four-month-old baby refused to keep his shoes on; nor would he have his head covered. As quick as a bonnet was put on his head he would pull it off. The consequence was his little feet, nose, and cheeks were blistered.

We frequently made inquiry from parties we met, as to which way we should go to reach our destination. We were directed to keep the mainly traveled road, but as we journeyed on we came to where the road forked. Which of these is the one for us to take? said husband. "The one to the left is a new road. I'll take this, it is an old road, although it looks as though it had not been used much of late."

On we go, the way becoming more rugged and the horses beginning to show signs of being very tired. No use to think the horses can pull this heavy load and us too up this hill; we will have to walk. So out we jump, little and big; mamma carries baby, Jennie takes little three-year-old on her back, and when we reach the top of the hill we rest, the horses and ourselves, then climb into the wagon and start out again. But before we go much farther another hill and bad rocky places announce another walk. We get out of the wagon and make good use of our limbs for a change. Husband wonders if we are on the wrong road, and we all wonder.

We drive on a little farther, then stop to look, way down. Yes, we must go right down there, which looks even more risky than the climbing up hill did; but to us who crossed the plains in 1865 with ox team, and traveled alone down Weber canyon, it did not seem so very bad. When we arrive at the foot of the hill we see some men at work in the timber, from whom we make inquiry, only to learn that we are on the wrong road. They show us a new road made through the timber, which, if we take, will bring us onto the right one. But that was one of the days not to be soon forgotten by us. Jolt and jumble, climb and stumble, up hill and down hill, wondering and wondering if we are on the right road. Thus the day wore on, as days generally will. Horses tired, so were we; and my head did ache! I was wondering if we were lost, and silently prayed, "O kind and loving Lord, lead us out into the light once more," for it was almost dark in that dense timber.

Suddenly a glimmer of light shone through the trees, and happy thought, sweet reality! we pass from darkness into light. An opening in the timber appeared right in front of us. What a beautiful sight greeted us. The sun was just sinking in the west, and there stood a neat little log house, with a sweet front garden in which bloomed the beautiful flowers of the season. A little south of the house was a stable, sheds, and haystack. A man was leaning against the fence watching

"I think I will go and ask that man if he will sell me a little hay to feed the horses," said husband.

With a handkerchief tied about my head I was endeavoring to start camp-fire to prepare supper, when two young ladies from the house came over to the wagon where we were, and kindly irquired if we would accept some food that had been left from their dinner.

"Yes," we assured them, with many thanks, we would accept. They went back to the house, but soon returned with a dish of cold potatoes, some green beans, and a pitcher of milk. God bless them, they little knew how gratefully it was accepted. I had been wondering if it would be possible with such a dreadful headache, to prepare supper.

Jennie asked them to excuse her mamma for not answering their questions, for mamma is rather deaf and sometimes does not hear. They said it was a pity to be deaf, but that their mother had a greater affliction, that she was blind.

When we had eaten supper they brought their sad-faced, yet smiling, mother to our camp. She assured us that she was glad to have us there.

On the following morning we were loth to say good-bye, and thanked them for a kindness never to be forgotten.

It is these little, homely acts of kindness, springing spontaneously from generous hearts, which touch the heart most deeply.

SWEETWATER, Texas, Oct. 5.

Dear Sister Walker:—I have not written for a long time, but your words of encouragement the last time I did write, asking prayers in behalf of my husband, are still fresh in my memory; as is also your good advice and that of our dear sisters of the Home Column.

I am a poor writer as you already know; a person who has raised all her family to the age of maturity. All claim to be Christians, but not all Latter Day Saints. But if God so wills I have placed them in his hands and patiently wait and pray that he may draw them in his own time and way.

I have never had the privilege of meeting with the sisters, but have always had a great desire to do so, and I know it would be a great help to the young mothers in raising their little ones. I can look back and see where I needed such help. If there was any secret in raising my family it was in secret prayer. I felt my inability to undertake so great a responsibility as raising a family, and when I would get to my row's end I would say, "O Lord, give me wisdom. Shall I do this way or that?"

In those days my prayers were all in secret. Perhaps some of the young sisters are timid like I was, but they need not fear, their wishes will be heard and answered if aright.

I am nearly sixty-six years old and crave to live to see the Savior come if I could do good all the time, because I don't believe I am perfect yet.

Now, dear sisters, I ask the prayers of all that we may be given strength for the conflict till the Lord says enough, and that we may gird the armor tighter until it is finished.

WORK IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

I suppose to most Sunday-school workers many reasons would present themselves for working in the school. But I will only present a few that have forcibly come to mind.

We as Latter Day Saints believe the Sunday-school to be the nursery or stepping-stone to the church. And we also believe Christ is our pattern or great Teacher. And in studying his word we learn his whole life while here on earth was one of work. Nowhere in the Scriptures do we read of his idling or spending his time in any except a profitable way. He not only worked himself, but commanded his disciples to work; and said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work" (John 5:17). So if we take him for our pattern and guide we should show by our works that we are his children.

I believe that Christ laid the foundation for the Sunday-school work when he took the little ones in his arms and blessed them and said, "Suffer them, and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And again, when he told one of his disciples to feed his lambs, which showed the children were precious in his sight, and it was his will that they should be taught concerning his gospel. And in latter-day revelation he again remembers the children and says they should be properly instructed, that they may be baptized when eight years of age. So if we keep his commandments, there are indeed many reasons why we should work in the Sunday-school.

The first desire of every truly converted Latter Day Saint is to convert some one else; and I know of no better place to gratify this desire than in the Sunday-school; for there, to a certain extent we are all teachers, for no teacher can teach without himself being taught.

Jesus said at one time to the unbelieving Jews that the works which he did bore witness of him; and if we take him for our pattern, and do the things he has commanded us to do, so will our works bear witness of us, if, like him, we have no desire but to do the will of the Father.

Paul tells us, too, that by our works we are perfect; meaning, of course, our works of righteousness.

So by all these testimonies, found in the Scriptures, we know it is right and pleasing in God's sight for us to work in the Sundayschool. So we should work because it is God's will, and from a desire to do his will; also from a desire to help our fellow beings, and so win souls for Christ's kingdom.

So let us all work, that it may be said of us when our earth life is finished, "They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The Lamoni Stake Presidency and High Council passed the following resolutions, which were occasioned by the death of Bro. D. W. Wight, second counselor to President John Smith.

RICHARD J. LAMBERT, Secretary.

We deeply deplore the loss of our esteemed brother, David W. Wight, who perished in his youthful manhood. We rejoice that he fell at his post of duty, in the hope of a glorious resurrection; and we who mourn expect to meet him, face to face with our beloved Master, when the weary labors of this life are ended.

His manly virtue and noble character, comprised of that which is good and true, are well worthy of emulation.

We fully realize that we have lost a wise counselor, a devoted worker, and a faithful "soldier of the cross." May he who doeth all things well give us patience to bear in meekness the affliction we feel at his sudden de-parture from his labors of this earth life. He has gone to rest; blessed be his memory.

To his devoted widow we offer our condo-lence and earnest sympathy, and pray that heaven's choicest blessings may rest upon her and her babe while life shall last.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To Saints of Little Sioux District:—As we are aware that 1901 will soon close, and our annual report on tithes and offerings will close with December 31, let me urge all to do their duty and send in as early as possible. Owing to our physical disability we hope you will not all wait until the last day. Let all who can and will, pay their college subscriptions and stop interest; $720 was subscribed in our district on the last call made, in which you did well, and had hoped all other districts might do one half as well, and the debt would have been paid. We are behind on allowances of missionaries' families. We hope for better things. Let not the call for other things cause you to slacken your endeavors in compliance with the law of Yours in bonds, GROVE.—Hannah Carter was born in Green county, Tennessee, June 18, 1807; died November 14, 1901. In 1834 she was married to Jacob Grove, who died in 1843. She with her husband united with the church in 1841, and in 1863 renewed her covenant by uniting with the Reorganization, to which she remained faithful until death. Funeral service was held in the Saint's church, Thurman, Iowa. Sermon by Charles Fry, assisted by George Kemp, after which the remains were laid to wet in the Thurman emptors. laid to rest in the Thurman cemetery.

An official of the C. B. & Q. was asked recently why his road took such an interest in the International Live Stock Exhibit which is to be held in Chicago, November 30 to December 7.

"It is very simple," was the answer. "During 1900 our line brought into Chicago 612 000 head of cattle, and their estimated weight was 734,400,000 pounds. Now suppose by interesting the farmers from all over our 8,000 miles of road, they come to the live stock show, see the splendid exhibits—the largest and finest in the world—realize the difference between high grades and scrubs, see the extravagance of putting good feed into poor stock, and so by encouraging them to breed better animals, which when fat would weigh 10 per cent more than the old sort, it is plain that our tonnage on this class of freight would be increased to the extent of 73,440,000 pounds. An item of considerable importance. The annual live stock exhiimportance. The annual live stock exhibition at Chicago is a big thing for the country, the farmers, and the railroads. Don't forget that for a minute."

WE have received from Bro. Charles E. Butterworth a copy of an epitome, and a card upon which notice of the time and place of holding the weekly services are printed on the one side, and a blank for questions upon the faith on the other; closing with an invitation to attend all services. These are for city work, Omaha, Nebraska, and must work well.

COURAGE is a virtue, fool-hardiness a vice. A man who is morally courageous, though he may be a physical coward, will never desert his post of duty, or hesitate between the wrong and the right thing to do.

A MAN may be physically brave, and at the same time be a moral coward; a laugh or a taunt will cause him to do an act that a truly courageous man would not do, and neglect. or refuse, to do what honor would demand.

FAULTFINDING CONSIDERED

It is quite bad enough to have those outside of the church to watch over and pick flaws in the faith of the believers, find fault with their conduct, and hunt for iniquity among them. But for members to indulge in these things is much worse.

It is not worth while to expect the outside world to be over charitable to the professors of religion. It naturally looks to the church to set the example for good conduct, and has a fairly good right to censure shortcomings in those who make profession of better things. But there is little or no excuse for church members who themselves are conscious of their own efforts to do right, to discourage others who may be weaker than they are, by making a wholesale attack upon the church for lack of right motives, or individual goodness in the personnel of the body.

If individuals are known to be doing wrong, law-breakers, disturbers of the peace of the church, or guilty of criminal acts by which the laws of the state are broken, those knowing of the wrong doing should themselves make effort to reclaim the law-breaker, or make complaint of the wrongdoing, or criminal act to the proper authorities, naming the nature of the wrong done, time, place, and circumstance, with the names of witnesses and character of the evidence by which the charges of wrong may be sustained. It is not manly or just to make wholesale charges of wrongdoing against persons not named, and demand or expect general officers to take cognizance of such complaints and undertake to bring wrong-doers to answer for their evil-doing. Officers of the county and the state would not take notice of that sort of fault finding; nor would they hold themselves under obligation to proceed against offenders upon such indefinite information. In this "the generation of this world" seem to be "wiser than the children of the kingdom."

The general officers of the church are usually busy in the affairs of their office, and have no time to spend with "busybodies," "meddlers in other men's affairs;" and are not found in places where wrong-doers of the malicious and peace disturbing sort congregate and are to be found, and hence are not personally knowing to the commission of crime, or the breaking of the law. If wrong is not done in their presence and with their knowledge, it is beyond their province to act in a procedure to arraign and restrain or punish the criminal until the facts are made known to them, and the proofs placed at their disposal. Until this is done, no blame can attach to them for either neglecting, or refusing to prosecute offenders, under church rules.

LIGHT, FROM A "STAR."

It may be remembered that at the last April session of conference, Elders Hill and Haldeman of the Church of Christ, Independence, Missouri, asked for, and obtained, the privilege of occupying the pulpit dur-ing the session. This was granted, and for two occasions in the evening sessions these elders had their say. attacking the doctrine of baptism for the dead as the burden of their effort.

Bro. David W. Wight reviewed these discourses, by request of the officers of the conference.

At the close of conference a request of Elder Hill for further opportunity to air the views held by the Hedrickite, Church of Christ, brethren was made. The conference turned the request over to the local authorities, the services of the conference having come to a close.

The organ of the Church of Christ, the Evening and Morning Star, for May 15, desired to hear why reply to the request of Bishop Hill had not been received up to that date. We noticed this inquiry in HERALD for June 12, stating what was done with the request of Elder Hill, thus calling the attention of Elders Hill and Haldeman and the brethren officers of Independence Stake to such request.

In writing of the efforts made by Elders Hill and Haldeman, we wrote, among other things, this:

Elders Hill and Haldeman both attacked the baptism for the dead theory, when both knew that the Reorganization did not teach nor insist upon a belief in it as an essential prerequisite to salvation.

In the issue of the Evening and Morning Star, for July 15, the editor takes exception to our statement made above in the following manner:

The SAINTS' HERALD in June 12, 1901, issue complains that Eiders Hill and Haldeman, on the occasion of their appearance in the stone church at Independence, Missouri, took up the doctrine of baptism for the dead and opposed it.

The HERALD states that both Elders Hill and Haldeman knew the Reorganization did not hold that a belief in the doctrine was a prerequisite to salvation.

Speaking for the two men in question we say that they did not so understand or they would not have spent two evenings combatting a doctrine which they believed the Reorganization did regard as a prerequisite to salvation; and in this same connection we would ask the HERALD to really define its position on this doctrine, as we were led to suppose from sworn affidavits made in the Temple Lot Suit, on behalf of the Reorganization, that a belief in this doctrine was not only a prerequisite to salvation but necessary to good standing in the church.

"And defendants [Church of Christ] deny the ordinance of baptism for the dead as taught by your orator [the Reorganization] and the mother church. And in this as well as in many other matters, defendants are now and from their organization have been heretical," etc.

It won't do to charge us, under oath, with being heretical for denying the doctrine of baptism for the dead and then when we combat the doctrine slip out of its defense by claiming that the Reorganization does not hold a belief and practice in the doctrine as a prerequisite to salvation.

If Messrs. Hill and Haldeman are really ignorant on the point as to whether the Reorganized Church holds and teaches that a belief in the doctrine of baptism for the dead is a prerequisite to salvation, or not, we really commiserate them for their ignorance; for it is certainly inexcusable.

The allegation in the bill quoted above is to the effect that the "defendant church" denies the doctrine "as taught by" the Reorganization "and the mother church."

Messrs. Hill and Haldeman must know that the "mother church" referred to in the allegation was the church as presided over by Joseph and Hyrum Smith prior to their death, June 27, A. D. 1844. And that the doctrince of baptism for the dead was taught at that time as a permissive doctrine; a belief in and obedience to which was not taught as affecting the salvation of any living being, and was never made a "pre-requisite to salvation." Nor has the Reorganized Church ever taught, or insisted on a belief in the doctrince as a prerequisite to admission into the church and salvation.

Messrs. Hill and Haldeman should also know that the Reorganization has held and taught that by reason of the failure of that church referred to, to finish the temple at Nauvoo within the time allotted, the privilege to baptize for the dead was withdrawn by revelation, which we accept as authoritative, whether these men do or not.

This position was taken at the start, and has been maintained until the present; and while many believe in the doctrine as they understood that it was taught and should be observed if practiced, they also believe it to be a permissive ordinance, a belief of which will neither make nor mar a man's salvation; and which can not be insisted upon as a prerequisite to baptism, or acceptance into the church, and neither has such belief been made a test of fellowship.

We as a body have not yet slipped out of defending what we have advocated; nor will we; but we object to anybody formulating a supposed dogma, or doctrine, and by charging our belief in it forcing us to accept their formula and enter upon its defense.

The light reflected by the editor of the Star is from the evening portion and the twilight of its shining.

CHURCH DECADENCE.

Apropos to the little article of Albert Comer, How is it with the Church? we quote from the Chicago Tribune for November 19, the following arraignment of the Congregational Church by Dr. Milburn, who is "one of them":

CHURCH LOSING ITS POWER.

Congregationalists discussed the needs of their church last night at the regular monthly meeting of the Congregational club, which took the form of a banquet at the Auditorium Hotel. They heard the Rev. Joseph A. Milburn tell how weak, according to his view, the church was getting, and that it needed spirituality to prevent it getting pushed to the wall. Then they heard the Rev. Joseph H. George, President of the Cnicago Theological Seminary, tell how by a system of affiliation the schools of music and of elecution can be made to help uplift it.

"The church of to-day is deficient in power," said the Rev. Dr. Milburn. "There s not the right solidity, the right force in it. We not only have no power, but we have no seriousness, as we ought to have. We need them both. If a good joke is told at a banquet table, we laugh and joke, even though we have heard it before. But we go to church and there are dull and listless, as dull as the sun behind a cloud."

"The reason we are deficient in power, in seriousness, and in beauty is that we are deficient in spirituality. We are looking down, not up. We are after the almighty dollar. We are eager for wealth and the position it This is bringing down on the church of God the contumely which it should not receive. We must have more spirituality, and we must have it quickly.

"There is no literature that has in it the note of universality. There is no preaching that has it. But music has this note, and music should be used to make it felt. It sings through those songs of 'Rock of Ages' and 'Just as I am' I have heard the doctrine of the atonement preached and it has not moved me: I have heard my professors tell it and I have listened without attention; but those songs stir me as nothing else can do. They are the salvation of this church. It is not so with those songs of Moody and Sankey. Many of them have a vulgar note— Sankey. Many of them have a contact and a note that is false, a lack of taste.

The evangelists of to-day are men of one talent. They should have at least two. What most of them preach is trash. They are giving away other men's wisdom. They are selling other men's goods. If they preach with exaltation we think they have gone wrong, that something is loose somewhere.

"The church must be startled, it must be roused, it must be quickened, or it will be forced to the wall. This can not be done by the present generation of evangelists. There have been Moodys, Myers, and Spurgeons, but the great majority of them have been trash-poor trash at that. They are weak brothers who can not hold a charge and wander about as derelicts on the sea of salvation. The only legacy they leave us is that of copy. They must be regenerated."

Bro. Bert L. White writes from St. Joseph, Missouri, November 23, that he rejoices in the gospel of the latter days—the same that was preached in the days of Christ. He realizes that it is necessary for us to go through some trials, and that roses seem fewer than the thorns. He says:

Since I have come to fully realize what the gospel of Jesus Christ is, trials have been on every hand; but I have been told to be pa-tient, and I am trying to be so. But I feel much discouraged at times. I have been suffering from blindness for nearly six years, and am afflicted in other ways. Saints to pray for me, that I may soon be healed. LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY. NO. 9.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, November 10, 1901.

Reported for HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen.

As I stated at the close of our last effort, we propose to night to speak in regard to the history of the building of the temple at Kirtland, Ohio, and incidentally to speak of other efforts at temple building, and also to have something to say in regard to the principle of temple building.

You are all aware, you who are Bible readers, that the building of temples has been a special subject of interest to the people of God in all ages of the world, or at least since the building of Solomon's temple. I think it quite possible, however, that both ancient and modern worshipers have had a great deal of superstition regarding temples. It has occurred to me when reading the account, of some at least, of these, that the building of temples was thought to be an end to be sought, while it appears to me it is simply a means towards an end. It is simply something that can be utilized to accomplish a better end than the building of a temple. There is this disposition, whether fortunate or unfortunate, with men, that their thoughts are associated largely with the locality in which they are, and when we visit places of historical importance, whether we have ever been there before or not, we recall the events that have transpired on that particular spot of ground, and in connection with those events our feelings are wrought up to a greater or less extent. I realized that, or experienced it, most forcibly while in England, and visiting historical places, such as the old tower in London where so much blood has been shed, and having it indicated to me by tablets of brass in some places where some events have transpired. Peculiar feelings took possession of my mind as I looked upon these plates and remembered the history of the past. And so it comes to us still more forcibly when we return to places where we have individually visited and remember the scenes of the past, when we visit a house of worship and remember the times that we have been there before, of the peculiar impression we had when we visited the place, the impressions return to us more forcibly than when we read of them.

I believe that it is because of this disposition in the minds of men that it is necessary that we have places specially dedicated and set apart to the service of God. I believe that in temples, such as are contemplated in the revelations of God, where no unholy thing should enter, that when we enter there, especially if we have been there before and felt the influence of God's power there, that these scenes will come back to us, and that our feelings will be in a better condition, our minds will be better prepared to commune with God than they otherwise would be. For this reason I believe that every place set apart for the worship of God should be sacred, and when a person enters there his mind should not revert to something transpiring, or that has transpired there in the past that will estrange his mind from God, but when he enters there, all the memories of the past returning because of the associations of the place, may be such as will solemnize the mind and make it more susceptible to the impress of God's Spirit. You can apply that where you will. I said I believed that a temple, dedicated especially unto the service of God, is a place where we may receive special communication with God because we will be in a better condition to receive these than we would be elsewhere, where conditions were not so favorable; but I do not believe it is absolutely necessary to our salvation that we should ever enter the portals of a temple. I do not believe we shall be condemned in the hereafter because our lot is not cast where people worship in temples. I do not believe that God will refuse to commune with us anywhere, whether in the grove or around our family hearthstone, or wherever we may be.

A temple is a good thing if properly built, and if God approves of it. It is a good thing as a means towards an end, to help us in that direction. I believe it was in recognition of this need in this great latter day work that men were inspired to begin the building of a temple in Kirtland, Ohio.

Not long had the church been in existence ere something of the kind was done. Only a little over three years, for on the 23d day of July, 1833, the corner-stone of the Temple was laid at Kirtland, Ohio. It is not necessary for me to go into the details to night in regard to the ceremony there, but I wish to call your attention to this thought, that it was a stupendous work to be undertaken. considering the circumstances. building is not a large one compared with some other buildings. It is not an expensive one compared with many buildings in this world, but it was a great undertaking for the little handful of people gathered there in Northern Ohio in 1833, the most of them poor. It took faith and confidence in the overruling power of God, and that God was approving of their work, to begin it, and not only did it take faith and confidence to begin it, but it required faith and perseverance and sacrifice to accomplish the work they did. They were several years in building this structure, but during these several years their faith never failed them, they never faltered in the discharge of their duty, nor did they consider anything too good to sacrifice, that they might accomplish this work, and have a place dedicated wholly to the service of God. speak of the Kirtland Temple more especially because it is the only one existing to day that is built under direct command of God and that has been approved of God as we certainly believe.

I will read to you something of the sacrifices and the trials that it cost these people, from the account of one of the active participants, who has left on record a partial account of the work, that you may see what these individuals suffered, and how much they were willing to sacrifice for the accomplishment of this end sought. This is from the life of Heber C. Kimball, once a very prominent man in the ranks of the church. He is speaking of the time they returned from Missouri to Kirtland, and of the conditions as they found them there. It was on July 26, 1834, that he and others returned to Kirtland, and he said:

At this time the brethren were laboring night and day building the house of the Lord. Our women were engaged in spinning and knitting in order to clothe those who were laboring at the building, and the Lord only knows the scenes of poverty, tribulation, and distress which we passed through in order to accomplish this thing. My wife toiled all summer in lending her aid towards its accomplishment. She had a hundred pounds of wool, which, with the assistance of a girl, she spun in order to furnish clothing for those engaged in the building of the Temple; and although she had the privilege of keeping half the quantity of wool for herself, as a recompense for her labor, she did not reserve even so much as would make her a pair of stockings, but gave it for those who were laboring at the house of the Lord. She spun and wove, and got the cloth dressed and cut and made up into garments, and gave them to those men who labored on the Temple. Almost all the sisters in Kirtland labored in knitting, sewing, spinning, etc., for the purpose of forwarding the work of the Lord, while we went up to Missouri to endeavor to reinstate our brethren on their lands, from which they had been driven.

It is not necessary to comment in regard to this sacrifice. You see how earnest, devoted, and self-sacrificing they were in the accomplishment of this work. Elder Rigdon was left in charge there while the company went up to Missouri. Of Elder Rigdon, Mr. Kimball says:

Elder Rigdon when addressing the brethren upon the importance of building this house, spake to this effect: that we should use every effort to accomplish this building by the time appointed; and if we did, the Lord would accept it at our hands; and on it depends the salvation of the church and also of the world. Locking at the sufferings and poverty of the church, he frequently used to go upon the walls of the building both by night and day and frequently wetting the walls with his tears, crying aloud to the Almighty to send means whereby we might accomplish the building. After we returned from our journey to the West, the whole church united in this undertaking, and every man lent a helping hand. Those who had no teams went to work in the stone quarry and prepared the stones for drawing to the house. President Joseph Smith, Jr., being our foreman in the quarry; the Presidency, high priests, and elders all alike assisting. Those who had teams assisted in drawing the stone to the house. These all laboring one day in the week, brought as many stones to the house as supplied the many stones to the nouse as supplied the masons through the whole week. We continued in this manner until the walls of the house were reared. The committee who were appointed by revelation to superintend the building of the house were, Hyrum Smith, Reynolds Cahoon, and Jared Carter. These men used every exertion in their power to forward the work.

I simply read this to you to show how devoted these people were. Though they might have had an exaggerated idea in regard to the completion of this house and in its being necessary to the salvation of the world and the church, we can not but admire their devotion and their sacrifice, and their industry in building this house, under the circumstances in which they were placed at that time.

On June 25, they met for the purpose of raising means to complete the This was after they retemple. turned from Missouri. At this meeting $6,232.50 was added to that list. Considering the few people that were there and the limited means that they possessed, this is wonderful. I doubt whether there ever were persons more willing to sacrifice than were these people; I doubt whether there ever was a people of the same number, and with the same means, that accomplished more than they did, and I think it is an example to us and an indication of what we might accomplish by earnest endeavor, by strong faith, and a willingness to sacrifice for the upbuilding of truth.

As I remarked before, the building is not a very large one compared with some buildings in the world, but representing the amount of capital it did, it was, as I said, wonderful. It was completed and dedicated on March 27, 1836. The building stands on an elevated plot of ground about three miles southeast of Willoughby, Ohio, about nine miles southwest of Painesville, and about six miles in a direct line from Lake Erie.

The building is built of stone, plastered without and within. It is three stories high exclusive of the basement.

The first and second stories are auditoriums, each fifty five by sixty-five  $f \in et$  on the inside, exclusive of the vestibule on the east end, through which is the entrance to the building, and in which are the stairways. The lower room was to be dedicated for "sacrament offering, and for your preaching; and your fasting, and your praying, and the offering up your most holy desires unto me, saith your Lord." The second room was to be dedicated for the school of the apostles. In each of these rooms are eight pulpits, four in who would take up the room and per- there seems to be a holy influence.

each end. Those in the west end were intended for the Melchisedec priesthood, and those in the east end for the Aaronic priest-The third story is divided into small rooms.

The outside walls are about two feet thick; the outside of the building is fifty-nine by seventy-nine feet.

That in brief is a description, without entering into the details, of the interior and all the furnishings of this building. It is wonderful, considering the circumstances of the people who builded it. The dedication, as I have said before, was upon the 27th day of March, 1836, and there were some wonderful things transpired at the dedication of that temple, according to the reports, and if it be true that minds go back to the associations of a place, no one that was present at that dedication could there again without feeling solemnly impressed, without feeling the glory of God and the manifestation of his power that came to them at that time. Special exercises were had at the opening services and Elder Rigdon delivered the dedicatory sermon, after which the dedicatory prayer was offered by Joseph Smith; then there were some other manifestations; a few of them I wish to invite your attention to. They were there crowded in the temple all day, having no intermission, only for about fifteen minutes, and during this time none left their seats except a few women who, having left their infants with friends, were compelled to do so to take care of them. The afternoon service then began, and it was during the afternoon service that the dedicatory prayer was offered. The prayer is all on record here in the history of the church, and it would do you good to read the remarks and the prayer. After this service we read that Don C. Smith bore record of the truth of the work in which we are engaged.

President O Cowdery spoke and testified of the truth of the Book of Mormon and of the work of the Lord in these last days.

President F. G. Williams bore record that a holy angel of God came and sat between him and J. Smith, Sr., while the house was being dedicated.

President Hyrum Smith (one of the building committee) made some appropriate remarks concerning the house, congratulating those who had endured so many toils and privations to erect it, that it was the Lord's house built by his commandment and he would bless them.

President S. Rigdon then made a few appropriate closing remarks, and a short prayer, which was ended with loud acclama-tions of Hosanna! Hosanna! Hosanna to God and the Lamb, Amen, Amen and Amen! three times.

We have been told by individuals who were present at that time of a singular occurrence that transpired. Because of the crowded condition of the house and the many who wished to come in. a rule was established that they would not admit infants, haps disturb the congregation. one mother, anxious to come, concealed her infant child and brought it into the house; and when this shout went up, "Hosanna! Hosanna! Hosanna!" the child repeated it, though it was but an infant, and had never spoken before, nor did it speak afterwards until the proper time of life for it to speak. We have heard individuals who were present make this state-

Again we are told, in the language of Joseph Smith:

The vail was taken from our minds, and the eyes of our understanding were opened. We saw the Lord standing upon the breastwork of the pulpit before us, and under his feet was a paved work of pure gold in color His eyes were as a flame of fire, like amber. the hair of his head was white like the pure snow, his countenance shone above the brightness of the sun, and his voice was as the sound of the rushing of great waters, even the voice of Jehovah, saying:

"I am the first and the last; I am he who liveth; I am he who was slain; I am your advocate with the Father. Behold, your sins are forgiven you, you are clean before me, therefore lift up your heads and rejoice, let the hearts of your brethren rejoice, and let the hearts of all my people rejoice, who have, with their might, built this house to my name, for behold, I have accepted this house, and my name shall be here, and I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house; yea, I will appear unto my servants, and speak unto them with mine own voice, if my people will keep my commandments, and do not pollute this holy house; yea, the hearts of thousands and tens of thousands shall greatly rejoice in consequence of the blessings which shall be poured out, and the endowment with which my servants have been endowed in this house; and the fame of this house shall spread to foreign lands; and this is the beginning of the blessing which shall be poured out upon the heads of my people. Even so. Amen." After this vision closed, the heavens were again opened unto us, and Moses appeared before us, and committed unto us the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the Ten Tribes from the land of the north.

After this Elias appeared, and committed the dispensation of the gospel of Abraham, saying, that in us and our seed all generations after us should be blessed.

After this vision had closed, another great and glorious vision burst upon us, for Elijah the prophet, who was taken to heaven without tasting death, stood before us, and

"Behold, the time has fully come, which was spoken of by the mouth of Malachi, testifying that he [Elijah] should be sent before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth be smitten with a curse. Therefore the keys of this dispensation are committed into your hands, and by this ye may know that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is near, even at the doors.'

Many such manifestations as these are recorded, but we have not time to call attention to all of them especially. I say again, that not only those who were witnesses of these manifestations of God's power would feel solemnly impressed when they came there, but to us who have been to the place since and remember what was written,

The Temple has been in the hands of those who desecrated it and used it for unholy purposes, but now it has been restored to its original condition and is in the hands of the church, and we are using it for a place of worship. It would not be practicable for me to follow the history of the temple. The church when it became scattered to the four parts of the earth, as it was, and darkness had crept in among them, abandoned this sacred edifice. and it was used for unholy purposes, but since that time it has fallen into the hands of the Reorganization, and is one of the things which the Reorganization has done in restoring to former conditions that which was left us by our predecessors. The Temple is also restored to its former use, and to-day it stands as a monument of God's protecting care and of the labor and toil it cost to build it. It is in the hands of the Reorganization, and is the only temple now standing that was ever completed-built by the command of God.

I wish to call your attention to other efforts of temple building in the church which have not been so successful. There was a lot dedicated at Independence, Missouri, for the building of a temple, and it has been thought that that would be the principal temple, the center place; in fact it has been pointed out as the center place of Zion, and all Latter Day Saints expect that sometime this temple will be erected on that sacred spot. I will read to you what is said in the revelation regarding this place, that you may understand the design of the Lord regarding Independence and the temple lot.

In a revelation given in July, 1831, we read this:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion. And thus saith the Lord your God, If you will receive wisdom here is wisdom. Behold, the place which is now called Independence, is the center place, and the spot for the temple is lying westward upon a lot which is not far from the court-house; wherefore it is wisdom that the land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract lying westward, even unto the line running directly between Jew and Gentile. And also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold, this is wisdom, that they may obtain it for an everlasting inheritance.

From the present standpoint, you can see how it would have been wisdom to have bought the land, for it is very valuable. It would have included the place where Kansas City now stands. This tract they were commanded to buy, and the Lord says it is wisdom to do it.

But the temple lot we want to take up more especially to night. It is described as being a lot west of the court-house. Not a very definite description. We do not know how, or in what manner, the special lot afterwards designated was pointed out. This description is not definite enough to tell exactly which lot was intended. It was a lot not far from the court-house to the westward. But I presume that when they were upon the ground they were directed to this particular spot, for we are told that in "August, 1831, the spot for the temple was dedicated in the presence of eight men, [this is the language of Joseph Smith,] among whom were myself, Sidney Rigdon, Edward Partridge, W. W. Phelps, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, and Joseph Coe. The 87th Psalm was read, and the scene was solemn and impressive." Not very much said, but the spot was dedicated. I have no doubt it was the exact spot that is now named as the temple lot which was then set apart for the building of the temple, but no effort was then made to build. There has not been to this day an effort made to build a temple on this lot, as you all know. We may have something more to say about that. The Saints were driven from that place before they were prepared to build, and from that time until now conditions have not been favorable for building. Whatever may have been their desire to do so. the Saints have not been in a position to make the undertaking. I do not know when it will be done. I believe in the due time of the Lord, all the obstructions will be removed, and the house of the Lord will be erected upon that spot by the Saints.

As I said before, being driven from the place, they went elsewhere, and they decided wherever they went to build temples unto the Lord, and when they settled at what was called Far West, in Missouri, they were so imbued with the idea of temple building, that they were a little premature in their actions. Let me read it to you:

The same day, August 5, the Presidency, High Council, and all the authorities of the church in Missouri, assembled in council at Far West, and unanimously resolved to go on moderately and build a house unto the name of the Lord in Far West, as they had means, and appointed Edward Partridge treasurer, to receive all the donations and subscriptions for the erection of the house of the Lord: Isaac Morley to be his secretary Also voted that the committee; viz., Jacob Whitmer, Elisha H. Groves, and George M. Hinkle, stand until President David Whitmer goes to and returns from Kirtland; also that the building committee of the house of the Lord have no store connected with building the house, but that every firm or individual that embarks in that business, have, own, and claim such property as their own private individual property and stewardship.

Thus you see they passed a resolution, they were not commanded to build a temple, but they were so thoroughly imbued with the idea of building a temple, that they resolved to go on moderately, as they had means, and build a house unto the Lord. Further on in the history we read:

When Joseph Smith arrived at Far West, three months later, the High Council, on November 6, 1837, Joseph Smith being present, "voted unanimously, that it is the opinion of this council that there is sufficient room in this country for the churches to continue gathering from abroad; also that the building of the house of the Lord be postponed, till the Lord shall reveal it to be his will to be commenced.

This is a better resolution than the first one. They resolved at first to go to work and build this house, but they found that it was not practicable to do so. Three months later, when Joseph Smith arrived, they passed a resolution that they would postpone the building of the house until the Lord should reveal it to be his will. They thought they would be sure before proceeding. They did not build at Independence, Missouri, though the Lord pointed out the spot, for they were not commanded to build. At Far West, when they undertook to build without a command, they found it was necessary to wait until the Lord did command. That was a good lesson to them and a good lesson for Latter Day Saints to learn everywhere.

Let me read what Andrew Jensen, a historian of Utah, says in regard to this matter:

Consequently Joseph and Sidney, accompanied by William Smith and Vinson Knight, started from Kirtland, September 27, and arrived in Far West, Missouri, about the 1st of November. While there Joseph met in council with the elders and saints, and regulated matters connected with the town-site of Far West. It was also decided that there was sufficient room in the county for the saints to continue gathering there from abroad. The previous summer (August 5, 1837) the authorities of the church in Missouri has resolved in council to go on moderately and build a house unto the name of the Lord in Far West. When Joseph arrived there he counseled that the building of that house should be postponed until the Lord should reveal it to be his will to have it commenced.

I do not know where Mr. Jensen got that, but he is partly right at least. They did pass a resolution. He says it was by the advice of Joseph Smith. I presume likely he is right; at least the fact is, that they resolved to wait until the Lord commanded.

In connection with this I want to invite your attention to a little history in another direction. We are often censured by the people in the West because we do not build temples, while they have gone to work and have now four temples out there in Utah; and they claim that in this they are in advance of us, and are doing this work in harmony with the work done prior to the death of Joseph Smith. To night I want to invite your attention to the manner in which they built out there. We have been told that Joseph Smith counseled that they wait in the building of the temple until the Lord commanded. How different was the proceedure out there. Mr. Young said in regard to the building of the temple of Salt Lake City:

Some might query whether a revelation had been given to build a house to the Lord, but he is a wicked and slothful servant who doeth nothing but what his Lord commandeth, when he knoweth his Master's will. I know a Temple is needed, and so do you; and when we know a thing, why do we need a revelation to compel us to do that thing? the Lord and all the people want a revelation, I can give one concerning this Temple.

In a few days I shall be able to give a plan of the Temple on paper, and then if all heaven, or any good man on the earth will suggest any improvements, we will receive and adopt them.

It was a little different from Joseph Smith's advice. Brigham says:

If the Lord and all the people want a reve lation, I can give one concerning this Temple.

In a few days I shall be able to give a plan of the Temple on paper, and then if all heaven, or any good man on the earth will suggest any improvements, we will receive and adopt them.

He was ready to give a revelation and then if the Lord or the people wanted to suggest any improvement he would adopt it. He was first in the matter. This is not the proper way to proceed in building temples. These temples should be constructed according to the word of God and built when direction for building is received. There was a time when old Israel built temples but they were not right in the sight of God. We read in Hosea 8:14:

For Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples; and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities: but I will send a fire upon his cities, and it shall devour the palaces thereof.

Israel had forgotten his Maker, and builded temples. We know then that it is possible for men to build temples when they forget their Maker, but it is by what authority are they building that we want to take into consideration. I think this people are willing to sacrifice, or the majority of them are, when they are convinced the Lord has directed the building of a temple at Independence, or anywhere else; but until that time shall come, we believe in acting in harmony with the last resolution passed by the council at Far West, that we wait untill the Lord directs that a temple shall

However, the corner-stone of a temple was laid at Far West on the 4th day of July, 1838. Whether it was contemplated soon to build a temple or not, I do not know. It was like the laying of the corner-stone in Independence. No effort was made to build, and in Independence as at Far West, the people were driven from their places by persecutors, and nothing has ever been done. I know of no revelation from God indicating that this place in Far West shall ever be built up.

But we have another case of temple building in the church in the days of Joseph Smith and before the Reorganization, that I want now to invite your attention to. It was at Nauvoo; they had property reserved for the purpose and were directed by revelation to dedicate a place. It seems they had been contemplating this before, for in that revelation it is said: "Ye shall build it on the place where you it.'' have contemplated building Their choice was ratified, and they commenced to build, and as in former times there was a willingness to sacri-They were poor yet, they had been stripped of their earthly goods in the trials through which they passed, but they went to work and built a temple at Nauvoo, but never completed it, and we are told in the revelation the Lord gave to the people, that they were given a specified time for completing the temple. So it seemed to have been at Kirtland. Heber C. Kimball said that Sidney Rigdon exhorted them to build the temple within the time appointed. do not know what that means. never read in the revelation in regard to a specified time, for the Kirtland Temple to be built, but these words signify there was at Kirtland a specified time. Mr. Kimball also said the salvation of the church and the world depended upon it. At Nauvoo the same principle seemed to be involved. but they failed to build within that time, and hence the decree was in force, if they did not build within that time the church would be rejected. They failed to do it. The church was, as we believe, rejected and scattered. I might quote some extracts from the revelation, but I believe that most of you are familiar with it. It has been urged that the revelation did not provide that the Temple should be finished but only that it should be built, but it was not so understood in the days when the revelation was given. The authorities of the church at that time understood that the temple was to be completed and completed speedily, or the church was to be rejected. In December, 1841, the Twelve wrote as follows:

The building of the Temple of the Lord, in the city of Nauvoo, is occupying the first place in the exertions and prayers of many of the saints at the present time, knowing as they do, that, if this building is not com-pleted, speedily, "we shall be rejected as a church with our dead," for the Lord our God hath spoken it.

The outside of the Temple was almost completed, or the greater part of it was done when the church left there and left the outside incomplete.

ple. It has been torn down and the spot where it was could not be designated by anything remaining; it can only be pointed out by individuals who know where it was. Some of the material has been utilized by whoever cared to use it, and the place stands without an edifice to day. Whether or not it is intended that the place should be rebuilt, I do not know. We are most emphatically warned by the examples of the past, if we do not keep the commandments of the Lord. God will not suffer us to build a temple unto the most high God. These people did not work diligently enough within the given time, and they were driven from the place where this temple was built, though the Lord says, "I will give you a sufficient time." He would not suffer them to be prevented, so evidently they had time, and did not occupy as faithfully as they should.

We must not expect to build a temple, we must not expect to accomplish the work of God, unless we are faith-We are not better than they were there. We can not expect to be favored of God more than they were. Upon the same condition that they were permitted to accomplish God's work we may be permitted. We may be permitted to have a hand in building the temple at Independence as they did at Kirtland, sacrifice our all to its accomplishment, if necessary, but we may expect, too, that the judgments of God will follow us unless we are faithful and true in keeping God's commandments, or else he is a respecter of persons, and that we can not believe.

I say again in conclusion, that I believe this is a glorious work, this building of temples, as a means toward an end, as a place where we can commune with God, where all the associations and surroundings would be of a holy nature, and prepare us to draw near to God, and to enjoy more of his power and the endowment of his Holy Spirit. Right in this connection, I will say this, that temple building and endowment have often been connected together. We have read of temples and endowments, and there is an exaggerated idea in regard to endowments. It is thought by some that there is something mysterious in regard to endowment. That it is a ceremony that is performed and by this ceremony a person is sealed up to eternal life. I can not believe any form of worship will seal a man up to eternal life, nor do I believe there is any greater endowment ever comes to men from God, than the endowment of his Holy Spirit. I believe that is the endowment and all else surrounding this endow-ment in the minds of the people and much of the inside undone, and the is superstition. Because the surenemy came and destroyed the Tem- | roundings will be better, because they will be holy and pure, because our condition will be such that we can draw nearer to God, because we may be endowed with the Holy Spirit to a greater degree, in the world, by that endowment. Temples are a blessing. After all, the grandest and best endowment man can have is the endowment of the Holy Spirit, so far as I understand it, so far as I have enjoyed the Spirit of God, though probably I have not had it to the extent that other men may have. I want nothing better, nothing sweeter than to commune with God; I ask for nothing higher than to commune with God through the influence of the Holy Spirit. That is endowment enough for me, if I can have it without those things that stand in the way of my receiving a fullness of the power that will cause me to come into the presence of God and allow me to commune with him, to know as we are known and see as we are seen in that happy day when doubts shall cease.

I believe in temples because then there is a place where we can draw near to God, and the surroundings are better for us, the environments are better for us to commune with God, there is the influence of his Holv Spirit. May God send this influence to help us to understand better what he shall communicate to us, is my prayer.

THE AUXILIARIES. AN EXPLANATION.

I see in the report of the president of the Religio, as well as learning from other sources, that I do not be lieve in the auxiliaries of the church. Through the columns of the Herald I would like to correct that misstatement of my position. I certainly believe with all my heart that such work ought to be done, with the possible exception of one part of the work of the Daughters of Zion. But I am not heartily in favor of the way it is done in any of those societies. But I do not wish to be understood in this expression as finding fault with any one or all of the officers of these societies, as I think it is a mistake of the whole and not any one part. As men they are doing good. But they can not be called anything but human organizations, whereas if they were made a part of the church work as any other business of the church, in my opinion it would be better. If I did not believe even in the work of those societies in any way, it would ill become me as a servant of the church to refuse to carry out its wishes in this regard; for I know, of course, that a very large majority of the church do. not see as I do. The societies can be assured that I can be counted on to work without reserve for their good;

cidedly better if they were in charge of those whose duty it is to feed the lambs as well as the sheep. Lambs need more tender care than the sheep; and not every boy or girl is as well adapted to do that as older onesthose who have the Spirit to teach especially. We make complaint because the sectarian clergy are not called of God to preach, teach, and administer in the things of the kingdom; that they have no authorithy to do so. And yet we are guilty of the same thing when we indorse these auxiliaries. It isn't this work I object to, but their authority. They are doing good. They have worked for us a good long while. Let us now adopt them into the family. Let the church say, "We have courted long enough; let us have a wedding now, and make you one of the family." Instead of being in favor of these societies, I love them well enough to get married.

If such an event should occur, then we could endow them with authority. their teachers could be ordained to teach, and thus receive the best aid that could possibly be given. Till the wedding takes place, let us keep up the courting.

I subscribe myself in favor of good till better is accomplished.

HOW IS IT WITH THE CHURCH?

How are our churches to day? Evidently all the churches have allowed politics, business, and speculative thought to get beyond their influence; and undoubtedly they are satisfied. And now let us see. It is only the dead, frivolous, and indifferent that are satisfied; modern scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, cleansing the outside of the platter, whitened sepulchers, self-deceiving, measuring themselves by themselves in a deadly danger of crucifying their Lord afresh and putting him to an open shame. See Matthew 23 and 27.

Do we need a revival? This is the center and core of Christianity: If you love them that love you, what reward have you? Your families, your friends: do not the heathen the same? When you make a feast you invite persons agreeable to yourselves, for your enjoyment and theirs. This is not a sin, but it is no better than the heathen; for they do the same. What is the Christian's duty in a feast? Is it not for the poor, the homeless, and the friendless? Christian love is for one's enemies; the Christian's service is for the disagreeable and weak, and vicious, and unclean; the Christian's duty is to all the world: but the Christian man lives under rules and standards that are the incarnation of selfishness. There is no love in busiern pleasure. How few Christians there are who can lead an inquiring soul to the knowledge of Jesus! They are without excess. To say that they can not do this is to hide behind a lie. There is not a housewife that can not teach her maid to cook, and clean, and sew. Not a mother, but can teach her children the elements of etiquette. Not an orator but can talk intelligently about the trade he has mastered. Not a scholar but can give some account of what he knows. Not a political partisan who is not eager to explain his views. Not a lawyer but stands ready to argue any case. Not a doctor who can not give some reason for the cure he prescribes. Not a business man but can train others for his business. But many of these say that they can not talk to another on the subject of religion. O, dear Christian friends! Have we let worldly things hide us from the love of God? It is to the insistent, searching word of Jesus that every man is responsible. For the spiritual energies of the modern churches are paralyzed by the great complaint between what church members say and do. O! Christians! What is the matter? Cold and formal prayer meetings. To what degree does this testify; to the love of God, or to the things of the world? Worldliness has come to characterize those who profess to be citizens of heaven. Cash, like charity, covers a multitude of sins; and the failure to make money is about the only hell believed in and feared. If we would turn to Matthew 5 and 7, and learn a lesson there, it would be better for us in the great day of the Lord. Would it not be better for us who would be citizens of heaven to practice what we preach now? ALBERT COMER.

Editors Herald:-After quite a long time at home, occasioned by the sickness and death of my dear wife and child (whom we had to lay to rest September 26 and October 8), I have again taken the mission field. Am here holding meetings each evening; small but attentive audiences. Trust some good will be done.

We are glad to note the improvement in our district under the efficient management of our worthy Bro. M. R Scott, Jr., who certainly is improving every opportunity to arrange and set in order the affairs of the district, as well as to see that each missionary does his part. As time passes, more and more we feel the necessity of a closer walk with God, on the part of all,-missionary, elder, priest, teacher, deacon, and laity,none excluded. All are or should be helpers in this great work. There is no place in this but in my opinion it would be de- ness, no love in war, no love in mod- great building for those who will not work.

We read that the idler shall not eat the bread por wear the garments of the laborer. How often we hear, "It's too cold," "I'm too tired," etc. If we could realize the force and full meaning of the statement. "I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be," we surely would renew our energies, and heed the admonition to come up higher.

We do not wish to forget our Lord in any way, but sometimes we do so thoughtlessly. We should keep the whole law, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world, so that when death knocks at our doors we can say, "All is well! All is well! Praise the Lord!"

The visit of President Joseph Smith to these parts was much appreciated by members and non-members. Many remarks were made about him, but not one uncommendable. "I'm so glad I saw him; he seems so kind;" "He certainly is an honest man:" "He is so common and pleasant," etc., were heard. Large crowds greeted him, notwithstanding the most rainv part of the season was at that time. Hope and trust that his life may be long upon earth, and that he may meet the Saints of Southern Indiana again.

As the way opens we shall be on the alert. We have several calls to assist our district president in a series of meetings at different branches. Will be submissive to our field officers, believing them to be men of God.

Hoping that we may "run and not weary." "walk and not faint," I remain, LIVERPOOL, England, Nov. 10.

We arrived at ten p. m., after a voyage of eight days. We passed through three days of severe storm on the 3d, 4th, and 5th. The waves were very high, and the wind from northeast, at speed of seventy to eighty miles. It was a trying time. The waves came clear over the upper deck, but our gallant boat, one of the best that floats, the Campania, of the Cunard line, notwithstanding the storm, though we faced the wind, made ten miles per hour for one day and night. When the storm was at its highest point it put me in mind of the snow plows at work on some of our Western railroads. We plowed through the angry waves. We are grateful all is well.

ELGIN, Ill., Nov. 15.

Editors Herald:-I take this way of letting some of my friends know where I am and what I am doing. I just closed a series of meetings near Poplar Grove, Illinois, and came to Elgin to-day. An old brother by the name of Wm. Marshall, who is nearly eighty years old, walked more than six miles to services on Sunday. If the Saints everywhere would manifest such interest it would make the work of the Lord progress faster.

One lady is very near the kingdom. She says she wishes to read the Book of Mormon (and she has sent for one), and then she will be ready to enter the kingdom.

After attending the Janesville reunion, I in company with my father, went to Juneau county, Wisconsin, near Necedah, and, as well as visiting some relatives, held meetings in the schoolhouse where the Saints hold their Sunday-school and some of their branch meetings. Bro. Closson came over from Valley Junction, and assisted over one Sunday. Then father went to Plano, Illinois, his home, and I held some services in another schoolhouse, then started back towards Illinois, stopping at Madison over Sunday, and preaching for the Saints there. Then on to Oregon, stopping with Bro. Robinson's very pleasant family over one night, then to Evansville to visit the Saints and talk Sunday-school and Religio for one day. Then to Janesville over Sunday, and to spend a few days with Saints and old friends. Then to Poplar Grove, Illinois, where I held forth for a little while in a new opening, from which I expect to see results in the future.

I have some work before me here in Elgin. then must go towards home and get my winter clothes and overcost.

Your brother in the "conflict for truth." JEROME E. WILDERMUTH.

REGO, Ind., Nov. 14.

Dear Herald:-As stated at closing of last letter, on our arrival at Bro. Wynn's we circulated an appointment for Sunday morning, and commenced our preaching at night to a small crowd, and continued at Bro. Wynn's during the week, as we had no access to a public place for meeting. From every appearance the opposing power tried to freeze us out; but this was not very surprising to me, having the peculiar experience I did on the afternoon of the Sunday we commenced our work there; I felt very strange. Dark clouds hovered over me; all friends gone. The burden so heavy; our prominent and useful men falling at their posts, trials and sacrifices all over, gone to peaceful rest, earth's work done. As these things passed over me I became depressed. To the forest I went, to seek our God. My voice went up, the tears dripped down. I found a solace from God, a friend always in right doing. The scene changed, light came, and I entered into the work at night with good liberty in preaching. Brother Jenkins came to my assistance on Monday afternoon as before stated. We closed the following Sunday night, expecting to make further opportunities; but to my surprise, on Monday morning Bro. Wynn stepped into the room where I was packing my valise, and said: "Leave that alone; you are not going this morning. My wife is going to the creek to be baptized.'

Oh, my heart was made glad to know another good mother was entering the fold! So we gathered at the water's edge. We sang; and as I lifted my hand to offer prayer, the Spirit rested on the little assembly. This was another testimony to us of God's approval of baptism.

