IMPRESSIONS AFTER THE REUNION.

One characteristic of the citizens of the Golden State is the habit of saving wear of the vocal organs by shortening long words and names of places, hence San Bernardino, the place whence we write at this date, August 6, is shortened to "San Ber-Another is putting playful changes upon the names of towns and cities. Under this San Diego, a coast rival to Los Angeles (the angels) becomes "Sandy Ague." Another is a persistent and prevalent habit of praising and extolling California, and everything appertaining in and to the state that falls under the notice of a visitor from the East, who is by nick-name the "tenderfoot." For instance; when asked of a visitor by a resident, he remarked, How are you standing this hot weather? the visitor replied, "O, it is much the same as I experience in Iowa." To this the resident replied, "It is much hotter back East than it is here." The visitor smiled and said: "I have just come from the East and find the heat as unbearable here as there."

It is noticeable that many of the residents keep indoors between the hours of 10:30 a.m., and 3:00 and 4:00 p. m. "It is too hot to be out in the sun," is the comment. And of those who by choice or necessity go into the sunlight on business or pleasure, many wear glasses of a dark color to guard the eyes from the glare of the sun upon the pavement, dusty road, and sandy spots alongside.

The question, What are we going to do for water? is beginning to assume an air of serious consideration. All over the country about Los Angeles, San Bernardino, and other places the flowing wells, a few years since a surprise and marvel to the visitor, are dry, or giving supply at intervals in the season of rain; and lands once verdant and prolific are burning areas of dry and arid sand and gravel. some instances the pump moved by the windmill or the gasoline engine well a supply for partial needs of the house and irrigation of garden and orchard. Some shallower wells do not respond to this means, and the rancher has to trust to the winter rains and possible summer showers. The latter are very rare and unusual. There is still a plentiful supply of climate, but water is an object of A failure in serious consideration. the snow and rainfall in the mountains and on the desert means a lack of supply in the valleys and loss is sure. The increase in the area of cultivated lands means a further division of the apparent supply of water, and some parts must inevitably suffer. Already there is a system of husbanding the supply which is quite effective, so far as it is applicable. An aqueduct of cement carries the main stream to the lands to be wat-From this pipes of cement closely connected by cemented joints laid underground are run through the fields. Cement heads with regulating taps of metal rise to the surface of the ground at intervals and from these the water is turned on the land where it will reach the crops, whether in orchard, garden, field, or meadow, with the least possible loss of the vigor-imparting, life-continuing water. Those portions not planted are left to the annual winter rainfall for supply to their vegetation; which in places is quite dense and luxuriant. Some of the cereals are raised from suitable lands without irrigation, the winter rains being sufficient to mature the grain.

But,— what a wealth of meaning in the word,—but, Southern California is a wonderful land. Fruits of almost every kind; trees of every sort, from the cottonwood to the pepper and the umbrella and Australian gum line the streets and orchard boundaries; at first for ornament, second, for fuel; flowers and flowers, many of them gorgeous, most of them beautiful, some absolutely without fragrance are found in endless variety, giving their wealth of cheer to the eye and heart in return for the most meager care and atten-The facilities for ornamentation of the grounds make it possible for the citizens to make the public buildings places of attractive appearance, an almost paradise so far as looks may go.

Wealth may here surround itself things of beauty in themselves and arrange them with their congeners and contrasts in such a way as to give pleasure and delight to the looker on and passer by, and foster pride in the possessor. Can paradise be more beautiful to the eye, may be a pardonable query in the mind of him who cannot, or will not, see the evidences of "change and decay" in all that attaches to mortal life in all its phazes, and in every place.

What of the spiritual situation?

California is to a great extent the pleasure grounds of the United States. To provide for the needs of life, in California, as elsewhere, there is a ceaseless activity of many, but there are apparently many more whose business it seems to be to get the most out of the life in mortality of ease and human pleasure and are "out to have a good time." The needs of life are easily summarized, but human desires do not stop at the mere neces-

To prosecute the mission of saving souls in the flowery state requires a persistence not needed in some other less favored region. Life, the mere continuance in existence, is so nearly a condition of ideal contentment that one is almost led to think that in so sunny a clime a striving after paradise is of little use; so, let the preachers and the churchmen have their swing, we are content with our earthly existence, the rest may take care of itself.

Such a condition was long since foreseen and foretold. The apostle wrote that men would be idle, vain, heady, high minded, despisers of them that are good, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. And in no place is the writing of the apostle more aptly seen than in this state.

The remedy which may secure the attention of the average man of the mass and rouse him to the develop. ment of his better self, is not yet discovered; unless it may be the Spirit of the Master, but it is to be feared that it is decreed that his Spirit shall not longer strive with man, so heedless has man become.

Bro. T. W. Williams had been using extreme diligence in getting all things prepared for the reunion. With his fellow committeemen he had tried to carry into effect well-considered plans to make the meeting a success, and, so continues to draw from the deep with an almost infinite variety of far as the enjoyment of the Saints in association goes, it was a success. Bro. Williams was quarantined by the health officers for some three weeks just prior to the meeting, and so was hindered in getting so wide an advertisement of the affair as he desired, but that may not have helped the matter much so far as attendance is concerned. Sycamore Grove was a pleasure ground. A religious meeting such as the Saints hold is not the sort of pleasure gathering to attract "the crowd." Only those who have some sort of laudable interest in the Saints or the faith they present were going to take the pains to take the car ride and spend the time "just to hear the latter-day preachers" descant on the faith and doctrine of the sect. The scene was not a sensational one, nor was the spiritual program an attractive one. And so the crowd stayed away.

However, while the attendance was by no means large, there were some strangers and inquirers at nearly every meeting, and on Sunday a fair We write audience was present. "fair" for the reason that those present were respectful in demeanor and gave attention to what was done and said. There was less disturbance from conversation about the edges of the congregation than at any meeting we have attended of late years. There was absolutely no disturbance on the ground at any time—a very pleasant thing to notice.

There is much earnestness among the Saints, both ministry and laity; and there is some lethargy and neglect; too much to permit full enjoyment for all. It would seem that nothing but the coming of the Master with the effective forces of both the priesthood of love and the priesthood of power can rouse the dull and flagging energies of some.

There was much of spiritual comfort and enjoyment experienced at the reunion. The association of those of like faith, long separated, but reunited; the more than usually excellent preaching, so far as spiritual help is concerned, the love of the cause, all combined to add to the satisfaction of

The brethren of the mission have been doing what was in their power to present the gospel way; nor are they to be blamed for the indifference of the great mass, they can only stand and plead, and so scarce the means, and so hard the opportunities to reach the people that it is quite discourag-They have only to "watch and fight and pray," and leave the result with God.

We were pleased with the most that we saw and heard. The peculiar introduction to the ground had no apparent influence over preacher or people, and was not referred to in any way by those occupying the pulpit. It was best that way.

As a whole the situation so far is promising. There is strong determination to do all that can be done by those in the field. And though it may seem that results are poor, the seed is being sown, many are hearing the word, and the harvest time will come.

There are good Saints at Los Angeles, and they have an excellent building well situated and are getting it paid for in good shape.

Bro. Williams is doing nobly, and is a "rustler," in western parlance. His personal influence is good. His motto, Is it right, commends him to the thoughtful. He is a busy man. and tries to neglect no duty demanded of him. May he live forever.

ELDERS WARNED AT BENTON, KEN-TUCKY.

In the Chicago Tribune for August 10 appeared the following:

Benton, Ky., Aug. 10.—Davis Chapel, five miles east of this city, has been burned by incendiaries, and threatening letters have been sent to Clark Hamilton and Lee Clark, prominent citizens, who have recently become converts of the Mormon faith.

Recently the Mormons have been holding meetings in the building. They succeeded in making six converts, among them Hamil-ton and Clark. This aroused much feeling in the community.

On Thursday night the church was destroyed by fire, while a placard nailed to a tree close by warned Hamilton and Clark that their lives would be in danger if they continued to advocate Mormon theories.

Warnings were also issued to all Mormon elders, advising them to keep out of the neighborhood.

The following is the account as given by the Daily Register, of Paducah, Kentucky, August 10:

BENTON, Ky., Aug. 9—There is great excitement in the Davis Chapel neighborhood of this county, five miles east of this place. Thursday night the Davis Chapel church was burned to the ground, the torch, without doubt, being applied by an incendiary to the beautiful house of religious worship.

Several years ago William B. Davis, a wealthy and eccentric old gentleman of that neighborhood, dedicated a parcel of ground to the Davis Chapel school district and to all religious societies. He provided in the deed of conveyance that the doors of the church to be erected on the ground should always be open to all religious denominations of whatsoever creed or kind.

For several weeks past the Mormons or "Latter Day Saints" have been conducting services in that church. In fact, a protracted meeting was being conducted there by some preachers of the Mormon faith, which had resulted in six converts to their religion.

Apparently the Mormons were gaining ground in that region and this fact engendered a very bitter feeling toward them in the hearts of some of the citizens of that neighborhood.

Clark Hamilton and Lee Cox, two prosper-ous and well known citizens of that vicinity, had become converted to the Mormon faith and were enthusiastic in promulgating the doctrines and teachings of the Latter Day Saints. This incensed some of their former friends very greatly. A few of the enraged citizens are said to have indulged in much talk of an incendiary nature and on Thursday night about eight o'clock the church was discovered to be on fire. It was in ashes in a very short time.

This morning a placard was found posted on a tree near the ashes of the burned church, which contained the following:

"CLARK HAMILTON.

"Any Mormon elder that is caught at Davis chapel or in the neighborhood, or about Briensburg preaching their infamous doctrines will be dealt with as we see proper, from ambush. We aim to have no more Mormon preaching in this county and if you value your lives anything stay away.

"KENTUCKY REGULATORS."

On the same day of the fire Mr. Hamilton received a threatening letter through the mails which was postmarked Hamlet, Kentucky. The letter was as follows:
"Clark Hamilton: We the people of this county don't intend to have any more of your Mormon Latter Day Saints stuff in Mormon Latter Day Saints stuff in this county. If we catch any of your preachers in this county they will be dealt with roughly, shot down like dogs, while they are preaching, and if you and Lee Cox want to live in this county, you must behave your-selves and stop your stuff."

"REGULATORS"

It is useless to say that the foregoing events have created great excitement in what has always heretofore been a peaceable and law-abiding community. Many arguments are being indulged in by the citizens of that section over the unfortunate occurrences and much bitter feeling is being en-gendered that is liable to break out into serious trouble at any time.

Those who espouse the cause of the Mormons, although few in number, say they propose to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience and will congregate for that purpose with their arms stacked near to defend themselves in case an assault is made upon them.

Serious trouble is expected over the matter. Bro. I. N. Roberts sent us the above clipping and says:

This is the affair that I alluded to in my letter to the HERALD a few days ago. Brn. Snow and W. R. Smith are the preachers referred to. I met Brn. Hamilton and Cox at conference. They are nice men. I am having an interesting time here; the Saints are rejoicing over what they hear.

In a recent letter Bro. W. R. Smith also refers to this trouble.

It appears strange to us that in this country of boasted enlightenment and liberality persons should resort to such measures to fight a people because their religious belief is somewhat peculiar. It is still stranger that Christians should thus persecute a people that believes firmly in Jesus Christ and the Bible. No people base their religion more squarely on the Bible than do Latter Day Saints; yet we meet persecution as though we What were dangerously heretical. means it? It means a fulfillment of prophecy. Christ's church in the last days is to be no more popular than in the early days.

Such treatment as was accorded our elders at Benton does not discourage our workers. They rejoice that they are deemed worthy to suffer for the Master's sake. They go, they come, they act, and they speak in sacred name of Calvary's Crucified One, and meet at the hands of others professing Christ the same treatment accorded the messengers of truth in the days when the Master himself met persecution and violence with divine We gain strength in the meekness. face of such opposition; for we see the work rolling on, gathering gems here and there from out the world. The few to whom the latter day work brings so much joy, peace, and comfort are content to abide the day when the Creator's power shall gather us from all quarters and place us in the land of safety—Zion. Until then we shall continue to sound the warning cry, and tell the glad news of the gospel restored, counting ourselves honored that we are called on to suffer in the name of Israel's Holy One.

Onward, brethren!

SANDHEDEN'S BANNER.

The Business Manager has made a call for subscriptions for Sandheden's Banner. Those interested in that paper, please take notice. It will be necessary that the friends of the Banner rally to its support. The notice concerning it will be found in the miscellaneous department on the last pages of the Herald. Let those who desire to see Sandheden's Banner published again give attention to Bro. Smith's call.

LOW-PRICED BOOK OF MORMON.

The Board of Publication has made an effort to get out an edition of the Book of Mormon to meet the demands for a lower priced book. Business Manager John Smith informs us that such a low priced Book of Mormon is now ready for distribution, and will be sold at the remarkably low figure of thirty five cents per copy. How many do you want? Let those who have been asking for such an edition generously support the Board of Publication in this move.

Bro. Walter J. Haworth sends us the following clipping from Newcastle, Australia. He says it has been going the rounds of the press, and he took it from the Newcastle Herald for May 30:

From advices to hand we learn that Alexander H. Smith, second son of the murdered founder of the Latter Day Saints, is to visit Australia shortly. He was appointed by the general conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recently held at Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, U. S. A., to come to Australia to perform special service in connection with that organization here. This will be the first opportunity afforded the people of Australia of seeing a son of the notorious Mormon Prophet. Mr. Smith is said to be an able platform speaker, and it is no doubt his intention to afford the people an opportunity of hearing him. He does not come as a representative of "Utah Mormonism." He and his brothers have always been opposed to polygamy and the other undesirable doctrines advocated in Utah; in fact, they have each served as missionaries to Utah for the "Reorganized Church." Mr. Smith denies that his father ever believed in, or taught, polygamy. He says that the laws of the Church founded by his father were the most powerful opposition to polygamy known to man. He claims that the "Reorganized Church" is recognized by the Civil Courts of America as the legal continuation of the church founded by his father. In accordance with this verdict the Reorganized Church is in possession of the only Temple completed by the original church members.

PECULIAR POISONING CASE.

The following from the Nonpareil, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, describes a queer case of poisoning, indeed:

Boone, July 18—Joseph Jugger, a workman employed in the new round house, is suffering from a case of poisoning that puzzles the doctors. For a day or two he had noticed a peculiar black spot on one of his hands, but as he was in his usual good health thought nothing of it. Later a fly lit on the finger and bit the spot, causing a noticeable stinging sensation. At once his arm began swelling, accompanied by the most intense pain. Physicians were called, who cut away a portion of the flesh and otherwise ministered to him and he became somewhat easier, though still in a serious condition.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. W. Waldsmith writes from Nebraska City, Nebraska, August 12: I have just returned from Cass county, where I held two services yesterday, with fair interest. I agreed to return again in two weeks. Several have been baptized in this district this summer.

W. D. McKnight, of Blackwell, Oklahoma, August 12, writes:

We had a big wheat harvest; corn will be about one third crop. We have a full crop of saloons this year.

Bro. Michael Wagner recently wrote from Fort Morgan, Colorado:

My joy in the work is great. I cannot write English, but can read English. Probably some one among the brethren in Lamoni can write and read German. I was baptized by Bro. O B. Thomas, April 23, 1899. I have the Book of Mormon in German, and read it. My whole heart is in this work; I cannot express how well I like to read of it. I thank my God for all his holy works and ways. Still my joy might be much greater if I could meet with more of my brethren every Sunday. I was in Denver a year ago, and also in February this year, to conference, and enjoyed myself with the brethren in the works of God and Christ.

Bro. Joseph Ward writes from Bald Knob, Arkansas, August 14:

I have a discussion pending with Campbellite, set to begin Sept. 23. Closed a fine meeting last night at Saltillo. Two were baptized and two reclaimed, and many more near the kingdom. We begin a ten-days' meeting here tonight. Brn. H. O. Smith and W. S. Macrae are here to help. Bro. J. W. Jackson was also with us at Saltillo. We go to Martin Creek branch from here for another ten days' meeting beginning August 28.

Bro. F. C. Keck, writing from Joplin, Missouri, August 17, says:

I baptized a fine man last Sunday. Several more almost ready for the water. The work is progressing over all the district. The Spirit has attended our administrations to the sick to a marked degree. Some instantly healed,

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In another place Bro. Elbert A. Smith gives quite a full account of the peculiar phosporescent phenomenon in the Pacific Ocean, which was spoken of by the Editor last week.

Under date of August 4, Sr. M. Anway writes from Deadwood, South Dakota, describing her trip from her home to Deadwood. She stopped enroute at Springfield and Omaha, meeting Saints in both places, and expresses gratitude for the hospitality shown herself and companion.

Bro. J. F. Grimm states that he would be pleased to have Bro. W. R. Standefer give some scriptural proof why remission and forgiveness of sins have not the same specific meaning.

Bro. Peter Anderson writes, on August 13, that he will be with the Saints of the Rocky Mountain mission in a few days, and his field address will be 1509 Washington Avenue, Ogden, Utah. He will be pleased to hear from the Saints respecting the work in their localities.

The Women's Sanitarium Company, of Des Moines, Iowa, have closed a contract for the large, finely equipped Sanitarium plant formerly known as Hyde Park Sanitarium, which has accommodations for one hundred patients, and they hope to have an institution in a short time with at least two hundred patients. This is a women's enterprise, and the Sanitarium will be run by women for women patients only—a benevolent corporation—no dividends, except in the restoring to health mothers, wives, and daughters. They ask all women to come and be treated and when necessary they will furnish both medical and surgical treatment without money and without A coincidence occurred here Sunday which is worthy of note and thought. The Sunday school lesson in the Quarterly for that day was on the subject of consecration, and the morning sermon by Bishop G. H. Hilliard, who was in town over Sunday, was on the same subject. We believe there was direction in this coincidence, and we also believe much good to the work will result. The Saints are awakening to the demands of the times, and doing some earnest thinking and studying on the question of consecra-tion and the financial law of the church; and it is time they were, for the hastening time is upon us in its earnestness, and our responsibilities have increased by the organization of stakes. Added blessings bring added responsibilities. Let us be alive to the work before us.

Sunday evening at Lamoni Bro. Heman C. Smith began a series of historical lectures, which will be continued weekly. We expect to give them in the HERALD.

CONVERSION OF THE WORLD .- NO. 3.

BY JAMES W. BURNS. TESTIMONIES.

We are also commanded to bear our testimonies before men. We might ask the question, If we are commanded to bear our testimonies, what effect will it have on us and the world? For proof that we are commanded to bear our testimonies, or confess Jesus Christ before men, we quote his words:

Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 10: 32.

Again, Romans 10: 9:

That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus.

Some people seem to think that all they have to do is to bear a verbal testimony in the meetings that they know this work is of God, and that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and the Book of Mormon of divine origin. While I believe such is essential, I also believe that we can bear our testimonies to the world in as strong if not stronger ways.

And they [the brethren] overcame him [the Devil] by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony.—Rev. 12: 11.

The above quotation shows two points: By our testimonies we will be able to overcome the evil one if we keep all of God's commandments, and that it is also a verbal one. An old adage is, "Actions speak louder than words." Jesus, our Savior, is quoted as saying:

Let your light [good deeds, righteousness, testimonies] so shine before men, that they may see your good works [obedience to God] and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

—Matt. 5: 16.

Thus we can bear to the world the strongest testimonies. To get the real meaning of testimony, I quote:

The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John.—Rev. 1: 1.

By this we learn that testimony means to reveal, make known, or show to others things that they do not know. If we have a testimony of the work of God, and desire to bear it to the world, we should show our faith by our works. Jesus defines the meaning of the word testimony thus, while speaking to his disciples of the future works of darkness, and telling them that the acts of the people should be a testimony to them:

But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons, being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake. And it [the actions or evil deeds of the people] shall turn to you for a testimony.—Luke 21: 12, 13.

If the evil deeds of the people were to be a testimony to Christ's disciples of the works of darkness, then would not our good actions be a testimony to the world that of a truth God is in us?

Our Savior, speaking of false prophets, and showing how to discern them, says:

Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.—Matt. 7: 20.

Then by our fruits,—if they are in harmony with that which has been revealed to us through the spirit of prophecy, which is the commandments of God,—the world may know us, and therefore we are testifying to the world the righteousness of God. To impress the meaning of testimony, we farther quote:

I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus; worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.—Rev. 19: 10.

And the spirit of prophecy reveals the commandments of God to man, and is the Spirit of God. Paul's instructions to the saints at Corinth, concerning the Spirit of God, says:

Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. . . . To another prophecy. . . . But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.—1 Cor. 12: 4, 10, 11.

This shows that the spirit of prophecy is a gift of God by his Holy Spirit. Then if we have the Spirit of God we will understand the things of God.

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.—John 15:26

If the Spirit of God will testify of Jesus, what will it show or reveal unto us? Let our Savior answer:

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: . . . for he shall receive of mine and shall shew it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you.

The Spirit of God will testify of Jesus, and will guide us into all truth, and we find the word of God is truth.

Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.

Jesus prayed thus to his Father for his disciples. One of God's holy prophets has said:

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3: 7.

We believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and exercised the spirit of that office in giving commandments to the church, and also revealing the true meaning of those that are written in the Bible. The Spirit of God will guide us into all truth, and testify of Jesus Christ, which means to reveal to us what we must do to be saved. Then are we abiding in that truth, that our lights may shine before men? and are we bearing our testimony to the world if we are not applying those commandments to our everday life, that our "actions may speak louder than words" to the world? I believe that bearing testimony means more than arising in a meeting and saying, "I know that the work is of God." It means, I believe, that we should testify or show to the world by our every day actions and deeds that we are taught of God. I believe that it means that we should live by every word of God. Thereby we may "let our lights shine before men, that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven."

Dear Saints, are we so living that we are bearing our testimonies to the world in such a way that the God of heaven and angels are pleased with our conduct, and are rejoicing over us?

We will now collect the points that we have made, that we may more fully understand them.

First, that we must bear our testimonies before men, a verbal testimony, and also a living testimony.

Second, that the spirit of prophecy is the testimony of Jesus Christ, and that Spirit does reveal the commandments of eternal life, and if we have the Spirit of God it will guide us into all truth; will show us the meaning of the commandments; and if we abide in the commandments of the spirit of prophecy, then we are abiding in the spirit of prophecy, and will have the testimony of Jesus; and that actions speak louder than words, and that we should let our lights shine before men, which is obedience to God, and thereby bearing our testimony to the world that this is the true work of God.

Third, that through our testimonies and the blood of the Lamb, we are able to overcome the Devil.

Fourth, that through our testimonies the world is convinced that this work is of God, and that some are converted by the same.

Fifth, that the testimony means to reveal, or to make known to others things that they do not know, and if we live by every word of God we will be revealing or making known to the world what they should do to be saved.

TITHES AND OFFERINGS.

The Lord has commanded us to pay our tithes and bring our offerings into his storehouse, that there might be meat in the house for all that should draw from it. Through Malachi, one of his inspired prophets, he says:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house.—3: 10.

James 1: 27 savs:

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this. To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction.

To visit those above named in their affliction means, I believe, sickness and want of the necessities of life.

But whose hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?—1 John 3: 17.

The Lord, speaking through Moses, says.

For the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land.-Deut. 15: 11.

When the rich young man came to Jesus and asked him what he should do to inherit eternal life. Jesus said unto him:

If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor.-Matt. 19: 21.

And again, in Acts 4: 35, the writer speaking of the offerings and what was done with them, says:

And laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily administration. Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business.—Acts 6: 1-4.

This shows that the widows and poor should be assisted in such as they need, and that men were appointed to see to that part of the work.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?—James 2:15, 16.

The Lord has said in latter-day revelations, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants:

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.-101:2.

We now cite the reader to Lazarus and the rich man:

And in hell he [the rich man] lifted up his eyes, being in torment.—Luke 16:23.

Why was the rich man in torment? For what is hell, or this punishment? You will answer, For correction or reformation. Then the rich man was undergoing a correction, or punishment, that he may not do so again, if he has a chance; as Abraham says:

Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things.

The rich man had good things and would not impart a portion to Lazarus, who was in want.

The missionaries are sent to preach to the world; they have to leave their families at home without their labor to support them. Now those dear ones left at home by the missionaries must be provided for, and that shall be done by the church.

And, again, thus saith the Lord unto you, O ye elders of my church, who have given your names that you might know his will concerning you: Behold, I say unto you, that it is the duty of the church to assist in supporting the families of those who are called and must needs be sent unto the world to proclaim the gospel unto the world.-D. C.

75: 4. Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you. or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple. -83: 16.

So we must, if we want to be in harmony with God's commandments, pay our tithes and freewill offerings for the poor, and for sustaining the families of men who are sent to preach the gospel to the world. If we do this. whether we be of laity or ministry, we shall be helping to convert the world by helping provide for some one that is preaching the gospel.

Thus the laity share a great responsibility with the ministry in the conversion and saving of the world.

I feel I have only slightly touched upon the different points, and trust that the Holy Spirit of God will enlighten where my pen is not qualified.

DOES IT FULFILL PROPHECY?

The peculiar condition of the sea along the entire coast of Southern California during several weeks past, calls our mind to the prophecy in Revelation 16:3:

And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the

Now all along the coast, as will be seen by the inclosed quotations, the sea suddenly became red by day and like a sheet of fire by night. I saw it in the day time; and the line where the red water and the blue met, far off shore, could be distinctly traced, the red being next the shore.

The stench from it and the dirty red color were well described by the words of the prophecy, "It became as the blood of a dead man."

Moreover, this red water was fatal to the fish of the sea. They escaped from it when possible; when they could not they died. Even the shell fish suffered, and when caught were unfit for use.

If this is not the beginning of the fulfillment of this prophecy it at least illustrates how easily God can fulfill it when the time comes, and how truly it will be that "every living soul died in the sea."

No satisfactory explanation of the phenomenon has yet been given. Probably it is from causes that might be explained; but rest assured God is back of those causes.

The Revelator continues by declaring that next the rivers and fountains of waters were turned to blood, and the angel of the waters cried out,

They have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

The extreme heat all over the country, exceeding anything known in the past, also calls our attention to the next few lines of the same chapter:

And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire. And men were scorched with great heat.

MARINE PHENOMENON AT SANTA MONICA. OCEAN WATER DISCOLORED FOR MILES.

Santa Monica, July 14. — The peculiar muddy appearance of the water, which was so noticeable yesterday, became more marked today, and for a quarter of a mile from shore the water was of a reddish brown color. The same condition prevailed about three weeks ago and lasted only a few days. The appearance today was much more marked, however, and old residents say they have never seen anything similar to it. A gallon glass jar of the reddish water was experimented with to-day. When it was first dipped up it had the colored appearance; but soon the red began to roll away, as in a cloud, and the water gradually became clearer until it was perfectly colorless. The jar was air tight, and the remarkable result was that no sediment formed on the bottom.-Los Angeles Times, STRANGE SEA GLEAMS AT REDONDO.

Redondo, Cal., July 13. — The peculiar phosphorescent condition of the sea which has been noted here for several nights is attracting a good deal of attention. People who have lived by the seaside many years say they have never seen anything of the kind equal to it before.

The marvelous light seems to be emitted from the water, which has become turbid a mile or more out from shore.

July 15, 1901.

One of the most wonderful tests of the lighting power of the turbid water has been made by partly filling a quart jar and shaking it in a dark place. In a room so destitute of light that two persons could not see each other in it the shaking of the water causes sufficient rays to be thrown out that each person may distinguish the other's features plainly.—Los Angeles Times, July 14, 1901.

GRAND SPECTACLE.

Long Beach, Cal., July 16 -The phosphorescent sea was more beautiful and more brilliant than ever tonight, and until early morning throngs stood on the wharf and tarried by the beach watching the wondrous spectacle.

A southwest breeze caused the waves to break far out, and they came rushing in like myriad lanterns of weird blue and shimmering yellow, presenting a marvelous moving picture. So bright was the light of the waters and sand that people could readily recognize each others faces on the wharf, though the moon was not visible. It was an awed and silent throng that admired the strange phenomenon.—Los Angeles Times, July 17, 1901.

CLOUDED THE BAY.

San Pedro, Cal., July 18.—The clouded condition of the sea, which has produced a curious illumination at various places along the coast, was observed in the inner harbor here this morning. The waters of the bay were rendered turbid by the inflowing tide. Some of those who observed the phenomenon observed a strong and disagreeable odor.-Los Angeles Times, July 19, 1901.

RED SURF A MYSTERY.

Santa Monica, Cal., July 17 .- The water still retains its molasses hue, and is proving a mystery of problems that only a scientist could solve. It has been demonstrated beyond question, however, that tiny organisms, in appearance something like jelly fish, have caused the phenomenon. They seem to train in schools much as small fish do, and must be the enemies of the finny tribe, as most of the surf fish have fled from the territory occupied by the animalculæ. Yesterday the vast strip of reddish brown ruled by these diminutive tyrants had moved well out from shore, leaving a clear strip near shore; but today, the host moved in again, leaving the sands well filled with their dead.—Los Angeles Times, July 18, 1901.

UNFRAGRANT PERIDINIUM.

San Pedro, Cal., July 23.—A great stench, supposedly due to the peridinium, the minute animal which makes the sea red by day and phosphorescent by night, is noted all along the inner harbor water front. The odor seems to be at its worst at low tide.—Los Angeles Times, July 24, 1901.

NEW PROTOZOA STORY AT LONG BEACH.

Long Beach, Cal., July 29.-A fact which may have an explanatory bearing on the presence of the great number of animalculæ which make the sea red by day and phosphorescent by night, is reported by Capt. D. Donahue, of the launch Donahue.

At about the time the presence of the protozoa was first discovered off shore, Capt. Donahue made a trip up the coast to Santa Monica. He reports that at a point several miles from, and ahout midway between Santa Morica and Redondo the sea seemed to be boiling as if mightily disturbed by a subterranean cauldron. From the disturbed locality poured a dense volume of red water like that which has since been observed at various places along the coast.-Los Angeles Times, July 30, 1901

One of the numerous explanations of the phenomenon, coming from various sources, is that given by Prof. H. B. Torrey, late of Columbia University, now of the California State University, quoted in Los Angeles Times for July 20, 1901:

The ocean phosphorescence which has recently attracted so much attention is caused by a little animal known to science as the peridinium. The presence of that animal, or one very much like it. has been noticed in a number of cases. Probably the plague of blood in Egypt, when the water turned red at the command of Moses, was due to the presence of these animals which, in certain stages of their development, are blood red.

HISTORY OF HAWAII'S FLAG.

The flag which had floated over the Hawaiian Islands for nearly a century is a combination of the "Union Jack" and stripes rather than the 'Stars and Stripes," to which it now gives precedence. The Union Jack fills the upper or "halyard" corner, and eight stripes, red, white and blue, constitute the "fly" of the old flag of Hawaii.

This flag has a story worth hearing. Vancouver visited "the Sandwich Islands" with Captain Cook. Nearly fifteen years later he returned in command of an expedition. February 21, 1794, he entered into an agreement with Kamehameha I. and his council of chiefs to receive the Islands under the protection of Great Britain. February 25, with great ceremony, the English flag was raised over Kamehameha's royal home on the Island of James, 1603-1625, on the political union of England and Scotland. The English annals state that "on the union of the two crowns James I. issued the proclamation that 'all ships subject to this isle and the Kingdom of Great Britain should bear in the main top the red cross commonly called St. George's cross, and the white cross commonly called St. Andrew's cross, joined together according to the form made by our own heralds.","

This flag was succeeded in 1801 by the present Union Jack, which is made by placing three crosses upon a blue field-St. George's of England, a red cross; St. Andrew's of Scotland, a white cross, and St. Patrick's of Ireland. The Irish addition to the flag consisted of St. Patrick's red cross laid upon St. Andrew's white cross. and half covering it. This was the second Union Jack. The name "Jack" is said to have come from the red cross on the "jacque"—the coat of mail or outer coat of the soldiers of

The second Union Jack was the second flag to float authoritatively over the Hawaiian Islands. The action of Kamehameha in placing the English flag over his government has sometimes been construed as a technical "cession of the Islands to the English crown." But the astute Kamehameha. while looking for English protection from the greed of other nations, stipulated that the Hawaiians should "govern themselves in their own way and according to such laws as they them-selves might impose." This action of Vancouver was not ratified in England, owing to more important European questions, and a real protectorate was never established. Nevertheless, there was a nominal guardianship afforded by the presence of the English flag floating over the Hawaiian grass houses and fleets of boats.

It should be said that during preceding centuries each high chief had carried a pennant of colored native cloth at the masthead of his double war canoe, but these were individual and family rather than national ban-

At first the English flag was established only upon the Island of Hawaii. Then it passed with Kamehameha from Island to Island as he conquered the high chiefs and became the sole ruler of the group. When the king made Honolulu his chief royal residence the flag floated over his house near the seashore. On Kauai, the Island fartherest north of all the group, there was a strong Russian influence. The Russians built a fort at the mouth of one of the rivers. Against their armed possession of any part of the Islands King Kame-Hawaii. Probably this flag was the hameha made strong objection, but, first "Union Jack" adopted by King according to the statements of sailors, the Russian flag was used by the high chief of the Island until finally displaced by the Hawaiian flag.

The English flag over Honolulu was a warning to other nations, and also to lawless individuals. No man could tell exactly how far to go in the presence of that flag. The sailors of those days unquestionably ran riot in wickedness, and the early influences of white civilization were absolutely awful. But there was a limit beyond which the lawless element did not dare to pass. The flag would permit England to advance whatever claim might be desired in case of any great trouble.

This continued from 1794 to 1812. Then war broke out between England and the United States. Alexander, in a report to the Hawaiian Historical Society, says that upon the outbreak of this war a friendly American persuaded Kamehameha I. "to have a flag of his own.'

An English Captain (George C. Beckley) some time near the beginning of the century brought a small ship to the Islands and sold it to the chiefs. He then settled in Honolulu and became a friend of the king, who made him a "tabu-chief." He married an Hawaiian woman of high priestly family. Nevertheless 'she had to kolo-kolo or crawl on her hands and knees whenever she entered the house of her husband, the tabu-chief."

To Captain Beckley was entrusted the task of probably designing and making the first Hawaiian flag. The making the first Hawaiian flag. pattern flag, the first one made, was afterward "fashioned into a child's frock and worn on special occasions by each one of the children in succession, and was long preserved as an heirloom in the family."

This was apparently a compromise between the flags of the two antagonistic English-speaking nations. The Jack was retained to show the king's friendship for England. The stripes were said to represent the red, white and blue of the American flag. They were eight in number, to represent the eight principal Islands of the group. It was a combination of Hawaiian with European and American interests.

The old king was very proud of his beautiful new flag, and displayed it from his palace and over the royal homes in other Islands. It superceded the Russian flag on Kauai. He built a new coral rock fort, 300x400 feet dimensions, with walls twelve feet high and twenty feet thick. In it he placed forty guns, six, eight and twelve pounders, from which thundering salutes were fired on every possible occasion. He gave command of this fort to Captain Beckley, and over it probably flung his new flag to the breeze.

He sent his flag to China at the masthead of a ship he had purchased for the sandal wood trade. The captain of this ship, Alexander Adams, found trouble waiting for him at Canton, "because the Chinese authorities refused to recognize the Hawaiian flag, which had never before been seen in that port." We have the statement on good authority that Captain Adams had to pay such heavy harbor dues that the report thereof to Kamehameha taught the Hawaiian king one of the principles of civilized business, i. e., to charge fees for every boat entering his harbor. He lost about $3,000 in this voyage to China. "chiefly owing to the new flag." The lesson learned concerning the harbor dues was probably worth all that was lost, although the king lived less than two years afterwards to enjoy his new source of income.

The flag has figured prominently in several international episodes.

The Hawaiian Islands were fertile fields to greedy land-loving rovers of the seas. In 1842 and 1843 Mr. Charlton, an English consul, made trouble for the Hawaiian chiefs by laying claim to a very valuable piece of land in Honolulu, which the chiefs claimed could not possibly have been given to him by the rightful owners. was the foundation of a series of disagreements. The consul was an open advocate of English annexation, and reported a dangerous state of affairs to England. Finally, leaving his consulate in the hands of a friend, he went to England to present his own claims. Meanwhile, a captain of an English frigate, Lord George Paulet, was sent to Honolulu. He seized upon every pretext for advancing his intention of seizing the Islands in the name of the English crown. The king, Kamehameha III., meanwhile made earnest protest and planned resistance, but his wise counselors persuaded him not to give Lord Paulet any pretext for seizing the Islands, but to forestall him by making a provisonal cession of the kingdom pending the appeal to the protection of the United States and England. On February 25, 1843, the Hawaiian flag was hauled down and the Union Jack was once more raised over a part of the Islands. On February 25, 1794, fortynine years before, Vancouver's flag-raising ceremony had taken place. Like Vancouver, Lord Paulet evidently had little doubt about England's glad welcome of a new colonial possession.

Kamehameha III. made a short speech of protest, closing with the words: "I have hope that the life of the land will be restored when my conduct shall be justified." Lord Paulet then took possession of the fort, confiscated Hawaiian ships, compelled natives to enlist to form an English army, and began to increase taxes to meet the expenses of his new government. The king withdrew to another Island, and, with his cabinet, disclaimed the authority of Lord Paulet, and continued to appeal to England

This triumphal flight of the English flag was not at all permanent. In the first part of July, about four months and a half after Lord Paulet's seizure of the Islands, Commodore Kearney, in the old U. S. frigate Constitution, entered Honolulu harbor. The native chiefs visited his ship. He raised the Hawaiian flag over them and fired a salute in its honor, to Lord Paulet's helpless indignation.

A few days later Admiral Thomas, commander of the English navy in the Pacific, arrived in Honolulu, and "in most courteous terms solicited a personal interview with the king." In a few hours it became known that he had come to restore the independence of the Islands.

On Monday, July 31, 1843, the admiral issued a proclamation restoring the Islands to their king, and incidentally mentioned in high terms the work of the American missionaries. Monday afternoon "a parade of several hundred English marines appeared on the plain of Honolulu (now known as Thomas Square), with their officers, their banners waving proudly and their arms glittering in the sun-Admiral Thomas and the beams. suspended king proceeded thither in a carriage, attended by the chiefs and a vast multitude of people. The English standard bearers advanced towards his majesty, their flags bowed gracefully, and a broad, beautiful Hawaiian banner exhibiting a crown and olive branch, was unfurled over the heads of the king and his attending chieftains. This was saluted by the English troops with field pieces, then by the guns of Lord Paulet's ship, whose yards were manned in homage to the restored sovereign. Then succeeded the roar of the guns of the fort, Punchbowl battery, the admiral's ship, the United States ships and others."

"Thomas Square" was so named and set apart as a perpetual park near the heart of the city, in honor of this action of Admiral Thomas. Monday afternoon the king and chiefs and several thousand people gathered in the new native stone church, Kawaiahao, and held an enthusiastic praise meeting. The king in an eloquent speech uttered a motto worthy of the highest statesmanship. This was later adopted as the national motto and inscribed on all Hawaiian coins: Ua mau ke ea o ka aina i ka pono. "Perpetuated is the life of the land by its righteousness," or "The perpetuation of the life of the land depends upon the righteousness thereof." The church was beautifully decorated and on the pulpit was the restored Hawaiian flag. The "army" enlisted by Lord Paulet gladly renounced allegiance to England. The ships were restored and the king's cabinet again took the reins of government. It was not long before word came that Europe and America had, as early as April, recognized the independence of the Hawniign Kingdom the Hawaiian Kingdom. Undeterred by this English experience, a Frenchman thought it worth his while to secure the little kingdom. In 1849 Admiral Tromelin sailed into Honolulu harbor and made some emphatic demands, alleging that the king had unlawfully fined a French ship. The king replied that the ship had violated his laws and was necessarily held responsible. The admiral at once landed an armed force with field pieces and scaling ladders and captured the fort. The king, however, had withdrawn his troops, leaving an empty fort with the Hawaiian flag flying from its staff. The Frenchman did not quite dare to pull that flag down in the face of very earnest protests from both the English and American consuls. The French smashed calabashes, spiked the guns, poured powder into the harbor, wrote on the walls of the fort that they were "Le Braves" and then withdrew, turning their trouble over to their home government. For nearly two years the French made trouble. At last the king, Kamehameha III., became tired and placed his kingdom "provisionally under the protection of the United States," declaring that the protectorate should be "perpetual" if the relations with France were not placed on a better footing. The Frenchmen soon discovered that the difficulties could be easily settled, and the long list of grievances "were reduced to two points, viz., the liberty of Catholic worship and the trade in spirits." This last meant the abundant entrance of French brandy. "Nothing more was heard of the rest of the demands."

Flag episodes after these experiences were limited to ordinary affairs of government. Sometimes it floated proudly over fort and palace, while salutes were fired from men-of-war entering the harbor. Sometimes it hung at half mast over the palace while the body of some member of the royal family or some one of high chief blood lay in state. Sometimes its absence from the palace marked the king's departure for some other Its reappearance was the Island. signal of the king's return. It floated over ministers' and consuls' offices in different parts of the world and fulfilled its modest duty as the representative of one of "the little kings."

Then came the turbulent times of internal dissensions through the reign of Kalakaua and that of his sister, Liliuokalani, resulting in the overthrow of the monarchy in 1893. January 14, 1893, the queen thought herself strong enough to abrogate the constitution of the Islands and promulgate a new constitution suited to her own wishes. She found that she had opened a volcano under her feet. She prorogued the Legislature in the forenoon and attempted to install her new constitution. Her cabinet objected. A group of prominent citizens gathered in W. O. Smith's office and strengthened the cabinet. An impromptu mass meeting was held in the afternoon and a committee of public safety of thirteen was appointed. This was Saturday. Sunday was a day of suppressed excite-Monday, January 16, over 1,300 citizens gathered in the armory and authorized this committee of public safety to take such steps as might be necessary. That afternoon at 5 o'clock 300 United States marines and sailors were landed. The marines were stationed at the American legation and the sailors at Arion Hall.

The next day, January 17, the committee of public safety issued the folfowing proclamation:

"First-The Hawaiian monarchial system of government is hereby abrogated.

"Second-A provisional Government for the control and management of public affairs and the protection of public peace is hereby established, to exist until terms of union with the United States of America have been negotiated and agreed upon."

This Provisional Government, with President Dole at its head, under the old Hawaiian flag, was at once recognized, under date of January 17, as the "de facto government of the Hawaiian Islands," by Minister Stevens of the United States. January 18 ministers and consul generals from several nations hastened to hand in their recognition of the new government, and on the 19th English and Japanese ministers practically completed the list.

This continued until February 1, when negotiations had progressed so far that United States Minister Stevens felt safe in raising the Stars and Stripes over the government buildings and declaring a protectorate. This was the fourth time that a faraway representative of a foreign power had felt certain that his annexation of Hawaii would be joyfully received by his home government. And this fourth act was subject to reversal. Five prominent men went to Washington, empowered to make a treaty of annexation with the United States. March 4, 1893, President Cleveland was inaugurated. He withdrew the treaty from consideration by the Senate. Then came the visit of United States colors were intertwined.

"Paramount Blount," who arrived in Honolulu March 29.

The Provisional Government was strongly entrenched, and Mr. Blount found that the only thing he could do was to withdraw United States pro-

April 1st the announcement was made in the morning papers that the United States flag would be lowered at 11 o'clock, and the Hawaiian flag restored as the emblem, the second time, of the Provisional Government. For the brief space of almost two months the Stars and Stripes had floated over Hawaii.

Hundreds of people flocked to the spacious grounds around the government buildings. It was a curious crowd, nations-Oriental, Europeans, Africans and Americans—mingling together. The Stars and Stripes slipped down the rattling lines from the flagstaff when the bugle call was sounded. "There was another gleam of color and the Hawaiian flag crawled up the now taut ropes and shook itself free, its blue, white and crimson bars floating in their acustomed place. The silence was undisturbed. The troops of the Provisional Government presented arms, but the American men-of-war in the harbor did not salute the restored flag."

As time passed President Cleveland's desire to restore the monarchy became more and more apparent, and under the same old Hawaiian colors, "on July 4, 1894, the Constitution of the Republic of Hawaii was promulgated." and all designs for United States interference were thwarted. The beautiful and loved flag of Hawaii, the royal flag from the times of Kamehameha I., the ensign of the Provisional Government, unchanged, became the banner of the first Republic of the Pacific Ocean.

It remained the flag of the Republic until the news reached Honolulu that President McKinley on July 7, 1898. had signed the joint resolution of annexation adopted by both houses of Congress.

It was necessary that the officials of the newly annexed Islands should take the oath of allegiance to the United States, and that the final change of government should be marked by a new and authorized flag-Great prepararaising ceremony. tions were made for the solemn exercises attending the transfer of the Republic of Hawaii to the Republic of. the United States. On August 12, 1898, thousands of people again crowded into the government grounds. The National Guard of Hawaii and companies of United States marines were drawn up around the former palace. In front of the palace, now the Capitol Building, was a grandstand, about which the Hawaiian and

The Hawaiian and United States officials, the diplomatic corps and a few friends filled the grand stand. After prayers came the formal transfer of sovereignty.

The final salute to the Hawaiian emblem of an independent nation was fired. As the last report died away in echoes among the surrounding hills, the Hawaiian national anthem "Hawaii Ponoi," in solemn grandeur, stirred the hearts of the multitude. Mrs. Garland, an eye-witness, said: "The music ceased and for one instant the Hawaiian flag still floated, then as it was slowly lowered, utter stillness held everyone mute. A great wave of intense feeling seemed to flow over the people. For the moment we were in a country without a flag. There were few who did not weep. Then a clear sounding call from the bugles of the Philadelphia, a sudden stir through all the throng, and then with the triumphant ringing strains of the Star Spangled Banner, up rose majestically our own dear flag, reaching the truck with the last grand chord. Three mighty cheers burst forth. Men grasped each other by the hand. and hats and handkerchiefs waved. A group of Hawaiian young women stood behind us. As the Stars and Stripes went up, from one came the repressed exclamation, 'O, you beautiful thing.'"

Then President Dole and his cabinet took the oath of allegiance to the United States. The soldiers marched to their barracks to be sworn into their new service. The crowd dispersed, while salutes were fired from the ships in the harbor. The American flag floats in its own influential place over the palace, not as a kingly, but as a republican flag. Hawaiian flag still floats over many a home in the Islands. Ardent annexationists as well as loving royalists keep the Hawaiian colors flying from the tall poles in their yards.

The Hawaiian flag is surrounded by many historical memories which mean much to residents of both native and foreign descent, and they are not yet willing that the dear old flag shall be lost from the nation's history. As one writer says, this feeling shows that "the flag does not represent so much a particular form of government as it does the great heart of the people which throbs beneath."

There is no reason why it should not remain perpetually as the Territorial or State flag, filling its own honored place in the Islands of its birth—Paradise of the Pacific.

INDIAN VALLEY, Idaho, Aug. 4. Dear Saints:-After a stay of a week at Caldwell, Idaho, on the Oregon Short Line, during which Bro. D. W. Wight did his best (I suppose) to attract the people of that (spiritually) sleepy town of about fifteen hundred people to hear the message we were so anxious they should hear and heed, we concluded it was not a seasonable time to get the people out, or we lacked the magnetism to attract them. On July 8, we boarded the cars and went to Weiser, about fifty miles west. Here Bro. D. W. secured a permit over the Pacific and Idaho Northern, and we walked out to Sister Ross' about three miles northwest. Stopped over night, and at 8:30 a. m. on the 9th we were in the cars ready to follow the Weiser river up to Middle Valley.

This is where I was challenged by G. W. Williams last November to discuss in debate the divine calling of Joseph Smith and the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. I wrote Bro. Wight of this, he being in charge of the Rocky Mountain mission last year. He and Mr. Williams finally arranged for the discussion of three propositions, Bro. D. W. affirming the first and third: 1. The church Bro. Wight represented was in fact the church of Christ, and in harmony in faith, teaching, and organization with the church represented in the New Testament. 2. G. W. Williams affirmed the same for his (the Christian) church except at latter part of his proposition he added, "when the last apostle feel asleep in Jesus." 3. The Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and its teachings entitled to the respect of all Christian people.

When we stopped at the station in Middle Valley at 10:30 a. m., thirty-two miles from Weiser, we walked out to William Shaw's place, two miles east, where we stayed most of the time of our sojourn in the valley. Bro. Wight was anxious to find his friend, the enemy, as soon as possible, so we went to Mr. Williams' home, about a mile north. Here we learned Mr. Williams was up in the mountains and would not be down until Saturday. Having four days to spare for some good work, William Shaw kindly agreed to take us up to his nephew, Bro. Ben Shaw's, on Middle Fork of Weiser, about thirty miles northward. Bro. D. W. had some good healthful exercise on foot on the 11th, arranging for meeting in evening at the Cottonwood schoolhouse. Those who should know, say he was the first to preach in the house. Two nights here we preached Christ to the people who came out to listen. Have not yet learned whether any "gladly received the word." Saturday morning Bro. Henry Shaw took us to Council in time for the train for Middle Valley. Arriving there we soon met a church brother of Mr. Williams, who took us up, and Bro. Wight soon faced the man who ached to show up the deceptions of the false prophet, Joe Smith, for twelve even-m. in a nice grove along the Weiser River. Near by was a fine spring of about as nice water as the heart could desire. This was clear, sweet, and cold. Had our (Christian) enemy been in possession of a fountain of wisdom as pure, mankind to bless, it had been far better for him and his hearers. It is written, "The wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." If this be an index to the heart, Mr. Williams is well supplied. The heart of man is indeed a fountain of contradictions of what we find in nature. James says a fountain cannot send forth both sweet water and bitter. Man is an unknown and greatly mixed quantity. A mass of contradictions.

Arrangements were soon made for four sessions of two half-hour speeches a night for each proposition. Discussion began at five p.

The effect of this, the first joint discussion I ever listened to on religious topics, is to convince me that it is a very good way to get our work-the gospel-before the people. Many will come to hear a public discussion who would be indifferent to attend preaching. We found the people of Middle Valley (especially the Christian people) eager for the debate, and considering the season and labors of the people, I think they came out well. I am pleased with the result of this little clash. Of course, I am a deeply interested party. We have gained friends as a result, and more strongly confirmed what we already had. Last fall while in these parts, after taking the challenge to the Lord in prayer, the Holy Ghost said, "Encourage the discussion, for much good shall result, and the sowing of the gospel seed in these regions shall be advanced. I have precious treasures, in earthen vessels in these valleys, therefore be courageous and strong, and I will bless the defense which shall be made of my truth by the mouth of whom I will send, and doors shall open for the preaching of the word of truth, and fruitage season shall come."

I am, if possible, more convinced than before that a kind criticism and comparison of the different creeds with the scriptures, contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, is fraught with good for the Saints as well as for all who desire to know the truth. Bro. Wight conducted himself wisely, and stood by his position like a good soldier. I am not "patting him on the back" with flattery. I believe a few kind words duly spoken are good as we journey along. A certain meed of praise is due the living, as well as the dead. Some may need words of cheer more than others; but as for me, I would like all my associates, in the church or out, when I meet them or they be far away, to rest in the assurance that I deeply feel, in every pulsation of the heart, God be with you, and bless you and your efforts to maintain and defend the royal banner of the cross, in thought, word, and deed. When one member is honored, I want to rejoice with him or "weep with those who weep."

I have not expected to write much in detail of this debate. I believe as far as possible it is wisdom to give each disputant as much latitude as possible, that the hearers may have the best chance to weigh and consider all that both parties have to offer, for or against each question. I believe the enemies of the restored "gospel of the kingdom" are prone to hang themselves with their own cable. When men oppose the Book of Mormon with nothing better than what the enemies of its translator Joseph Smith, such as Braden and Neil, have said against him, some one has said, It seems a mass of rot that would turn the stomachs of any except human vultures. Whatever had been my opinion of Mr. Williams as neighbor, friend, Christian, or minister, after listening twelve nights to an effort to show Joseph Smith a villain, charlatan, criminal, deceiver of deepest dye, for no other reason, than that no other means is available to blacken what his opponent affirms, it seems I could never reinstate him to the standard of a follower of Him who suffered such contradiction of sinners against himself. If Mr. Williams has not stepped below the level of a Christian minister in the eyes of his people, they feed on food I have no relish for. May the Lord grant him repentance unto salvation, is my prayer.

Bro. D. W. left us on the 30th for Hagerman and thence to Malad City, Idaho, enroute to Pleasant Grove. On the 31st Bro. Henry Shaw and I turned our faces westward for Mann Creek about twelve miles, where meeting had been announced for evening. Had a very good hearing two nights. Then we considered it best to return toward Bro. Shaw's home, as he was uneasy about his place on Middle Fork. Bidding new friends good-bye, we reached Salubria about seven p. m., where we found good quarters over night with Bro. Ben Shaw, brother to Henry and William of Middle Valley.

Yesterday about three p. m., we reached Charles Barbour's at Upper Indian Valley. In these regions I expect to sojourn for a season and try to sow what gospel seed I may. It is not a good season for week night meetings, as by the time the people get home from meeting it is eleven to twelve o'clock. I thought best to stay in these parts while I am here, as railroad fare is five cents per mile, and that is expensive going to and fro. It is not fashionable to strap knapsacks and tramp over hill and vale, long distances.

Yours for Zion's weal, CHARLES ALBERTSON.

PURYEAR, Tenn., August 8.

Editors Herald:—I bade my wife adieu on July 20 and was off for my mission in the sunny South. I spent Sunday, the 21st, in St. Joseph, Missouri, with my daughter and her family. Spoke twice on Sunday in the city chapel. Felt quite well in doing so, but the extreme heat nearly overcame me.

Monday night, at 9:35, I left St. Joseph for St. Louis, arriving there the next morning at 7:15. On entering the gate at the union station my eyes met the face of Bro. F. A. Smith, and we had a visit for an hour or something over that, which I enjoyed much. Bro. Fred showed the effect of exposure in the extreme heat, but was cheerful as usual. With a pleasant smile and cheerful look we separated at 8:35, he going back to his work and the writer off for Paducah, Kentucky. After a very hot and dusty ride I arrived in Paducah at three p. m., tired, hungry, and dirty from head to foot. Here I had to stop over night. I went to a hotel and washed and scrubbed until I was a little more presentable. Then I registered as Elder I. N. Roberts, of Lamoni, Iowa. It was not long until I was called upon to tell what church I was of, and then the fun began. After considerable talk in explaining my faith, one man said: "Well, Parson, you are right smart better posted than I am, but darned if I believe in your religion." He proved to be a good Baptist; and as I had not had a tilt with the Baptists for a long time, I was glad now to get a shot at one. So at him I went. I was not long in hushing him up, and then I gave the entire crowd a good plain talk on the latter-day work, not failing to bring the mission of our prophet and brother who had died for Jesus' sake. The Book of Mormon was also brought up, and I at once exhibited the book, and told of its origin and its relation to the Bible. Next came the Book of Covenants in like manner; and, it was defended by the power and Spirit of him who does all things well. God be praised for his love and the fulfilling of his promise that his servants should not be confounded.

I spent the night in the most restless manner I ever spent a night. The heat was immense to me, and the bedbugs came in for a share of the torment I endured. At 7:15 a. m., I was off for Puryear, arriving there at 9:00 a. m. the same morning. I looked around me and saw no one that I could say was a Saint: so I approached the post master who was the first one I spoke to. I asked for Bro. P. B. Seaton. He told me he knew the man, and that he was dead and buried. I felt a sad but calm and peaceful feeling, realizing by the Spirit that a worthy soul had gone to its rest. Soon his kind wife and children came with team, and we were soon on the road, though very rough, to her sister's, where a little girl was very sick with fever. Soon after arriving there I administered to the child. God was there, and our hearts were cheered by a blessing from his loving hands.

From there I went to Bro. William Seaton's, where I rested for two days, and then we were all off for conference at the Eagle Creek branch. We arrived in time for the opening of the meeting, and by vote was made president of the conference. I was glad to meet a number of my associate missionaries, and counsel with them. The conference was a success: large attendance, and spiritual from start to finish. When the separating time came many tears were shed on giving the handshake. My mind went back to my old field and friends in Minnesota, when we separated at our reunion there. What a work this is! What love it brings to the true worshipers of God!

While my brethren went to their different fields, the writer remained with the Saints at Eagle Creek, and preached each night during the week, and some during the day. There was soon a good interest awakened in both Saints and others. Some of the Devil's aides-de-camp perceived that there was too much good being done, hence he thought to disturb us by cutting up some of his shines, which are too low to mention here. On Sunday night, just as we were closing, a shower of stones came rattling on the church, which informed us that he was still around. But I do not think he will do so again, as the parties were caught and the matter settled, and we believe permanently so. I closed there on Monday night, leaving the Saints in much better shape than I found them.

I was much pleased with the reception I got on my arrival in the mission. I came here Tuesday, and found Brother Sory sick in bed. At night I administered to him, the good Lord blessing him as prayed for in the administration. He is now convalescent, and thinks he will soon be able to resume his labors in the field.

The heat is almost unbearable for me, and am sure nothing but the care of God over me has enabled me to stand. Crops of all kinds are in bad shape here. This makes three years in succession that they have been cut short.

With love to all, I ask your prayers in my behalf. Yours in the faith,

I. N. ROBERTS.

P. S.—Since writing the above I have a card from Brother C. L. Snow, of Kirksey, Kentucky, stating that the house where he and Bro. W. R. Smith are laboring was burned down, and mob violence was threatened them. Onward, my brethren; good will come out of it soon. He also states that the Utah elders had notified him they would debate. May the Lord bless you, is my prayer.

HUMBER BAY, Ont., August 6.

Dear Herald:-I last wrote to you from Cedar Valley. After spending a very pleasant time at home, I was sent to Kincardine, Ontario. Elder G. Tomlinson was laboring there alone, and felt he needed help. He called for Bro. R. C. Evans, but he was otherwise engaged; so I went on May 14, and stayed till June 14. Before I went Bro. Tomlinson had baptized a Mr. Thomas Ferguson, who had been a member of the Methodist Church for over twenty years, and a class leader for a long time. After I reached there and had preached a few sermons, on the 18th Bro. Tomlinson baptized John Tomlinson, and on the 19th Mrs. T. Ferguson, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Tomlinson, five in all. The Holy Spirit was richly enjoyed at the confirmation, testifying to the divinity of this work. Soon after the baptisms we posted some large bills, with notice for meetings in a large hall in the town of Kincardine. On the second night of our meetings, Bro. Tomlinson was called to Straford to conduct funeral services over remains of Elder Lindsey's mother. This left me alone; but before I left I was permitted to baptize two more, and organize a Sunday school of fourteen members. The Saints so young in the work showed their love and zeal for the Master's work by raising money enough to send me to conference at Arthur. I left them feeling that much good had been done in the name of the Lord.