We announced meetings again, to commence at night. Bro. and Sr. Thomas Wheeler, of Galens, were in attendance over Sunday and until Tuesday. Their testimonies were very impressive, and did the outside people as well as the Saints good. Bro Jenkins and myself were labeled "de white by singing an old-time Methodist Episcopal trash," and I was the fellow who was paying Bro. Wynn a good price for my board to get the opportunity to preach this delusive doctrine to the people, and that we ought to be drummed out of the country. Well, such talk does not frighten me at all; and as I was of the opinion we had better remain so long as there was a prospect of doing good, we remained. Bro. Jenkins left for home on October 29, and I continued the meetings until November 3. I then went east of Corydon about five miles, to Charles Troncin's, and found him and wife still strong in the faith, though for some time now several miles away from the Saints. None of our elders had preached in this vicinity. But several people had said they would like to hear some one of us. Now was the time to give them an opportunity. We did not secure a public house, as some of the directors of the schools as well as teachers are more careful (?) about letting preachers have the houses than they are of managers of dog and magic lantern shows. So we took the next best thing. Bro. Troncin went to a saw mill close by, and carried some planks, and we seated his house. Sent out for the neighbors to come in and hear what we had to tell them of the grand message. By reason of having other appointments ahead, I only had time to deliver three sermons. Had good interest, and left there making them the promise to return in a week or ten days. One infidel with the rest made me the promise they would get a public place on my return, so we could have larger crowds. I left several glad for what they heard. I then came to Galena, where I stopped until Tuesday, November 12, holding three meetings there; then on to Rego, in Crange county, where I found Bro. Flyn. He had commenced meetings at this point on Saturday night previous. So, puting me into the work, he left for his home this morning, and I will continue here for several days, with several interested in the work, hoping they will enter into the work soon. More calls than we can fill. May God move the work.

Yours for truth,

T. J. BELL.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 7.

Editor Saints' Herald:-I am sorry the summer season is out for street-corner preaching and winter is at the door. Since about the middle of May I have done more street preaching than ever before, and I like it better than preaching in missions, for it is no trouble to get a crowd of from one to three or four hundred. The people manifested a splendid interest, and many times after preaching they kept me for an hour, talking over the gospel and answering their questions. I am glad that some of the ministers of this city have their eyes open to the truth, while others are saying much against my new doctrine, as they call it. One pastor said to another that I was a Norman horse in that new doctrine. He struck at us Saints, but he missed the mark; he meant Mormons, if you please. But it only serves to advertise my work here. I opened my meetings Protestant hymn. That was my church, once, Saints, so you see I know just how to sing a Methodist hymn to draw a crowd. I had good liberty every night, and some millionaires heard me preach; and one night while I was preaching on the west side Elder F. M. Sheehy stepped in the crowd and heard me. I did not know it till the next time I saw him. This was very cunning of him, indeed. That night the writer took for his text Isaiah 1:18.

City weather here in Chicago is getting quite cool for street work, so I have left the corners and will leave my series of meetings in the hands of Him who gives the increase. The good seed has been sown. I earnestly hope some who have heard the word may obey the gospel, and be baptized into the church and kingdom, Since General Conference seven have been baptized and quite a number by the white brethren, so the good work goes on. I have established a Bible study for Friday eve, each week, prayer meeting Wednesday eve, and preaching Sunday eve at eight p. m. Pray for us, brethren and sisters, that the colored Saints may have a good time this winter. I thank the dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad who have written me such encouraging letters about our race of people. May God bless all the white Saints in all the world, as we are all one in Christ.

Yours for the truth,

LIBERAL, Mo., Dec. 21.

Dear Herald:—I am having a wonderful meeting in the Spiritualists' building, the only place I could get in which to preach. I have been trying for two years to get started here. I never witnessed so much excitement in one town over a fat man's preaching. It is the talk in stores and on the streets. This is my second week. House full every night. The people call it "spook hall." I am alone so far as the preaching is concerned, still am not alone, as the Spirit of God has been with me in every prayer and in every sermon.

There are no Latter Day Saints in this place. This town was founded by G. H. Walser, an infidel, on these principles: No God; no Devil; no Holy Ghost; no saloons. For years they would not allow a Christian to settle in the town. From Infidelism it went into Spiritualism and Freeloveism. No saloons here until the Christian Churches came. Two churches here now and two saloons. Infidels, Spiritualists, ministers and all kinds of isms are out to hear. I visited the Christian preacher, and spent one half a day with him explaining our faith. He did not know the difference between our church and the Utah one. He was surprised in me believing in the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith. I never had as many false stories told about me and our work as went ahead of me to this place. Some of the members of the Christian Church said they did not want a polygamist preaching in their church; it would ruin their young members. But their young are coming to hear me and play the organ and do the singing. Some are attending who have not been inside of a church for thirty years.

While at Verdella, Dr. Miller and wife looked after my wearing apparel, so that I am furnished for the winter.

Infidelism and Spiritualism reached their zeniths long ago, and are below par now. Oh, how true that every doctrine that is not founded on truth will go down.

The first sermon I preached here an infidel Spiritualist asked some questions, but I scon settled him.

My wife has a broken arm, which has been broken for two months. The surgeon says it will be months yet before she can use it.

What the outcome of these meetings here will be, we do not know. Many are interested. I am hopeful of the angel's message. I know God's power is in this work.

I am domiciled with ex-Judge Miner, a Baptist, and his son-in-law, Fred Howard. I am nicely cared for.

Yours for truth,

F. C. KECK.

CLAY CROSS, Eng., Sept. 25.

Dear Brother Joseph Smith:—I take the pleasure of writing to you to tell you how and why I became a Latter Day Saint. A few years back I traveled a good lot about England and stopped and worked two or three times at Clay Cross, where I am now. During my first stay here, Bro. Simon Holmes' son, George Henry, and myself were friends; but he was not then in the church, nor myself, nor did I know anything about the Latter Day Saints.

I left and went to London, and there went on in the world as I had before, until July 1, 1900. I went to a great tent campaign meeting then being held in London, and there I heard the preacher, a Mr. Logan, from Glasgow, say at the close of the meeting, that all those who wanted to lead a better life should hold up their right hands. I was one among the number to hold up the right hand. He then invited us all to a part of the tent that was partitioned off. While there he asked me personally if I wanted to lead a better life. I told him I did. He told me to kneel down and ask God to forgive and save me, and on my leaving, told me to read and pray every day.

I did so till about five or six months after, I was reading John 3:5: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." That part of the verse greatly struck me, for I did not know how I had been born of water or the Spirit. Some whom I asked told me that water there meant words (the Bible). Not being satisfied with that, I prayed to God to show me. I bought two books on baptism, which stated it was not essential to salvation, but was only needed if a person felt led. I could not see it that way. Christ said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." However, I got with some people who baptized, and by that time I had seen that baptism was needed, but did not see the way just then. These people showed me Acts 2:38 and I applied for baptism. When I was baptized, they baptized in the name of Jesus Christ only, and they laid on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. After awhile I was reading Matthew 28:19: 'Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." I showed it to our leader, and he told me it was wrong, and was put in by the Roman Catholics; but from then I prayed to God that he would guide me to the truth.

I had an idea that Bro. Holmes believed in baptism. I wrote to him, and after awhile I came to Clay Cross and started work, but I found his belief was different from mine, and when asked where we got our authority from, I was done.

However, I investigated this latter-day work, but unknown to any here at first, as I fought very shy, but I found that the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints harmonized with the Scriptures. Still I did not quite give in till I had a talk with Bro. J. W. Rushton, who came over to the opening of the new chapel, and I was told to pray and ask God to show me if this were the true church of God or not. I prayed and fasted (I believed then in fasting), and while fasting I had a direct revelation from God that this is the truth. This was on Saturday, and I was baptized the following Wednesday evening, May 8, 1901, by Elder J. W. Rushton, and I have now a present testimony that this is the work of God, and I know that if I am faithful as the work is true, I shall hear the Master say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

I have had my trials, but I often think, when little trials and troubles appear, of the Scripture that runs like this: And these are they that have come up through great tribulation and have washed their robes.

Dear brother, I ask you to pray for me that I may ever be faithful unto the end, and that my wife will also see the truth and become a Latter Day Saint ere long.

The work is going ahead here. We had Bro. Kelley here lately for two days, and are expecting Bro. Griffiths here scon.

Your brother in Christ Jesus, G. W. J. POLLARD.

BURLINGTON, Iowa.

Editors Herald:-On learning of my appointment to labor in the Nauvoo district, there came to my mind the question: Why were you appointed to labor there, where once the church had flourished and had been so cruelly persecuted, also where so many of our earnest faithful brethren had lived and labored of Reorganization? I must confess that I could not answer these questions satisfactorily to my mind; but I remembered my covenant that I had made years ago, that wherever the Lord and his church directed my labors there I would be found doing what I could to advance the cause of truth and assist my brethren to hold aloft the ensign of our blessed Lord, and suffer martyrdom rather than see it trailed in the dust, without entering my protest and doing what I could to prevent it. I came here to answer to the call and appointment, trusting for the future to unfold the wisdom of the appointment, and answer satisfactorily to my mind, if to no others, the questions.

So far, as in every other mission I have tried to fill, can truly say am not sorry I came and labored here, and hope to see more evidence yet in the future of the wisdom directing in sending me here. In some ways this has been the most trying year in my ministerial experience; and with the trials, thanks be to God, has come to me additional virtue, enabling me to stand firm for the truth regardless of what others might say or do.

Am glad to be able to report notwithstanding there is much yet to be done by us here as a district, yet the spiritual horizon is not so dark to some as it has been, and they are coming more unitedly to the aid of the cause, and can see the silver lining, and are thereby made to rejoice in the truth. Indeed, we must expect that when such faithful men as our missionaries in charge of the work give directions in harmony with the law of life, and we do our part in seeing that their counsel is heeded (D. C. 118:3), good will come to the faithful.

The traveling elders will take notice that our church in Burlington is on corner of Twelfth and Locust streets, and that they have a standing invitation to call on us and preach for us when they can. Would like to know before hand when they will call, so we can publish the appointments.

In gospel bonds,

REDMOON, Okla., Nov. 23.

Editors Herald:—I am laboring in western Oklahoma, and have opened up the work in several new places where the gospel's sound has never been heard. The people are principally from Texas, and are very kind and hospitable, especially if they like you.

In the early part of the summer I assisted Bro. Hubert Case in a series of meetings at the Redmoon schoolhouse. Much prejudice was removed, and a much better feeling prevails in this community to-day towards the Latter Day Saints than previously existed. So far, two have accepted the work, and others are very near the kingdom. I opened up the work at the Croten schoolhouse, and made many friends, although was opposed by one Methodist brother, who thought he was doing a righteous act by telling the people we were all Utah Mormons. I had fine liberty of the Spirit in telling this community the gospel story. Left several who acknowledged to me I certainly preached the Bible, and that the Book of Mormon was certainly true.

Our reunion was a profitable one, I think, and many of the Saints were incited to higher and grander actions in life. I delivered several sermons at Manesse district, near Watonga. This is a good point, and more preaching should be had there.

I found the people of the Pie Flat neighborhood very willing to hear, and my first series of meetings caused many to open their eyes. To think that a Latter Day Saint could make things look so plain was rather strange; and then to know I had so much evidence at hand to prove our positions surprised them.

I preached at the Custer Bend schoolhouse ten times, and met some opposition. This is the point where General Custer fought one of his greatest fights with the Indians. I did not have as good a representation of people as I would like to have had; but those who came were pleased with the preaching. with the exception of a few. One Osborne, a school-teacher of this district, and a man of some note in the county, warned his scholars not to come out and hear me, as I taught doctrine worse than infidelity. My closing sermon brought him out, and he took notes during my discourse on Matthew 7:15-20. When I dismissed the audience he called them together again. He told them he wanted to tell them just who I was, and that I was one of the followers of old Joe Smith and Brigham Young, and also told them I was teaching them spurious doctrine. When he finished I showed him that he did not know what he was talking about, and that I did not recognize (nor the law of the church either) the exodus to the West by Brigham Young as a lawful move; and when he introduced heretical dectrines, he did it contrary to all known law to the church. When I read the law on such points, Osborne was very much confused and confessed his ignorance. I earnestly requested him to show the people where I had taught spurious doctrine, but this he failed to do. I looked for a rumpus. After it was over, some were much provoked at his insinuating and insulting remarks to me, and the audience showed sympathy toward me, and made remarks to the poor man that I surely would not appreciate had I been in his place.

I try to represent the gospel of Christ to the people in the Spirit of Christ. May the grand cause prosper, and may we all prove faithful to its requirements.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 23.

Editors Herald:-That your readers may know that the work is still moving onward in the interest of the restored gospel here, I send these lines. Our meetings of late have shown an improvement over the past, both in attendance and in spirituality. Not many accessions to the branch, but we believe the way is being paved for such in the future, if the Saints use wisdom and live their religion, so as to let their light shine as our Savior taught his disciples to do. On the evening of the 10th inst. R. R. Bigger, a Presbyterian minister of Wheeling, delivered to his congregation a lecture on "The origin, history, and dangers of Mormonism." Although some of our members live in the same block with him, and his congregation are many of them well acquainted with our members, he never stated in his lecture that there was such a church as the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, but tried hard to show that polygamy, Adam-God worship, and other doctrines peculiar to the Utah church, were synonomous with Mormonism. He reiterated the old Spalding story of the origin of the Book of Mormon, and in every way possible tried to throw disgrace on Joseph Smith. He was very brave before his own congregation, in telling them the "awful" things that threatened the country if something was not done to stop the spread of this great evil. He advocated the enactment of an amendment to the constitution to stamp out polygamy.

Bro. J. F. McDowell, who was in Ohio at the time, having been apprised of the nature of the lecture, forwarded a statement and challenge to debate to the papers here. When published the Reverend could not conceal his chagrin, but gave vent to many expressions unbecoming a minister of the gospel. These were given to a newspaper man for publication, and instead of helping him in his desire for the praises of the world, have already injured him more than he did us, in the estimation of candid, thinking people. Even of his own congregation there are many who do not approve his course.

His lecture afforded an excellent opportunity to get the use of the press to put our position properly before the people. This I did to the best of my ability in a rather lengthy article in one of the daily papers. And as Mr. Bigger stated to a reporter that, "I will not stoop so low" (as to debate with Bro. McDowell), and "I will not lower the dignity of my church," and other expressions of equal greatness of character, Bro. McDowell published another card to him in to-day's papers. What the outcome will be can not be foretold now, but one thing is certain, that if as is generally believed this lecture was given to injure our work here, it has fallen far short of the mark. Instead of injuring us it is proving an opportunity to get many people to properly understand our position that we could not have reached if nothing had been said against us. The truth has nothing to fear from such attacks when the servants of Christ are present to defend it. I feel encouraged with the outlook and am hopeful of the future.

Your brother in Christ,

O. J. TARY.

ASPIN, Wis., Nov. 4.

Dear Herald:—There is but one other family here, and hence it is somewhat lone-some to us. There are many Seventh-day Adventists, and I shall be glad to have instructions from some of our brethren concerning the sabbath question. I feel my weakness, but praise the Lord that I know the work is true. Two years ago last month I became a member of this church. Just think! Thirty-three years of serving the wicked one, and only two devoted to the Master. It is time I am doing something. I ask the prayers of the Saints, that I may be useful in this latter-day work. I praise God for his loving patience with me for so many years.

I wish Bro. D. S. Crawley were here, and would be pleased to have him give me some citations on the sabbath question. The last time I saw Bro. Crawley was at Bro. Stephen

A. Maloney's, four miles north of Prairie City, Indian Territory.

Pray for us, Saints.

Your brother,

J. E. FULKS.

WHITE-BRADEN DEBATE -NO. 4.

Braden's famous handbill of how he "annihilated Mormonism" came in for its share of airing. It says: "He [Braden] has done the faith more harm than any other man, living or dead." I confessed that such blowing as this is why I called Braden "Big Injun!"

I asked Braden, since he had done us up so badly as is noted in his handbill, would he please tell me how many Mormons he has converted to Campbellism? Please tell me one, and give me his name and postoffice address. I was unable to get this. Then I offered to furnish him the names and postoffice addresses of twenty Campbellites I had converted, and who were baptized into our church after debates with his elders, to one Mormon he had converted and baptized after his lectures and debates upon Mormonism. I dared Braden to attempt the count. This looks like a "bluff;" but had Braden dared to accept my offer, I was prepared for him. This was a "let down" in the right place.

You never know where Braden is going to light. He now pitches into the Book of Mormon, page 443: "And it came to pass that the Lord spoke unto them, saying, Arise and come forth unto me, that ye may thrust your hands into my side, and also that ye may feel the prints of the nails in my hands, and in my feet." Now, says Braden, you have it. Christ standing there like an idiot for not less than ten hours in the hot sun, till 2,500 people pass and put their fingers in his side and feet! He argued ten hours was the least time that could be awarded to that affair—and this alone was enough to condemn the Book. But that is one of Joe's big yarns.

I contended that two and one half hours was ample time to consummate that transaction, and even less time, were they a little expeditious. In proof of this I read from the Kansas City Journal for November 1, 1897, the following: "The body of Henry George lay in state, to-day in the Grand Central Palace, and 30,000 people reverently passed the casket and looked upon the face of the dead philosopher. From nine o'clock in the morning till three in the afternoon a stream of men, women, and children poured into the hall. . . . Two thousand of those who passed by Henry George were personally known. and it was these who lingered for a longer moment to gaze again on the face of the man whom to know was to love. Some of them wept. The children, of whom there were hundreds, were raised along by the guard and held up while they gazed at the features of the man who died fighting to brighten their lives. . . . At nine o'clock the doors opened and immediately several hundred persons, who were in waiting without, entered the hall with bowed heads. . . . For the first half hour the throng filing up the hall in twos passed at the rate of 1,500 an hour, but shortly the numbers swelled and grew until at one time eighty passed each minute. At this rate, 5,000 an hour. . . . For the last two hours the crowd came at the rate of 6,000 an hour."

I contended that it only took six hours for all of this mighty throng to pass. Two thousand of these were special friends to Mr. George, and they "lingered for a longer moment to gaze again on the face of the man." At this rate the two thousand five hundred of the Book of Mormon could have passed in much less than an hour: In place of this being a "big yarn" it is perfectly reasonable to any unprejudiced mind. Being forearmed I captured the case, and the "big yarn" was the one Braden told about it.

Now, that "darkness" found in the Book of Mormon! Yes, too dark for the finest kindling wood to burn! (Page 438.) "What balderdash!!" This three hours of darkness where they could "feel the vapor of darkness" faded away as did Braden's other "big yarns" when I read from the Bible: "And the Lord said unto Moses, stretch out thine hand toward heaven, that there may be darkness over the land of Egypt, even darkness which may be felt."-Ex. 10:21. Here I argued: That found in the Book of Mormon was the most reasonable, as it said "vapor of darkness," which Webster says is an elastic fluid rendered air form by heat, fume, steam. And the Book of Mormon says "the mists of darkness." We could easily understand how we could feel the damp "mist"-fog of darkness -steam, fume, etc. But we are a little puzzled how we could feel "darkness" as is read from the Bible without a single qualifying term as to its being a mist or vapor, etc. Now, if Braden will explain how the three days of darkness that is found in the Bible without any qualifying terms attached to it, could be "felt," I will feel under obligations to explain how the three hours of the "vapor"-"mist" of darkness of the Book of Mormon could be felt. There is one good, redeeming feature about Mr. Braden while in debate. When he is cornered, or beaten, he drops the subject at once.

But, now, through Joe's ignorance he has the Book of Mormon people keeping both the Lord's day and the Sabbath at the same time. (Page 255, large edition.) For the Lord's day, he reads Alma's account of how the "Zoramites had built synagogues, and that they did gather themselves together on one day of the week, which day they did call the day of the Lord." (Verse 87.) I showed from the verse 89 that this was not the Lord's day, as these very people that he accused of keeping that day rejected Christ in these words: "And also thou [God] hast made it known unto us that there shall be no Christ." This was altogether a different day from the one John the Divine spoke of in Revelation 1:10. Nowhere in the Book of Mormon could he find a statement to bolster up his allegation. Braden at once drops it.

Braden, the second time during the debate, tried to fasten polygamy upon Joseph Smith. This line of procedure was prominent during his lectures too. I paid but little attention to his "slush" along this line until he had introduced all of his witnesses. I then took the case in hand, and introduced as my first witness, Charles W. Wandell. Mr. Wandell prepared a series of letters upon the "Utah problem" and addressed them to the President of the United States. In one he says: "These monstrous doctrines are all included in a mock revelation of Brigham Young's, ascribed to Joseph Smith; but which has never been traced back to him; and, indeed can not be by any rule of evidence admissible in a court of law or equity."—Joseph Smith; Who was he? page 68.

This, I contended, was the difficulty with Braden's witnesses; they all fell short of the proof in every particular. Here I introduced Judge Philips' Temple Lot decision. In this Temple Lot suit, every stone that could be turned up to fasten polygamy upon Joseph Smith was turned. I understand Judge Philips said he had read more books, and devoted more time in making out his decision in this Temple Lot case, than he had in any other case that had ever been decided from his bench. His decision is, that Joseph Smith neither practiced nor taught polygamy; neither did he give the revelation on polygamy, that Braden, Brigham Young, Robinson, and the rest of the Utah contingents have so industriously sought to fasten upon him. Now, here is the decision of the highest court in our land, that says: Mr. Smith went to his death an innocent man, so far as this polygamist question is concerned. Now, ladies and gentlemen, I place before you this eminent Judge's decision, which was made carefully from evidence produced in court from Braden's own side of the case, with the opposing evidence of the Reorganization in favor of Joseph Smith's prophetic calling. Now I ask: Whose decision will you accept? Will you receive Braden's, who has made his decision wholly from one side testimony, and that principally from the slums of Utah? Or will you receive Judge Philips' decision, which was made after a careful reading and investigation of both sides of the question? Which?

This certainly raised the cloud that Braden had thrown over the character of Mr. Smith regarding his connection with polygamy. I struck Braden this same blow at the Alma debate, before his professors and students, and it went hard. I hardly expected to get the opportunity again to repeat it with him. But, he has his piece learned and it must be recited.

This reminds me of how I asked Brn. Roberts and Smith, when I first got on to the grounds of this Davis Chapel debate, if Braden said so and so, in his lectures? They both made the remark: "It is no use of us telling you what he said, as you know more about it now than we do." The fact is, I had met Braden so often that I had only to recite what I call "The Braden Alphabet," and I had it. If at any time our brethren are forced to meet Braden, if they will write me I will furnish them with this "alphabet;" it will greatly assist them in their work.

There was quite a breezy fight over Smith's way of organizing the church. Braden stoutly contended that Smith's apostles could not be successors to the New Testament apostles. After he had said his piece I admitted his contention, and denied that Smith ever taught that the apostles of his restored church were successors of the New Testament church apostles, in the way he put it. But I contended the church of the New Testament had successors in the apostleship. Christ first chose twelve. Afterwards Judas fell and Matthias was called to occupy his office; this alone meant the continuance of the apostolic office: it was the beginning of an apostolic succession. Paul and Barnabas afterwards followed in the line of apostolic succession. Later, along came Andronicus and Junia; also James, the Lord's brother. And on up till I had proven eighteen apostles in the New Testament church. Paul in Romans 11:13, says: "I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office." This proves that there was an apostolic "office" in the New Testament church. It is written of Judas in Acts 1:20: "Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and his bishopric let another take." Psalms 109:8, has it: "Let his days be few; and let another take his office." This is the office that Paul speaks of in Romans: and this is the office that Matthias succeeded to. I contended this order of things contipued until the church went into apostasv. And row, since Campbell and Smith claim a restoration of the church, there is of necessity a restoration of all the offices that were found in the primitive church. In the New Testament church, we have the bishop's and deacon's office. (1 Timothy 3: 1, 13.) Even our Campbellite brethren claim they have in their restored church that office; and can they claim that their bishops and deacons are successors to those that held that office in New Testament times? Certainly not. Yet, they have successors in that office now, When one man dies that has been acting as deacon-in the deacon's office-another man is chosen to act in the place he once occupied; this gives us a beginning of a succession in the deacon's office. With the same parity of reasoning the Latter Day Saints have successors in the apostolic office now. The church being restored through Mr. Smith, restored not only the deacon's and bishop's offices, but the apostle's and prophet's, and elder's offices too. And since these offices are restored, there are necessarily successors to these offices.

There can be no complete New Testament church without this order of things. In fact, Mr. Braden's own church teaches as much, whether they practice it or not. Mr. Campbell says in his Christian System, page 234: "We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things." The ancient order was, God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, etc. (1 Cor. 12:28.) Campbell says, we want the gospel sustained by this order. The meaning of the word sustained. Webster says is, upheld; maintained: supported. Now, this agrees with Paul's statement found in Ephesians 4:11. "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some pastors and teachers." The purpose of this is told in the next verse: "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." The length of time such an order as this was intended to remain in the church, is found in the next verse: "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." That this order of things remained with the New Testament church only as long as it remained faithful to Christ is admitted on all sides. But, when the church commenced to go into apostasy, disintegration set in, and this order of things gradually give way to the innovations of corrupt theology crowded into the church by unscrupulous men. To this Paul agrees in these words: "For I know this. that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock."-Acts 20: 29. To this agrees Braden's own church in the following caustic language: "The apostolic church was corrupted by contact with Judaism and Paganism in the third and fourth centuries. There was the curious amalgamation of Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity, resulting in the Roman Catholic Church, which abides to this day as mostly Pagan, less Jewish and only nominally Christians. That amalgamation changed vitally both the doctrine and government of the church as ordered by inspiration." - From an address read before the Minnesota Christian Ministerial Association, at Mankato, Minnesota, August 23, 1898, and by vote of the association ordered published. Published in Christian Evangelist, for Oct. 6,

Now, in the language of Elder A. W. Kokendoffer, one among the brighter lights in Campbell's movement, I aver: "By restoration we mean a complete return to apostolic doctrine and life as a model for the church of to-day, a reinstatement after a divine pattern."—Christian Evangelist for May 30, 1901.

What more could I say in favor of Mr. Smith's order of things is his restoration and organization of the church of the New Testament? I make the statement and defy successful contradiction, that Joseph Smith is the only man of this generation of all the reformers from Martin Luther on, that has produced a church that harmonizes with the New Testament pattern, as left by Christ and the apostles, as does his restored church, known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Here I rest my case.

I. N. WHITE.

INDIANAPOLIS, Indiana, Nov. 9, 1901. O. J. Tary:

Dear Sir:—I had no idea of entering into an argument with you—nor do I now intend to do so. But out of respect to a fellow mortal I ventured to call attention to a few facts by which Mormonism is forever condemned. And I assure you that I would make no assertion which I did not know the evidence would sustain.

For instance you are very bold in your denial of my statement that the first publications in the interests of your "Reorganized Church" admitted the complicity of Joseph Smith, "the prophet," in the introduction of polygamy.

Now, if you will procure vol. 1, no. 1, of 'The Latter Day Saints' Herald," the very first paper published by representative men in this Reorganized Church (Mormon), you will find [on] pages 8, 9, and 27, that Isaac Sheen, then third in the Presidency, states. editorially, that Joseph Smith "repented" of his connection with polygamy, and caused certain "revelations to be burned." Also explaining that the people came to Joseph "in an adultereus spirit," and that Joseph obtained an answer from God to their liking. But that Joseph Smith was "cut off"-that is, was killed, as a punishment for his part in securing the "revelations" on polygamy!! Isaac Sheen knew personally that it was useless to deny Joe's part in this iniquity and so apologized for it by stating that "the PROPHET" repented and that God "cut him off"!! A quotation is then given from Ezekiel to show that this was anciently God's way of punishing his prophets when they went astrav!

Verily, my young man, you do not know much about the dark side of Mormonism! And I am afraid you read your Bible very little. Because you argue that Paul did not and could not see Jesus Christ after he arose from the dead, when you ought to have known that Paul himself says—I Cor. 14:8—that he did "SEE" Jesus Christ after his resurrection! Not only so, but he says that he was the "last" one that did see him in that form, proving his resurrection. Of course many years after John the apostle saw Christ a second time; but this was not an appearance to a new witness to make an apostle out of him. Paul was the "last."

As to the fact, your so-called "inspired translations" have been changed since they were first published, so that where Christ was called "the eternal God," he is now called "the eternal Son of God," etc., etc., doubtless you could have the opportunity to verify for yourself. However, no church, not even the Roman Catholics, are so persistent in the denial of the facts of history as the Mormons are known to be.

If you are a good man, I would not offend you, but in all candor I must say that your letters to me give abundant evidence that you do not understand the subject about which you write.

Very kindly, yours for "the truth as it is in Christ Jesus," W. B. F. TREAT.

1114 Pleasant Street.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 23.

REV. W. B. F. TREAT, Indianapolis, Ind.

Dear Sir:—Since receiving your letter of the 9th inst. I have been so busy with other matters that I was not able to give your letter consideration sooner.

Your apparent interest in me would carry more weight, had you not written in such a malicious spirit in the past regarding the faith I have espoused and the people connected with the church of which I am a member. In some of your published articles you have impeached the honesty and integrity of all persons believing in the work of Joseph Smith. So in the light of these, together with your letters to me, I can not but believe that you write, not so much out of interest in me, but with a desire to conquer, and pose as victor in controversy, regardless of "the truth as it is in Christ Jesus." Your reference to first issue of the SAINTS' HER-ALD, while containing some truth, abounds in errors and false constructions. Isaac Sheen was never in the Presidency of the church at all. He was never in a situation to know what took place at Nauvoo about the time of the trouble there and the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He came into the church in Philadelphia only a little while before this, came west and settled in the eastern part of the county. He did not state editorially that Joseph Smith repented. This was a reprint from a communication of Isaac Sheen to the Saturday Evening Post of October 9, 1852.

In view of the fact that the accursed doctrine of polygamy had been advocated by one J. C. Bennett, who had been cut off from the church, and who afterward sought to obtain revenge by teaching that it originated with the leading men of the church, (yet they disfellowshipped him as soon as his evil became known to them,) and the later announcement of the imposter and apostate-Brigham Young-it is not strange that the idea should obtain among those who are not familiar with all the actions and teachings of the leader of the church during those dark days of persecution, that he had given sanction to some of those things that his enemies charged him with doing. And while it seems that Isaac Sheen shared that idea in 1852, fortunately for the church and her leader, time and the official teachings of Joseph that were on record, prove that position untenable. You might also have quoted from the same issue of the HERALD a statement in which Joseph Smith called the doctrine an accursed one, and stated that it was from the Devil. But of course this would not answer your purpose. Your adroitness in hiding all the good connected with the church, and Joseph Smith in particular, and trying to fasten upon them the evil deeds of their enemies, can hardly be excelled by the people who clamored for the blood of Chirst when they could prove no evil thing against him.

Your inspiration in your attacks against the truth bears evidence of having been drawn from one Clark Braden instead of from the teachings of Christ.

In the same issue of the HERALD that you quote from, page 22, William Marks relates a conversation had with Joseph Smith, only a few days before his death, in which he told William Marks that every exertion must be made to put down the accursed doctrine of polygamy. "He [Joseph] said that he would go before the congregation and proclaim against it, and I must go into the High Council, and he would prefer charges against those in transgression, and I must sever them from the church, unless they made ample satisfaction."

Now if Joseph Smith had in the least encouraged that doctrine, do you think he would have given such instructions as that? Do not jump at the conclusion that I have thus admitted that polygamy had obtained in the early days of the church, and argue from that that it was a doctrine of the church. When you consider that the church had in the short space of fourteen years grown to more than one hundred thousand members, it can not be considered strange if in that number there should be a few bad ones, and some who came into the church with bad motives, and afterward sought to carry out their evil desires, and in doing so, to clear themselves, laid the blame on the church. But, when the records show that as fast as that class of persons were discovered in the church they were cut off, it is decidedly unjust to charge the church with sanctioning such doctrines. In one of the parables put forth by Christ, he showed very clearly that the gospel net would catch some that were bad, and as a consequence they would have to be cast out. As well might you impeach Christ himself because Judas was a traitor. as to impeach the church in this age because there happened to be a few members of it that did not keep the laws of the church.

I have examined everything that I can obtain that bears any semblance to proof that Joseph Smith or the church during his life taught or practiced polygamy, and do not hesitate to say that the preponderance of evidence is against any such thing having ever received the sanction of either one. And if it could be proven it would no more prove that God had not called him to establish his church in this age of the world in fulfillment of ancient revelations, than the record of Abraham, David, and Solomon, proves that God never called them as his servants. God being unchangeable, polygamy must have been as abhorrent to him when practiced by David or Solomon as when practiced in any other age of the world. In fact, the Book of Mormon so declares, and shows clearly that no people can excuse themselves in following their example.

Now, sir, if you are so much interested in my welfare as you claim to be, and desire to convert me from a false religion, you will make much better headway if you stop trying to fasten guilt upon innocent people, and take up the Bible and show me where Alexander Campbell's claim to a restored Christianity harmonizes therewith. If the church had gone into apostasy, then the authority to act officially must have been taken from the earth. When you show me that Alexander Campbell "restored" the ancient order of the church, in organization, faith, and practice, then I will accept your faith, immaterial of what Joseph Smith or any one else taught or did not teach; but until such time as you do this, all your attacks on him, or the church organized in 1830, will prove of no avail toward weakening my faith in the true gospel as taught by Joseph Smith and his colaborers.

Your reference to 1 Corinthians 15:8, I do not deny. But the record does not show that this was to qualify Paul to become an apostle, but rather to confirm him in the faith. My belief is that this was after Paul was an apostle. My statement in previous letter had in mind the appearance of Christ to Paul on his way to Damascus, which is the only account on record of Christ appearing to Paul prior to his becoming an apostle. That appearance would as much qualify those journeying with Paul to be apostles as it did Paul, if being a witness of his resurrection was the essential qualification of an apostle.

As to there having been changes in the Inspired Translation of the Bible, I have not been able to find any such evidence, but have evidence to the contrary. But while we are on the subject of changes in the different translations of the Bible, did you ever read anything about Alexander Campbell "doctoring" a certain translation of the New Testament made by Drs. George Campbell, James Macknight, and Philip Doddridge? If you have not I refer you to the Christian Baptist, edited by A. Campbell, vol. 4, no. 1, for August 7, 1826. There is a statement from some one signing his name "A Friend to Truth," which says, "There are contained in it [New Testament] upwards of one thousand and five hundred variations from the translations of the learned doctors whose names are on the title-page, although numbers of our wise men in Kentucky imagine that we have it almost verbatim from these translators." Mr. Campbell in his comment on this says: "I have given six full verses of alterations from the translator of this epistle." (Hebrews.) So, in view of all this when compared with so small a change as you charge against the Inspired Translation since its first publication, I think you will have to admit that it argues more for the wisdom (to say nothing of inspiration) of Joseph Smith than it does for Alexander Campbell.

Wishing you no worse thing than that the scales of darkness that beclouded Paul's vision, might by the same power that gave him light be caused to fall from your eyes and you be permitted to behold "the truth as it is in Christ Jesus,"

I am very respectfully,
O. J. TARY.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

I know there is no error
In the great supernal plan,
And all things work together
For the final good of man.
And I know when my soul speeds onward
In its grand, eternal quest,
I shall cry as I look back earthward,
"Whatever is—is best."

THEY TWO.

They are left alone in the dear old home,
After so many years,
When the house was full of frolic and fun,
Of childish laughter and tears.
They are left alone! they two, once more,
Beginning life over again,
Just as they did in the days of yore,
Before they were nine or ten.

And the table is set for two these days;
The children went one by one,
Away from home on their separate ways,
When the childhood days were done.
How healthy, hungry they used to be!
What romping they used to do!
And mother—for weeping—can hardly see
To set the table for two.

They used to gather around the fire,
While some one would read aloud,
But whether at study or work or play,
'Twas a loving and merry crowd.
And now they are two that gather there
At evening to read or sew,
And it seems almost too much to bear,
When they think of the long ago.

Ah, well! ah, well! 'tis the way of the world!
Children stay but a little while,
And then the other scenes are whirled,
Where other homes beguile.
But it matters not how far they roam,
Their hearts are fond and true,
And there's never a home like the dear old

THE SENTENCE OF DEATH PRONOUNCED UPON THE REDEEMER.

The following is a copy of the most memorable judicial sentence which has ever been pronounced in the annals of the world:

"Sentence pronounced by Pontius Pilate, Intendant of the lower province of Lower Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death by the cross.

"In the seventeenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius, and on the 24th day of March, in the most holy Jerusalem, during the pontificate of Annas and Caiaphas, Pontius Pilate, Intendant of the province of Lower Galilee, sitting in judgment in the presidential seat of the Prætor, sentences Jesus of Nazareth to death on a cross, between two robbers, as the numerous and notorious testimonies of the people prove:

- "1. Jesus is a misleader.
- "2. He has excited the people to sedition.
- "3. He is an enemy to the laws.
- "4. He calls himself the Son of God.
- "5. He calls himself falsely the King of Israel.
- "6. He went into the Temple followed by a multitude carrying palms in their hands.
- "Order the centurion, Quintus Cornelius, to lead him to the place of execution.
- "Forbid all persons, rich or poor, to oppose the execution of Jesus.
- "The witnesses that signed the death of Jesus are:
  - "1. Daniel, Rabbi, Pharisee.
  - "2. Joannes, Rabbi.
  - "3. Raphael Rorobable.
  - "4. Capet, a citizen.

"Jesus to be taken out of Jerusalem through the gates of Tournes."

This sentence is engraved on a plate of brass in the Hebrew language, and on its sides are the following words: "A similar plate has been sent to each tribe." It was discovered in the year 1380, in the kingdom of Naples, in a search made for Roman antiquities, and remained there until it was found by the commissioner of arts in the French army in Italy. Up to the time of the campaign in Italy, it was preserved in the sacristy of the Carthusians, near Naples, where it was kept in a box of ebony. Since then the relic has been in the chapel of Casserta. The Carthusians obtained by petitions permission to keep the plates, which was an acknowledgment of the sacrifices which they made for the French army. The French translation was made literally by the members of the commission of arts. Denon had a facsimile of the plates engraved, which was bought by Lord Howard, on the sale of his cabinet, for 2,800f.

There is to be no historical doubt as to the authenticity of this. The reasons of the sentence correspond exactly with those in the gospel.

NOW.

"Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation."

This scripture is as true to-day as when God gave it to the world through his servant. It can never lose its truthfulness, neither can those who obey its teachings fail to receive its promised blessings.

Dear reader, did you ever realize that the now, or the present moment, is all the time we have?

"I don't see how you can make that out, Sr. Almira," say those who have not given much thought to the point in question.

The past moments of our lives, whether they are a few or many, are no longer ours. They are ours only as they were given, moment by moment. Neither are the acts of the past under our control, neither the acts of omission nor of commission. The greatest good arising therefrom, is in learning wisdom in consequence of failures or of successes.

A person of thought once said: "Time is so precious, God gives it to us moment by moment." Each moment is the now, and is all the time we have, and yet how much of it is squandered or lost in spite of God's plan!

The future is not ours, only as it is given by the moment, and then it will be now.

The scripture quoted in the first, applies not only to spiritual things, but to temporal as well. There are many nows that should be observed in regard to the care of our physical bodies, that they may properly develop and retain health and strength up to the threescore and ten.

It is every person's privilege and duty to study the laws of health, and also to observe them. Such a course will not only be a blessing to one's self, but a blessing to the generations to come.

The same principle governs the success of the teacher and the student; the success of the farmer, the mechanic, and the housewife. If you don't believe me, ask the man who is often obliged to wait for his dinner, and in consequence can not promptly attend to his business; can not make good use of the now, just because she did not. Possibly he might have been negligent in providing means adequate to his demands. How then?

It is every person's duty to be prompt and wise in his labors, whether they be manual or the preaching of the word. All are servants and should do all things as unto the Lord. Each is accountable for his negligence, and each will be rewarded according to his faithfulness.

If people while in youth could only embrace this idea, and follow it closely, many heart-aching troubles might have been escaped and much poverty, too; yes, and much condemnation.

We desire to live more in the now than has been our practice; that is, try to improve ourself by improving each moment's blessings, both spiritual and temporal, as they are given. Our plans may have been thwarted, our hopes blasted, but that is in the past. O God, help us to let it slumber in the past, and help us to firmly grasp the blessings of the present! Let our minds no longer be darkened by the lack of faith, but give us that faith that will take no denial. When we think of the great commotions among the nations of the earth; famine, war, and pestilential disease, we see that the hour of God's judgment has already commenced. It was by prophets foretold, and 'tis no longer in the future but it is in the now. Now is the time for every soul who wishes to be saved, to give his or her attention to the matter. No other time can be better than now. According to the state of affairs among the nations, it is time for the Saints of God to be up and doing with all their might. Now is the time to arise and put off every unclean, unholy thought, word, and deed, and put on the beautiful spotless garments of righteousness. Father, fill us with thy love, that we may do thy will while on earth. Riches can not save us, neither can poverty debar us from accepting thy blessed plan of salvation. For this privilege we give thanks!

It is twenty-nine years since we embraced the gospel of the kingdom, and there never was a time that it seemed more precious to us than to-day. 'Tis good to live in the light. 'Tis good to have a knowledge of God's requirements of his followers, and 'tis better to be obedient to the same. 'Obedience is better than sacrifice," even now.

ASSOCIATION WORK.

Some one has said that "the school in which the details are neglected is the one which will fail to a greater or less degree to accomplish the end for which the Sunday-school is conducted."

We query, How is it with convention work? While we write of details we desire to refer to the necessity of correct reports, indorsed by the schools, being sent to the district secretary on time, which should be two or three days prior to convention. As it is right to give report of Sunday-school district to the district conference from time to time, also to the association annually, it certainly is incumbent on the secretary to send complete records of work done in the district. The reading of superintendents' reports which give an idea of the condition of the schools is an important detail of convention work, which, together with the discussion of amendments and of questions brought out by experienced workers, including the keeping of class records, illustration of methods of class work, talks about pictures and blackboard work, about library books, lesson texts, the taking of notes by the delegates of the most helpful things in Bible study, of methods of organization and teaching and of spiritual impressions, of the brightest points and illustrations in the addresses, and of all the inspiring facts in the reports, all these are some of the details to be attended

There is also much benefit to be derived from heeding our several duties as workers in the association, as set forth in the constitution and by-laws. For instance: Under article 4, page 12, we read that the superintendents shall, "at meetings of the association, form classes, and illustrate the best methods of Sunday-school teaching."

To use the figure of the fountain and the well we have read about, the teacher should represent the well, we think: a well to which the pupil can go, and, putting forth his desires and efforts to learn, asks for and partakes of the source of information; while, on the other hand, if the teacher is like a fountain with its spray sprinkling everybody around, and that continuously, he is likely to dispense his prolific words over unappreciative heads, not reaching the listening ear. Such a thought as this may emanate from other than Latter Day Saint workers; but it may be a truth all the same.

One of the most important features of Sunday-school work is the Home Department. Bro. Hansen tells us there is a work to do in the homes, unknown by the world, or even by the Saints. He says "this is the grand and deeper side of the gospel, and the place we must occupy if we desire God's recognition." There is ample room given for all to work in the gospel; and we are used to hearing the admonition of the elders to "more thoroughly wean ourselves from the world, and draw closer to God in holiness and truth." It is well for us to heed these words of counsel from teachers of deep, spiritual experience.

Wherever our labors may be, whether in the church, school, or home, surely our service ought to be characterized by prayerfulness and sincere devotion.

We are pleased to note the achievements of the American Sunday-school Union, of which Bro. Gunsolley makes mention in his article on Home Department.

We can plainly see the good to be done in this; and it proves to us that there are many families in the districts which have not the advantage of attending Sunday-school. There is an ever-increasing work to be done in the district association. It shows also how farreaching the work can be, and what golden opportunities lie before us for reaping a rich reward if we embrace them.

It opens up a wide field of labor to the missionary, visiting committee, and officers of the association.

The Home Department is

as we read concerning the traveling ministry, it is sometimes "sorry diet to eat and poor accommodation" perhaps; but such sacrifice must insure success.

We were happy to read of Sr. Jennie Garr. a wide-awake Sunday-school secretary of Ogden, who approves highly of the work of a brother and sister in Utah who are keeping a home school, not having the advantage of a regular organized school. She believes there is work for all of us to do, and sends out the invitation, to apply to her, to any one in the district or mission "wanting help or who is willing to help." Is it not encouraging to see that our work is being planted even in obscure places? And does it not also appear to us that the schools and districts which are enjoying every advantage of organization should show an ever-increasing growth onward?

While writing about the Home Department we desire to make mention of the good done by the distribution of church literature. One may read the scriptures over and over again, but may never have conveyed to the mind the light and understanding that is expressed by some spiritual brother or sister in the columns of the church papers, Autumn Leaves, pamphlet, or tract.

On the 9th of September, 1892, a resolution was passed at the Independence district Sunday-school association convention providing for the appointment of with instruction to organize with a president, secretary, treasurer, to be located in Independence, with power to appoint five agents located there, and one or more agents in each branch of the district. The committee which was changed from time to time, but retaining the same secretary, was empowered "to draw on the treasury of the district association in order to defray the expense of making the distribution of literature," the boundaries in sending it forth being unlimited. The exchange was to meet prior to each convention and report to same. The secretary attended to the mailing and distributing from September, 1892, to March, 1901, 3,245 HERALDS, 6 025 Ensigns, 423 Hopes, 436 tracts, 27 copies of "Voice of Warning," 12 Autumn Leaves, 1 copy "With the Church in an Early Day," and 1 copy "Joseph Luff's Autobiography." Volumes 1 and 2, Church History, were donated to the Public Library in Independence and for which we received the thanks of the librarian, who stated that "the library is always open to donations of any good moral literature." This gives an idea of the work done in nine years, it having been commenced in just two years from the organization of the Independence Sunday-school district association in September, 1890. Most of the literature was collected in Independence, and was sent to every part of the States, and some of it to England and Yet, with this work done in days which might have been spent to less profit, for we have been encouraged to go on by the kind thanks of many of the ministry and friends abroad engaged in spreading the gospel, we ask ourselves if we have done all that we could in rolling on so noble a work.

THE LIBRARY WORK

of which our general secretary spoke so earnestly at the St. Louis reunion; and there is evidently a necessity for the supplying of our Sunday-school libraries with good books for pupils of all ages and every degree of development.

With so many advantages for improvement and so many means of spreading our work, may the Sunday-school association of our own and every other district be, as a brother expresses it, "monuments for great good;" and to attain such a standard, we know it can not be accomplished without a mighty and unceasing effort.

Let us not forget to be cheerful in our warfare in the cause of truth, that we may be joyous in our triumph.

PASTORAL.

To the Officers and Members of Northern Michigan District; Dear Brethren in Christ:—It having pleased the body at the late district conference at Whittemore to place upon us the oversight of the blessed Master's cause in this district, and knowing that we as ambassadors for Christ must answer to him for our stewardship, and feeling a deep and burning love to see the work of our Lawgiver progress "'till he come," we, your fellow workmen and servants, present to you in this epistle a plea, that while God is still regarding us as his people, that we may seek to occupy higher positions before him in righteousness. To this end, and that our dear brethren of the local ministry may be assisted and prepared to honorably and judiciously exercise the functions of their several offices in the holy priesthood, we pray to be permitted to offer the following suggestions as duties of officers, including elders, priests, teachers, and deacons:

Our great aim and object is to encourage right living, right doing, right thinking, until men shall have attained to a sufficient degree of moral and spiritual purity and excellence that happiness is the result. Then will Christ come and perfection reign. If we ever expect these conditions to obtain, we as ministers must exemplify, practically, the Christ-life. As husbandmen, we "must first be partakers of the fruit." It is therefore unseemly that men of God should indulge actions that would lessen their influence for good among the people, or in anywise lower the standard of the church of God. Inso-briety, boisterous speech or manner, loudness bordering on vulgarity, are ruts that detract from our influence for righteousness. We should maintain proper dignity and gravity in keeping with our high calling. Anything else is ill-becoming Christ's ministers. We are expected to exemplify the very character of Christ, so that the people seeing our good works may glorify God. Jesus could say, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," because he lived and acted as God lived and acted. Can we as ministers say, He that hath seen us hath seen our Master, because we are living as he lived? Unless we are sufficiently humble and sincere to command the respect and esteem of the peo-ple, they will lose confidence in us, and our counsel will not be effectual. They will have no faith in us or our prayers. We must live each principle of the gospel, that we may effectually teach it to others. The Lord's counsel in Doctrine and Covenants 119:3 on the subject of tobacco using is too clear and plain to be misunderstood. He says, "Men of God, . . . avoid the use of tobacco, and be of God, . . . avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example." Enough has been said and written upon this matter to fill volumes. Jesus said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" Brethren, be no longer in bondage to this belt. this habit.

A general outline of duties of ministers is given in Doctrine and Covenants 17:8, where we first are informed of what is to be expected of the elders. Among other duties he is to "teach, expound, exhort, baptize, and watch over the church," etc., "according to the commandments and revelations of God." Watching over the church as here stated would include those officers under him (if he be president), counseling and assisting with all wisdom and carefulness, that he may maintain their love and faithful cooperation.

Next we have the duties of priests, which are stated in specific terms. In addition to preaching, expounding, exhorting, etc., he is to "baptize, administer the sacrament, v sit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties," etc. This, brethren, is a command of God! It is very apparent that the matter of visiting the homes of the Saints has been neglected, in some branches, by the priests. He should visit as directed. and exhort to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to such family duties as morning and evening devotion around the family altar, offering thanks for daily food, when assembled to partake, etc.

oned to partake, etc.

The command to thus visit the Saints is as imperative as, "Ye must be born again."
There is no difference. There can be none.
Why do we not obey, as faithful Abraham or Lehi? Shall the church and we as officers suffer loss through disobedience and neglect?
As we view it, the priest should officially As we view it, the priest should officially visit the home of each member at least once in three months, to encourage members to higher life. Do you do so, brethren? If not, why not? Are you not a minister? Are you willing to rebel against Him who has called you to his kingdom? We think that none can afford to thus decide in the affirmative.

Then let us arise to duty, for we can not be sleeping soldiers. Visit the homes of the Saints, take God's Spirit with you, approach the subject of the domestic life of Saints, incidentally impress the necessity of attending to all these home duties, tell of benefits derived therefrom, and yet you do not need to permit them to know that you are talking for their express benefit, but the result will be for good, just the same.

Then we have the teacher's duty outlined, wherein it is stated that he shall watch over the church always, be with and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other, nor lying, back-biting, nor evil speak-See that the church meet together ing. often, and also see that all members do their duty, etc. He is to be assisted always in all his duties in the church by the deacons if occasion requires. It is apparent, brethren, that the plan is a perfect one. And if we serve faithfully in our several offices, perfection must ultimately ootain.

Remember the parable of the slothful servant who buried his talent, and magnify your calling. No man lighteth a candle and putteth is under a bushel. Let your light shine! Right here, permit us to cite you to the word of the Lord upon this matter: "Wherefore now, let every man learn his duty and act in the office in which he is appointed in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty, and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so, Amen."—D. C. 104: 44. It is particularly noticeable that we are admonished to "act" Otherin our offices, which means labor. wise we shall not be counted worthy to stand, or in other words, retain a license.

There is also a work for the members to perform. They should be humble, consistent Christians, always. Attend every means of grace, including all church services of whatever class. They should heed the counsel of those set in the church to watch over them, so far as it may be the counsel of the Spirit. Tithes and off-rings should be paid regularly, and as far as possible live at peace with all The Lord in Doctrine and Covenants 17:18 says "the members shall manifest before the church, and also before the elders by a godly walk and conversation that they are worthy [of sacrament], that there may be works and faith agreeable to the Holy Scriptures, walking in holiness before the Lord. If we do these, brethren, we shall never fall. We therefore pray God in your behalf, that you may be prepared to appear spotless before the judgment seat of Christ.

DIED.

HINDERKS .- Don Carlos, youngest child of Sr. Mary Hinderks, passed away at his home six miles north of Stewartsville, Missouri, on Friday, November 8, 1901. A fatal wound from the accidental discharge of a gun was the cause. Carlos was a dutiful boy aged 13 years, 11 months, 15 days. The widowed mother, a sister, and three brothers are deeply grief-stricken. The services were deeply grief-stricken. The services were held at the church on Sunday, November 10, at 10:30 a. m., in charge of Elder C. P. Faul; prayer by Elder J. W. Adams, the sermon by Elder J. M. Terry.

DUNCAN.—At his temporary home, Husted, Colorado, of pulmonary consumption, Bro. Charles B. Duncan. Deceased was born at Mirable, Missouri, May 8, 1863. June 12, 1892, he was married to Sr. May Baker. To them were born two children, the elder of which died in infancy. The other, a sweet little girl of four years, with her mother, survive him. He was baptized April 6, 1878, by Bro Gomer T. Griffiths; ordained a priest in 1887, an elder in 1890, and April 14, 1892, was ordained to the office of seventy. He has been actively engaged in the missionary work of the church since 1888, and has traveled quite extensively in Onio, West Virginia, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Colorado. He was under appointment to the Colorado mission at the time of his death. Funeral services were held at Colorado Springs, Tuesday forenoon, the 19th, in charge of A. B. Hanson; funeral sermon by J. B. Roush. At 2:35 p. m., Bro. Baker departed with the remains for Lebeck, Missouri, where they will be interred at the Saints' cemetery at Coal Hill. Just before death, he bore a strong testimony to the truth of the latter-day work. In Bro. Duncan the church has lost a valiant and able defender of the truth and a genial fellow-laborer; and while the tears of sympathy can not be re-pressed, we rejoice that the life that has gone out has gone, not to die, but to live on under higher and better conditions.

Morey.—Near Pleasanton, Iowa, Bro. David B., son of George and Sylvia Morey, November 14, 1901. He was born in Vermillion county, Indiana, September 11, 1830. In 1852, settled near what is now Pleasanton. In 1856 he married Sr. Deborah Rockwell, and to them were born twelve children, six of whom survive. Bro. Morey united with the Latter Day Saints when fourteen years old, and with the Reorganization in 1861; ordained a teacher in 1863, and a few years ago a priest. He was faithful to the end. Funeral sermon at Saints' church, Pieasanton, the 15th, by Elder Duncan Campbell.

WALKER.-Henry Albert Walker was born at Woodville, California, August 9, 1881; died at Tulare, California, October 29, 1901. He was baptized by Elder J. H. Lawn, June 19, 1891. Funeral discourse by Elder E. S. Burton. A widowed mother, five brothers, and four sisters mourn his departure. He died in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

Wetmore.—Bro. John Walter Wetmore was born in St. Johns, New Brunswick, in 1830; died November 9, 1901. Funeral services conducted at his home, 130 Howard avenue, Roxbury, Massachusetts, November 12, by Elder F. P. Busiel. Bro. Wetmore leaves wife, two sons, one daughter, one brother, and three sisters.

McCall -Grandma Margret Belle Mc-Call was born in Paisley, Scotland, October 12, 1802, and died near Dow City, Iowa, November 26, 1901. She was married to November 26, 1901. She was married to Daniel McCall in 1822. Bro. McCall died in 1851. Of eleven children born to them, four are living. Bro. and Sr. McCall were bap-tized into the church in an early day, and Randall, aged 5 years, 1 month, 10 days. Europul company by O. P. I month, 10 days. Funeral sermon by O. P. Sutherland. It is only fitting to say of these little boys, they were most beautiful and bright. They were to the heart-broken father and mother the brightest jewels earth can af-ford, and the little home, made so happy by their presence, is now sad and lonely.

PRATT.—October 24, 1901, Charles F. Pratt, at Crescent, Iowa, of facial cancer. Deceased was born in Abbeville county, South Carolina, October 19, 1824. Married Gabrilla Callahan, July 2, 1845. Served as a volunteer in Confederate army. Moved to Omaha in April, 1869; to Pottawattamic county, July of same year; became identified with the Reorganization in 1880. He was a long and patient sufferer. Funeral services from Cresent church, October 25, Elder D. R. Chambers preaching the sermon. A large concourse of friends followed the remains to the grave, six Union veterans bearing the body. May his rest be glorious.

THE STATUS OF RELIGION IN GERMANY.

Another factor which contributed strengthen religion was the radical change effected in convictions and sentiments. The political and national aims which had dominated the middle of the century had in the main been realized. The former disunion between the states had been succeeded by a powerful and progressive empire. But, as frequently happens in human life, the attainment of these ambitions soon revealed their numerous limitations. During the struggle for national unity large sections of the population were inspired by the conviction that a new and nobler life would begin upon the formation of the empire. But it soon became obvious that the outward successes which had been achieved had contributed nothing to the spiritual or inner life. Furthermore, a reaction against the ideals of modern culture now manifests itself among all civilized nations, and nowhere more conspicuously than in Germany. The new culture, as developed more particularly during the nineteenth century, endeavored to stimulate the powers of man and to give him a dominion over the forces of nature. To this extent it exerted an incalculable influence, and endowed life with greater variety, freedom, and mobility. At no previous period of history have the labors of man been exerted so successfully and upon so rich a field. Yet this has not always conduced to our inward welfare and to our happiness. The nineteenth century has frequently employed man as a mere tool of labor—a labor the ceaseless onward movement of which leaves no time for contemplation and quiet enjoyment. Inward culture, also, has been retarded in consequence of our incessant search for outward As soon as these defects became BUCCESSES. clearly visible, a pessimistic view of life naturally arose; and it is well known how widespread this spirit has become to-day among all civilized nations.

Now, although pessimism is not itself a phase of religion, it tends to destroy that complacency which is a dangerous foe of religion, thus preparing the way for the progress of the latter. The disappointments which the development of modern culture has produced have been instrumental in again awakening a susceptibility to religious influences. The great and complicated enterprises of our time also frequently reveal a painful absence of moral ideals; and herein lies still another reason for the greater prominence at present given to problems of morality. In Germany, as well as in other countries, a great change of conviction has been effected in this respect. Both the former epochs of German culture, the literary as well as the politico-national, treated the problem of morality optimistically; both be-lieved that the necessary moral strength would arise immediately from the actual labor of life; and both anticipated no difficult complications in this regard. Now, however, the moral problem has again risen in-dependently; and it has been demonstrated that the task of enlisting humanity in the cause of the truly good and great is not an easy one. Ethical training has again become imperative. Many hope for a strengthening of the moral nature by entirely dissolving the union between the latter and religion; while a far greater number, in Germany at least, expect results only from a revival and a reformation of religion.—Professor Rudolf Eucken in December Forum.

THE Chicago American of December 8, says:

The complete body of a gigantic prehistoric mammoth has been discovered inclosed in a glacier in far Northeastern Siberia. The Imperial Academy of Sciences, of St. Petersburg, has determined to secure the body entire. An expedition headed by Dr. Herz, of the Imperial Museum, is now on the spot endeavoring to secure the body. It is the greatest undertaking of the kind ever attempted.

The mammoth, a gigantic species of woolly extinct elephant, was found in a great bed of ice near the Beresowka River. The spot is three thousand miles by road and river from Irkutsk, the nearest place on the Trans-Siberian Railroad. The expedition left the latter place in the summer. According to the last report received by telegraph from Irkutsk the scientists had completed their tremendous journey and were engaged in excavating the body from its 100 000-year-old ice prison—a remarkable Christmas present to science.

BAPTISM.

IS IT AN ESSENTIAL TO SALVATION, AND IS IT FOR THE REMIS-SION OF SINS?

A REVIEW.

Not long since, a tract entitled "Baptism: Is it for the Remission of Sins?" was sent to Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, by Bro. J. F. Redfield, of Shenandoah, Iowa, with the request that it be reviewed in the HERALD.

The text is an old one, and it is with some hesitancy as to the method of treatment of the subject that we essay the effort.

The writer starts out by stating that he once listened to a street preacher, who, arguing upon the subject of baptism, quoted Acts 2:37, 38:

They were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?

And, the street preacher also quoted Acts 22:16:

And now, why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

Basing his criticism on these two texts, the writer of the tract writes:

Let us see how Paul by the Spirit of God answered a similar question. When the jailer at Philippi asked, What must I do to be saved? he was told: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."—Acts 16: 30, 31.

The comment of the writer of the tract is:

Why were the two answers so different? In the answer of Peter baptism seems to be an essential to salvation; in Paul's it forms no part of the answer to the question, although they were baptized after they believed.

The writer continues and urges that there is no contradiction in the two answers, which is correct; but he undertakes, unwisely, as we believe, to account for the difference in the two expressions by stating that the key to unravel the difference is found in the words of Paul, Galatians 2:7, 8, of which he says:

Here there are two gospels, one to the Jews, of which Peter was the special apostle, and the other to the Gentiles, of which Paul was the bearer.

This is very ingenious, but as equally faulty.

In the case of the preaching of the apostles on the day of Pentecost, Peter, standing with the eleven, preached Jesus as the Christ unto the multitude of them. There were not only Jews, devout men, out of the different nations, but there were strangers, Cretes and Arabians. The result of the effort made by Peter, coupled with the exhibition of spiritual manifestations, convinced a great many, and they believed. Then came the command to "repent and be baptized," followed by the statement,

Then they that gladly received his [Peter's] word were baptized.

The writer of the tract admits that in this case "it," baptism, seemed "to be an essential to salvation." It undoubtedly was.

In what particular does the case of the jailer and his house differ from this one of the day of Pentecost? In the latter the element of belief was present: those who asked what they should do were already believing. It was not necessary to charge them to believe, for they already believed. In the former, this element of belief was lacking. No previous preaching by Paul and Silas had informed the jailer and his house of the work upon which these disciples were engaged. The earthquake, the shaking of the jail, the bursting open of prison doors, the coolness and consideration of Paul and Silas for his safety and personal welfare bewildered and staggered the jailer, and convinced him that these prisoners were men of God." Under this conviction he appealed to them:

Sirs, what must I do to be saved? Then came Paul's command.

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ.

What follows in the narration shows that after the disciples, Paul and Silas, had opportunity, they preached to the jailer and his house, whether these were few or many, the result of which is stated thus in Acts 16:32, 33, 34:

And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

Why were these people baptized? The answer is clear. It was a part of the "word of the Lord," which Paul and Silas declared unto them, and was essential to their salvation.

The effort to smooth over an assumed difficulty by saying that there were "two gospels" is vain, and is an attempt to do precisely what the apostle Paul wrote of in the opening chapter of the Galatian letter to which this writer of the tract appeals in behalf of the idea that there are "two gospels," verses 7 and 8:

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you unto the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

The stress put by this writer upon there being two gospels, one "the gospel of the circumcision, the other the gospel of the uncircumcision," is misplaced, as may be seen by examining verse 9 of Galatians 2, following the citation of verse 7 as given by

And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.

That there was but one gospel, the gospel of Christ to both the Jew and the barbarian, though different messengers bore the message of life, is clear. Notice,

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.—Gal. 3: 27, 28.

To make two gospels of the one message is to distort the testimony of good old Simeon, who in the temple took the infant Jesus in his arms, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and said:

Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.—Luke 2: 29-32.

It is also a practical denial of the terms of the commission given to the disciples as found in Matthew 28:19, 20, and Mark 16:15, 16.

Further, such a position contradicts the statement made by Peter in Acts 10:34, 35:

Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

This Peter said after he had been convinced that he was to take the gospel to others besides the Jews, such conviction having been wrought within him by a vision. The lesson was enforced upon Peter by the giving of the Holy Ghost, after Peter had preached to Cornelius and his friends, as he was commanded to do.

And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.—Acts 10: 45-48.

The writer of the tract urges his of sins to be omitted by them in favor against which the tract writer objects; contention that Peter was the apostle of the "gospel of the circumcision" in the following manner:

Matthew 16: 19 informs us that the keys of the kingdom of heaven were committed to the Apostle Peter. Keys are for opening doors. Notice, the word keys is plural. Peter was entrusted with opening the doors to both Jew and Gentile.

It is worthy of note that the terms used by Peter on both occasions were alike. "Repent and be baptized," on the day of Pentecost, and, "He commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord," in Acts 10: 48.

What gospel was Peter preaching? According to this tract writer it was "the gospel of the circumcision," which he asserts was "repentance and baptism," and that this was the door into the kingdom for the Jew. This was the gospel of the circumcision, of which Peter was the special apostle.

This especial apostle, according to this tract writer, opened the door of the kingdom to both Jew and Gentile, making repentance and remission of sins the door to the Jew, and "faith the door into the kingdom for the Gentiles." He argues this from the statement of Ananias to Paul, on the one hand; and Peter's words to the centurion on the other.

Whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.—Acts 10: 43.

There is not another instance on record in the New Testament where the Holy Ghost was granted to the believers prior to their baptism except that of Saul of Tarsus; and from what is stated in the eleventh chapter it is clear that Peter himself did not underthat there were two gospels, one called the circumcision, the other the uncircumcision. It is there related how that when the apostles and brethren in Judea had learned that "the Gentiles had received the word of God," they took Peter to task for having gone to the uncircumcision. They knew of no distinction by which they as Jews were to be saved by one gospel, and the Gentiles by another, and they were of the same opinion that Peter had been before the convincing vision had been given. Hence they took Peter to task. He in his defense "rehearsed the matter from the beginning." And comparing the one situation with the other he said:

And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning.

Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, what was I, that I could withstand God?—Acts 11: 15, 17.

Not one word about a divergence, or difference of treatment, or a change in his mission, only that he was to carry the gospel to the Gentiles; that their mission conjointly lay in all the world to all men.

Nor were repentance and remission of sins to be omitted by them in favor of any people, or discrimination made against any. In proof of this note what followed:

When they [the apostles and brethren] heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.—Acts 11: 18.

Jesus had said some time before the things, sayings, and doings of the Acts of the Apostles had transpired, or were written, that "repentance and remission of sins" should be preached "in all the world beginning at Jerusalem." Hence, repentance and the consequent administration of the ordinance of baptism instituted by the Lord for the purpose of the remission of sins, is for us now, as for them to whom it was first given.

That the apostles comprehended that there was but the one gospel, and that efficacious for all, is further seen by this: That when the scattering took place about the time of the death of Stephen, some of them went to Phenice, Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only. "Some of them were of Cyprus and Cyrene, who," when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus. And the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.—Acts 11: 20, 21.

Paul was not with these disciples, notwithstanding he was, according to this tract, the special apostle to carry the message to the Gentiles. It was, however, in direct keeping with Paul's letter to the Romans.

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith.—Rom. 1: 16, 17.

This idea that Paul was the apostle of the "gospel of the uncircumcision" only or especially, is denied again by the statement of the Lord to Ananias:

Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel.

His first efforts in the gospel were made before the Jews in their synagogues. See Acts 9: 15-22. His mission was to the house of Israel as much as to the Gentiles.

This idea of the gospel of circumcision and the gospel of the uncircumcision, is a play upon words with a deceptive intent. The terms can mean nothing more than this, that to both classes the gospel was to go, and if Paul became more especially the apostle to work among the Gentiles, it was not for the reason that there was any difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message, but a difference in the message.

and is in harmony with the commission given by Jesus:

Go ve therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.-Matt. 28, and Mark 16, as before cited.

The question whether baptism is for the remission of sins is easily disposed of, if words mean anything.

Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.—Peter, Acts 2:38.

The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. . . John did bap-tize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sine -Mark 1:1.3.

And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance, for the remission of sins.-Luke 3: 3.

The baptism of John. Was it of heaven or

There is here not one hint of the gospel of circumcision, or the gospel of the uncircumcision, not one. It was then the gospel of the "Son of God." It must ever continue to be such. Paul called it "The gospel of Christ." And writing of it to the Ephesians wrote thus:

There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.—Eph. 4: 4-6.

There are not here two baptisms, one for the remission of sins, and one after sins are remitted; one for the Jew, another for the Gentile.

The tract writer quotes John 3: 5.

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God, and says of it

The water here it is contended, is baptism. But the Lord is speaking of the new birth, and baptism is a burial, not a birth.

This is quite new. We never heard the water in John 3:5 called baptism. It has always been called water, in all the contentions we have seen or heard. And it is very curious that this writer should have called baptism, as applied in this connection, a burial. But this writer forces this point by quoting the language of Jesus to the woman at the well, Whosoever shall drink of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life.-John 4: 14.

He also cites John 7: 37, 39, and adds:

No one contends that these two passages mean literal water.

No, we suppose not. For the meaning intended to be applied in the latter citation is specifically stated in

But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive.

In John 4:16, Jesus did not offer to give water of any kind to the woman, but evaded her request by saying,

"Go call thy husband," changing the current of conversation.

Let us now look at John 3: 5, again. It follows in the narrative that Jesus and John were at different places, both baptizing; Jesus in the land of Judea. with his disciples: John in Ænon near to Salem.

because there was much water there: and they came and were baptized.

The marginal reference at John 3:23 connects the statement there made with Matthew 3:5:

Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

It is evident that the conversation between Jesus and Nicodemus must have related to the work Jesus and John were doing, and John and Jesus and his disciples were teaching "baptism" "for the remission of sins." John 3: 22 states that Jesus was baptizing in Judea, as John was at Ænon; but this is qualified in John 4:3, in which it is stated that "Jesus baptized not, but his disciples." This, however, can make no difference in the Whatever controversy at issus. Jesus did by his disciples he did by himself. They as his agents carried on his work and were subject to his doctrine and policy, so that their baptism was his baptism. Some time back the tract writer quoted the commission given to Peter in Matthew

And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

This was quoted to confuse the mind of the reader in an effort to sustain the contention that Peter's mission was to open the door to the Jew and the Gentile. But he surely overlooked a much more specific and comprehensive statement made by the Savior in regard to the sphere of power of the twelve as a body:

Verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.-Matt. 18:18.

Further than this, it is stated by John that after the crucifixion he gave them the Spirit as a whole, and conferred on them jointly the powers needful for them to carry on their work.

As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained unto them. - John 20: 21-23.

After this followed the commission found stated in Matthew 28 and Mark 16.

Surely it will not be contended by this tract writer, nor any other, that the prerogative and privilege to remit sin to any one, or to refuse to remit it, at the will, caprice, or whim of each and every member of the twelve. was conferred by this language. If so, then belief nor unbelief, circumcision nor uncircumcision, being a Jew or a Gentile had anything to do with the effort to secure salvation on the part of the person so seeking: all he had to do was to secure the notice or favor of a disciple and his sins were remitted; if he failed in this, or roused the displeasure of a disciple, his sins were retained. If the first, he was saved; if the last he was damned. But, according to the commission in Mark 16, he that "believeth and is baptized," shall be saved. The element of belief is not named in the commission in Matthew 28; but the disciples were commanded to baptize the nations, i. e., the people.

The writer attempts by inference to mislead the reader at the outset by saying that the command given Saul of Tarsus, by Ananias, "and now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized. and wash away thy sins," and the answer of Peter on Pentecost Day, were not dictated by the Spirit. He wrote thus:

This [these quotations], at first sight seem conclusive, but let us see how Paul by the Spirit of God answered a similar question.

And then he cites the answer of Paul to the jailer. Acts 16:30, 31. Now it so happens that there is not a line in the story of this event, as given in Acts 16, that warrants the statement that Paul spoke by the Spirit of God in his reply to the jailer's question, any more than there is that he so spake by the Spirit of God when he cried with a loud voice. Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.

It was a circumstance in which Paul and Silas retained their self-possession, while the other prisoners were astonished and the jailer panicstricken; the rest of the story shows that the two disciples were only following the general tenor of this mission in what they said and did. The story of the event on Pentecost Day says:

They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.—Acts 2: 4. But Peter standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, etc.

In the case of Ananias and Saul of Tarsus, it is distinctly stated that the whole affair was supervised and arranged by the intervention of the Lord.

I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.

The Lord told him where to go, and that in the city it would be told him "what he must do." Ananias was visited by the Lord in a vision and told to go to Saul, for he was a chosen vessel. When Ananias went to Saul he told him:

Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared to thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me.

What followed is stated. See Acts 9:3-22.

Now, which has the better sanction of the Spirit of the Lord, these direct commands, Acts 2:33, 9:17, 18, as confirmed by the testimony of Paul as related by himself in Acts 22: 16?

The tract writer discourses thus:

One fruitful source of confusion in these days, is not distinguishing between the "gospel of the kingdom" and the "gospel of the grace of God."

Our comment upon this bit of convenient sophistry is, that a much more fruitful source of confusion is the persistent effort made by just such men as this writer to make a distinction where no difference exists, and avoid the conclusions which a strict adherence to the word of God would force upon them. To impose repentance and baptism for the remission of sins upon the Jews, as the door to the kingdom of God for them, and permit the Gentiles to come into the same kingdom without repentance, or baptism for the remission of sins, is to make a far too radical change in the operation of the gospel, even "the gospel of the grace of God." It puts too great a premium on being a Gentile; when Paul wrote:

What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way; chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God. . . . What then? are we better than they? in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin... Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference.

All are saved, if saved at all, by faith in Jesus Christ alone, including both Jew and Gentile, or all must through faith in Jesus Christ accede to the requirement to be baptized and receive remission of sins through that ordinance, or as a result of obedience thereto. Paul could have meant nothing more, nothing less than the above. Which is it? From what he wrote. as quoted by us heretofore in this article that "there is neither Jew nor Greek," etc., it is evident that the latter is the correct method.

Paul writing to the Hebrews, sixth chapter, made baptisms a part of the "doctrine of Christ." Jesus said, in the 7th of John:

My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me.—John 7: 16.

The same writer in his second epis-

He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son.

It is quite immaterial to the ques. tion at issue that Paul does not say a word about baptism "for the remission of sins." Nor is it conclusive against our contention that baptism is for the remission of sins and is therefore essential to salvation that Paul was sent or that he thanked God that he baptized none of the Corinthians "but Crispus and Gaius" and "the house-hold of Stephanus," "lest any should say I baptized in my own name." See 1 Corinthians 1: 14-16. He certainly baptized these mentioned. He also baptized at Ephesus, as stated in Acts 19: 1-7; and the Holy Ghost followed after. Hence, as the baptism of John was the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, Paul both taught and practiced it, when he taught the gospel of Jesus Christ, the doctrine of Christ.

Jesus certainly commanded baptism in the commission, and it was within the province of their commission, though they were sent to preach the gospel.

From all this we can see that the doctrine, the gospel of Christ, was the same to Jew and Greek, male and female, bond and free; that this gospel required baptism for the remission of sins, and was essential to salvation. The terms are not whatsoever Jew believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but in the universal sense, "Whosoever," "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved."

To this we add a few lines from Dean Stanley on the subject of baptism which will, we think, dispose of the objection made that the water referred to in John 3:5, that "baptism is a burial, not a birth." Jesus said, "Except a man be born of water," and not, "Except a man die, or be buried of water." He evidently knew better what he was intending to say than does our tract-writing brother.

We quote from Dean Stanley:

WHAT APOSTOLIC BAPTISM WAS.

What, then, was baptism in the Apostolic age? It coincided with the greatest religious change which the world had yet witnessed. Multitudes of men and women were seized with one common impulse, and abandoned, by the irresistible conviction of a day, an hour, a moment, their former habits, friends, associates, to be enrolled in a new society under the banner of a new faith. That new soclety was intended to be a society of "brothers" bound by ties closer than any earthly brotherhood—filled with life and energy such as fall to the lot of none but the most ardent enthusiasts, yet tempered by a moderation, a wisdom, and a holiness such as enthusiasts have rarely possessed. It was, moreover, a society swayed by the presence of men whose words even now cause the heart to burn, and by the recent recollections of One, whom "not seeing they loved with love unspeakable." Into this society they passed by an act as natural as it was expressive. The plunge into the bath of purification, long known among the Jewish nation as the symbol of a change of life, was still retained as the pledge of entrance into this new and universal communion-retained under the sanction of Him into whose name they were by that solemn rite "baptized." In that early age the scene of the transaction was either some deep wayside spring or well, as for the Ethiopian, or some rushing river, as the Jordan, or some vast, reservoir, as at Jericho or to preach the gospel, not to baptize; Jerusalem, whither, as in the Baths of Caracalla at Rome, the whole population resorted for swimming or washing. The water in those Eastern regions, so doubly significant of all that was pure and refreshing, closed over the heads of the converts, and they rose into the light of heaven, new and altered between the second of the converts. It was natural that on such an act were lavished all the figures which language could furnish to express the mighty change:

"Regeneration," "Illumination," "Burial,"
"Resurrection," "A new creation," "Forgiveness of sins," "Salvation." Well might the Apostle say, "Baptism doth even now save us," even had he left his statement in its unrestricted strength to express what in that age no one could misunderstand. But no less well was he led to add, as if with a prescience of coming evils, "Not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but—the answer of a good conscience towards God." . . .

ORIGIN AND SIGNIFICANCE OF THE ORDINANCE

1. As the Lord's Supper was founded by the Paschal Feast, and on the parting social meal, so baptism was founded on the Jewish -we may say the Oriental-custom, which, both in ancient and modern times, regards ablution, cleansing of the hands, the face and the person, at once as a means of health and as a sign of purity. Here, as elsewhere, the Founder of Christianity chose rather to sanctify and elevate what already existed, than to create and invent a new form for himself. Baptism is the oldest ceremonial ordinance that Christianity possesses; it is the only one which is inherited from Judaism. It is thus interesting as the only ordinance of the Christian church which equally belonged to the merciful Jesus and the austere John. Out of all the manifold religious practices of the ancient law—sacrifices, offerings, temple, tabernacle, scapegoat, sacred vestments, sacred trumpets—he chose this one alone; the most homely, the most universal, the most innocent of all. He might have chosen the peculiar Nazarite custom of the long tresses and the rigid abstinence by which Samson and Samuel and John had been dedicated to the service of the Lord. He did nothing of the sort. He might have continued the strange, painful, barbarous right of circumcision. He, or at least, his apostles, rejected it altogether. He might have chosen some elaborate ceremonial like the initiation into the old Egyptian and Grecian mysteries. He chose instead what every one could understand. He took what, at least in Eastern and Southern countries was the most delightful, the most ordinary, the most salutary, of social observ-

a. By choosing water and the use of the bath, he indicated one chief characteristic of the Christian religion. Whatever else the Christian was to be, Baptism—the use of water—showed that he was to be clean and pure, in body, soul and spirit; clean even in body. Cleanliness is a duty which some of the monastic communities of Christendom have despised, and some have even treated as a crime. But such was not the mind of Him who chose the washing with water for the prime ordinance of his followers. "Wash and be clean" was the prophet's admonition of old to the Syrian whom he sent to bathe in the River Jordan. . . . It was the text of the one only sermon by which a well-known geologist of this country was known to his generation. "Cleanliness next to godliness" was the maxim of the great religious prophet of England in the last century, John Wesley. Every time that we see the drops of water poured over the face of Baptism, they are signs to us of the cleanly habits which our Master prized when he founded the rite of Baptism, and when, by his own baptism in the sweet soft stream of the rapid Jordan, he blessed the element of water for use as the best and choicest of God's natural gifts to man, in his thirsty, weary, wayworn passage through the dust and heat of the

But the cleanness of the body was in world. this ordinance meant to indicate yet more strongly the perfect cleanness, sullied purity of the soul; or, as the English Baptismal Service quaintly expresses it, the mystical washing away of sin-that is, the washing, cleansing process that effaces dark spots of selfishness and passion in the human character, in which, by nature and by habit, they have been so deeply ingrained. "Associate the idea of sin with the idea of dirt," was a homely maxim of Keble. It indicates also that as the Christian heart must be bathed in an atmosphere of purity, so the Christian mind must be bathed in an atmosphere of truth, of love of truth, of perfect truthfulness, of transparent veracity and sincerity. What filthy, indecent talk or action is to the heart and affections, that a lie however white, a fraud however pious, is to the mind and conscience. Sir Isaac Newton is said by his friends to have had the whitest soul that they ever knew. That is the like-ness of a truly Christian soul as indicated by the old baptismal washing: the whiteness of purity, the clearness and transparency of

We think that we have shown clearly that the Christian economy to-day, is but a continuance of that introduced by Jesus and continued to be taught by his disciples and should be taught and practiced now.

HOODLUMISM. WHO WERE THEY?

The Deserte Semi-Weekly News, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for November 28, present year, has under the head of "Results of Opposition," a letter or report to the paper from Elders Wm. W. Perkins and B. C. Grainger, written from Blue Mound, Linn County, Kansas. After stating that they were appointed to labor in Linn County, and that they began their work at Mound City, the county-seat, they wrote:

After leaving there, we went into the country, where we have access to most of the schoolhouses. At one schoolhouse, while holding a series of meetings, a Josephite elder asked the privilege of asking a few questions, which was granted him. We answered him and he then arose and began villifying the "followers of Brigham Young." He told the people that the "Mormons" in Utah were still practicing polygamy. We continued our meetings, and the following Sunday night he came back, bringing with him seven or or eight hoodlums, with the intention of breaking up our meeting. During our meeting they disturbed us a little by throwing rocks on the building. At the close of our meeting he came in and called the people to order and began as he had done the previous night, but was promptly siezed by half a dozen young men, the constable being one of them, and was thrown out of doors and warned not to come back again, and judging from the way he left, we do not believe he

We sincerely hope that this report about the disturbance of the meetings of Elders Perkins and Grainger is a mistake: and that those who committed the acts complained of are not members of the Reorganized Church, or "Josephites," as the report calls them. Such acts are not only unlawful for citizens to do, but are extremely reprehensible in members of any church, and especially so in "Josephites."

There is absolutely no excuse for the elders of the Reorganized Church engaging in such work.

The doctrines of the church in Utah, with its history, are matters of interest to any and all who may choose to inquire concerning them, and are, so far as made known, subjects of proper inquiry upon the part of all, whether for reasons of favoring or disapproving either, one, or all items of faith, or facts of history. The claims made by that church are presented by themselves to the public, and are subject to examination by those friendly to the church or unfriendly to it. And when such examination is made in a fair and manly way, the Utah people ought not and can not in justice object. Elders of the Reorganized or "Josephite" Church, are not authorized to undertake an examination of what they may term "heresies," or "false doctrines," in improper or dishonorable ways, or in any way resort to disreputable, vicious, or violent measures, in their disputation of controverted points of difference between the two

We distinctly disavow fellowship with, or approval of, such procedure as is complained of by Elders Perkins and Grainger. Those who did the acts referred to are censurable, and the acts should be denounced by the citizens, members of the church included, as despicable.

The HERALD has repeatedly denounced such conduct when our own elders have been assailed in a similar fashion: and we see no reason why such hoodlumism is any more reputable when committed by elders or members of the church, than it would be when done by those of other beliefs, or of no belief. Indeed, to us such conduct in members of the Reorganized Church is worse and more to be spoken against and condemned than it is in others, for the reason that our people should know and do We condemn such conduct as better. being without justifiable excuse, no matter who may do it.

inquiry and see that the offenders be made to answer for their evil conduct, if the charge made against our membership be found to be correct.

THE News, of Batavia, Illinois, for November 21, contains a write up of the Challenge Wind and Feed Mill Company. Speaking of the gasoline engine department of the company, the article says:

In introducing the Challenge Gasoline Engine, this company believes it is offering to the public an engine without a peer. ideas embodied in its construction originated with Mr. J. B. Rodger, a thoroughly practical and skillful engineer and machinist, and the favor with which the engine is being received by a critical public is all the indorsement required.

Bro. Rodger is well known to many Lamoni Saints, having lived here for many years. He is also known to others of the Saints. He is a son of Elder Glaud Rodger, who was for some years a missionary to Australia, and who died while doing missionary work in Montana.

We congratulate Bro. Rodger on the success he is having as a machinist.

In the Deseret Semi-Weekly News for December 2, in news items from Franklin, Idaho, it states that Thanksgiving Day "was observed in a becoming manner." An outline of the program is given, and then the item states:

The bishop announced the Thanksgiving dance in the meeting-house would be the last dance given in that house. The new amusement-house will be ready in a week. It is a fine hall, well seated. The scenery for theatrical purposes is now being painted.

The dance seems to play quite a rôle in religious celebrations of the Utah church.

PRESBYTERIAN CREED REVISION.

The following from the Philadelphia Record for November 28, sent us by Bro. LaRue, shows somewhat of the progress of creed revision by the Presbyterian Church:

Washington, D. C., Nov. 27.—Members of a section of the committee of twenty ap-pointed to consider a revision of Creed of the Presbyterian Church assembled here to-day and probably will hold their first session tomorrow. Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson, of the McCormick Theological Seminary, at Chicago, will preside as chairman of the section.

Others who have arrived are Rev. Dr. S. P. Sprecher, of Cleveland; Rev. Dr. Minton, moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly and chairman of the entire committee, and Rev. Dr. John Dewitt, of Princeton. N

Justice Harlan, of the United States Supreme Court, who also is a member, conferred with Dr. Johnson on the work of the committee to-day. The section will hold three sessions daily until next Wednesday, when the full committee will meet.

The section now here will prepare a new statement of faith, which will be brief and

The card was gotten up by Brn. Edward Rannie and I. Sylvester for the purpose of aiding me in city work, and must have been sert to you by Bro. Rannie. This is the work he is doing that I referred to in my letter found in HERALD of 27th ultimo. I make this statement in justice to Brn. Rannie and Sylvester, and because I do not enjoy credit that does not justly belong to me. Yours in bonds,

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. W. E. LaRue writes from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, December 2:

Our opening was a complete success in every way. Bro. Pitt acquitted himself in his usual pleasing manner, both in preaching and singing. He preached the opening sermon in the morning, I followed at three p. m., and we turned Bro. Robley loose on the large congregation that assembled at the evening hour, and he gave us a good one that brought forth good comment. Bishop Kelley, we regret, was called suddenly away. All were delighted with the prospect of having him with us, so were somewhat disappointed. Five of the papers here made favorable mention of our work last week. I was interviewed yesterday by reporters of three papers, each paper having a circula-tion of over two hundred thousand. The Saints are delighted, as they say our work was never represented in papers here cor-rectly until recently. It does good in many ways.

Sr. Julia Talley, of Independence. Missouri, writes December 4:

Bro. Joseph Luff preached a fine sermon Sunday morning, and Bro. Garrett one in the evening.

Sr. A. A. Horton writes from Independence, November 30:

There were about one hundred fifty Saints out on Thanksgiving morning to hear I. N. White; and we had a very enjoyable service. Brother White preached a short sermon; but it was an excellent one. In the afternoon was Brother Clark's funeral; the sermon was preached by President Hulmes, and was reported. There was a large attendance. There is considerable fear among some of the people here and in Kansas City, on account of the prevalence of scarlet fever. Several of our people have recovered from the smallpox, and others are at present in quarantine. The weather is all that could be desired; sunshiny, warm, with now and then a breath of balmy coolness; but sans leaves, sans flowers, sans flowery fragrance, sans everything, except of what presages the coming of old Winter.

Bro. Peter Anderson, writing from Butte, Montana, December 4:

Things are brightening up all through this mission field. I have had a very satisfactory trip of two months, or more, through Idaho and Montana, and am now on my way to Utah to labor for a while.

He also sends a number of clippings from the Philadelphia papers, in which the exercises are The chapel was opened mentioned. Sunday, December 1. LaRue is willing and anxious to "debate on the subject of polygamy with the Mormon missionaries in Philadelphia." The Record and the Inquirer also state clearly that there is no connection whatever between us The Public and the Utah church. Ledger, of the 2d, contains a fair notice of the exercises, and prints a portrait of Bro. LaRue. It also calls attention to the fact that we are antipolygamists, speaking of us as being 'alert and active enemies" of polygamy.

On December 3, Dodd, Mead and Company, of New York, paid $1.925 for a very rare edition of Shakespeare's "The Rape of Lucrece." The book is 12-mo, bound in full green crushed morocco, and was printed in London, in 1624, by Bradstreet. The price is said to be a record one.

Natural gas has been struck near Brigham, Utah. The well is a gusher, maintaining a stream of water twenty feet high. It is believed there is an unlimited supply of gas near that city. The present supply of gas and water was struck at a depth of two hundred feet.

ABSOLUTION.

"ABSOLVO TE; PAX TE CUM."

Who has authority as an agent of Jesus Christ to forgive our sins? How may we know that God has remitted our sins, beyond any doubt or imagination in our minds?

I, the Lord, forgiveth sins unto those who confess their sins before me, and ask forgiveness, who have not sinned unto death."—D. C. 64:2.

And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock [the revelation that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God) I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.—Matt. 16: 18-20.

After the resurrection, the Lord said,

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. - Matt. 28: 17.

In John 20:21-23, is this story:

Then said Jesus to them [his disciples] again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he bad said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost: Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained.

He said this after he had won the victory over the environments of the flesh, and had achieved the triumph over the adversary of souls, and could control and command all the forces of life, spiritual and temporal.

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matt. 28: 18-20.

This old world is not ended yet, and still I ask, where rests the authority to remit sins to day?

And, behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed; and Jesus, knowing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee: go thy way and sin no more. And, behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth. And Jesus, knowing their thoughts, said, Wherefore is it that ye think evil in your hearts? For is it not easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee, than to say, Arise and walk. But I said this that ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to for-give sins. Then Jesus said unto the sick of the palsy, Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thy house. And he immediately arose, and departed to his house. But when the multitude saw it, they marveled and glorified God, who had given such power unto men.-Matt. 9: 2-9, I. T.

When men have such power, it might well be expected that they should heal the sick, cast out devils, etc. Christ is the pattern. If any one have power on earth to forgive sins let him make it evident by healing the body as well as the soul. course Christ did not heal everybody he came in contact with, because everybody did not have the right faith in him. Neither were everyone's sins remitted, because all had not properly repented. Since God is unchangeable, we would expect him to do likewise to day.

When a person is baptized by one having been commissioned of Jesus Christ to thus officiate, that person having complied with the requirements of the doctrine of faith, and repentance, his sins are remitted.

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.— Mark 1:4, 5.

To whom did they confess? Did John have a confessional set up out there on the river bank; or did they confess to God, having a conscience void of offense toward any man?

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2:38,39

The clause, "and to all that are afar off," includes us of to-day; and as evidence that our sins are remitted we should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, which would be manifest in our possessing some or all of the nine spiritual gifts described in the first fourteen verses of first Corinthians. Look it up.

Ananias, a devout man according to the law, in closing his exhortation to

Paul, said:

For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.—Acts 22: 15, 16.

When we find a man who is truly "called of God as was Aaron," baptizing, we will find him doing it in the correct manner. Hebrew, infidel, and Christian historians relate that the only mode practiced during the first two centuries was immersion. Eusebius, (in book 6, chapter 26,) says the first sprinkling was done in the third century, about 260, the candidate being a man named Novatus, and from this event is derived the word, innovation, meaning change, something What right had those fellows back there to change the plan taught by Jesus, and then expect God to ratify it in heaven, and forgive the sins? Shall men make a way and compel God to bend to it? I question the validity of all such acts.

An individual may be immersed according to the correct form, without the one officiating having received authority from heaven. In that case the recipient would be like the twelve men described in Acts 19:1–7. (not receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost, whereby they could speak in tongues, prophesy, etc.,) and he would necessarily have to be baptized by one representing Jesus Christ, if he wanted to receive evidence from God that his sins were remitted beyond a doubt and in fact.

Sixty years after Christ, James, a servant of God, gives instruction in case of sickness, as follows:

Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Confess your faults one to another, and pray for one another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much.—James 5: 13-16.

This thing can not be done without superhuman power. Is not that the reason why some professed Christians hesitate in advancing the thought? Suppose some of the popular preachers of our land were called into a sick room in compliance with the above scripture, and they should administer as directed, the sick one becoming worse and finally having to resort to a doctor. What evidence would the sick one have that his sins were forgiven?

When a man stands forth to represent God, he must have something more than enthusiasm, zeal, imagination, or superstition, something more than a diploma from a college or a license from a synod, presbytery, or general conference. Men can not confer authority to give absolution; neither can men heal like the apostles and Christ did without the power they had

Speaking of repentance, Isaiah, in 1:16, says:

Wash ye, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil.

Also Isajah 55: 7:

Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

Concerning forgiveness, we have the following:

And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any; that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.—Mark 11: 25, 26.

Take heed to yourselves: If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him.—Luke 17: 3, 4.

And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.—Ephesians 4:32.

Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.—Colossians 3: 13.

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you.—Matt. 6: 12, 15, 14.

The voice of the Lord is recorded as saying to Alma, who had been instrumental in baptizing some hundreds, and about one hundred years before Christ, had established a church on this continent:

Whosoever transgresseth against me, him shall ye judge according to the sins which he has committed, and if he confess his sins before thee and me, and repenteth in the sincerity of his heart, him shall ye forgive, and I will forgive him also; yea, and as often as my people repent, will I forgive them their trespasses against me. And ye shall also forgive one another your trespasses: for verily I say unto you, he that forgiveth not his neighbor's trespasses, when that he says he repents, the same hath brought himself under condemnation. Now I say unto you go; and whosoever will not repent of his sins, the same shall not be numbered among my people: and this shall be observed from this time forward.—Mosiah 11:16, Book of Mormon.

Christ is recorded as saying after his resurrection:

And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.—Luke 24:46, 47.

Repentance is necessary to obtain a forgiveness of sins. Acts 3:19:

Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord.

Brethren, in consideration of the foregoing, let us with courageous hearts be catholic in the administration of the word. The apostles of Christ always look beyond the present. They see ultimate victory. Let us all be ambitious of doing great things, noble things, true and good things, for Christ's cause.

Arouse to action the potencies of your souls, and those faculties of observation and reason which God has implanted in your natures, and work for him and his church. Do not hesitate in executing the policy outlined in your baptismal covenant. Lay hold on the facilities for advancement opening to you.

We need just as much, or more, evidence of the authority of those who claim to be ambassadors for Christ, now, as was given to his followers in the first centuries of the Christian era, because there is as much or more religious confusion and uncertainty regarding the right to represent God. Who will occupy till the Master comes?

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY.

Apropos of the internecine strife within, invaders from without and the problematical duration and end of the dangers which threaten the unhappy Chinese government, it is interesting to examine a small book of prophecies written in 1732 by an old Dutch hermit, many of whose auguries coincide so exactly with events which have since transpired as to raise the query, "Are such things merely coincidences or have their authors the gift of 'second sight,' or prophecy?"

Among other presages of this alleged soothsayer, nearly all of which have been exactly fulfilled, were the death of Pope Pio Nono, the career and death of Robespierre, of Richelieu, Napoleon, Garibaldi, and Bismarck; the birth, reign, and death of Queen Victoria and Emperor William; the Franco Prussian, Crimean, and other wars; the birth and progress of the United States government; the present disturbances in and array of nations against China; a second, more serious, Chinese war; an alliance of the powers against Russia, ending in her downfall and complete humiliation; the rapid civilization, progress, and eventual supremacy of China throughout Asia and part of Europe.

He foretold the invention of the steam engine, electric, gas, air and solar motors, steamboat, telegraph, submarine cable and telephone; aerial and submarine navigation, an electric gun, the military range-finder, harnessing of Niagara Falls, invention of the harvester, threshing machine, and various other implements, and chemical processes which were then unknown. Among engineering feats he mentions the bridging of Behring strait, separation of North and South America by a wide, deep channel (or canal); the Eiffel tower and others yet higher; underground and elevated railways; aide and wave motors, etc.

He also predicted the subjugation of India; the change of Canada into a provincial dependency of Great Britain; united Italy; united Germany and the dreibund, as well as the Boer war in South Africa.

I quote from the prophet's little book (an English translation published in London in 1793) as follows:

"A mighty nation shall arise out of the western sea...a bright star above the political horizon; ... in the name of liberty severing parental ties binding it to Europe; . . . waxing great, and shining with the light of freedom's lamp; . . . until the wisdom of its statesmen, the knowledge of its wise men, and the fame of its glory shall be heralded throughout the world. . . . But, alas! the home of the children of liberty shall become a land of bondage, . . . and her sons shall become traffickers in men and women, and shall buy and sell their dark-faced brethren to become slaves and bondmen. . . . Wherefore peace and contentment shall not longer abide with them, and their glory shall depart from them, . . . and a mighty conflict shall be waged, brother armed against brother, and father against son. . . . And, after a third of ten years, the bond shall be made free, . . but a great and wise ruler shall lav his life a sacrifice on the altar of their liberty. . . . And, after a half of ten years peace shall come again."

The prophecy goes on to say, in substance, that the new nation "shall increase in power and grandeur rivaling ancient Rome in her days of greatest pomp and glory;" that fabulous fortunes shall be amassed by individuals; that capital shall combine into trusts, and labor into unions; that strikes shall occur, that the red man shall be deprived of his land, and gradually and peacefully be exterminated by civilization; that the "island possessions of the Spaniard, east and west, shall be wrested from him and his insolence and cruelty chastised;" that a religious war shall be waged against the "yellow heaten;" that "their false gods shall be broken and tramped under foot, and the religion of the cross shall prevail for a time;" that "the swords of the nations shall be turned against Russia, and her own children shall arm and rise against her."

That the "slant eyed heaten of China shall wax great in knowledge and power, . . . and shall regain their confiscated possessions; . . . and they shall become renowned for their wisdom and justice, industry, wealth, and learning. . . Their empire shall be divided into a number of practically independent peoples, each speaking its own proper and separate language, . . . but subject to a supreme central government, in all peaceful submission and willing obedience."

The prophecy continues to the effect that, through the wisdom of her statesmen, China's power among the nations shall become as great as "her fame for toleration, liberality, progressiveness," etc.

The seer predicts a mighty struggle between labor and capital in the United States and Europe, which he designates as the "Krieg zwischen Werk und Wohlstand" (war between work and wealth), and which, he declares, will result in a complete revolution of the social and political systems of the world; government ownership of valuable franchises, etc., being among the desirable changes effected. The meaning of the prophet is not remarkably clear upon this subject, however.

Notwithstanding the apparent anomaly of a hundred thousand (moderately estimated) soothsayers, sorcerers, fortune tellers, and others of that ilk engaged in the United States alone, in the practice of their lucrative profession, their day is past in all enlightened countries; still, occasionally, their predictions-propheauguries, warnings, shrewd guesses, call them what you will-are so directly in line with actual future occurrences as to furnish abundant food for speculation, at least, if not for the deepest thought and reflection.

What an irony of fate, perversity of destiny, and, withal, what fun for the man in the moon and the fellow in Mars—to say nothing of the source of satisfaction 'twould be to us under dogs in the present fight—should the yet unfulfilled auguries of this old Dutchman prove him to have been as good a guesser as he was with regard to those which have already "come true" in the time that has slipped into the past and taken their places on the pages of history.

The old hermit already has an enviable reputation among dealers in long-distance futures, and nine years more will either confirm or destroy it, as all his prophecies were to be fulfilled within half a hundred years after the beginning of the late rebellion in the United States (except the bridging of Behring strait and cutting the ship channel above mentioned). Before the expiration of that period we may look for a disruption of the most stable wealthy government of the nations of to-day! For, among other occurrences the future has in store is the partition of the United States into five different governments — the East, West, North, South, and Central, each with its own legislative and executive officers, and separate capital.

According to the seer, the twenty-fifth (different) man to occupy the United States presidential chair is to be the last. Thus President McKinley, being the twenty fourth, his successor will be the last man to receive the highest honor ever conferred upon a single individual by an enlightened and intelligent people; at least so saith the prophet.

In this connection it is instructive, as well as interesting, to compare the actual status of this unostentatious gentleman, official head of a nation for four years only, or eight at the longest, with that of the feared (and usually hated) potentate who wears the purple-regardless of fitness and everything, save the accident of birth -the "right divine" of kings; often crowned amid the whispered curses of smiling courtiers, who fawn upon and flatter him, praising his wit (be he witless or wise), and affecting to admire his beribboned person, blazing with gems which would purchase health and food-and life-for many a poor wretch who has all these crushed out by the tax machine that procures the costly gewgaws to gratify a passing fancy of his royal master! That royal master whose pomp is augmented by the servile attentions of scores who secretly desire, and often plot to accomplish, his overthrow or death.

Not heritage of princely blood; not coronet or kingly crown; not glittering pomp of papal state or glory of a doge's court; not yet the royal purple robe and jeweled scepter of a czar, can lend the simple, manly grace and air of regal dignity—to prince or king or emperor—that clothe and crown the people's choice, their honored chief executive, who as president of the United States represents the sovereign will of 70,000,000 people, all equal rulers with himself, but in whose hearts he is enthroned as a man worthy to be their president.

If volcanic fires are beneath the surface that will burst forth within the next ten years and overthrow this great republic there is nothing at the present time to indicate it.—Los Angeles Herald.

AURORA, Ill., Nov. 15.

Editors Herald:-I seldom see news from any located in Aurora, while reading the church papers, in which I am much linterested, they being the only preachers we have had among us for some time past. I find myself among the unfortunate class who are isolated from church privileges. I go occasionally to Plano and Chicago to meet with the Saints, and have felt refreshed and repaid for the effort made to meet with those of like precious faith, and have felt better in thanking the good Father in heaven for his many blessings. I have had desires and hopes of being more favorably situated as regards church privileges than I am now, and have been since coming into the church, about ten years ago.

I was living in Cleveland, Ohio, when I first made any investigation regarding this latter-day work. It was brought to my notice shortly before I went to Cleveland from Chicago, by Bro. Gowell, whom I had met in religious circles for the preceding two years, and who became dissatisfied with conditions and accepted the latter-day message in Michigan, and shortly after returning to Chicago called my attention to the people whom he had found enjoying the blessings of the restored gospel as recorded in the Scriptures I was at first a little surprised to hear him state that he had found a people who had the fullness of the gospel, when I seemed to be satisfied. I was believing the same at that time for myself, but, removing from these surroundings in religious life, I had more time and opportunity to go while in Cleveland to most all kinds of religious meetings. Meanwhile the Ensign was sent to my address, and by corresponding with Bro. Gowell, together with reading the Latter Day Saints' faith, I became more and more conscious that I was not in the faith of the gospel as revealed by the servants of God: but I was not at first willing to admit my lack of gospel faith in the true sense of this term. In this connection, as I look back over past events, I learn I had some assistance from the powers of darkness in preventing me from seeing the greater light. Yet I had received much light from time to time. and was blessed more and more at each advanced step, but when it meant so much to forsake some things, and believe so much more at once, it seemed too much for me.

But I had learned enough truth to talk to others who differed from the Saints, and these admissions to some things and opposition to others helped me along in the latterday message and showed up the weak points in one organization I had become somewhat acquainted with. They believed in apostles in these last days, but not in succession of apostles; that Jesus chose twelve in his ministry, and there were twelve to be chosen in the last days, but the office of twelve apostles was not kept up, but as each one died left that many less, and these made up the twenty-four elders sitting upon seats about the throne referred to in Revelation 4: 4. When I compared the doctrine of the Saints and the teaching of the Scriptures I found more evidence in favor of Joseph Smith being a true prophet and the Latter Day Saints' Church being the true church of Christ. But there was presented by the ministers two other weak points which helped me to see the truth more clearly. They believed in infant baptism, and also received candidates for membership in their church on their baptism from other denominational ministers, which to my mind, after reading the position of the Latter Day Saints' Church, was very weak.

Notwithstanding this experience, I was somewhat slow in accepting all the Saints taught. I attended meetings at Kirtland in 1891, during General Conference, but returned to Cleveland somewhat disappointed. I had expected to see and hear some things, which did not turn out my way. Two months later found me at Kirtland again, ready to be baptized.

Well, perhaps my experience since that time has been much like that of others who accepted this work as from heaven and not of man; that is, it has not been all sunshine, but the greater the light the greater the responsibility and trials.

I have pleasant recollections of a stay of nine weeks in Cleveland a year ago, meeting with the Saints and enjoying the services very much; the longest time I have had that privilege in ten years.

I trust my experience may be helpful in the future, and I know if some who are neglectful of their privileges of attending service were placed for a time where they would be deprived of them, they would realize what others have, that it does not pay to neglect duty at any time.