The conference was one of the best ever held in Canada since I have been in the church which is over nineteen years. The writer was sent from this conference to Humber Bay, with the understanding that I should reach Toronto, Hamilton, Lyndon, and Welland, before the fall conference which meets at Rostock, Ontario, September 28 to 30.

I came to Humber Bay on the 17th, in company with the many saints who came from there for conference-a good sign that they love the work. The Saints here are trying to advance the Master's cause. They have a full corps of officers, and all seem to be willing to work. Besides their branch meetings they have a splendid Sunday school. One of the young converts of a little better than one year was called to the office of teacher, and is now the superintendent of the Sunday school. They have a very interesting Religio society, presided over by Bro. Earnest Rowett, assisted by Bro. James Pycock. It is doing much in the interest of the work of God. The chances are not so favorable for preaching now as it is a very busy time. Most of the members are market gardeners. But I have visited and preached as wisdom

On July 5 I received a telegram from Elder W. Fligg, of London, that his mother-in-law, Sr. Quick, known as "Aunty Quick," was dead. So I took train for London. Reached there 7:20 p.m. Met Elder Fligg, and made arrangements for the services, which took place at the home. Many Saints and friends were present. The sister was for many years a member of the church and an active worker in church and Sunday school. She died strong in the faith.

I staid in London till the 16th, laboring in mission work and seeing the loved ones of home. I returned to Humber Bay, preaching and visiting, and on August 3, in the font of the Toronto church, I was permitted to baptize Mr. Thomas Sandy, from Hamilton. He was confirmed by myself and Elder T. A. Seaton, president of the Toronto branch.

On the same evening, in the Latter Day Saints' church, I solemnized the marriage ceremony of Mr. Thomas Sandy, and Sr. Beatrice Steed, both of Hamilton. After the two were made one in wedlock, and brother and sister in Christ, they returned to their new home in Hamilton.

After attending to the wants of the sick, in four administrations, I reached Humber Bay at an early hour Sunday morning, but was up again early to get ready for the many duties of the day. We met at the church with Bible class and Sunday school 9:30 a.m., after which prayer and sacrament meeting with a goodly portion of the Spirit of God, making us to feel it's good to be a Saint in latter days. Met again at three p. m. at the lake, when Charles J. Grigsby a brother to Bro. and Sr. William Grigsby, was baptized. Preaching and confirmation services at four p. m. The brother was confirmed by myself and Elder G. Whitworth, president of branch.

This ended the church meetings for that day; but I found a good chance to talk again to the wife of the brother baptized, and the evening was put in very profitably till a late hour. The next day was a holiday, and this gave me another chance to talk to Mrs.

Grigsby, and with good results. She made the admission that she believed the work, and I asked if she was ready to obey. She did not then desire. I was led to go alone and pray, which I did, and a little while after she informed me she wanted to obey. And as I had been talking of tithing and blessing of children, she with her husband asked that their child might be blessed. So I went to a place where six had been baptized some two years ago. A little repairing was done on the property of Elder G. Whitworth, where we drove to perform the rite. It was a beautiful day, and all went well. After the rejoicing time at the water we went to the house of Bro. and Sr. Whitworth, and confirmed, and the child was blessed under the hands of Elder George Whitworth and the

Thus the work is rolling on. Before leaving Humber Bay the Religio and the branch gave me financial aid as a token of love to the work and the writer. At a late hour I was called through the dark night and rain to Toronto to attend to the wants of the sick; and thus far I have administered some five times.

While I find the pathway of life has its thorns, yet there are some sweet-scented flowers. Trusting to be faithful as a missionary for Christ and the church, I ask your prayers that our work may ever be blessed.

Your brother in gospel love,

R. B. HOWLETT.

ROCKWELL CITY, Iowa, Aug. 9.

Editors Herald:—Although the HERALD is always a welcome guest to our home, I think there has been no contribution from us. We are among the scattered members, and about all we get is from the HERALD and the Ensign. Sister Wallace is the closest Saint to us. We are expecting the tent in here in a few weeks, and are looking forward to having a series of good meetings.

I have been impressed very forcibly with some dreams I have had. They may mean nothing but I have concluded to write of them and let the reader judge for himself.

Sometime last fall (I do not remember the date) I had a dream. I looked to the west and saw a large sun-no more dazzling than the sun at sunset-about five degrees above the horizon. About half way between the sun and the horizon I saw three stars, of different sizes, the one to the north being the largest, the middle one next, and the south one small and almost invisible. The sun stood still, but the stars seemed to move. The star at the north moved above and south. When it passed the sun it seemed to cause a dark corner in the sun. Then it passed down and south of the smallest star. when it ceased moving. In a short time the second star, or the middle one, began to move south. It passed across the small one and obscured it.

At this point I awakened, but in a short time I went to sleep again and I thought I was telling this to a few people. They listened very attentively until I got to the place where the smallest star had been overcome or destroyed, then no one would listen. This seemed to trouble me, because I thought this the most important part of my dream, and I awakened to meditate over it.

Another dream came to me while I was at conference at Deloit, in February, I do not remember the dream now, but the words that came to me the next morning I could apply to the dream very easily. The substance of the words was that I should be strengthened and grow in grace. I hope this will be so.

A little over a week ago I had a third dream that was made very plain to me, although I know no meaning of it. A large white cloud was in the southeast, and moving very rapidly northwest. There were other clouds in the sky, but my attention seemed to be drawn to this one particularly. It seemed to come very close; and all at once it seemed to unfold, and a very large army ready for battle burst upon my sight. They seemed to be hastening in the same direction the cloud appeared to move. It seemed grand to watch them, with their bayonets gleaming in the sun. Then all at once the scene changed. The cloud with its army disappeared, but a new and larger army from the same quarter and going in the same direction appeared upon the earth. They seemed to be hastening to meet some unknown foe to the northwest. The army seemed almost overcome by fatigue. Some stopped for a drink, but my mother seemed afraid to let them get it, for fear they would get so far back they never could enter the lines again. A drink was secured, however, and they hastened on to overtake the army. My brother joined them. I then awakened and wondered what this could have meant. I wonder yet if it could have any meaning.

Some one may be able to interpret the two dreams, if they mean anything.

Your sister in Christ, EVA REYNOLDS.

GUY, Oklahoma, July 29.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have been laboring nearly twenty miles northwest and southeast of this. Visited Seventh-day settlement eight miles north of place where debate was held with them last spring and created good interest, some giving up the seventh day. Wife was with me assisting nobly, scattering tracts and teaching the women.

The Baptist brethren were terribly alarmed because of the numerous Saints gathering around Guy, and Seiling seven miles northwest, the many baptisms, and organization of a branch there, and brought up their heavy artillery, D. B. Ray, formerly of St. Louis, Missouri, but now of Oklahoma City, here, being "robbed," as he publicly says, "of $100,000 at St. Louis by false (Baptist) brethren; impoverished; hence coming here to recuperate." Quite a puff for his Baptist Church! His coming to annihilate "Mormonism" was trumpeted throughout the land by his faithful adherents. I had been challenged by them to meet him; had reported to missionary in charge, who advised so to do if none other was obtained. I also wrote to Bro. I. N. White, as they said they would "meet no common man." He sent me propositions for Rev. Ray to sign and return.

On July 5, at ten a. m., their champion arrived and opened fire at Seiling, on "Mormonism." Said he had met and vanquished: E. L. Kelley, I. N. White and others, I. N. trembling like an aspen leaf in his mighty grasp. I then presented Bro. White's propositions, each to affirm his respective church in harmony with the Bible. He said he would sign no such propositions; neither could he remain to meet Bro. White, as he was "billed" to meet another man, and must leave here by the 14th; but if the "Mormons" had a man there then who "could by any means screw up his courage sufficiently to meet him on proper questions," he was at their service until the 14th. He finally came to Bro. White's propositions, virtually; he affirming "the Baptist Church to possess the Bible characteristics which entitle it to be regarded as the organic kingdom and Church of Christ." Would not affirm the Missionary Baptist Church. I affirmed that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has the Bible characteristics which entitle it to be recognized as the Church of Jesus Christ. Each affirmative was to have what time he wanted upon his question; each to choose a moderator, and they a chairman. They could agree upon no one for chairman, so he had things his own wav.

His first speech was on salvation by grace without works. Baptism nonessential, as all must be saved before that by faith; spent nearly half his time in giving definitions of church of Christ and kingdom. I utterly routed him by reading the Bible definition of Christ's church in 1 Corinthians 12: 28; Ephesians 4:11-16; and Ecclesiastes 3:14, 15, showing that "God requireth that which is past." Must be the same in all ages, etc. His second speech mentioned only two scriptures, Matthew 16:18 and Daniel 2:44. "Just as well shake his fist in the face of Jesus Christ and call him a liar as to teach an apostasy." Then "Jo Smith-forty wives, and he believed a hundred; book swindler, church robber, counterfeiter; low down, dirty, stinking Book of Mormon; teaching polygamy on page 116. Babies fit, and fit, and fit, with helmets and battle axes," etc. "The stinking Jo took his pencil and scratched out numerous words from our grand old perfect Bible, making the terrible, lying, contradictory Inspired Translation; Brigham Young; Mountain Meadow massacre; Mormons cutting their first wives' throats when they objected to their taking more wives," etc. I arose to a point of order when he first left his proposition; he raved, and said we should walk over his dead body before we could deprive him of liberty of speech; was a Kentuckian.

I then showed that the "gates of hell" never did prevail against the rock of revelation, etc., upon which Christ's church was built; neither the church; neither did the earthly powers prevail against the church only for a specified time. This Jesus declared they should do. (Matt. 11:12.) Were "the violent" to "take it by force?" Did they do it? Or did the word of the Lord fail? With this agree all the prophets and apostles. In Daniel 7:21 a certain power "made war with the saints [church] and prevailed against them;" but not forever, but "until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom" (verse 22). In verse 25 it was to "wear out the saints of the Most High," until a certain "time," same as in verse 22. In chapter 8, verse 12, this same power was to "cast down the truth to the ground; and it practiced, and prospered." Did it do it? Or was the prophet wrong? In verse 24 this same power was to "destroy the mighty and the holy people." Ask Amos 8: 11 if the truth was cast down, as Daniel said: "Behold; the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land. not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord: and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it." Compare this testimony of Daniel and Amos with that of the Baptist Church, which declares a succession of preachers from Christ's time till now, speaking the "words of the Lord," and we are forced to confess that somebody is wrong, either the prophets or the Baptists. Which shall we believe? The New Testament church could not hear without preachers, and they could not preach acceptably to God "except they be sent" (Rom. 10: 15). "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."-Heb. 5: 4. Even Christ himself could be called no other way than God's eternal law demanded (verses 5, 6). And that immutable law required a living prophet, through whom God called them (Ex. 4: 13-16). Yet this Baptist Church need only to take a vote of the members, choosing whom they prefer as their preachers. As Paul said, they "shall heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and shall turn away their ears from the truth [as I have presented it to you from the Bible, and shall be turned unto fables" (2 Tim. 4: 3); such as you have heard today about Brigham Young, forty wives, etc., etc., in his affirmative proof that the "Baptist Church possesses the Bible characteristics of the church of Christ," by the great exponent of their faith, imported here for this special occasion, just as Paul said these man-made teachers would do "in the last days" (2 Tim. 3: 1). Paul spoke of this apostasy in Acts 20: 29, 30; 2 Thessalonians 2: 3, 4; 1 Timothy 4: 1.

Paul said in 2 Timothy 1:15: "All they which are in Asia be turned away from me." This in A. D. 66. Then read chapter 3:1-7 and see the terrible condition of the church. And in A. D 96, only seven small churches or branches in Asia were considered worthy of a word of revelation from Christ, and they were warned to repent or they should be removed out of their place (Rev. 2:5). Of some the Lord said, "I will spew thee out of my mouth" (Rev. 3:16) And in chapter 12 the church, under the type of a woman, is seen fleeing into the wilderness. Who can wonder at this after all Asia had turned from Paul, all from the Lord but the seven places mentioned, and they had become so corrupt that without speedy repentance Christ threatened to spew them out of his mouth. It was to remain in the wilderness 1260 prophetic days, or years (Rev. 12: 6; also verse 14). Then the same power spoken of by Daniel, by the Lord, and by Paul is seen by John arising, making war with the saints, "and to overcome them," having power given him over all "kindreds, tongues, and nations." "And power was given unto him to continue forty and two months," 1260 years, the same time the church was to remain in the wilderness (Rev. 13:1-8). In chapter 17 this church and state power is explained to John in all its hideous deformity, the kings of the earth sustaining it "until the words of God shall be fulfilled" (verse 17). That is, for 1260 vears (see chapter 13:5). Thus we see there was to be an apostasy; saints prevailed against. Not forever, but until 1260 years expired. I then exposed his sophistry that "in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," which "shall stand forever," meaning the days of the four universal kingdoms, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome. Daniel in 2:39 said to Nebuchadnezzar, "And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee"-Medo-Persia. And of course, after Medo-Persia another kingdom, Grecia. And after Grecia, Rome, the only kingdom in the known world when Christ set up his kingdom in the first century. And "there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed" (Luke 2:1). This was in the beginning of the iron legs or kingdom. It had broken in pieces, bruised, subdued, consumed all other kingdoms, (Dan. 2: 40). Then came in the clay and iron divisions of feet and ten toes, which Daniel was told in 7:24 were the same four universal kingdoms symbolized by four great beasts: that the ten horns on the fourth beast, or kingdom, Rome, where ten kings that should arise out of that kingdom, the same as the ten toes of the image in chapter 2. These divisions or kingdoms should strive to unite again in one universal kingdom, "but they shall not cleave to one another" (Dan. 2: 43). "And in the days of these kings [divisions, horns, toes, that did not come into existence until the fifth century] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people," but always continue with those with whom it is first set up. The kingdom set up in the days of Christ was taken from those where first set up, and "left to other people" (Matt. 21: 43). It was as Daniel said to Nebuchadnezzar, that God "maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days" (verse 28). As Jesus said when the signs of his second coming were given: "Behold the fig tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."-Luke 21: 29-31. A latter-day event. It was here when Jesus spoke this. How could it then be near at hand again in latter days, if not upon the earth for a season and then removed? At his first advent he preached, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Not here, but soon to be. He afterwards said, "I will build my church," or kingdom, and did so. The same was to be done again "in the latter days" by sending an angel with "the everlasting gospel" (Rev. 14: 6); "This gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 24: 14); that it was again near at hand, ready to be again set up.

I then showed the grandeur and superiority of the Inspired Translation over all others. He never mentioned it again. I showed the evidences of the Book of Mormon, its purpose, etc. All his raving was "Jo Smith. Young Jo Smith had a late revelation in April last; was a tyrant; and we 'Mormons' all feared and served him. Would all practice polygamy only for fear of the law," etc. Three sessions finished his affirmative. Began mine Monday; and Tuesday, at close of my next to last speech, he announced that "this session will close the debate." Had to leave at daylight next morning and meet another man. I offered to go to his home and debate the same questions; travel and debate with him all the year. But no; if we would get a man who knew something he would return and debate with him. I proposed to him again to sign Bro. I. N. White's propositions and set his time to return, but could get nothing more out of him. He remained till near noon next day in Seiling, and three or four days in Taloga, so I heard before departing. I was challenged by Rev. Adams, Baptist, last fall, through Bro. Frank Vrooman, after preaching at Independence schoolhouse near his home. It was referred to missionary in charge, and has been under negotiation. I hear, ever since; and Rev. Adams, some two months ago, announced it to come off August 12, with Tony, Baptist, and Bro. H. O. Smith. Bro. Smith says he has heard nothing of it. It seems it will be another D. B. Ray affair.

Having charge of our gospel tent, I have moved it to the seat of war, the Independence schoolhouse, or near it, in Rev. Adams' neighborhood. Am having very good interest, wife assisting me, visiting the neighbor women, teaching and giving out tracts. I preached three times yesterday. Am looking for Bro. Vrooman (who put up the tent, then went home) to return and assist me; otherwise will try to hold the fort alone, with wife's assistance.

CHILLICOTHE, Mo., August 12.

Editors Herald:—We are still on duty. Have preached here forty-two times, baptized five more yesterday, making fourteen in all. Of the last one was a member of the Presbyterian, one of the Methodist, and one of Christian Church. We have success in getting some of the other churches to start revivals. Will move the tent to another part of the city and start in again. Much prejudice has been removed, but there is still plenty left. Others are believing, and I think will come in soon. Some of the people imagine vain things, and others rage, but still the work moves on.

I find to make a success in this work it is necessary to stay some time in a place. Bro.

Dice has been with me for a few days. I will likely stay here most of the tent season, as there are nine thousand people here that need to hear the gospel. We confirmed those in the last night that were baptized. Had a large crowd out, I had splendid liberty in my closing sermon. Will move to the west side today, and open fire on them from there. Expect to bombard the city before we leave. Hope to raise up a branch.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. W. ADAMS.

BEVIER, Mo., August 14.

Editor Herald:—I imagine that a sound is ringing in my ears from Israel's camp with the question, What are they doing at Bevier; we have not heard from them for a long time. This moves me to write that we are not altogether dead in a spiritual sense, but are still moving along with courage, having our chief object in view to win the crown.

Our branch is in good working order, with gallant young officers prosecuting their calling to the satisfaction of the Saints under their charge. The question in the past concerning the future condition of the Bevier branch agitated my mind more or less as to who would take hold of the work and push it forward, for the young were not interested then as they are now. The older ones were passing away to the beyond, one by one, and today there are only a few remaining. Not so active, perhaps, as in former years, but equally as strong in the faith. The young brethren and sisters mostly all have been born in the church and taught by their parents, as the Scriptures direct, are taking the burden off the older ones, and by and through their diligence and faithfulness in the discharge of their duties, the old ship of Zion is sailing along through rough and smooth, and will ultimately anchor in Zion, the home of the blest.

Perhaps it would be interesting to some to speak a word or two concerning an organization effected about three months ago in this town, called the "Preachers Alliance," and it might be surprising to some to learn that the Latter Day Saint preachers have been asked to take an active part with them. The following brethren are members of the above named society: F. T. Mussell, our branch president, and D. L. Morgan, the presiding priest of our branch, and our worthy district president and missionary, J. A. Tanner, including also the writer. We meet from house to house in rotation, and discuss Bible questions; and each is privileged to give his views on Bible doctrine, notwithstanding that the alliance is made up of Methodist. Congregationalist, Baptist, Campbellite or Christians, and Latter Day Saints. These meetings are getting interesting, and our discussions on doctrinal principles are getting hot; but what surprises me a little is that at the close of our meetings we are so friendly one towards the other. We are somewhat like the lawyers after fighting each other on the case, becoming heated in their arguments, each one defending his idea of the question. Seemingly they are mad at each other, but at the adjournment of the court they seem to be the best of friends. And so with the alliance, whether it is a formality or a true, friendly, Christian spirit I am not a judge. We have held two open preaching meetings; one at the Welsh Congregational church, Rev. T. D. Rees the pastor, Rev. J. Scarborough the Methodist pastor, and Elder F. T. Mussell, L. D. S., speakers. Congregation not as strong as we wished it to be. I suppose the excessive heat is a big part of the cause. The meeting was interesting and a goodly attention manifested. Another open meeting was held in the grove of the Methodist church. Congregation small, but good attention paid to that was spoken by the speakers. Rev. T. D. Rees spoke on the subject, What is Man, followed by Rev. S. C. Snodgrass, of the Baptist, and Elder J. A. Tanner followed, connecting his thoughts with the two former speakers. Much interest seemed to occupy the minds of the congregation, consisting of the different churches. These open meetings will continue. What the result will be time will tell; but one thing is certain, that our church, or rather the church of Christ, will not suffer loss, as I am confident that already the local ministry of Bevier has not been slothful nor slow to express our belief and claims, irrespective of what our associate preachers' views are, on the principles and doctrine of the Bible. The writer seemed to be the speckled bird at one of our late meetings, as all the other birds, (preachers) pecked at me. This thought came fresh to my mind, from a sermon I heard delivered by Elder T. W. Chatburn some years ago while in this mission, which to my mind is an appropriate application, as all the preachers, with some exceptions, jump on the "Mormons" so called.

So much on the Alliance at this time.

Another movement which is worthy of our attention: The tent work at Macon City. About the middle part of July our new tent arrived at Macon City, with all the modern style in its make up, with its genuine waterproof canvass, fine seats, and beautiful bright light. In fact, it is up to date; and in behalf of the Saints of this district I wish to express my appreciation of our tent. We ought to feel proud of it. Since its erection in the City Park, some man made himself servicable (?) by getting the people of Macon City to sign a petition to oust us from the city, on the grounds we were annoying the peace of the community. Failing in this, he filed an injunction to be settled by the action of the court. This also failed. Town board is in our favor, and stand by us; and some of the lawyers were prepared to defeat this injunction should it ever come before the court. So you can see when the people of God are trying to build up his work, the Devil on the other hand is doing all he can to tear it down; but in this case we are proud to say the victory is ours, and peace is restored, and three Maconites baptizing one intelligent young lady, and a married lady, and little daughter ten years old. This has always been a strong testimony in favor of the truth when the Devil rages, the truth is triumphant.

Our young missionaries W. W. Smith and E. Corthell have been busily engaged preaching every night, and Elder J. A. Tanner came to the rescue at the request of Elder I. N. White, as Bro. White was taken sick, preventing him from responding as he promised. We feel grateful to our heavenly Father that under the circumstances governing in this case, he has accomplished some good and the seed sown has created a spirit of investigation among a few honest seekers for truth. and bye and bye will be gathered into the fold of Christ. Our young and faithful Bro. E. L. Morgan acted as chorister during these tent services, and did his work well, and Sr. Annie Williams acted as organist, and in her absence Miss Edith Jones, a former resident of Bevier, acted in her stead. Quite a number from Bevier Saints and Salt River attended the meetings occasionally, and Bro. F. Palfrey and his respected family of Saints showed signs of encouragement to them as well as the missionaries. We wish the tent work God-speed to the accomplishment of their mission work.

> Yours in the faith, J. T. WILLIAMS.

Dear Herald:-I wish to call attention through your columns of some of the missionaries who are in Northern Michigan to my brother, Charles T. Babcock, who lives about one and a half miles south of Rapid City. He is wanting some one of the elders to visit him and open up the work in his vicinity. He is in the faith, but has not been inducted into the church. He is ready for baptism. I called attention to him in the columns of the Ensign last spring, but no one has visited him yet, or had not a short time ago. Any one of the elders visiting him will find a home with him while in that neighborhood. His address is Rapid City, Michigan. By writing to him any one of the elders can find out his wants. Hope he may be visited

The work is onward here in Arkansas, although in some places prejudice runs quite high. Houses are shut against us, and sometimes threats are made; but no bodily injury has reached us yet. But that does not stop us telling the gospel story, which is growing grander every day.

The writer has been quite busy through all the heated term doing as best he could. Is at home for a short stay, but will be out soon again. Having been south and east, expect to go north, where we hear of an opening where preaching is wanted.

It was our good fortune to attend the Northeast Texas and Choctaw district conference. One of the best, we think, if not much the best, it has been our good fortune to attend. There was such a unity in every way, and the Spirit of the Master was with the conference in great power. The preaching was grand, and the social meetings were greatly enjoyed.

There were no prophecy, no unknown tongue; but the tongues of the Saints were loosened so that the goodness of God was expressed in the mother English to the edification of all present. Many people attended who were strangers to the latter-day work, and we believe much prejudice was allayed. Have just heard from College Hill schoolhouse, a place somewhere about one hundred and fifty miles to the southeast, where we had been holding meetings about a month since. A couple of Utah elders had come in; held two meetings only, and got cheered. What kind of cheering I did not hear. I held nine services and had to quit without any cheering, and was told if I held my tenth meeting, which was announced, I would be in danger of bodily injury. A Methodist preacher was in there trying to do something, after I was there, but gave up without accomplishing anything. This was quite a new place. No one there had ever heard our doctrine.

Also heard there was a debate on between one Spurlock (did not learn of what faith) and Bro. J. W. Jackson, of Euclid, Arkansas, to begin September 16 Did not learn any other particulars about the debate.

We think J. W. will stay with his opponent until the finish. Yours in the work,

D. D. BABCOCK.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., August 17.

Editors Herald:—Elder M. H. Bond preached two able sermons in the local chapel Sunday, August 11, on the subject "Hell; what and where is it?"

Better conditions prevail here than for some time back. Prospects are good for effective work under Bro. Bond's pastorate.

We are pleased to note the return of Sr. Florrie Smith from Philadelphia, Pensylvania.

Religio discussed the question at its last session as to "When is man strongest; before he is tempted or after he has practiced an evil?" It had the result of stirring up practical thought and considerable interest in the problem.

UNCLE BURNSIDE.

FORD, Iowa, August 16.

Editors Herald:-I see by the last HERALD that an effort is being made to again publish Sandheden's Banner and hope that the effort may not prove in vain nor result in a failure, hence as a starter you may put me down for two yearly subscriptions. Would like to see every Scandinavian family of Saints in America support this effort; and many could subscribe for friends or relatives and never miss the amount thus laid out. You know that a great many Scandinavians in this country are not able to read the English language or else very imperfectly, not enough to get the sense out of it. Now if we love this work as dearly as we profess, and desire to make our fellow countrymen acquainted with this glorious work, let us place such reading matter before them, which will be a means of preparing the way for the preaching of the gospel. You Scandinavians know better than anyone else, how prejudiced this people are against anything which savors of "Mormonism," and to some extent they are not to be blamed, when we consider that the Scandinavian countries have been one of the best fields the Utah Church has had. And after immigrating to the Salt land and have there seen the corruption and evil perpetrated, which they were not made acquainted with when they in their native country in good faith accepted the plain principles of the gospel of Christ; thus having their confidence betrayed, and made shipwreck of their faith, who can blame them?

Now while we who are members of the church may possibly be able, at least most of us, to read the English language, that should be no excuse by which we should seek to justify ourselves in not sending in our subscription for the Banner which may be the means of bringing some honest soul to the knowledge of the truth, and that one in turn bring others, and so on in succession. Let us not consider our earthly substance of greater worth than the saving of souls, but use it in every ligitimate way possible to bring mankind to a knowledge of the truth. And this can sometimes better be accomplished through literature than any other way, or at least pave the way for the preaching of it. Let us therefore not wait for one another in subscribing, nor be content with our own subscription, but solicit subscriptions among friends to the cause, and subscribe for the enemies to the cause, that they may become our friends and fellow laborers in the gospel of Christ, and thus let everyone thrust in his sickle and reap while the day lasts, as the "night cometh when no man can work."

In gospel bonds,

S. K. SORENSEN.

125 Stockport Road,

MANCHESTER, Eng., Aug. 7.

Editors Herald:—I arrived in Liverpool early on Saturday morning, after a very pleasant voyage, indeed, the best I have ever experienced on the ocean. I was, however, very glad to place my feet upon terra firma once more for I would much prefer a life upon land to a "life on the ocean wave." England to me looks very natural after an absence of nearly six years.

The railway trains look very odd to us after traveling upon our trains. Over here the carriages are small and inconvenient compared with our modern comfortable cars. The third class cars are divided into compartments of which there are several. They are about six feet by ten feet and are built to accommodate ten passengers. All sit straight up and very tightly packed together, so that if the train is crowded and the journey lengthy, it is far from being comfortable. Two doors give the means of ingress and egress, containing also sliding windows. But I confess that one has a consciousness of safety traveling upon them, as the tracks are very solidly built and rails together with the points are more firmly fixed than are our tracks, and all bridges are built of solid masonry and massive iron girders; as a rule the trains travel between forty and fifty miles an hour and keep good time. Hence I enjoy traveling on the trains here for the reason that I feel safe.

On my arrival at Manchester, I met with Bishop Kelley and his wife, Bro. and Sr. P. Muceus, also Bro. J. Rushton, one of our missionaries, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Clarke, where I was given a very hearty welcome.

The first session of the European conference began at six o'clock the same evening. The conference was a success, and I believe that much good will accrue to the church hereafter. The quorum of elders and quorum of priests was organized. Bro. Thomas Taylor was ordained bishop, and Brn. C. H. Caton and J. Dewsnup, Sen., were chosen by him as counselors. Brn. Joseph Greenwood and James Baty were ordained to the office of evangelical ministers; Bro. J. W. Rushton to the office of seventy. Bro. Henry Green wood ordained as president; and Brn. J. Austin and Archibald Bradshaw as his counselors of the quorum of elders. Bro. John Foden was ordained president; Brn. J. W. Green and J. Schofield counselors of the priests' quorum.

The Bishop has adapted himself to the customs of this land in a very graceful manner, and his presence in the conference, also the manner in which he acquitted himself in the duties of the same, seemed to give evidence that the Lord had made a wise selection in sending him here. The spirit of peace and brotherly love prevailed throughout the entire sessions. All business was transacted unanimously and harmoniously.

The brethren of this land received the Bishop and myself with every manifestation of esteem and confidence, and I can assure you we appreciated their kindness, and hope to comport ourselves in such a manner as to be worthy of their continued confidence.

The Bishop and myself expect to visit all the branches comprised in this mission; we shall be in this place over the ensuing Sabbath; thence to London, Birmingham, and South Wales; thence to Scotland, Leeds, Sheffield, Clay Cross, Leicester, and Stafford. We hope the brethren in the respective branches will be patient, as it will take some time to make the rounds.

There was a very large representation at the conference, and the Saints of Manchester provided the necessary hospitality in a very creditable manner.

The Presidency and the Presiding Bishop and the rest of the officers of the church were all represented in this land for the first time in the history of the church.

Will the presidents of branches and Saints living isolated from branches please forward me their addresses to the above address.

We were very pleased to again greet our aged and worthy Bro. Thomas Taylor, whom we thought looked exceedingly well for one in his seventy-seventh year. At present there are strong indications that our brother will render good service to the church in his new and responsible calling for some years to come. Bro. J. Dewsnup, Sen., looks natural; but we notice that age is creeping on, but trust he has many years of continued usefulness before him. Bro. C. H. Caton, one of the late secretaries of the mission, is as cheerful and active as in days of yore. Brn. Bradshaws, Meredith, Walton, Armstrong, Mather, Platts, J. Dewsnup, Jun., and many others are alive to the interests of the work. Bro. John Rushton, our young missionary in Scotland, has reported very favorably of the work there. Any financial help that could be rendered by any of our Scotch brethren in America would be of great service for the work there, as the members of the church in Scotland are not rich.

Bro. Enge reports having baptized some of late, and having effected openings in his mission from which he expects to reap some good results in the near future. Bro. Muceus and wife are on their way there, and we wish them Godspeed in their new field of labor.

Love to all.

Your brother in gospel bonds, GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

RHODES, Iowa, August 17. Editors Herald:-The reunion and conference at this place convened on Thursday. The committee on arrangement had everything in readiness for the opening, the camp ground occupying a portion of the fair ground here, a most delightful location in every way. The Religio work occupied Thursday, and the Sunday school work Friday. Much interest was manifested in both of these departments, especially the Sunday school work, of which we will have more to say. The reunion starts out as well as any which have been held in the district, and it is expected that the interest will increase, though the continued drought has had a tendency to make the attendance small. The committee in charge of the meeting consists of H. A. McCoy, W. C. Nirk, and Charles Richeson. Religio district officers present are, Vice President H. A. McCoy, Secretary Mattie Hughes, and Treasurer Elsie Russell. Sunday School Association officers present are, Assistant Superintendent C. J. Peters. and Treasurer Elsie Russell. Of the elders present there are: J. W. Wight, D. C. White, J. D. White, and a good representation of the elders of the district.

The district quarterly conference convened on Saturday, continuing over Sunday, and the meeting is expected to continue over Sunday the 25th inst. Yours truly,

A. A. REAMS.

ATTLEBORO, Mass., August 17. Editors Herald:-Mrs. Henrietta Humphrey, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, was baptized in Plainville recently and also Grace Munro, daughter of Bro. and Sr. C. L. Munro, of Attleboro, by Elder Charles A. Coombs. The work is in fair condition here, and bright and prospering at Attleboro. The Religio is doing good work under the presidency of Bro. John Siddall. They average nearly twenty-five, weekly at their services. The regular church services are crowded much of the time, meetings being held in the houses of the Saints. A recent prayer and testimony meeting at Attleboro at the home of Bro. and Sr. John Marchington was one of the best held in years. The spirit of prophecy was present in a marked degree. The last session of the Religio was held with Bro. Marchington.

HIRAM HURD'S FIVE-DOLLAR BILL.

Mrs. Underwood was tired out. All day long she had been looking over boxes and bundles, cleaning out chests and bureau drawers preparatory to the inevitable spring cleaning. Her work was nearly completed save for a huge pile of motley rags heaped up in the middle of the room, giving it a general air of confusion and untidiness. These still remained to be sorted before her day's work would be satisfactorily accomplished, but she was far too weary to apply herself to the task, slight as it seemed to be in itself considered. It was, therefore, with a sigh of relief she heard the voice of her son Archie, just returned from school, in the hall below followed by himself as he ran gaily over the stairs into the room where she was at work. Mrs. Underwood was one of those delightful wives and mothers who seek to conceal from their family all petty annoyances in the domestic machinery, or any personal worriment, so it was a very cheerful voice and pleasant smile, although a very tired mamma, that greeted her son's return.

"Well, Archie, I am very glad to see you. I had hoped to have this room all to rights before you came, but I found so much else to do, it was quite impossible. Are you willing to do it for me, dear, so I may rest a few minutes before getting tea?" If a slight shade of disappointment came over Archie's face it was only for a moment, and was not, perhaps, to be wondered at. He had hurried home from school to engage in a game of baseball with his companions, who were waiting for him in the street below. But he answered: "All right, mother! Just let me go and tell the boys, so they can get some one else in my place." In a moment he returned and set himself about the task awaiting him. His mother explained what she wished done-the white and colored rags each put in separate piles and then tied up in bags ready for the ragman when he should make his customary rounds. For some time he worked on in silence, his mother resting quietly on the lounge and regarding him with fond affec-

"You shall have all the money they bring, Archie, for your unselfishness in giving up your play to help me," said the mother, and the boy felt more than repaid for his brief disappointment. He was saving up all his earnings for a greatly desired object, and had already more than half the amount required. He worked away with a will and was very nearly through his task when he came across something that caused him to pause in his labors. He glanced up at his mother and seeing she was not asleep came and placed in her hand a loose page from the holy Bible. "I found it among the rags," he said, "and you have told me never to destroy or throw away even a leaf from the scriptures, and here is a whole chapter. What shall I do with it?"

Mrs. Underwood regarded it thoughtfully for a few moments. It was from that most precious of Christ's teachings — the fifth chapter from Matthew, printed in small but clear type.

"It is far too valuable a portion of God's word to be lightly thrown aside, my son," she said at length. "I will tell you what we will do with it. Fold it carefully and enclose it in a piece of clean, white paper, then put it in with the colored rags where it will be more likely to attract attention. Then send a little prayer along with it, asking God to take care of it and bless it to some poor, needy soul."

Archie did as his mother advised, not forgetting the prayer, and soon the rags were all neatly sorted and tied up ready for the rag-peddler. In a few days he came and Archie's heart was made glad by the bright, new half-dollar he received in exchange for the rags and other cast-off articles of merchandise. The peddler transferred them all to the bags on the back of his cart which were already nearly full, so that after receiving this consignment, it was impossible to tie the bags up tightly. So it came to pass, as the wagon jolted down the street and turned a sharp curve at the corner, some of the top rags fell out and were borne along by the light breeze in different directions. Among them was the Bible leaf, which being somewhat heavier than the others on account of its wrapping, remained where it fell in the gutter, on the side of the road. There it lay for a couple of days and had Archie Underwood seen it at the end of that time, perhaps he would have thought God had paid little heed to his whispered prayer.

But as poor, half-drunken Hiram Hurd came staggering along the street that second afternoon, his eye fell upon the soiled little parcel and he eagerly seized it, though how he accomplished the act without himself falling into the gutter was a marvel. As he unrolled the outer covering, its contents, dampened by the night's moisture and sort of run together, took on the shape of a bank note to his distorted imagination, while the "V" at the head of the chapter designated its value.

"Ha! I'm in luck, I am, to find a five-dollar bill right on the street. Mollie and the young 'uns haven't had much to eat for a week past. Guess I'll fill up with a drink and then get 'em a good square meal for once—say a turkey and all the fixin's. Won't they be shurprised?"

So he gloated to himself over his new-found treasure. "But shtay!" he reflected for a moment seriously. "Guess I'd better get the dinner first and fill up afterwards." Full of this praiseworthy thought he hastened rapidly as his deplorable condition would permit to the nearest market and demanded of the dealer in loud, peremptory tones, "What's turkey fetchin' today, Mr. Wells?"

Mr. Wells, the provision dealer, glanced contemptuously at his customer as he recognized him and his condition, and curtly replied: "More than you can afford to pay, Hi, so be off with you!"

"Hey, what's that you shay?" exclaimed the drunkard in a threatening tone. "Can't pay for it, hey?" Then suddenly lowering his voice to a confidential whisper, he came close to the dealer and informed him, "You are mistaken this time, my friend. I've got money enough to pay for the turkey and all its fixins', and I want 'em sent up to my house right off, I do."

"I'd rather see your money than hear you talk about it, Hi," was the dealer's response. "Our terms are cash."

"Look a here," exclaimed Hiram pulling the dirty piece of paper out of his pocket and flaunting it triumphantly in the face of the storekeeper. "How's that for Hi!" laughing in a maudlin way at his own silly joke.

The astonished Mr. Wells, deceived for a moment by its dark, soiled appearance into thinking it agenuine bill, took it from Hiram and unfolded it, immediately bursting into a loud, harsh laugh.

"That'll hardly pass for a five-er here, Hi," he said, tendering it back, "though it'll be worth as much to you, maybe, if you'll mind what it says. Now get out of here! You're in the way of more profitable customers," he added, turning to Archie Underwood, who had just entered the store on an errand. Dazed and angry, but almost sobered by his great disappointment, Hiram turned to obey, but as Archie, his errand accomplished, attempted to pass him on his way out, Hiram caught him by the arm and exclaimed: "Did he tell me the truth, boy? Isn't this a five-dollar bill? I mistrust he's afoolin' of me! What is it, anyway?"

Archie took the proffered paper and gave a start as he recognized the Bible leaf which he himself had so carefully enclosed. And then he began to wonder how it could possibly have fallen into "old Hurd's" hands (as the village boys called him).

"It is a leaf from the Bible, Mr. Hurd," replied Archie, courteously.

Hiram cast it contemptuously on the ground, then, seeming to reconsider the matter, stooped and picked it up, saying with a grating laugh, "Guess I'll take it home to Mollie and show her how near I came to buying a turkey dinner with a piece of the Bible;" and as he turned away with unsteady step Archie mustered up courage to say, timidly: "Perhaps it will buy the turkey dinner yet, Mr. Hurd, if you will only read it and do what it says."

But he could not be sure the half-intoxicated man even heard him, so he went home to tell his mother of the singular occurrence, and of the complete failure of their little experiment, notwithstanding the secret prayer that sanctified it. But Archie's mother said: "Wait! Nothing is ever lost that is done for God. Wait his time, my son." And Archie waited all through his school-days and college life, till the swift, busy years drove the incident entirely from his mind.

Thirty years passed by. Mr. Archibald

Underwood, now a middle-aged man and a prosperous lawyer in a far western city, came back for a few days to visit his boyhood's home. His parents had passed on to their reward, together with many whom he had known in his youthful days.

Many of the old landmarks, too, were gone. The market where his father used to trade had been long since torn down, giving place to an imposing structure built of granite and freestone. The entire building was occupied as a provision store and gave employment to a large number of clerks who were busily hurrying to and fro, executing the orders of the constantly arriving customers. In one of the entrances stood a large, portly man, with white hair and beard, who from evident signs was the proprietor of the immense establishment. Mr. Archibald Underwood drew near and engaged him in conversation, introducing himself as a former resident of the now flourishing town. As the provision dealer responded courteously to the stranger's interested inquiries concerning the growth of the place, it seemed to Mr. Underwood that he must have met the man before. There was something wondrously familiar about him, though there was nothing in his face or general appearance to mark his identity. On returning to the house of his friend with whom he was stopping, Mr. Underwood inquired who was the proprietor of the fine market in the square.

"Don't you remember Hiram Hurd?" was the reply. "'Old Hurd,' as we boys used to call him, though he was not by any means an old man, who used to go staggering round the streets?"

"Is it possible?" exclaimed Mr. Underwood in amazement. "How did the change come about?"

"He reformed very suddenly about thirty years ago," replied his friend. "He went to Wells, the old provision-dealer, one day and told him that if he would give him a job he would quit drinking. Nobody believed he'd hold out, but Wells employed him in his slaughter-house for a spell, then as he grew more trusty and continued sober, he put him on one of his wagons. Finally he grew to be such a good judge of cattle Wells intrusted him largely with the buying of his stock and at last he gave him an interest in his business. When Wells retired a few years ago, Hurd bought out the concern, and with the rapidly-growing town, his business has increased to the proportions you see today. He is a fine Christian man, too, and has a lovely family, but he is a bit eccentric. He always carries around in his wallet a folded, soiled. and almost worn-out bit of paper, which he claims is the foundation of all his prosperity. It is a leaf from the New Testament, but years ago Hurd mistook it for a five-dollar bill-a mistake which he affirms proved his salvation."

So he went on expatiating on the merits and benevolence of the reformed inebriate. But Mr. Underwood was lost in profound reverie. As if a sudden flash-light had been thrown on the scenes of his youth, there stood forth in startling reality all the details of that incident in his boyhood, while from out the echoes of the dim past he seemed to hear a loved voice saying as plainly as though it had just spoken: "Wait, Archie! Nothing is ever lost that is done for God. Wait his time, my son!"—Sarah L. Tenny, in Christian Intelligencer.

WEEK DAY INFLUENCE OF SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

From the time teachers arise from their, peaceful sleep Monday morning till they retire for rest Saturday night their minds should be more or less upon their pupils and the lesson for the following Sunday. When a person's mind is occupied with high and noble things for such long intervals of time their influence is very great. As they show by their actions and talk where their thoughts are, the influence of such elevating thoughts will certainly come to the surface in the way of kind and loving words. Indeed, I think the teacher's influence is even greater during the week than on Sunday. As they come in contact with the little children they have more chance to put forth their influence in many ways.

I once knew a young lady who taught in a large class of primary scholars. She was no professor of religion; but on Sunday she would talk to the little ones on the lessons about Jesus, and during the week would indulge in the pleasures of the world, and the thought often came to me, Can she have much influence for good over her pupils? I thought not: as my idea of a Sunday school teacher is that he or she be just as good during the week as on Sunday.

Our teachers are so zealous in their work they are able to teach many things during the week by example that they could not possibly teach on Sunday by precept. They believe so strongly in the efficacy of prayer, and have squared their lives by it, that even in their dealing are noticeable to all whom they come in touch with.

They don't believe in scheming to get the temporal things of this life. God will take care of all who trust him.

We read in God's word, Ask what you will and it shall be given you. This I think to mean the temporal things here, as well as the spiritual things.

The ravens did not toil, neither did they spin, and God took care of them. So also will be take care of us.

Now having these glorious thoughts first and foremost in our hearts all through the week, Why shouldn't our influence be great and good?

OFFICERS AND INTEREST IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

When asked the definition of home the little boy first looked surprised, then puzzled; then he said, "Home? Why, home is where mother is." A very good answer; but why, let me ask, does mother make it home? Your mother is probably not beautiful nor extremely witty; may not even be the best woman in the world, though I would not like to hear any little boy or girl admit that fact. Maybe there are hundreds of smarter women than your mother; yet the child cares more for her than for anyone else, because she is the one person on whom he can rely, the one who works for, sympathizes with, and loves him.

Some one wrote a pretty poem and divided all the people into two classes, "those who lift, and those who lean." The mothers are the ones on whom the children learn to lean until they are old enough to help lift the burden of life.

This may seem like getting a long way from the subject; but the officers of the Sunday school—if they would be successful—must be to the school what the mother is to the home. They must be those on whom the weak ones can lean. They must love the work they are engaged in, must be slow to resent a slight, and not take offense or stay away because some one finds fault with them.

The children must feel that they are there for love of the work. They must to greet the children who come early—and encourage all to do the same. Nothing will kill the interest of any meeting like having people coming in at all times. This is rather a threadbare subject, but in the Advertiser lately a merchant says: "The first time an 'ad' appears maybe no one really reads it. The next time people remember having seen it and glance over it. When they see it day after day they say, I believe I'll try that, it's advertised so much." Now we want to advertise this idea of being on time, until you all decide to try it.

TO HAVE SPECIAL EXERCISES

every quarter or oftener, and invite the parents, would tend to increase the interest in the school. Perhaps those fathers who sit around reading the paper Sunday morning could be induced to put on their "Sunday suits" and attend one session of Sunday school. Once, when I was a little girl, a man came to visit our school, and I heard some one say, in tones of such evident pride, and pleasure, "That's my father," that I took another look at him. "Such an ugly man," I thought; "how can she be proud of him?" I see now. He was her father, "I believe there are not many fathers who could not be induced to come, just once, if he knew his child's face would light up with pride as she pointed him out to her classmates.

Then, too, there are not many men who are not somewhat conversant with the Bible. They would probably enjoy a Sunday morning in the Bible class, expressing their opinions among the others. Most men have opinions.

But the first requisite to successful work in Sunday school is

TO LIVE ONE'S RELIGION.

Things not absolutely wrong in themselves must be avoided by one who is a leader in Sunday school work. Children are so quick to notice, so apt to imitate, you cannot afford to be a stumbling block to even one of these "little ones."

We want to bring souls to the kingdom, we must have

"SUNDAY SCHOOL ON THE BRAIN."

We must try to win the love and confidence of those in our charge until they will want to come, because, like home, it is the dearest place on earth—the officers like the mothers can be relied on.

TALK SUNDAY SCHOOL TO EVERYONE you know until they will see the advertisement so often they will decide to "try it once anyhow." Make it so pleasant they will want to come again.

One Friday morning, not long ago, there was a crowd at 7:45 in front of a big Broadway store, waiting to be first at the bargain counter. Why? Because calico was to be sold at two and one half cents a yard—only ten yards to a customer—a clear saving of twenty-five cents. A big jewelry house had a "sale" the same day. Where is the crowd? Why, don't you know there are not many people who have money enough to buy jewels even at a bargain?

Well, let me say that for one hour every Sunday morning we are giving away the only jewel you can take with you to your eternal home. Come and get one. "The pearl of great price," the gospel, free to all for the asking. "Only one to a customer." Each must come and get it for himself. Then when you leave your home here and stand at the bar waiting to be assigned a home over there, you can point with joy and pride to the Great Judge and say, like the little girl—"There is my Father!"

MASSACHUSETTS REUNION.

The Massachusetts district reunion has just closed. The attendance was not as large this year as was anticipated; probably owing to the fact that the "big guns" from afar were not to be with us, as had been advertised. No doubt it would have been a drawing card had they been there, but we made just about as much noise if they had been. Our home "guns" kept firing with an earnestness which showed they meant business. There were no blank cartridges used; every shot seemed to hit the mark. There was a fair interest maintained throughout the entire reunion.

The officers elected for the sessions were: Presidents, F. M. Sheehy, R. Bullard, M. H. Bond; secretaries, E. H. Fisher, W. A. Sinclair; chorister, R. Bullard; organist, L. S. Ashton; police, James Cowen, E. L. Travers, O. L. Newcomb. The speakers of the reunion were: Of the missionary force, F. M. Sheehy, R. Bullard, M. H. Bond, C. H. Rich; of our home talent, district president

F. O. Coombs, Dr. J. Gilbert.
Our social services were especially interesting. The Spirit was with us in an intelligent manner at least, if not in the gifts of the gospel, nor were we entirely forgotten in this respect. The Lord spoke to us through his servants in warning, counsel, and blessing, calling some to labor for him in different offices: Bro. C. H. Rich, of the missionary force, laboring now as a priest, was called to the office of elder, and Bro. Fred Roberts, of Providence, to the ministry.

The Sunday school held a session Wednesday afternoon. It was in charge of G. H. Gates, of the General Sunday School Association, and M. C. Fisher, district superintendent. The program was quite interesting. There was a paper on "Reviews" and a review conducted by W. A. Sinclair, and the introduction of kindergarten work: Sandbox exercises, by Susie E Gilbert. Probably the latter exercise was the most interesting of any feature ever introduced into the Sunday school work in the Massachusetts district. The class was composed of four little children, and the lesson was made so interesting that the little ones could see nothing but the principles working before them. The lesson illustrated was Peter's baptism on the day of Pentecost. Firstly they had a tin full of water placed in the center of the box of sand, sunken sufficiently to make it level, then there were trees to be planted, and as the grove where the reunion was held is pine and oak, these were the best to work upon. The teacher had each child plant a pine cone, then water it, explaining the process necessary to perform to make it grow. Then not having time to wait for the growth of the seed, a branch of the pine tree to represent the tree was placed over each seed, and likewise the acorn was planted and the oak branch to represent the oak tree. Then they placed pegs to represent men, and a more conspicuous one to represent Peter. Then came the baptism, the teacher performing the act with Peter and another. To show the impression the children got as to the mode of baptism, we will use one question asked of them: "What does the elder do when he gets to the water." Answer, "He goes in to see if it is deep enough." Many other bright remarks were given by them.
Saturday afternoon was given to the Religi-ans. A committee composed of R. M. Sheeby, Boston; M. H. Bond, Providence; and S. E. Hargraves, Fall River, was chosen to prepare a program, which, when rendered, was very interesting. Elder F. M. Sheehy exhibited a chart illustrating that all science was united in proving the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. Sr. Florence Fisher, of Boston, read a paper on "How to study the Book of Mormon in classes." It was very interesting. The lesson conducted by C. H. Rich and chart exercise in lesson work was especially worthy of note. We believe our workers in Religio have proven themselves equal to the task of dissecting the truths contained in the book, producing an argument not to be overcome by the learned-ignorant people who assail them.

The reunion closed Monday a. m. and a great many returned home. But the beautiful grove, the cool waters of the lake, and the huckleberries proved too great a temptation for some, so they lingered awhile longer. Held meetings Monday and Tuesday evenings, but had to bid good-bye to the beautiful, Wednesday morning. The reunion has been a success, and much good will come from it. Some are near the kingdom in that place, and we hope ere another reunion time comes they may be one with us. May God prosper his work in the Massachusetts district, is our W. A. SINCLAIR. prayer.

IOWA STATE FAIR, AUGUST 23-31.

The new buildings are nearly complete and the final arrangements well under way for the coming State Fair. The number of entries received indicates that all departments will received indicates that all departments will be full, except possibly the Agricultural and Horticultural departments, which, owing to the unfavorable season, may not be up to the average, and yet this should prompt the farmers of Iowa to make special effort to show what Iowa can do in a drouth year, and if they do this, as they can do it, there will be a good display even in those departments.

There are times when I have to lash myself to a desk to write. The luxury of it all is in the planning, dreaming, revery, but to transmit all these etheral ideas to paper and do it to my own satisfaction, I confess, is sometimes a task. At other times the pen skips along rapidly and manscript piles up like a haycock, and alas! much of it is left in the stubble. Perhaps not enough; but the belief forces itself upon me that about one half that an ordinary person like myself writes is superfluous. In reading over a proof, under the necessity of pruning to make even pages and compress six into one, it is astonishing how many sentences and paragraphs may be lifted without disturbing even the symmetry of the article. How refreshing it is under these circumstances to come upon a profligate paragraph or a surplus sentence and make things fit.

Notes or sketches from an article are one thing, written manuscript another; when type written it looks different. In galley proofs the bulging comes; seems to stick out more than ever. Page proofs further reveal how differently you could have said it. When I read of those authors who never change a line or syllable, after writing—having it "all thought out"—I either think that truth is strained, or the writing is of little value, or the author is a prodigy. It is only by testing, trying and re-trying that the painter obtains his best color effects,

Her instructions on complexion ills are interlarded here and there with snappy little epigrams as "cheerers." The weapons she suggests to beauty seekers for the complete annihilation of beauty grievances do not include artificial methods—"factory" frizzes, rouge and other horrors being barred. She gives instructions on correct breathing, what to eat, how to bathe—in brief, how to become a healthy, wholesome woman. No wonder she is popularly known to many thousands of women.

A very practical article regarding Home and Family Life, by Professor Ellen M. Richards, appears in the September number of The Delineator. The first sentence is "The house is but the shell of the home, a shell meant to inclose and protect, not to crush it." These few words give an idea of the breadth and sympathy with which Professor Richards discusses the subject.

Now as a woman, with two little girls to supply with outdoor summer amusement, and with all my own childish pleasure in what has been described as vividly before me as though it had been but yesterday, I built and laid out for my children a miniature house and grounds. The trees and flowers are all and grounds. The trees and flowers are all growing, and by planting and watching the children have taken into their minds and hearts a knowledge of botany and a love for nature which will remain with them always. The illustration is inserted to give ideas which may help others, and to show what can be done with a common wooden starchbox when a little time and ingenuity are expended upon it. The house is fourteen inches long, is painted yellow and sanded, to represent stucco; the roof is a dull, dark green, and all the trimmings are white. Any suitably proportioned box will answer the purpose.—Gertrude Okie Gaskill in the September Woman's Home Companion.

Can you afford to miss the eight days delightful summer outing, with all the advantages to be derived from the splendid instruction and entertainment provided, a magnificent array of talent offered at the Allerton Chautauqua Assembly, Aug. 20-27, 1901? Send for that beautiful program-booklet to J. B. Rankin or Wm. Murchie, Allerton,

A Kings' Daughters' circle of ten girls chose for its motto these three words, "Guard the Tongue." Their special promise to each other was to speak no evil, and to listen to no evil reports or remarks about any one, and to discourage all gossip, scandal and adverse criticism. They were all very nice girls; no one would have suspected them of the vulgar habit of gossiping or of saying unkind things of their companions or neighbors. Yet after one month under the new rule of restraining the tongue, these girls, every one of them, confessed that they had been compelled to exercise great self-denial in order to carry out their promises.—Ada C. Sweet in the September Woman's Home Companion.

The much abused word "LADY," is modified direct from the early Angic-Saxon, and means "loaf giver;" for the highest ideal of woman in those days was to be a good manager of her household in every particular; bread was then the real staff of life. The Delineator for September devotes its illustrated cookery article to the subject of bread in its various forms and every "LADY" should study the article.

EDITOR ABROAD.

Two sermons at San Bernardino. on Sunday, August 4, and attendance at the usual prayer service the Wednesday evening before, were all that were attempted at the city in the deep valley watched over by the "eternal hills."

It was hot, humiliatingly hot weather, oppressed everyone quenched the enthusiasm of all. Many of the dwellers in the city had sought the mountains and the seaside in an endeavor to secure comfort during the "heated term;" so that the audiences were small. so it was said, though there appeared to be a spirit of appreciation with them, as we tried to interest them in themes of gospel significance and correlative subjects.

It was very hot; and we thought that the change from our home in the central west was not worse for the heat than we had so far experienced in the "Land of Sunshine and Flowers." Bro. Joseph Luff suffered more from the enervating heat than the Editor did, for the cause only, the heat got nearer to his bones. He only stood it until Monday the 5th, when he, also, left for the coast at Santa Ana. We stayed visiting from house to house among the Saints. Wixom, Wise. Matthews, Pool, Rabel, Harris, Roberts, Smith, kindly conducted by Bro. Wm. Gibson, veteran, pioneer, soldier of the Cross and genial comrade in bonds. At the home of Bro. and Sr. W. Cave we were cared for during our stay in the valley.

We found appointments for Wednesday and Thursday evenings, the 7th and 8th of August, on our arrival late on Wednesday afternoon, delay caused by an accident to the engine. We had a dinner at the Orange Villa Hotel, in the precincts of the lovely village of orange three miles from Santa Ana. The meetings were for gospel "services conducted by Pres. Joseph Smith and Apostle Joseph Luff." "No collection" to be held in Spurgeon's Hall, a big room fronting on the main street whence the various noises incident to city traffic came up through the windows open to give air to the audience. A band of the Salvation Army with drum and tambourine, and rattling songs added to the din so that it was doubtful if the preacher was heard to good effect. It is certain that the Editor's effort the first evening was but poor, the audience, attentive but small, seemed lost in the large hall, and so was the preacher. The effort of Bro. Luff the second night was much better, though the audience was smaller by twenty. It was pleasant to think, however, that the audience was mostly composed of those having hope of the gospel as seen by the Saints under the angel's message.

The hospitable home of Bro. H. W. Pankey and family received us, where we enjoyed the stay in the midst of the groves, orchards, fields, and gardens of southern California. Truly it is a wonderland; sand, gravel, dust, with soil, all the detritus from the mountains borne into the valleys and slopes from the mountains by winter's rains, rushing rivers, and raging floods, by which vegetation is made to crown the land in beauty with abundance.

Two meetings at the chapel at Garden Grove, one in the morning of the 11th of August, by Bro. Luff; one, at night by President Joseph Smith, as announced by Bro. Albert Carmichael; the confirmation of three at the morning service; the baptism of one Sr. Levi Sparks, the wife of the son of Bro. G. W. Sparks, and her confirmation at night gave variety and zest to one of the pleasantest and most delightful days of the visit thus far. Bro. Carmichael took care of the editor, while Bro. Luff traversed the road to and from the chapel with Bro. Pankey's folks, a matter of four miles.

What a dusty ride that was when, after the evening sermon was done, and the loving good-byes said the preachers riding together followed a phanto-like carriage through a whitish cloud of California soil on the wings of an evening breeze. What a relief it was to turn away from the dusty road into the harder ways which led to the quiet home where dwells Bro. Pankey's family of gospel adherents and workers.

We met here a number of the old time Saints of Gospel Swamp, Sr. Mills, widow of Bro. Daniel S. Mills, Bro. G. W. Sparks, now past eighty years of age, Sr. Walker, Bro. P. Betts, Remington, Stephen Penfold, Damron, Best, and some whose names we do not recall. We were glad to see their honest faces again and feel that the old fire still burned in the midst. Long may the Saints of Garden Grove and Santa Ana dwell in the peace of the truth!

Time waits for neither time nor the purposes of men. So on the 12th, we left our friends for Los Angeles, the Tehachapi Pass, and San Francisco. At Los Angeles we were met by Brn. VanFleet, Purfürst, T. W. Williams, and William Schade. The wait soon passed and the close of the day saw us over the mountains and out on the plains north of the range. Bro. Robert T. Cooper, a conductor on tourist trains between Chicago and Los Angeles, invited us into his car. kindly pointed out the sites of note along the line, including the now famous loop where the iron road turns and crosses under itself after skirting completely around a hill which interposed itself against the grade. It is said to have been the conception and work of a young engineer who by this feat of engineering overcame the difficulty of the way and made himself a name at the same time. It is a fair instance of what audacity and skill can do. By the kindness of Bro. Cooper the preachers enjoyed a berth in a tourist car in which they passed the night in a degree of comfort. Those of the Saints who may desire to adopt the tourist style of travel between Chicago and Southern California will do well to secure passage with Bro. Cooper. He leaves Chicago and Los Angeles on alternate Sundays, over the Burlington system. For particulars he may be addressed at No. 211 Clark street, Chicago, Illinois.

We arrived at San Francisco on the 13th, to find the city in the throes of an industrial strike, the issue of which at present writing, August 22, is doubtful.

Bro. Luff went on to Oregon to be at a reunion at or near Bandon; the Editor remained in the city.

Our impressions of the stay in Southern California are pleasant. What good we did we do not know.

PRESS REPORTS.

Of late our attention has been called to a number of instances where the work of the Reorganization has been discussed in the press of the country.

Elders U. W. Greene and D. A. Anderson have been holding services in Connecticut, and on August 14 the Stamford Telegram devoted about one and one third columns to a description of the work of Brn. Greene and Anderson. The Telegram's reporter was favorably impressed with what he saw and heard at the services. He was surprised to learn that there was so marked a difference between the Reorganization and the Utah church. After giving the epitome of our faith, the Telegram states:

The ministers are not working under cover but fearlessly come out and invite the ministers of any other organization to occupy their tabernacle one half of the time to expose their errors if they can find them.

These people report excellent attendance and interest at every meeting. And on Sunday night their tabernacle would not accommodate all who came to hear.

In the Des Moines Daily News of August 12, Bro. S. K. Sorensen has an article which forcefully sets forth the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah one. A clear statement of our position on the marriage question is made, as well as a short summary of our belief in gen-Bro. Sorensen's article closes eral. thus:

We thus publicly and on behalf of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints of Des Moines and on behalf of our fellow believers throughout the world, disavow any affiliation or denominational relation with what is termed the Utah Mormon Church, and pledge ourselves duty bound by the law of God and the law of the land to teach nothing but the pure and unadulterated principles of the doctrine of Christ and to use our utmost endeavors to see that our church members make a practical applica-tion of the same to their lives.

On August 16 the Philadelphia Record devotes about one third of a column to a description of our new church building on Front and Ontario streets and giving the substance of an interview had by the Record's reporter and Bro. W. E. LaRue. Bro. LaRue quite forcefully emphasized the fact that there was a vast difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah institution. Among other things he is reported as saying:

"We have been grossly misrepresented even here in Philadelphia. My first duty will be to convince all fair-minded persons of all churches that we, the 'reorganized Latterday Saints,' have no sympathy with the polygamists of the Brigham Young church. We have connected with our church in this city some eminently respectable business men. It is only fair to them to put this church right before the public."

On August 17 the Philadelphia Press speaks of our people, gives a cut of the building and a portrait of Bro. LaRue. And on the 19th the Inquirer, of the same city, devotes about onehalf column to a short description of the new church building, and an interview with Bro. LaRue, part of which is as follows:

The opening question put to the elder was How do Philadelphia women take to Mormonism?

For an instant the elder almost allowed himself to become enraged. "Mormonism! Mormonism!" he exclaimed. "Don't use that word, for it is associated in the minds of people with polygamy. The Book of Mormon does not teach polygamy. Plural marriages form no part of the faith of the Latter Day Saints Polygamy was introduced into the Mormon church by Brigham Young in August, 1852, eight years after the death of Joseph Smith.

"Eight years later the church was reorganized and the Latter Day Saints now have 50,000 members in all parts of the world. have nothing in common with Utah Mormons more than any other denomination. we do as the other churches do, send missionaries among them to convert them from their evil ways. In justice to the honorable men and women who follow the teachings of Joseph Smith and reject the false doctrines of Brigham Young this distinction should be made."

"Again, I want to emphasize that the Book of Mormon does not teach polygamy. I can summarize our faith in six short principles: "1. Faith in God and in his Son, Jesus 12. Repentance from sin.13 Baptism by immersion for the remismission of sins.

"4 The laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

"5. The literal resurrection of the body. "6 Eternal judgment.

"When that is said it is all said. In fact, we claim to represent primitive Christianity."

"Is the church growing?"
"Yes, rapidly; but the word Mormon is the hardest word we have to contend with. People associate it with polygamy, and all the evils that followed the false teachings of Brigham Young. This church has never been officially known as the Mormon Church, but is called such in derision, just as the early Christians were called Nazarenes."

MORMON DEFINED BY A CHICAGO FOITOR.

The follow by Rev. C. F. Eltzholtz, editor Den Christelige Talsmand, Chicago, Illinois, appeared in the Northwestern Christian Advocate for April 17, 1901:

MORMON-A FEMALE DEMON.

Joseph Smith was the founder of Mormonism. As he is represented as an illiterate person, he could never have organized this crafty system alone. But "early in the sum-mer of 1827 a 'mysterious stranger' seeks admittance to Joseph Smith's cabin. The conferences of the two are most private! This person, whose coming immediately preceded a new departure in the faith, was Sidney Rigdon, a back-sliding clergyman, at this time a Campbellite preacher in Mentor, Ohio. Now we have 'a literary genius behind the screen.'" It is supposed that Rigdon changed Spaulding's manuscript romance, called "The Manuscript Found," and adapted it to Smith's and his own ideas and the result was the "Book of Mormon"

Sidney Rigdon is described as a literary genius; he was "gifted with fluency of speech and pleasing address;" he was "versatile in his gifts, had a taste for theological and scientific discussions;" he was eloquent, shrewd, wily and unprincipled. "Soon after his appearance on the stage, Mormonism begins to assume a local habitation and a name.

As the new system was organized and named shortly after Rigdon's visit to Smith, it is most likely that this educated but unprincipled man suggested "Mormon," a Greek name, for the hero of the book which they claimed had been translated from the golden plates. The whole system is called Mormonism after him. Knowing the meaning of "Mormon," Mr. Rigdon must have proposed this shocking name as a joke on the illiterate Joseph Smith. I call it a shocking name because a literal translation of "Mormon" is: A female demon, a scarecrow, a phantom, an illusion. But I ought not to find fault with that significant name. It is a very suggestive name. The founders of this system must have been of the opinion that this was the most appropriate name they could find for their hero. The "Book of Mormon" must therefore, be translated: The "Book of a Female Demon." The reader will please translate Mormonism.

How hard it seems to be for our Christian friends to drop the "Spalding Romance" theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon. It has been clearly proven that Rigdon did not meet Joseph Smith until after the Book of Mormon in print; yet despite this fact those who are wont to prove the book a fraud try to make the Spalding-Rigdon-Smith combination account for the book's appearance. Here is a Chicago editor displaying his ignorance of the real facts of the case. He probably has not yet learned that Spalding's "Manuscript Found" has been in the library of Oberlin College, Ohio, for some years, and that it bears no resemblance to the matter in the Book of Mormon.

Mr. Eltzholtz in his efforts to throw mud even mixes himself on the origin of the word Mormon. But we presume he is perfectly satisfied with his disposal of the matter, and has dropped all farther investigation. Nevertheless, the believers in the Book of Mormon continue to grow in numbers, and will in spite of such opposition and mud throwing.

We have not the least doubt that the Chicago editor believes that the Book of Mormon really teaches the doctrine of polygamy. Of course he has not read the work; yet he gives information as glibly as you please.

SCHROEDER THROWS MORE MUD.

The ninth number of Lucifer's Lantern, a spasmodic periodical published by A. T. Schroeder, of Salt Lake City, Utah, has made its appearance, laden with its usual load of filth and dirt to besmirch the character of Joseph Smith the Martyr. He first tries to show by a letter dated August 3, 1887, and signed by E. E. Baldwin, that "Mormonism" really originated in a scheme of a "crowd of young men under the leadership of Smith" to perpetrate a "practical joke to test the gullibility of the people." Mr. Baldwin's uncle was "in it as big as any of them," and it was through this channel that the whole story comes out.

The boys dug a pit on the side of a nearby hill, and "fixed stones in it." This was at the place where Smith claimed to have dug up the golden plates. "The book itself," according to Mr. Baldwin, was a box, made by one of the boys who was a cabinet maker, which was made exactly in the shape of a large Bible, with a sliding door in one end, and covered with cloth after being tightly filled with Smith gave out that it could be handled by common people without harm, but looked upon only by himself, because of its sacredness. Smith continued in this way for some time, then began to solicit "money and material aid." Some of the "boys" then told him it was meant only for a joke; but Smith informed them he saw money in the scheme and was going to make some money out of it, and if they wished to withdraw, to do so and "keep their mouths shut, which they did.'

This "uncle" died some years previous to 1867; but Mr. Baldwin states that his uncle and Smith "were good friends until the death of the latter."

The second article in the Lantern has for its object to prove Joseph Smith to have been an abortionist. The article states Smith had at least eighty wives, then says:

Notwithstanding this (and here is the remarkable feature) there never has been a single known child of the Prophet by any of his scores of polygamous wives.

The writer then endeavors to prove that Joseph Smith was a "wholesale abortionist."

The third and last article is an attempt to show that the leaders of the church from before the beginning of "Mormonism until the death of Brigham Young" were "reproached with complicity in the crime of counterfeiting the money of the realm."

ANOTHER VERSION OF THE BOOK OF MORMON ORIGIN.

The following appeared in the Denver Times for August 18:

SHE SAYS JOE SMITH REALLY "SWIPED" HIS MORMON BIBLE.

According to Mrs. Diadama Chittenden of Utica, Mo., Joseph Smith "swiped" the Mormon "bible," which, he claimed, was "revealed" to him. While this is not a new charge by any means, Mrs. Chittenden tells an interesting story in connection with it.

Mrs. Chittenden is now 87 years old. She was born in Canada and her maiden name was Whitney. In 1852 she was married to R M. Chittenden, and in 1860 the couple went to Utica, Mo., where she ever since has resided. Her husband engaged in the mercantile business, and she did much of the buying, making long trips on horseback to Lexington, Quincy and other points.

Mrs. Chittenden is hale and hearty and of sound mind today. One of her most vivid memories of the early 60s is of the origin of the Mormon "Bible," which she declares was never revealed to Joseph Smith nor written by him, but which he stole from a millwright named Spafford, of Salem (now Conneaut), Ashtabula county, Ohio. Smith was in the employ of Spafford, who was a sort of overseer or superintendent for Squire Wright of Salem. One of Spafford's hobbies was to descant upon the Bible. He contended that he could compose chapters and read them alternately with chapters from the Good Book and that none who heard them could tell the original from the imitation.

On a wager, Spafford, so Mrs. Chittenden says, prepared a number of chapters of his own composition in imitation of the Bible and they were read to a select party of his acquaintances. None of these was able to distinguish the imitation from the real, or to tell which had been written by Spafford and which had not. Joseph Smith was among those present at the test, Mrs. Chittenden says, and he was an attentive listener at the reading and at others given afterward by Spafford to exercise his hobby.

Spafford preserved the characters he wrote with the idea of one day publishing a treatise on his hobby. Death prevented the carrying out of this plan, and when his executors came to search for his manuscripts they had each and every one of them disappeared.

It was some years after Spafford's death that the Mormon "bible," said to have been "revealed" to Joseph Smith, appeared. A copy of the work found its way to Salem and into the possession of Squire Wright, Spafford's employer. Surprised at its contents, he called two other friends of Spafford, a Dr. Hart and one Zaph Lake, into consultation on "Smith's bible," and after a thorough examination they made an affidavit to the effect that the greater part of the Mormon book was made up of chapters written for his own amusement by Millwright Spafford. Mrs. Chittenden is of the impression that the affidavit was either published by or offered for publication to the Salem Reporter, a paper long since out of print.

THE following from the Painesville, Ohio, Republican for August 15 will be of interest to many of our readers:

Elder James Kelley left Tuesday for his mission. Mr. Kelley is a former Kirtland boy, having been reared here until three years ago he entered Graceland College in Lamoni, Iowa, having also had some experience in the Philippine Islands, in that time. He starts on his ministerial work with the very best wishes of his friends, who all hope for his success.

HERE is something which will be of interest to Sunday school workers. It is from the Union Gospel News, issue of August 22:

FROM A PROMINENT DAILY PAPER.

New York, April 20.—A break seems at last to have come in the Sunday school international lesson scheme. Since Tuesday of this week Sunday school experts representing all religious bodies in the United States and Canada and all lesson experts have been in conference in this city.

For many years the demands upon the in-

For many years the demands upon the international committee to change the scheme have been many, but since 1872 the universality of the lessons has been continuous, and now about 12,000,000 pupils and teachers study these lessons weekly. The break came recently, when the international committee considered favorably two propositions made by the Sunday School Editorial Association, as follows:

First—We favor a separate course of lessons for one year for beginners in Bible study, of six years old and under, and we will heartily cooperate with your committee in making a success of such series as you may propose.

Second—From our knowledge of the field boys was old and the demands of many Bible students we believe that there should be prepared a two to the bond.

years' course of study at least, that should be topical and historical, for adult or senior classes. We think the times ripe for such a course, and request your committee to provide the same in such way as will not interfere with the present international plan.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. R. C. Evans writes from London, Canada, August 19:

Just arrived home. Was away twenty-one days and preached twenty-eight sermons and organized one branch. Baptized several, and oth rs will obey soon. Brn. Shields and Mortimer and others have done splendid work in Bruce county, and their steady, wise, and prudent work gives good fruit.

Bro. W. H. Kelley, under date of August 18, writes from Temple, Ohio:

I am booked for Collinwood for Sunday. Probably here in the evening.

Bro. Abner Lloyd writes from Eldorado Springs, Missouri, August 8:

The work in this part of the heritage of God is still alive. Some are investigating the claims of the church, and have expressed desire to unite with us. Some sickness, and quite a number of deaths. We hold regular services now in our own chapel at Eldorado Springs, and would give a cordial invitation to the elders passing on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad to stop and render us assistance. May God bless the HERALD, which is a welcome guest in our home. How any family of Saints can do without it is a mystery.

Bro. Levi Gamet writes from Battle Creek, Nebraska, August 19:

I am operating the district tent at this place at present with but moderate interest; yet I hope some good is being done by letting the people know we are not identical with Utah "Mormons." Some of the Utah elders have been laboring hereabout, having their headquarters in town. Both of the papers here kindly gave notice of my meetings. I want to remain through this week, and possibly longer. Last night my talk was on the marriage relation, in which I showed the attitude of the church books on the question of polygamy. The talk was well received by those present. One of the Utah elders was present, and I offered him an opportunity to reply at the close, but he did not choose to accent.

Bro. E. F. Shupe writes from Denver, Colorado, August 19:

Our concert for the piano fund for the Religio, Thursday, the 8th inst., was fairly successful in a financial way. At the close Bro. J. W. Gilbert was presented with a beautiful gold watch and chain, the gift of the Denver Saints in appreciation of his untiring efforts to improve on the music for our services. It was a complete surprise to him. Bro. and Sr. Gilbert left on Thursday for their mission field, the South Sea Islands. We shall miss them very much, especially in our song service.

Bro. J. B. Roush was called on to preach the funeral sermon of Bro. Leonard Parsons at Haigler, Nebraska, Sunday, the 18th. He died quite suddenly. He was formerly from Rock Creek branch, Illinois.

PERFECTION.

Perfection or personal righteousness should be one of the characteristics attributable to the Saints of God: hence the apostle says, "Let us go on to perfection." Whether this condition is attainable or not in this life, in view of present conditions, is perhaps a question to be solved by future developments, pending our own individual doings.

It is evident from the statement of Paul in Hebrews 7:11 that perfection could not be reached under the Levitical priesthood; hence the priesthood was changed, which change also necessitated a change in the law.

For the law [the Mosaic law] having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices, which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect.—Heb. 10: 1.

And again:

For if the first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for a second.—Heb. 8: 7.

It is evident from the foregoing that the Lord intended perfection should be reached by the people, otherwise there would have been no use of changing the priesthood and the law in order to bring in a more perfect system through which "the comers thereunto" might be made perfect. Now inasmuch as an imperfect law could not bring about perfection to the people of God, it is but natural to infer that a perfect law But the question arises, would. in view of the fact that so many of the present generation do not recognize any priesthood authority, Can perfection or righteousness be attained to without the priesthood? The world answers, Yes. And I am And I am sometimes inclined to believe that the people of God answer yes also, if not just in words then in their actions. We understand that priesthood authority is delegated authority from God to officiate in his name among men, and that it behooves each one thus delegated to learn his duty and so act and speak before God and men that he may prove himself a wise and acceptable minister for Christ and entitled to the respect and confidence of God's people, that he might win souls to Christ and seek to bring the Saints to a state of perfection, as we so often quote to the world from the words of Paul, that God gave certain officers to the church for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, etc.

If God has thus placed in his church certain officers through whose ministrations perfection should be obtained by the Saints, how then can perfection be obtained without them any more than the physical organism of man could remain in a state of perfection by taking away the most essential members of the body, through which it is nourished and supplied with that degree of vitality necessary to bring about a perfectly healthy condition and growth?

If God has inaugurated a perfect law, by which the comers thereunto might be made perfect, is it any fault of his if the comers thereunto are not made perfect? If his ministers whom he has placed in his church are in line of their duty, teaching both by precept and example the words of eternal life, is it any fault of theirs that perfection is not attained?

Perfection or personal righteousness can never be obtained without close application of the pure principles of the doctrine of Christ to our daily lives; and if his word is thus reflected in our lives it will bring about the condition of perfection, without which no one can see God.

It is an easy matter, or at least seems so, for the people of God to lose sight of their individual responsibilities and duties toward God, thinking that when they have once tered the first principles of the gospel that is all there is to it, not considering the deeper significance attached thereto of a godly and holy life. Not understanding that once dead to sin and buried with Christ in baptism. means always dead to sin, sin no more to be resuscitated, but must walk in newness of life, taking the Holy Spirit for their guide. Not understanding that the acceptance of the gospel requires a sanctification or a setting apart of one's self to the service of God and an entire separation from all worldly sins and pleasures. Hence the apostle says:

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever.—I John 2: 15-17.

By not giving heed to these instructions, but allowing ourselves to be carried with the stream, the giddy and the gay, and not separating ourselves from such we lose the Spirit of God, if we ever had it, and allow ourselves to be overcome by the spirit of indifference and fault-finding, which is so prevalent in the world now, and is one of the most dangerous conditions that mankind can enter into, to the happiness and progress of human success; and what is true in the world is also true in the church. And if the writer is not greatly mistaken, that same spirit has also found lodgment in the church among the people of God; and wherever it finds a welcome there it will accomplish its disastrous results, and should be carefully guarded against, that we enter not into that sleepy condition which is spoken of in the parable of the ten virgins in which His church will be found when he comes. It begets within the individual who cherishes it a condition of indifference and carelessness in respect to our duties toward our heavenly Father. It causes us to neglect our family worship to call together our household at regular appointed times for a season of prayer and thanksgiving for his manifold blessings and kind watchcare over us from day to day, not realizing that it is in him we live and move and have our being, thus neglecting to set an example before the young which would in after years prove an anchor to them, and keep them from the evils of the world when they are made to reflect on the happy hours of childhood's days, when father and mother with their little ones would bow the knee around the family altar, in praise and thanksgiving to him who has given us life and preserves it. But not having this example placed before them, nor acquired the habit themselves, they go out into the world and mingle with the influences abroad in the world, which are often enticing and contaminating in their character, and calculated to lead the young astray from the path of virtue and true holiness; and who is responsible? If we manifested more perfection in this direction, many a sad mistake might be averted in life, caused by a neglect of duty. The home is or should be the fountain and source of all present as well as future happiness and progress in this latterday work and from it, it should radiate to others, that the home religion may be felt in all social and public life, and the sins and corruption which exist today in social as well as in public life would then not be found. amount of excuse or faultfinding that others are not doing their duty or doing as they ought to will in any sense justify us and license us to do likewise, thus neglecting our duties on which so much depends. We need more home religion, more devotion, more of a godly zeal to stimulate us to greater activity, to unity of action, and to shun all contention and strife for mastery and position, which are foreign and contrary to the Spirit of God, but rather in honor preferring one another. We need a religion that will prompt us to do good to all men, but more especially the household of faith; one which will prompt us to think right, have pure thoughts, speak right, and do right.

The Master says:

Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall inherit the earth.

These are conditions which must precede and lead up to the gathering of God's people and prepare the way for the establishment of Zion, which is the pure in heart; and the sooner this condition is brought about by individuals in regard to their own personal self the sooner we will be in a condition as a body to be gathered home to Zion. But before this individual work is accomplished to me it seems folly to talk about gathering.

This condition, I believe, is one which will be brought about through home influences, which is the source from which that which is pure and good should proceed, to be a blessing to others; and inasmuch as we comply with the law of God in this direction, we become perfect to that extent, and enter, as it were, upon the first stepping stone to perfection.

The Lord has commanded to cease from all laughter, from all lustful desires, from all pride and lightmindedness, and from all wicked doings; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early that your bodies and minds may be invigorated.

These are instructions which God's people ought not to ignore. How can we ever expect to become perfect unless we apply to our lives those things which are written, and manifest in our lives that perfection which will come to us as a natural result of yielding obedience to a perfect law.

We are commanded not to use tobacco, as it is not good for man. If that commandment is fully complied with, does it not make the one who to the fullest extent complies with it a perfect man in that respect? tainly. Let us practice perfection in all things, and thus from step to step go on to perfection. It may not be reached in a day, nor a month, nor a year; but it takes a lifetime to overcome and conquer the evils set before us, and a daily study of the direction which our frail bark must take over the tempestuous sea of life, until we shall finally enter that perfect condition, where nothing imperfect shall enter. But if we allow ourselves to grow cold and indifferent, and thus neglect to discipline ourselves in right doings, we shall never be able to reach perfection, as it can only be attained by a close adherence and application of God's perfect law to our lives.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching.—Heb. 10:23-25.

THE CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS.

Reading and appreciating Bro. Chase's article in a late HERALD under the above caption, I thought perhaps I might be permitted to express my views on the same subject. There can certainly be no harm in exchanging opinions regarding various subjects mentioned in the word of God.

I have hitherto believed that the woman of Revelation 12th chapter represented the church of Jesus Christ, and the man child the kingdom or authority, found in that church. The reason why it was represented by a man child, I have understood to be that it was not present in the fullness of divine power.

The Doctrine and Covenants defines "kingdom" as "the keys of the church:"

T : 64 ....

Lift up your hearts and rejoice, for unto you the kingdom, or in other words, the keys of the church, have been given.—42: 18.

The woman is represented as being with child and ready to be delivered.

She is delivered of the man child which is taken to God. The kingdom, or keys of the church, is removed from the earth. This delivery or separation, then, has reference not to the time of the establishing of the church and kingdom of God upon the earth, but to the time when they separated, the one going to God, the other into the wilderness—became disorganized, dissolved, and mixed with the world. John was told to write the things which he had seen, "and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." (Rev. 1:19.)

In my opinion the woman of Revelation 17th chapter has no connection with the woman of Revelation 12th

The "remnant of her seed," in my opinion, refers to those honest ones, in the past and the present, who are found among all parties, and who have worshiped God according to the best light possessed. Such may in a sense be considered the wheat, and also the church.

Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest.—John 4:35.

I will that all men shall repent, for all are under sin, except them which I have reserved unto myself, holy men that ye know not of.—D. and C., sec. 49, par. 2.

Bro. Chase truly says that the priesthood or authority brought forth the church. When the separation of the kingdom and the church took place, as foreshadowed in Revelation 12:5, the church dissolved and went into the wilderness. In the latter days, when the church shall be separated from the world—come out of the wilderness (Rev. 18:4), and become an organized body (Rev. 19:7, 8), it will be the work of the kingdom, recommitted to men on the earth, to effect this (Dan. 2:44).

The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth.—D. C. sec 65, par. 1.

In this, the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness -5:3.

And verily, verily I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness: . . . the field is white already to harvest —32: 2.

The church is coming out of the wilderness; and may she soon become "clear as the moon and fair as the sun and terrible as an army with banners."

A FEW THOUGHTS ON DANIEL 2:44.

So much has been written about Daniel and his prophetic kingdom that I feel a little hesitant in approaching the subject. However, I shall do so for no other desire than to elicit truth.

In HERALD for July 31 the position is taken that the kingdom referred to in Daniel 2:44 is the United States government; and not only by the author of the article, but by some of the prominent men of the church. They may be correct in their views, but I shall need stronger proof than has been hitherto offered for such a weighty subject before I can accept it.

That the "God of heaven" had something to do with the formation of this government, and through its influence many nations have changed and modified their laws, we have nothing to offer to the contrary; but that the United States is the kingdom destined to break in pieces all other nations we shall offer a few points in rebuttal.

In order to more fully understand verse 44 let us carefully read verses 34 and 35:

Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

It will be observed that the stone was to smite the iron (Roman Empire), the brass (Grecian Empire), the silver (Medo-Persian Empire), the gold (Babylonian Empire). It would be utterly impossible for the United States government to attack these empires, for they have ceased to exist long ago as such. And furthermore the little stone is to fill "the whole earth." The 34th and 35th verses are a key to the 44th verse.

In a grand panoramic view Nebuchadnezzar beheld the rise and fall of the nations of the world. In his dream he was shown how weak and frail the work of man is, how great we are in our own estimation, but how very little we are in the sight of God. After the rise and fall of all these nations the God of heaven (in contrast with the frail works of man) is going to set up a kingdom which is destined to rule the whole earth.

I am unable to find a scintilla of proof that the United States, or any other secular kingdom or government is going to fill the whole earth; but I find abundant proof that the kingdom of Jesus Christ is. In evidence of this read the seventh chapter. This should do away with the idea that the kingdom referred to in 2:44 is any earthly government.

You will notice here that Daniel is permitted to see the same changes in the world's history as Nebuchadnezzar, only under different symbols; and at the end of this prophetic history of unfolded events he beheld the "saints of the Most High" in full possession of a kingdom. Now the query, Is this the government of the United States, or Christ's triumphant kingdom? For proof of the latter read the following:

But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever.—Daniel 7:18

Until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.—Daniel 7:22.

sessed the kingdom.—Daniel 7: 22.

And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.—Daniel 7: 27.

Does not the kingdom of the seventh chapter agree precisely with the one in the second? "Last for ever;" "Never be destroyed;" "All other nations serve and obey." This does not seem to be an earthly government. The "everlasting kingdom" referred to in the seventh chapter is the same as the one in the second, because it is the culmination of the same prophetic view, only one view is of metallics and the other of quadrupeds.

The position we take beautifully harmonizes with the following scriptures:

They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.—Isaiah 11:9.

For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea — Hah 2:14 waters cover the sea.—Hab. 2:14.

And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one.—Zech. 14:9.

And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.—
Rev. 5:10.

The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.—Revelation 11:15

Remember the rule laid down by Wm. Blackstone:

Whenever any document, clause, sentence, or paragraph is ambiguous or capable of contrary meaning, we are to ascertain whether the same matter is clearly mentioned in other places of said document and explain what seems doubtful by what is clear.

This is an excellent rule by which we can determine the correctness of obscure passages by those which are clearly stated. Daniel 2: 44 may be a little ambiguous, but by turning on the light gleaned from chapter 7 and many others we see more clearly. A stone, in prophecy, often refers to Christ and his work, but in no instance can I find where it refers to earthly governments.

Christ is called the "tried stone and precious:"

The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner.—Matt. 21: 42

Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone — Eph. 2: 20.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken.—Matt. 21: 44.

Some have labored to prove that the stone in verse 45 was a different thing than the kingdom in verse 44; but by comparing the dream in verse 34, with the interpretation in verse 44 it will plainly be seen they are the selfsame thing. One says, "shall break in pieces," the other, "and brake them to pieces." The only difference is in the grammatical construction.

Much importance is attached to the word forasmuch. It is a conjunction, and connects very closely the 44th and 45th verses and continues the same thought introduced in verse 44. Daniel is simply giving the literal interpretation of the figure in Nebuchadnezzar's dream.

As proof that the little stone was only a figure of the kingdom of Christ to be established in the last days, read in Doctrine and Covenants section 65:

The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth.

This is evidence that instead of the United States going to fill the whole earth, it is the kingdom of Jesus Christ, as typified by the "little stone."

Wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth, that thy enemies may be subdued; for thine is the honor, power, and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

The last part of this revelation proves conclusively that it is the kingdom of God that is to "break in pieces" or "subdue" all other powers.

Subdue. To conquer by force or the exertion of superior power, and bring into permanent subjection, to reduce under dominion, to crush, to sink, to overpower.—Webster.

With this definition and the object of the kingdom of God, as declared in the revelation just quoted, before us it is quite clear as to the kind of a kingdom Daniel referred to.

Section 98, paragraph 12 is often quoted in support of the theory that this government is destined to subdue all other governments of the earth, but there is not a single phrase to warrant such a conclusion. It is telling those who were scattered by their enemies to "importune for redress," encouraging them to take this step because the Constitution had been established with divine favor, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles, that every man may act in doctrine, and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto them, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment. Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.

I sum up these thoughts or follows: God' great work in the last days, the establishing of his kingdom, universal dominion and greatness, is presented to Nebuchadnezzar in the figure of the little stone. This is in keeping with God's method of dealing with great events. The kingdom set up in the days of Christ was symbolized by a grain of corn and a little grain of mustard seed. The lesson Christ intends to teach in these symbols is, The great works of God have small beginnings, and we should not get discouraged because there are only a handful to commence the great works, but be patient and work on, trusting God, and finally that small beginning, like the "little stone," will fill the whole earth.

A stone was a very common figure employed by the writers in those days to illustrate the solidity and firmness of the works of God, hence the kingdom to be set up in these last days was presented to Nebuchednezzar. Kindly, hopefully, cheerfully yours,

PALMER, Pa., Aug. 6, 1901.

THIRTY-FOUR DAYS IN THE SAND-HILLS OF NEBRASKA.

F. J. EBELING.

On the evening of the 6th ultimo, as per reference in my last letter, in a western buggy (lumber wagon), we left North Platte at 6:30 p. m. for a forty mile journey through Nebraska sand-hills, prefering night travel in view of the intensity of the heat,—with the setting of the sun a desirable contrast to the heat of the day, as the thermometer was past 90°, with, to speak mildly, not a freezing wind. Then, too, with the shades of evening the quantity of flies was diminished compared with the numbers that confront one during the day. But another intrusive, pestilential (to my finite mind useless) animal, known as the mosquito, was making ready for an attack on myself and traveling companions who, I venture to say, never injured one of these offensive creatures. The pestiferous animals made an unprovoked, uncivil attack, and we had to submit to their intrusion, bites, etc. Whether borne with Christian fortitude and patience,well, I do not pause to say; but we stood our ground. I might, however, claim the exhibition of some, especially so as there sprung up a delightful breeze and drove these unceremonious brutes away, so that we could neither hear their hum nor feel their touch; and with the cool breeze we felt joyous, like some other folks you know, O. K., when matters develop to please them. The pale rays of the moon were cheering.

At 2 a. m. halted, releasing horses from the buggy so that they were free, save that one of the two had a pair of hobbles at tached to his ankles. I asked Bro. John Godfrey why he hobbled one and not the other. He said that one did not need hobbling, it would be content to feed in close proximity to the buggy, was docile and easily caught; but were he not to hobble this one it would start towards home, in which event this otherwise docile creature would be decoyed to follow the bad example, and we should be left in the lurch. I asked him if it was not possible to slip those hobbles, and if so, how should we fare if that horse slipped his hobbles and both scampered off. "Why, we should be left" he replied, "but the hobbles fit well, no danger." So I thought the hobbled horse acted decent because he had to, therefore was not entitled to credit for the exhibition of decency. If I should be orderly, after I had resorted to every known deceptive scheme to be disorderly, which schemes had proved futile, then I submit perforce of circumstances, would that be creditable?

But while the animals were safely feeding, we availed ourselves of the opportunity of consuming a little lunch, under the pale rays of the moon, our cheeks being made cool by the refreshing breeze sweeping from behind and between the sand-hills. It seemed a coveted rest from the moving and fatigue in fighting flies and sweltering under a scorching sun. Thus in life we find one position more trying than another. To meet these vicissitudes am I evincing a resignation commensurate with a spiritual rectitude, attributable to a love of righteousness, truth, and equality? is to me a question of questions. For if in the strictest sense of the word we fail to make religion a matter of conscience, we may find ourselves, ere we are aware of it, drifting from the God given mooring.

But after a needed rest and refreshment for man and beast we were again moving toward the objective point, reaching Father Godfrey's residence on July 7, seven a. m. I had the pleasure of baptizing Father Godfrey and wife, four or five of his sons, a daughter and her husband, in 1893, at Cottonwood, Nebraska, from which point they emigrated to Missouri, thence to their present home in Mc-Pherson county, Nebraska, in the sand hills.

At Father Godfrey's, Tryon, South Tryon, and Father Bassett's preached thirty-one sermons, tarrying in the sand-hills of Nebraska thirty-five days. Baptized one at South Tryon, July 21. August 11, baptized Father Bassett, his youngest son and wife. Sr. Bassett was baptized years ago at Fremont, Iowa, and has retained her integrity. Father Bassett moved to the sand hills thirteen years ago, four of his sons with their families in the same locality. Father Bassett read the Book of Mormon before migrating to the sand-hills. He is a reader and thinker, quite willing to exchange views, opportunity offering, but he is not an intrusionist. I held thirteen meetings at his private residence; attendance on Sunday quite fair; but is a busy time with them, putting up hay, for the sand hills is a stock country and hay is made and put up by the hundreds and thousands of tons, and some go off a distance ten or twelve miles, so there is no possible show for week night meetings for a month to come.

The effects of the drought are visible on potatoes and other vegetables. Corn is almost a total failure in some parts, but the grass survives the drouth quite well. The water in those parts I visited was bountiful and good, very good. I never dreamed of riding over land owned by one company of cattle dealers to the extent of ten miles square in the home of the brave and the land of the free; but it is said to be the case in the sand-hills.

I was driven on August 12 by a grandson of Father Bassett, son of John Bassett, a distance of thirty miles to Whitman, a railroad point, and we passed through twelve gates, so that indicates a distance of thirty miles in length held as pastures by a dozen parties. Our course from Father Bassett's was north and a little west, so how far this thirty miles of land in length extended east and west, deponent saith not:

Well, it is a cattle country, and those settling in these sand hills to get an honest living deserve all they get.

For the benefit of some of the young elders I wish to state that from Whitman depot on the B. & M. to Father Bassett's is thirty miles overland through the sand-hills, passing through some very pleasant valleys, up a steep grade, then down sometimes a steeper grade, then a curve along the foot of a sand-hill, etc., so that one is kept pretty well shook up with sometimes a shake down, if the wind is hushed and the sun shines bright it is kind of warm; if the wind is brisk the nostrils, ears, mouth, and eyes get a very liberal supply of sand, the finest kind. From Bro. Bassett's house to Father Godfrey's is a good thirty miles overland, sand-hills all the way, no cable or electric street railroad tracks, the facilities for conveyance are western buggies (lumber wagons,) possibly a spring wagon, and if young and spry some of the young men might teach you lessons on horseback, riding young lively colts raised in the sandhills.

Four miles from Father Godfrey's you will find another preaching place. Eleven miles further you will strike South Tryon, another preaching place. So you see there are four preaching places within the limits of the beautiful sand hills of Nebraska. And from South Tryon to Father Bassett's will be perhaps a little less than fifty miles. Now who among our brave and unterrified young elders will consent to labor in the sandhills of Nebraska one year on trial, for the good of souls? Who among them can sacrifice home, the pleasure of attending four district conferences in the year, and as many reunions, for the sake of perishing souls in the sand-hills of Nebraska?

The Bassett family think after haying work is done fair congregations might be had. Then when sufficient labor had been done here, there is Whitman and Hyannis that might be visited. But do not cultivate a love of roaming over too much territory. A forty acres of land well cultivated will give better results than a larger area skipped over. Ah yes, form a nucleus. And you may rest assured if you are faithfully prosecuting your mission in a new locality no district conferences, nor reunion will suffer because of your nonattendance. The work receiving the Lord's recognition is that which is authoritatively performed, performed, bringing justification; while sins of omission and commission will bring condemnation, as sure as just deeds bring justification God is not mocked.

The souls of men and women living in the sand-hills are as precious in the sight of God, as those living in marble palaces; and though begrimed with dust in attending to honest employment six days in the week, they can appear as comely and presentable on the seventh day as other folks. I believe it is quite healthy in the sand-hills and the water is excellent.

No, there are no sidewalks, paved streets, no glaring gas or electric lights to dazzle the eye, but then it is generally clear enough after the setting of the sun to see the North Star.

Now do not send in too many applications for this attractive field of labor or think of coming if you think it not possible to stay a year without getting homesick. A peep at the map will show you that McPherson county, Nebraska is but sparsely settled. This will account for points for preaching places being few and far between. In bonds,

THINGS WHICH SEEM ODD.

We know the people of Malad will excuse us for not understanding some things, and will not take offense if we remark, without thought of criticism, on the things which seem odd. They have built here a place of worship—a tabernacle dedicated to holy thingsand it is a splendid monument to the piety and zeal of the people. To us it seems odd that such an edifice. erected for such a purpose, should be turned into a dance hall. We do not mean to say there is anything wrong about it, or anything impious about it, but it seems odd. Some time ago we attended divine service in the tabernacle and were interested and instructed. An atmosphere of sanctity pervaded the place. The congregation was reverential and deeply earnest. Everything tended to make one feel the grandeur and solemnity and mystery of religion. All the surroundings impelled the mind, to higher, purer and nobler thoughts. We believe we felt something of the spirit which possesses the religious in heart when they sit in a consecrated tabernacle and engage in sincere devotions.

Shortly afterwards we returned to the same place, but everything was changed. The tabernacle was dimly lighted, and the stand where sat the elders was occupied by a fiddler and an organist. The pulpit was also occupied, but not by a disciple of the Nazarine. The man in the pulpit cried out: "From 1 to 12 lead on the floor." There was a general stampede across the room, and such scampering and rolicking of heels that we involuntarily shuddered in contemplation of what the outcome of the riot would be. But our fears were put to rest when we observed the beaming good nature on the faces of the rioters. We afterwards learned it was only a joyous "rush" for partners for the dance. Having belonged to a college football team, and knowing something of the advantages of the "flying wedge," we expect some day to become an expert in the "rush" ourself. The dance was performed with uncommon enthusiasm, which led us to infer that the young people had "read" Roosevelt, and were practicing for "the strenuous life." enthusiasm having reached what we considered a very alarming stage, we withdrew to an alcove just outside the door. In this district it seemed all the young men who were not dancing had gathered to hold a council of war or smoke the pipe of peace, we could not tell which. Albeit, there was a great deal of smoke which was not unmixed with elegant profanity. In a few minutes we were able to add a good many new attractions to our somewhat meagre stock of strong language. We think these little councils afford unrivaled opportunities for acquiring a profane education. Here, too, a quite remarkable sort of commerce is carried on, and it interested us more than any other feature of the entertainment. There seemed to be about twenty small boys on the outskirts of the council who spent most of their time flitting in and out of dark corners. Usually they were preceded by three or four members of the council who withdrew for the purpose of holding, as we thought, a caucus or making a committee report. But the only report we heard was a grateful smacking of lips. We determined to make a closer investigation and to that end approached one of the small boys, and inquired as to his functions and official responsibilities. He informed us that he held no office connected with the tabernacle and seldom visited it in the day time, but he was a regular and necessary attendant on dance nights. His duties were that of a trustee for one or several members of the general council, according to his popularity and integrity. We inquired concerning the nature of his trust, when he courteously drew from the depths of his bosom a large black bottle. We thanked him but prosecuted the inquiry no farther. We were afterinformed that the bottle contained a lotion which members of the council immediately apply to their heels after each dance, to cure stone bruise. We thought this a wise provision but were somewhat surprised to learn of the peculiar method by which the lotion is applied. The sufferer from stone bruise puts the mouth of the bottle to his lips, throws his head back, then elevates the bottle until he can draw a bead on the solar system with it. He holds it in that position as long as he can hold his breath. In the meantime the lotion gurgles through the neck of the bottle into the patient's mouth and percolates down through his anatomy until it reaches the stone bruise on his heel. The stone bruise promptly yields to the treatment and the patient smacks his lips and is ready for another dance as soon as his number is called. We never knew before that stone bruise was as prevalent in Malad as it is. It would be a great misfortune if the antidote had remained undiscovered. It seemed odd to us, though, to see much things going on in and about the tabernacle. We cannot say that there is a thing wrong about it, but it looks so odd to one who has seen so little of the world.

DENIES INDIANS ARE FROM ASIA.

The theory that the American continent was entirely populated by way of Bering Strait within the last thousand years, by migrations through a zone of ice, is strongly attacked by Frederick S. Dellenbaugh in his book, "The North Americans of Yesterday" (Putnam's). He offers powerful arguments against that theory and expresses the belief that all the tribes of the Northwest migrated there from the south and southwest, and not within recent geological times from Asia.

Many of his arguments are comparatively new and his theories frequently are at variance with the theories heretofore advanced by archæologists, anthropologists and geologists. The author considers an immigration by way of the Bering Strait improbable. He remarks that peoples do not willingly migrate into frozen regions, and the Bering Strait and Alaska, down to Dixon Entrance were, not many centuries ago, buried under ice and snow. He even doubts that there were Eskimos in Alaska 500 years ago. He considers it absurd to assume that a population came over and passed south to Mexico and Yucatan and even South America, carrying with them their arts, but not exercising them on their long journey. The latter supposition is based upon the fact that no pottery has yet been found between the Yukon and the Humboldt, or even farther south.

NO TRACE OF ASIATIC LANGUAGES.

No authentic trace of any old world language has thus far been found on this continent. The only Asiatic language now known to be allied to an American is that of a branch of the Eskimo family which crossed from the American side within the last 300 years. Judging from the character of the languages of the American Indians, an enormous time must have elapsed since their separation from the rest of the world.

The author disposes of the theory that the American continent was populated by shipwrecked Japanese cast upon the western shores, by pointing to the improbability of the proposition that Japanese ships, which were too fragile to be used for anything but coast trade, should have succeeded to cross the Pacific ocean in any considerable number. A few shipwrecked Japanese, admits the author, may have come in contact with the Indians and given rise to legends of "white and bearded strangers." He admits that the Northmen made the voyage to the American coast, but does not believe that the continent was populated from that source. Of the Lost-Tribes-of-Israel theory he says that it does not deserve a second thought, being too problematical.

DIVERSE LANGUAGES, SIMILAR CUSTOMS.

"A multitude of stock languages," says the author, differing from each other, yet forming a world group by themselves, are found here. The people who speak them, from Panama to the Arctic, are in their habits, cus toms and physical characteristics wonderfully homogenous, yet they appear to exhibit several types that have been molded into a family resemblance by some strange circumstance. Toward Panama some of them attained a considerable degree of progress, but these were not of one special stock, but of diverse stocks. Farther north there was another group attaining to a less but similar kind of progress, and they also were, and are, of diverse stocks. In the Mississippi Valley are evidences of another similar culture group, probably also of diverse stocks, because some of them were allied to or were part of the stocks found there when the whites came. The same general conditions prevailed farther east and a center of development was rapidly forming in New York when it was destroyed by our coming. One of the most widespread stocks, the Shoshonean, or Uto-Aztecan, is composite, containing within it tribes of the highest culture and tribes of the least culture, tribes that were peaceful and tribes that were warlike.'

"It is evident," argues the author, "that culture was no evidence of relationship or the reverse among the Amerind people. By some powerful influence and long association they had, whatever their origin, been molded into one race."

DRIVEN SOUTH BY ICE.

Regarding the nature of that powerful influence the author offers the theory that by the encroachments of the ice and snow during the glacial period on this continent the tribes of North America were gradually driven south towards the isthmus, where, owing to the narrow limits of available territory a congestion of population occurred. The author argues that "civilization is crowding" is "man's effort at self-preservation," and explains the remarkably high degree of culture found in Central America by the congested condition of the population near the isthmus.

Mr. Dellenbaugh is of the opinion that man existed upon the American continent long before the beginning of the glacial period, although he admits that as vet scientific evidence is perhaps not sufficient to prove it. He thinks that the differentiation between the paleolithic and neolithic periods, perhaps applicable and scientifically justified in Europe, does not apply to this country and maintains that stone weapons and implements of the oldest and most primitive type may have been used by one tribe or people, while at the same time some other more advanced tribe or people used more perfect and polished stone weapons and other implements.

"The material evidences concerning the antiquity of man in America, says Mr. Dellenbaugh, "are many, but few are entirely satisfactory. The Calaveras skull and other remains in the auriferous California gravels seem to place him here as early as the tertiary, and this, says Holmes, would make man older on this continent than anywhere else in the world according to present evidence. A rudely chipped arrow head has also been found in another region under some elephant bones. A primitive hearth was discovered in well digging in an old beach of Lake Ontario which dates back to the glacial time. Many specimens of stone implements have been found throughout the land in deposits which appear to be of great age.

HIGHEST CIVILIZATION IN ISTHMUS.

Starting upon the theory that the ice period lasted from ten to twenty thousand years, the author argues that the people most favorably situated-meaning those already living in the temperate lowlands of southern Mexico and Central America, or near enough to fight their way to themreached the highest development of According to the author's culture. estimate the great pre Columbian development took place between the twenty-third degree of northern and the twenty-third degree of southern latitude. The highest civilization was reached by the people between the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and the present upper frontier of Honduras, principally in the crowded lowlands. There, the author says, the tribes developed their chief characteristics, so that by the time the ice began its last recession they had become a homogenous people, with the greatest advancement and the greatest similarities in the region where the population had been densest, with a diminishing scale outward, the tribes farthest from the culture center varying most from the highest culture attained. The tribe on the extreme edge was and is now represented by the Eskimo.

The author expresses the belief that not more than 5,000 years have passed since the ice left the vicinity of the Niagara gorge, and that it is probably not more than a thousand years since its influence was powerful in afecting the climate of all the region southward.—Chicago Tribune, Feb. 3, 1901.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., August 14.

Editors Herald:—We are pushing the work to the front; but the battle is very hot here now. The Methodists had an LL. D. come out last night and lecture on the street to a vast crowd on "Mormonism," and he greatly misrepresented the church. So we will hold a meeting tonight and Bro. J. M. Scott will correct the errors and show up the differences between us and the Utah "Mormons."

I have baptized seven in the last two weeks, and five or six more are nearly ready. On last Sunday I baptized one man from the Utah church; I think more of them will follow soon, for he will be a power. We have some good members who will help this branch very much.

Bro. J. M. Scott is again able to be with me. He is a beloved and faithful servant of God. He is like a father to us all here.

I am sure we are making friends through all the strife that the Methodists and Baptists are raising. I have been warned that my life was threatened, that I must not lie down at night near the open door, and I was in danger while preaching on the street; but none of these things move me. I expect to preach this glorious truth all over this city and country, by the help of God. Interest is increasing all the time. Your brother for the defense of the truth,

J. W. METCALF.

Lypia, Texas, August 15.

Editors Herald:—I left home July 25 bound for Douglas, Texas, where the Northeast Texas and Choctaw Nation district conference commenced on the 26th. Had a good conference indeed; large attendance, and we enjoyed the Spirit of the Master.

Since conference I have been laboring with Bro. E. A. Erwin. Plenty of places in which to preach in this country. I returned yesterday from Dolby Springs, in Bowie county, a health resort, where I spent one day and night. The Holiness people have a large tent there, and have been holding meetings three weeks. Sometimes in their meetings they will shout and halloo; and again they will shout and laugh; and then they will cry and shout. It is a very common thing for them to go off in a trance; and while in that condition see visions. And they always see the Holiness going right into heaven. Paul instructs us to try the spirits. Many spirits have gone forth, and many people are being deceived; but if we keep close to the word of God we need not be deceived. The Lord God has been making himself manifest to the people for six thousand years at intervals, and he has never manifested himself in a way to conflict with the written word; and when a spirit manifests contrary to the written word you may know that it is not of God. The Holiness are vigorously attacking the churches in this part, sanctifying their preachers and getting their members. The Saints have attended their meetings considerably, but not one of them has been shaken. They know how to try the spirits.

Corn crops very short in this part: cotton fairly good. I hope the Lord will bless the people that they may have the necessaries of life and something to help roll the work of God on. Saints of the great Lone Star state (especially), lay aside your bad habits that cost you money and are not profitable to you, and cleanse your bodies as dwelling places for God's Spirit, and subscribe for the church papers, and keep in touch with the work. Let us pray and labor together for the advancement of the work.

Yours for advancement,

E. L. HENSON.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., August 21.

Editors Herald:—We are now in the midst of a very interesting protracted meeting. The eighteenth sermon was preached last night with good interest. The interest in the mission work is growing nicely, and some excellent people are investigating very closely. It delights our hearts to see the children of men coming into the ark of safety.

Yours.

J. M. TERRY.

ROCKWELL CITY, Iowa, August 20. Editors Herald:—Perhaps some would like to know what we are doing in the Galland's Grove district. My report now cannot be a full one, for some of the local brethren have not reported to me yet this conference year. So far as I know the most of the seemingly available brethren are doing all they can; such as J. L. Butterworth, A. R. Crippen, T. F. Jones, and the various branch presidents and officers as far as I have heard.

Those of the missionary force of the district all have been busy, as they have found opportunity. Bro. Kephart is laboring mostly in the extreme north part; and his frequent reports to me show that he is not sleeping, but has opened up the work in a number of new places, which he says he expects to visit again. Look out, Bro. Kephart, or the conference year will be too short.

Bro. C. J. Hunt, our bishop, is looking after the poor, and the widows and orphans of the missionaries, in a financial way, quite frequently reminding the Saints of their duty along this line. In connection with this he assisted N. V. Sheldon in tent meetings at Washta. Bro. Sheldon has been constantly engaged in tent work since the tent was started, and I find him a pleasant colaborer. He feels his weakness in trying to tell the gospel story, and sometimes when it is his turn to preach, especially on Sunday nights, he says: "Bro. Baker, I guess you had bet ter take your Bible tonight." But I have tried to have him to know that he was not along to hold my hat; but that God would stand by us when we feel our weakness. And I never have had to take his place yet. One evening after he had preached perhaps thirty minutes he became very hoarse from a cold, and I filled the time for him.

I have visited Coalville, Mallard, and Deloit in the interests of church and Religio work, and helped what I could in Sunday school work. The rest of the time I have been with the tent. We have just closed a series of tent meetings at Aurelia which lasted over five weeks. Brn. Whiting and Hunt held tent meetings there I think five years ago. I am glad to tell these brethren that they still have warm friends there who speak kindly of them. There is but one member of the church there, whose name is Sr. Pomeroy; but in all my experience I never met with such a warm parting with friends as I did there. The many expressions, such as "God bless you in your work," and "We are so sorry that you are going away," and "I wish you people had an organization here," and "You ought to stay another month," were encouraging. We rented a house, and my wife was with me and we kept house. This provided a place for ye missionaries, and gave us some one to preside at the organ and lead the singing. I am still of the opinion this is the only successful way to run a tent in this district. As a rule where the tent is most needed there are no Saints, or else they are few, and conditions such that they cannot take care of the elders.

At the Pilot Rock branch, the Saints, while they lived from twelve to fifteen miles from the tent, did not forget that the missionaries had to eat; so that they not only prayed but brought an abundance of this world's goods to supply the outer man. May God bless them for their acts of kindness.

Well, we are making our home at Sister Walla's fine home, the only Saint here in a town of a thousand or more. Only one sermon has ever been preached here by our elders, so I am told, and that was by Bro. C. Derry,—the funeral sermon of Sister Walla's husband. What the results of our meetings will be remains to be seen. Sister Walla is doing her part. She has turned her house over to Sister Baker, Daughter Glen, Master Foster, and ye missionaries, while she is waiting on the sick.

The time of the Dow City reunion is nearone month from today. I hope the good Saints and friends are making arrangements to attend. Our grounds and accommodations need no advertising this year; but our grounds are always in the best of condition. Please notice Bro. A. H. Rudd's notice in HERALD of August 7, concerning tents. Do not forget this until it is too late; if you want springs or cots, correspond with him before you get there, and make arrangements shead. Bro. C. E. Butterworth has a notice in HER-ALD of July 31 about railroad rates. Concerning board or lodging write either to Clair Butterworth or J. M. Baker, Dow City. Look out for notice in church papers.

J. M. BAKER.

WHARTON, Ont., August 19.

Editors Herald:-Having just returned last evening from a trip with our mission president, Apostle R. C. Evans, through what is known as the Sauble Falls district, I will try to write you a "brief" of our trip and historical sketch of some of the places visited. And if any of the brethren who have labored in this region (or any Saints who have assisted to make openings) do not get proper credit for their work they will please attribute it to my lack of information, or space, rather than partiality; as I am better acquainted with the circumstances under which some have labored than others. Bro. Evans and I met at Port Elgin July 28, where about twenty-five members are building a neat and commodious church. Elder J. L. Mortimer, who I understand made the opening there, and did an effectual work in connection with Elders S. W. Tomlinson, Daniel MacGregor, and others, is working on the building made with hands. Here the Spirit designated N. E. Leeder to the office of priest and James Phillips teacher, and a branch was organized. Good audiences listened to Bro. Evans' stirring sermons all the week. Before leaving he troubled the waters of Lake Huron by baptizing Miss Leeder, who has been a school teacher for a number of years: also baptized a daughter of Bro. and Sr. Mather.

Saturday we journeyed with "Blind Billie" to Sauble Falls, the driver being often told, "If the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch." Howbeit, ye president was the first to get out and write his name on the sand. Bro. Edwin Humphries some three years ago took Bro. Daniel MacGregor to Sauble Falls, where an excellent work was done by Daniel, aided by the severe castigation Bro. R C. Evans gave the Rev. Thompson, who attempted to destroy Dan's name and place among that people. The sound of that victory has gone all over this peninsula. Three years ago there were scarce half a dozen Saints, and now there are some two hundred. Elders Compton, A. E. and J. L. Mortimer, S. W. Tomlimson, R. B. Howlett, and others, have done good work in Sauble re-

From August 4 to August 10 Bro. R. C. spoke at Sauble, Hepworth, and Oliphant. Sunday, 11th, at Colpoy's Bay. A crowded house greeted their mission president for the first time, whose grand counsel will surely benefit all who follow it. This opening was made by Elder Frederick Gregory, whose memory is cherished by all because of his godly walk and conversation among them. He will be glad to learn that Bro. Ralph Waters (the first fruits of his labor there) has been designated by the spirit and now holds the office of elder.

Clavering was visited last Tuesday and the three Saints there. Last evening two men from there awaited our arrival here for baptism. One was the general merchant and postmaster there. The other, Mr. Geo. Lambkin, who first heard this gospel about thirty years ago at Osborne. For years he had not heard a sermon, but always confessed this work to be true according to the Bible.

Friday, 16th, we journeyed to the furtherest branch north, Stokes Bay. Two years ago Elder St. John made an opening there and baptized fourteen as the result of his effort. When the writer visited there a year ago Rev. Seiveright lectured against us. We replied for two evenings. Since that time the magistrate and several of the best citizens have been our warm friends, and some of them we believe are near the kingdom. Here again large audiences greeted Bro. R. C., and powerful sermons with logical arguments greeted their ears.

In order that the Saints may comprehend the extent of Bro. Evan's vacation among us, permit me to say that in twenty-one days he delivered twenty-eight discourses in eleven different places and traveled with horse and rig over two hundred miles. Eight were baptized and others have requested baptism later on. We had good weather, no accident, and were kindly treated by Saints and friends all along the line.

I was forgetting to mention the physical labor of Elder William Gerrie and others of Sauble Saints in building enclosed stand and seating grove for August 4. Colpoy's Bay Saints seated grove for August 11. Stokes Bay Saints fitted up Bro. Fletcher's Mill for yesterday. Large audiences in above places listened to our brother. He left for home this morning. Owen Sound will be visited later on.

To all Saints wishing my address: Colpoy's Bay P. O will find me, as that is central for my field, and mail will be forwarded to me. Yours in bonds,

JOHN SHIELDS.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, August 11.

Editors Herald:—Through your columns we are ofttimes confirmed in this latter day work by reading the testimonies of our brothers and sisters whom God has favored with his blessings. It is encouraging to know that God is the same always; that he will bless his children the same now as in the past, if we come humbly before him.

We have had some experience of this in this part of God's vineyard. On July 24 the Saints fasted and prayed for rain, and the same evening we met at the church for prayer and testimony meeting, and it pleased God to hear our prayers, and the same night we had a fine rain, and up to the present time have received two showers a week, for which we feel thankful to our heavenly Father, and trust that we may prove worthy of the same.

Saints, let us go on in the work, for it is a good work, one that is worthy of our support.

On July 8 God called our aged Bro. J. J. Conyers to his rest. He had passed the age of eighty-two, and had lived the most of his time in the church. He passed through the persecutions of the Saints at Nauvoo. He had always a strong testimony for this work. While he lived at Nauvoo he was well acquainted with Joseph the Seer. At one time while visiting with him and his wife I asked them the following questions: "Do you believe that Joseph lived in polygamy?"

"No."

"Did he teach it?"

"No, for we never heard him do so, and we attended his meetings right along, and had just as good a chance to know of these things as any body else. He was a gentleman, a good husband, and a kind father. We heard him tell from the stand that if Brigham Young ever got the lead of the people that he would lead them to hell. We further heard him say that his son Joseph (little Joseph they called him) was to be his successor."