Yours in gospel bonds,

F. T. HAYNES.

JERUSALEM. Palestine. Asia, Nov. 2. Editors Herald:-Owing to the many requests to write our many kind friends from the Holy Land, I take this method to reach them. After a pleasant journey through Europe and Egypt, we arrived here October 29. Our travels through Europe and Egypt were very interesting and instructive: but the places most interesting to our readers, undoubtedly will be those of the Land of Palestine. The first sight of the Holy Land that greets the eye and announces we are approaching it, coming in from the Mediterranean Sea, is that of Joppa, or now called Jaffa. Jaffa is built of turf stone, and its population is about thirty-five thousand inhabitants. The house of Simon the tanner is still pointed out, and also the house of St. Dorcas, whom Peter raised from the dead. From here to Jerusalem by rail is fifty-four miles across the plains of Sharon. Ah, yes; but its roses do not bloom now as anciently. Soon the mountains of Judea are reached; very steep and nearly solid rock. Grotto of Sampson is shown shortly after entering the mountains to the left. Jerusalem is reached after a ride from Jaffa of three hours and thirty-five minutes. Jerusalem is now a city of some sixty thousand inhabitants, according to an estimate of 1898, as follows: about 7,000 Moslems, 41,000 Jews, and 12,800 Christians. The Christians include 4,000 Latins, 200 united Greeks, 50 united Armenians, 6,000 Orthodox Greeks, 800 Armenians, 100 Cepts, 100 Ethiopians, 100 Syrians, 1,400 Protestants. Among Moslems Arabs are also included. There is also a colony of Africans (Moghrebins). The different nationalities are distinguished by their costumes. From above statistics it will be seen that the Jews are gathering home.

To-day we visited the Jews' wailing places. This day, Saturday, is their Sabbath, and they repair here to worship and lament their condition. This is outside the city wall, and where they meet the wall is built of the ancient stones of the Temple of Solomon. They beat their heads and breasts, and kiss the stones of the Temple, rending the air with their lamenting and cries, while the priest reads the scriptures (not New Testament) with a continual swaying backwards and forwards, and from side to side, importuning God to send their Deliverer and Savior, whom they say will come, but has not as yet made his appearance. Our guide pointed out to us the fourteen stations of the cross. We visited Calvary, and Holy Sepulchre, the garden of Gethsemane, and Mt. Olive. Here the place of ascension is marked very closely. There is a little place inclosed with a curbstone, about two feet long, and one foot wide. pointed out as the exact spot upon which our Savior stood when he ascended into heaven. I asked the guide how this place was identified. His reply was a grin and a wink of the left eye. Kind reader, place your own interpretation of the reply.

We were also shown the very tree under which Christ prayed in the garden, etc.

From Jerusalem to Bethlehem in carriage, in about one hour. Here the Church of the Nativity stands over the grotto in which Christ is said to have been born. This church was erected by St. Helena, the mother of Constantine, in 330 A.D. It is now occupied by the Greek and Roman Catholics. The place where the manger was is pointed out exactly.

Bethlehem is divided into eight quarters, and numbers about eight thousand inhabitants. On the way to Bethlehem we cross the Valley of Hinnom; and after a ride of four miles we come to a house in which is the tomb of Rachel; and ere long we reach the Valley of the Shepherds, where the shepherds were watching their flocks by night some nineteen hundred and one Christmases ago, when lo! the angels chanted that grand new song, "Peace on earth, good will to men. A Savior is born to-night in Bethlehem of Judea." Also near by is the Valley of David, where he was called from the lowly pursuit of a poor shepherd boy to that of an exalted king.

Returning to the Holy City, our next trip takes us on our way to the sacred river, Jordan, which lies southeast of Jerusalem some six or seven hours ride. Along this route, about one hour ride, we reach the little village where Jesus loved to tarry with Mary and Martha who lived with their brother Lazarus. This little village is dear old Bethany. It is located at the side of Mt. Olive: and as we wended our footsteps here, sad thoughts forced their way into our minds. No more the welcome at the home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus. Jesus no more bends his blessed steps here; no welcome, no refreshing rest or repose, or sweet odor from the flower gardens. No copious stream of water to cool the parched lips; nothing, only the ruins, and about forty hovels containing Moslem inhabitants, who do not revere the name of Christ but believe Lazarus to be a saint. We, however, visited the tomb of Lazarus, and the house where Mary and Martha lived; also the house of Simon the Leper. About one hour's ride from here is the Apostles' Spring, where Christ and his apostles used to drink on their way from Jericho. Soon the Inn of the Good Samaritan is reached. Here a crink of nice warm rain water from last winter was obtained for the small sum of five cents.

We rode on, thanking fortune for the good Samaritan. At last we saw the Mount of Temptation, where Satan took Jesus after he had fasted for forty days and nights, and showed him all the kingdoms of the world. proffering to Christ all these kingdoms if Christ would worship him. This Mount is very high; and at its base are the ruins of old Jericho, and about half way up its side is a Greek Convent. The Jordan River lies about two hours to the east. How anxious we were to see the sacred river, and how the beautiful hymns we used to sing in the faroff land, of Jordan's stormy banks, etc., and of the mighty throngs who came here to the baptism of John. At last we were by its rippling waters. The very spot was shown where John baptized Christ. We knelt before our Savior here, and every heart throbbed with love divine, and we cast a wistful eye to heaven's fair and happy land where happy throngs are waiting, to welcome home earth's pilgrim, yes, home to the golden shore.

After having drank of its waters, and bathed our hands and faces, and taking a few relics, we returned to Jericho, by the way of the ancient site of Gilgal. We also obtained a fine view of Mt. Sinai and Mt. Nebo.

From Jericho back to Jerusalem, where this writing leaves us in good health. We shall start on a journey to Nezareth, Galileo, Samaria, etc., on November 4, and thence to Mt. Tabor, Mt. Carmel, and Haiffaa, from whence we shall sail for America, via Constantinople and Athens, Greece, etc. However, we should like very much to have spent our Christmas in Bethlehem: but duty hids us return home, where we shall be glad to arrive.

We Europeans think we are very clever; but a visit to this country and we must change our ways a little. These people say we are stupid, and do everything backwards. When entering a home, naturally, we take off our hats; but instead the natives liberty in private and in public on the take off their shoes. Instead of writing from the right side of the page they write from the left to right. So when we return to America we hope to be polished gentlemen, if we shall follow these ways. There are a great many poor and deaf, dumb, blind, and maimed now, as well as in Christ's time, in the street and market places, all are begging for backshish which means in the Arabic. a gift. Even little children who can hardly walk and talk will reach out their little, generally dirty hands, and ask the traveler for backshish. It is so in nearly all oriental countries.

We have noticed how devoted the people are here who profess Christianity; and not only Christians, but even the Mussulman and the Jew in their various ways of worship. They are very strict to observe their many forms, and their religion becomes a part of the every day life, and their very being. O how it makes one wish for the power to set forth the teachings of Jesus Christ in such a manner as to cause the people to live by and observe every principle and every doctrine of the blessed gospel of God's dear Son! O how different the world would be, how much better and higher are the laws of the pure and undefiled Christ to the doctrine and formality of men who have sought for power and honor! O may the true Christian cultivate holy reverence and godliness, purity of heart, and love divine, so that the ungodly may see reflected in God's children the image of Christ. James gives a splendid definition of pure religion, in James 1: 27, namely: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." If above principles are made a part of our being, we shall not be unprofitable servants, but the friends of

According to a prophecy given to me over a year ago, I have lifted my voice in defense of the gospel of Christ here in Jerusalem, twice by invitation of a number of pilgrims, and also in a great many private talks on the restored gospel.

In contrasting our land America with the rest of the world, how proud we are to be a citizen of the United States of America. Long may the stars and stripes of Old Glory float over the land of the free. How radiant one feels to repair to our consuls in these foreign countries and rest under our flag for a few minutes or hours. Surely it is that choice land of which Moses speaks concerning the blessings of Joseph and his land, as found in Deuteronomy 33: 13-18.

Ever praying and laboring for the ultimate triumph of truth and Zion's welfare,

Yours in gospel bonds, C. L. CARSTENSEN.

TUPPERVILLE, Ont., Nov. 29. Editors Herald:-I am still laboring in the vicinity of Cooperville, and have just returned from another baptismal service in which I inducted three more into the kingdom of the Master. Am enjoying good average. Others are near the kingdom, and I have good reasons for expecting to administer the ordinance to more before my departure. With the seven baptized on the 7th and 16th inst., this makes ten for the month of November. Expect Bro. Green with me again, coming Sunday. Had Elder Smith and wife, of Wallaceburg, and Priest William Taylor and wife, of Wabash, with me a week ago last Sunday. Also had Bro. and Sr. Green, from Lindsey branch. Sr. Green, Jr., conducted Sunday-school for us, and gave a very nice address on that department of our work, in which she seems to be absorbingly interested.

Word from Elder Shaw, of Kimball, indi cates that they have use for me there; but I expect now that they will have to wait till after Christmas. Will reach them and Forest as soon as I can, but don't want to leave unreaped a harvest that I have worked so laboriously to mature.

I believe my genial friend, A. C. Barmore, is now engaged at Ridgetown. Our long season of love and labor together is unforgotten by me, and I shall appreciate another opportunity of meeting him. Hastily,

ALVIN KNISLEY.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 23.

Editors Herald:-While at home on a visit I was requested by Elder I. N. White to assist Bro. Hubert Case in a debate at Matthewson, Oklahoma, commencing October 22. Not considering myself a debater, neither desiring to refuse assistance, I wended my way thither, landing at 2:30 p.m., and the debate commenced at 7:30, which gave me but little time for thought. However, we survived the ordeal.

It is strange, but I find it true in my observation, that most of these "Mormon-eaters," as they generally like to be called, or by some pet name something like it, are men who can not command an audience otherwise, hence resort to this business for the "sheckels" that are in it. This may not be true in every case, but I think it will apply quite generally.

Mr. Denton Collins is a famous debater, having met Elder William Pender five times. and roasted him so badly the church took him out of Kansas and sent him west to save its credit-this is Mr. Collins' view of the case, as stated in his lectures preceding our debate. Bro. Pender has my sympathy! Mr. Collins made the statement that no one invited him to Matthewson to give the lectures. If there was any honor or disgrace it was his by virtue of the fact he was there on his own account. The following is an indicator as to what influenced this gentleman to make an attack upon our people and work at that place:

"October 28, 1901.

"This is to certify that I invited D. Collins to Matthewson to give us a few lectures against Mormonism about the first of May, C. J. HUNTER." 1901.

Mr. Hunter is deacon of the Christian Church, at Matthewson.

"October 28, 1901.

"I hereby testify that Bro. D. Collins was visited at Center congregation by myself and Bro. Chas. Hunter, and immediately after his discourse we held a conversation with him and extended to him an invitation to come to Matthewson and preach some, or lecture on Mormonism, as he might prefer. But he declined for reasons assigned. But later he changed his mind for some reason and did come and lecture.

"J. R. SHUFF."

Mr. Shuff is the pastor of the Christian Church, at Matthewson. This gives the gauge of this gentleman's ability to stick to facts. He stated about the first night that the Christians were all united, and that unity and love prevailed at Matthewson. So I introduced the following verbally and present it here, as written by these brethren of the Christian Church; one pastor, the other the deacon.

"MATTHEWSON, Okla., Oct. 27, 1901.

"To whom it may concern:-This is to certify that the party which Mr. Denton Collins represents has been involved in a departure from the faith, and have now at this time only measurably returned; and are holding the truth in unrighteousness.

"J. R. SHUFF, Elder. "C. J. HUNTER"

This is the kind of unity Mr. Collins represents. How men will try to bolster up their false positions!!

I enjoyed that peaceful influence that gave assurance of the acceptance of the effort made, though feeble it was. It is a consolation to know you are on the right side of the question. Thus I am happy in the Lord, moving on in the work committed to our trust. In gospel bonds,

A. H. PARSONS.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, D c 2

Editors Saints' Herald:-I am still alive in the work of the Lord, and the work is moving along in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

After the Dow City reunion, I went to Sandy Point, where I have labored considerably the past year, and where I have baptized about eighteen, who have bought a building and fixed up a nice little church, having it furnished with chairs and a new organ, all paid for. At the close of the Dow City reunion, Bro. Joseph Smith came and gave us a few timely sermons. On October 6 the church was dedicated by Bro. Joseph, and we were all pleased with the sermon. At the close of the service we had a nice dinner in the church, which was especially enjoyed by Brn. Joseph and Kibler, and the writer also had a wing.

I continued the meetings at the Point for three weeks, and baptized William Matzo. From there we went to Mondamin for one week, and tried to cheer our little band of Saints there. They have a model Sundayschool and one of the most spiritual Religios in the district. From there I came to the Echo and Coffman schoolhouses, where we have been for four weeks to-night. On the 24th we baptized four, viz., little Inez Coffman, Bro. and Sr. Elmer Coffman's daughter; Fern Scott, Bro. Leonard Scott's little daughter; two other sisters, who followed to try the realities of the beyond. But I am the children. Last Wednesday we baptized six more, and then returned to Sandy Point to baptize another sister who had been convinced of the truth when we were there before. We were there Wednesday and Thursday nights, and Friday morning we baptized the sister, and returned to this place that night, where Bro. Paul Hanson had been presching in my stead. Bro. Hauson went to the Point, and I continued here. Yesterday we baptized another, which makes eleven at this place in the past week.

We expect to continue here till Wednesday night, then to the Woodbine conference, and then from there back to Sandy Point, where we will baptize four more, and stop there a few evenings, and then to our home at Independence, which I left four months ago. Since that time I have preached one hundred eleven sermons and baptized seventeen. The Lord has been with me with his Spirit. I hope and pray that the Lord will bless all the Saints, and that we will come up higher.

The kind Saints and friends at this place made me a present of a fine Bible two weeks ago; and of course I had to preach hard to Your brother, help pay for it.

MCLOUD, Okla., Nov. 27.

Editors Herald:-I come again to tell your many readers that I am now at this place, and have been for some days. I came here to visit one of my brothers and his family. I met a brother by name of R. Klemm; and we concluded to hold some meetings. So we got the use of the schoolhouse near by, which is a splendid place in which to preach. We met a good turnout of interested hearers. The people wanted the meetings continued longer; but as I was on a short visit here, and as it was outside of my mission field, I thought I would notify the missionary force of Oklahoma to call around as soon as convenient, and preach a series of sermons at said schoolhouse. There is a thickly settled settlement here of good material of which to make Latter Day Saints. Bro. R. Klemm lives about two and one half miles south of McLoud. Write him, and he will meet you at McLoud, which is on the Choctaw railroad. He is a zealous brother, and will take care of any missionary while preaching in this section.

I aim to wend my way back into my own field of labor, God being my helper. I never felt better in the work.

In gospel bonds,

E. W. NUNLEY.

HUSTED, Colo., Nov. 26.

Dear Herald:-I have been transferred by the missionaries in charge from the South Missouri district to the Colorado mission. I shall ever remember many of the experiences enjoyed while laboring in the Ozark regions, with Brn. Sparling and Davis. My knowledge of this mission is very limited; but at present writing am not favorably impressed. I long to see the "land of big red apples" once more. I came here in consequence of Bro. C. R. Duncan's sickness, who has gone here and propose to stay with it till spring. Am making some friends around Husted for the work, where my sister is teaching school. Presched last Sunday for them on the subject of the resurrection. The house was full, and splendid liberty enjoyed. I find the people out here are more prejudiced against our work than in the East. I had the principal of the Monument school tell meto-day that he had no sympathy for this movement at all, and of course I didn't get the building for religious worship. I know one thing, some of these school officers will have the pleasure of refusing the use of their buildings this winter if the Lord will bless us with health.

Let me say to the Pueblo Saints: Look out! I am coming soon, by direction of Bro.

Saints, remember me in your prayers. I am still in the faith; but it is nearly enough. to cause one to lay down his armor, after riding a wheel all over this mountain country, seeking a place to tell the Christ story, and be refused by men who think you are an emissary from the lower regions, via Salt Lake City. In gospel bonds,

A. M. BAKER.

MARSHALL, Obio, Nov. 25.

Editors Saints' Herald:-I have been busily engaged since the 8th inst., preaching at two new points; viz., Marshall and Harriett (Squashtown). Fair interest at both places. Some prejudice removed, and false impressions regarding this work have been corrected. Will continue three nights longer at Harriett. Held meetings over one week with the Highland branch before coming H. E. MOLER.

ALDRIDGE, Montana, Nov. 17.

Dear Herald:-Aldridge is a mining camp on top of the mountain three miles from Horr, our nearest railroad station, on the National Park branch from Livingston, fifty miles south. I have been here three years last July. Myself and family are all the Saints near. The first year we were here we were looked upon as though we were wolves in sheep's clothing and needed watching because we were numbered with God's people known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Thank God, we have proved him true to his promise that if we would be faithful he would soften the hearts of our enemies and they would become our friends. This he has done in this place. Our former enemies are now our best friends. I have been the superintendent of the Congregational Sunday-school here for the last two years, and was reappointed for this year. I also preach at the schoolhouse every Sunday to good audiences. I am also called to officiate in the marriage ceremony, and to bury the dead. I will preach the funeral sermon of D. A. Thomas' little boy the coming Sunday, November 24. I was away from home when he died, and he was buried before I got back.

This is written to encourage the weak when they are left alone among strangers and enemies of God's people. Because of abomination preached and practiced by those who have apostatized from the true faith, we are classed with them, and it takes time to remove prejudice from the minds of the people; and the only way I know to do is to live a godly life, and prove by our good works and daily walk and conversation that we are God's people in spirit and in truth.

I have not increased our number here by baptizing any, but have made friends to the cause; and if any of the missionaries come here now they will be honored and respected for my sake, if not for the gospel's sake, by those who were our bitter enemies and who condemned us when we came here. I believe that in God's own due time he will draw them in his fold.

I visited some friends last week at Butte, Montana, and called on the Brighamite Latter Day Saints. They conducted the Sunday-school nicely; good order prevailed, and instructive preaching. On Friday evening they had prayer, singing, and dancing in the church. Those who cater to the pleasure of this world may approve, but I prefer the dancing left out and to live a higher life. The preacher who puts his arms around other men's wives and daughters is sinning against God and virtue, notwithstanding that it is practiced in the guise of religion at the dance. May God help us to live pure and virtuous lives, is my prayer.

Yours in gospel bonds, E. E. WILLIAMS.

RICHMOND, Virginia.

Editor Herald:—Always glad myself to see a letter from any of the Saints whose name I know. I am egotistical enough to think there are a few who will be glad to hear from their sister in Virginia. So when something transpires that I think may be of general interest, I like to jot it down for the benefit of all.

Dear Saints, do not hide your books. I visited at the home of one sister, who I knew was zealous for the work. Yet not a sign of any church literature could I discover among the many well-chosen books and periodicals that filled her shelves and reading-table. The reason I mention this and emphasize the the above injunction will be seen in the following:

A gentleman who is acting for a firm here, as an agent, always stops at my house for dinner when in this part of the city. One day last summer, while he was waiting in the parlor, he, being a greater reader, took up the Book of Mormon, which was lying on the center-table. I came in and found him reading it. He said: "I see you have the Book of Mormon here. I thought I would examine it a little."

"Yes; I am glad you are doing so; for I suppose that is the least understood and the most misrepresented of any book in existence."

He looked at me in surprise, and said, with a tone I can not hope to put in black and white, but which you can all imagine:

"What! I hope you are not a Mormon!" with a lowering of the voice at the word Mormon.

"Yes," I replied, "I am what the world calls a Mormon, in that I accept the book as being the word of God, and also accept Joseph Smith as a prophet. But the church I belong to is not the same as the Mormons, of Utah, as we never believed in polygamy." And I said that our church was the real Latter Day Saint Church, and that we were not an offshoot from them, but rather they were apostates from the true Latter Day Saints' Church, of which ours was the continuation; for, although it was disorganized at Joseph's death, it was reorganized in 1860, and the son of the martyred Joseph was successor to his father.

I let the matter drop, never saying any more about it. Then there were a few weeks he did not come, as his duties did not call him here. But one day he called, and said he would like dinner.

"All right," I replied, and stepped into the kitchen to make some preparations. He came in, and said he wished to wash his hands and face. I showed him the sink.

"Mrs. Corson," were his next words, "I want you to do me a favor."

"Well, if it is anything I can do, I will be glad to do so."

"I want you as soon as you can to write out a plain statement, in as brief a form as you can, and so I can understand it easily; or, if you have it to give, any book or tract setting forth your faith. Don't you know, just the few words you said about you being different from the Utah Mormons set me to thinking, and I could not get rid of it to save my life. I am going to be plain with you. [All this while he was washing and wiping.] When I first saw you, I liked you. You reminded me in look and manner so much of my mother; and the more I saw of you, the more I liked you and believed I had found one good Christian woman. But when I found you were a 'Mormon,' it all fell flat, and I said, 'Can it be possible?' this intelligent and seemingly Christian woman a Mormon!' Then what you said about being of the true Latter Day Saint Church, which was different from the Utah church, kept coming to me, and I couldn't rid myself of it. Now I don't want you to think you are going to convert me to your faith, but I want to know the truth."

And although I am not much given to ejaculations of this nature, yet when he said he saw that I was a true Christian, and that he was determined to investigate the faith, etc., I couldn't help but speak out: "Glory to God! That is all we want of any one—to investigate for themselves."

"And I want to tell you something else," said he; "I don't know as I ought to say it, but I will say it, for it is the truth. I am perfectly disgusted with the churches. I believe in a pure Christianity, but I don't know where to find it. Outside of the Bible, I don't know where it is taught. When I say I am disgusted with the churches, I have grounds for saying so. I know what I am talking about. My father was an M. E. preacher, and a better man never lived; but some of the worst men I ever knew were M. E. preachers. And the churches themselves are corrupt. They have degenerated into mere money-making social associations, and I have long since ceased having anything to do with them "

Then he told me his wife was even more bitter than he, although she, as well as himself, had been a church member. He has been a teacher, and is quite a well-read man.

Well, I "preached the gospel" after my fashion, which I think must be somewhat after the manner of Priscilla and Aquila, though I have no Aquila to assist me. At any rate, I "expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly" than he had been used to hear it. I think we talked nearly two hours; and when he went away he said:

"Any time you can spare a little time to make this thing plain, if you will do it, I will be greatly obliged to you. It seems as if there is no sacrifice I would not make for the truth." He said during our talk: "It seems to me if I can find truth that I would rather go out in the world as an humble preacher of truth, and follower of Christ, than anything else."

I gave him the leaflets with the Epitome on one side and True Orthodoxy on the other; also two or three sermon tracts. Loaned him "Spiritual Gifts," and "Voice of Warning."

He has been here several times since, and says he likes everything he has read yet; but it puzzles him about the "plates." If he could only know where they were, it would not be so hard to believe. I said: "Neither do we know where the tables of stone were that the ten commandments were written upon, nor the rod of Aaron that budded, and many other things told of in the Bible."

One day he said: "My wife is awfully prejudiced; but I wish you could see her. I want you to go some day, and not let her know who you are, and get to talking with her."

I replied that I couldn't use deceit, even to overcome her prejudices. Since then he said: "As soon as your son gets well [he was ill with typhoid fever] I want you to go to see my wife, and get acquainted with her. I want her to know you."

The last time he was here, he said: "It may all be true, and I may see it so yet; but I do not believe I ever could have the courage to join your church while my father and mother are living."

I asked: "Do you remember what Christ said. 'He that loveth father and mother more than me is not worthy of me?"

"Yes, I remember it," he said; "but I don't believe I could do it, I lack the courage."

I said: "That is exactly what Christ meant when he said: 'If any man forsake not father, mother, wife, or children for my sake he can not be my disciple.' He did not mean a literal running away from them and leaving them to themselves, but he meant the leaving them behind in the affections and putting Christ first: to always consider his will rather than theirs."

Again he spoke of his lack of courage.

"It does require courage," said I; "but let me ask you if you can think of a person being placed in a position where it could possibly be harder to choose the right than I myself was. My husband had left me entirely dependent on my children, who were all against my faith, as were all my kin people in the North, and all my friends and neighbors here. My neighbors had all stood by me when my husband went away, and I knew they would all turn against me, should I accept this faith. Just think of it! My neighbors, church associates, kin people, and all against me, who had that other great trouble to bear beside. And can you imagine a position where it would require more courage?"

His eyes filled with tears. "No ma'am, I can't." Then I said: "Do you think I, who prize my good name as highly as any one possibly could, could deliberately put myself in a way to be evilly spoken of, unless I was sure it was the truth?" "No, ma'am, I should think not." But it seems as the cross came nearer to him he shrank away. Ah! so did I, for a long time.

Well, I am praying that God will so work on him that he will yield. I have not been to see his wife yet, but hope to soon.

I think this letter is long enough, though I could fill many pages with incidents of interest.

Ever for the truth.

ALICE R. CORSON.

BEVIER, Missouri, Nov. 21.

Dear Herald:—It is with great pleasure that I write a few lines to your ever welcome pages in behalf of this great latter-day work. It is a source of great comfort to me to know that our Father in heaven is the same yester-day, to-day, and forever, not even a shadow of turning. How thankful all should be for this, for it is sad to think how changeable poor, weak, mortal man is; one thing to-day and another to-morrow, and how sorrowful it is to think how some of God's servants are dropping out of line and taking another course, and leaving their work for some one else to take up. What a mistake!

Myself and husband have been in this church a number of years, but are not tired. We, as well as you, have had our trials. I will relate one: In 1900, while living in the East, one of my daughters was taken very sick with typhus fever. We were among strangers at the time, having lived there only a few months when she was taken sick. There were a few Saints living several miles from us, and three elders, so we called for the elders. We had prayer and then they administered the ordinance of laying on of hands for the healing of the sick, with only a partial blessing; but we were thankful for this. As time passed by we saw very little difference in her condition, so we called again, not once but several times, so you can imagine how we felt. Then came the trial of our faith. The Lord had said, through one of his servants, it was his will that she should be healed by his power; but Saints, true faith was needed in that trying hour when everything seemed so dark, and the power of darkness was so strong that it could be seen, and it seemed that all power on earth and from beneath had combined to hinder the blessing from being received. It took a determined effort on our part that the blessing promised might be received. And when it did come, we as a family were thankful to the Giver of all good, for we know that he heard our prayers and answered them in his own time and way, for which we are thankful. Saints, the faith I desire is that faith which takes no denial. My desire is to so live that I may let my light shine to those around me, that they may see my good works and be led into the gospel of the Son of God.

Let us then be up and doing, With a heart for any fate, Still achieving, still pursuing, Learn to labor and to wait.

Your sister in gospel bonds, LYDIA EDMUNDS.

DEIGHTON. Oklahoma, October 26.

Editors Herald:—I came here the 19th ult., and began preaching. It is seventeen miles from Guy, and here I held the debate last winter with the Seventh day Adventist minister; also with Millennial Dawn minister in May; and baptized five of the best citizens, who have proved themselves worthy of their profession, having a good influence.

The greatest opposition here is from the Dawn brethren, and on Sunday last, when I was to preach after the three p. m. Sundayschool, their preacher whom I met in May again visited them and led the school, using the Millennial Dawn papers instead of the Bible; saying the death struggle was now on between them and the Mormons, inviting discussion, showing the necessity of it in order to arrive at the truth. Wanted to discuss immediately (they being soul sleepers). I proposed, "Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in harmony with the Bible in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice." I affirming. He to affirm the same for the Dawn Church. To this be agreed.

I had to be elsewhere until Thursday eye. He preached until then, but when I returned I found the order changed. His adherents objected; and we were to preach night about alternately. I preached from "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ," etc., having great liberty. He jumped to his feet often, talking about "Joseph Smith." I would ask him to be quiet, saying, "I am speaking of Christ, Joseph's Lord and Master now." I invited him to talk at close, which he did. Last night he talked of false prophets. Sunday at eleven he would show up the Mormon hierarchy, etc., I being the speaker for tonight. He talked two hours, wearying the people, there being good audiences each night.

When I stated that he had turned this into a discussion and I thought it would please the people for us to talk half hour alternately, the people cried "Yes, yes:" but they objected. Some suggested that if they thought he was not able to defend their course, send for Russel, of whom he had said, "His inspiration is superior to Joseph Smith's." I said, Yes, I would like that, and there were thirty to forty dollars offered in a moment to bring him here; some offering ten dollars. They did not want him here, but a motion was put and carried to have a debate, and we begin to-night, four sessions each, with more time if either wants it.

Five weeks ago the great hub of the Mormon wheel here (especially in his own estimation), Elder Frank Vroeman, broke loose from all the worthless spokes, and began teaching on, "Why I left the Mormon church;" taking up collections among his Baptist friends, in whose interests he labors, in order to buy all needful books to aid him in his great enterprise; but we are still hopeful that our feeble light will not be totally eclipsed by the transcendent luster of this rising luminary. He is to lecture to-morrow at Seiling, where the branch was secretly organized, at eleven and three p. m., but Bro. Frank Durfee, who is abundantly able, tells me he will look after him there. And he will arrive here (Deighton) the next Sunday, so he tells me. Thinks he can knock the elders all out the first round: but I am hopeful that He in whom I have trusted in many battles, for more than one third of a century, will make a way for an escape from this great ally of the Baptist Church.

I met with an Elder Keeman of the Christian Church, near Kiel, fifty miles southeast of here in August last, who presented some very powerful arguments, when I was claiming that the scriptures spoke of more than apostles, of which I carried the marks on my body for some weeks. I think it did them more harm than us, as I baptized four there, and he baptized but one. I left some propositions with one there who had recently left them, who said he would advertise them as cowards for their attack on me. if they did not meet the issue. They spoke of getting Elder Chism, of Texas. Last week he was at Guy crying for me. I left word for him where I could be found by letter or in person. Expect to hear from him soon.

I think the cheap edition of the Book of Mormon will be a success. I got two this week and sold them both last night to those out of the church, and send for one half dezen more to day.

As ever, in hope of final victory, D. S. CRAWLEY.

HAMLET, Ky., November 27.

Editors Herald:-A few items from this place may be of interest to some. This is the place where the people threatened to shoot the elders from ambush, as was given account of some time ago. No one has been hurt yet, and the work moves on. Afterward Braden came along, with his war paint, to expose what he pleases to call "Mormonism." After a tirade of three or four days, Bro. White comes upon the ground to defend the cause. Braden had it circulated he would have a circus, and they should have as much fun as they ever had at a picnic. After arriving on the ground for the night's lecture, he heard of Bro. White's arrival; so you can guess the result: No picnic.

After quite a wrangle, Braden was brought to time, and the debate begun. Much prejudice was removed and six additions since. It is inspiring to see the cause slowly but surely overcoming all opposition. We organized a prayer meeting, and are trying in our feeble way to move onward and hope, by help of God, to live such lives as would be worthy of imitation. Elders S. H. Fields and W. R. Smith were last with us and did much good. Hope to have some of the elders with us again soon.

This writing finds me in very feeble health. Have been troubled with hemorrhage. I desire the prayers of the Saints, that I may be healed, and that I may be found faithful in discharge of every duty enjoined upon me.

In the one faith,

JOE HAMILTON.

MEDINA CITY, Texas, November 8. Readers of Herald:—It has been long since I have written to the HERALD but as we have been having such good times I thought it no more than fair that I should claim some space. Bro. Harp came and preached four first class sermons for us at the Laxon Creek schoolhouse. Any one who ever heard him knows that people are obliged to do one of the three things: stay at home, disbelieve the Bible, or become a Latter Day Saint.

Our friend Mrs. Whitehead chose the latter; so on Monday evening Bro. Harp baptized her. We think others are interested in their souls' salvation; and if thorns do not grow up and choke the good seed sown we think more will be added to our number when Bro. Harp returns.

This is not a new place: quite a number of our elders have preached at the Laxon Creek schoolhouse. Cousin Heman Smith, my father L L Wight, Bro. I. N Roberts, and others have long ago told the "good story" to people here, but Bro. Harp seems to have awakened a new interest here. We think Bro Harp the right man for Texas, and we shall be glad if conference sees fit to reappoint him to this mission.

The drought has been very severe in this country. Cotton has turned out moderately well, while most everything else was almost an entire failure. Drought not yet broken.

I hope to be able to stand faithful to the end.

HATTIE MINEAR.

GLENWOOD, IOWS, Dec. 4.

Editors Herald:—At present writing I am at Glenwood, Iowa, attending a session of court. It will likely close to-day, when I will return to Lamoni.

Last Sunday, the 1st, I attended the meetings held by the Saints here, and aided them in the services, Brn. Davis and Walling being in charge. There seems to be an active force at work here and standing for the cause. They have a very good Sunday-school, judging from the lively manner in which it was conducted, and quick answers that came from the classes. All of the services held during the day were interesting and saintly.

Last evening a number of us visited the institution established for the feeble-minded. There were a good many inmates present in the hall where we were received, being in charge of intelligent teachers. The exercises of the hour consisted of music and dancing. Dancing is said to have a beneficial effect upon these weak minds. So after all, there is a place for dancing. It is good for something. That is, it helps the "weak minded." Girls and boys, take a hint!

E. L. is here, also my brother James. I hope to return East next week.

WM. H. KELLEY.

A VISIT TO WALES.

Dear Editor:-With your consent I send the following account of our journey to this land of our birth. Forty five years last June my folks left the hills of Wales for Joseph's land. I was then nine years old. They had become acquainted with the latter-day work some eight or ten years before; but like many more, could not indorse the corrupt teachings of the "salt land." So they made their home first in Hyde Park, but later moved to Brookfield, Ohio, where father, mother, and four of us children gladly united with this the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in 1865; and during the thirtysix years we have been in the church I am grateful to our heavenly Father that I can say that my faith in it is unshaken. I am proud of the record the church has made. Nothing to be ashamed of. Morally I believe the church stands higher than it has in the history of this age. For that reason, I believe that there is at our door a spiritual endowment. Indeed the history of the last two years confirms me in this thought. Well, I shall say no more at present along this line; but may we have strength to be humble and honest with one another, and our fellow man, and faithful to our calling.

Appointed to this field, we left our dear home in St. Joseph, Missouri, where we have spent twenty-six years of our lives, in good old Far West District. Long may the dear Saints there live to do good as in the past! So at 2:15 p. m., October 30, we bade farewell to our dear children and many of the faithful Saints of St. Joseph that had come to the station to see us off. Truthfully was it manifested the old statement, "The flesh is weak, but the spirit is willing."

Soon after leaving the city, a pleasant looking man came up to me and said, "Are you Latter Day Saints?" We were glad to say yes. "I thought so," he said. He had remarked to his wife who was with him, that he believed we were Latter Day Saints.

Well, we were glad to meet them. They were on their way to their old home in Iowa to see sick folks. They came from Echo, Indian Territory. Name, H. J. Thurman.

We arrived in Chicago next day, five hours late, at one p. m. Took Lake Shore and Michigan Southern to Buffalo at 5 p. m. Arrived in Buffalo eleven a. m. next day. We were in hopes that we would have time to call on Bro. and Sr. Winning at Niagara Falls; but we did not have time. Would like to have seen them and their dear child that we had learned was so sick. They will take the will for the deed.

We left Buffalo one p. m. on the New York Central; arrived in New York ten p. m., same day; 440 miles run in nine hours; only four stops; made eighty miles of that in sixty-five minutes. Wife and Ruth needed rest; so we retired for the night in a hotel. Next morning, November 2, we started for the Cunard Steamship Company's dock. Arrived on board the beautiful Campania at nine a. m., and at ten a. m. she slowly moved out. It was a pleasant Saturday, sun shining brightly; all hands were cheerful. We had purchased tickets in the third-class or steerage. By so doing, we saved $32.50 for self, wife, and Ruth. Brethren G. T. Griffiths and W. B. Kelley had advised the second-class; but the circulars sent out by the company had spoken so highly of the third-class accommodations that we thought that we could put up with it for seven days, and save $32 50. So, after getting out from shore, we made inquiry about our rooms. We found them down two flights of stairs, twelve steps each, almost straight up and down. The steward showed us several rooms, and gave us our choice. We selected our quarters, and the bell called for dinner. There was plenty of it; but it was in our judgment very poorly cooked. It was tasteless, except the bread, which was O. K. Plenty of meat, potatoes, cabbage, no butter, cheese, sugar, tea or coffee. When asked if they had tea, they said, Only tea time, six hours later. I asked for water. They did not serve it. I remarked that I thought water was quite plenty, and I did not care for tea or coffee, but would like some water. The waiter then asked the head man, so they brought me some water in a soup bowl. Many others wanted water, but did not get it. They could go and get it themselves. After dinner we looked around and learned that there were no closets for men or ladies on that floor, and was informed that they were two decks above. We concluded that we had better look for better quarters; so we paid the difference, $32 50, got threeberth room No. 8 in second-class, where we found everything much better, with steward and stewardess to wait on us. Supper-time wife and Ruth did not wish any. Had plenty of dinner. So I went. Was well pleased. We retired for the night. I had a very pleasant and impressive dream. I thought we had arrived in Wales; met Bro. and Sr. Gould, to whom Bro. G. T. Griffiths had referred us. I said to my wife and Bro. Frank Pierce that I thought I would know them. Went up on deck; there was a strong head-wind, northeast. The white-caps were very plenty, the waves quite high. This was Sunday. Thoughts went homeward. Wife and Ruth still seasick. I was quite well. By sun-down the storm was more severe. We retired for the night. We had traveled up to noon, twenty-six hours, 440 miles. We should have made 500.

Monday morning, November 4, the storm very bad. The waves mountain high. Wife and Ruth still sick; also Bro. Pierce had a bad spell. Four hundred fifty-five passengers, nearly all sick. The gallant ship was making a strong effort to plow through the angry waves. It brought to my mind the snow plows on the Western plains, pushing through the drifts of snow.

This ship is 620 feet long, has a crew of 440 men, 22 of whom are engineers; 96 firemen, 57 coal shovelers and wipers. There are six engines, 30,000 horse power. Has carried sixteen hundred passengers.

At noon to-day we have traveled only 356 miles, eighty-four less than yesterday. At suppor time, not many responded to the call. I did not go myself. I am a little sick; not bad. Wife and Ruth quite sick. As I look out on the rolling sea, and hear the strong puffing of the engines, and the waves sometimes come clear over the top deck, it looks very discouraging. It would be a beautiful sight if we could stand on the shore, with good solid footing, and look on. Just think! The wind traveling at the rate of seventy to eighty miles an hour; the waves are mountain high. If it were behind us, it would be all right. Well do I remember the old song, It is hard to pull against the stream. My dream gives me comfort that we shall yet arrive in safety. As we retire for the night, after passing two days in the storm, with no sign of it going down, you may know what a treat it would be if we could see the beautiful sun, and have the wind go down. May it be so soon, is the earnest wish of all on board the Campania.

Thursday, 5th, six a.m. The sun tries to show its pleasant face. Wind still northeast and strong. Waves high. Wife and Ruth still sick. Bro. Pierce and self all right if we only had solid footing. But we are fulfilling an old prediction, for we stagger, but not with strong drink, but from the effects of the raging sea. At noon the wind not so strong. Blue sky in sight. We only traveled 240 miles,—the slowest speed in the history of this ship, now making her ninetyninth round trip. Was put to sea in 1893. Part of the twenty-four hours we did not make five miles per hour, and the men in charge said that it was by far the worst storm they had passed through. The engineer on duty this day informed me that they had been notified by the weather bureau that they would run into a severe storm. Well, this time it was true. I asked him why they did not wait until the storm was over. He answered, We wait for nothing. We start out on time, and take our chances. But he said this was trying on the ship.

Supper time. Wind still going down. Sun set behind a cloud. Wife a little better. Ruth very sick. Has not eaten anything since Saturday noon. Up to supper, their dinner.

Wednesday, the 6th. Weather much better, but still cloudy. We are eighteen hours late; but with pleasant weather we shall still get into Liverpool Saturday, all right.

Noon. We have made 441 miles, much better than 240.

November 7. This is the best day we have had since Saturday, and have made 463 miles. Little Ruth is still very sick. Can not eat. I had her up on deck to get fresh air. Could not stand it long.

Morning of the 8th. The weather still favorable. Nearly all hands up on deck. Wife is much better. Buth about the same. Morning of the 9th. We are in sight of Morning of the 9th. We are in sight of Irish coast.

Eight a.m. Arrive at Queenstown about 1: 20. Get off here. I get a morning paper,— first I have had for a week. I notice this storm was quite general. Take a man out of a city where he gets morning and evening papers, and send him out on the ocean, there to be tossed with the storm, is quite a change. Still we are grateful that it is as well with us as it is. Ruth is much better. At noon she ate for the first time for a week. We have made 480 miles,—the best run yet.

At ten p. m. we landed in Liverpool. We were met by Mr. Williams, of the Gwalia House. He informed me that Bro. G. T. Griffiths had been in the city same morning, but had to leave for Manchester, on the six p. m. train, to fill an appointment. We staid in Liverpool till Monday, eleven a, m. Took the Great Western railroad for Cardiff. Arrived there 6:16 p. m. Were met by Bro. Gould. I said to my wife, "That is Bro. Gould." Went on to the house. Saw the two in their pleasant home. My dream was fulfilled. So plainly had I seen them in the dream, if they had been placed in a crowd of five hundred I could have picked them out. I ask my infidel friend, What brought this to mind, if there is no God? I had never seen them before, nor had any one described them to me. If it had not been for the dream, the three days storm would have been trying on me; but in the darkest hour there was comfort in thought, We shall arrive in safety, as we did. We staid with Bro. and Sister Gould several days; then moved to our present quarters, over the church room, where we have two furnished rooms, and intend to make it our home while here. I shall close for this time. I hope to get to work at once. We are all well.

WILLIAM LEWIS. 137 Severn Road, CARDIFF, Wales, November 20.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 25.

O. J. TARY:

Dear Sir:—If this were a debate I would hold you to the incontrovertible fact that the so-called "witnesses" to the truth of Mormon inspiration have impeached themselves. This is an eternal clincher. Proving as it does beyond a doubt that Mormonism is false and fraudulent.

But your illogical method of investigation is again emphasized by the fact that you attempt to parallel the admitted changes in your Inspired Translation by the "various emendations" made by Alexander Campbell in the translation of the Living Oracles. He did not make a change in anything inspired of God. He changed only a translation made by men, like himself uninspired. No Protestant, nor Roman Catholic even, ever presumed to change the inspired record. Such folly was fittingly reserved for Mormons to exhibit!

You are in harmony with the majority of the "Josephites" in trying to save the "prophet" from the infamy of those polygamous "revelations." But the fact that Joe condemned it proves that polygamy existed. And the record is that he said the "accursed" thing would have to be destroyed or the Mormons would be compelled to leave the United States. A thing which his successor, Brigham Young, tried to do in plunging into the wild and unsettled territory of the far West.

But polygamy, bad as it is, is not the worst thing in Mormonism. Theologically the dictatorship assumed by Smith in contravention of the authority of Jesus Christ, is a greater crime than polygamy! Polygamy destroys morality, but the claims of Joe Smith dethrone the Lord Jesus Christ!!

The doctrine of the confiscation of the goods of the Gentiles, brought the powers of the world against Mormonism; and the doctrine of blood atonement justified the Mormons, in their own eyes, in the various murders committed by them.

"The prophet, Joseph Smith, Jun.," riding on a white horse as a military captain at the head of the Nauvoo Legion, in the name of religion, is the greatest travesty on revealed righteousness the world ever saw! What a contrast between Christ and those whom he sent on an errand of spiritual peace and good will, and this ignorant and conceited aspirant for worldly powers, pomp, and show!

I am astonished to know that some men can be gulled by such perversions of right-eousness, with such caricatures of divine things. The political assumptions of Joe Smith prove that he is in no way related to the Prince of Peace.

Believing all things proved to be of God, Your well-wisher,

W. B. F. TREAT.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 27.

W. B. F. TREAT;

Dear Sir:—Your promptness in answering my last letter suggests to me that you enjoyed it, and are anxious to hear from me again.

I really wonder what would be accepted by you as proof that anything was of God. I have proven to you that polygamy was not and could not be a part of the faith which you term "Mormonism," but belonged to the apostate church of Brigham Young. I have proven that there was no such thing in the church organized by Joseph Smith as what you call confiscation of the goods of the Gentiles. You have sufficient evidence to know that Brigham Young was not the successor of Joseph Smith, and that the evil doctrines introduced by him-Adam-God, blood-atonement, etc., - were no part of the faith of the true Latter Day Saints. Yet you brush all this aside by simply saying it is illogical, and then exhaust your vocabulary of words to express your contempt for all people that are so foolish as to believe-just what Jesus Christ taught-because when you get down to the real facts, and define what the enemies of truth denominate "Mormonism," it is nothing more nor less than the gospel of Jesus Christ, the same gospel of which Paul said, "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel, let him be accursed."

But of course it is difficult for you to comprehend how any same person can believe, in this enlightened age of the world, that God will keep his promises, or that Jesus meant what he said, when he told his apostles that certain signs should follow those who telieved and obeyed their preaching. And when you will not accept or believe the testimony of Christ and Paul, it is not strange that you will not accept the testimony of the servants of Christ in this age of the world. Christ told his disciples that they were not above their Master, and as he had been persecuted and evil spoken of, so would they. Your ungentlemanly, un Christianlike, and unsupported charges against Joseph Smith, can only find a parallel in those who persecuted Christ and his apostles anciently. And in this you are (perhaps unintentionally) fulfilling the words of Christ.

Of course nothing I might say could be logical (in your estimation), but your logic is so grand, so sublime, in arguing that because Joseph Smith condemned polygamy it only proves that it existed. And if anything bad existed, of course he was responsible for its existence, no matter how much he had proclaimed against it. If that is Campbellite logic, I must say I can not accept it.

Again, your statement that the claims of Joseph Smith "dethrone the Lord Jesus Christ," is quite logical (?). it is a very great crime for Joseph Smith to call the attention of the pecpeople to the ancient order of things, urging upon them the necessity of the same organization, the same laws governing the church, the same officers, the same spiritual gifts and blessings that characterized the church that Christ set up, teaching that God is unchangeable, that he will keep his promises to those who obey him. Of course such teaching as that "dethrones Christ;" and how the disciples of Alexander Campbell do honor him by urging the "restoration to the primitive faith" as set up by Campbell, embodying the following characteristics: The officers that God set in the church are not needed now-except the elder and deacon, the least in importance. Yet the New Testament says God put them there for the work of the ministry and the edifying of the saints. But, since Alexander Campbell "restored" the primitive "Jerusalem" gospel, God has changed his mind, and just to please Mr. Campbell (and to overthrow Mormonism) he has concluded to get along without about four fifths of the requirements of the early church! If any one dares to remind these wise "disciples" that God is unchangeable, and teach that God can and will keep his promises in this age of the world, he is at once put down as a "Mormon," a fanatic, a follower of Joe Smith, and all such expressions of sublime wisdom, as they alone are the custodians of.

It was terrible to think of Joseph Smith correcting by the power of inspiration, the errors that had crept into the Bible through the many translators during many centuries of darkness. But Alexander Campbell, making no claim to inspiration, can take up a translation and correct it to suit himself! Who made him the custodian of the "Living Oracles?" He could tell just what was inspired and what was not I suppose, because he was not inspired. This reminds me of the drunkard, who, staggering under the influence of intoxicants, imagines he is walking erect and every one else is staggering.

would be something like this: Because Christ reproved sin, and the apostles had occasion to condemn certain practices that crept into the church, it only proved that these things existed, and following up your deductions, must lay the blame for them on Christ and the apostles. That is just what it would do, if your way of arriving at conclusions, relative to Latter Day Saints, were applied to the early church.

I am glad to have the privilege of worship ing a God that is unchangeable, and to understand that all mankind will be rewarded according to their works, and not according to the proscriptions and judgments of religious bigotry and intolerance.

I have heard a great many things laid to the charge of Joseph Smith, but never before that he was an aspirant for "worldly honors, pomp, and show." If you were capable of feeling any compunction of conscience, I really think you would feel ashamed of that. and seek forgiveness for charging a man who sacrificed every opportunity for worldly honor in the interest of the Lord's work, with catering to worldly pomp. Yes, his life he laid on the altar of sacrifice, for he died-not a criminal-a victim of the same spirit of intolerance that drove the Puritan Fathers to the wilds of New England, and later banished Roger Williams from Salem. And the greater part of his sufferings were brought on him by those who professed to be followers of the lowly Nazarene. But a day of reckoning before the Great Judge will reveal the fact that many call him "Lord, Lord," and do not the things that he revealed in his word for their guide.

If you really want a contrast, I know of no better thing to cite you, than for you to take up the New Testament, and study the organization of the primitive church, its faith, spiritual gifts, and blessings; then compare that with the Campbellite institution you represent, and which its adherents claim to be the Jerusalem gospel "restored": a greater contrast will be hard to find.

I suppose you think that the many mean and contemptible expressions you make use of in referring to Joseph Smith and his work. go a long way toward condemning him. But you only furnish another contrast to the rule the Savior taught, and bring to mind the scripture, "As ye sow, so shall ye also reap." Much more might be said in regard to your inconsistency, but it does no good to prove anything to you, for as fast as I do you dodge off to something else, not willing to receive anything as proof that conflicts with your Campbellite logic.

May the Lord have mercy on you!

THE HOME TRAINING OF BOYS.

Boys need just as careful training as girls, if we would see the good results we desire. I have read that "boys are continually going wrong, when they have been trained to know the right." This was part of an answer to a letter from a man who had asked what he could do about his son, who was breaking the hearts of his parents by wrong-doing.

Can this be so? "When they have been trained to know the right!" It certainly seems inconsistent. Surely something must have been neglected. Surely if a boy is trained to truth and uprightness, temperance and good habits, nobility of thought and purpose, the result will be a good, honest, true man.

They need well-developed, well-trained bodies, and their mental, moral, and spiritual natures must not be neglected.

Boys must be trained and then trusted. Both parents must be very much interested, and very watchful and careful. Love must be given for love, respect for respect, and confidence for confidence.

A very strong bond can be built up between mother and son very early. If he is not repelled when he comes with his little confidences, he will be encouraged to come again. And this confidence between a mother and her boy is such a safeguard!

In some homes, certain teaching is left to the father-well and good, if it be done thoroughly and in the best way. But a mother can talk just as freely to her boy as she does to her girl, and it is just as proper.

When a little boy asked his mother a question about a little garment she was making, she told him all about the tiny baby she was expecting. When the grandmother heard about it, later, she said: "I don't see how you could have done it!"

Ah, but it was a sweet, happy time as they looked over all the little clothes together. His brother was away, and he was to tell him about it when he came home. In the afternoon of the day he came, mamma said: "Have you told H- our secret?" and he said "Yes." So they all went upstairs together, and mamma and brother showed H- the little garments made so daintily, and folded and laid away so carefully.

How they love the little sister who wore the clothes, and another who came later, and how careful they are of them-how they help mother to watch over them that they come to no harm! Oh, boys need to be kept very near to mother's heart!

This mother did not neglect to teach her boys of the mystery of life and of their duty to themselves in guarding their health and morals that they might become strong, happy men. She read and talked with them very freely. Now that they are great boys, nearly men in stature, this confidence remains, and is still growing.

In some homes this teaching is ignored altogether. It can not be begun too early, but if it has been neglected in the beginning, begin somewhere—only, begin. Do not let the boy grow up without it. When a child begins to ask questions it can be answered in a very simple way at first, until it can understand more.

We must not be blind to the fact that there is in children an age when there is "an awakening of the moral consciousness," when boys as well as girls need especial care and attention.

Boys must be occupied and interested, and where mother has a great deal to do they can be taught to do housework nicely and quickly, and can help wonderfully well.

I know some boys who have always helped their mother since they were little fellows, when she had no outside help and needed them. Now, they can do almost anything about the house, and do it cheerfully and willingly when it is necessary for them to do it.

They can sweep, dust, make beds, wash dishes—nicely—clean floors, etc., etc., and do ever so much cooking. They can cook steaks and chops, potatoes and vegetables, make a beef roll or veal loaf, and prepare a turkey or fish, fowl or game for the oven; they can roast, fry, or fricassee. They can make pie, puddings, cake and caudies, salads, custards, ice-cream and ices, desserts with fruit and gelatine. In fact keeping "bachelor's hall" is nothing. They can be housekeepers.

Of two days, out of the many when the boys have "kept house," this mother speaks with happy tears in her eyes, and she says she will never forget the home-coming. Both days she had attended gatherings of mothers. One was in the early summer, and when she came home with her heart full of all the good things she had beard, dinner was ready. There was steak and new potatoes and green peas and new cabbage, with ripe strawberries for dessert, and though it sounds simple enough, any one knows how much work it was for young people, especially boys, to prepare everything ready for the table.

The other day was a very cold day in midwinter. She had spent a delightful day—had had a feast of things educational—a rare treat for her; and, as before, the dinner was ready, and the wee girlies, sweet, clean, and happy. More than that, the kitchen and pantry floors had been cleaned and oiled, "to surprise mamma."