I think that the evils that Brigham Young led the people into, prove that he fulfilled the prophecy, and that 'little' Joseph has taken his father's place in the church and has proven himself an honorable man in filling that place.

After a lingering spell of sickness Uncle Jack, as we called him, passed to his rest bearing a strong testimony to the truthfulness of this work and bidding his son, J. J. Confers, good-bye and telling him to be faithful that this work was true. He then called his wife to his side; and as a loving husband he bade her good-bye, telling her not to mourn for him, for she would soon follow him. In his dying moments he expressed himself as being very happy.

This, Saints, is another evidence of God's love to his children. We read that he has promised to be with them to the end, and that death should not be bitter unto them. May this be the happy lot of each of us, is is the humble prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

Editor Saints' Herald:—I am laid up from the effects of a dislocated ankle, caused by a fall from my wheel. I pressed the bones back into place, and came home in an ambulance. It is pretty hard to be laid up, and I suffer some.

I love to read the church papers very much. The SAINTS' HERALD is food for the weary. I would like to say a few things concerning the work in Chicago; but I might offend some one, so I will only say that we are very much in need of an able man to talk and tell the gospel story to the people on the West Side.

I do not let my papers and books lie idle when I can get some one to read them. I do some talking when I get any one to listen, for he that heareth let him speak.

Not long since I had a dream which was beautiful to me. I will tell it:

I was standing on the ice over the east bank of a river that had overflowed its banks, and had frozen over. The ice extended through the forest as far as I could see. There were no leaves on the trees. While viewing the scenery I looked up the river and saw a horse and rider coming on a trot. They passed by, the rider looking neither to the right nor the left. Directly behind the horse and rider, about three hundred feet back, was a steamer with a sharp bow, plowing through the ice, breaking it and throwing it to each side, and leaving a clear stream of water about fifty feet wide. The horse, rider, and steamer were white as snow. Their whiteness made the ice look rather dark. They were coming from the north and going in a southerly direction. He that hath the Spirit, let him inter-Your brother in the work, Editors Herald:-When last I wrote I was at Palermo, New York. From there I went to Greenwood, New York, to act as moderator in the Sheldon-Copeland debate. For nine evenings I sat and listened to the "nastiest, most foul-mouthed" tirade of abuse I ever heard from a pulpit. I never heard anything more blasphemous fall from the lips of mortal man. With other Saints and friends we tried to endure it for Christ's sake; and if you will allow me the expression, I almost caught myself thinking it was fortunate for our opponent that it was for Christ's sake. The world, it seems, will not be satisfied with the act of requiring the innocent life of Joseph Smith; nor will they let his body rest in peace. But his stainless testimony is a "stickler" to them all; for behold, he hath "endangered our craft." He hath shown up our man-made doctrines, and where are we? And, as in former times, they withstand it by hiding in a refuge of lies. The Son of man says we are blessed when men shall revile us and shall say "all manner of evil" against us falsely for his sake. And may God help us to endure it for his sake, so that in the "sweet by and by" we may all be: vindicated and glorified together with him.

One objection urged against us was that we had no "colleges," etc. It did me good to see Bro. Sheldon bring out a brand new catalogue of our Graceland and flash it before his eyes.

I think the college a worthy institution, and that it should meet the hearty support of all Latter Day Saints.

Long will I remember the good Saints of Greenwood! Brn. I. M. and F. C. Smith, also Bro. R. Etzenhouser, have labored here, and a report of their good works follow them.

On the morning of July 25 we reluctantly extended the parting hand and started on a day's journey for this famous city of "Brotherly Love." And as I walked into the hospitable home of Bro. John Zimermann, of 610 Lehigh avenue, and later as I grasped the hand and beheld the smiling face of Bro. John. I was made to realize that some of that "brotherly love" exists here yet. And this was strengthened indeed by the universal greeting as we met for worship with the Saints among whom we are to labor for the vear. We felt encouraged when we saw such a nice Sunday school, which is so ably and orderly conducted by our good Bro. E. B. Hull. The Religio is also doing well under the presidency of Bro. Henry Carr.

I next attended district conference at Baldwin, Maryland. Quite a good time was had by all. I also assisted Bro. Robley in holding a few grove meetings while there. Interest is not very brisk there at present.

I returned for duty in the city on Sunday, where I spoke in our hall, morning and evening; and in the afternoon, accompanied by half a dozen good brethren and sisters, went to Germantown and held service at the home Sr. Engle. This is about the spot where occurred the battle of Germantown during the Revolutionary war, where our forefathers struggled that we might enjoy the blessings of life, liberty, and the pursuits of happiness.

"Lest you forget we say it yet"—our new church is being completed rapidly, and promises to be a building of which we can all be proud. The basement will be fitted up especially for Sunday school and Religio work, while the main part will seat near three hundred. A great number of people have promised to attend when we get it completed. We expect it to be done sometime in October. Our people gave a very successful supper in Hunting park on last Saturday eve for the benefit of the chapel fund. They have raised nearly a thousand dollars in this way.

I am at present stopping at the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. Willard Hetterick, 2954 Rosehill street, where mail will reach

May the Lord bless and prosper his people, and keep us united in our works of faith and labors of love.

For unity and success,

WILL E. LARUE.

LOUISVILLE, Neb., Aug. 22.

Editors Herald:—I have been very busy this conference year thus far. Have labored in tent work most of the time. Considering the busy season, have had quite good interest. Six were baptized near Waterloo, Nebraska, as a result of our meetings there. The great latter-day work has been demonstrated to me this last year in such a plain, practical way that I feel much encouraged to continue the battle until victory is won. I have had to sacrifice a great deal for the gospel's sake, but I feel glad as a result, for it has been the means of strengthening my faith, and will perhaps be a credit to me in the end, if I continue.

Our interest here is not what we would like to have it. Bro. James Huff is laboring with me at present. May we all work in harmony until we shall see as we are seen, which I trust will not be very long, is the prayer of your brother,

OSCAR CASE.

WESTON, Iowa, August 22.

Editors Herald:—On Sunday, August 11, I went to visit the Boomer branch, and on my arrival was told that Bro. Joshua Carlile was expected to occupy the stand that afternoon. I was indeed glad to hear that I would get to listen to him. But for some cause Bro. Carlile did not come, so poor I had to do the preaching. I was disappointed, as well as lots of others.

The Boomer Saints are building a nice little church, 24x40. They expect to complete the building sometime in September. They are all working together as one man, and the neighbors and friends are doing what they can towards completing the building. They are all doing nobly, and I pray that God will bless their efforts.

Bro. R. Wight joined me at Boomer on the 13th and we labored together there till over Sunday, the 18th, and God blessed us with his Spirit. On Sunday night, after meeting, we said good-bye to the Boomer Saints. We went home with Elder D. Parish, and on Monday morning he took us to Weston.

At present Bro. R. Wight and I are holding forth in a schoolhouse two and one half miles northeast of the old brick schoolhouse where the Saints used to meet thirty-five years ago. There are a few of the old Saints still living around here, and are alive in the work. The turnout here is not large, but very attentive. We will stay here the remainder of this week. I find Bro. R. Wight a very agreeable companion and a good worker for the Lord.

I understand that the work at Council Bluffs is moving along nicely under the direction of Bro. Cooper. I am well pleased with the outlook of the work in this district, believing that the laborers are doing all they can to get the gospel before the people. Praying for the good of all.

Your brother in Christ, D. R. CHAMBERS.

ARLINGTON, Iowa, Aug. 19.

Editors Herald:—Notwithstanding the intense heat and drought of the summer, I kept right on with my meetings. I closed the tent meeting at Strawberry Point, July 16. On the 17th Bro. Miller took his team from the binder and we went after the tent, about thirteen miles. On the 18th Bro. Spencer and I set it up here. On the 19th I opened siege on the city, having a goodly number out to hear.

After a week Bro. Sutton came and assisted me about two weeks, then he had to go home to look after his farm, so I was alone again. I continued for a month. The crowd increased in numbers, so that some nights it was estimated to be about three hundred, most all old people. Some came two miles every night, though the weather was intensely hot. Several infidels were heard to say they believed I had the truth.

Quite a number are convinced of the truth and some are talking of baptism. One old M. E. man told me this month's meeting has been the greatest school for him he ever attended; he had learned more Bible than he ever knew before, and he knows now that his preacher did not preach the Bible. One man, an infidel, said he would head a subscription paper with one hundred dollars to build a Latter Day Saint church here, and fifty dollars a year after for support of it. Some six or seven others of different classes have also offered money to build us a church. The people are all astir. What will the harvest be?

The Lord blessed me wonderfully while preaching. I spoke four nights on the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, in which I was signally blessed. A prediction given in my patriarchal blessing was certainly fulfilled. That I should speak under influence of the inspiration of the Spirit. One lawyer (infidel) said he never heard such strong, grand, and logical arguments made on any subject as those on the Book of Mormon. May the Lord bless the word spoken. The Saints, though few in number, did well. I made my home with Bro. and Sr. Frank Crawford, the only Saints right in town. I spoke to some of the attendants about the expense of running a tent. They advised me to take up a collection, so we did, and got over six dollars. That alone shows the sympathy of the people for us. Some of the most prejudiced became our friends. One man said to me, "Elder I used to lie about you folks. I want to confess it. I will never do so again, and I have told others to quit lying about you and go to hear for themselves." I wish more would do so. I will box the tent today, then wend my way towards Green Valley to conference the last of the week. May the Lord prosper his work.

Still in the conflict.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., August 19.

Editor Herald:-On July 20 I was called home on account of the serious illness of my daughter, Clara O. Scott Endwright. I arrived at Borden, Indians, where she lived, at 3:30 p. m., and found her unconscious. She was confined and had been chloroformed by the doctor; and he was unable to arouse her from the effects of it. It was one of the hardest trials I ever experienced to give up our loved one. Paul said in relation to women. "Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety." That passage of scripture was like a mountain. I was sure if any child lived aright she did, and when trouble came, our understanding failed, and it seemed that our hopes were almost gone. I remained in that horrible condition for over two weeks, when one morning about three o'clock a messenger from above appeared unto me and said that no man had received greater merits than I had, for the Lord had promised that all of my family should be gathered with the Saints, and related to me many other things connected with the work; and that I had been faithful, and that my council at home and in my field of labor had been good. That gave a great deal of courage and relieved me of my severe trial. No one knows what these trials are but those who have passed through them.

On returning to my field I found Bro. James W. Metcalf and my son, Samuel M. Scott, whom I had sent to help Bro. Metcalf conduct meetings on the streets of Louisville, had created a greal of excitement and some of the people had threatened to break the meetings up. They were the Methodists and Baptists, and on last Tuesday night the Methodists sent for one of their big guns, who was pastor of one of their large churches on Walnut street, Doctor Lloyd, to come out where we were holding meetings and expose the Mormons. So Bro. John Resch and I went to hear him lecture against the Mormons and to take notes. Of course he made the fight against the Utah church. I had no objections, only he tried to connect us with the Utah Mormons. When he got through I asked the reverend to grant me a favor. He asked me what it was, and I told him to tell his congregation the difference between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the church in Utah. He paused a moment and said there were no others, and a moment later he said he believed there were a few Saints out in Iowa who rejected the claims of Brigham Young, but in the beginning they were all the same. So I asked permission to announce my meeting the next evening on the street. It was granted. I announced that I would show the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church, and I would correct some misrepresentations made that evening and asked the minister to attend my meeting, as I did not want to misrepresent any one, but treat them with Christian courtesy, only we wanted to stand before the public correct.

I will now give his false representations. He had somebody's criticisms, I believe Clark Braden's. He did not state the author of them, but I had heard of them before, 1. The Mormons claim that the Book of Mormon is superior to the Bible. I told them our people believed no such thing. Bible went before, but we claimed that the Book of Mormon was the law of God to the people of ancient America, and it was a part of the new covenant. 2. The three witnesses to the Book of Mormon left the church and denied their testimony, and no man saw the plates but three. I proved that false. I gave their last dying testimony reaffirming their testimony, the month and day when they died; also referred to the eight witnesses in the preface of Book of Mormon. 3. Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon organized the church. I proved that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery organized the church, April 6, 1830. (D. and C. 17; 1; 1835 edition 19; 3.) 4. The Saints moved to Kirtland and set up a bank, then to Independence, and then to Nauvoo, where Joseph Smith taught spiritual wifery and polygamy. Joseph Smith had ruined hundreds of young girls, had one hundred offspring, became the husband of many wives, eighty or more. I proved that false by the Decision of Judge Philips, pages 22, 25. 5. Another man connected with Smith was Sidney Rigdon and he got hold of Solomon Spalding's romance, and they wrote the Book of Mormon. I proved that false by Presidency and Priesthood and showed that was a dead issue more than sixteen years ago. He criticised the grammar of the Book of Mormon and said a great deal not worth mention here.

All the Saints rejoiced when they saw that the truth was defended and the enemy met at every point. The Lord was with us, and the chief of police sent a man to keep order. During our meeting we had a large crowd, three hundred or more, and the policeman congratulated me and said I converted him, and the city could afford to protect us, and would. There have been, I believe, nine persons baptized since the first of May; and others are almost ready. So the good work goes on. The branch here now numbers fifty. It has been very hot and dry; hard times for the poor people.

Respectfully,

JAMES M. SCOTT.

There are more murders committed than are ever published in the papers—murders committed by the tongue. The power of deadly poison is in it.—August Ladies' Home Journal.

TEMPLE, Ohio, Aug. 23.

Editors Herald:—We are now more than three months removed from General Conference, and none can consistently hold it to be an intrusion to claim a little space in the HERALD.

Work has been going steadily on in the Eastern mission. The laborers are deployed to advantage, and are doing effective work, so that encouraging reports come in from nearly all parts of the mission. Some are doing excellently. Big events, as all are aware, have been and are happening very fast, along various lines, some puzzling and troublesome. But these do not harm our work; Saints believe in the coming of startling events in the political, social, and physical world, in "perilous times;" and what if they are at our doors? The faithful will not be moved by them, but confirmed rather than dismayed. Happenings will sometime eventuate in conditions. "As with the people, so with the priest; as with the servant, so with his master; . . . as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower," etc., etc.—Isa. 24:2.

So that the mingling of strange events and happenings must go on until the prophecies are all fulfilled, whether people are looking and preparing for them in these last days or not. They confirm the spirit and genius of the platform of faith upon which we stand, and which we feel sure will outride all storms.

The severe drouth in the farther West has not been so discouraging here. The East has been kindly dealt by. Some extreme conditions have obtained, but measurably conditions in most places have approximated the normal, so that crops are fair, wheat, hay, oats, good. Corn bids fair for a good yield. Fruit, some kinds, plentiful; apples scarce. There are a good many "small potatoes." The late planting looks well and promising. So there are provisions for the outward man in view.

Brn. A. H. Parsons and D. L. Allen have been taking the lead in Cleveland, Ohio, in tent work, with some success. They are now located at Collinwood, with encouraging attendance. The writer has been sharing in their labors the last two Sabbaths. They are booked for Akron, Ohio, this week. Anyway, they are testing the success to be achieved by tent service. Brn. Francis Ebeling and R. Baldwin have been laboring successfully in the eastern part of district. and in Pennsylvania Bro. U. W. Greene and wife and Bro. David Anderson and wife have been doing effective tent work in the states of New York and Connecticut. The outlook with them is encouraging. Bro. G. W. Robley is pushing grove meeting in Maryland and Pennsylvania now, being aided by the presence of Bro. Wm. E. LaRue. Bro. LaRue is advertising himself and the Saints in the Philadelphia papers quite well. The reporters are inclined to treat him fairly, and he is correcting some errors in the popular mind. Philadelphians seem to be a little surprised to see a seven thousand dollar church erected in that city by the few Saints banded together there. However, the church is on the way to completion-a most commendable work wrought by the enterprising ones of that place. Even Philadelphia is willing to accord credit and stand for fairness.

Tent work has also been carried on in the Massachusetts district by Brn. R Bullard and C. E. Rich, but the writer is not informed as to their success. Just now they are at Fall River, and meeting with encouragement. Massachusetts and Rhode Island Saints have just had their annual outing, and held their reunion at Silver Lake, which was well attended and made successful, and without the aid of outside help. That is encouraging. Massachusetts district usually rounds up all right, and no doubt success will crown the efforts of the faithful there this season.

Brn. H. J. Davison and I. M. Smith have been enlivening the Saints in Nova Scotia. Bro. Smith writes that he is glad that he visited there. Isaac has had a little leaning towards Nova Scotia for some time, so surmised. What if we should have some foreign notions introduced among us to deal! with! Why, we would just take the tariff off their potatoes these dry times, and let them come in free, and so become reconciled. Brn. I. M. Smith. S. O. Foss, J. Ames. S. G. Cunningham, William W. Blanchard, and C. E. Rich are sustaining the work in Maine, with nothing discouraging reported. Brn. G. H. Godbey, D. L. Shinn, W. B. Odell, H. R. Harder, are pushing the work in West Virginia. Bro. J. L. Goodrich may be there also. Brn. T. J. Beatty, S. J. Jeffers, H. E. Moler, V. M. Goodrich, L. R. Devore, J. F. McDowell, and E. E. Long are doing excellently in the Ohio district. Bro. F. G. Pitt has matters well in hand in the Pittsburg district, aided by Brn. L. D. Ullom, Robert-Perrie, James Craig, and others. The Pittsburg Saints are very hopeful of securing a place of worship of their own at an early day. Bro. Pitt found so much at home to claim his attention that he did not attend the reunion in Massachusetts, as he had desired to do: neither did Brn. Greene and Anderson go. That is right, when it is necessary stick right to the work intrusted to you, and make it a success, if possible. Sacrifice pleasure where duty calls. Bro. E. A. Davis, who was laboring in West Virginia district, was compelled to return home to look after personal affairs on account of the drought. He resides in Kansas, but hopes soon to return to his field of labor.

A Methodist divine down about Greenwood, New York, concluded that he would have an easy prey by attacking Bro. T. J. Sheldon. They met in public debate, and the Methodist found the little Englishman in the ring ready for the fray. The Methodist had the advantage in the wording of the proposition, refusing to affirm a similar one for his own cause, or any other of fairness or merit. He risked his case on the prejudiceand ignorance of the people, so tried to support his side with foul slander and falsehood, "the Devil's old stale rot." Bro. Sheldon, with odds against him, more than maintained himself, made friends, and is now following up his advantages gained by answering calls as they come in. A Baptist divine appeared at Palermo, New York, wearing a rather lofty and confident air. The faith of the Saints had but little or no support in his mind. Said he. "I would like for some of them to point out to me where it says in Isaiah that the Book of Mormon should come out of the Hill Cumorah!" He believed the Baptist Church, or authority, had come right down from John the Baptist. We dropped Brn. S. W. L Scott and Wm. E. LaRue down there. Bro. Scott and the Baptist "locked horns," and before the week was out the Baptist found he had run on to something "amazing." Probably concluded that it would not be difficult for Saints to get Records out of Hills after all. Anyway, he was forced into a corner, and was manly enough to admit that he could not answer for his side. He does not seem to have been a victous and bad opponent, but doubtless was honestly misled in his views about the Saints. The brethren did a good work for the cause there, and the wave is still circling around. If this opponent was not convinced of his errors no doubt he will go a little slowly after this in speaking lightly of things of which he knows little or nothing just because it pleases silly people.

Yes, Bro. M. H. Bond is forging ahead in Massachusetts, trying to get people to think alike down about Fall River, with just about the same success that crowned the efforts of the man who tried to get two time pieces to run alike. The work of unifying goes on, however.

Bro. S. F. Cushman was holding out faithfully at Toledo the last account, though out of sorts physically.

The missionary in charge, for cause, has been in Ohio most of the time during the spring and summer months; busy, however, endeavoring to do what was at hand and keep others active.

Encouraged and hopeful of success,

In the faith,

WM. H. KELLEY.

HOOD RIVER, Oregon, August 22.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps it might be well to send in some news from far away Oregon. We are far away from the church center, and in rather a scattered condition and isolated from privileges that we could enjoy; yet we have not had to endure the hot weather and drought. When I read the account as given by Sr. Harton, of Independence, thoughts came to me as to why these things should be on God's choicest land; and the only answer that comes to me is that it may bring about conditions for which we are hoping. Our minds are not equal to the infinite; so we can but say, "Father, thy will be done!" I rejoice with my brethren in the thought that sometime we shall be gathered on that land, when the plagues and enemies cannot molest.

We have been blessed of late with the gospel sound. Elders A. M. Chase and W. A. Goodwin have been here with the gospel tent, and our hearts have been made glad to see those that are honest in heart and seeking for truth and light own that this is the true gospel of Christ according to what is written. We look forward to the time when the good sheaves will be gathered in with the proper amount of care and instruction in all righteousness, which we believe the brethren before named are fully capable of doing. One thing we can say to the Saints of eastern Oregon: If you need a pair of rustlers, who will be found at their post of duty every hour of the day, just drop a line to our worthy missionaries Chase and Goodwin. They expect to labor in this valley the most of September. The enemies of truth are raging; but we expect to continue the fight, and be found faithful to the end.

Praying for the final triumph of the gospel, I am, Yours in gospel bonds, THOMAS CHAPMAN.

SWEETWATER, Texas, August 22.

Dear Herald:—The last time I wrote for your columns I was at Beeville, some five hundred miles from this place. While there we enjoyed the home and association of our daughter, Mrs. W. H. Ferguson, and family. She is a zealous member of the church. Her husband is not a member, but is kind hearted and charitable. They have a model family, and it was hard for us to part from them.

Stopping a few days in San Antonio, we met with Bro. H. O Smith, and many friends who were making preparations to go to the Pipe Creek conference, some fifty miles away. It fell to our lot to repeat some of our former experiences in that country. It had been raining nearly twenty-four hours. H. O. Smith, wife and I made a rush for the train for a run of thirty-two miles, and took our chances for the remaining eighteen miles necessary to reach the grounds where conference was to convene the next day. Fortunately we found a man who would convey us to the end of our journey for the sum of one dollar per head. We thought him very reasonable, and mounting his hack went off through the mud, arriving at five in the evening of the same day of our departure from San Antonio, landing one day early. We occupied the schoolhouse as quarters, at first consulting as to the propriety of walking to a near farmhouse to get lodging for the night; but as we had a trunk, with other baggage, we thought it too much to carry, so we decided that wife and I would seek shelter in the farm house and Bro. Smith would remain. So while we walked away we felt sad that we had to leave Bro. Smith alone in the lonely schoolhouse. But he is very consciencious in his religious deportment, and reconciled to his lot, so long as he can realize that the all-seeing Eye sees his situation; and he is ever willing to trust in the power of Him who doeth all things well.

In the meantime Bro. Joseph Calahan, who lived five miles away, passed by and promised to bring us some provision, and was faithful to his promise. God answered our petition and nothing occurred to harm or molest us that night.

The next day we looked for a congregation until night came on before any one came. All day we wondered what was the matter; but as the sun went down and the night shades set in, one by one they came in, relating what the recent rains had done. We learned that the old Medina had heaved itself beyond its bounds and swept the valleys, taking cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, fences, and crops. However, before nine o'clock the house was full, when we spoke to them as best we could of the glad tidings of salvation. This was continued during the time set apart for our conference. At the close we proceeded up the river in company with Bro. O. D. Johnson, stopping a few days with our daughter, Sr. J. W. Minear. Then to Bro. Johnson's in company with Robt. Chipman, thence went back to Bro. Minear's in company with Bro. Johnson, where our stay for about two weeks was extremely pleasant. Then away to Cleburne, Texas, where we stopped for ten days with Henry Wight, our son, and family, dividing some of the time with Bro. and Sr. Riley, and holding meetings at Bro. Riley's house with some interest. Here Bro. John Hawley came in, who did us much good rehearsing his experiences and knowledge of the work, seasoned with some good sermons by which we were strengthened and cheered. Notwithstanding he was having chills and fever his usual pluck and energy with zeal for the Master was not di-

We moved on to Ft. Worth, where Bro. Sheppard met us. We had not seen him for about three years, and certainly enjoyed a few hours with him talking of the good work, seasoning it with our old-time merriment. At ten p. m. we reluctantly took the parting hand of Brn. Sheppard and Hawley and Sr. Jenet McFarland who had kindly brought Sr. Wight to the depot. The McFarland family are good Christians and know how to make the missionary feel at home. The brethren and Sr. Jenet returned to quarters and we mounted train for a run of two hundred miles in the dead of the night, which was accomplished in safety.

So after a missionary journey of over one thousand miles, preaching thirty-five times, administering to sick a number of times and doing such other missionary work as came in our way, wife and I are safe at home again. So on for the conflict with error, with a lively faith that truth will gain the victory. If I shall in the end prove to be a success in this great and glorious work all the honor will be to a loving, patient, heavenly Father, and the prayers of a noble, Christian wife. God bless the work! God bless the faithful army of elders engaged in it, to the upbuilding of the kingdom of God on earth, that the speedy accomplishment of the work may be brought about, even to the redemption of Zion, is the prayer of,

> > RHODES, Iowa, August 26.

Editors Herald:—The Des Moines district reunion closed sessions of ten days here yesterday. The reunion committee consisting of Brn. McCoy, Nirk, and Richeson did their work faithfully and well. The reunion organization was perfected on Saturday, 17th inst., Bro. J. W. Wight being chosen to preside and H. A. McCoy and D. C. White to assist. The quarterly conference session on Saturday was quite well attended, and the usual routine business transacted in peace.

The reunion continued during the week following, and was pronounced the best held in the district. The attendance of the Saints was about as large as could be expected and the most of them remained during the session, and a goodly number came in during the week. The daily prayer service at nine a. m. was one of the best series of prayer services yet held in the district. Such a unity prevailed that was to be noticed by all, and promises were made to several by the elders, and one young man designated for greater use in the ministry. The sermons throughout were excellent, and one sister who has grown gray in the church said that the two sermons on the Book of Mormon were the strongest she had ever heard.

The best of feeling prevailed between the Saints and the townspeople until the close. At all the services on Sunday and each evening service large crowds of people were in attendance, and the best of attention was given to each speaker. The music of the reunion was in charge of Bro. J. D. White, of Independence, Missouri, and all appreciated his efforts, and the singing was excellent.

The reunion closed on Sunday, 25th inst., with sermon in the morning by J. D. White, in the afternoon by J. C. Crabb, and the closing in the evening by J. W. Wight.

The district conference adjourned to meet at Grinnell, December 28. The sentiment was unanimous in favor of another reunion, and selection of time and place was left in the hands of a committee.

The district tent was remodeled at the close of the meeting, and goes to Eagle Grove, October 1, to be used for a public discussion there. Yours truly,

A. A. REAMS.

Original Poetry.

FAIR ZION.

The following lines were given me by the Spirit, when upon my bed in meditation and prayer for Zion.

Fair Zion, awake from your slumber,
The Master is calling; arise
And burst every fetter asunder,
That brought the sad tear to your eyes.
Your harps have hung long on the willow,
You've sat by the rivers and wept

In sorrow, a stone for your pillow,

And on the damp ground you have slept.

Your Seer and your Prophets, departed,
You would not give heed to their call;
They left you in grief, broken-hearted,
And wrote your sad doom on the wall.
Upon you came sudden destruction,
Your temples the joy of your soul,
Your cities, denoting perfection,
All razed to the dust as foretold.

Your lands became futile and barren,
The spoiler rejoiced to behold,
Yourselves so rejected and barren,
From Christ your Redeemer and fold;
But now the sunbeams of the morning,
Poor Zion, is dawning on you,

Rejoicing, give heed to the warning, Your Lord in his promise still true.

The Gentiles their fullness have entered,
The last is now first on the list;
The first shall be last, as predicted,
So justice in wisdom insist.
Then awake, thou beloved, from thy slumber—

The Master is calling; come, rise,
And burst every fetter asunder
That brought the sad tear to your eyes.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"God sets some souls in shade alone, They have no daylight of their own: Only in lives of happier ones They see the shine of distant suns."

QUEER PEOPLE.

"My wife has a weakness for choosing queer people for friends," remarked Mr. Clark, giving that lady a mischievous glance. "You mean those she has invited for dinner?" asked Judge Hill, quickly.

"You are the exception that proves the rule—a sort of reward for the deaf people who come to dinner and want to listen to me while I carve, and the homeless old women, and students who cannot possibly get along in college, yet want to have money and sympathy. Our last guest was a woman who considers that everyone is against her. I felt when I last dined in her presence I had eaten in a cemetery vault, for she had brought her family skeletons out in plain sight."

"Papa," cried Mrs. Clark, in the tone that makes a man understand retreat is valorous, "you know Mrs. Mason has lost four beautiful children under such distressing circumstances that her mind is hardly right. She has a depressing, incurable disease, and she has become estranged from some old friends, and her husband is not a Christian, not even a church member, so she gets desperate for sympathy."

"You may be glad you have a wife who has a heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathize,' these days when women are absorbed in society or clubs," remarked the judge.

"Especially as she is a model housekeeper," added Mrs. Hill.

"Oh, I don't want to change my St. Elizabeth," spoke up the husband, quickly. "It is strange how many queer people there are. Of course, in the business world we have to steer clear of the tramps and the bores. I confess I enjoy nice-looking people around me. I always hire well-groomed men, and compliment my wife when she finds a neat, attractive maid."

"Which is better than complimenting the maid," remarked Mrs. Hill.

The conversation was not what the hostess had planned for these choice friends, and she was somewhat relieved when little Fred upset his glass of milk and was borne away dripping like a merman, which turned the conversation to the delights of childhood.

"Bess, I didn't mean to be hard on you, old girl," the husband whispered, as he put on his overcoat after a pleasant hour with the family and guests. "But there comes that old woman with a paralyzed husband, and she will take you from Mrs. Hill. You lay yourself open to all kinds of disagreeable people by being ready to help everyone. Shall I tell that old crone that you are busy?"

"Hardly, when she is trying to keep her helpless husband and two afflicted children out of the poorhouse," replied Mrs. Clark, with some warmth.

"See that you don't send yours there, helping all kinds of freaks," said the husband with a laugh; but he slipped a half dollar in the old woman's hand as he ran down the steps. After Mrs. Clark had gotten through with this caller, a young girl came hunting work. She might sew if everything was cut and basted and she was not made to feel any responsibility, as that made her nervous. She could do housework if she did not have to sweep or scrub or wash or iron. These things were too hard. She could not stand on her feet to clerk and had tried to learn stenography, but that was too difficult. The girl was destitute of common sense, as well as of money and physical strength, so Mrs. Clark found it hard to suggest any help.

"There now, Elizabeth," said her guest at last. "We must talk over our girlhood days. Do you always have so many queer people after you?"

"You remember at our old home mother welcomed all the discouraged folks," answered Mrs. Clark. "They seem to come to me. I cannot always give money but often I find people work. Sometimes I can lend a book that suits a case and, often, getting an opportunity to tell their troubles does good. No one wondered at mother's doing these things, but people seem to think I had better be reading or sewing. Sometimes I wonder myself if it pays for many of these people are selfish, or lazy, or bring on their own troubles at home. But mother had the old-fashioned idea that it were better for each Christian family to help the unfortunate than to turn all this over to institutions. But what my husband laughs at is the fact that people who are neglected because they have extreme religious views, or are trying to reform, turn to me. I can't help but see good in them, even when I know they are cranks."

The next day Mrs. Clark was very busy preparing for Easter. The children were to color eggs for some poor families, as well as for themselves, and flowers must go to an invalid who was so disagreeable many of her supposed friends had deserted her. Mrs. Clark was surprised to find how many of her plans were for "queer" people. "They belong to Christ and he died for me," she thought, but still she wondered if she was not casting pearls before swine. Mrs. Clark had many of the failings of her kind, but she desired as earnestly to find the Holy Grail as ever Sir Launfal of old. That evening she felt tired and a little despondent, thinking her husband did not see the motive that led her to have so many unattractive friends and she fell asleep with less than her usual happiness of heart. with the subject still in her mind she hardly knew when reality became dreaming and soon found herself surrounded by a large gathering of people. One she recognized as an old school-mate whom she had befriended when in disgrace. They were all such radiant. happy beings it was hard to tell where she had seen them before, but she soon discovered each was standing by an open grave. In one near her she saw an old cart and the wheelchair that belonged to her old woman's husband. At that moment a beautiful being said to her: "You encouraged me to work for my helpless husband and through you I have gotten to heaven and brought my family too.'

"You kept me from taking my life while I was so unbalanced about losing my children. I had more troubles than anyone knew," said another.

Mrs. Clark looked in the grave near her troublesome old friend and then said: "If I had had all of those burdens I would not have been as agreeable as you were."

As Elizabeth looked into the graves where all the deformities, diseases and life-burdens had dropped, she cried: "The only wonder is that any of you struggled through your hard circumstances into the beautiful life that has made you such happy beings."

"You helped us forget our burdens and taught us to cling to the heavenly Father's hand," came from the joyful company.

"And I was often discouraged and ashamed, and might have chosen more agreeable people if I had not been anxious to please the Master," confessed Elizabeth.

Then a sweet voice said: "When you did good unto these, my little ones, you did it unto me," and Elizabeth knew the Master was in their midst.

Mrs. Clark sat in the family pew with her husband and children and listened to the Easter music and the sermon with a glowing face. A beautiful new hope had been resurrected in her heart. She might be one of God's ministering angels to keep hearts from despair, and to encourage the weak and neglected ones. She did not see the gorgeous decorations, or even the smart new bonnets, but the hidden Christ in each soul that bore a cross through life. She was recalled back to ordinary duties by hearing her husband whisper: "I invited old Bro. Gray and his wife over to dinner as I came in."

"I thought he tired you with his criticisms of the church," returned Elizabeth in surprise.

"He's a perfect bore and he'll stay till five o'clock, but he's old and neglected and it does him good to tell how badly he has been used by the church, when it was his liver that located him," said the husband.

Elizabeth smiled up in her husband's face, though her eyes were a little misty.

"I guess you are right, Bess. Perhaps more of us ought to open hospitals for afflicted souls," was the answer that completed Mrs. Clark's Easter happiness.—Myra G. Plantz, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

We are requested to ask that the sisters of the Prayer Union (and as many of the Saints as will join them in so doing) will keep Thursday, September 11, as a day of fasting and prayer for Sr. Jane Heaton, of Blackfoot, Idaho, that if it be God's will she may be healed of deafness and all bodily infirmities, and that her family may be brought into the church. Also for Bro. Columbus Scott, of Lamoni, Iowa, that he may be healed of his severe bodily afflictions and be enabled to prosecute his missionary labors. Bro. Scott desires to acknowledge having received benefit at two separate times in the past through the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union.

WEEK DAY INFLUENCE OF SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

The most important and gravest question a Sunday school teacher can ask himself is, Does my week day influence so correspond with my teaching on the Sabbath that I am worthy of meriting help from God? It is certainly the desire of every faithful and earnest teacher that it does, and that his influence is for good at all times.

OUR INFLUENCE FOR GOOD

should be so great that those with whom we are associated will feel its power and have a desire to lead a higher and nobler life. We as teachers should not only point to that higher and nobler life, but strive to walk in that life ourselves. We should not only teach religion, but practice it in our daily walks of life. We need to examine ourselves, to see whether our works and teachings are characteristic of that Spirit, whose fruits are love, joy, peace, and long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. If every teacher could show by example that he possessed these fruits, how much more worthy would he be of the name of teacher.

It is not altogether a good name or the great deeds that we may do that gives us an influence over others; but it is the

we have for others; always ready to lend a helping hand to those who are in trouble or need.

There never was a day that did not bring opportunities for doing good that never could have been done before and never can be done again. It was not only the doctrine taught by our Savior, and the wonderful miracles performed, that had such a power to draw men's hearts to him, but it was the loving sympathy and kindness he had for others and the example he set before the world under the most trying circumstances.

Every teacher realizes how important the Sunday school work is, and the

MANY RESPONSIBILITIES.

Our responsibilities are so great that the strongest-hearted teacher well may tremble and ask the question, Who can stand within my holy place? But as an echo from the soul's profoundest depths comes back the answer from the lips of him who uttered it so many centuries ago, He that hath clean hands and a pure heart. Then it is necessary for us to be pure in heart, loving and obedient to God's laws and commandments before we can enter into his holy place. Our teaching and personal example, then, should have such an influence that we would lead others to a better life.

We are all aware that the

are for good or evil. Our every act, no matter how insignificant, affects the whole after life either for good or for evil. Not our own lives only, but all life, and all the world.

THE PERSONAL EXAMPLE of the teacher influences more by what he is six days in the week than what he teaches on the seventh. One little mistake, one wrong act or false step may undo the faithful work of many years. We must be what we teach. Our example through the week must correspond with our teaching on the sabbath. We must practice what we teach or else we will be looked upon as a deceiver, doing more harm than good.

The teacher's influence over his pupils may not be so lasting and strong as their parents' influence, as the teacher many times does not have the opportunity of being with his pupils only one short hour on the sabbath. In this case it is all the more necessary that their week day influence is applicable to their teaching.

CHILDREN GENERALLY THINK

that teachers and grown people never do wrong. It is only the small child like themselves that is weak and tempted to do things that are wrong. How careful we should be, then, in our personal example and conduct that we do not step aside and uproot and destroy the good seed we have sown.

The teacher, to have an influnce over his pupils, must get near them; must be always ready to share in all their joys and sorrows, and to have that love and sympathy for them that will assure them that he is their friend.

"A little word in kindness spoken,
A motion or a tear,
Has often healed the heart that's broken,
And made a friend sincere."

NO TRUE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER WILL BE found partaking of the evils of the ball-room, card-room, and many other places where the evil one is lurking around to destroy the soul and drag it down to degradation. Surely no teacher will be so weak as to visit such places of evil. May we always have fortitude and courage to say "no" when we are tempted or invited to visit places that we could not ask God for his blessing and divine protection over us while there, not caring what the world would say, but what would Jesus say? O, I pray that our heavenly Father will throw such a strong shield around us that we will not be led astray, and by our influence lead souls into the wide path of the world which will eventually lead to destruction. but allow our influence to lead people to the gospel.

We must keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

THE WORLD IS WATCHING our every act; so let us set such an example that the world may say we are certainly living the lives of Christians.

We may have great influence over our associates for good in our conversation, being careful to use good and pure language, free from all "slang phrases," which is so prevalent in this age. The use of good and pure language is highly complimentary to all teachers.

It is very important that the Sunday school teacher does not absent himself from the Religio, teachers' and prayer meetings during the week, for it is at these meetings we receive spiritual aid and strength. We must not allow the cares and pleasures of life to keep us from attending, for by our influence and attendance we will encourage others to attend and be the means of bringing many into the kingdom of God.

By our works we are known; so let us labor with a purpose and a desire that our influence and teaching be so in harmony with God's work that we may be worthy to appear before him arrayed in the fine linen of righteousness.

RURAL SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

As we enter the rural Sunday school on a bright sunny morning, and see the sweetfaced, happy children, who are the very pictures of health, anxiously waiting once more to hear the story of the baby Jesus, the carpenter's son, or the Father's message of love. we feel to thank the Holy One of Israel for the privilege. And as we glance about, our eyes rest upon the many lovely flowers the little hands have plucked from the roadside to decorate and cheer the house of God. which once more brings joy to our souls that we can worship with the rural children. And in this blessed condition we proceed with the lesson. Doubtless the pupils have had exercise enough from their walk in the bracing morning air so that it will be an easy matter to hold their attention. All seem so interested in answering questions and anxious to hear what the teacher has to say that only too soon the school must close and we feel that we have had a profitable meeting indeed. The spirit of love was present while we were together and it does not depart when we separate, for as we go to our several homes we do not see over one door, "Saloon," over another "Pool Hall," etc. which are enemies to God, but rather we enjoy the beauties of Rural children are, to a great extent, protected from the many evils of the city. They are not thrown in such close proximity with the worldly, the wicked, and the vicious element, those who are aside from all that is good, pure, or elevating. The theatre, the ballroom, the gambling den, and the grog-shop all play their part to lure the youth to that which is worldly, low, vile, and degrading; and if home and church influences are not very strong, many will be drawn from the path of duty, and will be "lovers of pleasures" more than lovers of God," losing sight of the reward in the future life for the vain and fleeting pleasures of this life.

But in picturing the bright side of this Sunday school we shall not draw the curtain over the dark which comes but too vividly to our minds when we once more wend our way to the church. The roads are muddy, the clouds low and threatening; and as we open the door what a discouraging sight meets our eyes. The empty building, the vacant seats, and the absent children all seem to be trying to explain to us that we live in the country. And their explanation is readily comprehended; for as we make our exit we almost wish that we lived in the city where our shoes would be protected by the sidewalks and our hats by an umbrella.

Again, we find in the country, in order to keep all lines of work going, it is necessary—the greater part of the year—to hold as many as four church services on Sunday, which often causes the Sunday school lesson to be cut short or condensed that the time allotted for another session may not be intruded upon Committee work is also hindered. Many might be induced to attend the school were they called upon oftener by the visiting committee, but our scattered condition once more comes in view.

Thus we might continue to enumerate the advantages and disadvantages of the rural Sunday school; but we refrain, knowing that if we are steadfast in this work of love—it matters not under what circumstances we are placed—that God will bless and reward the effort.

Walter Wellman, telling "The Wonderful Story of the Census of 1901" in the September McClure's, says: "There should be some way of setting forth the marvelous facts without choking all the heroics out of them with the dry dust of statistics." Unconsciously, Mr. Wellman has "found a way." His article, "Rise of the American City," could not be made more entertaining for Americans who are justly proud of the remarkable growth of their country. It is indeed a "wonderful story" which the last census has to tell. This "rise of the American city," as most people view it, is at the expense of the rural districts. Mr. Wellman explains how it is that "the cities of America can multiply by ten in the same half century that the farming community is multiplying by two, and that without any false proportions or insecure foundations for the great industrial structure to stand upon,"

Miss Lillie Hamilton French tells in the current World's Work how the parole system for boys who have been convicted for crime in New York is putting the majority of those whom it reaches upon the straight track to manly life and good citizenship.

"For boys over sixteen," says Miss French, "there was absolutely nothing except the common jail as a place of detention, nothing except the penitentiary as a place of punishment. For the benefit of these boys, then, the law was amended, and when Mr. Willard volunteered to take under his charge as an experiment, boys between the ages of sixteen and twenty-two-or-three, who had been for the first time convicted of misdemeanor, the Court turned them over to him, paroling them instead of sending them to the House of Refuge, or imprisoning them, or suspending sentence. During the course of the year there are sometimes as many as fifteen hundred of these boys arrested, at that susceptible age, when, as one of the judges said to me, 'A few days in the Tombs will act as a corrective, while a few months' imprisonment will ruin them for life. Once let a boy get into the penitentiary and his hope for redemption is small. He must be saved in the first instance or not at all '
"'And the results?' I asked one of the judges. 'The results!' he answered. 'You remember some of these boys. How nice they they were, what promising faces they had. Had we no parole system we should have been obliged to send many of them to prison. could not even have suspended their sentences. In such cases, what chances would they have had? For a boy convicted of stealing in a department store could not have been taken back under a suspended sentence. The example to the others would have been bad. But with the parole system the condition is changed. He goes back to prove himself."

THE WORD OF WISDOM.

I desire to ask a question for the benefit of many Saints. In the Word of Wisdom it is stated that hot drinks are not good. Does this mean the Saints are not to drink tea, or coffee, or cocoa?

It would seem from the heading of section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants that the meaning of the wording of what follows should be plain to all who may choose to follow its instructions. It was given as is stated:

A Word of Wisdom for the benefit of the council of high priests, assembled in Kirtland, and church; and also, the saints in Zion. To be sent greeting, not by command-ment or constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom; showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all saints in the last days. Given for a princi-ple, with promise; adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all saints, who are or can be called saints.

There are three points in this heading consideration of which should help even very weak Saints to understand what follows:

1. The things named are matters of revelation.

2. The things stated are not enforced by command, or by constraint.

3. The things named are for all Saints; and adapted to the weakest.

The things referred to are: First, the use of wine and strong drinks as a beverage, whereby drunkenness is fostered and indulged in. There is no question as to the meaning of this portion.

Second, the wine to be used in the sacrament is to be made by the Saints. There is no dubiety about this part. Strong drink, strong liquor, may be used for washing the body, in cases of weakness, sickness, or debility.

Third, tobacco is not good, neither as a food nor as a habit; this means tobacco in all its forms, snuffing, chewing, or smoking. This is also plain. It may be used to apply to bruises, cuts, on both man and beast: and is recommended especially for use in cases of sickness among cattle.

Fourth, "Hot drinks are not for the body, or belly." What does this that all drinks taken hot are not good. This will now include tea, coffee, cocoa, any and all decoctions infusions used as beverages which are taken hot. This is what it means to us as we write.

But it is not given by command, or by restraint, in the intention, or by word, Thou shalt not drink thereof. If you do drink of them you cannot consistently ask for, or expect to receive of the benefits to be otherwise possibly enjoyed by abstaining from

It may be urged that at the time the revelation was given the prevailing beverages used at the table were tea and coffee; and hence, that tea and coffee only were meant. Of this we cannot say; but so far as we know at present, there is no official statement that these two drinks, tea and coffee, were the only ones pronounced not

In the word itself there is nothing by which so specific meaning as this is intended; but there is that all hot drinks were stated to be not good for the body, or for the belly. This is to say that the body does not require hot drinks, and that the acquired taste for them to gratify the belly is not good

Pure tea and coffee, that is, genuine tea and coffee obtained from the plants that bear them are obtainable in nearly all the markets where the Saints live; but the best are high priced; the poorer qualities are possibly adulterated in some sort, so that the beverages made from them are unhealthful and possibly dangerous to life; especially is coffee susceptible to such adulterations, in the various compounds sold as ground and prepared coffee. We do not write that they are so adulterated, but they may

Fifth, "All wholesome herbs" are good and "ordained for the use of man;" every fruit and herb in its season. All to be used "with prudence and thanksgiving." This should be plain enough. Proper use may be made of every herb that is wholesome, to be taken as food or drink as the prudence, knowledge, and wisdom of man may decree. Sixth. "Flesh, also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air," has been ordained, that is, appointed or set apart, intended "for the use of man." mean? It ought to be plain enough | The use of flesh is to be sparingly, not in wantonness, or in gluttony, merely to gratify appetite. Or, in cold, or time of famine.

Seventh. "All grain is ordained for the use of man and beasts, to be the staff of life." That is, grain of the various kinds is to be the main, staple article of food for man; vegetables, roots, herbs are to give variety to the necessaries used as food, all to be received with thanksgiving and be used with prudent judgment at all times. So also is the fruit of the vine, "whether in the ground or above the ground." So that here again liberty is given to man to use the manifold creations of God to his benefit and sustenance, and no one ought to say that this is not plain enough, if any one wants to understand it.

And now, in order that Saints might know, without caviling over it, a statement is made as to what particular grains are most desirable, or suitable as food for the man and man's dependent beasts, all of which are given to him for his use and the domain of his labor, the earth.

"Nevertheless," that is to say, the most profitable and best grains to be used for the man and the beasts are as follows: "Wheat for man." This wheat may be and is used in all parts of the world for bread, unleavened or leavened, baked in the oven or on the coals of fire as necessity demands. It may be eaten raw, boiled, bruised. rolled, or ground, or prepared in an infinite number of ways, as condition or caprice may dictate. It is, however, still wheat, and is good for man. "Corn for the ox." This is equivalent to saying, that while other grains may be fed to the ox and will be beneficial, the best food for this beast of burden is corn. Oats, rye, barley, millet, corn fodder, pumpkins, squashes, beets, turnips, hay, or any other life-saving and flesh-making food may be fed, but corn is the

"Oats for the horse." It is not by this commanded that oats and nothing else is to be fed to the horse; but it is that of the foods which man may feed his horse oats is the best, most suited to his nature, most conducive to his continued usefulness to man. As in the case of the ox, when conditions demand the horse may be fed whatever is available in the place where he is used.

"Rye for fowls and for swine and all beasts of the field, and barley for all useful animals." Here again, it is pointed out that rye is the best food But other for fowls and swine. grains may be fed, if conditions may require, or needs demand.

"Barley for mild drinks, as also other grain." There is here a wide margin left for choice. Barley, or other grain may be steeped, dried, browned, or burnt, and used as the basis of a beverage for the table. It may be malted and brewed into mild drink, as may be other grains; but none of them must be stilled into strong drinks, for these are not good for man, neither for the body nor the belly, that is, neither for the sustaining of the body, nor for the gratifying of the appetite. But even when grains are made into mild drinks these drinks must be used with prudence and wisdom.

While the man who essays to keep this word of wisdom is justified in so doing, to be consistent and entitled to the promise made in it he must keep it in its several parts. If he keeps it so far as his own person is concerned he will receive personal benefit; but if he breaks it in other requirements, as for instance, those parts pertaining to his beasts, he is still not keeping it in its moral essence, and is not entitled to the reward for morality in the observance of.

True, man may feed his ox with anything the beast will eat, keep him lean and half starved, and give him no corn. The wisdom of the word is that he should feed his ox, cow, and other animals of the kine sort, corn. If he fails to do this he fails of keeping the word of wisdom.

Again; a man may avoid tea, coffee, cocoa, and other hot drinks, and by so much keep the word: but if he makes no provision for his horse that he may feed him oats, he fails to observe the word, the wise word which says that oats is the best food for the horse, the grain best adapted by divine prescience to the well-being and continued usefulness of the horse, the noblest, truest, and most useful of the beasts subject to the dominion of man. The horse whose staple food is oats, judiciously varied with other grains, other than corn, will live longer, be freer from illness, last longer in a serviceable condition, than if fed on any other grain to the exclusion of oats. Try it, you sticklers for the word of wisdom.

Swine and fowls fed on rve will be likely to be more healthy, and give better results than if fed on corn or other grains, other conditions being equal.

The swine of modern times are unhealthy and filthy because man wills it to be so. Kept in clean surroundings he will be no more unclean than other animals. Fed on proper food worth consideration.

his flesh will not be necessarily either unclean or unhealthy. All flesh should be eaten very sparingly, or not at all.

Every fruit may be eaten in its time; and its season is that in which it ripens and is succulent and healthful. Any fruit eaten in an unripe or rotten condition is unhealthful and should be avoided. Certain kinds of fruit may be kept for use in its season by proper preserving processes by which its natural qualities are not injured but preserved.

The above is eminently true of the temperate zone in which many fruits flourish, but have to be kept for winter use by the exercise of preservative care. If any one objects to this we remind him that there is no restriction in the term "in the season thereof." That season is as long as the fruit is in suitable condition to be eaten. house our potatoes, and other vegetables, apples and other hard and well keeping fruits for the winter's uses. This is permissible and so is the keeping of other things which may kept in suitable condition by care.

Every man is to be left to the exercise of his own will and discretion in this matter of the word of wisdom. If the word were given not "by command or by constraint," then the church is not justified in enforcing it by edict, or constraint. Those who may choose to observe it strictly may do so without let or hindrance, and may expect reward therefor in temporal blessing. Those who choose not to observe it must not be forced by church edict, or by the reproach of their fellows, or the sneers and jibes of those who ostensibly are keeping it, and must be contented to suffer the consequences of their failure, whatever those consequences may be.

The strictures of those who may be keeping the word of wisdom are not justified by what is found in the word itself, and are frequently much out of place and productive of evil rather than of good.

ONE PHASE OF THE GATHERING.

It is quite natural for us to have a theory in mind, without a thorough consideration of the means necessary to make it practical. A theory, however, is one thing, and practical realization another; and theory, however beautiful, is useless unless put into operation.

In different ages of the world, saints have had in view what is termed the gathering. It is represented as a work to be accomplished by which all of a like faith shall be associated together. In fact, we are told it is to be a highly developed social condition, a holy city, a community of saints. Such a condition of things is well

But is it feasible; and if so, what are the prerequisites to its accomplishment? To the first part of the question we unhesitatingly answer yes; but as to the latter part, it may require more study, prayer, self-denial, and saintly development than we have sometimes thought to be necessary before we find ourselves actually enjoying such a life.

All organization is based upon law, and the association of the Lord's people certainly can be no exception to this rule. Indeed, it must require the very highest type of organization. A brief observation of Nature and her laws reveals the fact that there is but one known force by which organization is brought about and maintained. It is known in common language as the principle of cohesion, by virtue of which particles of a like kind cleave to each other. It is upon this law of assimilation of like material that all permanent association is based. It is the principle of growth, and finds illustration in every physical product of Nature. In a wider sense, too, it may be traced in the social realm. Harmony cannot exist where affinity of spirit is not found. People of different desires and opposite tendencies do not readily assimilate and find satisfaction in each other's association.

Like cleaves to like, element supports element; and carry the application of this principle so far as we may, we shall still find it the universal law of organization. It is upon this very hypothesis that Alma renders his beautiful explanation of the restoration. Note his language:

And now behold, is the meaning of the word restoration, to take a thing of a natural state, and place it in an unnatural state, or to place it in a state opposite to its nature? O, my son, this is not the case; but the meaning of the word restoration, is to bring back again evil for evil, or carnal for carnal, or devilish for devilish; good for that which is good; righteous for that which is righteous; just for that which is just; merciful for that which is merciful; therefore, my son, see that ye are merciful unto your brethren; deal justly, judge righteously, and do good continually; and if ye do all these things, then shall ye receive your reward; yea, ye shall have mercy restored unto you again; ye shall have justice restored unto you again; ye shall have a righteous judgment restored unto you again; and ye shall have good rewarded unto you again; for that which ye do send out, shall return unto you again, and be restored. -Alma 19: 9.

In view of the above, it appears to the mind of the writer that the gathering and association of God's people is a natural sequence of the law governing. Being such it must be accomplished naturally, and in harmony with the demands of the developing nucleus. It must be a growth, as sure and systematic as the growth of a tree.

But the assimilation which results in growth cannot take place without the preparation of material; and here evidently lies the vital part of the entire matter.

There cannot be a city of saints without saints. There cannot be a divine government administered without the characteristics of divinity to carry it on. Men and women are baptized into the church from various grades of society, and many different nationalities. They are accustomed to different modes of life, have different traits of character, different methods, and are peculiar to each other in many respects. Along with these peculiarities and differences are the weaknesses of humanity, the proneness to sin, the evil tendencies and habits which prevent harmony, and mar the peace of those who would desire to live together in one common society.

To expect a sudden intermingling of this varied material without friction would be inconsistent. To attempt to force it would be disastrous. Lord has wisely instructed on this point not to be in haste, "but let all things be prepared before you." The preparation spoken of here certainly cannot be limited in application to financial matters alone. In its complete sense it evidently has reference to that thorough preparation of mind and heart which will enable the individual to feel that he is really a part of the body, and to enter in and occupy his niche in moving forward the "work intrusted to all."

There ought to be developed that binding affinity manifest in parts having the "same care one for another." The entire matter resolves itself into a question of personal preparation,—individual righteousness.

Are we making ourselves ready? Are we getting in touch with the real demands of the hour? If we are we need be in no anxiety about results. God will take care of his own, and in his good time will move upon them to gather with his people.

Whatever the experiences of others may have been, the writer has been repeatedly impressed of late to exhort the Saints to occupy higher ground. The burden of the message has been to move on and up, to be awake and diligent. More wisdom, more zeal, more faith in God, more self-examination, and a greater willingness to sacrifice, are some of the duties of the hour, as we view matters.

In these days of deception, haste, and carelessness, discernment of principle should be sought with the greatest care, and all the prerequisites to our chosen work should receive most earnest thought. Personalities should be pushed aside, and purity and judgment placed in the ascendency.

The theme is an interesting one. It ought to elicit sober consideration. Never a problem of greater interest confronted any people than that which now meets the Saints for solution.

Can we accomplish the work? We certainly can if we rest our faith in God, and with prayerful study of his commandments move forward with humility of mind in the fearless discharge of duties enjoined.

STANDARDS.

In character men and women are on a level with their affections. In real worth we stand neither above nor below this plane. The standards of living we possess are merely our inmost desires, and to their level we inevitably tend. It is impossible for one to rise above a given point, so long as that point remains the guiding star of conduct.

In the light of this self-evident truth the selection of a standard is of the greatest importance. In making our selection, however, we ought not deceive ourselves with the thought that a standard can be erected beyond the sphere of the mind's desires, trusting to outside forces alone to elevate us to its level. High though such a plane of life might be, it cannot be ours until it represents our real desires. We may look upon it, and admire it, but beyond that upon which the soul centers its energies we can never progress.

We sometimes wonder why it is that some are constantly ascending in the scale of life. They are not loud in profession. They do not seem boastful or pretentious; and yet they constantly improve. Could we penetrate the inmost recesses of their beings, we should find that they are anxious for something better. They are looking upward, and no amount of trial, disappointment, or opposition will prevent their steady progress towards the end they seek.

Again we observe others who claim a love for the right. They profess an admiration for the gospel, and the hope it brings to them of better things. Yet their lives do not respond. They do not seem to be able to get out of the ruts in which the gospel light first found them. They cling tenaciously to evil habits, and manifest but little if any change toward a higher condition of life.

Why is it? The answer is apparent. The fact is, their standards are unchanged. They may not think this to be true, but it certainly cannot be otherwise. They may admire briefly the truths presented to them, but the mind's affections are not severed from other things. The atmosphere of former surroundings hovers around them, and they are not disposed to remove themselves from it.

While such conditions obtain, all the effort and influence which men may use, nor all the power that God may exert, can ever bring them to a higher plane of life. They are wedded to their desires, and until they are willing to be divorced from them and direct their attention to better things, they cannot consistently expect to approach nearer to God.

The redemption of an individual is a hopeless task unless a desire for something better can be awakened in the mind. When this is really accomplished results for good are sure.

As we view it, it is a grave mistake to teach men that salvation is arbitrary. That outside of our own efforts the hand of God will be stretched forth to redeem upon the mere expression of a nominal belief in his power. This is contrary to the natural order of things. The efforts of the mind must be enlisted, and its energies directed toward the end to be accomplished, before personal benefit can accrue to the individual in any undertaking.

Jesus proclaimed the secret of the whole question of development when he said to the Jews:

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

Truth, then, is the real and only correct standard for perfection of life. It is the rule of Divinity. But even truth is of no utility to us unless we make it our standard. We must know the truth before we can experience the freedom which it brings. In other words, we must have personal comprehension of its power. Its virtue must be ours. Let men once realize this fact, and much will have been accomplished for their redemption. That the world might be so instructed, Jesus evidently came as an educator. He subscribed to the law of truth himself, and recommended its observance by others. In so coming and teaching he presented but one plan. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," were his words.

It is a sad reflection upon our present state of society that we are taught to believe in a multiplicity of standards for the regulation of conduct. We recognize one in one profession, and another in another. There is one for the merchant, another for the lawyer, still another for the politician, and a widely different one for the minister. We are expected to applaud in one sex what we condemn in the other. It is not an uncommon thing to manifest one kind of religion Sundays, and another kind during the week. Our manner of life at home and abroad is widely different. are even told from the pulpit that there are numerous methods of salvation, and that men are allowed a large degree of liberty in selecting that which appeals to their present ideas as a means for their redemption.

And so on almost without limit we are continually endeavoring to adjust our conceptions of right and wrong in the balances of men. Do we forget that we are no higher than our standards, whatever our sex, age, birth, or profession? Let us remember that with God there is but one standard. Time cannot alter it. Wealth nor power may change it. The philosophy of men can never detract one grain from its just measure. It is the standard of Right. Eternal in its character, it must ultimately rule, though sadly below par among men at the present time.

In the mad scramble for wealth and power, in the supreme effort to excel others, in the routine of business life, the din of battle, or even the quietude of home, how seldom indeed is the pure, white banner of righteousness raised as a standard for the people to follow. By righteousness we do not mean mere outward show, but right doing for the sake of its own inherent virtue. What a happy social condition must that be where all conduct is based strictly on the rule of Right! What peace, what purity, what perfect harmony must prevail under such conditions!

How many, even among those who profess to be Saints, are earnestly endeavoring to measure their lives by this rule? How many would more willingly part with wealth, pleasure, or the world's approval, than a little of their own integrity?

We should learn that there is not, nor can be, a righteous excuse for wrong doing. No price ought to be placed upon purity of character.

The standard of a true life must be inflexible. Planting our feet firmly upon this rock, though we may be met with storm, opposition, and trial for a time, success, in its supreme sense, is assured us at last.

WHAT OF THE TIMES?

Behold the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare; before they spring forth I tell you of them —Isaiah 42: 9.

The mission of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is one which is greatly misunderstood and misrepresented among all classes of mankind, among the learned and scholarly as well as among the unlearned and ignorant. Why should its mission work be thus misunder-Why thus misrepresented? stood? Why thus despised and slandered? Why should men of all classes choose to remain in ignorance in regard to such an important message as we bring? Yes, Why? Echo answers, Why? Why should the mission work of Christ have been so misunderstood, misrepresented, and slandered as finally to lodge him on the cruel cross, there to die a martyr's death, while a very few, compared to the masses, believed his message? Why should the apostles of Christ have suffered as they did in the most cruel and horrible manner, as well as other believers in Christ during the first centuries? Why all this? Why were the prophets of old made to suffer as they did, being stoned to death, cast among wild beasts, into dungeons, into a fiery furnace, and every other imaginable way of torture? such cruel, inhuman treatment? Why has this people, called Latter Day Saints, been subjected to such cruelties and barbarities as have been perpetrated on them ever since 1823? Why should one human being thus persecute and molest another for entertaining opinions suitable and satisfactory to himself, so long as those opinions and beliefs do not infringe upon the rights of others? Yes, echo answers, Why? Are we not all created alike? Have we not all one Creator? Are we not all brethren, originated from the same first cause? Have we not all partaken of God's likeness. the image of his person? Are we not all subject to his dominion? He it was who said, "Let there be light," and "Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness." He also said to those whom he thus created:

Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth

This, so far as the record tells us, is the first communication committed by the Creator to the creature; and from that time on continued these communications from time to time as circumstances rendered them necessary, either to give instruction, advice, or counsel; reprove or rebuke, just as any earthly parent would act towards his children.

But there came a time when those children whom he had thus created in his image transgressed the laws which had been given them, and thus lost their inheritance where they had been placed, but still the Lord continued to communicate with them and informed them in regard to the conditions, by obedience to which he would again accept them as sons and daughters; and from time to time prophets and holy men were raised up that spoke comfort to their troubled souls or reproved them for their iniquity and rebellion as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. While some received the advice and counsel of those men, others scorned and laughed, as, for instance, when Noah, a man sent of God, was sent to reprove them of their wickedness and cry repentance, instead of giving heed to his admonition they laughed him to scorn, thinking that he was just silly enough to believe that there would come a flood and drown the whole world, and just silly enough to go to work and manufacture such a structure of a ship, and that right on the dry land. The record tells us that there were only eight souls saved in the ark, and they were of his own family. That, in itself, would indicate to our minds that they must have considered him very foolish, as no one was willing to believe his testimony outside of his own family. Thus we see at that early period of the world's history, only about sixteen hundred years after the creation, men wandered away from their Creator to the extent that they were not willing to accept the message that their Creator sent them, and their minds had become so darkened that they were not able to perceive nor understand the voice of inspiration as it came through this man of God.

Christ the great teacher of the human race, who spake as never man spake, informs us that as it was in the days of Noah so shall it be in the days of the Son of man.

We have already noticed how it was in the days of Noah. They were in darkness; they were in rebellion to God; were not willing to listen to the voice of inspiration; they rejected the message that would have brought them life and salvation in a temporal sense. They scorned those who desired their welfare and safety, and hence all except eight were drowned in the flood.

How is it, my friends? Will you concede Christ to be a true prophet? If so, you must admit that this will be the condition in which he will find the people at his coming. But, says one, there will be no prophets, no voice of inspiration prior to Christ's coming, so they cannot reject nor rebel against that which does not exist. Well, if that is so, you simply assert that Noah did not speak by inspiration; and if he did not speak by inspiration, how could he tell about the flood and prepare to meet it beforehand? If Noah was a prophet of God, sent out to warn the inhabitants of the earth of the coming calamity, so will God send a prophet before the coming of Christ, to warn the people of the calamity that shall then come upon the earth. And as in the days of Noah the people failed to give heed to the voice of warning, and were busy with the things of this life. eating, drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the flood came and destroyed them all, so shall it be in the day of the coming of the Son of man to those whose minds have become darkened through the cares and anxieties of this life, and who fail to listen to those whom God has sent to warn the people of the things that are coming upon the earth. Listen, oh ye people, what the voice of inspiration says:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made the heaven, and the earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

The language just quoted is what John the Revelator said should take place in the hour of God's judgment, just prior to the coming of the Son of when a desolating scourge should be poured out upon the nation, there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. — Luke 21:25, 26.

In this peculiar epoch of time, an angel is to bring this message, and as God always acts in harmony with himself, he will send this angel to some one chosen for the purpose of carrying out the details contained in this message, just as he did in days of old, when the prophets received angelic ministration in order to be made acquainted with the purposes of God in dealing with mankind. Those men. called prophets, were the instrumentality in God's hands to carry out his purposes; and inasmuch as it appears from the revelation that a certain message is to be delivered just before Christ's coming, we will expect this message to be delivered through some human instrumentality. If not so, God must have changed. He has positively declared, not once, or twice, but many times that he does not change, not even to a shadow of turning, hence, we are warranted in the conclusion that God will choose some one to bring this message of warning to the nations of the earth. This is our faith, what others have hoped for, what Charles Wesley, the reformer of the eighteenth century, looked for, and hence gave expression to the following language:

Almighty God of love, Set up the attracting sign And summon whom thou dost approve As messengers divine.

From favored Abram's seed The new apostles choose. In isles and continents to spread The soul reviving news.

In harmony with the foregoing, I shall call your attention to language found in Isaiah 11:10, 11, 12. The reader is requested to read it. It will be observed from that scripture that at the time when the Lord shall "set his hand the second time" to gather his people, Israel, from all the countries where they were scattered at the time when Jerusalem was destroyed by the forces of Titus the Roman General and afterwards Emperor, the Lord shall set up an "ensign," and to it shall the Gentiles or nations seek. Ensign means, a standard, a banner, that which is established by authority to be used as a rule to govern. Hence it is necessary in determining what this "ensign" is, which God is going to set up, to find out first what God's "standard" or rule of action is toward the human race; second, what this standard or rule of action is to accomplish for humanity. I believe it will be conceded by all Bible believers that Christ came to establish a rule by the authority of his father, which was to govern members of the human family in their actions in life; in other words, it was to be a standard by which men should shape their lives, so that when the great and last change shall come they shall not be measured by this measurement (God's word, his standard) and be found wanting. This word or standard is also termed the gospel, or the everlasting gospel. We have thus es- find in the seventeenth chapter of tablished the fact that the gospel of Christ is his standard which he raised for the human family, when he was here on earth, and which his followers after him continued to hold aloft, that people might come to it.

Now the question, What shall this standard accomplish for humanity?

Paul says:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salva-tion.—Romans 1:16

That is, of course, on the condition of obedience to that gospel, if not so,

The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.

Thus you will see, my friends, this statement of Christ's is in harmony with what has already been presented, that our acts in life will be measured by that standard, and if not found in harmony with it we shall be found wanting. The question might here be asked. Why the necessity of raising a standard at the time of the gathering of the Jews back to their own country when Christ himself set it up when here on earth? To this we reply that the standard that Christ set up at that time was, in the process of time, rejected, and the creeds of men substituted in lieu thereof, so that it was no longer the bright and shining light that lighted our spiritual pathway and by which mankind was to be guided and directed throughout life, according to the promise made by Christ that when the Spirit of truth is come, it shall guide you into all truth, and will show you things to come. But there came a time when, by reason of transgression and departure from the word of God, this spirit did not reveal the will of Christ to men. Paul foresaw and foretold this time in unmistakable terms, when he said:

For I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock.—Acts 20: 29.

For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.—2 Timothy 4:3, 4.

Read also 2 Thessalonians 2, and 2 Peter 2:1-4. But, that you may know how this once beautiful bride of Christ (his church) looked, see Revelation 12:1, and compare it with the description given of her in Revelation 17; then, possibly, you will be able to understand why the Spirit no longer guided, why it no longer revealed the will of Christ in regard to directing the affairs of his church. Paul says that Christ bears the same relation to the church as the husband does to the wife, and as it was unlawful for a man to be separated from his wife, save for the cause of fornication, the same rule will apply to Christ and the church; and as we Revelation that this woman (the church of Christ) had committed fornication with the kings of the earth (church and state united) and had a golden cup in her hand, full of abomination and filthiness of her fornication (false and corrupt doctrines, precepts of men) which she presented to the kings and the nations of the earth, of which they also partook and became drunk. And in this drunken condition they became unconscious to the truth (the standard of God). Thus we see how the standard was taken down, hence a necessity for a setting up again (restoration) of the same old standard. That is what the Prophet Isaiah says shall be done in the period of time when the Jews, the covenanted people of God, shall again return to their own country, Palestine. While this standard was afloat and held aloft by representative men, they were persecuted, scorned, put to death by those who were not willing to come to this standard, nor that others should come to it, because it was not in harmony with their preconceived opinions. They placed themselves in opposition to the work of God, and that would be sufficient proof that they were in the dark, and did not see when good cometh, and thus rejected the counsel of God against themselves. "For he that is of God, heareth God's word." The negative of this would be: He that will not hear (and to hear means to obey) God's word, is not of God.

My friends, to which class do you belong? Are you among those who will hear (that is give heed to and obey) the warning voice, which shall be brought to the nations of the earth before the coming of the Son of man, just as it was before the flood overtook the people in Noah's time, and this shall be done as a witness against those nations and people, so they shall have no excuse in the day of judgment? We have presented to you the fact that such a warning voice shall go forth; also, that when it shall go forth it will be in the day when the Jews shall be gathered back, when the judgments of God are to be poured out upon the nations, when all things shall be in commotion and men's hearts fail them for fear, when there shall be wars and rumors of wars, when nations shall be distressed and perplexed, and as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of man.

A very important statement concerning the great fruitfulness of Palestine is as follows:

I arrived in Indiana a few days since, from the Eastern Continent. I stopped at Joppa nearly the whole winter. For my part I was well pleased with the country. It is certainly a land of most wonderful fruitfulness, with a delightsome climate, producing everything, if properly caltivated, and from two to three crops in a year. They have grain, fruit, and vegetables all the year round; in fact I was never in such a country before. have seen much good country in Europe and America, but none to compare with Palestine; its fruitfulness is uncommon, and the climate the most delightsome; even in winter I did not see the least sort of frost, and vegetables of every sort were growing in perfection in gardens. It is a fact that the rain. and dew are restored; recently in 1853, the former and latter rain were restored, to the aston-ishment of the natives. The Jews have been returning to the Holy Land for some time, and are increasing, going to their beloved Canaan from many parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa. They are making preparations to rebuild cities, and build railroads The fruit in Palestine is better than in Europe and America. They have camels, mules, horses, asses, cattle, sheep, and goats; but saw no hogs. The natives are generally friendly.—Louis Van Buren, Sen, November 14, A. D, 1867.

Thus writes a traveler from that country which for centuries has been a barren waste. See Joel chapter 1 what the condition should be. From the years 337 to 361 an attempt was made to rebuild Jerusalem, of which the historian writes as follows:

Then came Julian, called "the Apostate," a nephew of Constantine the Great. He was brought up as a Christian, but turned against it, and tried to rebuild polytheism doubtedly the church would have suffered greatly, but after the reign of only twenty months he was killed in battle with the Persians. He gave the Jews permission to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem. When they tried it, even before they laid the foundation stones, they were compelled to stop the work because balls of fire miraculously issued from the ruins and there was an earthquake and dreadful noise.

Mosheim says that these things are attested by such credible evidence that their truth cannot be doubted. By many it was taken as an evidence of the truth of Christ's prophecy that Jerusalem should lie waste and desolate

From the foregoing we see plainly that the time for rebuilding Jerusa lem had not then come; but from the former statement we see that since the year 1853, when the "former and latter rain" were restored, the population is gradually increasing and rebuilding the cities, and it is said that there are more Jews in Jerusalem today than there ever were before. Thus we see the fulfillment of the prophecy made by Joel 2: 21-23.

Now let me call your attention to a prophecy made in Isaiah 29: 9-24. wherein the statement is made that just a little while before Lebanon (Palestine) is to become a fruitful field, a book is to come forth, and in that day the Lord will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder. And yet we are told that there are no such things as miracles, and that the Lord will work among mankind no more. We are just living in the time when Palestine is again becoming fruitful, when the Jews are being gathered and the judgments of God are being poured out upon the nations. and the Lord positively says that in that time he will do a "marvelous work and a wonder," he will "set up an ensign to the nations," he will send "his angel with the everlasting gospel." What more evidence do you want, my dear reader? Is it not plain enough? Is it not positive enough? And is the word of God not authority enough? What more do you want?

Well, says one, God would not reveal it to Joseph Smith, you cannot make me believe that. If such a work was to come forth. God would not reveal himself to an illiterate boy as he was, but to some one of more influence and prominence.

My dear reader, we will concede that such an argument may look very plausible; but when we consider, as we have formerly, that God always works in harmony with himself, so he will do in this instance. He says his ways are not our ways; neither his thoughts our thoughts. When choosing his apostles he did not choose them from among the wise of that age, from among the scribes and Pharisees; but from among the unlearned, humble fishermen, that he might show forth his power and strength, through the weak and foolish things of the world to confound the wise and learned. We should. however, have had no objection to accepting the "restored gospel" through some other channel, if God should have so directed; but I believe that if God had directed or called some one else to bring about the restoration of the ancient standard, we would have heard from them, and the fact that no one has made any such claim, except Joseph Smith, is evidence that he has called none others, and as God does not light a lamp and put it in a hiding place but on a candlestick, where others may see it, hence we believe that none other has received this calling, for the language is that this ensign should be raised, and the Gentile nations should seek to it, hence must be able to see it. If others have received it, it has never come to light.

As Joseph Smith is the only one who has made any such claim as that, why not investigate his claim? According to the prophecies his claims are made at the right time, just a little while before "Lebanon (Palestine) should be turned into a fruitful field," which was in 1853, and he made his claim in 1830. He also made the statement that all their creeds (re-This ligious tenets) were wrong. they have virtually admitted, by continually tinkering with them, changing or adding to them to suit themselves. If not wrong, why change? I have before me a statement taken from the Kansas City Journal, May 14, 1900, as follows:

Several Presbyterians have asked specifically that the assembly should appoint a commistee to consider the whole question of creed revision, while others desire simply that a new creed should be ordered, leaving the old one untouched to be preserved intact as an historical document, while the new version shall be the working creed of the

Now this is only one out of the many that are being changed and re-Is that not an evidence, my vised. friends, that they are wrong, thus simply admitting what the young man stated was the case, namely, that they were all wrong and an abomination in the sight of God. While it is not the intent to enter into a discussion relative to the details of his teaching, this much can be said, that what he presented at the first as the teaching of Christ and his apostles has never needed any revision, and never will, but is in perfect harmony with the teachings of the Bible, and others have, since the organization of the church in 1830, been adopting some things taught by us, or in other words, put on the sheep's clothing.

A word or two in reference to the church, which went out west to the Salt Lake Valley. Some seem to be still under the impression, that is, where we are not known, that the church which went west is a continuation of the one organized by Joseph Smith in 1830, and that he was the originator of this abominable doctrine of polygamy. This is not so, my friends. Joseph was not the originator of that doctrine, any more than John the Revelator was in his time, when it was then entering into the church as is recorded in Rev. 2:14, 15. It is true that the leaders of the Utah church claim that Joseph Smith was the originator of that "so-called" revelation on polygamy; but all the writings of Joseph Smith were strictly opposed to it, which history shows. The Utah leaders themselves acknowledged under oath, in a law suit some years ago between the Reorganized Church and the Hedrickite Church. that Joseph neither taught nor practiced it and that they (the Utah leaders) did not know anything about that doctrine at that time. I have the abstract of their evidence before me as taken at the time. This bold assertion that Joseph Smith was the author of polygamy, was not made until eight years and two months after his death, when upon the 29th day of August, 1852, this dogma for the first time was publicly proclaimed to the world, and that contrary to the standard books of the church, which were the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. The Book of Mormon is a history of the ancient inhabitants that lived on the American Continent of which the American Indians are descendants, and it says on page 116:

Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus said the Lord of hosts.

Now those who think that Joseph Smith was the manufacturer of that book, and that it is the foundation of polygamy and everything that is bad, please tell me, why did Joseph put that clause in there, that condemns the practice in stronger terms than anything that can be found in the Bible?

The Doctrine and Covenants contains the revelations given to the church since its organization in 1830. It condemns polygamy. Hear what it says:

For marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.-D. C. 49:3.

Many similar passages could be adduced from both books but this is sufficient to show the tenor of the books. Thus the unprejudiced mind will be able to see at a glance that these books condemn and oppose it.

In addition to this, I will present his own words relative to certain corrupt doctrines, which a certain elder had been guilty of teaching. following is taken from Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 423, published February 1, 1844, a few months before his death.

As we have lately been credibly informed, that an Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter-day Saints, by the name of Hiram Brown, has been preaching Polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines, in the county of Lapeer, state of Michigan.

This is to notify him and the Church in general, that he has been cut off from the church, for his iniquity; and he is further notified to appear at the Special Conference, on the 6th of April next, to make answer to these charges. JOSEPH SMITH.

> HYRUM SMITH. Presidents of said Church.

It was thought necessary by Brigham Young and his followers to at tach the name of Joseph Smith to polygamy in order to give it prestige and pass it off for genuine doctrine; but that was not all that Brigham invented. He also taught that Adam was our God, and the only God with whom we have to do, and also the doctrine of blood atonement, that is, that if a man was about to apostatize, his blood should be spilled in order to save his soul. And he taught other corrupt doctrines after they went west. But the idea that he became the leader of of the whole church and the successor of Joseph Smith is a miserable mis- his feet part of iron and part of clay.

take, to say the least. Because Joseph Smith had already appointed his oldest son to be his successor, and Brigham Young led only a small portion of the church away, somewhere between ten and twenty thousand, and the church numbered, at Joseph Smith's death, between one hundred and fifty and two hundred thousand. The remainder of the church remained in the east, true to the teachings which they had received since the organization of the church, and while the church was in somewhat of a disorganized state for some years, yet they remained loyal and true to the pure doctrine of the gospel, and in the year 1852 a reorganization movement was effected, but not fully organized until 1860. This is what is now termed the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the true continuation of the one organized

This is a true account of the work which God was to set up in the last days, and which should not be left to See Daniel 2:44. another people. The work which he set up while on earth was left to other people. Because the Jews would not receive it, it was taken away from them and given to the Gentiles, as also Christ foretold, when he said:

Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof .-Matt. 21:43

And Paul says:

Seeing ye have put it [the word of God] from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles.— Acts 13: 46.

There you see, my friends, the fulfillment of the word of Christ, that the kingdom was taken from them and given to another people [the Gentiles], even in the days of Paul. Thus we see plainly, that this was not the one spoken of by the Prophet Daniel, which should not be left to another people, but should stand forever.

But as mere assertion is not proof, and never will be, we will offer some additional proofs. The language of Daniel is:

And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people.—Daniel 2:44.

If we can find out who these kings are, who are here referred to, we have the key which unlocks the mystery as to the time when this kingdom should be set up, which should not be left to other people.

The reader is kindly requested to read the whole of the 2d chapter of Daniel and by doing so you will discover that the king Nebuchadnezzar had seen in his dream an image of a man, whose head was of gold, his breast and arms of silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron,

This image is to represent four kingdoms which should arise, one inferior to the other, which you will discover by reading the interpretation in verses 37 to 43. The kingdom over which Nebuchadnezzar was king was the kingdom represented by the head of gold. After the days of Nebuchadnezzar, his son Belshazzar became king; but like his father, he became lifted up in the pride of his heart, and humbled not himself before the Lord, and his kingdom was given to the Medes and the Persians, which is the second kingdom, the one pressented by the breast and arms of silver. See Daniel 5: 28. This kingdom was finally overcome by Alexander the Great, who when he had conquered the world, it is said, sat down and cried, because there was nothing more to conquer. This is the third kingdom, the one represented by the belly and thighs, of brass, which should rule over all the earth. But that was succeeded by still a fourth kingdom, represented by the legs of iron, forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things, so shall it break in pieces and bruise. This is the Roman Empire, and during the consolidated existence of this empire, our Lord and Savior made his appearance and set up his kingdom of which he said, "The kingdom of heaven shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruit thereof."

But this Roman Empire was not always to remain intact, but there came a time when it was divided and subdivided, as represented by the feet and toes of the image, first into two divisions, the Eastern and Western Empires, as represented by the two feet, these were again to be subdivided into ten kingdoms, as represented by the ten toes of the image. Of this fact history bears record and says:

In 456 the Vandals sacked Rome, and in 476 the Heruli from Germany again took the city. That was the fall of the Western Empire. From that time is counted its division into ten kingdoms.

Scott in his Commentary says that these ten kingdoms were: Rome itself, Lombardy, Ravenna, the Huns in Hungary, the Alemanes in Germany, the Franks in France, the Goths, the Bergundians, the Britons, the Saxons. From this we discover that the kingdoms represented by the ten toes of the image had their origin about the year 476 A. D. As these kingdoms were never again consolidated into one universal kingdom, as the four previous kingdoms had been, we then look for the setting up of the kingdom of God during the existence of these kingdoms, and as these kingdoms are still in existence, perhaps not by the same names, we see no reason why anyone should object to the claim that we make, that it was set up in the days of these kings, or during the existence of the kingdoms, represented by the toes, which were to come from the two feet of the image (the Eastern and Western Empires). The kingdom referred to, which God would set up, could not possibly have been the one set up by Christ, firstly, because the Roman Empire or fourth kingdom was not then divided nor subdivided into the ten kingdoms, and we have already noticed that Christ appeared, while this Roman Empire existed as a unit; secondly, the kingdom that Christ established while here, he said should be given to another people, while the one which he would set up in the days of these kings "should not be left to another people." Hence we have found the key which solves the mystery, when this kingdom should be set up, namely, after the year 476, when these kingdoms had their origin. And we are not aware, as we have said before, that anyone from that time to this had laid claims. to divine revelation, which is the only means by which God could again reëstablish his kingdom, except Joseph Why not investigate his Smith. claims? Why turn the deaf ear to the warning cry, which he made, that Christ is coming personally to reign on the earth, and as the apostle says,

In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord.—2 Thess. 1:8, 9.

Reader, are you willing to admit that we are living in the last days? Do you believe that Christ is coming to receive his bride which is his church, and his church is composed of saints? The Psalmist says:

Gather my saints together unto me; those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.—Psalm 50:5.

Not only should those on earth be gathered, but they should be gathered together with those in heaven, and a general gathering of all things in heaven and on earth shall take place. (Ephesians 1:10.) Jude in his epistle, 14th verse, says:

Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints.

Thus we see that there will be saints on earth and saints in heaven, who shall be united together. Where are the saints on earth? Who are they? They are those whom he has called to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Are you one of them? Have you obeyed the call at the end of the day, at supper time, when the Lord is sending out his servants along the highways, to invite you to come unto the marriage supper? Or are you among that class who were like those in the days of Noah, eating, drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and are so much taken up with the cares and anxieties of this world that you have neither time nor disposition to give heed to the warning voice, which God again has caused to be proclaimed on the earth, for the salvation of mankind and of warning the inhabitants of the judgments of God to be poured out upon the earth, thus fulfilling the prophecy of our Savior, "that as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man"?

In conclusion, will quote the language of John Wesley, the founder of the Methodist Church, which is very significant, as it presents to our mind the thought that God had to some extent inspired others with a hope that his work would again be established on the earth, as much so as he inspired Simeon and Anna of old, by which they had hope of seeing Christ the Lord before they should close their eyes in death. Wesley says:

The times which we have reason to believe are at hand-if not already begun-are what many pious men have termed the time of the latter-day glory; meaning the time wherein God would gloriously display his power and love in fulfillment of the promise that "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters covers the sea." The generality of Christians can see no signs of the glorious day that is approaching; but how is this to be accounted for? How is it that men who can now "discern the face of the sky," who are not only great philosophers, but great divines, as eminent as ever the Sadducees or Pharisees were, do not discern the signs of the glorious times, which if not begun are night even at the door? And yet the wise men of the world, men of learning and renown, can not understand what we mean by talking of an extraordinary work of God. They cannot discern the signs of these times. They see no signs at all of God arising to maintain his own cause, and set up his kingdom over all the earth. What could God have done which the earth. What could God have uone which he hath not done to convince you that the day is coming, that the time is at hand when he will fulfill his glorious promise, and will arise to maintain his own cause and set up his kingdom?—Sermon 71, On the Signs of the Times, by John Wesley.

Thus we see that Mr. Wesley understood the promises of God spoken of in Daniel 2:44; Isaiah 11:12; 49:22; Revelation 14:6 and many other places which speak of the establishment of God's kingdom or church again on the earth. Why is it men cannot see it or will not see it?

May the Lord help us to stand in the way and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good old way, that we may walk therein, and find rest to our souls, for whoso seeketh shall find, is the promise. Dear reader, do not overlook the day of your visitation. The Lord is coming, he has sent his messenger to prepare the way before him, and as he sent a prophet before the flood and before his first coming to earth, so will he send a prophet before the great and dreadful day of the Lord:

And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.—Malachi 4:6.

He will thus make the days of the coming of the Son of man like unto the days of Noah, when he destroyed the people for not listening and giving heed to the prophet whom the Lord had sent. Will you listen to God's servants now? If not, will you be able to stand when he shall appear? May the Lord of life and glory help you so to do.

RECORD OF THE CENTURY.

The nineteenth century has made an ineffaceable mark upon the world. The march of progress in civilization, in invention and in science has been rapid, and future generations will yield acknowledgment to the fact. The age of romance has not left greater impression upon the literary and military history of the globe than will the century just closing upon the general advancement of the human race. This very advancement has, however, multiplied the dangers which accrue to humanity, since greater civilization has added perils peculiarly its own to those which already existed.

The nineteenth century has been particularly unfortunate in disasters which in their very magnitude have appalled the entire human race. Earthquakes have cost the lives of thousands in various countries of the civilized globe, and famine, tidal waves, fires and floods have added horrors to the smaller disasters, while death by shipwreck or railway accident has become a familiar terror.

Some of the most disastrous earthquakes of the century have been the one which befell India in 1819, when 2,000 persons were killed; the one which caused a loss of 6,000 lives in Canton, China, in 1830, that which buried 1,000 persons in Calabria in the year 1835, and the one in 1842, when 5,000 were killed in San Domingo. More frightful still was the earthquake in southern Italy, when 14.000 perished, and the one in which 10,000 residents of Calabria lost their lives in 1857. Two years later, in Quito. there were 5,000 deaths from the same cause; in 1860 there were 7,000 in South America, and in Manila, in 1863, 1,000.

Indeed, the '60s were particularly prolific in deaths by earthquakes, for in '67 1,000 lives were lost in Mitylene, and in 1868, in Arequipa and that district, there was a total of 25,000. The next appalling disaster of the kind was in San Jose, Colombia, in 1875, when no less than 14,000 died.

In Icio there were 4,000 deaths in 1881, and in 1883, in Cassamicciola, 9,990 were killed. With 1887 came in the well-remembered horror in Charleston, S. C., when only fortyfive lives were lost, but $5,000,000 worth of property was destroyed. In Japan, in 1891, 5,000 died and 5,000 were injured.

In 1837 came the first great famine of the century, that of India. It was followed by the great famine which devastated Ireland nine years later, while in 1860, '65, '68, '76, '97 and '99 respectively India was again laid waste by far-reaching famine.

Nor did these vast tragedies finish the list of wide spread disaster in the century. In 1871 the great fire almost wiped out the Chicago of that day, and in 1889 the breaking of the Conemaugh dam destroyed the flourishing municipality of Johnstown. In the same year a tidal wave in Japan swept away 50,000 houses and killed 2,419 persons, while the similar disaster in Galveston in September, 1900, is too fresh in the public mind to require mention.—Philadelphia North Ameri-

SOME THINGS THAT CATHOLICS DON'T BELIEVE.

FATHER MORGAN SHEEDY ON THE CHURCH'S FAITH.

Sunday evening Father Morgan Sheedy of Altoona concluded the Advent series of sermons in St. John's church in that city. There was present an unusually large audience. The subject was "Some Things That Catholics Do Not Believe.'

After some introductory remarks to the effect that we ought to judge others as we ourselves would wish to be judged; to know their views, opinions, or forms of belief we should inquire concerning them either of the persons holding such views or doctrines, or examine their authorized statements of belief. "This is surely the only fair and safe way to proceed. Perhaps there has been more misrepresentation in matters of religion than aught else. The sectarian partisan has done far more mischief in the world than the most bitter political partisan. Let us be just always with those from whom we differ. There is surely room for the application of the Golden Rule in religious discussion," he said.

"Now let me notice some few things which we Catholics are said to believe. but which we know we do not believe.

"1. Catholics do not believe that there is any other mediator of redemption than our Savior Jesus Christ, 'for there is no other name under heaven given to men, whereby we must be saved' than that of Jesus. (Acts of Apostles 4:12).

"2. Catholics do not believe that the Virgin Mary is in any way equal or comparable to God; for she being a creature though highly favored—'full the kingdom of heaven.

of grace'—is infinitely less than God. Nor do we claim for her any power beyond that which she derives from him; for she is entirely dependent on God for her existence, her privileges, her grace, and her glory. The strong and tender expressions in frequent use among us arise quite naturally from the warmth of our devotion to the mother of our Savior. It is a common practice in all things to use expressions that are only true in a secondary and limited sense. For instance, a great poet or artist is spoken of as 'divine;' mothers often call their children 'little angels,' and lovers are said to use sometimes very extravagant terms of endearment. No one takes offense at these expressions; indeed it would be captious to do so, especially when the speaker declares his meaning.

"3. Catholics do not believe that there is any authority upon earth or in heaven that can give leave to commit sin, even the very least; or that a sin can be forgiven for money; or that a priest can give valid absolution to a sinner who does not repent and truly purpose to lead a Christian life.

"4. Catholics do not believe that the end justifies the means." This false and pernicious principle which means that one may do evil if good comes of it is reprobated and utterly condemned by the Catholic church.

"5. Catholics do not believe that the pope is sinless; that he cannot err when teaching the Christian world in matters of faith and morals we do believe; but this is quite different from saying he cannot sin; the one is infallibility; the latter impeccability, something quite distinct.

"6. Catholics do not believe that one religion is as good as another; because the proposition is absurd. There can be only one true religion; no other can be as good as that, no matter how closely it may resemble it. Christ did not give a hundred forms of belief; he gave us one and that is the best. It is our duty to find it, and having found it to accept it; no other will do.

"7. Catholics do not believe the common saying 'that it does not matter to what church you belong, or whether you belong to any; if you are a good, honest man or woman you will be saved; it is deeds, not creeds, that count.' No one who reads the New Testament can hold this view. Christ insists that, under pain of eternal loss, 'we must hear the church;' 'we must be of his kingdom.'

"8. Catholics do not believe that all non-Catholics will be lost. On the contrary, we hold that all baptized persons who lead a good life, love God and their neighbor, are in 'good faith,' knowing nothing of the just claims of the true religion, and if they truly repent of their sins—all such will enter

"These are some of the things that Catholics do not believe. It may help others as well as ourselves to have them clearly understood. Fairness, as well as sound sense, demands that one really knows his neighbor's religious views and beliefs before condemning them. To put the Catholic teaching in its proper light has been the purpose of these advent instructions. If you desire to know more on the matters touched upon read any authorized Catholic book, such as 'Catholic Belief,' 'Plain Facts for Fair Minds,' or Cardinal Gibbons' little work, 'The Faith of Our Fathers."- Johnstown, Pa., Daily Democrat, Dec. 25, '00.

PLEASANT AND PROFITABLE.

Editors Herald:-On the 15th of this month the writer had the good fortune to form a brief acquaintance with C. C. Bacon, of Imboden. Arkansas, and was pleased to accept his invitation to dine and to spend a few minutes in his museum. Mr. Bacon is a single man, thirty years of age; well versed in law; he possesses a broad general knowledge, especially of geology, minerology, ornithology, etc. His intelligence and sociability are seldom met in this vicinity. Is employed in the People's Bank; and having but a few minutes to spend, I was escorted direct from the table to what may be called Bacon's Labyrinth, not on account of its numerous, winding passages, but for the complex intricacy of the voluminous collections he has gathered. I had been introduced to his magazine containing a fine equipment of best modern fire-arms. which Mr. Bacon handles dextrously. His skill as an artist is shown by an array of sceneries from his numerous hunting expeditions. Trophies from these expeditions form a stack of horns, antlers, stuffed birds and animals, representing his own taxidermy; and he can tell where, when, and how each bird, animal, or antler was secured. At the right of the door is a spacious showcase, containing eggs, arranged in sets, from the egg of the great ostrich, fifteen inches in circumference, to the egg of the diminutive humming-bird, one fourth of an inch in diameter. Eggs of the emu as black-as night; eggs as white as snow; eggs of all intermediate sizes, and of nearly every conceivable tint and hue; eggs which nature has artistically penciled; eggs laid by nearly every specie of bird to be found on the American continent, arranged in over two hundred separate sets, and the owner is so well acquainted with his vast collection that he not only knows the name and habits of each bird. but can give even the date and place from whence each egg was obtained.

The writer, not being a quick thinker, can only mention a mere outline of what he saw! The resurrection plant; an electric stone; odd and queer sea animals; singular sea plants; ferns, fans, and lichens; old documents, among which I saw a promissory note of Thomas Jefferson for $370, in favor of Edmund Bacon, with several indorsements on the

THE PEARL-BEARING MUSSEL.

Thousands of people are now engaged with various implements, dredging the bottoms of our streams in quest of mussels, and many are being found containing pearls, ranging in value from twenty cents up to thousands of dollars, and not many of the best informed hunters are aware that there are many varieties, but Mr. Bacon has actually secured a collection of over forty varieties; many shells from which valuable pearls have been taken; shells with pearls attached; also many pearls taken from various fresh water mussels; sea shells without number, of various forms and sizes, of most exquisite beauty; five hundred old coins, from nearly every nation on earth; old bills, from the ten-cent "shinplaster" to a twelve-hundred-dollar Confederate bond; eight or ten coins over two thousand years old; superannuated firearms. A great display of alcoholics: minerals profusely and beautifully arranged, specimens from our various Ozark mines.

Antiquities form another department of this young man's collections, and it naturally interested me, and shows him to be an antiquarian of no mean repute. Unsatisfied with things from the heavens above, from the surface of the earth, and from the depths of the sea, representing things of the present and immediate past, he has with pick and spade taken with his own hands and otherwise secured a wonderful collection of the remote past. Over two thousand flint implements; spear heads from the tiny bird point, less than one half inch, of the finest agate, up to the great lance-head over ten inches in length; flint skinning implements, flint scrapers and dressers, flint knives, etc., of various colors. Stone implements, hatchets, hammers, plates, mortars, pestles, dressing stones, etc. One hundred and fifty vessels of pottery, all taken from various mounds in Arkansas; vases, mugs, tureens, censers. One of these pots stands as when unearthed by Mr. Bacon, furnished with a prehistoric couch for a cover.

A wonderful collection of fossils. Fine specimens of unmixed paints. A prehistoric horse tooth, black, and much larger than a corresponding tooth from a modern horse which lies by its side. Also bones and skulls of a long extinct, but once proud race of America. As I glanced at these hard old heads with snaggly teeth, I wondered if they might not be some of the fierce, renowned warriors of the armies of Lib or Coriantumr, but their receding foreheads, with marks of sensuality, made me conclude that they might probably be descendants of the priests of Noah, who went north from the land of Zarahemla with the people of Ammon and afterwards joined Gadianton's band.

I next pendered upon the bright, sparkling eyes of Mr. Bacon, his indomitable, persistent manhood; and it seemed to me that he must have a deep, well-defined desire to know more of these prehistoric races than he can with pick and spade extract from the moldy mound relics, so I decided to present to him the Book of Mormon, and Report of Committee on American Archæology, as soon as by any means I can secure them.

The combined efforts of Brn. Smith, Macrae, Jackson, and Ward seem to be telling for good at Bald Knob and other points, and we are fondly anticipating a feast at Martin's Creek in the near future.

Elders Ward and Black are to hold a debate at Williford next month. This country has long stood in need of a well-arranged, persistent effort. Time alone will reveal the sequel.

Respectfully,

D. R. BALDWIN.

RAVENDEN SPRINGS, Ark., Aug. 24.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., August 24.

Dear Readers:—Many times I have been edified by reading the letters in the HERALD from those who have experienced the matchless care of the Infinite One, and I feel like writing of some of the experiences of this conference year, hoping that others may have, as I have had, their trust and confidence increased thereby.

Those in charge of appointments assigned me to labor in the Eastern mission. The missionary in charge of the mission directed me to work with Bro. U. W. Greene in the New York district.

Under the sanction and direction of the authorities, I spent some time in the Lamoni Stake, laboring in Lucas, Cleveland, and Norwood, mostly in Cleveland. At Lucas the Saints had just finished some excellent improvements in their chapel, and at Norwood they were completing arrangements and plans for a new church. I found at Cleveland a most cordial welcome from a band of Saints, who were, in the unity of Christ and with a devotion which should everywhere characterize the Saints, working steadfastly in the Master's cause.

Just following this pleasant service I was in attendance at the conference of the Northeastern Illinois district at Mission. Here they have built one of the finest chapels in the church. The accustomed good will and free-heartedness of these Mission Saints was manifested as usual. The conference was a good one. Here I was joined by Mrs. Anderson. It was necessary for us to stop in Chicago, and while there we were privileged to meet with the Saints in their evening prayer service. We found the spirit of peace pervading their midst. Continuing our journey we arrived in Niagara Falls, Ontario, Sunday afternoon. At the station we were cheered by seeing the familiar faces of Bro. Robert Winning and his family, who were returning to their home at Niagara Falls, New York, from the afternoon service. Bro. Winning very kindly directed us to the Saints' chapel and the home of Bro. William Place, the branch president. We preached to the Saints in the evening and the next morning after feasting our eyes on the grandeur of the falls, we crossed over to the Pan-American. A very short stop here, and we completed our journey, Brooklyn being our destination. Here we found Bro. Greene and several of the local brethren busy getting our tenting outfit in readiness for the summer's campaign. I was glad to assist in the work, and when completed Bro. Greene with his family and I with my wife were immediately off for our assigned duties. At the Sunday prayer service, just previous to our leaving, the word of the Lord came to the missionaries through one of the sisters of the branch, wherein we were told that the work we were about to begin was pleasing to God, and that though we would be called upon to endure trials and hardships, the angels of the Lord would go before us and pave the way to a successful work and the winning of souls unto Christ. Also that our families would be cared for and all necessaries provided.

Now to our experiences which show its fulfillment. Our first point was Broad River, Connecticut, just at the outskirts of the city of Norwalk. The few Saints living here were extremely kind to us, doing all they could to make the work a success. Some were not so considerate, however, and brought to us some of the trials. Here, too, we had an encounter with the wind and rain that was not as pleasant as it might have been. I have lived all my life in southern Iowa where some, even among the people here, think it the most dreadful of all places for storms, but never in my life have I experienced or seen such a storm. Many houses were damaged and many large trees were simply uprooted or broken square in two by the wind. Our tabernacle was blown flat to the ground, but none of us received injury. With the exceptions of a few rents in the large tent and a little dampening of our groceries, we experienced no loss. In a short while, with the help of a number of friends and brethren, we had our tent up and were again ready for operations. A few nights after this we had some trouble with a young man who tried to loosen our ropes which would, of course, have let down our tent. Repeated threats had been made before that our tent would be lowered to the ground, but it was not accomplished. This young man whom we caught attempting it we delivered over to the police. When tried the next day he was fined, costs and fine amounting to almost $20. Since then we have had no trouble in this way. But all this within ten days made the trials and hardships spoken of apparent. We shall ever remember the kindness of the Broad River Saints, and we feel that the Father of all will care for them.

We next moved our tent to Scott Corners, New York, where the work had been introduced by Bro. Greene some months before. The interest here was excellent and we found many anxious to hear the gospel, some ready to receive. Seven were baptized here, this making twenty-six baptisms in this district since General Conference.

We helped organize a Sunday school here and start the use of the Quarterlies with the teachers and pupils. With persistent effort and a little patience on the part of those engaged in the work we believe a good school can be built up.

The Saints and workers at Scott Corners are young in the work but they seem very earnest and have the true spirit with them. My prayer is that the Lord will strengthen them all along the way, and that in time a branch organization may be effected there.

Our next move was to High Ridge, Connecticut, where the tent is now located. The interest here is much more than we expected. We have good crowds every night and sometimes the tent cannot accommodate all. We have tried all along to make the song services a special feature, and it has drawn many. We have with us a Bilhorn telescope organ, purchased by the district especially for our use, and with this, the help of Sr. Greene, little daughters, and Mrs. Anderson we have been able to have some good music. Outsiders have readily joined in our singing.

All through the summer we have been amply provided for and have realized to the fullest extent God's promise to care for his laborers.

The work in this part is promising in the extreme and we feel that many who have heard the word will yield obedience to the same.

At present we are in Brooklyn at the home of Bro. Squire (truly a missionary's resting place) until after Sunday, when Mrs. Anderson returns west to her school work and I to the tent with Bro. Greene. During my few days' absence, Bro. James E. Kelley has been helping in the tent services. He is on his way to the east to engage in active missionary work.

Conference of the New York district convenes in Brooklyn on the 1st and 2d of September. I trust that the Lord will graciously remember his people assembled at that time.

I feel courageous in the work and pray to be faithful that I may rejoice in its triumph.

Hopefully your brother,

227 McDougal Street.

UNDERWOOD, Iowa, Aug. 26. Editors Herald:-This district comprises three counties; viz., Pottawattamie, Cass, and Adair, including seven branches, all of which I have visited with two exceptions, and I find a great many large-hearted Saints anxious to see the work move on, and they do not stop at trifles. As an illustration of their zeal, we mention the effort of the branch at Boomer to build a church. Sometime last spring the idea was conceived, and at present writing they have the frame erected and inclosed, and it will be ready for occupancy by the first of October. The site was donated by one who does not belong to the church, and the money is all in sight to complete the building. However, the credit does not belong to the members alone, as there has been much of the money subscribed and labor donated by those who do not belong to the church. In all our experience we have never seen their determination equaled. Ye missionaries, Chambers and Wight, put in three long, hot days working on the frame and preaching at night. We are in hopes that there will no hard feelings arise through misunderstanding or otherwise, as is so often the case when churches are built.

Bro. Chambers and I have been holding meetings two miles south of Weston and had quite a good hearing. At present am at Underwood, where I will remain until conference, which convenes at Hazel Dell branch, August 31. The missionaries have been considerably handicapped this season because they have had no tabernacle to hold meetings in. We think the Saints made a mistake last spring when they decided not to purchase a tent, and the only way to get out of the dilemma is to rectify the mistake and make a purchase.

We are expecting Bro. F. M. Cooper here tonight. How long he will stay we have not been apprised. Bro. Cooper's labors at the Bluffs and Crescent are highly appreciated, and he seems to be peculiarly adapted for this western mission. Our aged Bro. Strain is always found at his post, regardless of the severe heated term that has prevailed during the entire summer. I expect to return home about the 15th of September and be in attendance at the reunion held at Dow City.

Yours,

R. WIGHT.

FAIRLAND, I. T., Aug. 24.

Editors Herald:-We are battling away the best we can to hold up this great latter-day flag before the people. Bro. W. M. Aylor and I are laboring together, and the good Lord is blessing us with good success, so far, wherever we go. We have fairly good crowds and good interest. The work is onward in this part of the field. More calls for preaching than can be filled. I hope they will give us more missionaries next year. The Lord is causing the people to see the light of the gospel down here as well as elsewhere, or at least some of them are accepting it. Since the first of May Bro. Aylor and I together have buried twenty-five in the waters of baptism, and quite a number of others are almost persuaded. Ever praying for the up-building of this great latter-day work, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. T. RILEY.

NECEDAH, Wis., Aug. 13.

Editors Herald:—There are but few of us here, but where there are even a few of the children of light living near each other, there seems to be a desire for meetings. So it was with us, and accordingly Elder A. L. Whiteaker, assistant president of the district, came over here about the middle of last February and organized us into a prayer meeting. We met, and still continue to meet at private houses on each Wednesday evening.

Sometime in March Elder J. B. Wildermuth organized us into a Religio, which still exists with Sr. Ivy Fisher. president, Sr. Rillie Moore assistant president, Sr. Jane Barnes secretary and treasurer. We are studying the lessons as mapped out in Autumn Leaves, and although behind the present programs, we are in hopes of soon coming up with them by using review lessons.

Shortly after organizing our Religio, we organized a Sunday school with Bro. John Moore superintendent; Sr. Jane Barnes assistant superintendent; Sr. Ivy Fisher secretary and treasurer; Sr. Freda Fisher librarian. We met at first in our houses, but the school directors, although hitherto antagonistic, sent us word that the schoolhouse was open for us. We now meet there at two o'clock each Sunday afternoon.

On June 9, Elder C. H. Burr, missionary in sub-charge, and Elder A. V. Closson, president of district, came over from Valley Junction and organized a branch with A. J. Fisher presiding priest, Lester O. Wildermuth teacher, John Moore deacon, and Sr. Jane Barnes secretary. We have sacrament with prayer and testimony meeting the first Sunday in each month. Since being organized in a branch we have been much edified by three sermons by Bro. Burr, three by Bro. Whiteaker, and one by Bro. G. H. Hilliard. These sermons have had an excellent effect upon the people, removing prejudice to such an extent that some who most bitterly opposed at first are now ready to attend all meetings, and beg the elder to come home with them. Since meeting in the schoolhouse we have not had a meeting there without some outsiders. May the Lord still advance his work.

Editors Herald:—Although heretofore silent in the HERALD, I have not been idle since entering the general ministry in 1900. I have been very busy since conference last spring, for I went into the field of labor in a few days after returning home, and since that time I have not lost much time. Bro. Ebeling and I have labored together nearly all summer. We have opened up some new places where the gospel has never been heard.

Last winter I went up to Titusville, in company with Bro. Hollibaugh, to make an opening there if possible. We tried every place we knew of, or every place we could hear of to preach in, but our efforts proved vain because the other preachers worked their influence against us. My brethren, the servants of God, can realize what that is. Last July I returned to that city to try to present the gospel, and behold, I had the same obstacle to meet. I did not feel discouraged, for I was blessed with the Holy Spirit in the time of need, and I was impressed that a work should be done in that city, so I went to the mayor and got permission to hold forth on the street corner. It was a new experience, but I was glad I made the effort. The crowd averaged from one to three hundred every night, and good order prevailed throughout the two weeks' meeting. We also distributed almost three hundred HERALDS and Ensigns and almost that many tracts. Bro. Childs, who lives in that city, worked very faithfully with me.

When I asked the mayor for privilege to preach on the corner, he wanted to know what church I represented, and I told him the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, he said, "Mormons?" I said, "No sir, we are in no way connected with those people." I explained the difference, and he said, "If that is the case, you go ahead." Many are interested there, and I had many callers during the day who wanted to know more about the gospel. Bro. Ebeling came the second week and gave valuable help. I believe the Lord has a gathering there before long. The Saints and friends in Warren and Forest counties have not forgotten the work of Brn. R. Etzenhouser, I. M. Smith, G. W. Robley, and F. C. Smith. The lady at Fagundus who thought the pond was not large enough, and made Brn. I. M. Smith and G. W. Robley walk two miles to the Allegheny river to baptize her, ought to have taken a journey to the lake, because she has returned to the Methodists.

Bro. Ebeling and I have just closed our grove meeting, at Blystone, Pennsylvania, where Bro. Ebeling held his debate last spring. Although the weather was not so favorable, we had good meetings, for when it rained we held meeting in the schoolhouse, near by. Although baptized none, we left some near the fold. The discussion held between Bro. Ebeling and Elder Riggle, of the Church of God, is now on sale. This book will prove valuable to all those who may invest in it, and especially to the ministry. The book contains over five hundred pages. [See advertisement on another page.—ED.]

RICHARD BALDWIN.

Steamship Moana, Enroute, Aug. 24. Editors Herald:—We have just left Vancouver and will mail you a few lines at our next stop. Victoria.

We left Deer Lodge with two sick children, and traveled to the coast with the same, and not until we are aboard ship do they both seem all right again. I never got ready for such a trip under such trying circumstances and never in such a hurry. Added to the leave-taking of parents and relatives at Bozeman, we have had quite enough for the present. A doctor was called in and though the cases were not so dangerous as to prohibit traveling, yet something fatal could develop. I felt I must go forward as per appointment. And now that the priest's feet have touched the waters, all trouble and obstacles seem to be moving back. We hope for a safe passage and landing in Sydney, as per time-table.

After leaving Bozeman and home folks (which seemed to me like a funeral occasion), we stopped off at our last winter's home (Deer Lodge), where on the 19th, by special request from Professor Cline, I played with the Elite Orchestra in the finest concert it has ever been my privilege to play in-the second one in Deer Lodge. Played clarinet solo and received a rousing encore. Scores of Deer Lodge residents came to me before leaving and expressed regret at losing the "pastor of the Latter Day Saints' Church" (was always regarded as such). On boarding the train Professor Cline and another friend silently put each a five-dollar goldpiece in my hand, a pleasant surprise from "outsiders" (not outsiders with me, however, as far as friendship is concerned). Our experience has not all been unpleasant. We have the sweet with the bitter.

While in Deer Lodge we were the invited guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Whitworth, who have proven fast friends of the writer and family, notwithstanding they hold religious connections with the Utah church. And while pausing at Deer Lodge, it is proper to mention that we have never met a more loyal few than there. Our family allowance had not been rated according to western conditions of living, not knowing where we would be sent; but all through the year these brethren and families stood by us and made up the deficiency in a way that deepened our love and gratitude toward them and to God for creating such instruments. We believe that their little chapel will soon be free of debt, as the Bitter Root valley brethren sent in about seventeen dollars just before I left. I hope to read by Christmas time of a church dedication at that place with missionary in charge and district president as masters of ceremony.

Subscriptions to our Australian mission paper continued to arrive up to my departure, and some have been forwarded since. My future address will appear at bottom of this letter. We are very hopeful of buying a small press and getting the venture on a lasting basis. If our work don't make some improvement then, it will not be the fault of the brethren in America who are so nobly responding to our call.

We did not expect to meet anyone we knew in Vancouver. Imagine our surprise and delight when arranging for a hotel, to have the negotiations suddenly interrupted by Elder Daniel MacGregor, the stalwart pioneer preacher of the unwashed northwest territory, who has battled against the most discouraging conditions for over a year and a half. (The hotel porter looked sad.) We accepted kind invitation to stay with Bro. and Sr. MacGregor till boat sailed. Our sick children were at once administered to and we had the first night's rest for this part of our trip. This hospitality seemed very precious. We met several other Saints, and now have some new faces to remember in this spiritual desert (for such the northwest seems to be).

My brother Perry and family came out from St. Louis for vacation and to say goodbye to us at Bozeman. We had a rare family reunion and the relatives took particular pains to make our visits pleasant. A camping trip with trout fishing in the mountains was recuperative and long to be remembered. It was my pleasure to baptize my brother's wife before leaving.

Bro. Editors, and readers, good-bye!
My future address is 65 Nelson street, Rozelle, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia.

REED CITY, Mich., Aug. 26. h: — Everything is moving of Bro. Joseph: — Everything is moving on fairly well in Michigan. Here and there occasionally some are being baptized into the church. The ministers are all alive to the work. At our two-days' meetings we are having pretty good times. All of the members who can attend do so, and many who are not of the faith; I have been wonderfully blessed in defending the "Seer." Prejudice is falling and we are being better understood by the people. In all I feel safe in saying the work is advancing.

J. J. CORNISH.

OMAHA, Neb., August 30.

Editor Herald:-The work of God is moving along in this city and district fairly well, though this part of the world is not yet turned upside down by the messengers of the gospel. The earnest, faithful efforts of the spiritually-minded Saints are being felt for good both in and outside the fold; and through them, by precept and example, the Lord by his Spirit is bearing testimony to the truthfulness of the restored gospel. The signs follow the believer and the church is strengthened and the members encouraged. Of late six have been baptized here in the city by Brn. A. W. Ballard and John Weston, and others are near the door of the kingdom.

However, it should be remembered that "the enemy is still combined" and does not fail to take advantage of every opportunity afforded to frustrate the purposes of God and lead the unwatchful ones into sin, shame, and disgrace. Because of this, every member of the church should be a loval soldier for Christ with his armor bright and girded on, and prepared, in his own position, to do service for God and his truth. It is pleasant for the loyal soldier to stand and fight when and where the ranks are full and the strains of inspiring music reach the soul as it is touched and enlivened by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit; but I believe God admires the valiant ones who are not afraid to stand in the strength of the Lord and do battle for the right where the numbers are few and the ranks thin, even though one should be found in the sand-hills. Of course I am not volunteering my services for the sand-hills for reasons not necessary to express here.

The Sunday school here is doing an excellent work under the directions and care of Bro. Charles Kennedy and Sr. Alice Schwartz and their excellent helpers. The Sunday school picnic held in River View park not long since was a success and was appreciated by all who attended it.

The Sisters' Aid Society organized here but recently is doing nicely and helping to supply the financial arm of the branch. They gave an ice-cream and cake social in the Hanscom park on the evening of the 26th instant, which, I am told, netted them about thirty dollars above expenses. In my opinion the social feature of the entertainment is as valuable to the Saints as the financial gain. Those who are engaged in this work need the willing help of more of the young and middle-aged sisters.

Branch officers here are doing what they can, and Eiders Oscar Case and James Huff are doing a good work with the district tent.

The clouds before us disappear;
The sun shines now more bright and clear;
All doubt is gone; why should we fear
When God and glory seem so near?

Though thunders roll and lightnings flash; Though billows roar, and vessels crash; God's smile is seen amid the storm, And by his strength we're kept from harm.

The path before us may be dark,
Or waters rage about our bark;
Yet up above we see a hand
That brings us safe unto the land.

The earth may tremble, and may shake, And cause each human heart to quake; Yet at God's touch our fears are gone, And hope comes to us from beyond.

Though foes may hate, and friends disown; Though to the world we are unknown; Yet while God's presence still is near, We still look up and have no fear.

Though Satan rage, and cast his darts. To strike with fear each human heart; A whisper low and sweet from Thee, Destroys his power and keeps us free.

Though Satan's hosts may rage and foam, And try to lead the pure from home; The Holy Spirit in that hour, Gives help that overcomes his power.

Then let us to our God prove true, And by his help each duty do; For though we stand sometimes alone, We know God reigns on yonder throne.

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

WHEELING, W. Va., August 30.

Editors Herald:—I forward to you the letter of Rev. Treat in answer to mine of June 19, as published in HERALD of June 26. I also send you an exact copy of my reply mailed to him. Your brother,

O. J. TARY.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., August 20. O. J. TARY;

Dear Sir:—About two months have elapsed since I received your last communication. It was then laid away for a convenient season, if indeed, I should be moved to reply at all.

It transpires that instead of a sincere inquirer after truth the author of those letters is himself a rabid disputant. In this I am not at all surprised.

But there are one or two points to which I will make a brief reply. [Premising however that I do not expect any possible good from this correspondence, unless it should lead to an open discussion where there was a public demand for such an investigation.]

- 1. The insinuation that the standard books of original Mormonism have been corrupted in the Utah editions. I have compared them and find no difference.
- 2. In your own quotation, the doctrine of your church on the marriage question is given in these words: "One man should have one wife, and one woman but one wife" [husband.—ED]

This language is calculated to deceive the incautious; but it really makes provision for polygamy. Why did they not say, "One man should have BUT ONE woman"? Then they would have placed man and woman on an equality. But this they did not do. The language makes it obligatory for a man to have "one woman," but does not say he shall not have more! The men who wrote it understood language well enough to limit the woman to one man by saying she shall have BUT ONE man!! Why did they not say, "one man shall have but one woman"?

3 In regard to the property of the Gentiles your authority says this: "Behold, it is said in my laws, or forbidden, to get in debt to thine enemies; but behold it is not said at any time, that the Lord should not take when he please, and pay as seemeth to him good:

wherefore as ye are AGENTS"—etc., and so on. The plain English of which is that as God's Agents Mormons can take from their enemies when they think it pleases him, and pay in that way which seemeth to them to be good. No doubt this corrupt doctrine was largely responsible for the severe punishment which the Gentiles inflicted on the Josephites in Missouri and Illinois.