What did she care that they had forgotten to lay something down at the dining-room door, and that there were spots of oil on the dining-room rug? She said not a word, but was just happy that they had thought to do it for her; and they were happy that they had done it for her, too. The first opportunity they took the rug out of doors and gave it a good cleaning with gasoline, and it was as good as ever.

Once this mother had some work to finish, and was bewailing the fact that if she stopped to sweep and clean the house she could not do it, when the boys said: "You keep right on with your work, and we will do it;" and they did, from "attic to cellar." When they came to the room where the mother was, they carried her table into a room they had cleaned, and then lifted her bodily, chair and all, and carried her to it, amid much laughter and merriment.

She thinks it is good for the boys to allow them to help, and it saves her many a weary hour of hard work, when she has no outside help. Returning home from church, one Sunday, she found one of the boys ahead of her; he had put the chicken on to fry, and the vegetables on to cook. His brother had prepared them all before, as well as to lay the table with clean white cloth, and the dinner was proceeding as though there were girls in the house.

Two boys I know have "picked up" bicycle repairing, and earn many a dollar that way, besides being occupied and happy in their work. Boys can find time for housework or other work out of school, and still have time to play.

They need to be amused and entertained at home, and it pays to go to some trouble to make them happy. Mothers should enter into their play as well their work. One mother has had a little gathering twice a month, which her boys call "the club"—just a few boys of their own age in the neighborhood. In the winter they play games in the house, with sometimes a story read to them, and in the summer they play out of doors. Some sort of simple refreshment is not forgotten, and of course they enjoy that. Each one of her boys has had his little companions entertained in this way, and they never forget it, but always speak of it in an appreciative way.

This mother had a great help last winter in the form of a barrel of peanuts, which afforded amusement for a number of "club" days. The nuts had been in a railroad wreck and they had to pick out the whole ones. The boys visited and told stories while they picked, and then roasted them in the oven, while the mother made peanut candy. It made some litter in the basement and kitchen, but they always went to work to help clear it up without being told, when the feast was done.

It is during what has been called the "hobble-de-hoy" age that these home amusements seem most needed. Later, there are helps outside the home, such as the Young Men's Christian Association, classes in the gymnasiums, with the talks and lectures and sociables that are very good. A bright active boy can earn enough to pay his own dues without asking his parents for it. Whether or not they can afford to give it to him, it is a good thing for him to earn it. But no outside amusements can take the place of happy times at home.

Bless the boys! If we go about their training in the right way, I am sure they will not fail us, but will come out right in the end, for "boys' hearts are true, after all."

What wisdom we need! What patience and kindness and self-control! How much do the youth of our land need a consecrated, trained motherhood!—Hortense Sellon Cramer, in Motherhood.

Dear Sister Walker:—Since writing the article published by Motherhood the boys have added to their accomplishments golfball molding, and electrical work—repairing bells, etc. One of them runs a switchboard in the telephone office—has regular hours, out of school. I tell them to be careful not to be "Jack of all trades and master of none," but they seem to be doing well. They still find time to help me in the house. If they did not, I do not know how I could get through with it all, with this great family. They are manly boys if they do work in the house.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS. EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE last General Convention provided for the publication of a lesson help for a grade of children coming below the lowest primary Quarterly grade, a grade of "infants." There was a demand coming from the primary teachers for something more simple or adapted to the needs of younger children than the primary Quarterly seemed to be adapted to. To supply this demand, a committee of three of our experienced primary teachers was appointed to prepare and publish such help as they deemed suitable. This they have about ready. It is to begin with the lessons of next quarter. And all having a very young grade of scholars in their charge can not afford to miss giving them a trial. They will be regularly advertised in the HERALD and other church papers. Watch for it. Note what the committee says in the "Foreword" which will appear on cover of Study Hour, the infant lesson help. —ED.

"FOREWORD."

In the preparation of Study Hour, we have tried to keep before us the needs of the teachers of the very little ones in the Sunday-school, as far as we have been made acquainted with those needs. We have endeavored to supply material suitable for teaching children from three to eight years of age.

We realize the necessity for child study. The true teacher can only become such by studying child nature. In no other way will she so well be able to reach the child mind, or to understand the range of its comprehension or experience.

We especially urge that the teachers carefully study the readings we have given; that when possible they take up a regular course of child study, so they may be able to teach understandingly, with a thorough knowledge of each step taken, and the reasons therefor.

Lucy Lyons Resseguie, Dora Young, Audentia Anderson, Committee.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1. The constitution says that "all members under eight years of age are prohibited from voting." Because these are prohibited from voting, does that take from them the right to be represented at district conventions?

It does not.

2. In a school of forty, ten of which are under eight years of age, how many votes are they entitled to?

Four, one for every ten.

3. When a school elects as many delegates as it has votes in the convention, and but one of these delegates attends the convention, has that one delegate the right to east the full vote of the school if the school has not thus empowered him?

Yes. See paragraph 4, section 176, of the church "Rules of Order and Debate," which reads as follows: "The delegates present... shall cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed." Thus we see that the instruction for the one or more delegates to cast the full vote is superfluous, the provision being made in the rules of representation. If you do not want the full vote cast by a part only of the delegation, it will be necessary to so restrict them.

4. If one of the delegates be an officer of the school, will be have vote as an officer and also as a delegate?

Yes. Being placed on the delegation does not take from him his ex officio vote. But no person holding two offices can claim more than one vote therefor.

IMPROVEMENTS IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

Our work is not yet a perfect one, hence we forcibly feel the need of continuously seeking for that which will place us upon a higher plane and make our work more effectual. The evil allurements are so numerous that if we would win some from its ways it must be by our faithfulness to duty.

Success in our Sunday-school work is as perhaps some may suppose. A large attendance at one session does not prove that it is already acquired. It is only a sign of success coming "by and by."

It has not come, however, until some, through the influence of the Sunday-school, are led to embrace the gospel and have become workers therein. The school has but a short time in which to do its work, because, unless the foundation be well built while the child is young, there is danger of it not being sufficiently rooted to withstand the storms of life. For this reason are we desirous of improving our work that we may lay the foundation in the morning hours of life for a career of usefulness in our Father's work.

It is possible that

SOME HAVE CONCLUDED

"there is no more to do." If there be any, we hope they may see their error at once. The mind that is dissatified with the present state and has a determination to work for something better, is in a condition to make progress. It is then our duty to

DETERMINE OUR POSSIBILITIES

The school should be a cheerful place. Is it always so? When the superintendent feels a little blue or the teacher a trifle discouraged, is not the whole school or class affected by it? It is true there are occasions when we can not feel as happy over the condition of our work as we should like; yet for the work's sake we must conceal our feelings. Perhaps some Sunday we find but a few at the school when we had reason to expect a good attendance. Then, because of this, we lose our cheerfulness, and ruin the hour for those who did come. Are any of us guilty?

PUNCTUALITY IS NECESSARY.

Be on time always, if possible. The careless thought may sometimes enter your mind, "only five or ten minutes late." Yes, that may be all; but what if we, like the five foolish virgins, be a few minutes too late to partake of the "marriage supper of the Lamb?" It is hard to determine the injury we may do by our lethargy. The example we set to others is of so grave importance that we can not, if we love the work, be tardy.

PRAYERFULNESS AND STUDIOUSNESS are coupled together as prerequisite in accomplishing good. It has been truly said, "No one can become a power for good unless he live near to the spiritual fountain."

The Scriptures tell us to

PRAY OFTEN

lest we enter into temptation; and in another place, "Study to shew thyself approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Our efforts might be conducive of greater good if made more in the spirit of the gospel. Too frequently are we likely to forget ourselves and try to fill the places assigned us in our own strength, forgetting our dependency upon God. It is our duty to qualify ourselves as far as we can, and then implore the Lord to make up the deficiencies. Having done our duty in the way of preparing the lesson, we will not have to depend ALONE UPON THE QUARTERLY. What benefit is to be derived from going to a school where the teacher after having skimmed the lesson by asking the printed questions concludes the work is done? Were that teacher's idea a correct one, it would be almost as well for the scholar who had previously learned his lesson to remain at home. There would be nothing to interest him.

The true teacher's work, however,

but she realizes that within her lies the power to influence largely the future lives ofthose within her charge, and not until the members of the class feel a desire to take a higher step and become more like their Master has the teacher done enough.

IN SUMMING UP

the needed improvements we say, search out your faults, "examine yourselves," and wherever you find there is a possibility for you to take a step in the ladder of progress, do not delay action.

May the Lord help us to see our faults; and having seen them, may he give us strength to correct them.

JOHN A. HANSON.

LETTER advices from J. H. Lake indicate a degree of prosperity in his mission. He states that he has been able to be present at six different conferences, all having been attended by the spirit of direction and peace. The branch at Detroit is looking up nicely, Bro. N. A. Liddy doing a good work as a presiding officer. The work at Grand Rapids is in process of being adjusted. He writes, "I feel well in the gospel work."

THE work in Bro. R. C. Evans' field is in good condition. Some one hundred and sixty baptisms in the last quarter speaks well for the activity of the elders and the good faith of the local forces.

THE sermons at the Kewanee dedication, by Brn. E. L. Kelley and Heman C. Smith, were good and well received. The whole service was a success.

THE LATEST AND LAST WIFE OF THE PROPHET.

OGDEN, Utah, Nov. 21.-The death of Martha Knight Kimball Smith to-day at the age of ninety-seven years, at her home in Hooper, this county, brings to notice a custom of the Mormon church in the days past. She was the wife of Heber C. Kimball, at one time an apostle in the church, and at the same time was "sealed" for eternity to the original Joseph Smith, prophet, seer, revelator, originator, and founder of the church. Her first marriage was to Bishop Knight, who was bishop of Nauvoo, Illinois, at the time. Her marriage to Kimball occurred after the pilgrimage across the plains in 1850. By him she had one child. The spiritual or celestial marriage to Joseph Smith occurred at Nauvoo just prior to the death of the prophet. Mrs. Kimball was born in New York. She was a woman of more than ordinary strength, and retained her faculties up to the last. She was out of bed yesterday, and died at noon today. In Utah she has many children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, and great-great-grandchildren. She was the last living spiritual wife of the prophet. He now has them all. -St. Louis Globe-Democrat, No-

We have received several copies of the above newspaper notice of the death of Mrs. Martha Knight-Kimball, and publish it as a matter of news. Her great age, and the fact that she was one of the active pioneers in the settlement of Utah, some fifty-three years ago, would have been of sufficient celebrity to justify the notice of her death without the addition of the very doubtful notoriety of the statement that she was a celestial or sealed for eternity wife of Joseph Smith.

A statement of the same death in the Ogden Standard for November 21, says that Mrs. Knight was "sealed" to Joseph Smith in the Temple at Nauvoo 'in August, 1842," but, the fact that the Temple at Nauvoo was not at that time sufficiently advanced in building for work of that kind to be done in it, is strongly suggestive of the idea once expressed by James Hepworth Dixon, who writing of the fact that the Prophet Joseph Smith, notwithstanding his many reputed wives, had no children born to him in polygamy; suggests "His brethren have done well for him since his death;" i. e. that at the time this Mrs. Knight married Heber C. Kimball, "after the pilgrimage across the plains in 1850," she was also "sealed" to Joseph Smith "by proxy." It is a forceful argument of fact, both against the so-called revelation relied upon as the spiritual basis upon which the dogma is claimed to rest and the practice of the theory, that the statement of James Hepworth Dixon that no children were born to the Prophet Joseph Smith as the result of polygamous marriages, is true.

It appears that Mrs. Martha Knight Kimball was no exception to the rule; for though she was the mother of children, the sons and daughters of Bishop Vinson Knight, by which children she became a great great grandmother, and "had one child to Heber C. Kimball who died in infancy" as stated in the Ogden Standard for November 21, she bore no children to the Prophet Joseph. If she had been a wife to the Prophet, as she was to H. C. Kimball, how does it happen that no children followed such union? And the same question is pertinent in the other cases in which it is claimed he practiced the doctrine of plural marriage.

We regret to hear of the inroads of the "pale reaper," but, as death is but the opening of the door through which the spirits pass to the home on the other side, we can not grieve. when the aged, weary, and worn, are called to go hence. We may be pardoned in this instance for stating that if this aged sister was the last of the "celestial wives" of Joseph Smith the Seer, then his living legitimate children by his only legal wife Emma Hale will no more be annoyed by the repetition of such notices as the above. "Let us have peace."

"JOSEPH SMITH'S IMITATOR."

According to the Denver Times, an "up to date" "imitator" of Joseph Smith has appeared in New York. Sr. E. B. Lewis, of Denver, sends us the following clipping from the Times, issue of November 27:

JOSEPH SMITH'S IMITATOR USED TYPE-WRITER FOR "OAHSPE."

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 27.—(Associated Press)—What is regarded as a promulgation similar to that of the founding of the Mormon church has just been made public by Dr. Harry St. Clair, who says he possesses a new Bible, which he calls Oahspe. This forms the basis on which he expects to found a new Already he has won many folreligion.

The similarity to the so-called Mormon revelation is that the agents worked in somewhat the same way. The story of Joseph Smith and his alleged conference with the Divine Spirit are well known. But the agent of the sect founded on the book Oahspe worked along more up-to-date lines. He used a typewriter instead of pen and ink.
Dr. St. Clair explained the movement in the following language: "The new Bible was written through the instrumentality of Dr. J. B. Newbrough, a dentist, of New York. Finally he was directed by an angel to get a typewriter, which he did, and applied himself industriously to learning, but with indifferent success. One morning two years later, as he was sitting at the typewriter, the light struck on the backs of his hands and they begau to work the machine and kept it up for fifteen minutes. The doctor was told not to read what he had written, and he obeyed reverently. One morning he looked out of the window and beheld the line of light extending heavenward. Above his head were three pairs of hands, fully materialized, and behind him was an angel with her hands on his shoulders. The result was the "Oahspe," which the dentist was ordered to spread throughout the world.

The Times for December 4, contains an account of the new sect securing a foothold in Denver. The believers in Oahspe are, according to the Times, working in a quiet way, living up to the precepts of their book, and ask only to be let alone until they can demonstrate the practicability and beauties of their religion. They expect to be able soon to build a church in Denver, and in the spring to erect an orphan asylum near Denver. The Oahspe directs them, even to the most minute detail of every day life.

They are known as Faithists; and though but few at present, they are said to be very zealous, and firmly believe that in a few years their numbers will exceed those of the Christian Scientists. They insist, however, that their faith is in no wise like the Christian Scientists. They do not profess to heal diseases.

We quote the following from the Times of December 4:

The theory is that of the vegetarian socialists, having a community of goods, and at the present all the members are living by the sweat of the brows of a few who work and share the proceeds with the rest. All of the money necessary for forwarding the work is furnished out of the earnings of the members here.

The leaders in the movement are George Clark Rose, L. W. Van Dyke, C. D. Suter. J. D. Elliott, and two or three ladies. The ladies are very active in the work as the reforms to be brought about are those in which women can play a prominent part. One of these is the care of orphaned children. They have now entirely dependent upon them six orphan children, whom they are rearing in the faith taught by the Oahspe. The children are fed exclusively on cereals and nuts. They are given a cold shower bath every morning and evening, and are in the yeary best of health as the promise of the Oahspe insures.

The history of their book, according to the Times, is as follows:

The history of the origin of their bible, the Oahspe, is interesting. It was written by a New York dentist named J. B. Newbrough, now dead. He claimed that the book was written by him upon a typewriter, but that it was dictated by the ruling spirit of the universe. The doctor had for years investigated occult phenomena, spending an hour each day in meditation and study. One day as he sat at the typewriter his hands began to write as if moved by some unseen force. He did not know what he was writing until he took out the page and read it. It proved to be a message from spirits. They said that they wished to write a book, and use him as the amenuensis or medium. He was admonished that he must not read any of the writing until it had been finished.

The result was the Oahspe, a work as large as the Christian's Bible. It contains detailed directions as to correct living. It expounds a new system of spiritualism. According to this there is a great central God, who sublets the universe in parcels to lesser gods or spirits.

The spirit who had previously ruled this part of the world had not discharged his duties to the satisfaction of the paramount spirit, who about fifty years ago removed him and put a new charge d'affaires in his atest.

The new power is at present engaged in straightening out matters, introducing systems, bringing order out of a chaotic condition.

As to the expectations of the Faithists, the Times states:

As the membership increases the Faithists will branch out into a powerful organization, all working together for the ends named in their bible. They have already chosen a site east of City Park, where they will erect their home and asylum. All of the children will be reared in the faith they profess and as taught in the Oahspe. Those members who are at present not earning their living, are supported by those who have work, and altogether it is a big family of workers. The bread winners seem to be as well satisfied with the scheme as those who do not work.

The Oahspe is to the Faithists what the New Testament is to the Christian, the Koran to the Mohammedan, or the teachings of Buddha to the Buddhists.

It is a beautiful theory of brotherhood, and is practical and helpful.

Previously to Sr. Lewis sending the above clippings we had not heard much of the Oahspe, and of course do not know as to the accuracy of the Times' report. We should be pleased to have some of our brethren of the Colorado field investigate this and give us a writeup of it if found worthy of such.

"TRIBUTE TO WHOM TRIBUTE IS DUE."

Bro. Henry A. Stebbins handed us the following letter from Sr. Stella Hart, of Washington, Kansas, which we are pleased to give space for the reason that it discloses one sectarian woman who has the courage to give tribute where she found it to be due.

October 13, 1901.

This is a beautiful Sabbath evening. The weather is getting cool enough to make one think of winter.

This morning I attended Children's Rally Day service at the Methodist church. There were flowers pinned on the very old people, and they were invited to seats at the front. After the services carriages waiting at the door took them to their homes. There was singing by the choir, recitations, and singing by the children. The first two recitations were: "The Old-fashioned Sundayschool," and "The Twentieth Century Sunday-school." They were splendid!

The closing address was by Mrs. Wayland, a lady that spent the summer in Utah. She told of her travels, the beautiful things she saw, her experience in learning to float in the waters of the "Great Salt Lake." She spoke of the temple, tabernacle, and great pavilion, owned and controlled by the Mormons. She said: "You may smile when I speak of the Mormons; but, take the plural wife system and such evils from their doctrine and theirs is the purest religion now on earth. I wish we all knew more of it.

This lady who has been to Utah speaks of the things she saw there in quite a different strain to what Mrs. Mary Clarke DeVore, who claims to be a "returned missionary," from Utah, does. At a weekly meeting of the Presbyterian ministers, held in Witherspoon Hall, Philadelphia, November 25, it is reported that she said:

I come to you as a woman with a price set on my head by agents of the Mormon church; whose footsteps are dogged by them, even in your city, and who dares not go out after dark, even in Philadelphia, for fear of being attacked by these men.

We can readily believe that Mrs. Mary Clarke DeVore may be "afraid to go out after dark;" but that a price is set on her head by Mormons or their agents, or that she is in any danger from those people, we do not believe.

The treatment accorded to the believers in the Book of Mormon, divine and present revelation, and the angel's message, by Presbyterians since Joseph Smith first stated that he had seen an angel and received a message from the Lord, has not been such as to inspire either respect or beget confidence in the professed Christianity of Presbyterianism, or its advocates.

From what we saw in Utah of the conduct of the representatives of the Presbyterian Church toward the "Mormons," as they called them, in prosecuting their missionary work, we can very easily imagine how Mrs. DeVore managed hers, in such way as to provoke resentment on the part of those she was ostensibly trying to help. Presbyterianism is but poorly provided to attract the favorable attention of those who have in the past believed, or do now believe, in the angel's message, whether in Utah or out of it.

We spoke in Hiram several years ago; and though our discourse was antagonistic to a part of the faith of the people whom we addressed, we received respectful treatment, and neither saw nor heard anything that suggested a thought of our being in danger. We preached in many of the towns and cities of Utah, Montana, and Idaho, where the inhabitants were adherents to the faith of the Utah dominant church; and if we were ever in danger from that people, we did not know it. Of others' experience we do not state, but only of our own.

HENRY BIERMAN, a mining prospector in Mexico, has, according to advices from El Paso, Texas, made an important archæological discovery. The Philadelphia Inquirer for November 25 says of it:

The discovery was of a vast subterranean system of chambers which are rich with ornamentations of sculptors and mural designs. It was evidently once a temple of the ancient inhabitants of Mexico, who flourished and passed away before the keels of Columbus or Cortez floated in the waters of the Western World.

Mr. Bierman was in the beautiful canyon De Los Movillos, not far from Ciudad Victoria, in the State of Tamaulipas. On his way down the canyon he felt the ground giving way beneath him, and the next he knew he was in a half-concealed pit.

There he saw strewn about many ancient implements of warfare and cookery, decorated with inscriptions in ancient and unreadable hieroglyphics, and many carvings of men and animals. He found room after room in this great underground temple or palace. All were filled with prehistoric relies. In some rooms Mr. Bierman found alters with carved idols of stone standing back of them.

"VISIONS DUE TO DISEASE,"

The following appeared in the Philadelphia Record for November 25, being an Associated Press dispatch:

London, Nov. 24 -- Sir Thomas Lauder Brunton, the great medical authority, in an address here this week to the Medico-Psychologocial Association on 'Theories, Apparitions, and Visions," declared that visions are a peculiar class of disease, notably epilepsy.

In his opinion the seer of Biblical history was only an epileptic. Sodium salicylate, used for rheumatism, often had the same effect on the nerves. Certain forms of headache produced peculiar zigzag apparitions, which he thought more accountable for fairies than anything.

In Sir Thomas' opinion, if Mahomet had been dosed with bromide of potassium when he had visions there would have been no Koran and no Mohammedism, for there seems to be little doubt that the visions were the result of physical disease.

Some time ago we made editorial mention of the announcement of Dr. Koch that tuberculosis could not be transmitted from bovines to human beings and vice versa. The eminence which Professor Koch has attained as a specialist in tuberculosis attached wonderful weight to his statements concerning the disease. Dr. George D. Barney, of Brooklyn, New York, sometime before the tenth of November last, inoculated a cow with matter taken from a consumptive boy. On November 10 he inoculated Miss Emma H. King with matter taken from the cow, to test whether or not bovine tuberculosis could be transmitted to human beings, Miss King being willing to thus offer herself as a probable sacrifice that science might be benefited. The Chicago American of December 15 made the announcement that she had developed consumption of a virulent character, and is now being treated by Dr. Barney, who thinks he can cure her from the disease he introduced into her system. He says that by this experiment he has proven that bovine consumption can be communicated to man, that tuberculosis of man can be communicated to animals, and that Prof. Koch was wrong when he said that there milk of tuberculous cattle.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

J. W. Metcalf writes from Louisville, Kentucky, December 9:

Since I last wrote I have baptized six persons, and Bro. J. M. Scott has baptized four. Others are near. Go to Hardin County in a few day to baptize a woman who has been a Baptist for forty years. I think others in that community will follow her.

I have made two real good openings which think will furnish good harvest. The branch here is alive, and we have good meetings.

Bro. W. D. McKnight writes from Blackwell, Oklahoma, December 11, that things are prosperous there, and the new crop of wheat excellent. He writes:

Since I last wrote you, my brother, E T. McKnight, his wife and daughter, of Benton, Iowa, and a Sister Brown, of Leon, Iowa, all good Saints, have moved here, making in all eight members now living in our young progressive city. If we only had a resident elder, one used to preaching in a town of 3,500, I think a branch could soon be built up. Sister Brown is teaching music. I and my brother are selling real estate, and Bro. A. F. Lambert is owner and manager of the Lambert Opera House, the only one in the city.

Bro. W. S. Causey writes from Bandera, Texas, December 2:

The work here is about on a stand-still, and we are to meet on the seventh of this month to see if we can arouse the brethren to a sense of duty. Bro John Harp expects to be with us. He is well liked here. If we had a few more like him down here we could soon revive the work and set things in order.

Bro. E. H. Thomas, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, writes on December 12:

Our new chapel will be ready for opening service by the first Sunday in the new year. Will renew my coming year's subscription soon—couldn't live without the HERALD. I wish to assure ye editors that I receive food from the HERALD which I value in dollars and cents many times above its subscription price. I read it while my lunch gets cold; and as a farther evidence of substantial appreciation I propose to hustle for some new subscribers to your valuable paper, which will be forthcoming ere long.

Sr. L. F. Williams writes on December 13, from Danstown, West Virginia:

I am an invalid, and all my comfort is in reading, and I love the HERALD better than anything else.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Sr. Florence Triplett, LaBelle, Missouri, in renewing for the HERALD, writes that she is the only one of our faith in that community, and asks prayers that God may send the light into that part of the world.

In HERALD for November 27, the date of the delivery of the lecture on history, by Bro. Heman C. Smith, is given as October 27. It should be November 3, as on the date given the lecture was omitted, for proper

Sr. James E. Spaun, Chillicothe, Missouri, December 4, renewing for HERALD, states that she and the HERALD are old friends, as it has made her weekly visits for twentywas no danger in either the meat or | four years. She says she can not do without the HERALD and it will be welcome at her house as long as she lives. She likes to send it to her friends.

Electric railroad construction has been carried on to such an extent along the southern shore of Lake Erie, that electric cars are now being run between the cities of Cleveland. Ohio, and Detroit, Michigan. Indeed. one can go from Akron, Ohio, to Detroit on electric cars, and it will probably be only a short time till the lines will be connected east into Pitts. burg, Pennsylvania.

The Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school, of Lamoni, at their Thanksgiving Day exercises raised sixty-two dollars for the benefit of Graceland College. An example worthy of emulation. If the Sunday-school children can raise this much, how much more should the older ones do? The Sunday previous, small envelopes were distributed, containing slips on which was to be written three things for which the donor was "most thankful." These envelopes, containing the donations, were handed to the treasurer of the Sunday-school as the children performed a grand march to appropriate music from the organ.

Bro. J. W. Whitley writes from Bridgeport, Washington, that he has been looking for a long time for an elder to come and work in that place. and thinks there are people there who would obey the truth when they hear it.

The St. Paul Globe for Sunday, December 8, contains a good write up of the "Latter Day Saints" of Lamoni. The historical sketch of the church was furnished the Globe by Bro. Heman C. Smith, and the article is illustrated by cuts of the church building, Graceland College, the HERALD Office, and the Saints' Home, and portraits of Joseph Smith, A. H. Smith, W. H. Kelley, E. L. Kelley, John Smith, and H. S. Salisbury. An epitome of our faith is also given. The article does us justice, and those who desire a brief history to place in the hands of investigators will do well to procure copies of the Globe.

publication has new launched by the Sunday-school Association, and is being published by the Herald Publishing House. It is Study Hour, edited by a committee appointed by the last General Convention. The committee is Lucy Lyons Resseguie, Dora Young, and Audentia Anderson. The object of Study Hour is to assist the primary teachers by supplying "material suitable for teaching children from three to eight years of age." The price is forty cents per year, or ten cents per quarter, and it appears quarterly. We believe it will be gladly received by the primary teachers and found valuable, as the editors have all had much experience in teaching the little tots.

POINTS ON THE WAY OF TRAVEL. -NO. 4.

BY E. L. KELLEY.

A ride of two and one balf hours from London landed us on the pier at Dover, a strongly fortified town in the southeast of England, situated on and at the foot of a range of high bluffs extending along the coast as far as the eye can see, overlooking the celebrated Straits of Dover. It is a rough, picturesque coast, and the ocean waters surge to and fro, dashing against the great, coarse gravel beds, which roll and grind together with a harshly grating noise, as they are tumbled up by the swell and sway of a constantly throbbing tide, which industriously performs its work of reducing the rock barriers to the rich sediment, that causes the earth to spring forth in strength and beauty of fruit and flower. long, glistening steel guns noticeable from every rampart on the steep hills are set with face to the eastward, as if looking for some terrible foe to arise from the thick gray and to the eye, impenetrable mists which hang over the distant waters; while all around us is a busy scene of tramping feet and rolling carts, as the passengers change, and freight and baggage are hurriedly transferred from the panting train to the outgoing steamer.

The heavy thud-like report that is borne to the ear from the distant heights, reminds us that England is likewise busy; and glancing backwards we notice squads of soldiers hurrying back and forth over the distant drilling grounds, to attain perfection in the art of war, and to maintain that standard of strength and discipline in dealing out death. which 'tis said, guarantees the peace of the world.

Strolling along amidst the bustling, bundling crowd, we reach one of the bridges which leads from shore to vessel, and meet a polite gentleman in uniform, who takes hold of grip and umbrella with as much assurance and ease as though we were the special guests of the occasion, depositing them where a pleasant seat is found upon the aft deck, and, lifting his cap, makes a gracious bow, as he reaches for a couple of sous that the law of custom has given to him by a reasonable guarantee. We are now ready for the passage marked twenty-one miles, to Calais: and promptly at eleven o'clock a. m., the time fixed for the ship's departure, its lines are cast off and the stately vessel moves out upon the swiftly flowing waters. It is scarcely well under way, however, when new scenes and surroundings force themselves upon the attention. Men and I train which stands near by to receive women of changed garb and manners stroll upon the decks, and in contrast with the indifferent customs in the islands, they present in studied fashion of dress and carefully parted whiskers. or curling mustache, a type as though belonging to a new race, the distinguishing marks of which were pretentious airs and more tastefully fitting garments. Listening to the conversation for a moment in which so many seem delightfully engaged, not a single familiar sound is recognized from all the chat and noise, and for the first time we begin to realize what it is to be among a new people, with wholly new and little understood language and ways.

Thirty minutes had scarcely elapsed after leaving the wharf when there was noticeable to the eastward, through the lifting mists, a low, level line of country stretching north and south far in the distance, the low dunes of which formed such a contrast to the rocky bluffs we had just left behind, as to wholly preclude the idea that there ever had been a close union between the now widely separate lands. Just one hour and twenty minutes after leaving Dover, our vessel drew alongside the wharf at Calais, France.

This town of French mould and build is low and flat, and has the appearance of being less than a dozen feet above the level of the sea. The familiar military embankments about it are the most distinguishable features of the coast-line, and the frowning guns that keep watch from every elevation, unlike those upon the opposite side of the straits, invariably point their mouths of fire and smoke to the westward. Happily for the people of both shores, the sea performs faithfully its vigil of maintaining the full twenty one miles breadth of water between these dogs of war, and despite the efforts of man to overturn, sustains the divine decree announced to the world by the apostle, that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and their bounds of habitation." Thus Gaul and Briton are cautiously hedged about; and the magnificent cities, which adorn the domain of each, bear evidence of the wisdom in the divine purpose which ordereth all things well.

Passing from the vessel into the custom house near by, our luggage is duly inspected by the new line of officers whom we find quite pleasant and gentlemanly in the performance of this duty, and we then make our exit into the railway station of Calais. Here everything is to be learned over. Each department and room of accommodation has a new appellation, and the passengers bears only the words: 'Nord Trains Rapides Nord," with certain short straight marks on the side of the cars, one mark indicating first-class passage, two marks secondclass, and three, third-class passage. It was at once apparent that the first thing to be learned in crossing the line into a new country was its money system and we cautiously drew forth a handful of French silver and copper coins obtained a few hours before in London, and began examining and counting. Experiences in England for two months had already taught the lesson that it is not best to be over confident in one's self in the money changing business. After arriving in the islands and calling to memory our schoolboy knowledge of pounds, shillings, and pence, declared by the books to be English money, it was but natural to go out and confidently enter upon business with the great world; but when a small article had been purchased and the lady clerk an. nounced the price to be, "a tuppence 'apenny," it took some ten minutes time figure out the size and weight of the kind of coin necessary to settle the bill, and we retired for a new lesson in coinage. It was learned that the terms used in actual business in the British realm are, the guinea, pound (or sovereign), crown, half crown, shilling, sixpence, fourpenny bit, thrippence, tuppence, penny, 'apenny, and farthing.

Comparing with United States money the ratio is as follows:

4 shillings
5 shillings
1 shilling .	 	 	24
sixpence.	 	 	12
four penny			08
thrippence	 	 	06
tuppence	 	 	04
penny			02
'penny			01
farthing	 	 	$0\frac{1}{2}$

The monetary systems of France and Italy are much more simple and practical, and less difficult to compare with United States money.

In France the centime is the smallest unit of value; and in Italy the same piece of money except the State stamp forms the smallest unit of value and is called the centesimi.

The French coin:

$ 19 U.S. 100 centimes, 1 franc= 5 " 1 sou= 10 " 2 sou= 1 napoleon (gold coin)= 3 80

Italian system:

100 centesimi 1 lira= $ 19 U.S. 5 '' (1 sou)= 01 1 silver scudc= 88 1 gold carlinc=

In business the 5 and 10 centimes pieces (or centesimi, copper). the 20 centesimi (nickel), the 1 and 2 franc pieces (silver), and 1 and 2 lira pieces (silver), are always used in the country of the coinage; but the smaller pieces of both countries are neither accepted in business nor at the banks when they get over the border of their own home. Coins of larger values of either country may be used in the other at a small discount.

Having thus posted for travel on the continent we enter the train of the Northern Fast Express Company, and soon are off for Paris, three hundred kilometers (186 miles) distant, which distance is made in three hours and forty-five minutes. The atmosphere was clear and the sun shone brightly in France; and it was easy to see that the soil in many parts of the country was fairly rich and well cultivated. Unlike the islands which we had been over in Britain, few hedges or fences were to be seen and the various small holdings were indicated almost wholly by the kinds of crops cultivated and paths of division. Upon leaving Calais the country is flat; but after going beyond fifty miles into the interior, it is gently rolling, or broken and elevated, presenting an appearance after the garnering of the grain. similar to the finely cultivated prairies of Illinois and Iowa. It was also apparent that the people were far behind these States in agricultural implements and appliances. The French and Italian plows, rakes, and harrows look very ancient to an American; and the only work animals to be seen on the farms, generally speaking, are the yoked oxen. The newspapers speak of efforts on the part of France to arrange the tariff system so that American agricultural implements shall be admitted to the country free of duty; if this can be done, certainly that in dustry in the United States will have a great, rich country to supply; and before France is filled up, her slower neighbor to the south and east, Italy, will have been awakened from the fogs of the ages, and a still greater demand for these goods be made

Our train proved to be a little nearer the American type than those of England, the accommodations up to the average first-class, and the run was made with but few stops. The term depot, for railway station house, is not used in England nor on the continent. To ask an English policeman (or "bobbie" as the people call them) to direct you to the London Northwest, or Midland depot, is about the same as speaking French to him; but if the word station is used it is quite different.

At four o'clock fifty minutes p. m., we were in the Great Northern station in Paris, and things looked strangely enough, 'till our city train turned into Rue Lafayette, and continued in this to near the Vendome Column, and passing this, soon landed us at the Hotel Windsor, Rue Rivoli, facing the well-known Jardin de Tuilleries. All these were somewhat familiar from general reading, and became at once interesting.

The streets of Paris are much wider and cleaner than those of London, and the buildings a story or two loftier in the general business portion. The sidewalks are quite broad, some as much as thirty feet on each side of the street; but a great part of this space is occupied by small tables arranged along near the buildings, where thousands of people are to be seen sitting any day and almost any hour of this season of the year, chatting and wining, and smoking and dining. classes visit these places seemingly, not only of the Parisians, but English, American, Russian, German, and the distinct sons of Abraham through Ishmael, with full dress of the chief of the Chaldees sixteen hundred years

After the dinner-hour at the hotel, eight o'clock p. m., I sauntered forth alone to take a glimpse of the fashionable city, viewing first the Colonne Vendome, erected by Napoleon to commemorate the success of French arms in the German campaign of 1805.

It is a circular column, 135 feet high by 12 in diameter, and its outside is covered with great battle scenes, in bronze, in which the emperor led the hosts of France to victory. The column seems to be a duplicate of the pillar of Trajan, at Rome, erected by that emperor soon after the beginning of the Christian era. The Vendome Column was thrown down by the Communists the 16th of May, 1871, and replaced in 1875, with the statue of Napoleon I., in the dress of a Roman emperor, on the top.

Continuing the walk, the Place L'Opera was soon reached, in which the idle and busy seemed to mingle in great throngs.

Evidently my walk and dress soon marked me out to the people as an American, for I was soon accosted in a tongue which was marked with more familiar accents than are usual to even England. The gentleman was very oily and assuring in his manner; and to show his great interest in the American traveler pointed out where I could get the latest English or American news at any time, and proffered even to lend his valuable assistance in showing me the greatest sights of Paris that very night, suggesting in a quieter and more familiar tone, that then would be the most opportune time, for my wife was now at the hotel, and he thought it more appropriate for a man not to have his wife along upon such a visit. course I coincided with the view, but did not intimate whether my wife was at the hotel or on some other continent; preferring that since he had begun to find out by the pumping process that he rely upon it. He was ingenious in talking and plied his craft very amusingly, till I wanted to be relieved and dismissed him. But I had gone only a short distance before I was again accosted by another guide, and then a third, all the best fellows in the city, having vouchers in pocket to prove this, and proffered to take me to any policeman and have themselves guaranteed the highest place as gentlemen and honorable men. However, as every place, with one single exception, that these parties proposed to take me to see was such that no gentleman ever ought to be found viewing, I had little trouble in determining their character without the aid of the police, and continued my observations for the evening without a guide.

Sunday morning, September 29, I took my first walk through the Garden of the Tuilleries, which proved to be a place of walks for the people. adorned at all angles and sides with pleasant figures in fair class of statuary, rather than the garden of growing fruits and flowers so common in America and England. Closely joined with this is the Jardin de Paris, and the Louvre. My first stroll took me to the latter place; and after viewing the fine monument to Gambetti and the type of the Lafayette monument which stands a short distance to the west of Gambetti's, I concluded since it was a day of free exhibit of the Musee Du Louvre to pass through

The equestrian statue of Lafayette will doubtless present a fine view of that noted and worthy patriot. Upon one side is the following inscription: "Tribute of the Daughters of the American Revolution to the illustrious memory of Lafayette. The friend of America, the fellow soldier of Washington, the patriot of two countries."

On the west side: "Erected by the children of the United States in grateful memory of Lafayette, soldier and patriot. Anno Domini, 1900."

The Louvre Museum is rich in paintings and sculpture, and the antiquities from Thebes, Memphis, Baalbec, and Babylon are wonderful indeed. Examining the huge piles to be found in the Louvre Museum and those of the British Museum, London, one is hardly more amazed at the artistic work of these ancient nations, than he is at the great zealousness of the present in breaking up their monuments and tombs and deporting them beyond the shores of their own countries.

The sarcophagi of kings and princes from the time of Rameses III. are scattered about these great halls as though they were the marbles of the youth of those times, while the dust and bones are thrown to the winds. After all, it is a question as to whether the ponderous tombs of the great are as secure as those of the humbler folk of the realm, even in this world; and it is quite fitting to note that in the next, place and station give no preëminence, but all depends upon the faithful performance of duty while here.

A walk in the afternoon up the Avenue des Champs Elysees for about one mile, brought me to the great Arc de Triomphe De L' Etoile, the triumphal arch of the Republic and Empire. It is the largest and most wonderful arch of the kind I have seen in any country; and the numerous scenes depicting the customs and events of the state, would take several pages to describe, so will be content with mere general features. The cost of the structure was nearly ten and a half million francs—over two million dollars. This proud monument was ordered by Napoleon and began in 1806, but never completed till 1836. It consists of a vast central arch ninety feet high by forty five in width, over which rise a bold entablature and architectural attic. The full height is 152 feet; and from the top of this I was enabled to see the city in all directions. Twelve great avenues center at this fine, elevated spot in the city, and much may be guessed of the social customs and display of Paris. when it is known that in this fine Sunday afternoon in September, no less than fifty thousand people were traversing, feasting, and making merry on these superb avenues. In Paris, too, it must be noted that there is a full display of "bells upon the horses," although I saw none which had stamped upon them, "holiness to the Lord," but the tinkle of the music of ten thousand of these tiny throats adds much to the animation and excitement of the surroundings. During this Sunday in the city I neither saw nor heard of church bells, or services, nor of any crowds flocking towards places of worship, and concluded if there were such, they were shut up from prominent notice by the festivities of a gayer pleasure.

Another index to the inner life and character of this great city of three and a quarter million inhabitants is in the fact that the statistical report for the year 1898 shows children born 59.162, of which 17,097 were illegitimate

From the Triumphal Arch I made my way to the Eiffel Tower, the most conspicuous object in Paris, and the highest tower in the world. It is three hundred meters (984 feet) high, built with three platforms, the first of which will accommodate, with walking room, six thousand people. There are 1,792 steps from the base to the top of the tower and the electric light at the summit, it is stated, can be seen at a distance of forty five miles. The second platform will hold 1.500 people, and the third 500, while 2.000 more may be simultaneously going up and down. The estimated cost was 5,000,000 francs, about $1,000,000

During the day incidentally fell in with a gentleman by the name of J. Borow, who had been in a number of the principal cities of the United States, fairly well educated in French and English, and is interpreter at the Institute Julien. I arranged with him to act as guide on Monday, and found him both honorable, honest, and competent. His addresse is Place de la Sorbonne No. 3, Institute Julien, Paris. I gave him an epitome of our faith; and as he is a gentleman who seems to care much for his wife and children and appreciate the moral side of life, I hope he will fully read and become interested in the same.

On Monday, the 30th, with guide I visited first the Palais Royal, built by Richelieu, the minister of Louis XIII., 1623, and much noted for two centuries. It is on a magnificent scale, for even the present century, and shows the luxurious habits of the French monarchs. The city hall is an imposing structure, five stories high above the basement, built in 1883, and has lettered upon the front: Liberte, Ecalite, Fraternite. This I learned, is placed upon all the public buildings in Paris. We cross the Seine by way of the Isle St. Louis, and notice on the Quai Aux Fleurs, the Hotel de Dieu, which proved to be a hospital, containing six hundred beds for the accommodation of the poor and suffering. Near by is the church of Notre Dame de Paris-(Our Lady of Paris), conspicuous on the front of which is a representation of the last judgment, where old Satan is represented as trying to hold down his side of the balances by pulling upon a long chain; but it is no go, he is found wanting. Statues of twenty eight French kings, from Dagobert to Philipe, extending from the fifty first to the one hundred twenty-first centuries, also ornament the front; and at a distance to one side of the square in front is the equestrian statue of Charlemagne, with a Roman warrior on either side holding the reins of the panting steed.

Down the Rue Dela Cite—City Street—we come to the barracks of the Prefect of Police, and the Garde Republicain, the latter being a section of police force consisting of three thousand men, under the minister of war. Passing farther on, we come to a fine statue of Napoleon I, upon which is seen the names, Lodi, Pyramids, Marengo, Ulm, and Dantzic, but turning to the other face the list of great battles is too long to make useful in a sketch like this.

The next important place to the traveler is the Tower of St. Jack, built in the fifteenth century. In the center of the arch stands the statue of the astronomer, Pescale. The Palais de Justice stands near by, and is quite interesting. Fine pictures of Napoleon, Charlemagne, Justinian, and St. Louis adorn the walls. In this building is the room where the court sat that heard the celebrated Dreyfus appeal, and granted him a new trial. The side seats accommodate fifty-six judges and four presidents, and forms a tribune of great men indeed. I had the pleasure of donning the scarlet robe of the President of the chamber. and the attendant gave me a memento of a penholder from the desk. Near by the palace is the Tribunal de Police Correctionelle, where persons arrested are first taken. The chapel just opposite is built with fifteen windows fifteen meters high, and has no walls, the windows being joined by buttresses. Services are held but once a year in the chapel, about the 15th of November, the first of the French year. In the Latin quarter of the city there are interesting remains of a portion of the palace, or hotel, built by Julius Cæsar. It is built of brick and stone, and the former seems to stand the wear of ages better than the latter. This building was also occupied two winters by Julian, Emperor of Rome, in the third century. Across south of this is the Academie de Paris; first built by St. Louis in 1245, and rebuilt within the last fifteen years. It is a fine structure, as are also the Universite de Paris buildings on the east, and the College of France.

One special feature of the Academy of Paris is that the lectures in the winter, with few exceptions, are entirely free, to any student of any nation.

One thing during the time I had passed in Paris was quite cheering to me, and that was I was fully convinced that I could by care and industry, if permitted to stay in the city, read, write, and readily speak the French language in a very few months. A young person with a fair knowledge of Latin and two or three years study of the French language in America, can get along nicely in the language, in two or three weeks time. All he will have to do is to educate the ear. I have been more than ever impressed with the importance of the study of Latin and French and German in our public schools and colleges.

My view of Paris I find is not yet over, although the article is lengthened too far already; so I will notice some special things and then pass on to Rome.

STEP OVER.

This invitation is herewith extended to all those who have not as yet given us the opportunity of placing their names as helpers of Graceland.

We discover that a letting up on our part of pressing the importance of our cause; cuts short our receipts from donations, and so the pen pusher must be about his business.

The trustees are faithfully working to keep up the fair name and usefulness of this church institution, as also to meet the needed repairs and necessary improvements upon the building, in all of which we have met with encouragement unsurpassed hitherto.

But, dear Saints, most any day Boreas may send frosty breath that will dispel our delightful Italian weather, and thereby increase running expense for coal bills, and an increase of students for the winter term will necessitate the employment of an additional instructor.

Now we ask those who have been halting between two opinions ever since last spring, to step over the line of doubt, fear, and disobedience, and unite your offering with that of those who have come up to the help of Graceland College, as advised and directed by him who doeth all things well.

Come. Saints, over on this side of the line, that you may share in the satisfaction of the advancement of this part of the church work, for in this case my humble opinion is that the following scripture will apply:

And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one honored, all the members rejoice with it.—1 Cor. 12: 26.

Should the church as a body fail, or refuse to comply or fulfill the demand made upon it by divine instruction. some members of the church will suffer, and it may eventuate through our negligence that we shall furnish the enemies of the cause with an occasion to say that we disobey revelation and thereby reject our prophet. If the opposers fail to avail themselves of this club, the disgruntled psuedomembers of the church will let (have let) us hear of our slothfulness, and disregard of instruction. God's rules never change: let us prayerfully and carefully examine and consider:

He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.-Matt. 10:40.

Come, step over and unite your efforts with those who receive God's servant of this day and date. Do not be satisfied with the dead past, but stand in the living procession of progress.

Here is another form of expression:

He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me.-Luke 10: 16.

Come over the line of prejudice or unbelief while we paraphrase the revelation, or instruction of 1901. He that heareth Joseph heareth Jesus the Christ, he that despiseth Joseph, despiseth Jesus the Christ, and he that despiseth the Christ despiseth God who gave the revelation of April. 1901. Once more we invite; step over and aid us.

In 1894, it was said to the church:

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time. - D. C. 122: 2.

Please step over the line and be in harmony with the above, and to the extent of your willingness, love for the work, and ability to help, bear the burden of the church, for he that will receive a prophet in the name of a prophet, will receive a prophet's reward.

Shall we all stand on one side of the line of obedience, and all unitedly receive the honor of God for being faithful to our trust and his word?

Should all accept the invitation to STEP OVER, and do so at once in a grand Christmas offering, with a long pull on the "weasel skin," then our Graceland would be free of debt bondage, and arise to greater useful-

Will you step over, dear Saints, to our aid?

Editors Saints' Herald: - We have been interested, and especially benefited, by the contents of some of the late HERALDS; especially by reading the reports of the White-Braden and Scott-Dillon debates, and the lectures on church history by Bro. H. C. Smith. Since I have been reading these lectures. I have been impressed that it would be a good thing if they were published in book form. It would be very convenient to put in the hands of the investigator and truthseeker, the regular history being too voluminous and expensive for this purpose. Sr. Corson's "Solilequy of Satan" is also very good, and points out many of the tricks, schemes, and methods of the Evil One.

I have just returned from an extended seige in the county of Highland, this State. Labored some in the vicinity of the Highland Branch. Through the efforts of Bro. Samuel Stethem, I was permitted to present the work in two new places; viz, Harriet and Marshall. Had fair interest at both places. Some prejudice removed, and many mistaken ideas corrected. Some opposition, but none of the face-to-face kind. Preached eleven sermons in each place. Beginning with Oc- I that Bro. R. J. Anthony in attempting to tober 30, I held meetings and preached for thirty-four consecutive nights. This indicates how we were favored with the weather. Never saw a finer November for holding meetings.

We find in this mission that there is a great lack of interest among the Saints. So many are indifferent and cold, and without spirituality. We often wonder how long it will continue to be so. We try to admonish and encourage to duty wherever we go.

Expect to try to push the work nearer my home until after the holidays, unless my brethren who are farther away call for my help; in such event I shall hasten to join In gospel bonds,

H. E. MOLER.

VICTOR, Idaho, November 26.

Editors Herald:-After our district conference in September, and labors with Brother Anderson in Snake River Valley, I spent a couple weeks visiting with my brother and family in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, Preached twice there, and he brought me back here October 27. We have since held twenty-six meetings in the Teton Basin, Brother John Condit being with me and occupying in two of them most acceptably. He returned from his home last week and reports ready for service. We have thus far baptized six, blessed ten children, organized two Sundayschools, and aroused the sympathy and interest of quite a number toward our work.

Brother Richard Drake and wife and their youngest son, Merritt, were baptized last Sunday, Sister Drake had been waiting some fifteen years for opportune time, and for Brother John to baptize her, and rejoiced in the further privilege of seeing her companion and son precede her into the water. A blessed influence of the Spirit was at the confirmation service, and blessing of seven of their grandchildren. These baptisms were primarily the results of blessings attending administrations and seeds sown in Cassia County, Idaho, in 1884 to 1888, and we are reminded that "bread cast upon the waters" will return. Others are very near the gate here and also in the lower end of the Basin, where I baptized Brother William Hendrickson and wife and Ben Hendrickson, the 17th inst., largely the result of labors of Brother Adolphus Hendrickson, who with his mother and six brothers and families have settled on Badger Creek, and are making themselves homes. The blessed Spirit of the Master was enjoyed at the confirmation and other meetings there. Brother Adolphus is rejoicing in the hope of soon having others of his mother's family with him in the great work of the Lord.

President Joseph F. Smith, of the Utah church, organized the Teton Stake last summer, and is reported to have prophesied that it would be one of the leading stakes of Zion; and we are wondering how long it would take us to fulfill the prophecy for them if we could keep up the good work at present rates. We have not been without opposition, nor escaped meeting the usual falsehoods. One of the amusing ones, however, was to the effect debate with this particular light had actually wilted before him, falling down at his feet and having one fit after another until he was afraid he would die. Sister Drake recommended him trying his influence on us; but she was informed they didn't believe in debating.

I had contemplated visiting Lost and Wood Rivers, and other sections this fall and winter, where preaching is greatly needed; but the work here is too important to leave at present, and we may fail to reach the points where we are expected. But we admonish the Saints that the hastening time is on, and we are in the work to try to labor as the Spirit directs, though anxious to visit the scattered members and see the work built up throughout this great State. We must try to be guided by the Spirit and wisdom.

I trust all the Saints will see the need of greater activity, and take hold with their might, coming forward with their tithes and offerings, that more laborers may be sent into the whitening harvest field. Bro. Henry R Evans, Malad City, Idaho, is our district agent, and will receipt for tithes sent in; and as much as possible they should be in his hands before the close of the year, that the Bishop's next annual report may show credit, and we be recognized as entitled to corresponding consideration by the next conference. Laborers are few and the harvest great. Let us be prompt and earnest, brethren, in the work of the Lord.

BRISBANE, Australia, Nov. 7.

Dear Brother Joseph:-I am seven hundred miles away from home, to raise the gospel standard in Queensland for the first time. There is a Brighamite branch here, and they sent to me for tracts some months ago, and after careful investigation many of them were convinced that your father was not responsible for polygamy. So when I arrived they were ripe for the Reorganization. I have been here one week, held four meetings, and have ready for baptism four who were among the chief workers in the branch, viz., Brother Lebherz, who was president of the branch, and his wife; and Brother and Sister Peisker, where I am now making my home. These will be the first fruits of the gospel in Queensland: and ere this reaches you I expect to baptize many more of these noble souls who thought they had the pure gospel when they were first baptized by elders from Utah; for they did not know of the evil doctrines of Brigham Young then, and were not certain till they read our literature, although some had strong suspicions by reason of the little hints the elders dropped now and then. Sister Lebherz, in answer to fasting and prayer, received evidence that something was wrong. So when in Sydney a few months ago she called at my house and got a few tracts of my wife, and after she returned home to Brisbane she sent for more, and they were freely circulated among the Saints.

This 'Josephite' literature soon raised a storm in the camp of Brighamism, hence our Brother E C. Berglin, who came here from the Sydney branch some few months ago, sent for me to come, as he could see that the Lord was opening an effectual door for us to raise the ensign of spiritual truth and liberty in the city of Brisbane.

I expect to baptize enough to organize a branch here before I return home to Sydney to attend our annual conference and welcome our beloved Patriarch Alexander to Australia's shore.

I received a few letters in answer to my appeal in Herald and Ensign for help to assist us to get a press and type for the Australian mission, and thank the donors very much, but must say that I am disappointed to know that I can count on my fingers all that responded to my appeal. But I will not complain; for if the cash is needed in the United States of America for more important work, we in Australia will struggle on the best we can, and not murmur. I am pleased to learn that Graceland College is receiving substantial aid, and hope all indebtedness will soon be canceled forever.

With love to you and all Saints in the land of Zion, I am, Your humble brother and missionary.

COALVILLE, Iowa, Nov. 29.

Editors Herald:—The Wight-Crow debate is past. It took place at Kalo, Iowa, lasting sixteen nights. This is the first debate ever held in this locality, although there has been a branch at Coalville for years, one and one half miles from where the debate was held. I will not attempt to give a report of the debate; but there are a few things connected with it to which I wish to call the attention of the HERALD readers. It seems strange that we as a people have so much abuse to meet when we go into the world to tell the gospel story, to bless the people. I often wonder if we are always as careful as we had ought to be not to give offense in anything.

As far as I can learn, this debate was brought on by the attack being made upon Joseph and the church by Mr. Crow, without any cause other than his own disposition to berate all others but those that believe just as he does. He is another one of those abusive and vile men. Ofttimes during the debate he would make the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants read just the opposite to what they do, misrepresenting by his interpretation, and would present us as taking positions that the church never took, nor any of her ministry. For example, he had a debate with C. J. Hunt about one year ago, and in this debate with Wight he said that we elders, and especially Elder Hunt in his debate, take the position that paradise was in hades. He often told J. W. Wight that he did not know very much, once telling him that he lied; in fact all the time the writer was present it was abuse and misrepresentation. On the other hand, Brother Wight was calm, and I believe humble: for he always enjoyed the Spirit of Christ where he said, "When you are reviled, revile not again." He did not resort to this, but presented the truth in its plainness; so I believe many were enabled to see the difference, and he made many friends by showing a meek and humble spirit.

The writer was privileged to be at the first two sessions, and last eight, when I had to leave to attend our district convention and conference. Bro. Crabb came and acted the remainder of the time as moderator for Bro. Wight. I believe the debate has done good here in more ways than one. Notwithstanding all the slanderous stories that Crow told about Joseph Smith and many of the early Saints, much prejudice was removed and many have a far better understanding of our claims than before. This is not only true of those outside of the church but of those inside as well. Some of the Saints went into this debate a little shaky as to what the result would be, and thought that the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith could not be maintained before the people; but now we hear the same ones saying they are glad the debate has been held, and are more confirmed in the truth than ever before. The latter is the universal statement of the Saints of the Coalville Branch.

The debate closed the 27th. Next day being Thanksgiving, according to previous announcements we met at the place of meeting Thursday morning at 10:30, and listened to one of Bro. Crabb's logical sermons on the "kingdom of God," as an earthly and heavenly kingdom. At 7:30 met to hear Bro. Wight discuss the "fruits of the Spirit." It was timely and profitable, I trust.

At the opening of this service, to show how the Saints and friends appreciated the Christian spirit which Bro. Wight had shown throughout the debate, Bro. Samuel Jordison, president of the branch, in behalf of Saints and friends, presented Bro. Wight with a purse containing twenty-seven dollars, which was highly appreciated as an act of kindness by our brother. But let me say right here that the Coalville Saints are always mindful of the missionaries, to see that they are provided for in a temporal way.

But please remember, the writer is not in favor of the Saints urging debates. If the truth is assailed, stand by the truth.

J. M. BAKER.

COLUMBUS Obio, Dec. 2.

Editors Herald:-I am still in the faith, and doing what I can for this glorious work of God. For the past sixteen months I have been working, the most of the time in this city. Bro. V. M. Goodrich and the writer in the latter part of the summer of 1900 agreed to visit this city to introduce the latter-day message. I believe the first effort was made in the house of Bro. and Sr. Green, the latter a sister of Bro. Goodrich. From there the way continued to open from house to house until there have been as many as thirty different houses opened for preaching, mostly private houses. There have been near thirty baptisms here, and several persons are near the kingdom. The Saints here are young in the work, but are willing to do what they can to keep the work moving.

Bro. V. M. Goodrich, my traveling companion, has been with me about one half the time. He is a willing worker, and a kindhearted, whole-souled, and wise counselor, always willing to sacrifice for the good cause. He is held in high esteem by the writer and the Saints here.

Bro. J. E. Matthews is president of the branch, with Bro. Harry French priest, and Bro. George W. Paul teacher. They form a strong band of young and willing workers to preside over the work and feed the flock. The branch is without a deacon, as Bro. Green has moved away.

Sister Matthews makes all the missionaries feel at home when at her house, and so with all the Saints of the city.

I have labored some with the noble Saints in Lawrence County, Ohio, and at Wellston and vicinity are some good and willing workers. At Glen Roy, the place appointed for holding the next conference, our brother-inlaw, John Rice, and his noble wife and family reside. They are willing workers. In fact, the work is onward all along the line, so far as I have heard. I hope the net gain of the district will not be less than one hundred good, substantial Saints, who will honor the good cause. Our district officers are good workers, and we hope the Lord will direct all things to his glory and the good of the Saints and all honest seekers after truth. I am in the faith, and hope to continue.

I request the prayers of the Saints in behalf of the few Saints left at Limerick, that the way may soon open for them to get to other localities where they can have better privileges and do more good for the cause of Christ. We are willing to continue to hold the fort there if the work is not finished in that locality. The Lord's will be done.

Four of my own children are not in the church, three sons and one daughter. I am sure they believe this work is of God, and at times have a strong desire to obey the gospel. Some things that have transpired in the Liberty Branch years ago have been a hindrance. Pray for them, that they stumble not over the things of the past. I hope the time will soon come when all will be in the good work. In the faith,

BLOOMINGTON, Mo., Dec. 2.

Editors Herald:—I am holding a series of meetings near here. Have preached eleven sermons thus far; will close to-night. Have been having splendid interest and attendance, the best I have ever seen at this place. A number who have been prejudiced are now investigating our work, and homes that were once closed against us are now opened, with a standing invitation to come any time. I have been graciously blessed in telling the gospel story. I feel to thank our heavenly Father.

The Thanksgiving service at Bevier was enjoyed by all who attended, and a spiritual time was had. The evening was occupied by the Religio with an appropriate program. I have not heard from other parts of the district yet, to know how they got along in their services.

The work in this district is doing very well in some parts, and at others is at a low ebb, the branch at Pollock is left in a bad shape because those who held the priesthood have moved to Colorado. We wonder, sometimes, how those who are comfortably situated where they can do good for the cause, and stand by the work, will pick up and leave it in a helpless condition. Of course we are to support and care for our families; but it seems to me that the principle in the language of the Savior, "Seek first to build up the kingdom of God," is far more reaching than just to the disciples in his time. We know of a fine young man in this district who refused a good position and a fair salary and preferred to dig coal and stand by the work rather than leave it to go down, feeling that God wanted him there; and he is now being blessed and doing good in the work for himself and others, too. However, we may not all understand what sacrifice means in its fullest sense.

There are but two of us to work this large district this winter,—Bro. Walter Smith and myself,—Brn. F. J. Chatburn and Earle Corthell having dropped out of the missionary ranks for reasons best known to themselves. But we shall try to do the best we can to keep the camp fires blazing and the banner of our King aloft. We have been entertained, as well as edified, in reading the account of the White-Braden and Scott-Dillon debates, and are thankful to God for raising up defenders for his work. May the work continue to prosper under the guidance of God's hand, and finally "Zion be redeemed," is my prayer.

In bonds of love,

On the 21st instant, six seventies of the Utah church visited the Temple Lot, also our church building, each one availing himself of a souvenir in the form of a good-sized cane. They had been on a two-years' trip in the East, Elder M. L. McAllister, of St. George, Utah, being the chief one of the party. His father was president of one temple in Utah twenty years, and of Manti eight or nine, and he said he took pride in saying he, himself, was a polygamic son. Although "the echoes were not all achime," they tried to make their visit as pleasant as possible, and so sang one of their favorite songs, the closing words of one of which were,

Truth is reason, truth eternal Tells me I've a mother there.

We exchanged HERALDS and Ensigns for tracts on the "Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Its Faith and Teachings," by Eider J. Morgan, with the articles of faith over the signature of "Veni, vici," "Joseph Smith," and a picture of Salt Lake Temple!

The personal appearance of individuals sometimes impresses us with their seeming refinement of manner; but their conversation upon doctrines manifests a spirit of perversion,—the wresting of the scriptures of their plain, true interpretation.

We surely ought never to cease to labor and pray for the salvation of deceived and darkened souls who are in the toils of the enemy, though they rest in carnal security. On the first page of last week's Ensign the editor sums up the matter thus: "It is an evil thing to turn away from the light of the grand truths revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and many are to their everlasting sorrow and shame to find this out at the judgment seat."

On the other hand, consistency of belief and a strict adherence to the teachings of the three books of the church are to every true Latter Day Saint a sine qua non, although many good men have in the past, as therein recorded, made serious mistakes. While some were deceived, many, instructed in the arts of the enemy, led their fellows away from the truth, like Elymas, the sorcerer, whom Paul designated as being full of all subtility and all mischief, and as a perverter of "the right ways of the Lord." Of such were the impostors from the East, "pretending to magical powers."

We learn that the science of hypnotism is being taught on a large scale by many, such as professors of colleges, preachers, physicians, and prominent citizens. The most extensive work of this kind is being done at the American College of Sciences, in Philadelphia, which is scattering its harmful literature over all the world. Athens, the hypnotist, who has just risen from his five days' sleep while buried four feet under ground, is intending soon to run an institution in Kansas City, where this "science" will be taught, and all the forces that popular religion and popular education can bring to bear against it will as some say only tend to diffuse the evil doctrine more widely. It is said that over five millions of people are studying personal magnetism, in many cases for injurious and criminal purposes. Truly, in these days when the public is being mystified with "spiritualistic manifestations" in the guise of magic and hypnotic performances, it behooves every true Saint to avoid that which brings the minds of men into "subjection to the minds of other men." This is what the hypnotists claim to do; and it is said the Society for Psychical Research for fourteen years has been mystifying the public with spiritualistic manifestations. At Fairmount Park, just west of town, a year or two ago. Saints and sinners flocked to witness such performances, called slight-of-hand; and at the theaters and unpretentious lodges the hypnotists ply their craft right here.

Last evening some of our people thought they would go and see what was going on at "The Knights and Ladies of Security;" and as none succumbed to any extent under "the influence," they can now, we hope, exclaim "Veni, vidi, vici!" These magicians say, "We leave nothing to be desired. Our orators, preachers, and singers control their hearers; all persons are subject to hypnotic influence, and strength rather than weakness of will marks a good subject: we perform surgical operations and heal the sick." And a few of our own brethren have been in this practice; but some have seen their error.

They say also, "Memory is influenced for the better, bad habits can be cured, impressions are made in automatic writing, we have trance speaking, and personal identity is lost in normal life." What is this but Spiritualism? But one thing strikes us forcibly, and we think they are very honest when they declare that their "science" is made useful in "trance and suggestion in the Christian religion, divine raptures, and Christian Conversions," and that it teaches the craft of the soothsayers of the Orient; but O, most wonderful concession! "tabletipping and spirit communication are completely unveiled." Surely, the Hypnotists, the Creedists, Christian Scientists, Spiritualists, and some of the physicians, professors (and many of the "Western Saints," we believe,) are all in a muddle, or intellectual and spiritual cloudiness. They style it the Wonder Science of the age, and one of the phases of it is "its use in the training of children." It will be a propitious day when "they shall proceed no further, for their folly shall be manifest unto all men."

There never was a greater need of the close watching and guarding and instructing the children by the parents at home than at the present time.

Should we not all see the helpfulness and the need of such societies as the Sons and Daughters of Zion, and unite in advancing their work and influence, especially among the younger parents, so that many of the evils surrounding our families may be counteracted and overthrown? That, surely, must be a good cause which exalts the sanctity of home, its up-building environments, its advantages, and its influence for good.

And the Sunday-school: Many educators, while deprecating the removal of the Bible from the school-room, are united in declaring that "home-training supplemented by Sunday-school and church influences are sufficient as a substitute." In speaking of religious instruction they say "the American school-boy does not need half the tears that are shed for him, at least in his relation to the Bible"; but we think if not needful of our tears, our boys and girls need all the prayers and encouragement, spiritually, physically, and mentally, that consecrated parents and instructors can give them.

It is pleasant to know that agreeable work, and harmless social enjoyments are being suggested and provided for our young folks, for they must fill up the time, they must be active. There are the "good books" of the Sunday-school classes and libraries (now in some of our districts being so critically looked after by the district librarian), and the Religios with their advancing columns of youthful enthusiasts. There are the busy, merry "Gleaners," the staid old "Aids" and "Helpers" and "Workers," with their faithful, undaunted Prayer Unions, the many and meagerly-thanked program committees on socials, and picnics, and Sunday-school holidays, and Sunday-school conventions; these all must fill their places in the building-up processes of character, and we are instructed by our never-failing, never-weary, devoted ministers, in every capacity, to come up higher.

There is an interesting work, worthy of mention,—the distribution of church literature. We all can take to ourselves the thought that in this work we are much needed; and when the literature bureaus or literary exchanges, or others send a few church papers or tracts to a brother or sister desirous to spread the gospel news, they, too, are in the great army of workers; and we must encourage the young to engage in it, for collecting and distributing from house to house, and mailing to distant parts require the labor of many and skillful hands.

The Exchange Committee in this Stake has been much assisted by the elders, who on their return to fields of labor, to conferences and reunions, have made it convenient to take with them packages of papers, especially HERALDS; and also in sending church literature we have been much helped by our beloved Bro. Duncan, now passed on, and Brn. Parsons, Thomas, Short, Aylor, I. N. White, and others. From nearly a decade's experience in this literary work of the Independence Stake Sunday-school Association, which was organized as an Exchange Committee in 1892, having mailed and distributed thousands of papers, we can bespeak a pleasant and useful occupation to any of our young people who will engage in it; for we all know that with every kind act, every cheering word there cometh a blessing, and that

"That song is sweetest, bravest, best,
Which plucks the thistle-barb of care
From a despondent brother's breast
And plants a sprig of heart's-ease there."

Editors Herald:—While waiting for the boat to pass on to Vinalhaven, I scribble a few lines.

It is a pleasure to me to read the beautiful letters written by some of the brethren and sisters who are laboring so very hard by precept and example to call the wanderers in. It indeed is an example to others. We should be workers for Christ.

The work in Maine has its dark clouds as well as sunshine, as have other localities. Good has been done during the season thus far, and a number have been added to the church. And though some of the older members are content to sit idle, and do little or nothing to improve the work, the activity of others is sure evidence of spiritual growth in them.

Of late my labors have extended over considerable territory. The first of October last found me in Little Deer Isle, North Deer Isle, Mountainville, and Stonington, in company with our young and much esteemed Bro. James E Kelley. James is very companionable, indeed. From there I went to Vinalhaven, and labored for a short time, thence to Little Deer Isle, North Deer Isle, and Lamoine, by the way of Bar Harbor. Was nobly assisted in my labors in this place by our worthy Bro Eugene Braunn. From there I went to Dexter and Sangerville. stopping in Bangor over night at the home of our aged Sister Edminister, and was very kindly treated and well cared for by the family. Elder S. J. Cunningham came in from another way, so we wended our way to the above-mentioned places, commencing operations the same night we arrived, and continuing our labors several days, with what we think will prove to be good results, yet with the usual amount of opposition.

This is a place where Elder Cunningham had previously labored, meeting considerable opposition. The Advents favored us from the beginning. Dr. Bean proved himself a real help, he and his accomplished daughters rendering us no little aid by their musical talent. And there are other families there which stood by us till the last, such as the Parmers, Badgers, Masons, Lewises, Coles, and Parkums.

All went well till the first Sunday, when several of us went into the Baptist meeting. They quickly dismissed their meeting, and would not stay to let us take part with them, nor hear us preach, afterwards saying they would have nothing to do with the "Mormons." Such actions only did us good. Their minister came and visited their homes. Brother Cunningham had a meeting appointed, and they appointed a meeting at the same place at the same time. The minister was at the door, but did not come in, as he had important business elsewhere, thus leaving his flock to the "devouring wolf." But when the big-hearted and genial-minded Doctor, who had purchased an organ for their use, and had gratuitously sung for them, had cleared his pipes and gotten ready to sing, stretched forth his hand for the lamp, it was seized by one of their stalwarts and with two other lights were put out, they leaving also after calling the young lady organist some of Satan's pet names. Those that were friendly staid, and Brother Cunningham preached to them. The next morning one of their members asked for a letter or dismissal, and three others claimed they should do so later. The Doctor took his organ home, and concluded he and his would disfranchise them. So by their own wicked doings they lost four of their members, the Doctor and his family, also the organ, together with the Doctor's musical talent and the help of his daughter at the organ. My labors with Elder S. G. Cunningham were very pleasant to me.

Last Sunday, in company with J. N. Ames and E. C. Foss, I visited the Saints on Beals Island. J. N. preached to them in the afternoon, and I occupied in the evening Tuesday. In Little Deer Isle, Thursday, on my way to Vinalhaven. Blue Hill next.

In bonds,

KIDDER, S. Dak., Dec. 3.

Editors Herald:-I left home September 24, for Eagle Grove, Iowa, where I arrived the morning of the 25th, and in the evening I was called to unite in marriage Mr. Frank Pletcher and Sister Grace Lewis, at the home of the bride's parents, at Head Grove, Iowa. I hope the experiences of life may be pleasant unto them. And as they are now one flesh, so we trust they may be one in the faith.

The following week the Wight-Ellmore debate took place at Esgle Grove, which we had the pleasure of attending. We felt it was a week profitably spent, as both disputants manifested an excellent spirit and it was truly instructive to all lovers of truth. The debate continued for seven nights, with fair attendance and excellent interest, seemingly. Bro. Thorburn was also in attendance at the debate, and the next day after it closed we started for our field of labor. Hills. Minnesota, where we held some very interesting meetings. Sister West, of Hills, greatly assisted us by her musical talent, for which we were thankful, indeed. Music seems to add to the interest of the meetings, and especially so for the young. The schoolhouse was full of attentive listeners. on several occasions. Some there are fully convinced as to the gospel as we teach it, but for some reason do not step out and obey. May God's Spirit continue to strive with them, to make more plain to them their duty to God.

We also held a few meetings in, and six miles east, of Pipestone, after which we went to Madison, South Dakota. In the country, ten miles west, held thirteen meetings, with fair attendance. While at Madison, we learned of a Mrs. Hubble, a granddaughter of Father Landers. And while this lady is not a member of our faith, she is strong in it so far as she understands. The writer had a short talk with her at her house. I was received very kindly by her. She seemed to have great respect for her relatives, as well as the latter-day work. Trust she may have the privilege to hear the gospel preached until she shall become satisfied of its require-

Leaving that part of the country, next went to Waubay, where some more people are convinced of our claims and are defending the same. We continued there a week, having good attendance all along.

From there to this place. We are now holding meetings at Newark, in the M. E. church, six miles northwest of here. Have held five meetings thus far, to full house most of the time, some coming five and six miles. Outsiders express themselves as being satisfied with the truth as taught by us. We are having the best attendance at this place of any this year. Hope we may represent the work by our examples as well as by what we teach.

We also expect to reach Heckla, a small town twenty miles west of this; then on to North Dakota, White Rock, the weather permitting. Also Pelican Rapids, Minnesota, in the near future. We did not reach that place last summer, but shall try this winter, if the Lord is willing.

We feel glad in the great work we are engaged in. The Lord has blessed us in all our efforts this fall, and we hope we may live worthy of future blessings. With a desire for the welfare of the work, I remain,

Yours in the faith,

ELI HAYER.

DARKBEND, Ill., Nov. 25.

Editors Herald:-I send you a notice of the death of Elder John F. Thomas, which occurred the 21st inst. He was a firm believer in the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith the Seer, and was often heard in bearing testimony to the divinity of the work as presented to the world by him. Our brother enlisted in the United States volunteers, Fourteenth Illinois Cavalry, Company G., in 1861, and served until the end of the war. Just before he left his home to engage in that great struggle he, having in his possession at the time a copy of the "Pearl of Great Price," published at Liverpool, England, in 1851, which contained the prophecy on the war, given December 25, 1832, by Joseph Smith, copied that revelation on a sheet of foolscap paper, which he carried during the conflict between the North and South. He used to read it to his comrades. At the close of the war he brought the same document home with him, and I suppose it is now in the possession of his widow, Sister Thomas, as the writer saw it not many months ago and was permitted to take a verbatim copy. This may be of interest to your readers, as it shows that the revelation was not gotten up since the war in order to suit the events which transpired.

Truth is mighty and will prevail; and while the enemy is on the alert, trying to destroy the influence of latter-day prophets as well as former day, we see that evidences are accumulating in favor of the great mission work of the choice Seer of latter days. We have no doubts concerning the divinity of his great mission to this generation. The all-important question in our minds should be. Are we so living that we shall stand firm and steadfast in the truth amidst all the conflicts we may be called to pass through during the journey of life?

Since our quarterly conference of September 29 our diary shows that we have not been idle, and this only makes us feel better when we look back over our record and see that we have been led into pleasant places and have had excellent opportunities to tell the gospel story to many outside of the church. In every dispensation of the gospel it has been the few only who have found the narrow way that leads to life, while the many have gone to destruction. It was the many who were destroyed in the time of Noah, and the few were saved. The many were condemned by the work established in that age; and so it will be again in our time. The inhabitants of the earth are burned and few men left, as saith the prophet. The many who will be condemned by the testimony of the eldership in this dispensation will be sent to the prison and remain until further instructed. The gospel in this world seems to have but little effect when we compare results here with those beyond. The few are placed in a saved condition here, and the majority are saved there. This gospel school is an excellent institution in which to spend our life, and we hope to continue faithful and studious. Although we may never reach that grade of scholarship in divine things attained by others in this life, yet we can go on and make all the advancement we can, and we shall be all the better prepared to enter into and perform the duties which may be assigned in the life to come. No one will ever be permitted to reach the highest degree of spiritual attainment here; and as we see the great opportunities for progression here, and hereafter, and that the great teacher (Christ) of this school (the church) has a great prize to give to all those who learn their lessons well, we are encouraged to be faithful and diligent in our studies, that our knowledge and wisdom may increase in order that we may reach that degree of scholarship in this great work of divinity, and thus merit the great reward promised therefor.

COLUMBUS JUNCTION, Iowa, Nov. 21. Dear Herald:-A few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard may be of interest to some, and especially to those that read in the HERALD of our trouble last spring. Prejudice is dying out somewhat, and people are investigating the work more. Have had no preaching here by our elders since Elder J. S. Roth was here. Though our number is but three, just enough to claim the promise, we meet nearly every Sunday, and have a little prayer meeting, and we receive new courage. We are doing what we can to tell the people that the angel has come with the gospel message, and warn them of the judgment to come.

We take the Ensign and HERALD, and just as soon as we read them they are passed around among our friends.

Some time ago a sister sent us some papers for distribution, and they are all out. We have forgotten her address, but think it is Independence. One party told me yesterday that he had just completed the "Two Records," and now wanted the "Spalding Romance." It is the reform minister of this

I received a warning lately in a dream, which was about as follows: We were on a long train, loaded with Saints, traveling toward the city of Zion. The road was small and above all other roads. After traveling some distance we could see the city looming up in the distance, and seemingly not far off. Soon we were close enough to see the beautiful buildings and parks. Every one in the city was busy at something. Even the children were placing bright little stones along the walks and around the flower beds. The common expression with us was, "Our home!" We were so delighted with the beautiful scenes before us that we had not noticed that the main part of the train had been cut loose and had gone into the city, and that we were in the last car. We were left just outside the gates. While meditating upon this change of action, and wondering what it all meant, a terrible feeling of weakness and unworthiness came over us, so that we began to weep and pray. Just then a low, sweet voice spake, and told us to prepare, for the engine would soon be back for the rest of the train, and those that had no tickets, "Found worthy," would be put off.

Dear Saints, pray that we may be found occupying the front part of this great gospel train that will take us up to, yes, and into, the beloved city, if we will continue faithful.

We can have meetings here any time that any of the elders see fit to stop off here.

In gospel bonds,

I. M. LANE.

WOODBINE, Iowa, Dec. 5.

Dear Herald:-It would seem proper that I should break the silence once before the first year of the Twentieth Century dies out, to let you know that I am still in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. Of my worthiness in that faith I have nothing to say; but I feel a good deal like Isaiah, when he said, "I am a man of unclean lips," as he beheld the glory of the Almighty, and compared his own nothingness with the excellency of the glorious Being whom he was permitted to behold. True, I can not tell of such a glorious vision; but the divine Character stands revealed in his word, and the more I study that character and contemplate the divine excellencies, the more dwarfed I feel, and wonder if I shall ever be fitted to dwell in his presence. But I am assured "he will not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax;" hence I am encouraged to struggle on, and fight the good fight of faith, trusting in the merits of my Redeemer to make up for my many failings.

The character of God is the grandest and greatest study that can occupy the human mind. It is the key to his revealed will. It is a never-failing assurance that all his promises are yea and amen to all who believe the same. It is a sure safeguard against the wiles of Satan, let them come in whatsoever guise they may. It is the knowledge of God given to the elect, that is the grand secret of their triumph over all fake spirits and spiritual delusions, as referred to by Jesus in Matthew 24. It is a foundation for the hope of the righteous, deep, broad, and enduring as eternity itself. Every Latter Day Saint should be a close, diligent, and constant student of the divine character. It would lift our hearts and minds above the groveling things of this world. It would lead us on to greater heights of purity, justice, mercy, and love. It would make us wise unto salvation. and fit us for the divine presence, the celestial glory. Of this precious knowledge none need be ignorant. The "Spirit of truth" is promised, "the Comforter," "the Holy Ghost." "He shall teach you all things." "He shall testify of me." "He will guide you into all truth." 'He shall take of mine and show it unto you." "The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."-Acts 2: 39. See also 1 Corinthians 2: 9, 13. With such a guide we can not fail, if we heed diligently his teachings. Let us seek his guidance, and study to know God, for "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."-John 17:3.

Having been led to write the foregoing, I now resume the task I set out to perform; viz, to write a letter. My labors this year have been mostly confined to the Little Sioux District. I have tried to hold up the gospel standard in Woodbine, Logan, Persia, Moorhead, Pisgah, and in some of the country schoolhouses, and have given some labor to the Galland's Grove District; and still they cry for more. If my success is judged by the number I have baptized, it will be nothing at all. I may have contributed some help to enable a few to believe. Others in the district are having great success, and have baptized not a few, and I pray that this work may endure. I am a poor hand at appealing to their sympathies; I never bore for water. I have no use for charts. Others, I believe, use them successfully; but I don't know enough to use them, and if I did I should forget the story, for memory fails sometimes. So I plod on, trying to preach the gospel as the Spirit leads me. And I have this testimony to bear: God blesses me in my efforts, whether those efforts bless others or not. Let none think that I decry the use of charts; I only say I could not use them effectually. I believe that all are entitled to the guidance of the Spirit in their work; and when we follow its guidance we can not fail.

The laborers in this district are few; but I believe they are faithful workers, and their labors have not been barren of success. J. A. Donaldson is our district president. A faithful, straightforward, humble man; but circumstances cripple his efforts. But I believe he does what he can, and, I think sometimes. more than he ought under his circumstances. But he will not lose his reward. He assisted me in a two days meeting at Persia, and we enjoyed a good degree of the Spirit in our united labors. And I was satisfied that there was life in the Persia branch, and spiritual life, too.

Our Woodbine branch president, Bro. Kibler, is alive to the interests of the work under his charge; but he, too, is hampered with too much on hand. Yet he looks after the interests of the branch, and every other Sunday holds meetings seven or eight miles away, and has been doing for a long time. I have rendered some help there, and I believe Brn. J. W. Wight, A. M. Fyrando, J. F. Mintun, and W. A. Smith, the two latter having held two series of meetings there. I believe W. A. Smith baptized a number there. I hear he has baptized quite a number at Sandy Point, where President Smith dedicated a church. The Saints there form a part of the Mondamin branch. I know but little about the labors of other brethren, but learn they have not been idle.

I sometimes wish there was as much zeal manifested in the work which God established by revelation, as there is in those things to which men have given existence. If there was, every one would learn his duty and do it, and the sheep and the lambs would all be fed. There has been preaching done for years in the vicinity of what is now called Pisgah. Many brethren have labored in that and the surrounding neighborhood before the little town of Pisgah sprang into life. But as soon as the existence of that town was determined upon by the Chicago & North-Western Railway, M. Van Eaton suggested the building of a church there by our people, and offered to contribute liberally toward the erection of the same. Other citizens, also not of the church, seconded the proposition. Some members of the Little Sioux branch were scattered in that direction and they also favored it. Some two years ago E ders Wight, Baker, and Derry held a series of meetings in a tent there, and Bro. Wight gave voice to the wish, and placed it before the people. It met their unanimous approval, a subscription list was drawn up, and a building committee appointed to carry out the desire. Joseph Lane, John Shearer, and M. S. Van Eaton were the committee, and they worked with a will. The citizens contributed liberally, and the few Saints, male and female, used their utmost efforts to forward the cause. And to-day there stands in the little town of Pisgah a very neat and commodious building, waiting to be dedicated to the worship of the Most High God, as soon as the little debt of one hundred thirty dollars has been lifted, for which sum Joseph Lane and John Shearer have given their individual obligations. But I must not omit to mention the fact that the Chicago & North-Western Railway generously gave the lot upon which the church is built. Many of the Woodbine, Little Souix, Moorehead, and I believe Magnolia Saints contributed very liberally to the cause. On Sunday, October 20, I was privileged to preach the first sermon in the church to a very respectable and attentive audience; and on Sunday, November 26, I preached twice there, and continued to do so, excepting two nights, until the first of December; preaching in all, during the time, eight sermons at Pisgah, and one at the Johnson schoolhouse. And God blessed me in my efforts, and I pray that his word may be blessed to the hearers. President Smith will be notified when the house shall be dedicated, for it is the desire of all that he shall perform that service.

I fear my letter is so long the HERALD readers will think once a year is more than enough. Yours in bonds,

CHARLES DERRY.

Ava, Missouri, Dec. 9.

Herald Readers:-Things are moving along in Southern Missouri. Not so fast as we would like to see; but still we have reasons to believe we are not at a standstill. A few keep coming into the fold, which keeps our enemies in a bad humor. There has been considerable talk about debating in different parts of our mission; but so far it has been all bluster. Our young missionary, Bro. Davis, is pushing things quite lively, improving fast, and baptizing a number of good people. The Saints at Springfield are getting the church debt paid off, and are looking for

Bro. Joseph and some others to come and dedicate it before very long.

The Southern Missouri District has now four church houses built, and the Saints at Beaver with J. C. C. and J. S. to lead, are making an effort to build there.

The Saints in Springfield had a little surprise about three weeks ago. On entering the church Wednesday night for prayer, they beheld a brand-new organ standing in the place of the old one. It was whispered around that our ever faithful two young blacksmiths, Brn. Duemler and True Grey had made the exchange, and our two young organists were so pleased they could not hold their tongues from praising the givers. I think all felt thankful that our church has such noble young men in it. But they are constantly doing things like that, as you missionaries can all testify. If we only had a few more such our church would have been finished and paid for long ago. But we have other good Saints that I believe have done all they were able. At least they are always willing to do whatever the majority thinks best.

I came to this point over a week ago. Two heads of families have given their names for baptism. There are others I think who will be baptized before I close.

We are looking for Bro. White this week.
Our conference will convene with Pomona branch. It is the best in the district, and Saints visiting that branch will feel well repaid.

In bonds,

HENRY SPARLING.

Editor of Herald:-I wish simply to state that since my appointment to the new line of work, namely, an evangelist, I have been greatly blessed in preaching the word, teaching and instructing the Saints in their duties, having enjayed a greater degree of God's Holy Spirit than ever before in this work. And in this new line of work what little I have done, although greatly realizing my weakness, God has so graciously and wondrously poured out upon me his Spirit, so far beyond my expectation, that language with me is inadequate to express the gratitude of my soul to our heavenly Father for his matchless love and mercy to me as well as to others through the sacred ordinances established in his house for the good of those who love and serve him. While at Farm Creek, and after holding a series of meetings with the Saints and dear friends of that branch, and having a better turnout than on similar occasions prior to that time, and our hearts being warmed up under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, we moved on to Wheeler's Grove, to meet with the Saints and officials of that district in Sunday-school convention and conference work. It was good to meet with those with whom we had labored and toiled so many years in the interest of this work, and enjoy the goodly portion of his Spirit given, and the peace and harmony that prevailed. We all felt extremely glad to see each other once more in life.

I stopped off one night and met with the few faithful ones in Carson.

The work in the district is moving along as well as usual. Brethren Mintun and Fry are both busy doing missionary work, Bro. Mintun pushing the work along as fast as possible, Bro. Fry doing his best to help him. I expect to labor here and at Plum Hollow, giving a call at Hamburg, until I go home for Christmas. I want to spend a short time with loved ones there, as it is some time since I spent a Christmas with them. I think all in our district are trying to do the best they can. May God prosper the cause, and bless every effort put forth for its advancement, is my earnest desire.

I was sorry, indeed, to hear of the death of our beloved Brethren Wight and Duncan, and deeply sympathize with their loved ones. May God, their Father, bless and comfort them, in their great loss and sad bereavement, is my humble prayer.

May God speed his work and help us all to do our part faithfully, that his coming may be hastened, is my prayer.

Yours truly in the faith,
HENRY KEMP.

DELTA, Colorado, Dec. 3.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have endeavored to feed the bread of life to the Saints in these parts, and see some evidence of the seed sown germinating and some ripening to the harvest.

Three worthy sheaves have been garnered in lately, and I have a call to Fruita to baptize an excellent young man I left investigating when I was there in September. So the work goes on.

Besides preaching in localities where the Saints are, I have opened up some new places where the work has never been represented by our ministry before. Now, since the busy season is over and there are some hopes of getting a hearing, Bro Kemp and I expect to push the work in several new places.

Bro. Kemp has just returned from the eastern part of the State, where he has been since August. We are now holding evening meetings in Delta. Sofar the attendance has not been flattering, but we hope for the better.

In the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

ROSETTA, Idaho, Dec. 5.

Editor Herald:—We are a small band trying to be Saints. We are debarred from all church privileges, except our little prayermeetings and our church papers. We have not seen an elder since last year, when Bro. Albertson was here. We have been looking all summer for an elder, but not one has showed up; and I lay the blame principally upon ourselves, for we fail to meet our tithes as we should. This reservation country being a new country, we find it hard to meet all demands, and it seems natural to put off the dues to the Master. But I for one mean to do better, and would like the address of Bishop's agent for this mission.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain, yours in the faith,

C. W. LITTLE.

[Bro. H. R. Evans, Malad, Idaho, or Bro. Gomer Resse, Bezeman, Montana, will be glad to receipt for tithing and offerings.—ED.]

ROOTVILLE, Pa., Nov. 30.

Editors Saints' Herald:-Shortly after my last communication to your columns Bro. Baldwin and myself went to South New Philadelphia to regulate some matters devolving upon an elders' court. While there we held about ten preaching services, with gratifying results. Bro. Baldwin had, two weeks previously, baptized two good people -husband and wife-and the Sunday before leaving I led four precious souls into the same stream, and buried them with their Redeemer, son and daughter of Bro. and Sr. Warner, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Biggs, and a noble son of Bro. James Carlisle. On the following Sunday Bro. Carlisle baptized another. Thus the work in the New Philadelphia Branch is moving onward, notwithstanding the difficulties they encounter. Because trouble and misunderstandings occur in a branch is no evidence of degeneracy, but the reverse. It shows a disposition on the part of those upon whom God has placed the grave responsibility of executing his law, to be alive to the interest of the same. Great care, however, should be taken, that in doing our duty we act within the pales of the law of the church, and not do something which will require time and expense to undo. It is far more commendable to see one step forward in discharge of his heavenly imposed duty, although he takes an occasional step backward, than to see him sit down and do

From there I went to Akron and found Brn. Parsons and Allen had just folded the tent for the season.

The next day being the day for the funeral train of our dead President to arrive at Cantor, and being but twenty miles from there, thought it not vain to go and take one more look at the great man whose tragic death, at that very hour, was reverently calling forth the condolence of the civilized world. Crowned heads and horny hands, royal courts and peasants' huts, millionaires and paupers, were, at that solemn hour, bound together by one common tie, mingling their hearts in one outburst of sympathy for a sorrowing nation.

Bro. David Allen and myself were at the station when the train pulled through; the only evidence of what it contained was the black crepe profusely covering the engine.

No such vast body of people could have been more orderly and so easily controlled. The tens of thousands vied with each other to maintain the strictest behavior and diguity which such assemblage should command.

Miles of soldiers were strung along the streets eight feet apart, who would, in low tones, convey orders from one to another. If any regulation were necessary, the police would only have to speak a little above a whisper.

Every wheel in the busy city was as silent as death. Thousands of tongues muttering low sounds of grief, every building draped in deep mourning, together with the sweet, gentle requiem, "Nearer, my God, to thee," from his favorite military band, followed by the almost noiseless line of carriages, containing all the high government officials, made one almost feel he was transported to another world.

The deep-seated expressions of grief were plainly noticeable upon the face of the newly-made President, which gave unmistakable evidence that he was in possession of honors unsought for.

About one o'clock the great doors of the fine court-house swung open, and the signal given to anxiously waiting multitudes that all that remained of our nation's dead chief was open for public view.

The vast throng gently and gracefully swung to east of the court-house, and fell in a line of four abreast. At about one equare from the steps we were put two abreast. On going up the steps we went one on each side of a soldier, on past some military and naval sentinels, on to either side of the coffin to get but a single glance, and go away seemingly satisfied. This stream of morbid humanity kept flowing till dark; and not half got to see the remains. The moment I looked upon the sunken face, somewhat sallowed by death's tokens, and the silent lips which caused the Spanish throne to rage and tremble, many thoughts crowded my mind, of which these are a few. Death is no respecter of person. The high and the low all bow alike to the Adamic decree. Where is this great man's spirit? Is he enjoying the honors on the other side of the mystic river, as he did at the Capitol of Washington? How could any mortal get the consent of his mind to do such dastardly deed?

This experience brought the privileges and liberties of our country nearer to me than ever before. The people from all the common walks of life had an equal opportunity of viewing their honored ruler as those of higher rank, with a few exceptions.

Our conference in the grand old temple at Kirtland was the largest attendance of any district conference I have ever attended. Had much of the appearance of a General Conference. Business passed off peacefully. One baptized. The next Sunday Bro. Baldwin baptized two at Sharon, Pennsylvania.

I am here holding some very successful meetings in the Advent church. The people are all so kind and hospitable to me. Have preached about thirty sermons in all here, and have not had the least opposition. Yesterday afternoon I preached the funeral sermon of a Mr. Walter Parker, member of no church, but according to all reports, a man of good morals, and respected among his neighbors. There was much speculation among the hell-fire preachers, and the soulless Advents as to where I would put him, but after preaching with much feeling that every man is to be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body, and proving a resurrection for all mankind to be rewarded according as their works shall be, had a quieting effect upon all, and was perfectly satisfactory to the family of the deceased. Some congratulated me, saying it was the best sermon they ever heard; and another put two dollars in my hand as a "mark of appreciation," he said.

Two weeks ago I went to Little Cooley to look for Bro. Ezra N. Depue; but he had left a few days before. I understand, Bro. Depue, you are going to locate in these parts soon. If you do let me hearfrom you. I live west of the same county—address Conneautville, Pennsylvania, Route 1.

Have just closed a series of nineteen sermons. Have created quite an interest. Begin in a new place this evening, three miles from here. Expect to baptize some next week at Excelsior. I am happy in the conflict for Zion's weal.

In bonds,

RHINE, Kansas, Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—I find we all have our "ups and downs" in life. Bro. Vaughn and I were billed for a certain place, to preach. When we alighted from the train, we were greeted by an aged man saying: "I guess you are the men I am looking for," and he asked us if we were Latter Day Saints. All was then told; but the missionaries were down, seeing the brother had brought his pipe, and it a large one. He smoking, never thinking of our humiliation.

I wish that the brethren who smoke tobacco could know how great is our abhorrence of the weed: I really think they would quit the use of tobacco.

Again I was with a brother local minister. We were intending to hold a series of meetings. I was a stranger in that part of the country. The brother with me was to preach on this occasion. Just before meeting began a man stepped into the meeting-house. "Hello, Bro. —; give me a chew of tobacco." I again was cheap property for a few minutes.

Brethren, you can all quit the use of tobacco: then others will not be so humiliated. At the first mentioned place the people on the cars could well ask: Are these men the fruits of the "Mormon" Latter Day Saints' missionaries? While at the latter place: the Latter Day Saint missionaries uphold the use of tobacco.

We recently baptized two earnest young people at Hill City, Bro. Arthur Boyd and sister. His estimable wife is almost ready for baptism.

We went from Hill City to Selden, where we baptized Sister Dora Teeter. She had gone to the mourner's bench in the Methodist Episcopal Church about ten days before we arrived. After hearing the gospel she could easily distinguish the difference between truth and error. Her cousin, Birgil Teeter, was also baptized. Others are interested. One of the considerate minds was much opposed to us when we began meetings. The third sermon preached he began to realize we had the truth. The change came; he was then our warm friend. His statement before we left: "I tore up the ground a foot deep when you first came; but now I am traveling the road to be a Latter Day Saint. Have no fears: I only want to investigate a little more. then I am ready for baptism." Bro. John Teeter was ordained a priest, and will enter into the gospel work in a few days. He expects to devote his entire time to the ministry. He is a young man, and if faithful will be a useful man. There are some to be baptized before we leave here.

We find this a good field to labor in. There are many kind-hearted Saints who do all they can for the missionary. We can not find space to mention each name, so only state that in every place there are those who are working hard for the prosperity of Zion.

Dear Saints, let all be pure before God, that you may erjoy the Holy Spirit, that the missionaries may feel God's Spirit, as the comforting and refining power in the household when they visit you.

Ever in the fight of faith,

Your brother.

GLEN ROY, Ohio, Dec. 4.

Dear Herald:—With pleasure I write concerning Saints. Bro. V. M. Goodrich held services for one week at Wellston, and also held meeting Sunday evening, December 1, at the home of the writer, at Glen Roy, and had large attendance. Bro. V. M. is a great worker in bringing the restored gospel before the people. The Wellston people are always pleased to welcome him in their midst.

Bro. Daniel Williams, of Wellston, has left his home for Indian Territory. He will remain indefinitely.

We have been blest with every effort put forth here, and all are imbued with the Spirit and a desire to learn.

Your sister.

BITHA RICE.

MILTON, Fla., Nov. 27.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference closed on the 24th, with profit and pleasure to all who attended. Bro. I. N. Roberts was with us, and gave much solid instruction, and preached three stirring, inspirational sermons. He is preaching almost every night, and twice on Sundays. It would seem that such constant work would tell on his physical powers; but instead of wearing, he is improving, and is rapidly regaining what he lost during the hot weather in Kentucky and Tennessee.

Bro. Roberts makes friends wherever he goes, and all are unstinted in their praise of him. May his light never be less. Ever hopeful for the final triumph of Zion, Yours in the faith, S. D. ALLEN.

WEST BAY CITY, Mich., Dec. 8. Editors Herald:-The work in Michigan seems prosperous. All are laboring as seems best. At present am laboring in the Bay Cities. Have been here for some weeks. Will engage in a six-night debate with Elder W. B. Thomson, Disciple, commencing Monday, the 9th. Much interest is manifested among the people, especially West Side citizens. The identities of the two churches are the propositions. Elders Cornish and Carpenter will be present I expect, the latter as moderator. I presume the Lord will favor me as usual. He is always willing to help me. The local pastor of the Christian Church here, who, incidentally, has more zeal than wisdom, tried to prejudice the people before the debate commences by making slanderous statements through the press. I replied promptly, and drew the lines sharply, exposing his self-contradictory assertions and unchristian tactics. The recoil of his unmanly effort was keenly felt, even his own members remonstrating.

I feel well in the work, and am still pushing the auxiliary societies. If Religians are careful and discreet, the society will accomplish much good wherever established. The burden of responsibility is felt, at times, quite keenly; but God supports.

Northern Michigan District is a growing field, numerically and spiritually, as more perfect discipline and local branch government is effected. We are hopeful.

Will write up the debate for your columns.

CHURCH DEDICATION IN CANADA.

Editors Herald:-On Sunday, November 10, one of the most substantial church buildings owned by the church in Canada was dedicated by the Saints of Port Elgin Branch. It is a stone structure. The building is an evidence of what even a small number of persons may accomplish by united and persistent effort, as the branch numbers only about twenty-five, and a few are children. About three hundred dollars was all the cash the Saints had to expend. With their teams they drew the stone, sand, and other material, gratis. They also burned a kiln of lime, and a non-member gave the legs for lumber at two dollars per thousand feet, while they would sell readily at ten dollars per thousand feet. Bro. Guyer cut the lumber in his mill, others of the brethren handling the material to and from the saw. I can not mention by name all who devoted time and energy to the erection of this building; but I must mention Elders J. L Mortimer, who as first mechanic built the walls; and the young sisters who when the brethren could not leave the harvest, aided in handling stone, and one (since baptized) school-teacher, did not think it beneath her to aid, has since painted woodwork and nailed on lath.

The dedication occurred one year from the day the Rev. H. Dierlamm, of the German Evangelical Church, gave his lecture "Exposing the doctrines of the Book of Mormon and the Covenants of the Latter Day Saints' Church." Elder J. L. Mortimer and I attended. His only quotation from the Book of Mormon was: "A bible, a bible, we have got a bible, and there can not be any more bible. But thus saith the Lord God: O fools, they shall have a bible." He says, "You see they call us all fools for believing the Bible." He read the revelation on polygamy from the Brighamite edition of Doctrine and Covenants, and said: "What do you think of such men? Can you trust such men?"

While the ushers were taking up collection I arose and asked the privilege to make an announcement.

"No, sir; you can't speak here."

Immediately there were yells, "Put him out;" and a stamping of feet and clapping of hands among his people, they being incensed by his slanders and misrepresentations.

After his meeting was dismissed, and the people going out, Bro. Mortimer said: "It was the books of the Salt Lake Mormons he used. Come to the town hall to-morrow evening." On the street we were followed by a rabble of boys and young men making the night air hideous with their yells and using abusive language. We replied to the lecture next evening in the town hall, to about two hundred and fifty persons. The mob followed us again, this time throwing stones. The electric plant was disabled and the nights pitch dark. Wednesday we were brought before the justice of peace for "disturbing the public worship of Almighty God." Sunday evening his reverence on oath stated Bro. J. L. got up twice and interrupted him: while the fact was Bro. Mortimer never spoke till his meeting was dismissed. Questioning the preacher on his evidence. I said: "The Doctrine and Covenants you used was the Utah edition published in Salt Lake City?"

"Yes."

"You read the revelation on polygamy?"

"Yes, sir."

"You meant me when you said, What do you think of such men?" Can you trust such men?"

"No, sir; I did not know you were there."
"Well, you meant Elder Mortimer; you knew he was there."

"Yes, I know him of old."

"Will you swear before this court that you did not read from those books, and speak as you did, purposely, to prejudice the people, and injure our influence?" No response, although pressed for an answer.

The magistrates stated they were satisfied we had no intention of disturbing his meeting, but we had spoken, a commotion followed, and the law had been broken, and was so strict they could not dismiss the case without establishing a bad precedent, but would exact the lowest possible fine. Howbeit, the town council and Rev. Dierlamm's own members paid the major portion of the fine and costs of court.

While we felt bad over the injustice of the affair, yet it gave us one of the best chances had here to set forth the difference between the Reorganization and the Utah faction. We were indeed given in that hour what we ought to say, in fulfillment of Matthew 10:19. Many friends were gained to the cause, and the Saints strengthened and confirmed in the work.

The first preaching in this part was done by J. L. Mortimer some four years ago. Elders Daniel McGregor, R. C. Evans, F. Gregory, B. St. John, S. W. Tomlinson, and the writer have also labored some here.

On July 28 last, Port Elgin Branch was organized by Bro. R. C. Evans. Edward Leeder was ordained priest, and James Phillips teacher.

At the dedication a number of Saints were present from Wiarton, Colpoys Bay, Sauble Falls, Owen Sound, Kincardine, and Bruce Township. At 10 a. m. an enjoyable prayer service was held. At 3 p. m. Elder J. L. Mortimer opened the service. Bro. R. C. Evans preached the dedicatory sermon, to a crowded house. It was a logical and brilliant discourse, and was listened to with wrapt attention. After the sermon the dedicatory prayer was offered by the writer. At 7:30 p. m. Elder Fredrick Gregory gave a fine discourse. He was assisted by Elder William Gerrie, of Sauble Falls.

Meetings were continued during the week by Elders Evans, Mortimer, and Shields. The weather was very bad, but a number are believing whom we hope will obey ere long; some of them members of Rev. Dierlamm's church.

Elder R. C. Evans has gone to Owen Sound to deliver a course of lectures, Elder Mortimer to assist.

PHELPS, Minn., Dec. 12.

Editors Herald:—At this date I find myself in the hospitable home of Bro. William Barnhard. He and his estimable wife and large family of children are striving to give strength and impetus to the cause of truth in this region. I have just returned from a trip to Clay and Wilkin Counties in the famous Red River Valley, which is very level. It is a fine looking country even in winter time when the ground is covered with snow.

At Dibley, Brn. I. N. Roberts and T. J. Martin had been the pioneers of the work, and Bro. F. D. Omans had also made an effort later. Report has it that Brn. Roberts and Martin had good audiences at the first; but it was only a small number of ears that were saluted by the stentorian voice of Bro. Omans, while "ye scribe" was permitted to speak to one audience of seven and one of about fifteen or eighteen. This is not the way some people quit using tobacco, by "tapering off," as in that case the "tapering end" usually gets larger.

At Navan, our meetings were held in the Presbyterian church. There was some little objection to our using it; but Bro. William Shockow having secured the consent of the trustees, and there being no pastor to interpose objection, began to circulate the appointments commencing Thursday evening, November 21. Quite a good sized audience came; but the preaching seemed to fall flat at the speaker's feet. However, we continued till the following Sunday evening, the audience varying in size, and interest not the best. On Sunday, the 24th, the crowd was quite small; but Bro. Shockow, so be testified, was permitted to see a soft, mellow, light immediately over and around the speaker and the little audience which was seated close together, near the stove, in one corner of the church. The liberty was excellent; but what good may have been done aside from giving the warning voice, is yet to be made manifest.

On Wednesday, the 27th, I cemmenced at a schoolhouse in the town of Elkton, and continued till Sunday, December 1. This was the breaking of the ice in that locality. My home while there was with Mr. James Henry, who is a non-church member, though raised under Baptist influence, and whose wife, though a Baptist in faith, at present belongs to the Presbyterian Church, in order, I suppose, to have a "church home." They treated me nicely, and shall always have my gratitude for their kindness. May God ever bless them, is my prayer.

The audiences at this place were composed principally of Henrys, there being three or four families by that name in that locality. They all seem to be honorable, fair, broadminded people. And when I saw "Graudma" Henry, whose countenance indicates that the very soul of honor resides within, I was no longer surprised at the extraordinary fairmindedness of the Henry generation. They do not boast of relationship with the immortal Patrick Henry, of Revolutionary fame; but I feel sure they are of the same stock. I wish there were millions more!