I could quote the authority for the Danites, and for blood atonement, etc., etc., but I refrain.

Incidentally, you seem to have a gleam of the truth in regard to the fact that Christ's apostles abide, in their office, in the church till the end of the world. This is wholesome doctrine.

With charity for all honest men, and with malice toward none, I am yours for the "truth as it is in Jesus."

W. B. F. TREAT.

1414 Pleasant Street.

P. S.—Your quotation from your marriage ceremony is plausible. But it is easy to know that the polygamous Mormons have but one legal or state wife, at the same time spiritual wifery is being practiced. Don't think for a moment that I do not understand Mormon delusions.

W. B. F. T.

WHEELING, W. Va., August 30. REV. W. B. F. TREAT, Indianapolis, Ind.;

Dear Sir:-Your letter of the 20th inst. replying to mine of June 19 was duly received. Whether you should, as you say, "be moved to reply at all," was a matter for you to settle with your own conscience. I have all along been acting on the defensive and shall continue to do so whenever the truth is attacked and I have opportunity to defend it. Your premise that no good will come from your correspondence, it seems to me, would better have been formed when you penned for publication your vicious attacks on Mormonism, and failed therein to make any discrimination between the true and the false, asserting as you did, that "Mormonism itself is wrong in everything." So, now, if you have concluded no good will result from your correspondence on the subject, why not admit that you are wrong and that truth is too strong for you to resist successfully? I am quite sure no good can come to any one by taking the position you have, in your zeal to pose as an annihilator of Mormonism, and especially in your last letter, as I shall proceed to show. As to this leading to a public discussion, that, I presume, depends largely upon yourself. I never held a discussion with any one, nor never attended one, and my work prevents me from engaging in one, if the opportunity was otherwise favorable. But I have no doubt you could be accommodated by some of our ministers, if you desire to publicly discuss the differences between the two churches represented. Their work is to preach the gospel, but they are not afraid of public investigation of their faith when they have the privilege to defend it.

Did you compare the Doctrine and Covenants of the Utah church with that of the original church on the marriage question? Can you find the purported revelation on polygamy in any edition of the Reorganized Church, or in any one published before the death of Joseph Smith? Can you then truthfully say you have compared them and found no difference? If you can it will not be so hard to understand why you cannot see any difference in a church organized after the pattern of Christ, with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, helps, governments, spiritual gifts, and blessings, and the one you represent that has only elders and deacons. If you can get along with all the other officers dead that God set in the church, what is the use of having live elders and deacons? If the major part of them are dead, of what use is a live minority? I have digressed a little here, but I want to give you a chance to defend your own faith as well as to overthrow Mormonism.

But to return to your letter, where you criticise the quotation I made in a previous one, in which the position of the church on the marriage question is stated in the words. "One man should have one wife: and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again," I am surprised indeed that a man with any degree of intelligence could make the statement that "That language is calculated to deceive and really provides for polygamy," because it does not say one man shall have but one wife. You carefully left out the latter clause, "except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again." Does that not place them on an equality? Neither of them being at liberty to marry except in case of death. What could be plainer? Your assertion that that language makes it obligatory for a man to have one wife is simply ridiculous. The term "should have" does not mean, he shall or must have. Your perversion of the truth to carry your point excels that of Brigham What an able associate you would have made for him! For by your reasoning you could just as easily prove that the New Testament provides for polygamy. Jesus said: "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother and shall cleave unto his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh." -Matt. 19: 5. Now if Brigham Young had had your help you could just have said, Because Christ did not say they shall have but one, provision was made for polygamy, and that would have obviated the necessity for Brigham's false revelation. How unfortunate for Brigham that he did not have your assistance! But to satisfy you I can cite you to just the language you say should have been used. In the Book of Mormon the monogamous system of marriage is taught in these words: "Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and harken to the words of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have SAVE it be ONE wife: and concubines he shall have none." Is that plain enough language to be understood by you? That is endorsed by true Latter Day Saints equally with the quotation you say provides for polygamy. If you want to still charge the church with sanctioning polygamy you had better join Brigham Young's church and argue it from the Bible. While I do not admit that the Bible teaches or sanctions polygamy, yet you can make out a better case in favor of it from the Bible than you can from the Doctrine and Covenants or the Book of Mormon.

Your quotation from section 64, Doctrine and Covenants, to sustain your position that it provides for taking of the goods of the Gentiles, will also prove to be a "boomerang" to your argument. The first part you quoted all right; but when you got to "wherefore as ye are agents," you must have become frightened at what followed and suddenly closed the book. If you had quoted a little further you would have found a modifying clause that sets at rest any fears of this authorizing the Saints to take goods not belonging to them: "Wherefore, as ye are agents, and ye are on the Lord's errand: and whatever ve do according to the will of the Lord, is the Lord's business." Nothing is sanctioned except it be according to the will of the Lord. And they were not left free to interpret what the Lord's will might be, but it is made plain to them. One provision was that they should not get in debt to their enemies. On page 142 the will or commandment of the Lord is thus expressed (and like himself it is in harmony with a'l previous revealments on the subject). "Thou shalt not steal; and he that stealeth and will not repent shall be cast out." Again in section 59: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill nor do anything like unto it."

I suppose you would be afraid to live near people keeping such commandments because they provided for the taking of the goods of their neighbors! Shame on such sophistry, coming from a professed minister of Christ! It was not their corrupt doctrines that were responsible for the inhuman treatment the Saints received in Missouri and Illinois: but it was malicious misrepresentation of their doctrine by many persons professing to be ministers of the gospel, who, unable to meet them from a scriptural standpoint and sound reasoning, resorted to calumniation and vile misrepresentation, appealing to the evil propensities of the lower class of society, and urged them on to deeds of violence that will always be a dark page on the history of those two states. But the Lord says: "Vengeance is mine, I will repay;" so it is not our place to seek revenge or retaliate, but leave all in the hands of a just God. However, there are people now who would profit more by heeding Paul's advice to "Prove all things and hold fast that which is good," than in misrepresenting and maligning a people who are contending for all of God's revealed will and commandments in all ages.

When you quote your authority for Danites and blood atonement, then I am ready to answer you. And the fear that you will do so does not worry me at all. If I adhered to Brigham Young's apostasy I might be afraid of that; but the true Latter Day Saints are more against the evils introduced by that church than you seem to be. The crimes of the Utah church do not seem to worry you nearly so much as the sound doctrine of the true church. That is what you are laboring to destroy.

You do not seem to understand my position on the apostles abiding in their office. I believe according to the New Testament that God set those offices with others named in the church. And not only was the office to abide: but whenever he has a church on earth he will have those offices occupied by living apostles. If not, show me your authority for discontinuing a part and continuing the least important ones. What would you think of a man claiming that George Washington is still president of the United States, and that the constitution and the record of Washington's administration was all we need now? And hence the only living officers we need are constable and justice of the peace!

If you are anxious that I shall not think you do not understand Mormon delusions, you will have to produce some argument supported by facts to show that there is such a thing as Mormon delusion. But I can readily believe you do not understand the hallucination or delusion of which you have been made the victim, by which your theological vision is so impaired that everything pertaining to the doctrine and teachings of the Latter Day Saints appears a delusion to you. Even when it is proven to be in harmony with the Bible. you do not seem to give up your opposition to it; representing as you do a church that claims to "speak where the Bible speaks and to be silent where the Bible is silent." In your letters you do not quote much from the Bible. May be you are like the man who had tried to overthrow the faith with Bible argument, and afterward told a friend, "The Bible is a poor thing to knock a Mormon down with."

As an advocate of all God's revealed truth I submit the foregoing for your consideration.

Respectfully,

O. J. TARY.

HILLS, Minn., August 27.

Editors Herold:—Bro. Hayer and I have been associated together all summer, and have traveled mostly with horse and buggy, mostly among strangers. And while we did not make very many openings, nor did we do much public preaching, yet we distributed lots of tracts, talked gospel wherever we stopped, and we believe paved the way for future work. We met people who treated us with kindness and told us to come again and we would have a stopping place, and they would also get us a place to preach.

I will just relate one of our experiences: We had been traveling all day and our horse was tired. About six o'clock I began to hunt a place to stop all night. The first place, the people were not at home. The next, the lady was willing, but she would rather wait and see her husband, who would soon be home from town. But we thought best to push on, as it might be late before he got home. Our next stop was at a German's. He consented. Putting our horse in the stable went to the house. On entering, my eyes fell upon an organ, and I soon had Bro. Hayer introduced to the same. We began to sing the songs of Zion, and the good Lord blessed us in our song service, and it was not long till all in the house were on our side. They said they never heard such singing in all their lives. We talked gospel and sang till eleven o'clock at night. In the morning, after breakfast, I asked him the charges. He said nothing, only we must sing him two more of those songs. So we left them with the invitation to come again, and we went on our way rejoicing and thanking God for the angel's message.

We have been holding meetings here with some interested.

I was in Luverne on the 19th. Met some of the Christian people, and found out from them that they had shut up their church and do not hold meetings there any more. This is where Bro. Wight held a discussion last with one of their men named Walker.

May God bless Zion, is my prayer. Your brother in Christ,

GEO. W. THORBURN.

So let us still e'er work and pray,
And right will surely win,
Though ere we reach the haven bright
Come many days of sin;
But still a brighter day shall dawn
When we the storms have passed,
For sunshine always is beyond
And clouds can never last.

LORD, KEEP ME.

Lord, keep me in the narrow path; My Savior went that way; It leads straight to that glorious light Of never ending day.

Though oft I may be weary
With struggling in the strife,
Lord, keep me near the iron rod
Straight to the tree of life.

And when I reach the golden gate,
Lord, help me enter in
The city where the angels wait,
The palace of our King.

ONLY A BABY.

Something to live for came to the place, Something to die for, maybe. Something to give even sorrow a grace, And yet it was only a baby.

Last year, like all years, the rose and the thorn
This year a wilderness, maybe;
But heaven stooped under the roof on the morn
That it brought to us only a baby.

Yes, a baby again in our home. Since it pleased our heavenly Father to recall unto himself our sweet baby boy who had stayed with us but nine short, happy months, at times our home seemed very lonely, and although there were other children and each appreciated in his respective place, yet none could fill the place of a baby.

Surely no child of wealth or station ever received a truer, warmer welcome than did baby Grace when she came to our home. And yet we realize each babe intrusted to our care adds new responsibilities, and as the poet has said, "something to live for." Yes, something more to live for, and as we look upon the wee form, launched like a tiny craft upon the ocean of life, we think, What may the future have in store for her? The beginning of the voyage has been a pleasant one, never having been ill enough to cause her to be fretful, and watched over by parents, tenderly nursed by sisters and brothers, who are ever ready to clasp her in their arms at the least display of wakefulness, kissed, loved, and talked to as though she were very wise. Will there come a time when there is no paternal hand to guide, no friend to love? When sickness, sorrows, trials, or persecutions, may beset the pathway? Or perchance may the little craft, like many others, soon be launched upon the ocean of eternity? We cannot know. Only as we drift along down the stream of time we can reflect upon the past. We live in the present, and we shall trust for the future. If we are called from earth. we commend our darling into divine care. If she be taken from us, we know that the weakest are safe with him who doeth all things well. If both continue here many years, we shall pray for wisdom and understanding, that will enable us to bring up our little one in such a manner that when she shall grow older she may be prepared to meet the trials as they come with a faith that is fixed upon him who is a succor unto all who trust in him

ADRIA ELLEN.

Dear Sisters:-I am very much pleased with the suggestion that we take up the work by Jacob Abbott, "Gentle measures in the management of the young." While, as Sr. Stebbins says, there may be other subjects equal, I think this subject a fine one. Words fail me when I try to tell the good I have derived from the subjects already discussed in the Home Column. And as I am one of those who never have the pleasure of spending an hour with the Daughters of Zion, I fully appreciate the articles as they are published in the HERALD. I have two bright little girls who need much care. While I feel the responsibility resting upon me to train them up in the way they should go, I am trusting in my heavenly Father for the much needed help and strength, and also patience. As has been said before, Obedience comes first. While I am alone as to the spiritual teaching of my little ones. I gather them around my knee every morning while I read out of the Bible. Then we ask God to guide and direct us day by day. I have been blessed by so doing, and the little ones seem to think it is a part of the day's work. The six-year-old will repeat with me the Lord's prayer while the three-year-old is just beginning to learn. My companion, while not in the work, is a believer, and takes just as much interest in training his children as one can who is not a Christian.

The sister's request that "Watch and pray" be discussed is worthy our attention. I, too, think that we cannot watch our little ones too closely, and I have made it a rule to keep mine close at home, not allowing them out on the street unless with some one older to watch over them. And I have noticed that whenever they hear a word that does not sound just right to them they will come right in to tell mamma. How thankful we mothers should be when we have the confidence of our children.

I am living in hopes of some day being where I can have my little ones in constant attendance at Sunday school. They both like to go to church and Sunday school, but while I am away from the Sunday school I can teach them at home, which I do. I so much like to read the letters from the different sisters, and wish more would write than do. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and her cause, I remain,

Your sister in the one faith,

MAY.

CHICAGO, III.

[IF the editor of the Home Column was not persuaded that many others, like Sister May, appreciate the work the Column has been for years trying to do, our courage would long since have failed us. But while we are fully satisfied of this, it would be both cheering and encouraging if many others could be heard from, that their interest in the work might be known.—ED]

NEGLECTING DUTY.

There are a great many people deprived of the Spirit of Christ, because they are living day by day neglecting certain things which they know they should do. There is a man who knows it is his duty to have family worship in his house, but still he neglects it. There is another who knows he should study his Bible more faithfully and enrich his mind with divine truth, and yet he takes more pleasure in reading other books (and I often find this the trouble with myself). There are many other things which we neglect to do, when if we were more faithful we would receive more blessings from our heavenly Father.

Yonder is a man to whom God has given riches, and he feels as though he should use them to the good of God's people and to help spread the gospel. But still he holds them with a tight grasp. These professors of religion are sometimes surprised that God does not answer their prayers, but if they were more free they would be greatly blessed.

I will tell the Saints a small part of my experience in giving to God. I belonged to a sectarian church before I became a Saint, and I always did my part as best I could, and God blessed me wonderfully. I was never satisfied with the way the church did things, but I lived up to the light I had, and at last I met the Saints. At first I would not have much to do with them, although I was not then satisfied with my life. I would not humble myself. But at last the Spirit of God would not let me rest until I performed that which was my duty, and I have been blessed from that day, and I am so happy in it.

I had paid my tithing more than a year before I became a Saint, and God proved to me that he would pay back a hundredfold. God in the last year has more than tripled my income, and I know he is still blessing me more than I can tell you, dear Saints, and now if there is a Saint who reads this who does not pay his or her tithing, I ask them to try it for a month and see if what I say is not true.

Your loving sister,

MADOLINE.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL A FACTOR IN TEACH-ING TEMPERANCE

Our subject is of a dual nature and may be treated under two main heads. A Sunday school and a temperance school. And if we would discover wherein the one is a factor in teaching the other, we must examine the work of each and compare their work. Since our subject has the most to do with the Sunday school we will give our attention to that first, and discuss its origin and mission. Judging from what is being done by the Sunday school we would say its mission is to teach God's word and save from the sins and follies of a worldly life those precious souls intrusted to its care. It was originally for the young, but its doors have widened until all ages are enfolded within its embrace. It was founded on a love for God and a desire to save poor, sinful, intemperate humanity.

Cardinal Borromeo founded one of the first (if not the first) Sunday schools in the city of Milan. Seeing the children thronging the streets on Sunday, dirty and ragged, passing the time in idle merriment and coarse sport. he conceived the idea of gathering them together on Sunday to teach them. Accordingly we find him in the cathedral surrounded by the neglected little souls hungering after the knowledge he was there to supply. He taught them to read and write as well as to be clean and good and avoid the evils of their surroundings. Such desecration of the Sabbath as stirred his righteous soul to action and gave birth to the Sabbath school at Milan existed in other cities, and we find Robert Raikes' soul burning with love for the children of the poor and intemperate of the city of Gloucester again bursting forth in the organization of a Sunday school consisting of the children gathered from the streets. His life-work was to save from the fallen condition those who were groveling in sin, as well as to train up the children to avoid the stains of their environments. He was also a constant visitor at both city and county jails, and testifies that of the three thousand children who attended his Sunday school not one ever entered these places.

Likewise in the bosom of Mary Anne Clough, the divine flame was smouldering to burst forth in her love for the ragged urchins whom she noticed spending their Sabbath days in coarse merriment and profane language. Securing a room in the factory in which she labored for her daily bread, calling the neglected, dirty, and ragged foundry boys from the back court of the foundry whither they had congregated for their Sunday's pleasure, she gathered them around her regardless of their smut and rags and taught them to read, and write, to be clean, good, and religious. So great was her influence over these boys, that they were distinguished from the other boys in the foundry where they labored by their freedom from profane language, their superior industry and good conduct, and soon became known as Mary Anne's boys.

Out of this little Sunday school grew the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society, which in six years enrolled fourteen thousand boys and girls saved from street society. This "society" did every thing possible to draw the minds of the young from carelessness, ignorance, wickedness, and vice, and engage them in social elevation. Of this society Samuel Smiles says, "Temperance was the keynote to the institution."

We have noticed that originally the Sunday school was founded on a love for the poor, neglected children, most of whom had intemperate and impious parents. That it was for public as well as individal improvement. That it was a means for rescuing from intemperance and crime those whose surroundings tended to a downward course.

The most widely known agency in the temperance cause, the W. C. T. U., embraces in its methods the preventive, educational, evangelistic, social, and legal; all of which, except the legal, may be found within the Sabbath school. The work of this organization is surely founded on the principles of love and is carried on by means of workers whose aim is the uplifting and rescuing of the fallen.

A certain divine has said that "Temperance is but a love which no pleasure seduceth." Are we, fellow workers, a factor in the temperance cause? Is our love that love which no pleasure seduceth? Do we put pleasure aside as did each of our worthy examples in the inception of the Sunday school cause? Did Mary Anne Clough put on her Sunday best and repair to the nicely warmed church, there to await her foundry boys? Did she meet no discouragements, surmount no difficulties? A poor working girl earning her own livelihood as a mill hand had time to do such a noble work. Can we find time to labor likewise? Cardinal Borromeo not only gathered the children from the streets. but he did it in the face of strong opposition from his brethren who said it was scandalous to bring the dirty children into the cathedral, and called him a desecrator of the Sabbath, the sanctuary, and the priesthood.

By the efforts of these Sunday school workers thousands have been saved from intemperance, ignorance, and vice simply by collecting the neglected from the streets, teaching them to overcome self and their environment. Prof. Drummond says: "The master influences of the organic world are heredity and environment." With the heredity of these unfortunates we have nothing to do, but with the "environment" we may have much. In our Sunday schools we teach the Bible, that it is of God the author of all good. Of Bible teaching Chancellor Kent says:

"The general diffusion of the Bible is the most effectual way to civilize and humanize mankind; to purify and exalt the general system of public morals; to give efficacy to the just precepts of international and municipal law; to enforce the observance of prudence, temperance, justice, and fortitude; and to improve all the relations of social and domestic life."

"Temperance, a love which no pleasure seduceth." How many of us have that love? Practical temperance and practical Sunday school work go hand in hand. A teachers' meeting and a social gathering the same evening, which shall I attend? An unprepared lesson and a musical entertainment Saturday night. Which, my lesson or the entertainment? A glass of wine proffered by the hand of a friend or my temperance principles, which? A love which no pleasure seduceth! So tired Sunday morning, another little nap, or be on time at the Sunday school hour?

Is our Sunday school a factor in teaching temperance? If not, why not? There is surely opportunity for work. It was a power in its very incipiency, and why not now in this age of progression? It is surely a work of love since to those who attend, the instruction given is without money and without price. Mrs. Ballington Booth says: "There will be no evangelizing the slums and wicked of the streets except through the change of the individual." And where is there greater opportunity than through the mission schools in the cities? Oh for a thousand hearts like Mary Anne Clough's, to aid this work along. Could we gather in the children as she did, we would undoubtedly be a factor in the temperance cause and a promoter of our country's redemption from intemperance and crime.

Let us keep the love of temperance in our hearts and let not pleasure seduce, but in the language of Principal Tullock, "In all your enjoyments therefore be moderate." Set your heart right in the love of God and faith in Christ and difficulties will disappear. The inner life in you will assimilate to the divine everywhere, and return its own blessed and consecrating influence to all your work and all your amusements.

WHY HAVE SUNDAY SCHOOLS?

As well might we ask, why have secular schools? The one is for the development of the mind in worldly wisdom and learning, while the other is for the training of the soul or spirit of man. We read in the book of Job that "There is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." Through the Sunday school we are brought in close touch with the Almighty, for there we are taught concerning his ways, and his dealings with man, the creature. Paul wrote, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning. that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Upon the strength of this statement please learn what the concerning the responsibility of caring and providing for children. They should attend religious services (Deut. 31:12). Should early seek the Lord (Eccl. 12:1). Children are to be trained (Prov. 22:6). Are known by their works (Prov. 20:11). Jesus loves them (Matt. 19:14, 15: John 21:15).

Now in the last days also has God spoken with no uncertain sound, as the following will show: "And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; . . . and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."-D. C. 68:4. "But I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth."-D. C. 90:6. From these revelations we may learn: 1. That fathers and mothers in Israel have a solemn duty to perform which they owe to the church of the living God. 2. That parents should see to it that their children are taught the principles of the doctrine of Christ. 3. That they be taught to pray and walk uprightly before God. 4. Parents should provide their families with spiritual truths in order to properly sustain the inner to this end—to bring all into lives that will count the most for the cause of Christ. What an inviting field for us to "thrust in our sickle and reap" while the day lasts. By teaching others we are benefited in a way that often surprises us. I would that all could realize the inestimable worth of a diligent study of God's word. For therein is found a healing balm for every wound, a comfort for every sorrow; a solace for every grief; and above all, eternal life by obedience thereto.

To me

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MEANS MORE than the passing away the time. In a sense it is life or death to all of us. We need to be a thankful people indeed for the superior light we have and therefore should not "hide it under a bushel," but let it shine out at the home through the study of the Quarterlies, and again in the reciting of the lesson at the school where all may be mutually benefited. Shall we, brothers and sisters, avail ourselves of these golden opportunities that we may be able to give a reasonable answer for the hope within us? The Master is still calling for us to work in his vineyard today. Shall we respond with a hearty good will, and help gather the lambs of the flock safe into the arms of Jesus, that they may have a protection from the many snares, temptations, and allurements of this present wicked world?

'Tis a war that calls for valor,
'Tis a conflict with the world

We have all for life enlisted In the army of the Lord.

And as "soldiers in the army of the Lord" let us not forget to make the song service an interesting part of our program each Sunday, that all may feel stimulated to activity in so worthy a cause. May God bless and help his people in their endeavors to build up the kingdom of God, and establish his righteousness, and not our own.

ENGLISH MISSION.

Annual conference met in the Saints' meeting room, Elvington street, Hulme, Manches-High Priest Thomas Taylor, mission president (pro tem.), took the chair. Brn. E. L. Kelley of the Presidency, Apostle G. T. Griffiths, and High Priest Thomas Taylor were then chosen to preside. Wm. R. Armstrong secretary, S. F. Mather assistant. Bro. Kelley thanked the meeting for its support. He said, however, that he could work better in the ranks. He showed the necessity for working by the aid of the Divine Spirit. He said he had often wished to wor ship with the Saints in the British Isles. Bro. Griffiths said, "I am glad to meet you after an absence of six years." He said he always had a kindly feeling for his English brethren. His voyage across the Atlantic was the best he ever had, he said, and God was concerned in this mission. He hoped we would be prayerful and humble and then God would be near us. Bro. Taylor said he thanked God that his life had been spared so long and that he had done a little for the Master. God had given him a goodly portion of his Spirit, and considering his age enjoyed pretty good health. Elder Kelley said in answer to a question that "A conference of elders is one where the elders have charge. It does not mean a conference composed of elders only." His was Bro. Joseph Smith's understanding. Elder P. Muceus, missionary to Norway, was accorded voice and vote by resolution. The report of Bro. Thomas Tavlor, mission president (pro tem.), was pre-sented. It stated that his work was mainly in connection with the Birmingham branch, over which he had presided for about thirtysix years. According to his strength and ability he had performed every duty. Considering his advanced age, he was blessed with a fair share of health and strength. With advancing years, his desire for continued usefulness grew stronger. He had also fully attended to his duty as Bishop's agent, and was still willing to labor for the Lord according to his ability and strength. The missionary report of Bro. J. W. Rushton showed that he had labored in Scotland, prin-Rushton cipally at Glasgow, Hamilton, and Carlake. He had preached to large gatherings in the open air at these places, where the interest was continuous. He had visited Aberdeen twice and made friends for the work. He hoped with the help of the General Conference appointee to do good work there. He had held cottage meetings for preaching, fellowship, and administering the Lord's supper at Hamilton and Glasgow. He asked that our forces in Scotland be increased at least by one, as he found the strain on his voice and other powers too great, being alone. Labor had been performed by him in the Sheffield district at the request of Bro. Joseph Smith. He had preached at Sheffield, Claycross, and Sutton-in-Ashfield. At Clayeross he baptized thirteen persons. On March 7 he was called to Cardiff to preach the funeral sermon of Bro. A. N. Bishop, and whilst in that place labored at Cardiff, Nantyglo, and Porth. He said that the work in the principality needed help. Several times Bro. Rushton preached in Leeds, too. He reverently acknowledged the care, love, and protection of our heavenly Father in his mission work.

District presidents' reports were read from Birmingham, Eastern Wales, Sheffield, and Manchester. The Birmingham district was Manchester. The Birmingham district was reported by Elder C. H. Caton, president, who showed the condition of the branches as mainly satisfactory. Labor had been performed faithfully by the ministry. The look was hopeful. Elder Thomas Griffiths reported Eastern Wales in a fair spiritual condition. They needed missionary help both inside their branches and outside. Elder S. Platts reported the Sheffield district as unsatisfactory. Some were laboring faithfully. The work in Claycross was shown to be alive. A chapel had been built there to seat one hundred, with font and other conveniences. Sheffield was just holding its own. They were trying to establish the work at Sutton-in-Ashfield and were hopeful of success. Elder Joseph Dawsnup, Sen, reported the Manchester district, which consists of nine branches. The ministry had striven to build up the work in these places by preaching, teaching, and advising. eral branches have increased their membership. Some spiritual progress had been made in the district, but it was not yet satisfactory. In all places lack of interest was shown by some of the officers and members, which affected the others. There was a majority of fearless and able men and women, however, to testify to and defend the work intelligently when required, and who sacrificed their time and means for its establishment. The local ministry are used in ment. The local ministry are used in connection with the branches. Many of the elders act as assistants to the presiding elders of the branches when not being used as planned preachers in the district. A purely district campaign outside the branches was not prosecuted on account of deleterious internal influences. This necessitated the shepherding of the flock so as to maintain the peace and unity of the local churches. A change for the better has now taken place, and we can justly report the outlook as somewhat brighter than it has been for some time We believe it to be distinctly encourpast. aging. London, an isolated branch, was reported by Bro. Worth as doing its best Meetings were held at Enfield in Bro. Kemp's house and at our church in Bow Common The average attendance was about twenty-five and the spiritual condition very They have some earnest workers and there is still room for improvement.

Bishop's agents' reports were presented by Thomas Taylor for England, and Thomas Gould for Eastern Wales. Resolved, That Elders J. Dewsnup, Jun., J. W. Worth, and C. H. Caton be appointed a committee to audit the bishop's agents' reports. Western Wales was not reported owing to a misunderstanding. Whereas, The notice of motion given by Elder Meredith twelve months ago was informal and therefore debarred from the decison of the conference, be it resolved, That under the exceptional conditions Elder Meredith be permitted to place his motion before the house as though proper formal notice had been given. The following motion was then put and lost: That the time of holding the mission conference be changed from August to Whitsuntide. Resolved, That the appointments of Elder W. R. Armstrong as assistant historian to the British Isles and Elder P. Muceus to Scandinavia be confirmed by this conference. Bro. Kelley stated that he had been appointed to see to the ordination of Elder J. W. Rushton to the office of The part of the late revelation affecting the European mission was next read to the assembly. By resolution, it was agreed that we fast from the morning meal on Sunday, August 4. Resolved, That the ordination of Bro J. W. Rushton to the office of seventy be attended to at this conference. Resolved, That the standing rules referring to voice and vote be suspended during the business sessions on Monday. The meeting now adjourned until 10:30 a. m., the 4th inst.

On Monday, the 5th August, conference business sessions were resumed at 9:15 a.m. The following report of the auditors on Bishop's agents' accounts was read: "We the undersigned auditing committee have examined the books, vouchers, and balance sheet of Elder Thomas Taylor, the Bishop's agent for England, and find all correct except the balance sheet which shows a deficit of sixpence postage. The item has been corrected and the whole of his accounts are now We have also examined the balance sheet of Elder Thomas Gould, Bishop's agent for Wales, which is correct, but we have not had access to his books and vouchers, which have not been presented." Signed, C. H. had access to his books and vouchers, which have not been presented." Sigued, C. H. Caton, J. W. Worth, Jos. Dewsnup, Jun. Report from Bro. N. C. Enge, missionary to Denmark and Scandinavia, was read. He had preached 36 sermons, baptized 2, confirmed 2; led 1 prayer meeting, administered to 3 sick, attended several funeral services; traveled by rail 200 miles, steamship 656, on foot 397 Had used every opportunity privately and publicly to present the word. Distributed 700 copies of "What we Believe." Bro. Anderson had held 21 services, assisted 5 times; administered to the sick 5 times. assisted once, led one prayer and testimony meeting. He bad baptized a minister of the Danish Free Church at Aalborg, Denmark, and his wife, who had been a Methodist. He had fallen sick at Malmo, Sweden, where he found Bro. Borlin had left the church. He was still very sick and in need of financial help. He still desired to remain in the field until the work was permanently established in his mission field. Resolved, That we now proceed to the organization of the Elders' Quorum. By vote Elder Henry Greenwood was chosen president, with Elders C. H. Caton and A. Bradshaw as his first and second counselors. Adjourned until two p. m.

On the resumption of business, it was resolved, That it is desirable that we proceed to the organization of the Priest's Quorum. Bro. John Foden was elected president, with Bro. J. W. Green and James Schofield as counselors. Resolved, That the officers selected by the Elders' Quorum be sustained and their ordination be ordered to take place.

Resolved. That the officers chosen by the Priests' Quorum be approved and their or-dination be effected. Bro. E. L. Kelley here presented the name of High Priest Thomas Taylor for ordination to the office of bishop. It was heartily and unanimously resolved, That we assent to this nomination. Resolved, That Elders E.R Dewsnup, C. H Caton, and George Baty form a committee to consider and revise the rules of representation governand revise the rules of representation govern-ing the European mission. Bro. Griffiths here called attention to sec. 122, par. 8, Doc-trine and Covenants, also sec. 125, bearing upon the duties of evangelical ministers. Suitable remarks were then made, after which he said he had pleasure in presenting two names which had been given to him, viz: Elders Joseph Greenwood and James Baty, for the office of evangelical ministers. In answer to a question it was stated that these brethren were presented for work in their own districts. Resolved, That the nominations be confirmed. The names of Eider C. H. Caton and High Priest Joseph Dawsnup were presented by Elder Thomas Taylor as his first and second counselors and confirmed by resolution. The time of holding the next annual conference being considered, it was resolved, That when this conference adjourns, it does so to meet at Birmingham at the usual time; viz. Saturday before Bank Holiday, August, 1902. interval of ten minutes occurred here, when Sr. A. Green (Manchester) sang as a solo, "Moment by Moment."

The ordinations to extended offices now took place; viz: High Priest Thomas Taylor to the office of bishop by Bishop E. L. Kelley and Apostle G. T. Griffiths; Elder Chas. H. Caton as first counselor to Bishop Taylor by Brn. Kelley and Griffiths; High Priest Joseph Dawsnup, Sen., being ill, his ordination to the office of second courselor to Bishop Tayor was deferred; Elder H. Greenwood was ordained President of the Seventh Quorum of Elders by Brn. G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Rushton; Bro. John Austin was ordained first Rushton; Bro. John Austin was ordened in secounselor to Elder H. Greenwood by Brn. E. L. Kelley, G. T. Griffiths, and J. W. Rushton; Bro. Archibald Bradshaw to the office of second counselor by Brn. J. W. Mather be appointed assistant secretary of the mission. Resolved, That a hearty vote of thanks be awarded our presidents. solved, that the general and local authorities of the church be sustained. Resolved, That we hold a social service at 7:30 p.m. Resolved, that a hearty vote of thanks be extended to the Manchester brethren and sisters for their kindness to the visitors and attention to our wants.

At this juncture Elder Kelley foretold a great ingathering if the saints were faithful, great ingathering if the sames were internet, and it was likely that Bro. Joseph Smith would pay us a visit. He believed our prophet would like to come. Bro. Griffiths stated that the Spirit indicated to him before attending General Conference, that he would come to English ference that he would come to Europe. He was glad that Bro. Kelley had been associated with him in this mission for a time, for the reason that they had been acquainted with each other for many years, having been neighbors in the same town and associated together in gospel work for many years. At a later stage of the conference the following report of the catering and locating committee was presented. Receipts £16. 1s.

1d. Expenditures £14, 11s, 10td. Balance in hand £1.9s. 2½d. Signed, Elders H. Greenwood, James Baty. Report received and commissional Resolved, That the surplus of Richard Taylor. £1. 9a. 2½d. be handed over to Bishop Taylor. The business sessions of the conference closed with singing and prayer.

The Sunday services were held in the Hulme Vestry hall. August 4, at 10:30 a.m., the meeting was in charge of Apostle G. T. Griffiths and High Priest Thomas Taylor, the speaker being Bro. E. L. Kelley. The attendance was good and the order and effort. attendance was good and the order and atten-tion excellent. A solo was sweetly rendered by Elder Mather, after which Bro. Griffiths remarked that every quorum except that of the Patriarch's is represented here this morning. Such a thing has never occurred in Europe since the church was organized in 1830. A verbatim report of Elder Kelley's address will follow at a later date.

At 2:30 p. m. a social meeting in charge of Brn. Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., and Peter Muceus. Four confirmations took place, Brn. Kelley and Griffiths blessed a child, several sick were administered to, then Bro. J. W. Rushton was ordained a seventy by Brn. Griffiths and Kelley. The sacrament was next administered to the Saints, after which a number of inspiring testimonies were borne. At 6:30 p. m. the meeting was in charge of Elders J. W. Rushton and E. R. Dewsnup. The speaker of the evening was Apostle G. T. Griffiths, who dealt methodically and in detail with the subject of the priesthood, illustrating his discourse with charts. He spoke to a crowded hall, a number having to stand throughout the service. The congregation was an orderly, attentive, and appreciative one. The subject was especially interesting to the ministry. At the close Sr. S. J. Greene, of Wigan, sang a solo. She was accompanied on the violin by Bro. George Spargo, also of Wigan. Hymn 1110 Saints' Harp was heartily sung at the conclusion, and the benediction was offered by J. W. Rushton. Thus closed the most momentous conference ever held in the British Islands.

CARD OF THANKS.

I desire to thank those who assisted me in getting subscriptions for the Ladies' Home Journal in the late contest. Including the double count on the Post, there were sent to me 514 names, commissions on which were $128 50, the prize for same $26, making a total of $154.50, which has been handed to Sr. M. Walker.

LUCY LYONS RESSEGUIE. LAMONI, Iowa, Aug. 26, 1901.

I trust the friends to whom the above card is addressed will permit me also to express my gratitude to them and my assurance of full appreciation. I know that Sister Lucy was disappointed in the result of her earnest and faithful labors, as doubtless others will be also. She aimed at much larger results and her labor truly merited such. But let me say that the Lord knows best, and as for myself, my gratitude could not be deeper, and I cannot find words in which more truly to express it than in saying that I believe it is commensurate with your effort in my behalf.

Faithfully yours,

M. WALKER.

Up to the present time, Thursday at five p. m., there have been four prayer services, four regular sessions of Sunday school, two sessions of normal work, and seventeen preaching services, all of which have been very satisfactory, the Spirit being present to assist, in some instances quite marvelously made manifest.

Fifteen have been baptized, and three other names given for baptism.

Prof. George D. Herron, late of Grinnell College, Iowa, has first place in the September Arena. His contribution is entitled "The Recovery of Jesus from Christianity," and is a vigorous attack on what he calls the "com-mercialism of theology." Prof. Thomas E. Will, of Ruskin College, finds "a menace to freedom" in "The College Trust," the title of a paper in which independence of thought and teaching is declared to be abridged in our leading institutions of learning. The third article of Prof. Frank Parson's valuable series is devoted to "Political Movement of the Nineteenth Century"—a condensed review of democratic progress the world over. It contains four pointed pictorial illustrations-a new feature of The Arena.

There's a chiel among ye takin' notes; an' faith he'll print 'em.

We learn by observation as well as by experience, and it is expected that we will profit by what we see and hear.

All are interested in the efforts to reach a successful scheme of cooperation, or social, economic existence. By the kindness of Bro. J. A. Anthony, of 231 Castro street, San Francisco, California, a student of social economy and local cooperation of some years standing, we are furnished with some data that we give for the examination of those inter-

The system is known as the Rochdale Plan.

Cooperation dates from the middle ages, when groups of men gathered together to protect themselves and to carry on industries of all kinds on the avowed principle of association. It progressed under various forms until in 1844, twenty-eight weavers in the town of Rochdale, England, having collected $140.00, began a store on the principle of dividing profits on the amount of purchases, and making all the purchasing members shareholders with a fixed interest on capital. The movement has rapidly and steadily grown in England until the membership is now more than 1,730,000, with an annual trade of $349,000,000 and profits of $39,000,000.

The principle of cooperation has been successfully adopted also in France, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Australia, and the United States.

There is a store in operation at No. 1896. Mission street, San Francisco, California. Of this association Bro. Anthony is a member. From the leaflet circulated by it, page 2, we quote the portion of history above, and leading features of association as follows:

- 1. Application for membership is open to all.
- 2. An admission fee of one dollar and a payment of five dollars upon a share constitutes a membership.

3. Profits and interest may be applied on the unpaid share.

- 4 Shares are $100 each, and each member can hold only one share.
- 5. Each member has only one vote. 6. Each member is eligible to office.
- 7. Shares are all transferable. (With the consent of the Board of Directors.)

- 8 Interest is allowed on all share capital.
- 9 All members of the store hold regular meetings for the election of officers, reports of manager and auditing of accounts.

10 The manager is employed by the Board of Directors, and is under bonds.

11. The net profits are divided among the members in proportion to the purchases of

12. All trade is done on a strictly cash hasis.

13 Goods are sold at market rates.

14 Only pure and reliable goods are handled.

From the same leaflet we quote a series of statements used in the form of argument in behalf of cooperation in mercantile affairs:

1. It prevents the waste of labor, now caused by unregulated competition.

2 It conciliates the conflicting interests of the capitalist, the worker and the purchaser, through an equitable division among them of the profits of trade.

3. It teaches the members the power of union.

4. It insures honesty in trade.

It spreads knowledge of matters of trade.

It avoids the evils of the credit system. 7. It encourages the members to save. It creates capital by saving.

8. It stimulates the individual to self-help and self-improvement. 9. It creates a spirit of self-reliance and independence in its members. 10. It guarantees εquality among the members. All are equal in voting power. No one makes a profit upon the trade of others.

11. Cooperation encourages effort towards excellence by assuring reward according to the value of the services rendered to society.

There is in connection a sort of exchange arranged with other branches of merchandise traffic, by which it is claimed benefits are secured to the members of the association not enjoyed by those not belonging to it.

The association issuing the leaflet from which we quote has been carrying on the store some seven months; and though the incumbent of the office of local manager has been twice changed, one having been removed for peculation and one for incompetency, and the third one is now in occupation and on trial, Bro. Anthony believes the experiment will be a success. He admits, however, that there is opportunity for dishonest peculation if a man is chosen and trusted who is not true to his fellows. It may be that this is not the fault of the system, and we do not mention it to suggest that it is: for the reason that so far as our observation goes no plan has yet been devised so perfect but what dishonesty has found a way to peculate and enrich itself, temof the principles of honor and rules of fairness in dealing with the things of the unrighteous mammon. So, if the plan presented should be found of worth and practicable in other respects, the fact that the man necessarily to be trusted may betray such trust and injure the interests of the association and the credit of the system, this should not vitiate the parts of the plan found to be effective. We think Bro. Anthony told us that there were several other stores in the state, one of which has been in operation for five and another for three years, and showing good prospects for continuity, as he believes.

We believe that cooperation is practicable among the Saints in any place where there is any considerable number of them together. But it must be borne in mind that any association established for mutual benefit is in its principles in the nature of a trust. No necessity exists for any to take exceptions to this statement, for the reason that the first beneficiaries of the association are its members, the chief benefits accrue to them. Those not in the association are not entitled to receive of the beneficial results, unless they are bestowed by actual consent of the association itself as a direct gift.

The support of the whole church would be small if it were practicable to turn it all into active operation in the one direction. This is manifestly impossible. It is an equally visible fact that any smaller number of the whole would afford a more restricted field of operation for any of the varied branches of trade, or industry, providing that patronage was confined to the Saints alone. Hence, unless there is an element of success found in the venture, whatever it may be that is chosen, that is by its nature commended to them who are without from whom patronage is solicited, there is added reason to fear failure. This ought to be taken into the account.

There are features in this Rochdale system that are to be commended. Whether they are all essential to permanent success remains to be tested by time. It must, also, be left to time to determine whether complete safeguards against peculation from the inside are desirable or possible.

The giving of bonds by the manager, as required by feature No. 10, sugporarily at least, by a betrayal gests that there must be monetary responsibility in the association itself, beyond that supposed to be guaranteed by success, limited or extended; for should a manager fall into liability, he must be made to answer in the courts and he could not be made to do that except by a responsible corporation. How far the Rochdale plan makes its corporators liable as individuals does not appear.

If cooperative associations are to be instituted in conformity to the laws of the land those establishing them must safeguard the interests of its stockholders and those who may be affected by their operation, or they come short of what the law requires.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY SHOT.

On Friday last the people of the United States were shocked by the sad news that President McKinley was shot while attending the Pan-American Exposition. The sad details were speedily flashed over the country, and the people were thrown into a peculiar state of excitement. They were grief-stricken that their beloved President had been shot down while in the midst of his people greeting them and receiving their greetings and salutations. They were humiliated to think such dastardly work can be culminated in their midst. They were indignant and horrified to think such characters as the cowardly assassin are being developed in our midst, and that the class is growing.

The assassin is Leon F. Czolgosz, an avowed anarchist, fired, as he states, by the speeches of Emma Goldman, an active and bold anarchist. What motive impelled the cowardly Pole to perpetrate his bloody deed cannot be conjectured except that the anarchistic principle of annihilation of law and order impelled him to destroy what he pleases to call a "ruler." It is firmly believed that Czolgosz was the instrument used by anarchists in a plot to destroy President McKinlev. The assassin deems himself a martyr to a good cause, and is satisfied that he has done humanity a service in ridding the world of a "ruler."

It is really deplorable that such characters as Czolgosz develop in America. They do, and are numerous,—a sad state of affairs indeed.

Last reports before going to press state that the chances for President McKinley's recovery are bright. We sincerely trust that we as a nation are not for the third time called upon to mourn for an assassinated President. He has received every care that skilled physicians can give, and a saddened and horrified nation anxiously and hopefully watches for the glad news that he is out of danger.

THE Review, of Rhodes, Iowa, has been giving some very fair and extended notices of the camp meeting held there. In the issue for August 15, about three quarters of a column is devoted to telling of the opening, giving a description of Zion's Religio, also Sunday school work, and then announces program for conference. In the issue for August 22 about the same amount of space is devoted to telling of the meetings. Among other things the Review says:

The meetings have continued during the week, three and four sessions being held daily. The best of feeling has prevailed between the campers and the good people of Rhodes and we expect to see it continue to the close. It can be said that the sermons preached have brought the people to a fuller discussion of the scriptures and friendly discussions of the themes delivered from the stand have been repeatedly discussed after the sermons.

SAVE CORN FODDER WHEN MATURE.

The following issued from the Iowa Experiment Station, at Ames, Iowa, is, we think, well worthy the careful consideration of our readers interested in agriculture:

The corn crop area of Iowa is estimated at over eight million acres. Notwithstanding the drought, the crop will yield about a ton of fodder per acre and some of it considerable more. At present prices of hay and other farm feeds, this product is easily worth $2 50 to $3 00 per ton when properly cured. The corn fodder product of the state therefore represents $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 worth of feed at prevailing prices. The corn fodder that reaches maturity this season will be richer in nutrients and will have a higher feeding value per ton than fodder of more luxuriant growth such as ordinarily takes place.

The value of this product depends largely on the time of cutting, as well as the manner of keeping and feeding. Early cutting should be avoided as it means loss of nutrients and unsatisfactory feed. It ordinarily requires from 115 to 130 days to mature a good crop of corn in Iowa, but practically all of the real nutritive or feeding value of a crop is made and stored in the plant during the last six weeks between what is known as the milk and the well dented stages of the grain, and over 50 per cent of the feeding value of the crop is made during the last 30 days.

The increase of nutrients in the corn crop during the ripening process has been quite carefully studied at the experiment stations, and some decidedly interesting and practical information has been gathered that should serve as a guide to the farmer in utilizing the corn crop which will be of so much importance during the coming winter. At the Geneva, New York, Experiment Station, it was found that the following increase in yield took place in an acre of corn between the tasseling stage July 30, and the fully ripe condition September 23.

INCREASE IN YIELD OF AN ACRE OF CORN BETWEEN TASSELING AND RIPENING.

Date of cutting.	Stage of Growth.	Corn per acre.	Water per acre.	Dry matter per acre.
July 30 Aug. 9 Aug.21 Sep. 7 Sep. 23	Tasseled Silked Milk Glazed Ripe	Tons 9.0 12.9 16.3 16.1 14.2	Tons 8.2 11.3 14.0 12.5 10.2	Tons .8 1.5 2.3 3.6 4.0

This table shows that an acre of corn cut July 30 yielded 9 tons of fodder, more than 8 tons or over 91 per cent of which was water. By leaving the corn stand until September 7, the yield was increased to 16 tons and the water reduced to 71 per cent. The total yield of dry matter per acre, which represents all that has any feeding value, was increased from 45 of a ton per acre at the tasseling stage to 4 tons per acre, or five times the original amount, at the fully ripe stage. By a study of the ch mical composition of the corn fodder at the different stages of growth, it was found that the principal nutrients, albuminoids, nitrogen free extract, or starch and sugar, and ether extract or fat, in an acre of corn was even greater between the period of tasseling and ripening than the difference in yield. This is shown in the following table:

INCREASE IN YIELD OF NUTRIENTS PER ACRE BETWEEN TASSELING AND RIPENING.

Yield per Acre.

	Album- inoids	Nitro- gen free ex- tract	Ether Ex- tract	Total
July 30 Tasseled.	240	654	72	966
Aug. 9 Silked	437	1399	168	2004
Aug. 21 Milk	479	2441	229	3149
Sep. 7 Glazed	634	4240	260	5134
Sep. 23 Ripe	678	4828	314	5820

These figures make it clear that an acre of corn at maturity is worth fully four times as much as it is when in tassel, and that an acre of corn when in the glazed or dented stage of the ears is worth about twice as much as when in milk.

The time for cutting corn, to secure the highest returns and value of fodder and grain combined is comparatively short. As a rule, it does not exceed ten days at the outside, although it may vary more than this with early and late varieties. These facts make it clear that the condition should be carefully studied and the crop secured when it will yield the highest returns in feeding value and quality of product. The corn situa-tion in this state has materially improved during the last half of August, and if the weather conditions are favorable it will make still greater improvement during the first ten or fifteen days of September. Practically all of the corn fodder of the state should be saved, but the crop should be allowed to mature and the product secured in the best possible condition. At the Iowa Experiment Station an increase of ten bushels per acre has taken place in the corn crop in ten days to two weeks, between the beginning of the denting stage and the fully dented condition. The exact condition of the crop in which it will give the best returns, all things considered, cannot be clearly described in all cases and under all conditions, but ordinarily it is found when the ears are fully dented and the lower leaves of the stalk have turned brown. Sometimes the corn crop ripens very quickly, owing to a period of heat and dry weather in September. The cornfields should be watched closely and when the plant is in the right condition the corn binders or cutters should be started and kept at work continuously until the crop is secured. Unless cornfields are very badly "fired" and the stalks entirely dry and withered, the plant will gather considerable nutrient during the last 30 days of the season. Dry and brown leaves do not by any means indicate that the plant is destroyed, so far as the growth and elaboration of nutriment in the stalk is concerned. even though the ears may be entirely lacking. Some of the worst tired corn in vicinity of Ames has been analyzed by Dr. Weems, Station Chemist, and found to contain over 79 per cent of water, which is more than was found in green corn in normal condition where it had not suffered from the drought. Both practical experience and observation in feeding and a careful chemical study demonstrate that the corn plant makes and stores most of its nutriment during the latter stages of growth, and this should be kept in mind in securing the present season's crop.

THE San Francisco Examiner for August 19, contains the following:

SON OF PROPHET IS IN THE CITY.

The local Reorganized Mormon Colony mustered its full strength in the Druid Temple, Fourteenth and Folsom streets last night to accord President Joseph Smith a welcome worthy of the son of the prophet and the present head of their church. He has returned to California after an absence of fourteen years to examine the conditions of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints and to preside at the reunion in Oakland, which, beginning August 30, will continue ten days.

An old man, with a full flowing white beard, President Smith has a decidedly patriarchal appearance. He is the son of that Joseph Smith that an enraged Illinois mob shot to death in Carthage fifty-seven years ago. He was named by the Prophet Joseph as his successor, and has since remained at the head of that branch of the Mormons that repudiate Brigham Young as an impostor. As the editor of his father's works, he is charged by the followers of Brigham Young with altering the Revela-tions, and publishing the "Book of Mormon" and 'Doctrine and Covenants" in such form and 'Doctrine and Covenants in as to further his own interests.

The main difference between the two branches of the church is the doctrine of polygamy. The "original" branch, as Mr. man among you shall have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none, for the Lord God delight in the chastity of woman." It also calls polygamy "a grosser crime than pride." The Smith, or reorganized, branch of the church points out that whereas the Utah Mormons claim that the Prophet Joseph received the revelation authorizing polygamy in 1843, they did not publish it until 1852. The defense of the disciples of Brigham Young is that the people were not prepared to receive the doctrine prior to that time and further that the present Joseph Smith eliminated it when arranging the works of the prophet, his father, for publication.

President Smith in very dramatic fashion denied this charge last night.

President Smith lives in Iowa, and devotes his entire attention to the church, which now has a membership of 50,000. He is accompanied by his brother, A. H. Smith, who is Patriarch of the church, and Joseph Luff, one of the twelve specific. one of the twelve apostles. He preached yesterday morning in the church of the Latter Day Saints in Oakland, which is under the pastorate of Elder Frederick B. Blair.

THE following news item has gone the rounds of the press recently:

"AUNT ZINA" IS DEAD.

Salt Lake, Utah, August 28 - Mrs. Zina D. H. Young died today, aged 80 years. She was born in Watertown, New York. in 1821, and was one of the pioneers in the Mormon movement. She was married to Joseph Smith at Nauvoo, Illinois, and after his death she became the wife of Brigham Young. There are now but four surviving wives of the famous Mormon leader.

About all that is necessary to reply to the statement that Zina D. H. Young was a wife of Joseph Smith is to quote from our tract, "Was Joseph Smith a Polygamist," written by Bro. Heman C. Smith. On pages 2 and 3 is the following:

We will take the case of Mrs. Zina D. Huntington Young, as given in her own publications. In "Representative Women of Deseret," page 12, the following statement is found:

"Sr. Zina was married in Nauvoo, and had two sons; but this not proving a happy union, she subsequently separated from her husband. Joseph Smith taught her the principle of marriage for eternity, and she accepted it as a divine revelation, and was sealed to the Prophet for time and all eternity, after the order of the new and everlasting cove-

Neither the date of her marriage to Mr. Jacobs nor that of her sealing to Joseph Smith is given in this extract; but fortunately we have the required data at hand. In the Record of Marriages in Hancock county, Illinois, Book A, page 40, is the record of the marriage of Henry B. Jacobs and Zina D Huntington, March 7, 1841, by John C. Bennett, Mayor of Nauvoo.

A careful search of the records discloses no divorce of these parties.

In the "Historical Record," published by Andrew Jenson, of the Utah church, volume 6, page 233, is found the following:

Zina D. Huntington, afterwards the wife of Pres. Brigham Young, sealed to the Prophet October 27, 1841, Dimick B. Hun-tington efficiating."

According to these statements, taken from official records, and the publications of the Utah people themselves, it was just seven months and twenty days after her marriage to Jacobs that she was sealed to Joseph Smith. During this seven months and twenty days she bore two sons to Jacobs, separated from him, obtained a divorce (of which there is no record), received instruction from Joseph Smith on the "principle of marriage for eternity, and was sealed to him. To suggest that fur-ther refutation is necessary would be an insult to the intelligence of the reader.

THE St. Louis Post-Dispatch for July 7 contained an article concerning the work of some Utah elders in that city. The article states that the elders state frankly that they believe in polygamy, and state that polygamy is a "very little thing in comparison with the greater tenets of the Mormon church." The paper states that

They call themselves Mormons, though appreciating the popular hostility toward the

They say they are Brigham Young Mormons, thus differentiating themselves from the Josephites of the Reorganized Church, the more popular church of the two with the whole American people.

One of the elders, Albert M. Olson, is reported as saying:

We have had few converts here in the city, and equally few in Illinois. We have not expected many. We are not so foolish as to suppose that we can make anything but slow progress with our faith when there is so much prejudice against it. This prejudice we regard as unjust and highly regrettable. But it exists, and we must reckon with it in our work.

We come here to do this work because we are called of God. We are assigned by the superior officers of our church, and go where we are sent. We work as missionaries three years. We are then released, and are privileged to return to our homes and do what we will. The aggregate missionary force of the Mormon church in the United States is two thousand. The whole work is just what it is here.

We are bachelors. We live alone here, employing a housekeeper.

We do our own cooking.

Our individual expenses range from $10 to $15 a month. I came here in May, 1899. My entire expenses since that time have been

We pay our own expenses. We get no money from our church, and take up no collections. We do not preach the gospel for money. We use our own money, and that sent us by our families, our parents, brothers, and sisters.

THE Benkelman News, of Colorado, August 23, contains the following paragraph commendatory of Bro. J. B. Roush's effort in that place.

The funeral of Leonard U. Parsons on last Sunday was one of the largest ever seen in Dundy county, and the funeral sermon preached by J. B. Roush, of Denver, is pronounced by many the best ever delivered in Benkelman. It is to be hoped that he will again preach in our city on some occasion in the near future.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Writing from Corydon Junction, Indiana, August 23, Bro. T. J. Bell says:

I am still in the fight. Just closed a series of meetings at Oak hill, in Crawford county, and at Sigler creek, in Perry county. A week ago last Tuesday night some of the toughs had arranged to egg me. So I was informed by three different men. The Saturday night prints this after we had alosed day night prior to this, after we had closed our meeting and the crowd was gone, some one shot three balls through the door, strik-ing the back of the seat and blackboard just where I had stood while preaching. Two stones were thrown through the windows, and were found lying near the stand. Of course several panes of glass were broken. I am laboring for the cause, and will still move on in the work, as I believe all things will work for good to those that love our God and his Christ. The work in some parts of this mission field is looking up, and prospects better. May God speed the work.

President Smith writes from Oakland, California:

We are in camp. A large assembly of Saints present. Weather cool and damp yesterday, and this a. m., August 31; but now at 2:12 a little warmer.

Bro. J. M. Baker writes from Rockwell City, Iowa, September 3:

Everything moving very well here. Wife and I go home today to make preparations for the reunion. Bro. Kephart has come to help in the tent work here, which will continue over the 15th.

In a letter of recent date, Sr. E. L. Kelley writes the following to her son E. L. Kelley, Jr.:

As you see from the heading of this we are in Hamilton, Scotland, about thirteen miles from Glasgow. We are going there today to attend the International Exhibition in progress at that place. Want to see how it compares with such shows in America.

Bro. J. W. Rushton, at whose house we are stopping, is a young elder, working mostly alone here in Scotland, and he seemed very anxious for your papa to come and help him out a little. They held an outdoor meeting Sunday evening, the first I ever attended, and had an audience of about five hundred, with excellent order and attention. Last evening they walked twelve miles from Hamilton to a place called Carluke and held another outdoor meeting. They report a very other outdoor meeting. They report a very good time. Tonight they are to hold a meeting in Glasgow; then every night some place while we stay, which will likely be about a week longer.

We are feeling well. The air up here is quite bracing.

Bro. D. S. Crawley writes the following from Kiel, Oklahoma, under date of September 1:

I am sixteen miles west of Dover where our reunion was held. I have preached here the last week and baptized four today. Go to Guy tomorrow, fifty miles away, to fill ap-Will write you from there next

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. J. W. Wight reports that at the Tabor reunion twenty-five had been baptized up to Sunday, the 1st. and another had requested baptism.

Brn. H. N. and Paul M. Hanson appeared in print in the Sioux City. Iowa, Journal for August 28. They briefly explain our belief, and clearly make the distinction that we are in no way connected with the Utah church. An epitome of the faith is given.

The August number of the Paradise of the Pacific comes to our desk. It is an excellently printed journal, and speaks much for the enterprise of its publisher. In our selected article column this week we give from it an article on Hawaiian Genealogy.

"A Sister" writes us that she has been a member of the church for nine years, but has not added her testimony to those which have appeared in the HERALD. Her husband and sons are not members of the church, and she asks the Saints to pray that she may live to see them brought into the fold.

Bro. L. W. Pate writes from Redmoon, Oklahoma, telling of how a Christian minister took Bro. Hancock's hour and appointment on August 18. At the evening meeting the minister occupied again, and at the close Bro. James Baggerly called the house to order again and reviewed the minister's positions. Negotiations were begun for debate, which may result in some of their men meeting us.