Bro. William Shockow is and has been doing nobly to try to get the gospel before the people of that region. He does not slacken his hand until he has done what he thinks is for the good of the cause. A sacrifice is seemingly as cheerfully met as a gift would be received, and his time and money are freely given to advance the cause. May he live long, and be able to accomplish the good which he longs to do. While trying to hold meetings at Dibley, I staid one week with his mother, who, though a Catholic, was as kind as need be; more so than some I have seen who were fond of applying the epithet "Mother of Harlots," to the Catholic Church Besides her native tongue, German, Mrs. Shockow can make herself easily understood in English, and knows something of Latin, and M-xican as well. Catholics as a rule may be, and I believe are opposed to free schools: but Mrs. Shockow gives her children to understand that they must go to school. Her little boy, Frank, found out that sleeping late in the morning would not gain for him the luxury of a holiday at home. He must go. Gooo! If all Catholics, and Protestants too, were as much in favor of educating the children as Mrs. Shockow, then would it be better than now in that respect. But I suspect that since "Will" really turned to be "black sheep," and left the fold of the old "Mother church," and joined the "sect which is everywhere spoken against," and began to let the light shine around him, that an influence has been felt for good in the home that was never felt before, though all has not been as pleasant, perhaps, at times, as one might wish.

December 9, by the kindness of the Misses May and Lucy Shockow, I was permitted to ride into Barnsville; a distance of about nine or ten miles, on a snow wagon or sled. The "sleddin" for a good portion of the way was bad. When about two miles from the station we looked back across the prairie and saw the train I was intending to take, only four or five miles distant. "Snip" and "Jim" were already tired; but Miss May, as driver, urged them onward. It was a bard race, the train reaching the depot first; but for some cause it stopped five or six minutes, and so we made it in time for me to get aboard the train; but I could not get a ticket, and so lost the benefit of clergy rates. However, that was better than to have remained in Barnsville twenty-four hours and paid hotel fare. Thanks to "Snip and Jim," and also to their driver; for though a girl, she knows how to handle the lines better than many who would likely have to be "shown" before they would believe it.

If any of the isolated Saints in Minnesota who know of chances for preaching in their respective localities will write me, I will see that all calls are responded to if at all practicable. Letters addressed to me at Audubon will reach me.

May God bless his people, and may Zion's weal be great!

Yours in the faith,

T. C. KELLEY.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Whether it were not better to lie than to die. is an old question with the English speaking race, as it was with races that preceded it. Two hundred and fifty years ago Francis Quarles had this to say on the question in his 'Enchiridion:' God is the Author of truth. the Devill the father of lyes If the telling of a truth shall endanger thy life, the Author of truth will protect thee from the danger, or reward thee for thy damage. If the telling a lye may secure thy life, the father of lyes will beguile thee of thy gaynes or traduce the security. Better by losing of a life to save it, than by saving of a life to lose it. However, better thou perish than the truth.'"

A WATCH IN THE NIGHT.

In the long, dim night, if you can not sleep, Don't fall to counting the dreamland sheep. They follow their leader fast and fain Over the hedge and in dizzy train, But they have no power to drive away. The haunting ghosts of the weary day.

Cease, if you can, from adding lines,
Of curtseying figures, sevens, nines,
Sixes, elevens, till by and by,
Like a cloud of notes in a summer sky,
You could brush them away, but back they'd creep,

And never, never, would bring you sleep.

And, whosoever may bid you, do not say
The verses you learned in your childhood's day.

Over and over until full fain, You wish you were merely a child again With a head that at touch of the pillow knew The tender drooping of slumber's dew.

But, dear, just think of the forest pool Where the ferns stand close on the edges cool,

Where the whispering willows bend and lave,

And the lisp is heard of the rippling wave. Hark to the wind in the pine-tree tops, To the syllabled murmur in grove and copse, Shutting your eyes, drifting out to sea, Where the stars look down and the sails

Where the stars look down and the sail float free,

And the waters will croon you a drowsy tune, And the lulling of slumber will reach you

Or think, if you will, of the sweet, green grass,

Acres and acres where no feet pass.

Of daisies and clover, that over and over
The zephyrs kiss with the heart of a lover,
Of dunes that are billowy 'neath the sun,
Where the skylark stoops when his song is done

Or ever you know it, unaware,
The angel of sleep will find you there,
Will sift his poppies above your head,
And rock you as if in a cradle bed;
And, hushing and hiding, will bury you deep
In the wonderful, beautiful cave of sleep,
And you'll never awake till the new day's dawn,

When the watch of the dark, dull night is gone.—Margaret E. Sangster.

RELIGION.

What is religion? Webster tells us that religion originally signified an oath or a vow made to the gods. In a comprehensive sense, it included a belief in the perfection of God, in the revelation of his will to man, and man's obligation to his will. Religion is Godliness, or real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and man. It is belief in a superior power that governs all the worlds.

A religious person is one who is pious or Godly; one who reverences the Supreme Being and tries to meet his requirements.

O what an immense thought is summed up in the one word, Religion! Who is able to grasp it all, and live by it perfectly? Only a few, we fear. May we all strive henceforth to be one of that few.

The question arises, Of what benefit is religion? Let the poet answer:

'Tis religion that can give Solid comfort while we live; 'Tis religion can supply Endless pleasures when we die?

What then can there be that is so desirable in this world as religion? It is natural to desire that which will give comfort, or that which we think will give comfort. This fact is manifested all along the journey of life, even from infaccy up to manhood, and from the meridian of life down to the horizon. 'Tis manifested by the poor, unfortunate beggar, and by people of every grade in society up to those who dress gorgeously and sit on thrones.

Some seek in one way and some in another for comfort and happiness, but ofttimes the very way chosen is the way to sin and death.

Where then is the anticipated enjoyment? Gone as the mist before a whirlwind—and perhaps the sands of life have nearly run out. What then has one to offer unto the Lord? Nothing but the winding up of a wasted life. A sad state, and a poor sacrifice, sure.

Every blessing in life depends on one's obedience to the laws controlling each blessing, and insomuch as one conducts himself or herself unwisely will he or she miss the promised blessing. This fact is plainly understood by those who have lacked wisdom, and have learned it by the things they have suffered.

The plan of salvation, or the religion of Jesus Christ, is on a similar plan. That is, we are saved, made happy according to our obedience to that plan and our continuance in the same.

Now if one neglects his salvation till he has laid himself down on a death-bed, or if he is taken without a moment's warning, how then? Can he have as great happiness and joy as one who has spent his life in the service of his Master? or one who has sought and obtained religion and devoted his time and talent to the good of his fellow being? All can not give their service to the world. Some must work and get the living, and help support those who do, is a true thought, taking one view of the case; but even such can live their religion, and must live it in order to have comfort while they live, and endless pleasures when they die.

A late repentance places a person in the situation of a little child who has just entered the primary school, whereas an early repentance places him in the situation of a college graduate. One has it all to learn; has not improved his talent, and has but a few good deeds to come up in his favor, but the other has a spiritual knowledge and a foretaste of joys to come, and is longing to enter into that blessed state where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

Religion gives one a brilliant hope of happiness while in the intermediate state, a hope of rising in first resurrection, and a hope of endless pleasure. What then can be more desirable than true religion?

There is nothing that will arouse a person's indignation so quickly, so deeply, as to trample on his religious belief, let it be of whatever form it may. Out of the many hundred beliefs there have been many martyrs, probably some in each have sealed their testimony by their blood; that is, ave up life rather than give up what they believed was required to make their souls' salvation sure. Such have rejoiced and praised God, while being tortured, even till the spirit went out and up, and many, very many of them lived in the age when the gospel was not preached in its fullness. If they possessed such zeal, such faith, and such a self-sacrificing spirit, what sort of lives should we live, and what sort of death should we be willing to die?

My brother, and my sister, the thoughts given me cause my soul to cry out: O how weak, how unfaithful, how undeserving!
May we become as true to our religion as the martyrs were.

HOW TO CONDUCT ENTERTAINMENTS.

The Sunday-school is a complex organization. In order to have a perfect school, there are many details which have to be regulated and wisely cared for. Not only do we aim to reach the scholars' souls so that they may become followers of the Lord Jesus, but we also try to educate their minds so that they may have a competent understanding of the word of God, and all that bears upon it. But our scholars have other instincts beside these, and Sunday-school workers have long recognized that there is a legitimate effort in their work for entertainments. I shall write about two kinds of Sunday school entertainments which are in vogue, some of them helpful, and some not. With regard to this matter, it is perfectly possible to make use of a certain class of entertainments in a way to help the work of the school. It is also possible to use the same thing in such way as shall hinder, and not help. Experience is our best guide along these lines. By experience I do not mean our own experience only, but the experience of other workers who have tried experiments, and have tested their character. He is truly wise who learns from others and profits by their mistakes, for in that way he prevents himself from doing many things which are unfitting. He who must learn everything by his own bitter experience pays dearly for his education. I find in nearly every Sunday-school they have

SOME KIND OF ENTERTAINMENTS.

Many of these are exceedingly helpful, while at other times, I am sorry to say, many of them have more "tomfoolery," than "spirituality" about them. For instance, we take the Christmas entertainment. How often we see on this occasion, Santa Claus, who comes out clad in grote-que costume, and gets off many jokes and foolish remarks, causes much confusion, and in some measure deceives the younger chi dren, to whom everything is "real." And it also has the tendency of drawing away the thoughts of the children from Christ and his goodness. What business have we, as Sunday-school workers, thus to present things in such light that our little ones are deceived? There are many evils connected with such an abuse at Christmas-tide in my estimation. It seems to me that on Christmas, nothing should be presented to the school but what pertains to this anniversary. There is enough about the life of our Lord Jesus, from the cradle to the grave, to keep the attention of our scholars helpfully, and we might have some hymns, recitations, anthems, and brief addresses, that would entertain and instruct the school, and those assembled. In addition to this, let the Christmas tree be decorated and presents be distributed, then the scholars will be contented and happy, I am sure. Now, I do not deny that in some of these entertainments the persons being elaborately dressed, and speaking foolishly are attractive, but I fear they are not profitable. As for myself, I believe in having entertainments, because I believe they do much good, if we guard ourselves against the theatrical and exaggeration. Simplicity is to be sought, for in simplicity is very great power. Every effort should be made to leave a strong religious impression on all who have been present; for how often do we see parents come to the Sunday school entertainment, when they never come to church or inside of a Sunday-school. Here they are brought face to face with the workers; they realize the kindly sympathy which exists for them and their children. Their prejudices are allayed, their affection and interest awakened. Many a parent has thus been brought into the house of God for the first time, who has come and come again, until at last his honest heart lavs hold of the divine truth. So, dear Saints and Sundayschool workers, let us strive to do our duty, and attract them by every means in our power, to that place where hallowed influence predominates.

We also need to be humble and prayerful workers of God, that we may, through bis divine help, be able to teach the young of the spiritual things, and through our efforts they may learn to be obedient and Remember their Creator in the days of their youth. In Proverbs, chapter 12, and sixth verse, we read these words: "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." So, parents, Saints, and Sunday-school workers, let us work together that we may make the most profitable good of the precious time that God has given us, and in whatsoever we do that it may not only be a time of pleasure, but a great benefit to our souls also. I feel I have only slightly touched upon different points, and trust that the Holy Spirit of God will enlighten where my pen can not.

BISHOPS' NOTICES.

To the Saints in the British Isles, Greeting; Dear Brethren and Sisters:—It is with feelings of pleasure and thankfulness I address you in reference to the newly appointed and organized bishopric in this country. Of pleasure, because it opens up to the future a possibility for extending the work in this country in a manner hitherto impossible. Of thankfulness, that the Lord has given me a length of days such as permit me to take some part under the new order.

I take this opportunity of thanking you for the confidence you have placed in me, and the kind indulgence shown during the many years I have been the Bishop's agent. I now ask a continuance of the same, without which I shall be unable to discharge the more responsible and extended duties of bishop.

When a bishop for this country was decided upon by General Conference, April, 1900. and my name presented for that office, I hesitated for a time as to whether at my advanced age I should be justified in accepting so great a responsibility. But remembering the past mercies of the Lord, and your past aid and encouragement, and feeling sure of a continuance of the same, I laid my service at the disposal of the church. On August 5, 1901, upon voice and vote of the European Mission Conference held in the city of Manchester, Eagland, my appointment was ratified and ordination consummated.

As bishop of the British Isles, I now ask you to rise to the occasion, and of your means freely impart, that the work of the Lord may spread through the land. No doubt in presenting the gospel we shall encounter many more obstacles in the future, than we have done in the past. It will therefore require patient and persistent labor, as well as money to sustain the effort.

It is hardly necessary that I should take up time and space in citing you the law of tithing and free-will offerings. Bishop E. L. Kelley has done this while he has been with us, in such a clear and convincing way, that it seems to me we can one and all understand.

In the choice of counselors I have been fortunate enough to secure the advice and assistance of Elder Charles Henry Caton, with whom I have been closely associated for over thirty years in the work of this mission, and Elder Joseph Dewsnup (High Priests' Quorum), with whom I have also been closely associated for over twenty-six years. Brother Caton was for many years secretary of the English Mission, and has been president of the Birmingham District for the last eighteen years, while Bro. Dewsnup presided over the Manchester District from its organization until his resignation a few weeks ago, a period of over twenty-four years. I therefore feel safe, with the coperation of two such experienced members of the ministry, and with confidence commend their service to you. Whatever money you may feel disposed to pay into their hands will be duly acknowledged and placed to your credit. We will do our best to insure that all moneys coming into the hands of the bishopric shall be used for the purposes intended under the law, and that wisdom and true economy are used in the expenditure thereof.

Praying for the welfare of the church in all the world, and desiring a continuance in your faith and prayers, believe me your brother and servant in gospel bonds.

THOMAS TAYLOR,

Bishop of the British Isles.

RESOLUTIONS OF LOVING REMEMBRANCE.

Whereas, It has pleased God in his infinite love and wisdom to remove from our midst by the hand of death one of our most faithful and dearly beloved members, Sister Sarah Watson-Scott, who, during the many long years of her association with this society was, through her ever-abounding faith, zeal, courage, and charity, as the very spirit of inspiration to its members, therefore be it

Resolved, That as a society we do most deeply deplore her loss; and while bowing submissively to the dispensation of our heavenly Father, we yet feel that we can ill afford to lose one whose many services for the poor and afflicted will long be remembered by us and by them.

Resolved, That we tender to her bereaved family and many sorrowing friends our most heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of sore bereavement, and pray that God may sustain and comfort them. By order of the

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased the Master, in his infinite wisdom and mercy, to summon from our midst our worthy brother and coworker, George Barrett, deacon of the Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Branch, we hereby tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved members of his family, and also his friends. He was a faithful attendant of the Sunday-school, and as an officer of the branch was always found at his post of duty. He was an ardent lover of this latter-day work, and was ever ready in his forceful way to advocate its principles or to defend its cause.

Whereas, He was invincible in courage and inflexibly resolute in will; and whereas, He was as firm in his devotion as he was loyal to the truth of the gospel which in his youth he espoused and in his death he rejoiced; and whereas, He always hoped, prayed, and labored for the gospel's great success, therefore be it

Resolved, That by his removal from us we have sustained the loss of a brave and loyal soldier, in honor of whom we tender these feeble words of recognition and respect to his family and friends, and authorize their publication in the official papers of the church. ### PITTSBURG CHURCH DEDICATION.

We are pleased to announce that our new church is nearing completion, and, Providence permitting, will be dedicated Sunday, January 5, 1902. The erection of this church by this little body of Saints has been no small undertaking, but friends both in and out of the church have assisted, and the Lord has opened up the way beyond our expectations. and has crowned their efforts with success. To him be all the glory. We hope all who can conveniently do so will attend the dedication. We hope to see the church crowded, and expect to have a glorious time. Prayer meeting at 9: 30 and preaching at 10: 45 a.m. Preaching again in the afternoon beginning at 2:30, by several of the brethren; each occupying about ten minutes; and preaching at 7:30. On account of the scattered condition of the Saints, in order to attend all the meetings, it has been suggested that we bring our lunches, and come prepared to stay all day. The church is located on Miller Street near Colwell Street. Take Center Avenue cars to Miller, or Fifth Avenue cars to Fifth Avenue High School. Those who can not come, but desire to assist us financially, may forward their donations to William Dougherty, 507 California Avenue, Avelon, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. The smallest amount will be appreciated, and thankfully received. In gospel bonds, F. G. Pitt, pastor.

H. in Plano, George in Aurora, Will and Leroy in Chicago, Mrs. Eliza Powell, Plano, and Mrs. Sanderson, Chicago. Sr. Horton was one of the jewels of earth among women; was always a Latter Day Saint, and died in gospel hope. Funeral at Plano. E. M. Wildermuth officiating. BARRETT.—Mr. George Barrett, deacon of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, Branch, died Sunday, October 6, 12: 20 a. m., 1901, after brief illness. He was born in Staffordshire, England, and became a member of the church in its earlier days. His faith in the latter-day work was firm and steadfast to the last. He came to this country with the object of investigating the claims of Brigham Young, but was converted to the Reorganized Church at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, by Bro. M. H. Forscutt, February 18, 1885, and was confirmed by Elders J. Ellis and M. H. Forscutt. Since that time he has been a faithful servant, having served the branch as deacon since his ordination to that office by G. H. Hulmes and F. Criley on August 5, 1894. He is survived by his wife, three sons, and one daugh-He was a man of unusual stability and decision of character, and one who could be depended upon when his services were needed. Funeral sermon and services conducted by É. H. Thomas.

GILLESPIE.-Miss Katie Gillespie, aged 25 years, died at the Presbyterian Hospital, of Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, in which city she was born May 15, 1876 She was baptized in Pittsburg branch, May 22, 1895, by Elder G. H. Hulmes, and confirmed by Elders G. H. Hulmes and Frank Criley. She prized this latter-day work as her greatest comfort, especially in the hour of affliction, of about eight to ten weeks' duration. She frequently called for the administration of the elders which always brought relief and revived her hopes for recovery, until a few days before her death, when she seemed confident that her journey was nearing the end. She left this world with love toward a'l, with a heart reconciled to her Master's will, and with that unswerving faith in his infinite love and boundless mercy, which the most grievous affliction and the slowest transition of death could not weaken, and with the blessed hope of a part in the resurrection of the just. Funeral sermon by E. H. Thomas.

Long evenings are here again and naturally one thinks of a good family agricul-tural weekly, because its regular visits are welcomed by the whole family.

This is true particularly of the splendid illustrations from photographs splandid illustrations from photographs taken by their own artists and special articles by the best known and most practical men in every branch of agriculture, such as N. J. Harris, secretary of the Iowa Seed Corn Breeders' association; H. W. Campbell, the authority on soil culture; James Arkinson of the Iowa experiment station at Ames, Iowa; Frank G. Carpenter, famous for his letters of travel; C. R. Thomas, secretary American Hereford Breeders' association; B. O Cowan, assistant secretary American Shorthorn Breeders' association; Dr. A. T. Peters, Ne-braska experiment station; E. F. Stephens, President Nebraska Horticultural society; Woman's Department, conducted by Mrs. Nellie Hawks, Friend. Nebraska; J. J. This is a weekly agricultural family paper, in which the farmer's wife is particularly interested on account of the pages devoted to her particular interests. In fact, there is no paper published either in the east or west that meets so well the wants of the western farmers and stock raisers and their families.

If you do not get it send 10 cents for a ten weeks' trial subscription to The Twentieth Century Farmer, 2385 Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebraska, and you will have an opportunity to become acquainted with it. A dollar will bring it for a whole year.

WITH this number the HERALD closes its forty-eighth volume. As this number is sent out to our readers. we extend to them the compliments of the season, and trust that the HER-ALD has been to them such that we shall merit their continued support. Indeed, while the HERALD goes into the homes of a goodly number of the Saints, it does not find its way into as many as it should, and why would it not be a good way for our readers to remember the work for which the HERALD has so long labored. not only to renew their own subscriptions, but to see that the HERALD finds its way to some home where it has not previously been going regularly. An increased subscription list will increase our opportunities for doing good, and surely our readers, who as members of the church are directly interested in the success of the HER-ALD, should do all in their power to increase the scope of the HERALD'S work by extending its field of labor. The HERALD, as the church organ. has for years served the people as their own, and deserves their best support. Let us hear from our readers with new subscriptions.

THE EDMUNDS-TUCKER BILL

The following letter and answers may be of some interest, possibly some benefit, to our readers:

SANTA ANA. Cal., Nov. 24. Editors Herald:-Please answer those questions through the HERALD

In what ways did the church help in the passage of the Edmunds Bill? Who wrote the bill? What other churches interested themselves in its passage? Was it the first step taken by Congress to put down polygamy? What proofs can we present to the public of our connection with that bill? What action have the various denominations (other than the Presbyterian) taken as regards the baptism of polygamous converts in foreign lands? If you have record of such action, please state time and place, also publications, in which it is recorded.

In bonds, ELBERT A. SMITH.

In reply:

We are not aware that anything done by the church in regard to, or at the time legislation was being had in Congress, had any effect upon the passage or rejection of bills pending affecting Utah affairs.

In 1866, the Editor was summoned before the Territorial Committee, of which Congressman J. M. Ashley, of Ohio, was chairman, and asked what legislation he would recommend, with a view to the situation in Utah. The Editor stated in reply that he did not recommend any new legislation, but did recommend the enforcement of already existing laws, both for and against citizens of Utah, without partiality.

Subsequently, while Congress was considering bills introduced by several members, the conference of April, 1870, appointed a committee to draft a memorial to Congress, setting forth the faith of the Reorganized Church, and their attitude toward the dogma of plural marriage, or polygamy, with a statement of the time and place of its public promulgation; showing that it never had and could not legally become a tenet of the church organized in 1830. This memorial was reported and adopted.

A copy of this memorial was laid on the desk of every Congressman and Senator, or sent to his address, each officer of the General Government, and the governor of each State and Territory.

The object of this memorial was to so present the facts in the controversy between the Utah church and the Reorganized Church, that whatever action Congress might take in the premises, might not be inimical to those who held to the primitive faith and church organization as we understood them. What effect such action had upon the action of Congress, we do not know.

In 1882 the conference adopted a resolution appointing a committee to present to the Secretary of State, then Hon. F. T. Frelinghuysen, a request for a modification of the action of a letter to foreign governments, written by his predecessor, Hon. W. M. Evarts, with regard to the restricting of immigration of converts to Mormonism into the United States. That committee carried out the instruction of the conference, reporting their action with a copy of the document presented by them to Hon. Frelinghuysen to the April session of 1883. The answer of the Secretary of State was favorable; but no action was taken, none being thought necessary by him.

At the visit of the committee to Washington, two of them called at the residence of the Hon. George F. Edmunds, Senator from Vermont, to pay respects to him, but did not see him, however, he being at the time absent. They left a note, and a copy each of Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, with marked passages, for the Senator. Subsequently the Senator acknowledged the receipt of the books and note, and stated that the matters suggested by the committee would be given consideration and might affect pending legislation at next session of Congress.

Two of the committee were also present at a meeting of a congressional committee in which an examination of some of the matters appertaining to the contest for a seat in Congress was pending between Messrs. Campbell and Cannon, of Utah. Of this committee we believe Honorable Reed, of Maine, was at the time chairman.

What effect, if any, this visit of the conference committee may have had upon the Edmunds, or Edmunds-Tucker Bill, we do not Neither do we know how much, or how little the action of the church and its committees aided in the passage of the Edmunds Bill. What was done by the church and its leading men was done upon the desire to prevent any action by Congress that might militate against the religious standing of the members of the Reorganized Church as citizens of the United States, and secure the original faith and church from complicity with the dogma and practice of polygamy.

Whether anything that was done had any influence upon the legislation had, we have no means of knowing. We have not presumed to say; nor do we flatter ourselves as being within the lines of successful lobbyists. It is not safe to claim credit for what is at best only problematical in conjecture. So we can not say that the church helped in the passage of the Edmunds Bill.

The bill must have been written by Senator Edmunds. It is not at all likely a man of his stamp would permit any other to do so important a work for which he was to become the

The Edmunds Bill was not the first effort in Congress to legislate against the conditions in Utah. Other efforts had been made before; and it was during one of these efforts that the editor of the HERALD was summoned before the Territorial Committee in 1866.

It would be easy to furnish the evidences of our having taken an interest in what Congress did in this matter, but we could not furnish evidence of "connection" with the Edmunds Bill itself. Those having connection with the bill could only be discovered by an examination of the Congressional Record itself.

We are not in possession of information as to the action of other churches with reference to the baptism of polygamous converts in foreign countries. We think we have read something from the pen of Bro. R. C. Evans on the subject; and he may be able to furnish the information required.

DEDICATION AT KEWANEE, ILLINOIS.

The Saints of the Kewanee. Illinois. Branch have for the fourth time changed their worshiping place, each time the worse for the better until they are now located in one of the best, size and style considered, owned in the church. They have built, sold, and bought or built, until from a rough shed, which was a mile from the town and the "Old Ship Zion," built of boards, they will now worship in a new brick building in town not far from the center of the town, located on a principal thoroughfare, fitted up in modern ways, heated by

The branch has done all this within itself, and the location of the site, the building and fitting of the house, has been carefully done, so that no bitterness of thought, no sting of complaint or recrimination, and no monetary debt are left to embitter the use of the completed structure to any of the members.

The building was dedicated on Sunday, December 15, with the carrying out of the following program, Brn. Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, and Heman C. Smith being in attendance as the guests of the branch, to assist in the services, by invitation of the branch:

LATTER DAY SAINTS CHURCH DEDICATORY SERVICE, DECEMBER 15, 1901, AT 10:30 A. M.

Opening hymn, No. 767:

While afflicted, tossed and driven, Wand'ring o'er thy footstool, Lord, Few have offered halls of worship For the preaching of thy word. But we thank thee and adore thee. Thou didst hear thy people cry, When they humbly bowed before thee, And hast brought deliv'rance nigh.

Dedicated to thy worship, Stands this Bethel reared to thee; May the plan of thy salvation, In its courts expounded be-Stones, cement, glass, iron, timber, All that forms of it a part, As 'tis given, so Lord, accept it, Tribute of our grateful heart.

Bless the gen'rous hearts, and prosper Those who've striven this house to raise, Lead them in thy Spirit's favor, Them we thank, but thee we praise. Here may faithful saints be strengthened, Doubting, fearful ones made strong; Christ adored, and souls converted, Error crushed, and truth made known.

Prayer, Pastor John Chisnall; Anthem, Choir; Bible reading, Elder H. C. Smith; Tenor solo, D J. Bath; Dedicatory prayer, Bishop E L Kelley; Sermon, Pres. Joseph Smith; Offertory; Closing exercises.

The weather was bitterly cold, so that many who would have attended did not; hence the audience was not large in numbers but was made up of intelligent and attentive worshipers and their friends.

The choir service was under the direction of Bro. Alma Whitehouse, the organist a young friend by the name of Hallin, who is organist for the Lutheran brethren of the city, who kindly gave his services for the occasion. The choral singing was good, and the solos by Bro. D. J. Bath, of Toulon, Illinois, were excellent in character and in rendition.

Bro. John Chisnall was in charge. and to his continued charge for the branch Bishop Kelley turned over the dedicated building at the close of the service.

Bishop Kelley occupied the afternoon hour and Bro. Heman C. Smith

Services were to be continued during the week following, Bro. D. M. Rudd, missionary in the district, occupying Monday night, the 16th, he having come in to consult with Bro. Heman, missionary in charge, who would remain some days if the weather permitted of holding servin its travails, and now rejoices with it in its success. "It is the Lord's doings and marvelous in our eyes."

We noticed among the attendants, of the old-time staunch defenders of the faith, Bro. Samuel Garland and wife, Bro. James Lord, Bro. John D. Jones, Bro. John S. Patterson, Bro. - Whitehouse, Bro. Adam Fletcher, Bro. Henry Norris and wife, Srs. Higginson, Chisnall, Atkinson, Eli Terry, and a number whose names we do not recall.

Four were baptized at the close of the evening services by Bro. Alma Whitehouse, one of the coming young men of the branch. Two of the number were great-grandchildren of Aunt Katharine Salisbury, sister of the Seer and Patriarch.

WHAT MAY WE SING?

We are sometimes asked by anxious inquirers as to the sort of songs the Saints may sing, and what sort of music they may play, at home, in social gatherings other than testimony and prayer services. For instance, we are asked: Is it right for Latter Day Saints to practice playing and singing all kinds of songs and tunes, such as the "Devil's Dream," "Washer Woman," waltzes, schottisches, two-steps, etc.; and songs such as, "The Jealous Lover," "My Lover Went Down With the Maine," "Little Birdie in the Tree, Sing a Song to Me, "Only a Dream of My Mother," "The Blue and the Gray," and others of a similar character?

It is a difficult thing to answer an inquiry of this sort, for the reason that there are some Latter Day Saints who do not sing at all. Some of these have not learned to sing, and take no Other Latter pleasure in singing. Day Saints care little for singing or instrumental music themselves, but do like to hear both when done by others, and like good singing and good playing when others do it. Again there are others who like sacred music only, songs or instrumental; and others who take delight in any sort of music, and like to hear and help make it. Being full of the musical faculty they bubble over with it, and all harmonious and melodious sounds bring a sort of pleasure to them.

However, from the fact that God has implanted the love of music in man and given the faculty to make it both by instrument and voice, it is a safe deduction that music in itself is not harmful. It only remains to gratify the taste for music by selecting that which is proper for occasion, time, and place.

As to the class of tunes named by the questioner, we do not see that the name given to any particular piece of The Editor has been with the branch | music or a song has anything to do with the melody, rhythm, or harmony of the music. We heard, "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" sung in Christian service to the tune of "Lily Dale." "Redeemer of Israel," to "Old Uncle Ned," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," to the old Scottish air, "Robin Adair;" and have seen lively steps taken at the music of "Old Hundred," well played; and a quadrille danced to "Life Let us Cherish."

It seems to us the Saints should be at liberty to enjoy the faculty of making and hearing songs and music, of what may be called the sentimental, the heroic, and the mirthful and comic, upon suitable occasions, for their own amusement and entertainment, and that of others, care being taken to observe the proprieties of time, place, and occasion.

Songs like the ones named. "Only a Dream of My Mother," "The Blue and the Gray," would not be suitable for the prayer and testimony meeting; but for the social evening's pleasant hour, the evening party, or the concert would be enjoyable.

We are favorable to the concert and musicale, or reading and declamatory entertainment among the Saints, where the influences are peaceable and conducive to rest and and freedom from untoward care, and where the lovers of music and oratory may find sway for their powers.

James wrote, "If any are merry let them sing psalms." We may not know just the character of the psalms to which James had reference, but they would be suitable to a merry spirit and feeling, or he could not have so written.

We, as a people, have been directed to cultivate and exercise the gift of song and music; and we feel assured that whatever of the nature of song and music will tend to soothe and soften the asperities of our human nature will not be disapproved by him who gave the command.

Cheerfulness is conducive to contentment and happiness. Music and song tend to cheerfulness. The bard once wrote, "He that hath no music in his soul, nor is not moved by concord of sweet sounds, is fit for treason, strategy, and spoils." Then let us sing and be happy, keeping within the bounds of propriety always.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY. NO. 10.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, November 17, 1901.

Reported for HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen.

It seems that this subject is almost an endless one. We have been trying to get over the ground as fast as possible. We have felt we were not getting along as fast as we would like to, yet it seems that a part of our audience wants to hear more of the details than we have been presenting. thought that we would leave Kirtland and the East and commence to night in regard to Missouri, and the events that happened in connection with the settling of the church in that country, but during the week we received a card from Ohio, in which this request was made:

Make plain some points in the experience of the church while here, such as the object of their coming here; the spirit of specula-tion that was among them, and the result; the banking business; Dr. Hurlbut's excommunication; the Spalding story; why they left here in 1838, etc.

So it might be well for us to-night to speak to our Ohio audience to some extent, and mention some of these things.

In the first place as to their object in going to Kirtland from New York. as I understand it, the reason why they went to the Ohio was because of a direct command to do so, that by revelation, the principle upon which the church was governed at that time, they were informed that conditions for the building up of the church would be better in Ohio than they were in New York. The language of this revelation is as follows:

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law; and there you shall be endowed with power from on high, and from thence, whomsoever I will, shall go forth among all nations, and it shall be told them what they shall do; for I have a great work laid up in store, for Israel shall be saved, and I will lead them whithersoever I will, and no power shall stay my hand.

This sets forth in clearer language perhaps than I could in my own language, the reason why they went to Ohio. As I have said upon a former occasion, it is not definitely stated in Kirtland was the place to locate: they were simply told to go to the Ohio. But prior to this time the elders that had gone west had commenced their work around Kirtland, and there were many that united with the church, and the minds of the elders were, of course, directed to that place, because of the beginning already made, and the excellent prospect for further developments in the church work. I want to repeat again to-night, that if the fraud that has been charged against Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon had been true, they never would have gone to that neighborhood, for they were only about fifty miles from the place where the Spalding romance was said to have been written, and it is not likely that men would come right back there where this story was written, to palm it off upon the world, where they were most likely to be detected by people who knew about the manuscript. It is a very good circumstantial evidence that they knew nothing about the Spalding matter, and they never stole the manuscript; and hence we believe this revelation was the foundation which they built upon when coming there. They were commanded to go and they went. The Lord said it was for the reason that they might escape the power of the enemy, and also that they might become a righteous people, without spot and blameless.

I do not understand it conveys the idea they were to become a righteous people without spot and blameless, in Ohio, but it says they were to go to the Ohio, "and there'I will give unto you my law." It was by the keeping of that law that they were to become a righteous people. If that law were kept, whether in Ohio or elsewhere, it would have that effect. But at that time conditions were such in Ohio, it was a better place for them to congregate. Then they could accomplish more good than by staying

In regard to the Dr. Hurlbut case which some wanted to know something about, he is not the kind of a character I like very much to talk The less said in regard to about. such men, sometimes, the better. There is plenty of evidence to show the man was anything but what he ought to have been, but let me state to you right here that he is the man that assisted E. D. Howe in compiling certain evidence against Mormonism, so-called, found in his "History of Mormonism," published in Painesville, Ohio, in 1834, and again in 1840. Those affidavits were gathered by Dr. Hurlbut, and also the manuscript from which it was said the Book of Mormon was manufactured was obtained by Hurlbut and placed in the hands gave the University of Chicago a the revelation, that in the vicinity of of Howe. As you know, the manuscript was lost sight of for a great many years, after it got in the hands of E. D. Howe, but subsequently it was found in the hands of L. L. Rice, in Honolulu, who bought the printing press and fixtures of Mr. Howe and removed them to his island home. I do not care to enter upon the Spalding story more fully than we have done; it would take too long to follow it in all its details.

In regard to Dr. Hurlbut we will state some of the things regarding him, that you may see what kind of a character it was that gathered this material that was expected to be the death of Mormonism. He at one time belonged to the church at Kirtland, was at one time an elder in the church and went on a mission to the East and returned, and upon his return there were charges preferred against him. We have the history of it here and we will read it:

A conference of high priests convened in the translating room in Kirtland on the third of June, and the first case presented was that of Dr. P. Hurlbut, who was accused of unchristian conduct with the women, while on a mission to the East. On investigation it was decided that his commission be taken from him, and that he be no longer a member of the Church of Christ.

This was done June 3, 1833.

That is the first reference I have found to his trouble in the history. He was charged there with "unchristian conduct," and was then expelled from the church. Later we find that he appealed from this decision. On the 21st day of June, only eighteen days after he had been expelled, this document was presented to the Presidency and High Council:

I, Dr. P. Hurlbut, having been tried before the bishop's council of high priests on a charge of unchristianlike conduct with the female sex, and myself being absent at the time, and considering that strict justice was not done me, I do, by these presents, most solemnly enter my appeal unto the President's council of high priests, for a rehearing, according to the privilege guaranteed to me in the laws of the church, which council is now assembled in the schoolroom, in Kirtland, this twenty-first day of June, 1833. . . . . Brother Hurlbut's case was then laid be-

Brother Huribut's case was then laid before the court, and, the testimony against him given in by Orson Hyde and Hyrum Smith, and duly investigated. The decision of the court was that Brother Huributshould be forgiven because of the liberal confession which he made. This court also decided that the bishop's council decided correctly on the case, and that Bro. Huribut's crime was sufficient to cut him off from the church; but on his confession he was restored. . . .

Mark you, that though he was restored it was because of his confession. But the appellate court, so far as the decision of the bishop's court was concerned, indorsed the findings that he was guilty of some kind of unchristian conduct while he was an elder of the church. Two days after he was arraigned again, on June 23, 1833.

Brother Doctor P. Hurlbut was called in question, by a general council; and Brother Gee, of Thompson, testified that Brother Hurlbut said that he had deceived Joseph Smith's God, or the spirit by which he was actuated, etc. There was also corroborating testimony brought against him, by Brother Hodges, and the council cut him off from the church.

So that after he was restored by making a confession, he went on and boasted he had deceived Joseph Smith's God; this statement was as much as to say he had not repented at all, and two days after he was again expelled. That is the kind of a record the man had in the church. That is not all. After he was expelled from the church, he made threats against the peace of the community and against the life of Joseph Smith, and he was arraigned before the law. The result of this arraignment we will give you briefly, for we do not wish to spend too much time on Dr. Hurlbut. Joseph Smith gives an account of the trial of Dr. Hurlbut:

Monday, March 31, 1834, I went to Chardon to attend the court, in the case of Dr. P. Hurlbut. . . Wednesday the 2d, and Thursday the 3d, attended the court. Hurlbut was on trial for threatening my life.

Again on the 7th:

Bishop Whitney, Elders Frederick G Williams, Oliver Cowdery, Heber C. Kimball, and myself met in the council room, and bowed down before the Lord, and prayed that he would furnish the means to deliver the Firm from debt, that they might be set at liberty; also that I might prevail against the wicked man, Hurlbut, and that he might be put to shame.

April 9. After an impartial trial the court decided that Dr. P. Hurlbut be bound over under two hundred dollar bonds, to keep the peace for six months, and pay the cost, which amounted to near three hundred dollars, all of which was in answer to our prayers, for which I thank my heavenly Father.

So you see this court decided the man was not only guilty, but was a dangerous character, and that life was unsafe with those with whom he was at enmity. It occurred to us when we read the statement of Joseph Smith, it would be a good thing to find out whether such a case were on record in the county where Joseph Smith said Dr. Hurlbut was on trial. and so in 1896 we wrote to the clerk of the court and had a certified copy of the record made, and it is published in his exact words. The decision of the court after summing up the evidence, says:

William Holbrook Justice of the Peace. And thereupon came the Prosecuting Attorney for the County and also the said defendant, and the Court having heard the said complaint and also all the testimony adduced by the said complainant, and also by the said defendant and having duly considered the same are of opinion that the said complainant had ground to fear that the said Doctor P. Hurlbut would wound, beat or kill him or destroy his property as set forth in said complaint. Wherefore it is ordered and adjudged by the Court that the said Doctor P. Hurlbut enter into a new recognizance with good and sufficient security in the sum of two hundred dollars hereafter to keep the peace and be of good behavior to the citizens of the State of Ohio generally and to the said Joseph Smith Junior in particular for the period of six months, and it is further ordered that the said Doctor P. Hurlbut pay the costs of this prosecution taxed at the sum of one hundred and twelve dollars and fifty-nine cents. And thereupon came the said Doctor P. Hurlbut with Charles A. Holmes and Elijah Smith as his sureties in open Court, entered into a recognizance in the penal sum of two hundred dollars each, conditioned that the said Doctor P. Hurlbut shall for the period of six months from and after this day keep the peace and be of good behavior to all the citizens of the State of Ohio generally and to the said Joseph Smith Jun. in particular.

So the record is there yet, just exactly corresponding with the statement made by Joseph Smith, corroborating all he said regarding Dr. Hurlbut. I think that is all we need to say about him.

It was thought that when this book that Dr. Hurlbut and E D. Howe were instruments in getting up was published, that it was a death-blow to Mormonism and the Book of Mormon; and to show you just which one died I want to relate a little experience I had personally. I was in a secondhand book-store down here in Kansas City, and looking over the books I saw one entitled, "History of Mormonism," by E. D. Howe. I asked the proprietor, "How much for this book?" and he said, $1.25. I then found an original copy of the Book of Mormon. I asked, "How much is this book worth?" and he said, $125. That is the way it killed it. The original copy of Book of Mormon, one hundred twenty five dollars; the other one hundred twenty five cents. I asked him why he asked so much, and he answered, that it was one of the original ones,—one that does not teach polygamy. I was not able to purchase it, so I have not the book. That is, briefly stated, the record Dr. Hurlbut made in the church, and his connection with the church in 1833 and 1834.

Now in regard to some of these other questions asked by our inquirer from Ohio. I want to present to you something regarding this spirit of speculation that was rampant in the church, for, like a great many other places, Kirtland being new and the people gathering there so rapidly, making it a central place, the prices of property naturally went high, and individuals took advantage of the rise in prices and got into the spirit of speculation largely, and that spirit of speculation was not confined to the outside, either. Some of the brethren who went there desired to make money out of the people coming They bought land cheap, raised the prices high, and speculated. It was the wrong principle, and not only wrong in principle, but the results were disastrous, as we will attempt to show. This inquirer wants to know about the spirit of speculation and the result. I can not do better than to read some of the language of Joseph Smith upon that point. This was in 1837, the spirit of speculation was at its height, and Joseph wrote:

At this time the spirit of speculation in lands and property of all kinds, which was so prevalent throughout the whole nation, was taking deep root in the church.

Now the spirit of speculation was all over the country, and you who have read of contemporaneous events will remember that immediately after this spirit of speculation there commenced a stringency in the money market, and there were hard times. which some of you will remember. Just a few years ago we had an experience of the same kind. There was a boom all over this western country. Prices ran high, and immediately after came the panic. So it was in 1837, and this spirit of speculation was taking deep root in the church.

As the fruits of this spirit, evil surmisings, fault-finding, disunion, dissension, and apostasy followed in quick succession, and it seemed as though all the powers of earth and hell were combining their influence in an especial manner to overthrow the church at once, and make a final end. Other banking institutions refused the 'Kirtland Safety Society's' notes. The enemy abroad and apostates in our midst united in their schemes, flour and provisions were turned towards other markets, and many became disaffected towards me as though I were the sole cause of those very evils I was most strenuously striving against, and which were actually brought upon us by the brethren not giving heed to my counsel.

No quorum in the church was entirely exempt from the influence of those false spirits who were striving against me for the mastery; even some of the Twelve were so far lost to their high and responsible calling as to begin to take sides, secretly, with the enemy.

That was the result of this spirit of speculation in Kirtland. It has the same result wherever this disposition to grow rich from the necessities of the brethren is exercised; as Joseph Smith states here, there was no quorum of the church that was exempt from the influence of it, even some of the Twelve partook of its power. And when you come to read the history of the church you find this true. Luke S. Johnson, Lyman E. Johnson, John Boynton, of the Twelve, and others, were overcome by the same spirit of speculation and lost their places. Though they may not have been very bad men, this spirit of speculation overcame them and hindered their development spiritually. and they were overthrown so far as their faith was concerned, and failed to do the work they might otherwise have done. Parley P. Pratt was for awhile also affected, but he repented of the evil he did and plead for forgivness, and in humiliation renounced his love of gain and desire for speculation, and magnified his calling, and for many years did a great work for the cause of the Master.

Now in regard to this banking business, which comes in closely with this spirit of speculation, I wish to call your attention to some things. I do not think, however, the banking business, this Kirtland Safety Society Bank, was born of this spirit of speculation. I believe this was done in good faith, as a business proposition. I will read you some things in regard to it. The events are too many to read all of them, but suffice it to say, a meeting was called on January 2, 1837, for the purpose of organizing a society. At that meeting Sidney Rigdon was called to the chair and Warren Parrish was chosen secretary, and at that meeting there was adopted a constitution. It seems there had been some agitation of this as this as early as 1836, but this constitution containing sixteen articles was adopted on the 2d day of January, 1837, and this institution was placed on its feet. The introduction to this constitution and the articles of incorporation was as follows:

We, the undersigned subscribers, for the promotion of our temporal interests, and for the better management of our different occupations, which consist in agriculture, mechanical arts, and merchandising, do hereby form ourselves into a firm or company for the before-mentioned objects by the name of the 'Kirtland Safety Society Anti-Banking Company,' and for the proper management of the said firm, we individually and jointly enter into and adopt the following articles of agreement.

It seems to me that was a legitmate act of business, and if legitimately conducted, no fault could be found. That it might have been a mistake from a financial standpoint is possible, I am not here to defend the wisdom of the move that was made, but I think when we have examined these articles, we will discover there certainly could be no design of fraud. I will present two of these articles. The 14th article says:

Art. 14. All notes given by said society, shall be signed by the Treasurer and Secretary thereof, and we, the individual members of said firm, hereby hold ourselves bound for the redemption of all such notes.

Men going into a fraud would not do that. Each individual member of the Kirtland Safety Society held himself personally responsible for the payment of every note that was signed by the treasurer and secretary. It may have been unwise for them to do it, but it showed they were honest. Banking associations do not generally do that; in fact, I do not know that it was wise to do it; but these men put everything they had individually into the venture. They would not have done it if they expected to defraud the people; they would have held their own personal effects free, certainly. But they said, "We hold ourselves personally responsible for these notes," and Article 16 says:

Art. 16. Any article in this agreement may be altered at any time, annulled, added unto, or expunged by the vote of two thirds of the members of said society, except the four-teenth article; that shall remain unaltered during the existence of said company. For the true and faithful fulfillment of the above covenant and agreement, we individually bind ourselves to each other, under the penal sum of one hundred thousand dollars. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals, the day and date first above written.

They put themselves right where they could not change that. They said, We will be personally responsible for every note signed, and that rule can never be changed while this institution remains. So they did not intend to defraud the people. And said they further:

For the true and faithful fulfillment of the above covenant and agreement, we individually bind ourselves to each other, under the penal sum of one hundred thousand dollars.

That bears no marks of fraud thereon, and yet I am willing to concede it was an ill-advised business venture.

They made no more serious mistakes, however, than thousands of other institutions did. When they finally failed it was not the only one of the terrible crashes of 1837, when prices went down. Banks were going down all over this land, just as they do in every other financial crisis. They were failing here and there and everywhere, and this institution had a harder time to live than others for they had to battle with enemies who were striving to overthrow them, and the issue of other banks was preferred to this because of religious prejudice.

But when this banking institution began to falter, there were men connected with it, that, like a great many other men, resorted to some things that were not square. They wanted to save their fortunes and they were not as scrupulous as they ought to have been. But how was it with Joseph Smith? When they began to depart from straight business principles, Joseph Smith as well as others denounced it. Let me read to you what he says here on July 7, 1837:

Some time previous to this I resigned my office in the Kirtland Safety Society, disposed of my interest therein, and withdrew from the institution; being fully aware, after so long an experiment, that no institution of the kind, established upon just and righteous principles, for a blessing not only to the church but the whole nation, would be suffered to continue its operations in such an age of darkness, speculation, and wickedness.

This is the time speculation got into the church as well as outside, and to affect that banking business which commenced in 1836-7. In July, Joseph Smith says he withdrew because he knew no such institution would be safe to continue its operations in such an age of darkness, speculation, and wickedness.

Almost all banks throughout the country, one after the other, suspended specie pay-ment, and gold and silver rose in value in direct ratio with the depreciation of paper The great pressure of the money currency. market is felt in England as well as America, and breadstuffs are everywhere high.

Joseph further renounced this institution. When they attempted to palm off the Kirtland Bank notes, he published this notice in the August, (1837), number of the Messenger and Advocate:

I am disposed to say a word relative to the bills of the Kirtland Safety Society Bank. I hereby warn them to beware of speculators, renegades, and gamblers, who are duping the unwary and unsuspecting, by palming upon them those bills, which are of no worth here. I discountenance and disapprove of any and all such practices. I know them to be def-rimental to the best interests of society, as well as to the principles of religion.

When men attempted to use these worthless notes, he published over his own signature, a warning to the public not to receive them, and yet you tell me, he, as well as others, was engaged in fraud, and the thing was born in fraud to deceive the people.

It went down like other institutions because of the stringency of the times. Joseph Smith denounced their acts and withdrew from the institution. Allow me in this connection to give you a little testimony that was given by an individual that lived there at that time, and is himself a banker, Mr. Axtell. By the way, we have a brother here from that State to night, and he likely knows the banker.

Q-When did you come to this county, Mr. Axtell?

A .- My father moved here with his family in the year 1830. I was but a boy then.

Q — What was your father's business?

A.—He was a Baptist minister, and kept a hotel then.

Q.—Did you know Joseph Smith? A —Yes, sir. I have seen him many a time; he was often at my father's house; and I with many young people often went to Kirtland to see him and his people. I knew his father also, who at the time I knew him had charge of the Kirtland Temple. He took me with others through the temple at one time; he appeared to be a fine old man.

Q-When did your father become acquainted with Mr. Smith?

A.—In about six weeks after he came to the county he first met him; he went out of his way one day six miles to see Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon. He said he found them in Kirtland Township; they had been there but a short time and occupied a small log house. He found them to be quite intelligent men, and he said pleasant talkers, and quite free to converse upon their religious views, which at that time was known as the "new sect." My father always said Joseph Smith was a conscientious and unright man.

Q.-Did you know any other persons of the new society?

A.-O, yes, a great many. I knew Mr. Pratt very well. He was a smart and a square man all around. Those men were neither knaves nor rogues; that is my opinion of them. I suppose some of them may have been. It was just as in all other bodies of the kind, there will be some bad ones, but I don't know of any that were. There were a good many stories circulated about them that I knew to be false. At one time an exwas found in Kirtland Township, killed and skinned; and there was a great to do about the Mormons having killed it. My brother was sheriff at the time, and with others went up to investigate the matter, and he says that there was not the least evidence which showed that the Mormons had any hand in killing the ox. Persons around, however, who hated their religion, would tell that they did.

Q-How was it that people did not like them? Were they not good citizens?

A.—Yes, they were as good citizens as those of any society. It was the fanatics in religion that tried to drive those men out. There were a great many conservative men in our county at that time who held these fanatics back, and if it had not been for this they would have gone in and killed them all. But our intelligent and honorable citizens prevented this.

Q.—What about the Kirtland Bank swindle? Mr. Axtell, you are a banker, and know how that was, do you not?

A.—Yes, I know about that bank; they started in Kirtland. These parties went into the banking business as a great many others in the State of Ohio and other States. They got considerable money out at first, and their enemies began to circulate all manner of stories against them, and as we had a great many banks then that issued what was known as "wild-cat" money, the people began to get alarmed at so many stories, and would take the other banks' issue instead of the Kirtland; and so much of it was forced in at once that the bank was not able to take it up. Had the people let these people alone there is no reason that I know of why the Kirtland Bank should not have existed to this time, and on as stable a basis as other banks.

Q.-Then you think it was the fault of the enemies of the bank that it failed?

A -Yes, I do; and it was not the only one that failed either by a good many, and with which Smith had nothing to do.

With this, I will leave it with you for your consideration and with those who may chance to read this lecture. The banking business was never a church measure, though individual members engaged in it just as church members often do in business ventures. I hope these statements will set people right in regard to the Kirtland banking business. However, it is due to say that when Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon and others left Kirtland, which they did in 1838, in consequence of the failure of the bank, and failures in other business ventures, they left somewhat in debt. There were some transactions in Kirtland unsettled, and they removed to Missouri leaving these things in an unsettled condition, but while they left their business unset-thereafter make things good. They sent an agent back in the fall of the same year, 1838. They sent Mr. Oliver Granger back to Ohio to settle up the business of the church, and that of individuals in particular.

Allow me to present to you some statements made by business men in regard to these transactions.

PAINESVILLE, October 19, 1838. We, the undersigned, being personal acquaintances of Oliver Granger, firmly believe that the course which he has pursued in settling the claims, accounts, etc., against the former citizens of Kirtland Township, has done much credit to himself and all others that committed to him the care of adjusting their business with this community, which also furnishes evidence that there was no intention on their part of defrauding their THOMAS GRIFFITH. Again another statement is as fol-

I, Horace Kingsbury, of Painesville Township, Geauga County, and State of Ohio, feeling the importance of recommending to remembrance every worthy citizen who has by their conduct commended themselves to personal acquaintance by their course of strict integrity, and desire for truth and common justice, feel it my duty to state that Oliver Granger's management in the arrangement of the unfinished business of people that have moved to the Far West, in redeeming their pledges and thereby sustaining their integrity, has been truly praiseworthy, and has entitled him to my highest esteem, and ever grateful recollec-HORACE KINGSBURY. tion.

PAINESVILLE, October 26, 1838.

Again:

To all whom it may concern:-This may certify that during the year eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, I had dealings with Messrs. Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, to-gether with other members of the society, to the amount of about three thousand dollars, and during the spring of eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, I have received my pay in full of Colonel Oliver Granger, to my satisfaction. And I would here remark, that it is due Messrs Smith and Rigdon, and the society generally, to say that they have ever dealt honorably and fair with me: and I have received as good treatment from them as I have received from any other society in this vicinity; and so far as I have been correctly informed and made known of their business transactions generally, they have, so far as I can judge, been honorable and honest, and have made every exertion to arrange and settle their affairs. And I would further state that the closing up of my business with said society has been with their agent, Colonel Granger, appointed by them for that purpose; and I consider it highly due Colonel Granger from me here to state that he has acted truly and honestly in all his business with me, and has accomplished more than I could have reasonably expected. And I have also been made acquainted with his business in that section; and wherever he has been called upon to act, he has done so, and with good management he has accomplished and effected a close of a large amount of business for said society, and, as I believe, to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. JOHN W. HAWDEN.

PAINESVILLE, Geauga County, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1838

So you see that while these men, because of the force of circumstances, could not do otherwise than to leave their business unsettled, they settled tled, they did as soon as possible it by sending an agent back. It is wonderful to me, and I believe it will be to you, to know these men did as well as they did, considering their circumstances, their losses, and the things they had to contend against. They sent a man back there in 1838. and he paid upwards of three thousand dollars to one man, and he says he knew of the business in that township and it was all settled satisfactorily. That is the kind of a record they made. You can hear all kinds of reports about them, but these things have been on record for years, and as Mr. Hawden says, here, they accomplished more than he could reasonably expect, and that is true, nobody could reasonably have expected it.

Our correspondent wants to know why they left Kirtland. I think the reasons were very good. We will allow Joseph Smith to speak in this connection in regard to the reasons for leaving there, and you can judge for yourself whether he makes a good case or not. He says, this was about the beginning of the year 1838:

A new year dawned upon the church in Kirtland in all the bitterness of the spirit of apostate mobocracy.

The worst kind of mobocracy. And some of those very men in Kirtland who were rebuked for their business transactions and the speculative spirit that was taking possession of them, by Joseph Smith advertising that those bills of the Kirtland Bank. which they were trying to pass upon the public, were worthless, became enranged at him, and he says:

A new year dawned upon the church in Kirtland in all the bitterness of the spirit of apostate mobocracy; which continued to rage and grow hotter and hotter, until Eder Rigdeadly influence, as did the apostles and prophets of old, and as Jesus said, "When they persecute you in one city, fire to an other." And on the evening of the 12th of January, about ten o'clock, we left Kirtland, on horseback, to escape mob violence, which was about to burst upon us under the color of legal process to cover their hellish designs and save themselves from the just judgment of the law.

You can see the situation. These men, as we said before, were unable to meet their obligations, and under color of the law they were to be taken before the court, and also there was a spirit to use violence, and so they left Kirtland; but, as we have shown you. they sent a man back there and settled What better could up everything. they do? Had they stayed there in Kirtland, there is no reasonable possibility that they could have settled up as they did. It was better for their creditors and themselves that they left Kirtland and settled up all the unfinished business to the entire satisfaction of those whom they honestly owned. I do not suppose it satisfied all those whom they thought history shall be enabled to benefit were unjust, and whose business was illegal.

We continued our travels during the night, and at eight o'clock on the morning of the 13th arrived among the brethren in Norton Township, Medina County, Ohio, a distance of sixty miles from Kirtland; where we tarried about thirty-six hours, when our families arrived, and on the 16th pursued our journey with our families, in covered wagens, toward the city of Far West, in Missouri; passing through Dayton, Eaton, etc., to Dublin, Indiana, where we tarried nine days and refreshed ourselves.

He goes on and gives the description of the journey to Missouri. They did everything that honorable men could do, and through their agent settled up all the affairs in which they were engaged in Kirtland.

This, I believe, answers all the questions that were asked by one inquiring friend. I set the matter before them so they can see it as it is. Whether they view the matter as we do or not, is for them to decide for themselves. So far as I am individually concerned, I can not see but these men did the very best they could under the circumstances. I am willing to concede that it would have been better for them if they had not engaged in some of the business transactions they did. They went into it and failed, as others have done. but they went to work and paid up as soon as they could. If you can all do that well, you will get along in this world.

There is another reason why the church went to Missouri, and that is, that Kirtland never was intended to be the central place of gathering. It was said in the revelation prior to this time that Independence, Missouri, was the center place, and in the regions round about they were to gather, and they contemplated going to Missouri prior to the time these disastrous financial transactions culminated, and they were only carrying out a design they had in view in harmony with the revelation given to them long before this. For this reason the church removed to Missouri; for this reason they settled in the regions round about the center place and remained there so long as it was possible for them to do so in harmony with the conditions with which they were environed. In the future, if it should be our privilege, we will take up the matter in Missouri, as we expected to do to-night. and tell of their doings there.

Right here I want to say again, as I have said before, I do not claim this man and these people have made no mistakes; I believe they have made mistakes; have exercised poor judgment; but perhaps as good judgment as any of us would have exercised. But history demands that the mistakes as well as the successes shall be recorded, that we who read their ourselves by being warned where they made a mistake and admonished not to do the same things; to be encouraged where they made a success. All these things go to make up the history of the past.

But with all their mistakes, I am surprised, and the more I read the more I am surprised, that they made no worse mistakes than they did. I am surprised when I read of the resentment they sometimes manifested against their persecutors in Missouri and elsewhere, for these people sometimes partook of the spirit of retaliation, that it was as mild as it was. I am willing to concede they did wrong, but I wonder they bore it as well as they did, that there was not more fight in them than there was. I can only account for it from the fact that they were led by a power not their own, that caused them to suppress their natural feelings and their natural passions to an extent, and though they erred to an extent, I am satisfied there was something governing besides man alone.

May God's blessing be with and abide with us in this investigation, is my prayer.

REMISSION OF SINS.

Under this heading there appeared an article in the HERALD for July 31, in which it is said there is a differerence beween remission of sins and the forgiveness of sins. The writer so understands it yet; and by request will give some scriptures that indicate the difference. First I shall refer to Hebrews 9: 22:

And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.

What should we understand by the shedding of blood? It means slaughter: waste of life, according to Webster! Then it means to take life, or kill. In this light our text would read, without the taking of life there is no remission. Now take into consideration what remission means; viz., lifting the punishment due because of a crime; and, too, that all men are due punishment, for we read:

Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. Romans 5: 12.

Every man is under this curse, and is by divine justice under a sentence of death. Then, without the shedding of blood or taking of life, there is no remission, and for God to be just and a justifier of the ungodly, he prepares a body, or life, that was taken for every man. That body was Jesus Christ: for we read in Hebrews 2:9 that he should taste death for every man; and for every man to get the benefit of his death, they must put on his death. To do this we must obey the gospel; for we read in Romans 6:3, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Christ; therefore we are baptized for the remission of sins." And by this his death becomes our death, so the apostle could truly say, Without the shedding of blood, or taking of life, there is no remission. But I do not think it could be truly said that without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness; for in John 1:9:

If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins.

There we have forgiveness by con-We may continually confess: but if we have not obtained a remission of sins by obeying the gospel, we shall not be saved. And again, we are told:

For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. -Matt. 6: 14.

We may forgive men their trespasses and thereby obtain forgiveness; and yet, if we have not been baptized for the remission of sins, we shall be compelled to or we shall not enter the kingdom of God. Jesus was talking to his disciples when the above was said; and, of course, they had obeyed the gospel, though he forgave persons of certain sins who had not obeyed the gospel or obtained a remission of sins. For instance, in Matthew 9 we read of some persons carrying a man sick with the palsy to Jesus. Owing to the press, they had to let him down through the roof. Jesus seeing their faith (the ones who had brought him), said to the sick man, "Thy sins be forgiven thee." What sins? Those that had caused the affliction, of course. Here is forgiveness obtained through faith, and, too, faith of others than the one who had sinned

One more instance: namely, that of the impotent man; Jesus said to him, "Sin no more lest a worse thing come unto thee." Jesus had forgiven the sins that had brought the affliction on them; and they were healed; yet we have no reason to say these men had obeyed the gospel, neither have we any reason to say they would be saved if they did not obey it. There are other scriptures that indicate forgiveness. where remission had not been obtained by the second birth, or baptism. While forgiveness refers to pardon before and after obedience to the gospel, remission refers to pardon through obeying the gospel only.

Then, too, we may obtain forgiveness many times. Jesus said, "Forgive and ye shall be forgiven." But we have no promise of remission but one time:

For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them followers of Christ, that have obtained again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. - Heb. 6: 4-6.

This plainly teaches that if we should fall away after we have obeyed the principles of the doctrine of Christ mentioned in the first two verses of this same chapter, (and one of them is baptism for the remission of sins.) it would be impossible to renew us unto repentance; for to do this we would have to hear the gospel again.

For hearing brings about faith; and faith, repentance; and repentance, obedience, or baptism for the remission of sins. If fact, to renew us again would be to obey the gospel again; and the apostle said that we could not do that, for if we did, we would crucify to ourselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. So away with rebaptisms.

For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins.-Heb.

Of course where persons come into the church without consideration and go out the same way, they should come back by baptism, for the first was of no effect. But when they have obeved that form of doctrine from the heart and then turn away or are excluded from the church, -if they should want to come back, let them come back by restitution; otherwise, (or to come back by baptism for the remission of sins,) they would have trodden under foot the Son of God and counted the blood of the covenant wherewith they were sanctified an unholy thing."

PRECIOUS PEARLS.-NO. 12. GATHERED FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

BY WILLIAM HAWKINS.

Now I, Moroni, after having made an end of abridging the account of the people of Jared, had supposed not to have written more, but I have not as yet perished; and I, Moroni, will not deny the Christ; wherefore, I wander whithersoever I can, for the safety of my own life; wherefore, I write a few more things contrary to that I had supposed; that perhaps they may be of worth to my brethren, the Lamanites, in some future day, according to the will of the Lord. And now I, Moroni, write a few words of my father, Mormon, which he spake concerning faith, hope, and charity, after this manner:

And now it is by the grace of God, the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, and his holy will, because of the gift of his calling unto me; wherefore I would speak unto you that are of the church, that are the peaceable a sufficient hope by which ye can enter into the rest of the Lord. I judge these things of you because of your peaceable walk with the children of men; for the word of God saith, By their works ye shall know them; for if their works be good, then they are good also. For behold God hath said, A man being evil, can not do that which is good; for if he offereth a gift, or prayeth unto God. except he shall do it with real intent, it profiteth him nothing; for behold it is not counted unto him for righteousness. For behold a bitter fountain can not bring forth good water; neither can a good fountain bring forth bitter water; wherefore a man being a servant of the devil, can not follow Christ; and if he follow Christ, he can not be a servant of the devil; wherefore all things which are good, cometh of God: and that which is evil cometh of the devil: wherefore everything which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him is inspired of God.

Wherefore take heed, my beloved brethren, that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God, to be of the devil. For behold, the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they may know good from evil, for everything which inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge, it is of God, but whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God, then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the devil.

And now, my brethren, seeing that ye know the light by which ye may judge, which light is the light of Christ, see that ye do not judge wrongfully: for with that same judgment which ye judge, ye shall also be judged.

And now I come to faith, and I will tell you the way whereby ye may lay hold on every good thing. For behold, God knoweth all things, being from everlasting to everlasting; behold, he sent angels to minister unto the children of men, to make manifest concerning the coming of Christ; and in Christ there should come every good thing, and God also declared unto prophets by his own mouth, that Christ should come. And thus by faith, they did lay hold upon every good thing; and thus it was until the coming of Christ. And after he And after he came, men were saved by faith in his name; and by faith they became the sons of God.

And he spake these words unto our fathers, saying, Whatsoever thing ye shall ask the Father in my name, which is good, in faith believing, that ve shall receive, behold, it shall be done unto you; wherefore, my beloved brethren, hath miracles ceased, because Christ hath ascended into heaven, and hath set down on the right hand of God? Behold, I say unto you, nay; neither hath angels ceased to minister unto the children of men; for behold, they are subject unto him, to minister according to the word of his command, shewing themselves unto them of strong faith and firm mind, in every form of godliness; to prepare the way among the children of men, by declaring the word of Christ unto the chosen vessels of the Lord, that they may bear testimony of him; and by so doing, the Lord God prepareth the way that the residue of men may have faith in Christ, that the Holy Ghost may have place in their hearts according to the power thereof

And Christ hath said, If ye will have faith in me, ye shall have power to do whatsoever is expedient in me. And he hath said, Repent all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, and have faith in me, that ye may be saved. Behold, it is by faith miracles are wrought; and it is by faith that angels appear and minister unto men; wherefore if these things have ceased, wo be unto the children of men, for they are as though there had been no redemption made.

But behold, my beloved brethren, I judge better things of you, for I judge that ye have faith in Christ because of your meekness; for if ye have not faith in him, then ye are not fit to be numbered among the people of this church. Again, How is it that ye can attain unto faith, save ye shall have hope? And what is that ye shall hope for? Behold, ye shall have hope through the atonement of Christ and the power of his resurrection, to be raised unto life eternal; and this because of your faith in him according to the promise.

And again, he can not have faith and hope, save he shall be meek and lowly of heart; if so, his faith and hope are vain, for none is acceptable before God, save the meek and lowly of heart, and if a man be meek and lowly in heart, and confess by the power of the Holy Ghost, that Jesus is the Christ, he must needs have charity; for if he have not charity he is as nothing; and charity suffereth long, and is kind, and envieth not, and is not puffed up, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, and rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things; endureth all things; wherefore, my beloved brethren, if ye have not charity, ye are nothing, for charity never faileth.

Wherefore, cleave unto charity, which endureth forever; and whoso is found possessed of it at the last day, it shall be well with them.

And now I speak unto you concerning that which grieveth me exceedingly; for if I have learned the truth, there are disputations among you concerning the baptism of your little children. And I desire that you labor diligently that this gross error should be removed from among you. For immediately after I had learned these things of you, I inquired of the Lord concerning the matter. And the word of the Lord came to me by the power of the Holy Ghost, saying, Listen to the words of Christ your Redeemer, your Lord, and your God. Behold, I came into the world not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; the whole need not a physician, but they that are sick; wherefore little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin: wherefore the curse of Adam is taken from them in me, that it hath no power over them, and the law of circumcision is done away in me.

And after this manner did the Holy Ghost manifest the word of God unto me; wherefore, I know that it is solemn mockery before God, that ye should baptize little children. Behold, I say unto you, that ye shall teach repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sin; yea, teach parents that they must repent and be baptized, and humble themselves as their little children, and they shall all be saved with their little children: and their little children need no repentance, neither baptism.

Behold, baptism is unto repentance to the fulfilling the commandments unto the remission of sins. But little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world; if not so, God is a partial God, and also a changeable God, and a respecter of persons. Wo unto him that shall pervert the ways of the Lord after this manner, for they shall perish, except they repent.

I am filled with charity which is everlasting love; wherefore, all children are alike unto me, wherefore, I love little children with a perfect love; and they are all alike, and partakers of salvation. Behold, all little children are alive in Christ, and also all they that are without the law, for the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law; wherefore, he that is under no condemnation, can not repent; and unto such baptism availeth nothing; but it is mockery before God, denying the mercies of Christ, and the power of his Holy Spirit, and putting trust in dead works.

Behold, my son, this thing ought not to be; for repentance is unto them that are under condemnation, and under the curse of a broken law; and the first fruits of repentance is baptism; and baptism cometh by faith, unto the fulfilling of the commandments; and the fulfilling the commandments bringeth remission of sins; and the remission of sins bringeth meekness, and lowliness of heart; and because of meekness and lowliness of heart, cometh the visitation of the Holy Ghost, which Comforter filleth with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer, until the end shall come, when all the saints shall dwell with God.

Now I. Moroni, write unto my brethren the Lamanites. Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things, that ye would remember how merciful the Lord hath been unto the children of men from the creation of Adam, even down until the time that ve shall receive these things. And I would exhort you that ve would ask God the eternal Father. in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and by the power of the Holy Ghost, ye may know the truth of all things; and whatsoever thing is good, is just and true; wherefore, nothing that is good denieth the Christ, but acknowledgeth that he is; and ye may know that he is, by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore I would exhort you that ye deny not the power of God; for he worketh by power, according to the faith of the children of men, the same to-day, and to-morrow, and forever.

And again I exhort you, my brethren, that ye deny not the gifts of. God, for they are many; and they come from the same God. And there are different ways that these gifts are administered; but it is the same God who worketh all in all; and they are given by the manifestations of the Spirit of God unto men, to profit them; for behold, to one is given by the Spirit of God, that he may teach the word of wisdom; and to another, that he may teach the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; and to another exceeding great faith; and to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; and again, to another, that he may work mighty miracles; and again, to another, that he may prophesy concerning all things; and again, to another, the beholding of angels and ministering spirits; and again, to another, all kinds of tongues; and again, to another, the interpretation of languages and of divers kinds of tongues. And all these gifts come by the Spirit of Christ; and they come unto every man severally, according as he will.

And Christ truly said unto our fathers, If ye have faith, ye can do all things which is expedient unto me. And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief; and wo be unto the children of men, if this be the case; for there shall be none that doeth good among you, no not one; and wo unto them who shall do these things away and die, for they die in their sins, and they can not be saved in the kingdom of God.

And again I would exhort you, that ye would come unto Christ, and lay hold upon every good gift and touch not the evil gift, nor the unclean thing. And awake, and arise from the dust, O Jerusalem; yea, and put on thy beautiful garments, O daughter of Zion, and strengthen thy stakes, and enlarge thy borders forever, that thou mayest no more be confounded, that the covenants of the eternal Father which he hath made unto thee, O house of Israel, may be fulfilled. Yea, come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and love God with all your might, mind, and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you, that by his grace ye may be perfected in Christ.

And now I bid unto all, Farewell. I soon go to rest in the paradise of God, until my spirit and body shall again reunite, and I am brought forth triumphant through the air, to meet you before the pleasing bar of the great Jehovah, the eternal Judge of both quick and dead. Amen.

Editors Herald:—I send herewith another letter from W. B. F. Treat, and my reply to same, for publication in the HERALD. It is evident that he is getting tired of what he Trusting that my effort to defend the truth may prove of some benefit to the cause, I am as ever.

Your brother in Christ,

O. J. TARY.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 9, 1901. O. J. TARY, Wheeling, W. Va.:

Dear Sir:—It was an accident that I replied so soon. I was at my desk when your letter came, and in ten minutes I dashed off a suitable reply and mailed it with a batch of letters.

But your suggestion in your last that "inspired translators" may correct other "inspired" utterances, indicates such a climax of absurdities that I must forever cease any attempt to reason with you. Christ says not to cast pearls before swine, meaning that it is wrong to argue on divine matters with men who are maliciously unreasonable.

Regretting that I have wasted any time on you, I am as ever.

W. B. F. TREAT.

P. S.—I have suspicioned all along that you are not the author of those voluminous letters bearing your signature.

WHEELING, W. Va., Dec. 13, 1901. W. B. F. TREAT, Indianapolis, Ind.:

Dear Sir:--In my last letter I made mention of the correction, by inspirational power, of the errors that uninspired men were responsible for in the Bible. I made no suggestion that "inspired translators may correct other inspired utterances." Anything given by the inspiration of God is not to be corrected by any one, for it would be correct to begin with, and would admit of no correction. But, when uninspired men, during many centuries in translating through many languages, leave out parts of the original as given, and substitute their own ideas, and no access to the original can be had now, I would like to know what means are available to get the errors eliminated if it is not to be done by the same power that gave the original. This would be in no sense a correction of inspired utterances, but an elimination of the errors of uninspired men, and restoring of the lost parts that were in the original. There is abundant proof found in the writings of able theologians and scholars to show that there was need of divine power to aid in restoring the Scriptures to their primitive purity. What else could be expected when uninspired men, often biased in favor of some particular religious dogma, (for instance Alexander Campbell,) placed their own construction on the divine word, and gave their interpretation of the same in violation of Peter's statement, "That no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." God is unchangeable, and so is his word, and he will not inspire one man to speak anything that conflicts with anything previously given from the same source. This is an established rule that serves as a safeguard to the people of God to prevent them being imposed upon. Without anything else, this would prevent us from accepting anything like Brigham Young's so-called revelation on plural marriage.

But from your view point, you see such a "climax of absurdities" that you "must forever cease any attempt to reason with me." I was not aware that you had been guilty of any such attempt. Certainly I had never accused you of it, and I had no intention of so doing, because I do not think your letters bear evidence to support such a charge. To reason on the subject was what I hoped to have you do when I answered your first letter, but I do not claim to have achieved success in that direction. In support of which I herewith present a few samples culled from your writings, to show to what degree your reasoning and argumentative powers have developed: "Joe Smith." "Mormon delusion." "Mormonism itself is wrong in translation." "Of course they falsify, knowingly and willingly." "And this vile forgery, this fraudulent lying document is what Mormon elders refer to when they say they accept the Bible, if properly translated." "The whole system of Mormonism is so absurd, and its so-called evidences so false," etc.

Now allow me to quiet your fears on another point as expressed in your letter, relative to a statement of Christ in regard to casting pearls before swine. You have no room to fear that you will come under condemnation for violating that part of the Master's instructions. It is written that Satan can make himself appear as an angel of light, but there is no possibility of him taking the above choice expressions of yours and passing them for pearls. The pearls that you have been scattering in this controversy savor too much of having emanated from the same power that caused a certain herd of swine to run into the sea. I wish I could assure you of being as clear from violating every other command of Christ as I can of this one.

It is very peculiar that a man claiming to believe the Bible will refuse to accept so much of it, then, because some one else contends for all the Bible teachings, and the unchangeability of God and the gospel, denounce him as "maliciously unreasonable."

And so you regret that you have wasted any time on me? Well, it is not necessary to remind you that you were the aggressor in this matter, and that I have been acting on the defensive. You assailed the faith I have espoused, and the character of the men connected with it, so I have nothing to regret as to my part in defending the same. I acted from a sense of duty, and not from a desire to vanquish an opponent in controversy. Whether my letters have any effect in changing your position, matters not to me, so long as I have a consciousness of having done my duty in trying to defend the truth. It may not be appreciated, but I feel that I ought to give you a little advice, which if acted on in the future will avoid the necessity of wasting your time on any one so "maliciously unreasonable" as myself. I think it would be more in keeping with the dignity of your profession (if not your practice), if you would hereafter confine your writings and teachings to the Bible. I mean such parts of it as you believe, and not try to malign, and besmirch the character of those who believe and teach all of the Bible. If you are satisfied with only such parts of it as can be made to harmonize with Alexander Campbell's theology, all well and good; Latter Day Saints have no desire to interfere with your rights and choice in the matter, but you should not try to prevent them from accepting and teaching a belief in all of God's revealed word. Can you not see that this places you in the same position of those people whom Christ addressed on one occasion, when he said, "For ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer them that are entering to go in."-Matt. 23: 13.

attempt to reason with you. Christ says not lusion." "Mormonism itself is wrong in And so you have suspicioned that I am not to cast pearls before swine, meaning that it everything." "These hypocrites call this the author of the letters I have been sending you? The great difficulty is that you have an overstock of that particular commodity for everything emanating from, or in any way connected with, the Latter Day Saints. I really think your suspicions make you miserable, for no doubt they make you suspicious of the Almighty sometimes being in league with "Mormonism." I guess you have as much room for suspicion in this case as in all other matters pertaining to Joseph Smith and the Latter Day Saints, that have been causing you so much worry, but in this case I am happy to inform you that I positively know that your suspicion has no fact to support it. No one has either written or dictated a word of the letters sent you over my signature, except myself. You know one of the parables of Christ was to the effect that men should improve their talents: and if God has given me a knowledge of his truth, is it not my duty to use what talent he has given me in its defense? When but a child, my father, who was a member of the church you now represent, taught me not only to read the Bible, but to believe it. Later when I heard the gospel in its fullness, I had either to accept it or disobey my early teaching. I chose the former, and so apprised my father who was not well pleased at the time. But, ten years later, he began to investigate, with the result that he too became a Latter Day Saint before he died.

Personally, I bear you no ill feeling; but the methods employed by you to oppose the faith I have espoused, will ever find an opponent in me while I have opportunity to defend the truth. And so long as my life shall last and the occasion requires it, I shall endeavor to defend the cause of Christ and his gospel, without regard to fear or favor of any. But I promise you that I will never be guilty of making such an uncalled for attack on your faith, or any other, as you made on what you term "Mormonism." However, in keeping with the teaching of Christ we are always ready to forgive those who wrong us (even to the extent that you have done) upon manifestation of true repentance.

As you regret having wasted time with me, I trust that you will profit by the experience, and in the future not give some other "maliciously unreasonable" person a chance to make unnecessary demands on your time. All this can be accomplished by simply living up to your own church motto to "Speak where the Bible speaks, and be silent where the Bible is silent." According to your last letter I suppose I am to hear from you no more, so I close by bidding you farewell.

Respectfully,

O. J. TARY.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Dec. 13.

Mr. Editor:—Please say to your readers that by the time this reaches them we will have on hand a splendid tract in the Swedish language, which can be obtained by writing to Bro. T. Thoreson, or John Hall, Box 168, Salt Lake City, Utah, at fifty cents per hundred. For general distribution this is by far the best tract ever published by us in that language, and should be extensively circulated among the Swedish people. "The Way of Salvation," is the title of the tract, and the principles of the gospel are clearly and briefly treated upon; also the restoration of the gospel and the kingdom of God in the latter days. Scaudinavian Saints in this mission have contributed to the publishing of this tract, and the means obtained for it will be used for the purpose of printing others as demands for tracts may arise in the future. All who are interested in the spreading of the work among the Swedish people, please take notice, and help us along in this good work by purchasing and circulating this tract.

Respectfully,

PETER ANDERSON.

Editors Herald:—Only a few words before the old year fades away, that the readers may know we off here in Norway do not intend to fade with the year. The work is moving on steadily; the honest in heart begin to open their eyes, so they realize the full extent of the apostasy and the need of a heaven-sent restoration. I hold four meetings a week to interested listeners, who are anxious to learn of the truth and who attend very regularly. The prospects are for an ingathering here in the future if the Lord will continue to bless. I am hopeful of the work and feel satisfied that God will bless the earnest truth-seeker with an understanding of the restored gospel, wherever the message is carried.

Pray for the work here, dear Saints, that God may manifest his power in behalf of the truth. We are suffering for literature, which could be used to a great advantage. We have been waiting to see the Sandhedens Banner make its appearance; and why not? We need it here. I hope the Scandinavian Saints in America may feel the need of helping their "Landsmand" over here to a knowledge of the precious truth from heaven.

Wife and self are well and quite contented, for which we are grateful.

Wishing all a happy New Year, I am, Yours for truth,

P. MUCEUS.

CLEAR LAKE, Ind., Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—On September 30 I was holding meetings just across the line in Ohio, and visiting my wife's relatives. On that date I baptized an excellent woman whose husband is a kind man of excellent reputation.

On Ceteber 1 I came home, and on the 3d started for Coldwater, Michigan, to attend the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District Conference. Met Bro. J. H. Lake on the train, bound for the same place. Surely I was glad to see him, and to know he would attend conference and help us as our missionary in charge.

The conference was good, as reported by the district secretary.

On the 9th we started for Southern Indiana to attend district conference. Arrived at Wirt on the 10th and made home at Bro. Richard Scott's, along with about thirty or thirty-five other Saints, President Joseph

Smith and Bro. Thomas Hougas included. The conference convened the 12th and held sessions until the 14th. Bro. Joseph was the speaker Saturday evening; and on Sunday three times he edified, cheered, and comforted the Saints and removed much prejudice. Many came to hear him. On the 14th he left us. We occupied in the evening to a good audience, and attended to some other work; and on the 17th moved on to New Albany, Indiana, where we were met by Bro. Wm. H. Kelley, of that place.

By request of relatives, we went to South Pittsburg, Tennessee to visit the sick. Found them much improved, for which we were very thankful. We held meetings and made calls on the Saints and others who were investigating. Among others, a very intelligent Baptist lady and husband. They are very near the kingdom; the Lord is turning on the light. There are some good Saints in Pittsburg. May the Lord bless them, and open the way for Elder Jacob Gross to engage in the gospel work all the time. Some told me he was the plainest preacher they ever heard. We had appointments at good old Byrneville, Indiana, so left for New Albany, where we were made welcome by Bro. Kelley and wife. Sister Kelly's maiden name was Scott, daughter of Bro. David Scott, late of New Albany, one of the worthy ones who helped to establish the latter-day work in Southern Indiana. May the Lord help his family to imitate Father

On the 24th of October we were on our way for Byrneville, where we met Bro. Richard Scott, who as district president has done good work for the church this year, and his coworkers have done excellently. Old branches that were dormant are reviving, some new blood being infused by new members being added. Other luke-warm branches are waking up and taking on new life, and Southern Indiana is coming back to her old-time glory. Good! Let her shine! There are some there who, it seems, are in the line of priesthood: father, sons, and grandsons designated.

We held meetings on the 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th. On the 20th Bro. John Scott, priest, was ordained an elder. May God help him to do his work acceptably.

We helped the Saints to organize a Sabbath-school, the brightest prospect I ever saw for Sabbath-school, and subsequent events prove it true.

One year ago last August Bro. Lake and the writer visited Southern Indiana. Bro. Lake won the title of "peace maker." In February of this year your writer, with Bishop Kelley, visited the same places, with renewed good. Now this visit of the Presidents gives more strength and courage. There are good Saints at Byrneville. But time passes and the 28th comes. On the 28th I left for Ft. Wayne, Indiana, where I arrived the 29th, at six a.m. Met Dr. Dillon on his way to Sugar Grove and had a pleasant chat with him, in which he informed us that the secret of his success in debating was his thorough preparation. Well, the 29th found us on the ground at Sugar Grove, Indiana. Arrangements were made for the debate.

Bro. Scott came a little late, but the debate commenced in the evening. Eighteen sessions of two hours each, at two p. m. and seven p. m., nine sessions on each proposition, and Bro. S. W. L. Scott did excellently, and we thank God for the victory. Against our little David the great champion was not so thoroughly prepared as he thought.

Bro. S. W. L. Scott deserves the title of defender of the faith. There is a spirit in him, and the inspiration of the Almighty gives him understanding. The debate was a success for the truth in every way, and we are encouraged to go on to the end of the race.

The discussion over, we turned our attention to work again. These discussions take much time. Let the elders not agitate debates. We have labored as circumstances permitted at different points near here. Bro. Shaub, priest, is busy. While I was away to California, Michigan, the 24th of November, Bro. Shaub baptized a young man, and we confirmed him at the evening meeting.

The 7th of December we were in Ohio again, and on the 10th we baptized two more good people and confirmed them. Came home the 11th, and attended Sunday-school and occupied after Sunday-school this 15th of December. I will try to visit every branch in this district before April, if the way opens for me. Your brother,

G. A. SMITH.

OMAHA, Neb., Dec. 16

Editors Herald:-The Ladies' Aid Society of the Omaha Branch has had our chapel rooms repapered and repainted on the inside and the seats and pulpit varnished so that it looks very neat indeed. Sister Haze, who is president of the Aid Society, tells me that they have the material and work nearly paid for, and that they hope to be able to pay the remainder soon. They are doing a good work, and we hope the blessings of God may attend their efforts and that each individual member may long live to enjoy the fruits of her labors. They extend an invitation to any and all sisters of the branch to join with them and help the good work along. Our energetic superintendents, Sr. Alice Swartz and Bro. Charles S. Kennedy, together with their corps of officers and teachers, are keeping the Sunday-school in a prosperous and growing condition, which is a great help to the church.

The young people's meetings are good, all things considered, though there should be more young people in attendance than there are.

Branch officers are looking to the interests of the work, and are making a commendable effort to discharge their duties as best they can under existing conditions and circumstances. No one should be discouraged because the officers are making an effort to keep the church pure. God has placed this responsibility upon those who labor in this capacity, and they must discharge their duties without fear or favor, to the honor of God and for the salvation of souls, if they would wear the crown of life. Our best friends gently reprove us when we are in the wrong, and thus help us to step up higher and nearer to God; while our enemies fawn and flatter while they betray us with a kiss. We honor the former but detest the latter. The prophets who were ever ready to prophesy good concerning Israel were not always those sent of God. It must be pleasant, indeed, when in harmony with the mind and will of God the prophet can speak pleasant and encouraging words to the people: but it is often necessary that all should be warned of approaching danger. The true watchman on the tower will keep his eyes and ears open and give prompt warning when he knows the enemy is approaching, that the soldiers of Christ may be ready to meet and vanquish the enemy of Jesus and his hosts, that the prize may be won by every loyal soul.

The heart is made glad when with the eve of faith as it is lit up by the Holy Spirit we behold some of the glories which God has prepared for his people and we see them dwelling in peace and righteousness, while truth, goodness, and love flow from the fountain of individual purity, which shall leaven the whole lump and make us indeed the people of the Lord, prepared to meet him at his glorious coming with all the redeemed and sanctified of earth. How comforting it is to the soul when the Holy Spirit, in harmony with the tenor of the word, testifies that the reign of universal peace is soon to be ushered in and will come as soon as his bride has made herself ready.

As we wait and labor and toil for the victory and the crown of life, it is indeed encouraging when we grasp a brother or a sister by the hand to know that we have found a friend, tried and true, who will not forsake or betray, no matter what our difficulties or surroundings may be; one who will not believe us guilty of wrong-doing until we have had an opportunity to defend ourselves and yet the burden of evidence is against us. Such is the disposition of all Saints whose minds and hearts are swayed by the spirit and power of true charity, "The pure love of God shed abroad in the heart." Such an one is our elder brother Christ Jesus.

'Tis Holy Spirit from on high
Which flows within the soul
And makes us know that Christ is nigh
And we shall reach the goal.
Yours in gospel bonds,
C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

RAVENDEN SPRINGS, Ark., Dec. 8.

Editors Herald:—I wish to suggest an improvement for the HERALD writers. There are in existence about twenty editions of the Book of Mormon, and several editions of Doctrine and Covenants. It is customary in the church when quoting from the Book of Mormon to just note the page on which such quotation is found. Most of the writers are, however, thoughtful enough to note somewhere in their article what edition they are quoting from; but that does not help us out at all, unless we have at hand that particular edition.

To illustrate: Bro. White quotes from page 438. I find it in my book on page 577. If he had written 3d Nephi it would have saved me several valuable minutes. And if he had added chapter 8, it would have been still more to the point. I would have put it 3d Nephi 8: 20, 21.

I know that some of the books are not divided into nearly as many verses as my book is; but you could come much nearer opening to it in any book you may have than if I should just write page 577.

When I read quotations given in this way, I am led to wonder why they do not just note the page from which Bible quotations are taken.

I wondered last night, when hunting for Bro. White's quotation, how many elders were hunting for that pacticular passage, at that particular time, from many different books wherein pages do not agree. I venture a guess, that had Bro. White given book, chapter, and verse, instead of just the page, throughout his entire article, many precious hours would have been saved in the aggregate throughout the church; and if each particular member were so interested in placing references in his books along these lines as the writer is at this time, the time saved would assume marvelous proportions. I only mention Bro. White's article by way of illustration. Not finding fault, but simply suggesting improvement for a large majority of writers on the Book of Mormon.

With much respect, I am, yours,

D. R. BALDWIN.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Dec. 10.

Editors Herald:—We continued to use our tent until November 1, and feel sure some good has been done, as some have obeyed and others are thinking. Bro. F. M. Cooper is a rustler, and since he began work in the city we have organized a Sunday-school in the south side, which now numbers about thirty scholars. Dr. Cooper is in charge, and he is the very man for the place. I wish we had a score such young men in the branch.

Brother Romanan Wight and ye scribe spent three weeks before conference, preaching at Underwood, Neola, Carson, and Wheeler, trying to encourage the Saints and warn sinners. About Thanksgiving Brother Chambers joined us at Carson, to await conference. He was some better, but still is far from being well. The Sunday-school held convention the 29th ult., and it was a very interesting session. The general superintendent, Bro. Tom Hougas, was present, as well as a number of workers from Farm Creek Branch, which added greatly to the interest of the session.

Conference met on Saturday, with Brother Chambers in the chair, assisted by Brother Henry Kemp. The reports on the whole were encouraging, though many failed to report. Others reported no work done. We were greatly encouraged by the presence of Brother Kemp, and especially strengthened by a blessing given by prophecy to the body. We will not soon forget that event. He said by the Spirit that great joy should come to those who used their talents, and wisely employed their time and means to advance the Lord's work; but condemnation to those who hid their talents, and spent their entire time laying up earthly treasures.

It is sad to think how many there are who have taken upon them the solemn obligations of the priesthood who seem to find no time to preach. If our people one and all understood what spiritual consecration means there would be no idlers in the vineyard, and all would be willing to sacrifice, and deny themselves of many things that they could well do without, for it is no sacrifice to give up that which would not be missed, or that cost no pain or effort.

If we possessed the true spirit of sacrifice we would send money to those who are preaching in Scandinavia, so they could secure a place to preach, our poor would be amply provided for, the church treasury well filled, Graceland College freed from debt, and God would pour out upon us such blessings as we have never enjoyed.

We have secured the use of a voting or election building in the west end of the city, and will conduct a mission there during the winter.

I expect to assist Bro. Cooper in the mission work in the city this winter. I have put in my entire time since General Conference preaching in the city and district, without asking for any aid from the church. I am glad it is in my power to do this for my Master.

Our branch is living in harmony and peace, and united in the work of the mission. Our Religio is moving upward under the able leadership of that noble worker, Sister Julia Hansen. Sister Cooper is a true missionary's wife; her whole being is given to the work. The outlook is good, and we are greatly encouraged to press on. Brother C. A. Riley, of the laity, is a host himself. No task is too great for him in the Lord's work. Brother Fred Peterson, presiding priest, has the entire local force at work visiting the Saints. Pray for us, that we may be able to bring many honest souls into the kingdom.

We are proud of our church papers, and pray God to bless them in their mission of mercy.

Yours for the success of Zion,

J. S. STRAIN.

"OSTENTATION."

"Speaking of the wealth of our churches, I see the plans for the new St. John Protestant Episcopal Cathedral in New York have just been awarded. The church is to cost not less than five million dollars. I noticed that some of the Vanderbilts and Astors are on the board of trustees. I wonder how many dollars of the money contributed by the wealthy members have been earned by the donors, and how much of the sum total has been acquired by gambling. I also wonder what prospect there would be for Jesus were he to return and in a simple peasant attire seek to expound the Scriptures some fine Sunday morning in this cathedral when it is finished. Slim chance, indeed! But, ah! if!

by some chance he could obtain a hearing, I am sure he would soon empty the temple, for his burning words of truth would be more cutting than were the thongs with which in another age he is said to have driven the gamblers from another temple dedicated to the worship of God.

"It is probable that Jesus on such an occasion would ask the most pompous pew-holders some questions as embarrassing as were his words to the hypocrites in Judea when he said, 'Let him that is without sin cast the first stone.' I imagine he would pointedly address some of the pious pillars of the church, putting queries something like the following: How many of the twenty thousand families which are annually evicted in this city of riches and poverty, were driven from roofs owned by you? How many corpses in the trenches of the Potter's Field are there to day directly through your heartless brutality-murdered that your cupidity might be satisfied-slain that your fortunes might tower a little higher than your neighbor's, and that you might match a brother (whose fortune depends on gambling) in contributions to this unholy temple, which is an insult to Deity while remains one son of man striving to earn a living and failing; one human being slowly starving and freezing within the sound of its mocking chimes? Ah! Jesus would not deal tenderly with such criminal ostentation."—American Spectator.

THE TEACHER.

Teaching, says one, is causing to know. All that is called teaching is not teaching. Unless the teacher has caused some one to know something he did not previously know, that teacher comes short of teaching, and that scholar comes short of learning.

There are certain qualifications which the teacher should possess to be successful. The Sunday-school teacher should be a Christian.

The primary object of Sunday-school teaching should be to instruct in the principles of the gospel.

How one could teach what he himself does not believe, is past finding out, and how one could believe and not obey is another mystery. Hence in the selection of a teacher one should be chosen that has belief in all the commandments of Christ.

Besides being a Christian one should possess good judgment. One can not successfully perform the duties of teacher, except he be devoted to the cause of Christ. He should have that kind of devotion which prompts him to do whatever may seem necessary for the good of his class and the best success of his work; to make frequent sacrifice if need be.

There is a natural aptness to teach which one should possess.

Preparation is another feature to be considered. Perhaps the most important part of this preparation is the study of the lesson. This study is of two kinds, home study and teachers' meetings. Both are necessary; and the progressive teacher would not think of doing without either, though it may cost an effort, and some sacrifice.

The teacher should

with his scholars as individuals. He should know them in their homes—what influences are molding their thoughts and actions of each day. Thus he will be better able to guide them in their pursuit after divine knowledge.

Besides a teacher's knowing his lessons and his pupils, he should know

THE GREAT SOURCE OF LIGHT and truth. By prayer and devoted living he should bring himself in touch and harmony with the divine Mind, that he shall have a proper conception of truth, and have the aid of the Holy Spirit in presenting it.

by which the teacher teaches: by precept and by example. The two must be consistent or in agreement. The teacher who advocates right living, clean habits, and a devotion to truth, while at the same time he is to be seen indulging in immoral practices, vicious habits, or misrepresentation, is surely teaching that that is downward in tendency, for the effect of his example will outweigh his precepts. There is no use trying to flatter ourselves to the contrary, for if our lives are not in harmony with our professions, our work as teachers must fail of the good we might otherwise accomplish.

During a lesson one day on kindness to birds and beasts because they were God's, one little fellow of four looked at

THE BIRD ON HIS TEACHER'S HAT and said: "My mamma won't wear birds on her hats," and he seemed to notice that precept was not always followed by example. The teacher felt that in his case, at least, her precepts were nearly a failure. Training the children is a duty so important and sacred that it seems wicked to me to treat it so lightly.

It is natural for the Sunday-school teacher to be looked to as an example. Each one of us is known and read of all men and if our lives are not in accordance with gospel principles, it will stand as a reproach to the Sunday-school which is a part of the cause of Christ, and will be a detriment to those whom we have taught from the Scriptures. It may lessen their confidence in those who profess to serve the Lord, or they may find in our conduct an excuse for themselves, wherein they fail to do well.

No Sunday-school teacher can afford to live any but a pure and righteous life. We can not afford to be like children who attempt to do well, by learning the lesson and being present at Sunday-school, and yet want to do just as they please.

I hardly think there ever was a teacher that fully realized over his pupils, by the examples set before them, from day to day. Nor is there one now or ever will be. It is impossible even to conjecture just how much good can be done to the rising generation by the pure example of upright and conscientious teachers.

Fellow teachers, did you ever realize as you sat before a class of little ones and looked into their bright eyes seeking your own with loving, trustful innocence, that you have the power, in a measure, to make good and useful men and women of them? that by your influence the world may be better by their living in it? that you are training souls for eternity? How careful we should be! Are our words truthful, our motives pure and our actions discreet? If not, then where are we leading those, who, for awhile, are intrusted to our care and guidance? For we surely have an influence over them either for good or bad.

We may not realize it at present, we may not see the effects of our words and actions right away; we may never see it; but you know there is a little song which says, "Kind words can never die."

I have been listening to the tolling of a bell. It speaks of a fair child gone to rest. That if all that could be done to prepare this little spirit for eternal life has not been done, it is now too late. Will I, as a former Sunday-school teacher, be called upon to answer for anything which might have been done and was not?

That is a solemn thought. Our record is being made every day, as slowly perhaps as the bell tolls, and we can no more call it back than we can a tone of the bell which has already floated out upon the air.

Teachers, do we realize the solemn importance of our work? It is such a sacred obligation that we take upon ourselves when we attempt to teach a Sunday-school class, that we should always seek help from above. We may teach with all the learning and elequence our own study and research can give, but if it is not accompanied by the effective and touching influence of the Spirit of God, it will fall short of reaching our hearers.

The way to success is to do well what you can do. The successful teacher is the one who practices what he preaches. Not precept, but example.

PITTSBURG CHURCH DEDICATION.

We are pleased to announce that our new church is nearing completion, and, Providence permitting, will be dedicated Sunday, January 5, 1902. The erection of this church by this little body of Saints has been no small undertaking, but friends both in and out of the church have assisted, and the Lord has opened up the way beyond our expectations, and has crowned their efforts with success. To him be all the glory. We hope all who can conveniently do so will attend the dedication. We hope to see the church crowded, and expect to have a glorious time. meeting at 9:30 and preaching at 10:45 a.m. Preaching again in the afternoon beginning at 2:30, by several of the brethren; each occupying about ten minutes; and preaching at 7:30. On account of the scattered condition of the Saints, in order to attend all the meetings, it has been suggested that we bring our The church is located on Miller Street near to Miller, or Fifth Avenue cars to Fifth Avenue High School. Those who can not come, but desire to assist us financially, may forward their donations to William Dougherty, 507 California Avenue, Avelon, Allegheny County, Fennsylvania. ### CLUB WOMEN IN IOWA.

Iowa numbers upwards of 220 woman's clubs, with a membership of individuals counting over 8,000. In the number of clubs this State is the leader, although, as her clubs are small, the aggregate is nothing compared to Massachusetrs with 22 000, New York with 30,000, and Illinois with 20 000 memberships: but all the latter clubs boast memberships of from 200 to 1,000 each. The January Delineator has an interesting paper on the subject of Iowa Clubs, with a portrait of Mrs. A. C. Bailey, President of the State Federation. The department of club women is one of the best features of this magazine, conducted as it is by Miss Helen M. Winslow, the editor of the efficial organ of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

WINTER READING ON THE FARM.

Long evenings are here again and naturally one thinks of a good family agricultural weekly, because its regular visits are welcomed by the whole family.

The Twentieth Century Farmer is out of the rut in which most agricultural papers This is true particularly of splandid illustrations from photographs taken by their own artists and special articles by the best known and most practical men in every branch of agriculture, such as N. J. Harris, secretary of the Iowa Seed Corn Breeders' association; H. W. Campbell, the authority on soil culture; James Atkinson of the Iowa experiment station at Ames. Iowa: Frank G. Carpenter, famous for his letters of travel; C. R. Thomas, secretary American Hereford Breeders' association; B O Cowan, assistant secretary American Shorthorn Breeders' association; Dr A. T. Peters, Ne-braska experiment station; E. F. Stephens. braska experiment station; n. r. o. president Nebraska Horticultural society; Woman's Department, conducted by Mrs. Nellie Hawks, Friend. Nebrasks; J. J. Edgerton of the Iowa Experiment Station will answer all questions relating to live stock matters.

This is a weekly agricultural family paper, in which the farmer's wife is particularly interested on account of the pages devoted to her particular interests. In fact, there is no paper published either in the east or west that meets so well the wants of the western farmers and stock raisers and their families.

If you do not get it send 10 cents for a ten weeks' trial subscription to The Twentieth Century Farmer, 2385 Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebraska, and you will have an opportunity to become acquainted with it. A dollar will bring it for a whole year.

A brilliant art feature which will appear during the year 1902 in the Woman's Home Companion will consist of four large pictures by Sir Edward Burne-Jones illustrating "The Legend of the Briar Rose." They are reproduced for the first time in this country.

Bishop John H. Vincent, who for the past two years has been resident in Switzerland in charge of the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Europe, has been appointed as a delegate to the Wesleyan Conferences in England next June. In July Bishop Vincent will sail for the United States and spend August in his old work at Chautauqua, with which he is still officially connected.

McClure's Magazine often prints true stories which are stranger than fiction. Here is one of them—'Lost in the Land of the Midnight Sun," by Agustus Bridle and the Midnight Sun," by Agustus Bridle and J. K. Macdonald—in the Christmas number. "Charles Bunn, an American, had Arctic geological records of the Canadian Government to bring out to civilization." That is how the story begins. "He brought them," that is how it ends; and when you have finished the story those three concluding words will mean as much to you as any three words. will mean as much to you as any three words will mean as much to you as any three words you ever read. That mortal combat for light days with cold, with hunger, and inally with madness, makes as fine a record of human heroism as you will find anywhere fiction or in fact. On the first day he rains his ankle, yet he marches, almost arefoot, fifteen miles, over limestone ledge and through frozen slough. The one cart. and through frozen slough. The one cartin his Winchester snaps when he has e shot at a caribou. For five days he ders drenched to the skin in an Arctic 6—"a wash of water-colored light soak-into the gray clouds from somewhere." hen the sun comes out on the sixth day, here come with it the Arctic flies and mesquitoes. He has stripped off half his shirt and a trowser leg for foot wrappings. The flies and mosquitoes camp on his bare neck and legs. "He let them bite and suck; he might as well get used to it." Then come the wolves; they never leave him. The last miles of his journey are done on hands and knees. But he brought the records.

In a remarkable article in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for December Zangwill discusses the famous project of the recolonization of the Jews.

The task, he says, to which Israel is thus called is of an originality congruous with his unique history. Motherlands have always created colonies. Here colonies are to create motherland, or rather recreate her. It is not essential that all her daughters shall re-turn to her skirts. Long before Titus conquered Jerusalem, Jewish settlers had followed in the wake of Tyran and Phœiician commerce. The problem is simply to set up a center of Jewish life and concentrate all one's labors on it. Gradually it would become the magnet of the race.

The task is difficult—more difficult, perhaps, than any in human history, beset with more theological and political man-traps—unique in its problem of migration. But the very greatness of the task should stimulate the most meligred of mass to breek the dear the most maligned of races to break the deso-late monotony of this brutal world by the splendor of an antique idealism.

Palestine is a country without a people, the Jews are a people without a country. The regeneration of the soil would bring the regeneration of the people. It is marvelous that the country should have remained comparatively empty for eighteen hundred years, but it can not remain unexploited much longer. The age of electricity is upon us, and the problem of Asia. Now or never is Israel's opportunity. Another generation and Palestine will be populated by Uitlanders and Palestine will be populated by Ultlanders and dominated by Germany. Another generation and the Western Jew will have lost the warmth of Jewish sentiment. In the Jews, as in Palestine, there have been more changes during the last generation than during all the centuries of the Christian era. Neither the Jew nor Palestine can wait longer. The Red Sea was divided for Israel's first exodus: it is united to the Meditarranean first exodus; it is united to the Mediterranean for the second. The Suez Canal has brought the world to the door-step of Palestine. And Palestine is the center of the world.

The January National Magazine of Boston will contain the first of a series of articles by Senator Mark Hanna of Ohio on the career of his friend, the late President William Mc-Kinley. No other man was so warmly devoted to McKinley or so closely in touch with him. These articles will embody the Senator's estimate of his friend's character and life work, and give many interesting incidents of his career.

Country Life in America for November goes to considerable length in outlining its purpose. The editor, L. H. Bailey, discusses the present widespread interest in outdoor subjects, and makes a significant statement of what this new and elaborate magazine will try to stand for.

"There is," concludes the editorial, "a growing interest in country life; this journal would be its representative. Its field is to extend and emphasize the interest in country life; to point the way to nature; to portray the beauty of the land that lies beneath the open sky; to lure to health and relaxation; to stay the congestion of the city; to raise the tone of American farming; to offer specific help and advice to the home-maker, the vacation-seeker, the gardener, the farmer, the nature-teacher, the naturalist; to take account of current rural events; to record progress, and to make note of the literature; to make the country the complement of the city; to sound some sweet and joyous note that shall relieve the tension of our strident lives."

The Scientific American for December 14. is a special number, and is up to the usual high standard of that publication. It is on the "Development of the United States Navy since the Spanish War." It contains cuts, illustrations and descriptions of the magnificent recent additions to our navy. excellent number.