Bro. Green Cloyd, who lost his wife by death last March, writes that he is now living with his children in Omaha. He says he is trying to live to be worthy to meet her in the happy future. He loves this work. He and his son are sick, and he asks the prayers of the Saints.

The Fremont County Herald for August 29, contains about one column devoted to a report of the Tabor reunion. A clear distinction is made in the report between us and the Utah people. Short biographical sketches of J. W. Wight and J. F. Mintun are given.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NOTES.

The following letter was received by Bro. J. A. Gunsolley:

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, August 30. Friend Jerry:-After the word received at the April conference I should fell under condemnation did I not put forth somewhat of an effort to help pay the college debt; for I am one of the membership, and therefore the part of the message, "the debt should be paid," is as much directed to me as to any other one member. Therefore I inclose my check for twenty-five dollars, and you will please turn it over to the proper one.

We are doing fairly well this extremely dry hot summer, and the most of the Saints are reasonably well.

Bro. C. P. Faul, of Clarksdale, Miseouri, Bishop's agent for Far West district, Missouri, sends in a contribution for a young sister who is employed with the daily house duties and for which she receives a small compensation. This sister from her small earnings gets in line with the late revelation and shows her love for her Master by keeping his command, "If ye love me keep my commandments."

Our Bro. A. H. Rudd, of the Dow City, Iowa, Enterprise, sends in a remittance and list of ten names, among which is the name of Sr. Almira Field, of whom he writes:

Sr. Almira Field is a blind woman and earned her offering by taking in washing. Wish others had the same spirit of sacrifice and Graceland debt would soon be paid.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY. NO. I.

BY HEMAN C SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, August 18, 1901. Reported for HERALD by Sr. Anna Allen.

It may not be necessary in a discourse or lecture of this character to take a text, but I desire to refer you to the instruction given to Moses by the Lord, at the time of the writing of the law, found in Exodus 34: 27:

And the Lord said unto Moses. Write thou these word: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel.

I simply refer you to this for the purpose of inviting your minds to the thought that God has given his sanction, yea more, his commandment that events that have transpired should be I think you will agree with me, when you think the matter over carefully, that of all studies that we can be engaged in, the study of history is the study of studies. In fact, it is impossible for us to study any other subject matter without history entering in. I care not where you turn your mind, if you undertake to become conversant with any of the sciences, astronomy for instance, if moving, and see where they achieved you wish to become acquainted with astronomy, one of the first things you must meet is the history of astronomy. If you want to know anything of geology, or archæology, or botany, or any of the studies that go to finish an education, the history of the particular study in which you are engaged is very essential. In fact, it is impossible for you to make any advancement without the history of the thing you are engaged in.

It will occur to you that history is an important thing. One of the most important subjects in which history has its part is the dealing of God with his people, the study of what God has done and what he has said to his people in ages that are past; and among the best possible ways we can get information in regard to his will is through history.

Too much importance cannot be attached to this subject, and I regret that the church has neglected it to the The more experience extent it has. we have with men, the more I insist that the church has robbed herself of the defense she might have made had she given more attention to the recording of history. It has been so neglected that it is extremely difficult to get at the exact truth in regard to the history of the church, and many events must now remain untold that would be interesting to us all, and instructive, too, simply because the matter has been neglected so long.

I wish to say, at this juncture, a word in regard to the utility of history. Now, in my way of thinking, it does no good to know that certain characters once lived. It does no good to know that such men once lived as Plato, as Socrates, as Cato, or any of the worthy philosophers of ages gone by; to know that such men lived on this continent as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and John Adams would not profit us; it would be of no particular utility to know that such men as Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew once lived; it would be of no particular good to know that (bringing it down nearer our own time) such men as Joseph Smith, David Whitmer, and Oliver Cowdery lived. The good that comes to us is in this, that in reading the history of those times, and the history of those men, inseparably connected one with the other, we notice the steps by which they rose, or we notice the obstacles that they stumbled over or failed to surmount. We notice what it was that made them an immortal name, or covered their life with shame.

There passes before us a review of the kingdoms and empires of the world, all their environments and conditions, and, as the light of history reflects upon their acts, we see them their success and where they made their failures; we see what has contributed to their success and what to their failures, and as we look upon these things as reflected in the light of history, we learn lessons that are of incalculable benefit to us. As I said before, to simply know that these men existed would do us no good, but we can see now better than they saw then, because they are writing for our benefit in the face of the undiscovered future as we are writing now for the benefit of those who may follow us. The curtain was drawn before their eyes, but what it obscured is opened before us, and as history reflects these events, we see how every act of theirs terminated, what principles were of benefit, what acts were good for them and what acts were not. We see how evils were brought on by taking a certain course in life, and that success was obtained by an opposite course, and we can square our lives by the lessons thus learned.

We might sit down and read history and yet not get the benefits spoken of, if our minds are resting upon the incidents only. I might be able to relate incident upon incident, but I have received no good from history unless I have noticed the effect of these acts upon the men who did them or upon the community where they were done. History, in fact, is a reflection of God's dealings with humanity. It reflects the work of God largely, but while it reflects the work of God, it reflects also the work of man. Man has his character stamped upon this work of history, and while there is an overruling hand that controls the destiny of man, yet the lessons that are to be learned from it are not all wholesome, I would say rather, that the examples that are set by men of historic character are not all wholesome, they should be investigated. Truthful history means useful history. History that will do good to humanity is not the kind of history that takes of good deeds and virtues only, and holds them up to the light and points you to them and them alone. Truthful history, history that is correct, does not spare the character of which it speaks. Mistakes have been made, and these mistakes must be pictured too; if they are not, then veracity is violated. You read the history of conquest and glory only, and you receive not the great benefit of historic mistakes; you simply see the one side and the flowery side, while the other side is kept in the dark and you cannot get the warning and admonition you ought to get from the reading of history.

History is immutable, it is impossible to change it. An act does not become history until that act is per-was done. If a mistake is made, history must record it for the lesson it gives to others, lest they make the same mistake. You and I are making history tonight, we are making history every day of our lives. It may not be written history, and yet it is written history, it is written upon our minds and upon our developments, as the acts of our lives to be read, so that when we shall stand before the bar of God to be judged it shall be written upon us to add to the record of our development or retrogression. It is recorded there. God's eye can read and his understanding can follow the mind of man in its development and he will know just what we have done and how we have done it from the effect that is written upon us, for a thing once done is done forever.

There is another thing I want to call your attention to, and that is, if God has seemed to favor some individuals in his overruling, and we have noticed in history that some men and some nations have been the especial objects of God's goodness, if these nations have seemed to be especially favored and cared for, their lines laid in pleasant places, it is not because God loved them better than others, but, as in the days of Israel, God had a chosen people, not because he cared more for the salvation of Israel than he cared for other people, but he chose them as the recipients of his divine law that others may be blessed by his law as well as they. Any nation or any man who shall receive the blessing of light and superior wisdom from God, and then reserve the blessings accruing therefrom to themselves, and in their superior knowledge impart not the light they have received, nor the blessings God has bestowed upon them, if they let not their light shine forth, then woe be to that nation or that man, for as certain as God is good, he will not permit you or me or any other person to receive of his bounty and refuse when we have an opportunity to distribute that bounty, whether it be in light, liberty, education, or other things that this world can furnish. So bear in mind when you read in history of God's favors bestowed upon any man, it has been for the purpose of blessing, through that man, other men as well. When he has bestowed favors upon any people, it has been for the purpose of disseminating to other people as well as they.

I wish to say to you tonight, if you receive especial favors from God (and in the examination of history we are convinced that God has had a care for this people and has overruled in their behalf), remember, he is doing it not for your good alone, he is doing it formed, and when once performed it that you might be a light unto the always remains a fact that the act nations of the earth. He does it that through you he may disseminate light and truth to the world, and that they through you might be lifted to greater heights. If, in your selfishness, you refuse to let the light shine, it will be to your loss in time to come.

I believe, as I remarked before, that God's hand is in the ruling of events in the world; and when we read history, we must recognize the hand of God in distributing blessings, in the overruling of nations and events for the good of all. In speaking of history (and it is our purpose, during the course of these lectures, to speak of the history of the latter-day work) it becomes necessary, as in all other history, to speak of the individuals that are connected with it. I cannot separate history from the acts of the persons that performed their work as God worked upon them, as he inspired their minds, as he has lifted them above their fellow men. Only in the acts of man can we read the wonderful work of God in history, and therefore it becomes necessary in speaking of the history of this latterday work to speak of individuals. We trust we shall not be guilty of presenting them as heroes to be unduly honored or of picturing their acts greater than they deserve. I trust we shall not try to cover up any mistakes they have made. If we cover up the mistakes we lose an important lesson. Their mistakes as well as their successes are for our instruction.

There is, however, a difference, or I would say two extremes. One is hero worship, which worships an individual because of the work he did, and the other extreme is to deny the meed of praise due him, and not give him credit for the work done, but ignore his part in the work. The ignore his part in the work. proper mean between the two extremes is to give every man and every woman engaged in history their proper place and to give them proper praise and credit for the work they did. But while doing this we must necessarily recognize that if the work be of God, they are only instruments in the hand of God for performing the work.

I do not think that those who know me best will accuse me of being a hero worshiper, or of giving to man more credit than is his due, if I know what it is: and I do not wish on the other hand to go to the other extreme and deny him the proper meed of praise for his integrity in, and devotion to, the right.

Tonight, I want to go a little farther back than the immediate characters that began this latter-day work, and try to show you, if I can, how God was preparing for this work before it began among men, before the instruments used knew what they were being used for, before those whom God chose to be strong warriors in the beginning of the work were born. And if it should be that in my praise of individuals, I should be accused of worshiping the instrument, I believe that I would prefer to be accused of worshiping a heroine than a hero, and I will commence with a woman.

It is written, or has been said by somebody, that "God could not be everywhere and so he made mothers." But I do not altogether agree with the sentiment. I think it conveys the idea that God created mothers to do what he would do if he were there, that God could not be everywhere and so he made mothers. It conveys the idea, to my mind, that he has created mothers to do what he would do if he were present. I believe if God be not there, the mother cannot do her work. if God be there she will still have her work to do. A better way of stating the proposition is, that God could be everywhere to take cognizance of every need or demand, so he gave to woman the functions to become mothers.

I want to invite your attention to the fact that on the 8th day of July, 1776,—do you recognize the date, or any date that was very near to it? Four days after the Declaration of Independence was adopted by the Continental Congress, - that immortal document that has inspired more souls with the love of liberty than anything else ever written, - four days after the Declaration of Independence, a girl baby was born in the little town of Gilsum, county, New Hampshire. Cheshire Do you not think, when you reflect upon the fact that the whole country was intensely interested before the Declaration of Independence was adopted, that this whole land was wrought up with enthusiasm, and every hour men and women listened for the next news that should come to them by the slow processes then in vogue, to know how things were moving between this country and the mother country, anxious to know what the next development would be, that if there is anything in prenatal influence (and I believe there is), that child was inspired with courage, with the love of principle, with the love of truth, with a hatred of tyranny, and with every virtue that would go to make up a character of independence, of strong will in resisting the wrong and standing for the right? Four days after the Declaration of Independence the child came into the world. She grew to womanhood, and in her early womanhood, when a young lady, events were so arranged, whether by the overruling providence of God or otherwise, that this young lady left her home in New Hampshire and went to Tunbridge, Vermont, to visit an elder brother. There she met (you may think I am superstitious, you may think I am putting more in these events than belong there, but I believe God chose that girl, that young lady, and had overruled events in the family, that these things should take place as they did, because of the preparation that was being made for a future work that you and I have seen developing) a young man who afterwards became her husband. marriage took place June 24, 1796, while she was not yet twenty years old. At the time of the marriage, the young man owned a comfortable farm in that neighborhood. To use the language of history, he owned a "handsome farm." So far as we have been able to understand he held it clear of incumbrance. And upon that farm they began their married life. But to them, as to many others, came the desire for an increase of worldly goods, a desire to make their situation better. It occurred to them that perhaps they might make more money in the mercantile business; and so they left the farm and removed to Randolph, where they entered into the mercantile business. The spirit of speculation is honorable, perhaps, but sometimes deceptive. Subsequently they thought they saw an opportunity to increase their profits, and they entered the business of crystallizing and shipping ginseng to China. To make a long story short, they were defrauded of all the proceeds of this business, getting simply a chest of tea out of the venture. Somebody else got the money. Now came a trial. They were one thousand eight hundred dollars in debt for goods bought in the city of Boston while in the mercantile business. They had made arrangements so that this one thousand eight hundred dollars would not fall due until the time they expected to get returns from this venture. They got nothing from China and the debt became due. What did they do? They had their farm yet, and had returned to it. At that time, we are told, the farm was estimated to be worth about one thousand five hundred dollars. Quite a valuable farm in those days. Land was not worth so much then as now. This man, rather than fail to meet his obligations, sold the one thousand five hundred dollar farm for eight hundred dollars, and what did the wife do?

We will go back a little and remind you that at the time of her marriage there was a wedding present made to her of a check for one thousand dollars from her brother and his partner. They were not in circumstances to need the one thousand dollars at that time, and she laid the check away thinking sometime to use it to her advantage. The check was still unused when the debt became due, and the wife laid her one thousand dollars on the eight hundred dollars of her husband, and thus paid the debt, while they walked out of their home, homeless. Was not that an indication of honesty? Think you that these people had any disposition to try to defraud men? Was it not an act that ought to receive proper credit? Honesty is stamped on the transaction. This woman had kept this check for vears, and no doubt built air-castles, as most women do when they have money, and men, too, for that matter (and not altogether air castles either, for there was something substantial about it), planning what use she could put it too and the comfort it would bring her. But she said: We owe that money and we will pay it if necessary at the sacrifice of everything, even our home. They had three children depending upon them at this time. If past events should be written, the record of this should not be destroyed from the earth. Such people would, I believe, act properly under all circumstances so far as they knew what right was.

But there is more connected with the transaction. About the time they were thus sacrificing for principle's sake, soon after they resolved to go out without a shelter, their fourth. child, their third son, was born on the 23d day of December, 1805. Taking into consideration these circumstances and these environments, you who believe in prenatal influences will not be surprised, you will not wonder when you recognize that that boy inherited the strength of character that came to his mother during those revolutionary times, that he inherited that courage, that liberty-loving disposition, that determination to stand for the right; and at the same time consider that at his conception and birth his parents were sacrificing their all for principle's sake, making themselves homeless and penniless that they might meet their honest debts,when you realize, I say, that he inherited the prenatal disposition stamped upon his mother during the days of the Revolution, and then inherited the disposition to sacrifice his all for truth and right, you will not be surprised, if in after years you find him hurling defiance at the powers of evil while he lays his all upon the altar of truth.

This couple that made such heroic sacrifice for the right commenced life anew. Right here permit me to say a word or two to parents. It is very natural for us as parents, that in the hour of trial we wish more than anything else to leave something to secure the comfort of our children. We want to accumulate something so they will not have as hard a time to meet the world as we have had. Think you not those people had the same desire? But they gave to their children, and especially to this boy boy born right at that time, a legacy that was worth more than untold millions. There is no comparison between the legacy bequeathed to him and the millions that may have been inherited by others. Sometimes for the sake of saving property for yourself and your children you cover up a little, and sometimes, perhaps, will not be true to conscience, you crucify it a little, you get a little deceptive about your manner of doing business, and stamp upon your child a disposition to be deceptive also, and you have made him a culprit for the sake of leaving him a few paltry dollars. You make a mistake! Give him the legacy of honesty, a disposition to do right, and stand for the right whatever it may cost! Go out of your pleasant home, leave the shelter you have, rather than contaminate your child with one single thought or one single trait that will lead him to destruction!

This is the history of this case, and it proved to be a thing of worth. The husband then rented a farm and cultivated it during the summer season, and taught school during the fall and winter. They prospered to an extent and became a little more comfortable as time passed, and had hopes of the recovery of their fortune. But, shall I say again that God did not intend it to be so; they were not at the place where God designed that their work should begin. They were not located where God intended that their lifework should lie. And hence, while prosperity was promised and they were in a measure succeeding, there came to them sickness and consequent adverse conditions. The boy born in those troublous times had a severe affliction by which he lost from one of his limbs a part of the bone, and doctor's bills drained their reserve and they were again left without any resources upon which to depend. In this extremity the husband said to his wife, "I would go farther west and look for a home upon the frontier where land would be cheaper and prospects better, but I have some bills to pay before I go," and the woman, full of resources, as women generally are, suggested that if he got his debtors and creditors together, he might get the one to take the other for the debt. He acted upon the suggestion, got his creditors and debtors together and talked the matter over, and they agreed to settle the matter between them and leave him free. He went west into the wilds of New York, as it was then called, stopping at Palmyra, New York.

After being there for a time and thinking his fortunes would be better served there, he sent for his family. They were in very poor circumstances, and a journey of a few hundred miles then meant a great deal more than it does now. There were no such opportunities as we have to go quickly upon the cars. And when they got the word that the husband wanted them to come, they began to make preparations. Some of those individuals with whom he had settled came forward, and not having given a receipt, they claimed the debt again. That was, of course, a great detriment; but she thought it better to pay the debt if possible, than to stay and litigate the matter when her husband was expecting her; and so she, by an extra exertion, raised the money and paid them, again leaving her almost without means.

She had a team, and got a man to drive it. On the way one of her boys came to her and said: "Mother, Mr. Howard has thrown the goods out of the wagon, and is about starting off with the team." She went immediately to the man and asked him what he meant. He said he had expended all the money given him and could go no farther. She informed parties that were present that the team belonged to her husband, and the man was trying to rob her. Then turning to Mr. Howard, said: "Sir, I now forbid you touching the team, or driving it one step farther. You can go about your own business; I have no use for you. I shall take charge of the team myself and hereafter attend to my own affairs." There was a cropping out of the old revolutionary spirit that said. "We will unload your cargo in Boston Harbor, and run this institution ourselves." She took the team and moved on to Palmyra, arriving there with barely two cents in money and a few household goods. And when she found her husband busily trying to make a home for them, she thought of some way to help him. A council of the family was held, and the wife who had had some experience in painting oilcloths, etc., went into that business and thus provided provisions for that family of ten persons, herself, her husband, and eight children, while the husband and boys went to work to try to pay for one hundred acres of land.

To my mind, there was a connection of events which we will see more clearly as we proceed, that showed the overruling power of God. It showed that God was preparing this family for a work he was intending for them to perform, endowing them with those particular traits of character that would make them fit instruments to do that work for him, a work where courage was needed, a work where sacrifice would be required, where individuals would not count the cost when they found it necessary to do a thing, but would be willing to lay their all upon the altar of truth, to sacrifice every earthly prospect for the purpose of doing right. Honesty is stamped upon their acts when they would pay their obligations at the sacrifice of their home and all they had.

I need not tell some of you, but I will tell for the benefit of some who may not know, who these characters were. The first, the girl that was born the 8th of July, 1776, was Lucy Smith, the mother of Joseph Smith, the Seer. I need not go farther back than her, though I might go back generation after generation and show you the history of the family. The man we have mentioned who sacrificed his home and went out into the cold world, to meet his honest debt, was Joseph Smith, father of the This is evidence that man was an honest man. boy born under these trying circumstances is the man known to us as Joseph Smith, the prophet of God. We have no disposition to say that this man was infallible. No, we do not believe it; we believe he made mistakes, and these mistakes, as well as his successes, have been recorded for our benefit. We believe he did a great work, and a noble one. The traits of character that he inherited from his mother, and those born in him, because of the environments of his conception and birth, made him a man fit to do God's work. We do not say he was infallible. We recognize in him a weak and fallible creature, but we do say he was a prophet of God.

We leave this family at Palmyra struggling against poverty for subsistence. Whoever shall take up this subject in the future, will, of course, follow the history of this family in the work they brought forth.

POINTS ON THE WAY OF TRAVEL.

BY BISHOP E. L. KELLEY.

At eight o'clock p. m. July 8, 1901, we bade farewell to a large number of Saints and friends who had kindly gathered at the railroad station, Lamoni, Iowa, to extend the parting hand as we entered upon a distant journey across the sea, and soon were aboard the train bearing the way eastward. We were far out from home and its comforts and pleasures when night had gathered her darkest folds around and slumber had fallen upon the occupants of the popular reclining chairs of the C. B. & Q. railway, while the iron steed like a fiery stream bore us rapidly through the nightly shades towards the wonderful city at the foot of the great lakes.

The party of travelers was small in number but a very pleasant one. It just lacked five months of twenty years of constant work and travel by the writer in church duties, during which time Sister Kelley had never left the care of home and children for a missionary trip, but in the last hours of preparation for this journey she consented to risk the care of family to other hands for a season, and share the perils and pleasures of a foreign tour, trusting thereby to reap some reward for the effort by the restoration of health and regaining of wasted energies.

Sister W. H. Kelley and daughter Loneta, were also of the party as far as Kirtland, Ohio, making up the number to four; and notwithstanding the gains and losses on the way the number was just the same when we landed upon the dock at Liverpool, England.

At 7:30 a.m., the morning after our departure the train bore us safely into the depot in Chicago, but the want of time and the listing of engagements ahead, prevented any call upon the Saints, or stay in the city, so we hurried on reaching Kirtland, Ohio, by carriage from Willoughby, early the next morning.

Elders W. H. Kelley and Gomer T. Griffiths of the Twelve were met here, the former arranging his work for the year's labors and making efforts to recruit his health by sandwiching in a little manual labor; and the latter, making preparation for his trip with us to his distant field of gospel labor. Elder Henry C. Smith was also at his post of duty looking after the Temple and its many visitors, the work of which seemed to keep him as busy as any person in the town.

Elder J. H. Lake was absent from home but in his field of labor. We examined the Temple from dome to basement and found it in good repair with few exceptions, and kept clean and neat, which reflected credit both upon the labors of Bro. Henry C. Smith and the church which has made proper provision for its care and protection.

The Saints' meeting in the Temple in the evening was a very pleasant one and brought to mind the busy scenes in our meetings there with a little band of Saints fifteen years before. The time permitted for a stay here was very short and the visit but a skirmishing one. We called upon as many of the old neighbors and friends as possible in a twenty hours' stay, enjoying the hospitality of Bro. G. T. Griffiths and family, and were aided on the way by the arrangement of Bro. W. H. Kelley and sons, James and George, the former now being duly enlisted in the Lord's work as did his father in the early prime of life before him; and we trust that his labors may be as earnest, honest, and faithful.

We sincerely hope that the brothers and sisters in Kirtland shall not grow weary in well doing because of the hindrances and obstacles in the way of gospel work. These clogs by the evil one are to be met with everywhere that good can be accomplished among the people. It seems true that the old opposer of the truth from the beginning is still industrious; and knowing this, no brother or sister who has enlisted for the battle in the Master's cause can afford to slacken their energies while the conflict is on, neither permit jealousies nor false ambitious to destroy our hope in the final triumph of Zion's cause. He who fails of duty, or permits himself to become entangled in sin, in such an hour, can never be awarded the crown of a valiant soldier of the cross.

Our next stop was at Buffalo, New York, where we expected to visit extensively the Pan American Exposition, well under way there; but failing to become very greatly interested, proceeded upon our journey the evening of the second day. The arrangement for the exposition was upon an extensive plan, and the preparations in the highest degree commendable; but the too liberal mixing in of small side shows, and the crowding together of small merchants who were over solicitous of vending their wares, were such unwelcome things to the visitors that we could hardly see how the word "success" could ever be appropriately written over the undertaking. The American people expect to be liberal in and on their attendance upon commendable exhibits and displays of the work and genius of their nations; but they do not take kindly to efforts which seem to open up a short road to the storage of their hard earnings for people to filch therefrom with a ghoulish conscience, and who seem to never reflect that appropriateness of things demands a return in approximate values. We hope St. Louis will take warning before unfurling her great "world exhibit" to the people of the nations, and enact such measures as shall curb the work of the common fakir, and strike down the hands that are put forward in efforts to furnish amusements that only result in leading our young men and women nearer the whirlpool of shame and vice.

Quitting the Pan American exhibit the next morning found us at Albany, the capital of the great Empire State, and ready for a trip by water down the beautiful Hudson, to pass the coming Sabbath in Brooklyn long renowned as the "City of Churches." We were here pleasantly entertained at the home of our tried friends, Bro. and Sr. Joseph Squire, Sen. Sister Squire was absent the greater part of the time waiting upon the sick daugh ter Ellen; but Violet and Mary directed affairs in the happiest manner, and showed that they were not only interested and pleased in the beautiful and good things belonging to this temporal life, but what was better than all, faithful Saints, seeking first of all in their work the "interests of the kingdom of God." The Lord bless and lead to final triumph these, and all others who sacrifice and labor for the establishment of the divine

Bro. Thomas Lester, the Bishop's agent for New York district, and wife were called to mourn the loss of their little son eight months old the previous day, and on Sunday morning at ten o'clock we attended the funeral, assisting Bro. George Potts in the services, Sister Kelley going to the Sabbath school. At the cemetery we could not but observe the difference in the manner of burial where land is at a premium, and where there is plenty, as in the west. Here they inter by placing one body upon another to the number of three layers. This is done by digging quite deep for the first; and for the second unearthing to within a few inches of the first; and so for the third. method is also common in England and doubtless in all the old and populous centers.

The Brooklyn cemeteries furnish a very beautiful resting place for the departed, forcing upon the mind the thought, that after all this last sleep is a proper rest from the wearisome labors and the disappointments and ills of man's transitory state.

We dined with the pleasant family of Bro. and Sr. Potts and attended a good social or Saints' meeting in the afternoon, and at night preached to the people.

Having received an urgent call from Bro. U. W. Greene to visit him and Bro. David A. Anderson in their tent mission work, lately opened up in the edge of New York state, on Monday, in company with Bro. and Sr. Stephen Stone of New Canaan, Connecticut, we called upon them and found them well engaged, doing much good in publishing the gospel faith, and with the excellent help of Sisters Greene and Anderson in the song and social work, found they had made a large part of the community their friends, and friends of the truth. The evening services were enjoyable, after which our company returned to the home of Bro. Stone in New Canaan, with the addition of Sr. David A. Anderson, who was ready to extend her journey eastward, and in the afternoon of the succeding day we left New York with Sr. Anderson in company, for Providence, Rhode Island. The trip was made in one of the Providence steamers through Long Island Sound and by the ocean, and proved to be very pleasant and interesting along the course of the East River, where so much of an attractive feature was observable from either shore. Srs. Kelley and Anderson enjoyed the sea so well they began to pride themselves on being good sailors. During the night we were awakened by the noise of whistles and the tones of the megaphone and arose to find not a few excited over the lowering of life-boats; some said to convey our passengers to other vessels, and others to aid in rescuing unfortunates from a sinking ship. The latter proved to be true, and soon a lady appeared aboard as she had hastily left a sinking steamer, clinging to a few things which doubtless were specially prized by her and snatched up at a moment's warning, and for a few minutes she sat on a rug in the cabin, disconsolate looking enough, although rescued from a watery grave. Some half dozen large vessels stood by to aid, and soon the circle of water was lashed into a rocking sea. As our lifeboat approached and was preparing to be hoisted to the upper deck Srs. Kelley and Anderson, our new sailors, were called to the windows of their rooms to witness another scene in sea experiences. Their lights were turned on and their faces appeared in cheerful mood at once; but scarcely had a half dozen turns been taken on the pulleys before their lights were suddenly extinguished and windows closed tightly. We again rapped as the boat slowly raised from the sea below, but no answer came from them, and after waiting for the safe landing of the life-boat we proceeded to exploit the reasons of the strange phenomena of these new sailors only to find that both had determined to ignore any and all attractions on the outside of their staterooms for the evening, and with faces buried deep in their pillows, declined all interviews and entreaties. It would perhaps be unfair to state here the character of the difficulty, and it shall be sufficient to say that on the next morning they were observed to be happy and brilliant in Providence after they had reached the pleasant home of Elder Myron H. Bond, our faithful missionary in this part of New England. The day was enjoyed in company with Bro. and Sr. Bond in a ride to Newport, and we tried on the way to call up Dr. John Gilbert by telephone for additional help, but the train would not wait long and we dropped our ten cents in the slot in a vain endeavor. At the shore dinner meal it was the surprise of the company that Srs. Kelley and Anderson, who had been reared among the cornfields of the wild west, should so heartily enjoy a dinner of clams steamed, clam fritters, and Rhode Island blue fish; but we simply suggested it was another and when another sun rose drew evidence of "good sailorship," for slowly up to the great wharf off to getting all other occurrences of the early morning.

In the evening we met with the Providence Saints in their neat new church building, and enjoyed an hour in talking about privileges and duties of Saints. It was also a pleasure to meet with old friends and new, in the work, and but for the sailing of our steamer on the Saturday following, would have been glad to have spent a Sabbath in Providence. At Boston the time for a summer vacation had arrived and we soon learned that a number of the Saints were out of the city to enjoy the cooling breezes of a watering place. But we had few hours to stop at best, during which time we met with the Brn. Fisher and wives at Silver Lake, and on the eve of departure, Brn. R Bullard and F. P. Busiel, of Boston. At the wharf we also met Elder Peter Muceus and his good wife, who were to share our troubles across the waters, and these with Bro. M. H. Bond and Sr. David A. Anderson formed, according to my memory, the company of Saints to the good ship Saxonia. The presence of these brothers and sisters at this time was indeed gratifying and we hope and trust that Sr. Anderson had an interesting and pleasant stay with her New England friends, and finally in her return to her work in Lamoni, where she has rendered such efficient and valuable work so long in the public schools.

Well, the good-bye was said and our vessel was soon past plowing through the great deep toward the wonderful shores of Britain.

The voyage was pleasant; the usual incidents of a voyage attracting the attention; and we often enjoyed the spouting of water by huge whales, and the hurried galloping of the schools of porpoises from the track of the ship.

At ten o'clock a. m. on the 28th of July we passed Fast Net Rock and light tower, and early in the afternoon were met by a lighter at Queenstown inlet where our vessel received and landed many passengers. All day Sunday we could observe the celebrated Irish coast with its rugged hills and Druidish castles, or as we advanced, a fine landscape of evenly laid out and rich appearing fields. The reputation of Emerald Isle was certainly maintained, for everywhere we could observe its glorious lines, and even the old ocean as it lapped its shores, changed her color, as if to honor the land, which notwithstanding the many objectionable things raised against it has given to the world such a long line of great men, in statesmanship. oratory, and generalship. As the evening dawned we moved into the placid waters of St. George's channel, our starboard, while the stewards and porters made the welcome announcement, "Liverpool."

HAWAIIAN GENEALOGY.

The origin of the inhabitants of these Islands has never been definitely The botanical affinities of solved. the plants and the ethnological resemblances of the animals, including the people, all point to the islands of the south and southwest. Professor Alexander, in his History of the Hawaiian People, states that "the inhabitants of all the groups of islands in the eastern Pacific from New Zealand to Hawaii, and also to Easter Island, scattered over a distance of 4,000 miles, may be considered as one race, which is commonly called the Polynesian race, for they all speak dialects of the same language, have the same physical features, the same manners and customs, the same general system of 'tabus,' and similar traditions and religious rites." They have in common the names of the principal gods, stories of the origin of fire, about the deluge, etc. The Polynesian language is a member of a large and widely spread family, including those spoken in Micronesia, the Philippine Islands, the Malay Archipelago and Madagascar. It is thought the Polynesians originally came from southwestern Asia, but it is positively known that their progenitors were emigrants from the Indian Archipelago.

It is fairly well determined that the Island of Savaii, in the Samoan group, is the point of departure for all of the Polynesians of the eastern Pacific. The Maoris of New Zealand, closely resembling the Hawaiians, have a tradition that their ancestors came from The Marquesians claim that their ancestors came from Hawaii in the west, stopping at Fiji, Vavau and Tonga. The dialects of all of these islands are similar to the Hawaiian.

The first settlement of the Hawaiian Islands was made long ago, since human bones are found under coral reefs and ancient lava flows. Judge Fornander thinks the Islands were inhabited as early as 500 years A. D. Whether the earlier settlers were driven from other islands in war or left them designedly, whether they were seeking new islands or were driven out of their course by storms to known ones, will never be known. The original Hawaiians were great navigators, performing voyages of many months' duration in large canoes, sailing with outriggers to the windward, well provisioned, etc.

They sailed by the stars at night and by the sun in the day. Thus the settlement of all of the islands of the Pacific may be accounted for.

After separation from the world for many generations intercourse with the South Pacific islands was established, and many of these famous voyages have been celebrated both in song and story. Most of these voyages were made to Kahiki (Tahiti), but the intercourse ceasing over 500 years ago, the Hawaiians lost definite ideas of the locality of these islands, and so in time Kahiki came to mean any foreign country.

The Hawaiians were divided formerly into three classes, with wide permanent distinctions between them: (1) The nobility, consisting of the kings and chiefs; (2) the priests, sorcerers, doctors; and (3) the common or laboring class. The first class were the sole owners of the land and all that grew upon it. They were also owners of the fish of the sea, and of the time and labor of the people. The latter owned absolutely nothing. The feudal system was practiced here in an intensified form, the common laborers not receiving more than one third of the products of their toil. The second class were the learned men and kept alive the knowledge of astronomy, history, medicine, etc. Wars were common and very destructive. The vanquished were either destroyed or branded on the forehead as slaves and made to serve the remainder of their lives. Marriage was practiced by all, but the tie was not strong, the husband dismissing his wife at pleasure. Polygamy was practiced by all who could afford it. Descent came through the mother only, hence every king and chief sought a wife of noble birth. custom lent dignity and respect to womanhood. Infanticide was universally practiced, the girls being more frequently destroyed than the boys.

Cannibalism, formerly so freely and frequently charged against the people, was unknown, and was looked upon by all with horror and detestation. They lived upon taro, sweet potatoes, yams, bananas and fish. Cereal grains, as well as cotton, flax and wool, were unknown to them. Cloth (kapa) was made from the bark of the mulberry tree, beaten out with heavy wooden mallets elaborately carved. This kapa was of different quality and thickness, and frequently dyed and varnished. Its uses were manifold. No such thing as a loom was known. There was an entire absence of metals; no beasts of burden; in fact no domestic animal save the dog and the pig. The Hawaiians therefore remained unduly long in the "stone age." The absence of domestic animals and the lack of extensive tracts of fertile land prevented them from being a pastoral people. They were obliged, therefore, to confine their efforts to such work as could be performed by their hands and to such burdens as could be carried on the backs of men and women. Considering their environment, the early Hawaiians made remarkable industrial progress, evidences of which are everywhere to be seen on the Islands.

Terraces, artificial fish ponds, ditches for irrigation, large trenches for their sports, and temples are everywhere to be seen, memorials of the ingenuity, thought and industrial activity of these ancient people. In the magnificent Polynesian museum in Honolulu, dedicated in memory of his wife (a descendant of the line of Kamehameha I.) by Mr. Bishop, are found stone and lava hatchets, knives, and fishhooks of sharks' teeth. Kapa cloth of endless qualities and colors, mats, fans, fish nets, ropes, baskets, numerous domestic implements made of hard wood or stone, calabashes of large size and beautiful finish made from the hard wood of the Islands, pans for the evaporating of salt from sea water, spears, javelins, daggers, slings made from the fiber of the cocoanut husk or of human hair, long and deep canoes of wonderful carrying capacity and extremely seaworthy when lashed together, and with masts carrying sails made of bark, all testified to the skill, enterprise and industry of these wonderful people, isolated for over five hundred years from the world. -Dr. Wm. C. Stubbs in Paradise of the Pacific.

BALDWIN, Wis., Aug. 27.

Editors Herald:—I wrote last from William's Bay, where by way of an introduction to the Wisconsin mission field I held meetings in the Saints' church in association with Bro. W. A. McDowell. After a few days thus spent, and not unpleasantly among the Saints, I directed my course per advice of those in charge northward to Valley Junction for the district conference convening June 1 and 2. I stopped along the route at Janesville, Evansville, and Madison, visiting Saints in and around these places.

The conference at Valley Junction was no disappointment to me; realization exceeded anticipation. Brn. C. H. Burr, A. V. Closson, A. L. Whiteaker, W. P. Robinson, T. W. Chatburn, and P. Muceus, of the missionary force, were present.

The Porcupine branch, one hundred and twenty-five miles distant, was well represented by Saints who came, some by wheel, some by train, but the greater number by wagon.

My first campaigning after the conference was with Bro. A. L. Whiteaker, well up in the northern pine country, near Chetek. We finished the month of June holding meetings in schoolhouses under some disadvantages, not the least of which was the mosquitoes. The preachers might have endured them, but the hearers had a constant fight of it.

One source of encouragement to us ere we left was in seeing young Bro. James Mair go down into the baptismal waters, Bro. Whiteaker officiating.

Taking leave of my colaborer for a time, July 4 found me at Porcupine celebrating in a quiet way with a few of the Saints at Bro. Will Edwards' place. Held meetings over Sunday in the church, and enjoyed liberty in presenting the word. Bro. G. H. Hilliard dropped down on us later in the week, and after hearing him preach one good gospel sermon, I left him holding the fort and went to Ono. Found the place as big as its name, and occupied there two Sundays, but could not on account of the busy time hold meetings every night.

I put in a few days haying and harvesting, however, for Bro. Hutchinson, which was quite a variation for me, considering the hot weather and all. If I fall as a preacher, do not think I will succeed as a farmer.

On July 28 I began meetings near Spring Valley, in a German and Norwegian settlement. I held on a week and had all I wanted, whether the people did or not. The Spirit of the gospel is not material enough for people accustomed to other kind of spirit.

After this I made an effort to represent the work in Woodville; left town with the expectation of getting the M. E. church for a series of meetings, but later got word of the trustees' refusal.

August 7 I crossed over the line into Minnesota to visit relatives in Minnesolis and offer them the gospel. Though received as a relative, otherwise I was reminded of what is written regarding the Savior's mission, he came to his own and his own received him not.

I held meetings in the Saints' hall, acceptably I believe to the Saints, and tried the experiment of street preaching on Nicollet avenue and Fourth street, in close proximity to, and in competition with, the Salvation Army, where also the Utah elders had held forth from night to night.

I paid special attention in one talk to some of the differences between the Mormon church in Utah and the Reorganized Church. Had something of a crowd and at the close a vigorous demand for our antipolygamy tracts which some of the brethren handed out; also had an interesting conversation with a seeming seeker after truth who had been exploring nearly everything religious.

I attended one session of a Brighamite conference while in Minneapolis. Twenty-one Utah elders are operating in Minnesota, and I think the whole contingent and some besides were present at this conference. Those I heard, told what they believed. I did not call it preaching. They lacked the spirit of argument, but bore testimony quite recklessly of what they knew (not). They were very thankful for the good spirit that had prevailed at their conference, but I could not discern it in the meeting I attended.

Having become somewhat interested in the work in Minneapolis during my twelve day sojourn, and feeling thankful for kind treatment by the Saints, I regretted to leave, but did so the 20th, going to Baldwin, Wisconsin. Commenced meetings in a schoolhouse near there the same night, as previously arranged. Here my labors were among Hollanders, Norwegians, and Germans; but Hollanders, mainly, composed my audiences.

I suspected a Norwegian, half farmer, half preacher, of influencing his countrymen to stay from our meetings. I was very kindly and well cared for by a Holland family (Presbyterian in faith) and I trust they may in no wise lose their reward for what they did. Had good attention and increasing interest to the close of the week of meetings, and hope for good to develop in the future.

I have been led to think of the revelation given given at last General Conference numerous times of late, while among people of other tongues than my own, and to wish for tracts and books in the different languages according to the specifications of the revelation. We certainly need them.

The outlook seems to me to be favorable for the spread of the gospel truth in the world; but when will the necessary unity be realized in the church?

Must the missionary go clear away from the influence of the church to be successful in his work? Such almost seems to be the necessity in some places. But can the missionary successfully labor to build up the church, except as he works with the church? The writer thinks not.

The church must be brought up to a righteous standard, iniquity must be purged from it, order and unity must obtain, or paralysis of missionary work result.

Desiring to hasten the day of power, Your co-worker,

M. F. GOWELL.

LIMERICK, Ohio, August 29.

Editors Herald:—I have been busy since I left home May 16. I find the condition of many in this field to be as those in the "Seven churches" of long ago, "neither cold nor hot;" a sad condition indeed. Satan holds the "balance of power" over many. Numbers are seldom seen at the regular meetings; they have lost the spirit of the work. What a great reaction must take place if these, cold indifferent Saints (?) ever attain to a worthiness to abide in Zion. There are a few who are making every laudable effort to obtain the crown.

Bro. Eimer Long, who has been my collaborer for some weeks, is a congenial, earnest, talented young man, and can be trusted with the work anywhere. I trust ere long Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio, will be numbered with the traveling missionary force. His ability is such as to be of great service to the church.

When I call to mind numbers of our young men who are coming to the front, such as Brn. A. B. Kirkendall, Elmer Long, Earle Corthell, Walter Smith, C. Ed. Miller, and a host of others, it inspires me with a heart of thankfulness to God that we have such an army of young banner bearers able, willing, and ready to lead forward into the fiercest conflicts with the enemy. May the Lord send more such! And may we old, gray-headed elders in Israel never stoop under the influence of jealousy to hinder or stand in the way of the onward advance of these younger officers in the Lord's army. Move on, my young brethren, wherever the Master leads; and may great success attend your labors! Keep humble, for the Lord is not able to do much with a man who is proud of his own head, "but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Never aspire to office in the church; it will ruin those who do.

Yours in the conflict.

CHICAGO, Ill., August 24.

Editors Herald:—I have been busy this season. Plenty to do in this field and great excitement at the street meetings. The most of my preaching this year has been on the street. Large crowds of all kinds of people listen to me preach, and after preaching is over, such shaking hands. Sometimes about thirty in one evening, asking all kinds of questions, and of course I have to answer them.

Last night Bro. W. H. Fuller preached to a large crowd, and after preaching questions were asked till a very late hour.

The work here is onward, and things look very much like we may reap a large harvest before long. May God give us the increase! Last night we had about six ministers in the crowd who seemed to be very well pleased and said the preaching was all right and that we must keep on preaching the truth. One of them followed me home and stayed over an hour, talking over the gospel. So the good work goes on.

On July 6 I was invited by Brn. Leon Snow and J. Lamb, both of Ladd, Illinois, to come there and preach a few times, which I did. I had a good visit with the Saints at Ladd and made other friends. Bro. Frank Izatt. the elder of the Ladd branch, secured the colored Baptist church four miles out from Ladd and I preached seven times, baptized one of the Baptist preachers and left others believing in our faith. At the baptism there gathered about one hundred people to see the minister baptized. The same evening he was confirmed by Elder Izatt and the writer. He is the next coming colored minister if he keeps faithful to God. I am glad to have this honor. His name is George F. Crawley. I received a letter from him the other day; he tells me that he is strong in the faith. I also received a letter from J. Lamb, telling me that he meets with the Ladd Saints and is strong in the faith.

I found some Saints in the Ladd branch noble people for Christ. Quite a number of them accompanied me to Seatonville each night I preached there. Sister Sadie J. Smith led the singing, assisted by Sisters Ada Walker, Philip Turner, and Annie Lamb, and Bro. Philip Turner. Bro. Johnny Lamb and Elder F. Izatt assisted the writer with the preaching. Priest Leon Snow and his wife took part. I went from there to Streator, Illinois, but did no labor there. Then on to Kewanee, Illinois. I arrived there Saturday, July 20, and made my way to Bro. James Norris' house at 630 North Walnut street, where I received a hearty welcome. The next day at eleven a. m. I met the Saints at their beautiful new church. Elder John Chisnall opened the meeting and Elder Whitehouse preached. After preaching came the Sabbath school, which was very fine. Bro. Whitehouse, the superintendent, called on the writer to address the school which afforded me much pleasure. At six o'clock the young people met, and at 7:30. The writer was invited to the stand and addressed a good turnout of Saints and perhaps some outsiders. The few days I stayed there I visited the colored peoples' houses, took the gospel to them and told them where to find the Saints' church. I preached once for them, then boarded the iron traveler and headed for my field, Chicago, where I have been in the fight ever since. I baptized two.

Bro. W. H. Fuller, the bold preacher, is with me now. Sister Annie Graves is improving in health every day. We feel very thankful to God and to all the Saints who prayed for her recovery. May the good Lord bless all his sick Saints is my prayer. Pray for us, dear Saints. We are in the battle of the Lord and want to fight the good fight of faith.

Yours in the one faith, G. H. GRAVES.

GATEWOOD, Mo., August 21.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Harry Thomas and myself are yet in southeastern Missouri, and are striving to get the people to believe and obey the truth. But few here are willing to hear and accept the gospel. They are bound by the creeds and precepts of men.

There are about twenty-five Saints in Southeastern Missouri; but some are lukewarm, and all are so scattered that it is a hard matter to get a half dozen together. I am glad to say that some of these Saints are trying to do right and let their light shine before men.

It is a hard matter to get churches or schoolhouses in this country. We have had fair interest in two places this summer; baptized one, and some others are interested. At most of the places where we go but few come out to hear.

I preached once on the streets of Bloomfield to a number of attentive listeners; also once on the streets of Molden, and once at Dexter. At the old soldier's reunion at Dexter we both did some preaching, and I exhibited and explained my chart containing the plan of church organization to a very great number of people. One man who heard me said that he believed the preaching, and desired us to come to his neighborhood and do some preaching. Think we shall go to his place and see what we can do.

You may think we are discouraged; but we are not. My health is better than it was last year, and my eyes are better also. We are receiving blessings in many ways, for which we praise the Lord. We expect to keep right along in the line of duty, trusting God from day to day. We hope to be subject to the powers that be, and that God will direct in His work both here and elsewhere. It would be no new thing to say that in a new field there are many trials to endure; but we hope to endure them patiently believing our blessings shall be greater.

Brethren and sisters in Christ, let us go on in the cause of truth. Let us not falter or waver, but let us have on the whole armor of God, and fight valiantly to the end; and our reward will be sure.

NEBO, Ill., August 24.

Editors Herald:-Perhaps a few of your readers have heard of this place in a county without a mile of railroad or telegraph wire. joining Pike county on the south, and lying between the Illinois river and Mississippi river. A little branch was organized a few years ago near here by Elder Frank Weld. It has feebly lived along between life and death to the present time. We have had the assistance of conference appointees from Nauvoo and St. Louis districts in times past. Elder Arthur Allen was with us last winter, and created quite an interest. He came back in the latter part of May or the first of June, and after some consideration on the part of a few of us we decided to begin the erection of a church building in Houl Hollow. A deed to a small spot of ground was procured, and Bro. Arthur and two hands began the work. Some additional help was procured; but Bro. Allen's skillful hand played no small part till a building 22 x 40 feet was erected in the semi-civilized wilds of Houl Hollow. Whatever may be the outcome, we are compelled to give great credit to Bro. Allen. His work from start to finish was donated. His assistance in purchasing the lumber saved quite a little money. We could mention others who have assisted in the work of building the church; but I must not forget to mention Bro. and Sr. Burgess, of St. Louis, who sent us $5 00 on our building fund; also some literature for our Sunday school which Bro. Allen organized. We hold Sunday school every Sunday at 9:30 a. m., and preaching at night by the writer.

We have had some experience in the recent past that reminds one of the church in the 'thirties. For some time we have been annoved by drunken men who have no respect for civilization, let alone Christianity. We dealt kindly with them, hoping to be able to show them the beauty of morality, if not the gospel in its fullness; but all pleadings were in vain. One thing will be remembered, they do not forget to turn out each Sunday night; we are greeted with quite an audience. We hear, "They ought to tear that church down;" "some one'll burn it down;" "they ought to stop the meeting," etc. After untold disturbances, on the night of the 11th inst. we were greeted by some drunken lads who got bold, talked out in church, and talked from the window on the outside. They continued to make disturbances until I entered complaint and had three of them fined. But this did not seem to satisfy one of them, for the next day he passed me on the road, flourishing a pistol. I again made complaint, and he is now dodging the officer. I expect at the coming term of circuit court to prosecute those who have disturbed our meetings. There is quite a rowdy element in these parts, and some bitter prejudice; but all the better class of people advise us to go ahead and prosecute until we do have order. One prominent farmer told me that I would have all the best citizens behind me. Some say I am in danger and ought to go armed; others that we ought to close our night meetings, as there was danger; but last Sunday night, although it was rumored there was coming a mob to "break it up," quite a crowd came, and some to my surprise came ready to assist us if necessary. Peace reigned. Whatever the outcome, we shall continue to meet them on gospel propositions, and risk the result in the hands of the One whom we seek to represent. Pray for us.

VINTON, Louisiana, August 27...

Editors Herald:-I desire to contribute my mite to your dear paper, which is the best publication in the length and breadth of the land. My wife and I have lately taken up our abode in the sunny south. We arrived here Sunday night, at twelve o'clock; and finding ourselves in a strange land, among strangers, and in the dead of night, we made our way to the Vinton House. Upon reaching the hotel we found no room. We then asked for Mr. Potter, whose wife is a Saint in very deed, and were shown where we could find his home. We wound our way through grass, weeds, and other small growths of vegetation, which was sparkling in the moonlight with dew, until we reached the house. Then, dear Saints, can you not imagine the happy meetings we enjoyed for the few minutes to follow?

Sr. Potter was until our arrival the only Saint in this part of the state of Louisiana. We are having a very enjoyable time, to be sure. I think we can get a place to preach in here, as there are two church buildings and no one to preach. So we are very hopeful and prayerful that we may be permitted to present the gospel of Christ in this place, and that many may be brought to the light of God ere it is too late. Vinton is a saw-mill town located on the Southern Pacific railroad. To my surprise Vinton is not in the swamps, but almost out of sight of timber. The logs are brought to mill on cars built for that purpose.

We like it very well here. It is not so hot as farther north. We get the Gulf breeze here, as it is only about eighteen miles from the Gulf. Rice harvest will commence in earnest in a few days. Some is now in the shock. Such fine pears as are grown here! I am told they grow from cutlings, as we sometimes see grapes grown in the north. We see figs or fig trees growing. Figs are about gone, so have not seen any of them. Bananas are grown here to some little extent. Oranges also do well in this climate.

There is quite an excitement here over oil; but it has not yet been found in paying quantities. From Vinton we can see several places where oil wells are being put down. Vinton has two artesian wells which are able to furnish more water than is needed to supply the town.

We did not like to leave our dear brethren and sisters at Greenleaf, Kansas, but we remember them in our prayers. Our sojourn with them was very pleasant; and the spiritual times we enjoyed together will long be bright gems in our memory.

I would be very well pleased to correspond with any Saints in Louisiana or eastern Texas. If at times I am idle I would be well pleased to preach.

If any of the elders can come this way, we should be very well pleased to have them stop with us in Vinton. They will be well cared for. So come, brethren, when you can, and know you have a home here as long as there is a Saint here.

Your brother,

W. S. HODSON.

Editors Herald:—This coming fall it will be eight years since my wife and I obeyed the gospel. We have had many times of rejoicing when living in such a way that we could receive the Spirit.

I was called last June conference to the office of priest, and ordained the 30th of June. I have been trying in my weakness to fulfill my calling nearly every Sunday. God has been with me.

Last Sunday I preached to my countrymen in Swedish. Some of them seemed interested, and I am going to try to talk to them again.

I can realize the similarity in our times and the first century of Christ. At that time the apostles were commanded time and again not to teach in the name of the Lord; and now we see the same today. And it is mostly done by those "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." A few of those people, when they heard that I was going to proclaim "the gospel" to the Swedes, begged me with tears in their eyes not to preach in Swedish. Now if they had dared they would have used different means. I told them I ought to obey God rather than man. In gospel bonds,

JOHN A. LARSON.

BEAVER, Texas, August 24.

Editors Herald:—I spent the most of the first quarter, in the central part of the state. Opened several new places, and made lots of friends to the cause. Have received letters asking me to come again.

I visited the Philadelphia branch, and was kindly treated by the Saints and friends; and best of all, the Spirit of the blessed Master was present, and I baptized three precious souls.

My faith and confidence in the gospel is brighter and stronger than ever. I have a greater desire to do more for the cause.

I have been home for a few weeks, to try to get me a home in the Oklahoma country; and so I did, and am ready to take my field again, and shall endeavor to discharge my duty, trusting the Lord for divine help. There are calls for preaching, and very few missionaries to fill them. I feel our prayers ought to be to the Lord to send more laborers into this big field, and we ought to strive to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. I ask the Saints to remember us in their prayers.

MOBILE, Ala, Sept. 2.

Editors Herald:-Saturday, August 31, at noon, taking my samples of flour with me, I boarded the train for Bay Minette, Alabama, with the hope of placing in the stores there, for sale, some of the good flour shipped to me from the borders of the Independence Stake, and also listening to one or more sermons from our beloved brother and missionary, Elder Allen, whom I had been informed was to preach there Sunday. In the flour matter I was not disappointed; but in the place of hearing Bro. Allen, I listened to myself, as that good brother had wisely concluded not to leave an opening where there was a good interest, for a while, and had so notified the president of the Bay Minette branch, requesting that he, Bro. Ed Bankster, fill his appointment for him; and this brother shifted the burden onto my shoulders. So, arrayed as a business man, the regulation clerical black being conspicuous by its absence, I endeavored to occupy as best I could.

Bay Minette is about twenty-five miles from Mobile. The branch of the church there numbers about seventy-five members. They have one of the largest and best church edifices in the South. Its erection is due in a large measure to the untiring efforts of Elder G. T. Chute, who lives there, and Bro. John Lee Booker, since removed to Oklahoma Territory, together with the hearty cooperation of the other members of the branch, and in the face of bitter opposition of many of the citizens of the town and surrounding country, who had declared that it should not be built. They have also a nice organ; but it did not assist at our services for lack of an organist.

Bro. W. J. Booker, another missionary who lives here, was off doing duty, writing that he had just baptized nine, but was meeting with opposition, having had the house where he and Bro. Chute had been preaching locked against them. Brn. W. L. Booker and Allen had a similar experience, seventyfive or one hundred miles southwest of them. but private houses were opened to them all and the good work went on. Brn. W. J. Booker and Allen some time back traveled nearly two days without getting anything to eat from the kind (?) people, though they thought one day during this time that they had secured the coveted and much needed morsel, having their horse unhitched, when the lady took the trouble to inquire whether they were "Mormon" preachers; and as the special business of these brethren was to tell the truth and the whole truth they were obliged to confess that they were called such, though their vision of something to eat fled with their answer, as the lady informed them that her husband had given her positive orders not to feed such preachers. One brother laughed good-naturedly; but the other felt very sad, not so much for the lengthening of his fast for Jesus' sake, but he sorrowed for those who could find it in their hearts to be so unkind. A similar sorrow was his later on when he assayed in another locality to visit the home of a Christian (?) preacher, hoping to tell him something that would greatly benefit his soul, and was told by this gentleman (?) to "get away from there, he was not wanted there." He turned sadly away, and could feel same as the Savior did when he wept over Jerusalem and exclaimed, "How oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathered her chickens, but ye would not."

Editors Herald:-The 17th inst. I was called to Benkelman, Nebraska, by telegram, to attend the funeral of Bro. Leonard U. Parsons. He was well and favorably known and his funeral brought out a very large concourse of people who listened very attentively while I presented the hope of the Saints as touching the resurrection and the future life. The effort set some of the people to thinking, for a few days later I received a lengthy letter from the county attorney, saying my discourse had been the subject of considerable comment in the town, and he desired further information from me in regard to our faith. which of course was cheerfully furnished. I hope the brethren in Nebraska will find it convenient to visit that locality and do some gospel work. They will find a pleasant home with Sr. Parsons and family at Max, and I believe good results will follow a wise effort made there.

I returned to Denver on Monday to make preparations for conference the following Sunday.

Wednesday evening the 21st, Bro. George F. Bullard and Sr. Mamie L. Weller came up from Wray, armed with the necessary papers to set sail on the sea of matrimony. After warning them of almost certain squalls and curtain lectures, I fixed up their contract and started them on their voyage. May all the experiences in their journey be as peaceful and serene as the embarking. This was the fourth wedding at which I have officiated since the opening of the new century, and I have brilliant hopes for the remainder of the year.

Our district conference at Colorado Springs the 24th and 25th with the Sunday school convention the 23d was a season of refreshing to the Saints who were privileged to attend. The branches were all represented by delegates except one, and some of them by several delegates. The extreme eastern part of the state came with a delegation fifty strong, most of whom came in wagons across the country. They formed a very pleasant company and no doubt enjoyed the trip to the full extent. There were several from other parts of the state, Denver, Cripple Creek. Victor, Florence, etc. A spirit of peace and harmony characterized all of the meetings. A considerable amount of business was transacted in a spirited way, but distinguished by the absence of anything savoring of discord or friction. One candidate was baptized during the conference, and one brother ordained to the office of elder. The Lord graciously spoke to us by His Spirit, giving comfort and encouragement to the Saints, and admonishing the ministry to be of good cheer and renew their diligence in the gospel field and greater success would follow their efforts in the future than in the past.

The reports from the branches and ministry were encouraging, showing a considerable amount of work done and several additions to the church. Missionary work in this field is rather discouraging, but the brethren have stood at their posts manfully and labored on against discouragements with a zeal commendable. People do not fall over each other in an effort to get to hear the truth out here. It is hard to get a fair sized congregation to talk to. Other denominations meet with difficulties in this line, too. Religion does not seem to be particularly indigenous to this climate. This high altitude and rarified air do not seem to contribute much to rapid growth in heavenly things; humanity is about the same and newspapers about as untruthful here as in the low valleys of the Mississippi. Tourists do not need to remain long in this country to conclude that this is a land of high mountains, high collars, and high taxes. Big crooked rivers and big crooked statesmen. Silver streams that gambol in the mountains and pious politicians who gamble in the night time. Roaring cataracts and roaring orators. Fast trains, fast horses, and fast young men. Fertile plains that lie like a sheet of water, and hundreds of newspapers that lie like Beelzebub.

If the world is really getting better it is not very apparent here. The number of. murders and hold-ups of various kinds in this city of late is something appalling. The efforts to suppress crime and corporate greed have been fruitless, for the hands of justice have been tied by injunctions, our juries bribed, and our courts prostituted. Expectancy and doubt as to what will come next seems to be the evil genius of the hour. People are perplexed over existing conditions at home and abroad, but as these conditions are but the fulfillment of prophecy with an exactness that only Divinity could locate with it, we know that these things portend the dawning of a brighter day, so we lift up our heads and take courage.

Just at the present the Seventh Day Adventists of this state are in camp in this city near us. They have most too many "hoofs and horns" in their spiritual menu for my digestion; however, they are having quite large crowds, and it may be that some natures will thrive better on "hoofs and horns" than they would on meat.

Our district tent did good service at the conference and was well filled at all of the meetings. Brn. Hanson and Wildermuth will continue the tent meetings at Colorado Springs, probably till the close of the season, and I hope some of those who are interested in our work there will yield obedience to the gospel requirements.

I feel confident of the divinity of the work which I am striving to build up, hopeful for the future, and resolved to press on to the end.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN B. ROUSH.

OSMAN, Ont., Sept. 2.

Dear Herald:—Our little branch, the Longwood branch, was organized a number of years ago, when preaching services were held in the different homes of the Saints. After the branch had a fairly good start, Bro. Ben St. John, of Ridgetown, came and organized a Sunday school. This was held in our house for about three years. Then a small church was erected, and was dedicated October, 1899. We had an enrollment then of about twenty-five or thirty members; but since then about fourteen have embraced this work.

Quite a number of elders were present at the dedication, and three sermons were preached. Elder Will Fligg, of London, conducted the morning service, Elder R. C. Evans the afternoon service, which was the dedicatory sermon, and Bro. John Shields took charge of the evening service. A large crowd attended these meetings, and many went away, not sorry they had come. Since then many have embraced this glorious gospel, as I said before.

Glad to hear that Bro. Alma Barmore, and Bro. Alvin Knisley are doing tent work in Glencoe, and hope the good seed sown will result in an abundant harvest. I trust God will be with them while preaching this gospel. Brn. Alvin Knisley and Levi Annett visited our branch on Sunday, September 1. They assisted with anything they could in the afternoon service, and had preaching service over at Bro. William Nevils' house at night. Some outsiders were there, and hope some good was done.

Though young in the work I have no desire to turn back, but rather to press my way onward, ever holding fast to the rod of iron, till I see the end of a praying life.

Ever praying for the advancement of the truth, In gospel bonds,

ANNIE KETTLEWELL.

MARENGO, Illinois, Aug. 26. Editors Herald:-There is something that looks rather strange to me; that is, the talk about gathering, building up Zion, and the hastening time. When I read the ninth chapter of Nephi where the Lord is telling of the trouble that will come on the Gentiles if they will not repent, and in the tenth chapter, "But if they will repent, and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them, and they shall come in unto the covenant, and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance, and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob; and also, as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem," it seems wrong to me that the Saints should try to build without the remnants, as they are only to assist them, according to the book. I am glad to hear that some of the remnants have come into the fold, for I have been considerably among that people.

Well, I will say, May the Lord bless the whole household of faith. David Brand is in his eighty-seventh year, and wife is eighty tomorrow. I was the first to open house for preaching the gospel in the county of Essex, England, in the spring of 1849.

DAVID BRAND.

REA, Mo., Aug. 27.

Editors Herald:-Since writing to the Ensign concerning the tent meeting at this place, the elders continued the meeting over three weeks, with the best of interest all through. They held the crowd all the time. The people of this vicinity have surely been warned in time, because this is the place where Bro. James Thomas held a discussion with Mr. Hoar, now deceased. Also I. N. Roberts, Peter Anderson, M. F. Gowell, D. C. White, J. Arthur Davis, and the writer, have held up the standard of truth. We are pleased to note that through the medium of preaching a vast amount of prejudice has been removed, and friends have been made for the cause. Outsiders have said. You prove by the Bible that Joseph Smith was a prophet, but I can't believe it. Some cling tenaciously to the Sabbath theory; Others say the elders preached more Bible than they ever heard before. Without a word of flattery, the elders acquitted themselves creditably. The Spirit of the Master accompanied their efforts in presenting the gospel ordinances, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and the divine calling of Joseph Smith. I hope the good seed sown in this place will spring up and bear fruit.

At the close of our services the M. E. people commenced a protracted effort in the church at this place. Our people are debarred from using the church because the trustees say we are not orthodox. In justice to the people of this place I want to say if it were left to a vote we would get the use of the church. The last episode that took place was a little tilt between the M. E. preacher and Bro. Snively, arising from a statement made by the M. E. preacher. Those personally acquainted with Bro. Snively can ask him about it.

Yours hopeful for the truth,

R. F. HILL.

MAITLAND, Mo., August 31.

Editors Herald:—We have a good field of labor in the Nodaway district, and have operated two tents this summer; Brn. D. C.

White and Sawley with the new tent, and Bro. J. S. Snively and I the old one.

After returning home from the General Conference my mother-in-law was taken down with the small pox, so we were quarantined, and I did not reach my mission field until the middle of June. Bro. Snively joined me at Rosendale, and we got the Christian church; but the crowds were small, and the weather so hot we closed after being there about a week. Then we started out to find a place to pitch the tent, and met with some discouragement, such as small-pox, busy times, and hot weather; but we finally pitched the tent at Rea, and opened the battle with a large crowd to commence with. The crowd and interest increased until the tent would not hold the people. We continued our meetings for about a month, and had excellent liberty in telling the gospel story. Of course some said, They are preaching the Bible; but watch them, they will commence on old Joe Smith. And sure enough, they were not disappointed, for we did, and gave them the mission work of Joseph in full.

We were cared for nobly by the two families of Saints there, Brn. Hill and Haley. We found a home also with Brn. Wiats and Jordens, at Rosendale.

We have been here about a week. Crowds not as large as at Rea, but the largest ever had here to commence with, and they seem to be interested.

Bro. Snively will return home in a few days, as business calls him there, and I shall miss him, as he is a congenial companion. A person will not get lonesome in his company.

There is a noble band of Saints about six miles from here, the Ross Grove branch, with Bro. R. K. Ross as their shepherd.

Yours in the warfare,

D. A. HUTCHINGS.

BRUSH CREEK, Idaho, Aug. 18.

Editors Herald:-It has been some time since I wrote to your dear pages; not that I am less interested in this glorious work or in the final triumph of Zion, but I have been quite sick all summer and real busy too, so this accounts for it I think. Brn. S. D. Condit and A. J. Layland have been with us for a while this summer and have given us some excellent sermons and good advice. Three precious lambs were added to our fold for which we thank God and pray his watchcare over them that they may grow up useful instruments in his hands to accomplish much good in Zion. We expect the brethren back to labor with us for a while this winter. May God be with them in accomplishing good here and elsewhere in this. mission field. As I read how the good work prospers in other parts of the Lord's vineyard I feel encouraged and strengthened, and when I think how far behind we are I feel discouraged and so unworthy of his blessings, but I pray God that we as Saints may awake to a sense of our duty, gird our armor on and be earnest workers in his cause. For as the poet says,

We want no cowards in our band Who will our colors fly We call for valiant-hearted men Who are not afraid to die.

Not only do we need valiant-hearted men, but women too, for this is the hastening time and every Latter Day Saint has a work to do. This is something that every Saint should realize. I wish every Saint would realize that they had a work to do and then do it. Then I know Zion would speedily be redeemed, the honest in heart be gathered in and we could enjoy his blessings in full. But I hush my thoughts for I know I do not do all I desire to do, yet I try to do the best I can and if God will grant me health I mean to do a great deal more for him with his aid. There could be a nice little Sunday school here and I mean to do all I can to get one started and I ask your faith and prayers that God will aid me in my feeble efforts to assist in his work. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and her final triumph, I remain, your sister in Christ,

FRANCES HEATON.

TABOR, Iowa, Sept. 3.

Editors Herald:-Our reunion closed last Sunday night, and was truly one among the best held in the Fremont district for the last seventeen years. We had a large attendance, especially on Sundays, and the very best of order, the best of preaching, by J. W. Wight, J. F. Mintun, Charles Fry, D. Hougas, T. A. Hougas, Mark H. Forscutt, and the writer. Thirty were baptized; and six the week before at Bartlett, the fruits of our tent meetings. So the good work moves along. Everyone seemed to be well pleased. The committee labored with untiring zeal, and cheerfully, too, for the comfort of all the campers. There was no grumbling, but all expressed themselves well satisfied. And all hearts were made to rejoice. The preaching was excellent, the prayer meetings grand, and the Sunday school work up to date. We are thankful to be a colaborer, with such a noble band of energetic members of the church as is found in this district.

We are now going to put up the district tent in this neighborhood, three miles west and north of Tabor, where we hope to do some good in the behalf of the faithful little band of Saints here, and through their influence reach a few others to rejoice with them in the hope of eternal life.

On! that God's blessings may continue to be with us, and all of his servants and Saints, who are laboring for the advancement of this grand work, is our earnest prayer.

Yours in bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

BATTLE CREEK, Iowa, August 15.

Editors Herald:—Since I last wrote I have been laboring in the northeastern part of the Galland's Grove district, with Mallard as headquarters. I have spent the most of two months in new fields. This part of the country has not had much labor done in it yet. This is a large district, and needs more laborers.

I have made five very promising new openings this summer. It is easy for me to make new openings here, as I have over fifty relatives and a host of old friends in the district, and not one of them ever heard of the church until I came among them. They all gave me a hearty welcome, but were a little shy of my religion, as they heard I was a "Mormon." One of my old acquaintances told me they had concluded to treat me kindly, but would not encourage me in preaching. There were a number of Mormon elders through this country three years ago, and while they claimed, that they were from Salt Lake and that polygamy was not a crime in the sight of God, they called themselves Latter Day Saints. But I think I have successfully shown the difference, and will have no more trouble outside of the usual persecution by the preachers of some of the so-called Christian churches.

At present I am engaged in a series of meetings two and one half miles east of Battle Creek and three miles southwest of Ida Grove, Ida county. The interest is good and I think this will be a good, permanent opening. There is not a Saint in the county that I know of. I think that Dolliver in Emmet county, and Ledyard and another place four and one half miles north of Algona, Kossuth county, will be good permanent openings also.

Mallard has one of the liveliest, up to date branches it has been my fortune to visit, and its Religio work is grand. The town is small but the people around the country are all interested in the work, and the last meeting I attended I think there were at least seventy-five outsiders in attendance. This is the result of faithfulness on the part of the Saints.

In bonds,

W. H. KEPHART.

GEARY, Okla., Sept. 4.

Editors Herald:—We finished our labors with the gospel tent near Independence schoolhouse, Dawey county, August 10. We had a very good interest, and have promised to return there soon and preach a week in the schoolhouse.

We went to our district reunion at Dover, sixty miles east, beginning August 16. Attendance was not large because of the hot, dry season, no doubt; but had a very good meeting. It is a beautiful grove and plenty of good water. Very gentlemanly proprietor. Reunion is to be held there again in August, 1902.

Sr. Crawley and I went sixteen miles west of camp ground and I began preaching the day after close of reunion, and preached a week in a schoolhouse where our faith had never been presented. Bro. George Cheney, his wife, son of twenty-two years, and daughter of thirteen, were baptized Sunday, September 1. Bro. Cheney had belonged to the church at Pleasant View branch, Kansas, twenty-five years ago, but had been out west since. Has lost his first wife since then, but is married again; has six children and a good farm. Good place for missionaries to call, as they are very welcome. Found two families near there; Brn. Warren and Jeffries, who formerly belonged to the church in Kansas, but who removed from there nine years ago, and the branch has since been disorganized, so that they belong to no branch. Families of Bro. Staley and Elder T. J. Smith live ten miles from there, so with proper labor it seems a branch should be organized there soon.

Came to Geary, forty miles southwest, Monday. Met Elder Powell, who is very much respected here, but he is so busily engaged as practicing physician that he has given up public preaching. Went yesterday to try to get the Baptist church to preach in, but failed to see the directors, they being absent, so began preaching on the street last night to a good and attentive audience. Will likely preach here over Sunday, and will then start for home, some seventy miles northwest. Some seem very much interested wherever we go. Have baptized seven in the last month, and think some others will obey soon.

My health is better than last year, and my wife travels with me and greatly assists me in my labors.

As ever, in gospel bonds, D. S. CRAWLEY.

I know as my life grows older,
And mine eyes have clearer sight,
That under each rank wrong somewhere
There lies the root of right;
That each sorrow has its purpose,
By the sorrowing oft unguessed;
But as sure as the sun brings morning,
Whatever is—is best.

For some time past requests have come to us that more time and thought be given to the boys. We commend the following reading to a very careful study, because it is full of suggestive thoughts, needing careful digestion. It may be followed by others bearing upon the same subject.—ED.

PREPARED READING FOR OCTOBER MEET-INGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION LOCALS.

A PLEA FOR THE BAD BOY.
MINA COOK-HART.

Introduction.

- I. Some causes for the Bad Boy's existence.
- 1. Left to bad companions.
- 2. No place at home for him.
- Failure on part of parents and teachers to manage him.
  - (a) Strong will and temper.
- II. How to change his present condition.
  - 1. Enter with him into his amusements.
  - 2. Understand his traits of character and direct them in good ways.
- 3. Should not sow wild oats.

Conclusion.

What is a bad boy? One woman answers, "A bad boy is one who will not be managed." Another, "One whose thoughts and acts are bad." Well, let us see: Is he willful? Yes, decidedly willful. Has he a temper? Almost always, a violent one. Is he unmoral? Yes. And why should he not be, for what is to hinder or to better this condition? He is repulsive, unlovable, unbearable to the vast throng of respectable Christian people, who pass him by on the other side, and consequently he is left to his own kind for companionship. They are as bad, ofttimes worse than he, and it being easier to slide than to climb, he slides. But whence this condition, and what are the reasons for its existence? "Who has sinned? This man, or his parents?"

A little fellow of three years while playing hurt himself and ran crying to his mother. She had on similar occasions taken him on her lap and caressed away all his troubles. But now there were two other little ones to demand her care, and when he found her she had a babe on each knee trying to soothe their cries. He felt with his little hands for a place on her lap, and finding none he thoughtfully surveyed her troubled countenance and the helpless, crying little ones, then with twitching lips and heaving breast sobbed: "There's no place for Willie Johnson." He but put into words the cry of so many child hearts, "There's no place for Willie Johnson."

In too many homes the sitting-room is arranged for company and cannot be strewed with his strings and tops. He is a real nuisance—teases his sister, wakes the baby, and causes his mother's head to ache—"There's no room for Willie Johnson."

In our cities and towns the "Willie Johnsons" form in groups and societies. They meet on the corner at dark to plan and execute their campaigns. If a new boy comes into the neighborhood, he is subjected to all kinds of torture, and if he comes up to their standard of manliness he is admitted to their circle; but should he bappen to be one of those "good" weak boys, life is made miserable for him and nothing is too mean for them to do to him. Their standard consists of definiteness of purpose, strong decision, prompt action, and a willingness to do and dare all that is necessary to accomplish the end determined upon. An excellent standard, consisting as we see it does of many of the essentials of manhood, yet lacking that most indispensable essential—a high ideal. They slip in at the back door and steal the refreshments, should they not be invited to the party. They line the sidewalk to say smart things to passers-by. Could their homes be boys' homes-homes for the rollicking, noisy, noble boy, there would be no "Willie Johnsons."

But you claim the boy cannot be managed. His sister readily yields to your requirements and suggestions, but you simply cannot break his strong, obstinate will. This should be cause for rejoicing, not complaint. There's nothing bad, but everything good in having a will-a strong will-a will all his own. Why then should you charge this against him? Help him to direct that will into the right channels, and he will be one of earth's noble men. What carried our forefathers through their struggle for independence? In the free, unhampered air of the new world, their wills had grown strong and they resolved to be free because they felt the resistless power of will and they could and would be free. True, indeed, is the adage, "Where there's a will there's a way." Show me a boy without a strong will and twenty years from now you can see a worthless nobody of a man, a jest, and a byword.

That the bad boy is unmoral all admit, but why is he? When he comes into our homes he is as pure as his sister, but being a boy he is permitted to mingle unattended with children on the street and at school. Here he learns his first lessons of immorality and vice which, because he is trustful and confident, he readily makes a part of himself. Our duty, painful though it be, demands in unmistakable terms that we acquaint the child, while he is yet innocent, with the evils of the world, and why they are evil, and then he is prepared to resist them. "Forewarned is forearmed." This, however, is only the beginning of our duty. It is the continual watchfulness that makes our work effectual.

But the bad boy is here and will be as long as time lasts, and the great problem for us is how to deal with him. The inexperienced eye when searching for gold picks the shining yellow rock, "the fool's gold," and casts aside the rough, angular, unattractive quartz, never thinking that the valued treasure is contained therein. Likewise do we in hunting the boy, little supposing that within the rough exterior is the most valuable gold, waiting only to be liberated and polished.

A young teacher entered a school from which in each of the three preceding years a number of the boys had been expelled, several of whom refused to start again. But one by one they came to her and stayed. Somehow they found out that she kept a large corner of her heart for the bad boy. They worked in school time because she wanted them to do so and had made their work interesting.

At recess they played as hard as they had worked. With no opposition, she led them into good games—such as growing active boys delight to play. Instead of suppressing the romping youngsters, she provided them with fun by every means that lay in her power. A spring board, football and baseball grounds were provided. They worked harder because they played harder, and in consequence lived better lives. Although bending to take their hand, she steadily, gently lifted them upon a higher, purer plain of living, and today exists as their ideal of purity and womanliness.

The bad boy has in his nature all the elements necessary to make a stalwart, manly man if only a master hand will guide him into the right kinds of combinations. He has the latent power, the potential energy, and it will be liberated. If not directed along useful channels, then the result is evil. The boy nature is not understood as it should be, not even by himself, and therefore he needs our help in building up his life, his character.

Help him to discover his true self, and then provide means whereby he can realize himself, and our bad boy is lost in the noble man.

How often we hear it said: "He is just sowing his wild oats now—he'll settle down in a few years." We forget that we do not gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles; that the harvest is just as sure as the sowing; that "That which we gather is that which we sow." If wild oats, then such will be the harvest.

Make it easy for the boy to do right, and he will do it every time, and since each time he performs an act it is easier to do it the next time, the result will be a strengthening of the good and a weakening of the bad. Let the boy grow unhampered by "don'ts" and scolding, but given every opportunity to choose the best, and he will by his own efforts smother and stamp out whatever of evil is in his nature.

The admonition of our Master given to one of his hesitating servants so many years ago, "What God hath cleansed, that call thou not common" "or unclean." "Go, . . . doubting nothing," comes with as great a force to us today. The boy, no matter how bad, is one of His. "Go, doubting nothing."

Let the father esteem the welfare of his son above all worldly considerations. Let the mother realize what a high and holy charge is given to her in her boy and that his purity and confidence are worth more to her than club life or immaculate housekeeping. Let the teacher know that she stands in loco parentis and that she must answer to the Great Judge for the influence she brings to bear upon the boy. Let society remember that God will not hold it guiltless if it permit a polluted atmosphere to contaminate the boy for whom trusting parents implore his guidance and watchcare. Let us remember that we are in partnership with God, helping him to fashion an immortal soul-that our influence makes or mars for eternity.

HOW CAN I SECURE AND MAINTAIN AN INTEREST IN MY SCHOOL?

There is a great field of labor before us, so we should strive, as faithful servants of the Lord, to advance this work, knowing as we do, that God is back of us, ready to give any assistance. First I must ask God to assist me in every undertaking, and show to my school that I take a great interest in them. Be ever on the alert to invite my young acquaintances to Sabbath school. And when they come take them by the hand and give them a hearty welcome. Put them in a class and have the bread of life broken to them. Sparingly at first, and they will become interested. I must set before my school for the children want models and not critics. Now we must get the people interested in our Sabbath schools and how are we going to do it? I wish to relate an incident which happened down in our little town. A certain man was talking one day to a member of the Latter Day Saint Church. In their conversation they drifted to Sabbath school work and the man said, "Who is your superintendent? Does he go to saloons and play cards?" The answer was, "No." "Well," he said, "ours does, and I believe that is a drawback to our Sunday school, for none seem to take an interest at all, but to lose all they had." This was a benefit to me.

We must impress this thought upon each one that their PRESENCE AT SUNDAY SCHOOL is needed, and that we cannot get along without them. Put the little ones to work and encourage them. Supply them with song books and teach them to sing. Be ever ready to answer all their questions.

An entertainment is a good thing. I have noticed in my experience in Sunday school work that the children get tired of class work and stay away. Then announce that we are going to have an entertainment on a certain date and watch their little faces light up with joy and the happy laugh that rings from their lips when they talk of the coming event among themselves. Now I have experienced this. I remember one time I asked a little girl if she went to Sunday school and she said, "Yes, but I am coming down to your Sunday school because they don't have any entertainments up there." I find that an entertainment does help to secure and maintain an interest in my Sunday school.

Be thoughtful for the young members, the timid ones. They need to be encouraged to know that some one appreciates their efforts. Speak kindly to them. Give them a word of cheer. . . .

My heart is in the work and I want to see it advance in every respect. Let us not forget that God is at the head and will lead us to victory if we are faithful to him by being faithful to his cause.

WHEATLAND REUNION.

Clinton, Missouri, district reunion began its sessions at Wheatland on the morning of August 23, the meeting being called to order by Elder James Moler, president of district and sub-missionary in charge. After singing and prayer, Elder James Moler, in connection with I. N. White, was chosen to preside; F. L. Sawley chosen secretary and chorister; Pearl Kennicut organist; Henry Wilgus marshal: Jessie, Oliver, and Harry Paxton ushers

The order of services was: Prayer service at 9:00 a. m; preaching at 10:45; Sunday school in charge of Sr Kearney at 2:30 p. m., and preaching at 8:00 p. m. Apostie I. N. White, High Priests A White and James Moler, and Eiders T. R. White, F. L. Sawley, W. H. Mannering, J. N. Stephenson, and Bro. Williams, of the missionary force, were in attendance as speakers.

The reunion closed Sunday night, September 2. Nine were baptized, seven by James Moler and two by F. L. Sawley. The meetings have been largely attended from the surrounding neighborhood, not many of the Saints being present from a distance.

The best of order prevailed through the entire meetings. The prayer services were very spiritual, the preaching excellent. This reunion is considered a grand success by all in attendance. While several were administered to, there was no serious sickness in the camp, and those administered to were comforted and more or less benefited in seeking relief from the Lord.

This morning the camp broke with the usual hearty hand-shaking, intermingled with tears and a "God bless you," some going by wagons to their homes, while two large loads were hauled to Gerster, the station on the Frisco line, twelve or fifteen miles away, to take the train to their respective homes, I. N. White going to old Kentucky to engage in a debate once more with Clark Braden.

It was decided to hold another reunion next year, and the president of the district and missionary in charge, with Jacob Andes, Bro. Sharrock, T. R. White, and Joseph N. Stevenson were elected a committee to decide on time and place of holding, and make arrangements for the same; the missionary in charge to be president of said committee.

The Sunday schools each day were enjoyed and well attended. Thursday afternoon was given for special work in this department. A very pleasant and profitable time was spent in the reading of papers and a roundtable discussion.

Elder F. L. Sawley was requested to make a talk in behalf of the Religio work. We selected as our theme, "The object of the Religio, and what it is doing for our young people." This was listened to and much interest was manifested for this line of work.

May the Lord bless the noble Saints and friends who labored, sacrificed, and prayed so earnestly for the success of this, the Wheatland reunion.

TABOR REUNION.

Since the close of the reunion, the verdict of all is that it was the best ever held in our district. Absolute peace prevailed, and though disappointment faced many of the Saints at first, there was no murmuring. The committee in preparing the grounds began with a season of prayer, and by a unity of action accomplished all they intended.

Friday at nine a. m. the interests of the Religio and Sunday school were presented, the three other services being devoted to preaching. A business session was held at four p. m., when it was decided to hold another reunion next year, and J. F. Green, F. Becksted, and P. Frederickson were appointed a committee on location. J. W. Wight made a few remarks relative to the ordination of Henry Kemp to the office of patriarch and evangelical minister and desired an expression from the Saints as to their approval or disapproval. It was their approval or disapproval. "moved, That we approve of the ordination and that it be provided for," which motion was carried by unanimous vote. On Sunday, September 1, at the nine o'clock prayer service, Bro. Kemp was so ordained by Apostle J. W. Wight, assisted by J. F. Mintun. A. J. Davidson was also ordained first counselor and Samuel Orton second counselor to Bishop Leeka by Apostle J. W. Wight and Bishop William Leeka, these brethren hav-ing been chosen by the bishop and approved by the last district conference.

Much of the preaching was attended with remarkable spiritual power and was well received by the people generally, scarcely a word being heard in opposition, but favorable comment being often heard from non-mem-Twenty-nine were added by baptism during the reunion, about half were adults, and many others believe.

Bro. Wight moved on to Lamoni Monday, and Bro. Mintun to Magnolia. Bro. Kemp and the writer expect to commence services in the gospel tent near Tabor on Thursday of this week, and later at Glenwood, where Bro. Mintun will join us.

APPOINTMENT OF CHURCH HISTORIANS.

In consequence of the resignations of M. H Forscutt, local historian for Nebraska; and C. J. Clark for Kewanee district, Illinois, appointments have been made since our last published notice covering these localities. Other appointments as they appear below have also been made, all of which are subject to the ratification of the conferences:

C. H. Porter, Wilber, Nebraska; Southern Nebraska district.

James Huff, 1818 North Twenty-first street. Omaha, Nebraska; Northern Nebraska dis-

J. J. Cornish, Reed City, Michigan; Northern and Eastern Michigan districts.

Sr. E. X. Gamet, Inman, Nebraska; Central Nebraska district.

Thomas J. Martin, Detroit, Minnesota; state of Minnesota.

Harriet Grim, Canton, Illinois; Kewanee, Illinois, district.

All local historians will please take notice that it has been decided that reports made to us by them touching branches and districts need not include any other officers than presidents and secretaries. This change is made to lessen the labor of our local assistants, and for the sake of necessary brevity; as it has been found since entering upon the work that there is much difficulty encountered in finding the necessary particulars to enable the local historians to report other officers; and that were they more easily found and included in the reports they would be too voluminous for the practical purposes for which they are intended.

We wish again to request all who write for the church publications to be more particular about giving dates of important events. This office desires to make full record of all important events, and especially of those transpiring among us; and hence it is quite disappointing to read an account of a debate without being able to fix the exact date on which it was held; or the trip of a foreign missionary without being able to ascertain the date on which he sailed. All should know that without dates it is impossible to make an intelligent record. Please be very careful to give all particulars that you know will enter into an intelligent record.

HEMAN C SMITH, Church Historian.

One of the leading articles of the August Journal of Microscopy, published by Bausch and Lomb, is "Laboratory Photography," in which is described some interesting photo-micrographs. The article is by D. W. Dennis, of Earlham College.

While the September Chautauquan contains a number of articles suitable for summer reading, it also looks forward to the reading course for the coming year. Hence fiction, history, and description receive almost equal attention.

Among the practical papers are the illustrated nature study for September, entitled "The Hearing Ear and the Seeing Eye," by F. Hudson Moore, and "Indian Basketry in House Decoration," by George Wharton James.

Under the title "A Black Hussar at Waterloo" is reproduced the diary of an officer in B. ücher's army during the famous campaign against Napoleon. It contains many bits of interesting description from the soldier's point of view, and gives a better idea of the actual operations than is to be found in historical articles treating of the same period.

"A Pestalczzian Pilgrimage," by S. Louise Patteson, furnishes an account of the life and work of this great pioneer educator. The article is fully illustrated.

"Mission Schools in China" are described by Mary H. Krout. She tells of the work that is done in these schools and of the wonderful results which have been accomplished in the uplifting of the Chinese, and turns the white light on some of the evils which have been condoned by many English and French

The need of technical education in the schools in this country is exhaustively treated of by Carina Eaglesfield in the September issue of the Catholic World Magazine.

"As a nation," she writes, "we Americans pay less attention to technical education than any other people in the world, and the success we have heretofore achieved in manufacturing has been, not so much the result of our expert work as of the skilled labor which has come to us from Europe.

"We show the greatest executive ability in organizing our factories and in putting the right men in the right place, but if we had been obliged to draw workmen from native Americans alone it would have taken many more years to attain the present results.

"We have, however, now reached the point in our industrial development when it is necessary and most advisable to make use of our own sons, and in order to educate them we must have the opportunities and the schools. There must be adequate means of educating the workers of any country before its manufacturing interests can be fully developed, and the manufacturers of the United States have found from experience that in many departments they must look to Germany when they wish the best of skilled workmen. We have certainly fine technical schools in the United States, and the last ten years have seen an immense growth in public interest; but the number is still very small compared to our population, and the best workers in the higher trades still come from Germany, where the schools are the finest in the world.

"If we wish to compete successfully with Germany, we must give more attention to technical and industrial education, for their interest in such schools is constantly on the increase, and the ambition and energy of the entire nation are directed towards making them more perfect."

The September number of the Trans Missouri Official Railway Guide has reached us. The Guide is published monthly by the T. M. Official Ry. Guide Co., Omaha.

The discourse of the Rev. George Thomas Dowling, D D, delivered a few weeks ago, in Christ Episcopal Church, Los Angeles, California, of which he is Rector, and which is published by his Vestry, on 'Roman'zing Tendencies in the Episcopal Church," has reached its ninth thousand."

The American Journal of Socialogy for July contains the following articles: "The Kentucky Mountains and Their Feuds;" "City Administration in Germany;" "Social Assimilation;" "A Dutch Co-operative Experiment;" "The Culture Agencies of a Typical Manufacturing Group, South Chicago."

In an early edition of the Saturday Evening Post, Dr. Nausen, the eminent Arctic explorer, will describe the various pole-seeking expeditions of the year. The importance of this paper lies in the author's comments, and his predictions as to the success of the different parties.

For five nights the nature, extent, time of establishment, and final location of the kingdom of God In support of the millennium, much important history, aside from the many Biblical proofs, was quoted, giving name of history, chapter, and page, which can only be found in the leading libraries.

Four nights on the nature and object of the punishment of the wicked, and the final redemption of the human race. Some important statistics showing the rapid increase of deaths among the heathen over their conversions to Christianity were used in this proposition, and which will be found invaluable evidence of God's redemptive work beyond this life.

Two nights on the authority and origin of the so-called Church of God Under this proposition Elder Riggle labored hard to trace his church back to Pentecost, but by their own history we proved they could trace their beginning no further back than 1870.

Two nights on the identity of the Reorganized Church with that of the Bible.

PRESIDENT WM. M'KINLEY IS DEAD.

It is with saddened heart that we record in our pages the fact of the death of William McKinley, of Canton, Ohio, lately chosen by the people of the Republic for the second time to be the President of the United States.

He was shot by Leon Czolgosz, a young and ardent Anarchist, while standing in the Temple of Music at the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, New York, on the afternoon of Fri day, September 6, just passed. The wounds inflicted by the shot proved to be fatal, in spite of the care, tender solicitude, and professional skill of some of the ablest surgeons and physicians known to the public; and on the morning of Saturday, September 14, he passed out of life, leaving as a heritage to the wife of his youth the words, "It is God's way; his will, not ours, be done."

This nation, and all other nations where the flag of the United States has carried its commerce and borne its arms, are moved with profound grief; and with face and hearts turned toward America anxiously await the arbitrament of time in the crisis in her governmental affairs.

In view of the fact that the now dead statesman was at the time of his assassination the nation's chosen chief executive, the HERALD, on behalf of a people who have suffered much from the acts of misguided and lawless men, joins the press of the nation and the world in according to William Mc Kinley the meed of respect and esteem due him as a man, a citizen, a soldier, and a statesman ruler of a great Republic.

Language at our command is too poor in which to express the feelings we have toward the misguided creature assassin by whose hand this loss to the American nation has been inflicted, and who now lies in a felon's cell guarded by officers of the state where his murderous deed was done, awaiting the processes of lawful procedure under which the fiat of Deity, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," will have its dread fulfillment, in this case too pitiful and utterly inadequate to the measureless turpitude of the deed; a deed so dark that the lips of the earthly judge must tremble and his speech falter, when in passing sentence upon him, he shall attempt to say, "And may God have mercy on your soul."

William McKinley is the third president of the United States to be stricken to death by assassination while an incumbent in office. Abraham Lincoln, James A. Garfield, William McKinley; three men of the people, chosen from the people, by the people, to be the administrative officer for the people for the brief periods to which they were respectively chosen, have been murdered while striving to discharge the duties of their office, as they understood them.

Neither of these men was a rich man; neither came from the wealthy classes. Each was the architect of his own fortune, and rose by his own efforts and won a place among men by dint of his own merit. It was not by fortuitous circumstance that either rose to eminence, or achieved place. or renown. Each fell at his post, in the line of duty while in touch with the people, unsurrounded by the paraphernalia of courts or the pomp of kings, and trusting in the sentiments of esteem for law and order. the personal safety guaranteed to the average American citizen for safetv in public and in private. What a sad comment upon the fallacy of human ambition and human trust in the integrity of citizenship do the deaths of these three noted American representative men afford.

Who can be accounted as safe? Will murder never cease?

DEBTORS TO GRACE.

Acknowledgment of a debt is not payment. At least in our business relations we so hold. We carefully preserve the evidences of acknowledge ment, however, considering them to be important factors in securing judgment, should legal processes be found necessary to enforce collection. They are accepted as being offered in good faith so long as the debtor is without means of payment, or while he is known to be trying honorably to meet the obligations confessed by him; beyond this they are an annoyance to the eye and ear of the creditor, and the oftener they are repeated the more irksome they become, in that they bear the imprint of untruth or dishonesty in proportion as they are accompanied with professions of anxiety to pay. They are accounted as the feignings of hypocrisy and are far more distasteful to the creditor than perpetual silence would be. This is but natural, and we do not blame the creditor when he invokes the aid of the law in an attempt to secure his own from such a debtor.

Some things recently occurring turned our thoughts along this line. What they were we will set forth in a three-act presentation as follows:

Act 1.—A number of Saints were holding a social meeting. The surroundings were pleasant and all seemed happy. Testimony and song and prayer were the order. Everybody seemed joyful. Conspicuous among them was one, more voiceful than the rest, who led forth in the song:

Praise ye the Lord, 'tis good to raise Your hearts and voices in his praise; His nature and his works invite To make this duty your delight.

His face was aglow with what appeared to us a holy fervor and he seemed to be enjoying a rapturous vision of the "nature" and "works" of which he sang. The service of praise was surely to him a "delight," if external indications count for anything.

A feeling of heaviness had for a time oppressed us, but when the singer reached his climax, and poured forth his soul in the sudden outburst,

Sing to the Lord, extol him high, we answered the appeal and joined in the recital that followed, believing that there was abundant cause shown therein for the joy and thankfulness he seemed to exhibit. So we sang:

Who spreads his clouds along the sky; There he prepares the fruitful rain, Nor lets the drops descend in vain.

He makes the grass the hills adorn, And clothes the smiling fields with corn; The beasts with food his hands supply, And the young ravens, when they cry.

His Saints are lovely in his sight; He views his children with delight; He sees their hope, he knows their fear, He looks and loves his image there.

This contemplation put us in a happier mood. The company sat down. and hardly had the echoes of their voices in the above testimony of divine bounty died away till the brother who had attracted our attention rose and related some remarkable instances of miraculous interference in behalf of himself and family, by which he was confirmed in the belief that the church was of God. He said that the song just sung had brought them to his mind and he always felt happy in singing it as it voiced his feelings and sentiments exactly. After one other had spoken he led off in song again, confessing God as the "Fount of Every Blessing," and sang so loudly and fervidly.

> O, to grace how great a debtor Daily I'm constrained to be.

that we admired the frank acknowledgment. Surely, we reflected, we are "debtors to grace;" and if all could but feel the enormity of the debt as that brother does, how unitedly we would apply ourselves in an effort to pay.

Scene 2.—A preaching service, attended by the same persons so far as we could judge. The elder from the stand was preaching a forceful and scriptural sermon on Saintly duty, enjoining the performance of such services as would make the means intrusted to us as stewards a blessing to our less fortunate fellows, and a factor in spreading the gospel. Tithing was dwelt upon as a debt, of which payment was asked. The obligation was revealed beyond dispute. Free will contributions as tributes of love were advised. Our indebtedness under the law, and its reasonableness were shown in the fact of our absolute dependence upon God for life, health. ability to accumulate, rain, sunshine, warmth, seasons - everything. The divine generosity in empowering us thus to cooperate with him was pleasingly presented. It was an excellent effort.

In the audience sat the brother whose conduct had inspired us at a former meeting, his head leaning forward and resting on a staff held in his hand. Occasionally he would look up; but we noticed that his face lacked the expression that had attracted us on the other occasion. There was an indication of impatience, and he drew his watch from his pocket three or four times and looked at it, then at the preacher. We missed his voice when the congregation sang at the close,

Praise God from whom all blessings flow.

Scene 3. — Walking over to the brother referred to, we extended a hand and remarked: "Wasn't that a grand sermon?"

He replied: "It might have suited some present; but it didn't strike me favorably at all. This everlasting money preaching don't belong to the gospel, and it makes me tired."

We had scarcely time to reply when the preacher caught up with us and was soon set upon by our dissatisfied brother, whereupon both sat down and engaged in a dialogue of an hour's length. In the course of it the brother took from his pocket a ten-dollar bill, and holding it in his hand remarked:

"That money is mine. It is not God's, nor is any part of it his, unless I make him a present of it. I earned it with my own hands, by hard work, and intend to do as I please with it, and you may preach tithing till you are tired, without convincing me to the contrary."

There was quite a contrast between the expression upon his face now and the time when he had attracted us by his singing. What had wrought the change? Skies, fields, sunshine, rain, health, gifts, miracles, all seemed to have passed from memory, and the man who had appealed to us almost mandatorily in song to for all things, and who had vociferously confessed himself "so great a debtor" to grace was refusing to honor the first draft that his God was making upon him for part payment. The money within the flaps of his pocket book was his own and God had no claim upon it. It did not represent to him the sun, rain, seasons, health, and ability to earn and accumulate. All these were his own and their product was held under title in his own name. What a terrible mistake!

We did not intrude but listened and quietly reflected upon the three scenes. Taking the statements we heard this man make during the first meeting, to be true, there must be a host of entries on the side of the heavenly record above, showing credits to God in his dealings with said man, who was over sixty years of age. If all of those entries to God's credit represent corresponding debit entries against that man, who kept the gains on earth locked against the legal claims presented in God's name to him, what will be the outcome when a final presentation of the account is made at the court which is to render irrevocable decision as to inheritance by right of divine law and provision? Death will have separated the man from his wealth, and with what will he then square the account? Will the oft-repeated acknowledgements of indebtedness be taken as settlement? The items confessed in song and in testimony as having been furnished by Him "From whom all blessings flow," fill out the debit side of the man's account, with his receipts, given therefor in the testimony meetings, attached. Will they not be evidence sufficient? If so, who shall dispute the legal right to confiscate the inheritance which he urges claim upon under the gospel? The man who ignored the law has not been sanctified by the law. Unsanctified he is without claim upon inheritance among the sanctified. By the article of death his plethoric pocketbook and bank account and property title all passed to his earthly survivors. By that same article he himself was transferred to the accounting bar. Bereft of all he had boasted and appropriated as his own. Dependent now upon the God whom he declared had no claim upon what he had earned. What is his portion by right?

STATEMENT AND CHALLENGE TO THE UTAH MORMON CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:-When I learned that the socalled Latter Day Saints of Utah had ministers preaching in Denison, I called on them challenging their theology and asked them to demonstrate their sincerity by meeting me in public debate upon the great differences that exist between their church and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of which I am a legal representa-

Now that those Utah elders, Joseph Ross and G. M. Ward have refused to bebate, I give notice to the people of Crawford county that I will give $500 to any man who will persuade the presidency of the Utah church to appoint an apostle or elder of their church to meet an apostle or elder of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints in a public de-bate of twenty sessions to be held in the tab-ernacle in Salt Lake City, then the contest to be repeated in Lamoni, Iowa:

The Reorganization stoutly affirms that Brigham Young was the author of the infamous document on polygamy, and that it cannot be proven that Joseph Smith, the Seer, ever taught, practiced, or even sanctioned plural marriage.

C. J. HUNT, D loit, Iowa.

SUGGESTIVE FIGURES.

The late United States census gives the following suggestive figures. Utah has an enumerated population of 276,749, of this number 141,687 are males and 135,062 are females, an excess of 6,625 males.

Of those native born 114,014 are males, 108,958 females. This shows pretty plainly that conditions being equal the male population of the church in Utah is largely in excess of the females, conclusively showing that nature has set its dissent to plural marriage in the facts of physical creation.

If the claim that woman is by the fiat of Deity in creation entitled to the privilege of wifebood and motherprivilege of wifebood and mother-tish clime, which is now quite cool, being hood, and this constitutes a plea for about eight hundred and forty miles farther the practice of polygamy, it is equally true that by the same flat of Deity man is entitled to the right and privilege of being husband and father; so the plea made for the woman is equally of force for the man.

Were the numbers exactly equal and so kept by the coincidence of an equal number of births, the opportunity for the exercise of the rights and privileges as stated above would be equal also. But, the wear and tear of life inflicts the larger percentage of loss upon the male half of humanity; and to remedy this constant depletion of marriageable men nature has provided that there should be an excess of men over women born into the world, as given in this instance in the state of Utah.

This is an argument of fact against plural marriage made patent by creation. Who is prepared to dispute it?

JAPAN OPPOSES MORMONISM.

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 12.—The steamer "Tartar," from the Orient, reports that the Mormon missionaries in Japan are meeting with popular animosity as well as interfer-ence by the authorities. Three Mormons who were holding open air meetings were mobbed and driven from the village. Another town meeting was stopped by the police. The missionaries have been notified to leave. Long manifestos are appearing in the Japanese papers calling upon the people to publicly meet the missionaries and drive them out of the country.

By the same token any form of Christian propagandism will find adverse conditions in Japan and other oriental countries.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. E. L. Kelley writes from Hamilton, Scotland, August 28:

We have had the finest of hearing in Scotland. Since arriving have preached to more than one thousand two hundred outsiders in this place, Glasgow, and Carluke. Bro. Rushton is a fine worker. Mrs. Kelley and I are both quite well and enjoying this Scot-

We go to Glasgow for meetings tonight, and to Edinburgh tomor-Have appointments here for over Sun-Good feeling among the people, and I find they have exhibited no prejudices against me because I am an American. From here I return to England to finish up work and then go to Wales. Trust all is moving well with all Saints.

We have received so many requests to resume publishing the "table of contents" that this week we begin again. It will be found at the head of the first column. To know it is appreciated by HERALD readers pays us for the extra work.

The Daughters of Zion some time ago appointed a committee to write a book suitable to place in the hands of the maidens of the church, and along the line of work being done by the society. It has been written and is in press now. It is entitled "Fireside Talks With Our Girls," and as is indicated by the title is written in conversational style, "Aunt Kate" being the pleasing medium through which the ideas of the book are presented to the reader. We believe the book is calculated to do much good, and parents cannot make a mistake in placing it in the hands of their daughters. cannot but do good, and the Daughters of Zion deserve a deal of credit for their energy and enterprise.

Last week we began the publication of the series of lectures being delivered in Lamoni on Sunday evenings by the Historical department of the Bro. Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, has delivered them so far, and the reporting is being done for the HERALD by Sr. Annie E. Allen. Each lecture will appear as soon after being delivered as is possible. Our readers will find them to be valuable and interesting.

Tomorrow memorial services will be held in the L D. S. church in Lamoni, as an expression of grief for our departed President McKinley. President Joseph Smith will deliver the address, he having returned Sunday from California. Persons of all denominations have been asked to participate.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY. NO. 2.

BY HEMAN C SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, August 25, 1901. Reported for HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen

I feel very much encouraged tonight in consequence of the attendance, believing it indicates an interest in the work that we have undertaken, and I trust it may be of continued interest to all. In our last effort we only had time to make an introduction, and undertake to show you how God had been moving and preparing for the events of importance that transpired in the coming forth of this latter-day work, and that it will be our principal effort to show the working of God in history. While we shall undertake to show that the history has simply been the reflection of God's dealing, we must speak of the work of men, for God has used instruments in performing his work, not only in this dispensation, but in every dispensation where he has dealt with mortality, and the instruments that he has used have necessarily been imperfect ones. He has never yet, except in the person of his Son Jesus Christ, had a perfect instrument through which to do his work. And while he deals with imperfect men we must expect some imperfect work, we must expect that the individuality of the persons shall be manifested to some extent; and as I look over the history of the past and read the events that have transpired in this latter-day work, I am not surprised at the weaknesses that have been made manifest, but I am surprised to find that men have done as well as they have. I am convinced that it would have been impossible for them to do as well as has been done if God had not been with them.

There are those who claim that this great work has been accomplished through the instrumentality of men alone. They give more credit to man than we do; they give more credit to the ability of man than we do; they see more in man than we see. From our standpoint it is impossible to account for the work from the presence of man alone; and if we are weaker in the faith when we see the mistakes of man; when we see that they did that which was erroneous and sometimes that which was sinful; if our faith is shaken, we have not used good judgment. I will tell you the effect it has had on me of late years. When I see the weakness of man manifested in the history of his work, I say, Surely that man never did this work; surely such a man never could have accomplished the work that has been accomplished; it is not in him, there has been some other power besides his at work or it would never have been

In our last effort we brought the family whom God used as instruments in the beginning of this latter day work from the Eastern country to Palmyra, New York, and left them striving to make a home. We shall not mention their successes and reverses particularly; suffice it to say that while they were making every effort to obtain that which would make them comfortable, in a large measure they failed; they never accumulated anything of importance; they continued in indigent circumstances, and while doing what they did for this latter-day work they had to face poverty, as did many others who shortly became associated with them.

When they had been in Palmyra about four years, they moved into the neighboring town of Manchester and made their home there. In the second year after they located at Manchester, there was a great religious revival in Some of you that neighborhood. have had experience in those things and know what a wonderful influence they have in a neighborhood, and how the people become interested, and how they sometimes, to use the common phrase, "get religion," get converted, and are made happy under the influences obtained there. This revival began with the Methodists, and the influence spread through the entire community, and other churches were drawn into it, all the churches joining. They were making converts very rapidly, and almost the entire community professed religion. Excitement ran very high; and among others who were converted was this Smith family. Four of them, I believe, united with the Presbyterian Church. They gave the converts, as is usual on those occasions, the privilege of uniting with any church they wished, and Mrs. Smith, Hyrum, So phronia, and Samuel united with the Presbyterian Church, thinking that was nearest their idea of right. not know whether any others of the family joined any church or not, but Joseph was inclined to the Methodist Church. He favored it and seemed to have a desire to unite with it. However, he was not entirely satisfied. There was much confusion among the different denominations when they were dividing up the converts, and rivalry took place between the ministers, each one trying to get the most converts into his church. They now became enemies, as each was contending against the other, and trying to expose the errors of one another, and each one claimed his particular denomination was right. This confused Joseph to some extent; and though partial to the Methodists, yet condition, he was reading in the epistle of James to get what light he could in regard to the subject, when he came to this passage: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."

He tells us in his history, that never did a passage of scripture have greater effect upon the mind of man than did this upon his, and he in the innocency of his soul believed it, believed that that was the proper thing to do, and accordingly concluded that he would go by himself and pray and ask God in regard to this matter as to which of these denominations was right, and with which he should cast his lot, for he wanted to belong to some church. He came to the place where he had before determined in his mind to go, knelt down and began supplicating the throne of God; and he tells us in his history, that he had no sooner begun to pray (and by the way, that was the first effort he had ever made to pray vocally. He may have had the spirit of prayer before, he does not say) than some power seized upon him and he could not utter what he desired to-darkness seemed to be around him. That is a very hard condition to be in. You have all felt it, no doubt, to some extent. Whether to the extent this young man did or not, I feel safe in saying that every one that has tried to pray has felt the powers of darkness close over him, and at times it has been almost impossible to utter a word. That was the condition this young man found himself in. He probably felt it to a greater extreme than people usually do. There was something held him fast, body and mind. But right here one of his peculiar characteristics manifested itself, and you will notice it all through his life, and that is, that he was not discouraged by adversity, but though this power of darkness took hold of him and seemed to hold him fast, he continued to make the effort. He did that all through his life; no matter what the occasion, no matter how much sacrifice had to be made, he persistently went ahead and took the consequences. That was one of the traits of character that the man possessed. He possessed it because of environments, environments that were prenatal in their influence, that gave him courage and gave him devotion tothe right, a determination to stand by his convictions. God had prepared him for the work and it is manifested in his first effort to pray, notwithstanding the powers of darkness which resisted him, and he tells us that he continued to pray to God to release him; and just as he was ready to give up, he saw a light above him he was not satisfied. While in this and it began to descend. So bright was this light that it made the impression upon his mind that when it came in contact with the trees that were above him they would be consumed. It appeared to him like fire, and he expected the result that would naturally follow fire coming in contact with the shrubbery.

Right here I want to digress a little and call your attention to the similarity that existed between this manifestation and other manifestations that have been seen by men in days that are past. You remember, no doubt, when the Lord appeared to Moses, that Moses saw a burning bush. He thought it was a burning bush. There was the same light that Joseph saw. And the Lord spoke to him, and Moses described it as the Lord appearing in a burning bush. Another of these instances is at the time of Paul's conversion, where we have the same idea conveyed that there was a beautiful and bright light that attended the personage of Jesus Christ when he appeared to the apostle. In Acts 9: 3-6 is an account of this particular manifestation of divine power. There the Evangelist Luke in telling of this young man, says he saw a light from heaven. We have another account of it in Paul's own language. Allow me to invite your attention to Acts 26:13, 14, which reads:

At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me. And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

We point this out to you as the experience of Paul told in his own language, and you will see that his experience was very much like that of this young man back in the state of New York. Paul was brought before King Agrippa for examination. There he related an experience very much like the experience of Joseph Smith. I have no idea that Joseph knew much of these passages if he ever read them at all. He was just beginning to examine the word of God and get an impression of religion. Now remember that when Moses saw the light, God was there. When Paul saw the light, the Lord Jesus Christ was there; the light attended the presence of the Divine One shining brighter than the noonday sun. The following indicates that the time will come when men will live in that light. I read in Revelation where John on the Isle of Patmos, in vision, saw the New Jerusalem come down from God out of heaven, and he said "the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." It was the presence of the Son of God that was to be the light of the New Jerusalem. He said in the next chapter, I believe:

And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.

So light is to be the heritage of every child of God who shall finally dwell in his presence. It is reasonable; there is nothing marvelous about it. Philosophers tell us the moon and the stars receive their light from the sun, they reflect the light of the sun; and we come to the conclusion that the sun is the greatest light in the universe. If anybody talks about any light greater than that, we think it is absurd. Is it not reasonable to suppose that God, who placed the sun in the heavens, gives it its light, and that not only the moon and stars, but also the sun shine with a borrowed light? It receives its light and power from the hand that made it; and when the vail shall be rent in twain and we shall stand in the presence of God and Jesus Christ, we shall need the light of the sun no more than we need the light of the moon and stars when the sun shines in his strength. We shall stand in the presence of all light, and the light and beauty that shall reflected from the radiance of the glory of God and his Son, and from the ransomed ones, shall take away the necessity of even the light of the sun, and will fulfill the prediction made by the Prophet Isaiah (60: 19, 20):

The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Here is a prediction made by a prophet long years ago, that sometime in the future the people of God shall be in that condition that the sun shall be no more their light, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto them: but the Lord shall be unto them an everlasting light, and their God their glory. When the sun shall no more go down, neither shall the moon withdraw itself, for the Lord shall be an everlasting light. and the days of mourning shall be ended.

What a glorious thought that is! We cannot grasp it fully, but it conveys the idea that where the presence of God is there will not only be light in a spiritual and mental sense, but in a physical sense as well. The light of God's presence shall be the brightest light when we stand in the full rays of God's glory. As God's presence was there when Moses saw the burning bush; as God's presence was there when a light above the brightness of the noonday sun shone on

Paul; when a man relates that while praying in the woods alone there shone a light so bright that it appeared to consume the treetops above him, I am not surprised. It is in harmony with what I read of those lights that attended divine personages in the days gone by. Joseph tells us in his history:

I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other,) "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

This is in perfect harmony with manifestations and powers that came to the world through ministers of light to mankind.

This young man had gone there to ask what he should do. He was confused in regard to the many different opinions, and with which one of the churches it was best to cast his lot. He read the word of God, and felt in his soul if he asked God he would tell Whether it was a vision, or him. whether God was there in person, it is the same, for the vision would not misrepresent the fact. He asked this personage which was pointed out to him by the other, which of the many churches he should unite with, for it never entered his soul that they were all wrong; it never entered his mind that every one of them was wrong in its position. He was surprised, doubt, when the personage said, You shall not unite yourself with any of them, they are all wrong, and their creeds are an abomination in my sight." He felt that he must heed this instruction and refuse to unite with any of the churches that were in existence at that time. He held aloof from all of them and went on his way and waited for further developments. In the meantime, he told some of his friends about the vision, and among them a Methodist preacher, and he was very much surprised when this Methodist preacher made light of it, and not only made light of it but manifested the spirit of persecution towards the young man. The policy that was manifested by that preacher at that time is the policy that has been pursued by the opposers of this latter-day work ever since. They are telling us that we are dishonest, that we have no other motive in view except to deceive the people. We know better; we know they are telling what is not so. They cannot make us believe we are trying to deceive the people, when in our souls we know that we are trying to do them good.

The proper thing for that Methodist preacher was not to tell the young man he never saw anything. The young man knew that he had. He tells us he felt like Paul did before King Agrippa, when the manifestation he had received was ridiculed.

Paul knew he had seen a vision, and all the persecution that was heaped upon him could not convince him that he had not. No one can ever make an honest man believe he is a hypocrite—it is foolishness to try.

I want to call your attention to the vindication that has been made manifest since this young man told this minister of what had been told him in vision by the personages he saw in the light. Mark you, he did not say the professors were all corrupt; he said they were all wrong and their creeds were an abomination, and those professors were corrupt. This has been misquoted and made to appear that Joseph condemned every man that professed religion. This statement was made with reference to those in that neighborhood, those were all Joseph knew anything about, "Their and all he asked about. creeds were an abomination," that was received with a great deal of adverse criticism. Men said, Our creeds are not an abomination, and they are all right. How has it been since? Since that time there is not a creed represented at that time in Manchester, New York, but has been revised by its devotees. They themselves have concluded that the creeds were wrong, and have had some very serious times and a great deal of discussion and a great deal of bad feeling in trying to revise those creeds. They have discarded a large portion of them. They have acknowledged that these creeds are wrong and have tried to make them right by revising them. So far, the vision received by the young man is admitted to be correct. He tells us that being forbidden to join any of the denominations, he was left alone amid persecution, and, as young men naturally do, gave way to things that were not right. Of this he felt very sorry, and repentant, and humbly sought favor with God. He says:

During the space of time which intervened between the time I had the vision, and the year eighteen hundred and twenty-three, having been forbidden to join any of the religious sects of the day, and being of very tender years, and persecuted by those who ought to have been my friends, and to have treated me kindly, and if they supposed me to be deluded to have endeavored in a proper and affectionate manner to have reclaimed me, I was left to all kinds of temptations, and mingling with all kinds of society, I frequently fell into many foolish errors and displayed the weakness of youth and the corruption of human nature, which I am sorry to say led me into divers temptations, to the gratification of many appetites offensive in the sight of God.

That is what he confesses. He does not definitely say what he is guilty of. That gave the enemy an opportunity, and they made the most of it. As he did not tell just what he had done, they undertook to tell what he had been guilty of, and in after years it became necessary to define more clearly what he had reference to; and in 1834, when the Messenger and Advocate was published at Kirtland, Joseph Smith wrote a letter and it was published in that paper, and in that he tells us:

During this time, as is common to most, or all youths, I fell into many vices and follies; but as my accusers are, and have been forward to accuse me of being guilty of gross and outrageous violations of the peace and good order of the community, I take the occasion to remark, that, though, as I have said above, "as is common to most, or all, youths, I fell into many vices and follies," I have not, neither can it be sustained, in truth, been guilty of wronging or injuring any man or society of men; and those imperfections to which I allude, and for which I have often had occasion to lament, were a light, and too often, vain mind, exhibiting a foolish and trifling conversation.

He says that is all that can be proved against him. He did not try to cover up anything. The language he used would really lead us to expect he had done something seriously wrong, when the thing he really did was that he had simply given way to light-mindedness and foolishness, and he felt that these things were wrong and this led him to humble himself before God, asking for forgiveness for the wrong thus committed before God. While engaged in prayer on the night of September 21, 1823, he says he saw a light begin to gather round him in the room, and presently there was a messenger standing by his bedside. He described it, and in that description he gives another statement to which I want to call your attention. He says the countenance of the angel shone like lightning. That reminds me of a statement made by John the Revelator, on the Isle of Patmos. He said: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet," and then turning to see from whence the voice came that spoke to him, he says:

I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesicks one like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire.

And again he says when the Lord appeared to him his countenance shone like the sun in his strength. That is what Joseph said, his countenance was like the lightning.

This individual told him that the Lord had a great work for him to do, and if he was faithful, he should be permitted to do that work. I want to emphasize that. I want to say that though the Lord had chosen him to do that work, he said that he should perform that work if faithful. I want you to remember, that no man, I care not who he is, holds a birthright to perform any work for God unless he is faithful. Joseph did not possess it nor can any other man possess it; and though God may have called you or me to stand in a certain position and accomplish a work for him, if we are not faithful we shall never do the work.

· Joseph was told the Lord had a work for him to do, and if faithful he should succeed. He told that young man (and the young man related it) that his name should "be had for good and evil among all nations, and kindreds, and tongues," "be both good and evil spoken of among all people." That was quite a statement for an obscure boy to make. It would be considered ridiculous to us. He was about eighteen years old. What would you think if some of these boys eighteen years old would say, "Now, my name is going to be spoken evil and good of all over the world. Everybody is going to have some kind of an opinion of me." Everybody would laugh at him, would they not? That is about what they thought of Joseph, there was no probability of the world knowing anything about Joseph Smith.

There is not a man in the world, perhaps, that ever read the English language, but what knows something of the history of Joseph Smith; and nearly every man or woman that ever read of him has formed some opinion of him, and some of them speak evil of him and some good. Some speak of him as the prophet of God and reverence his name. There may be those that reverence him more than he is entitled to be reverenced. And on the other hand, there are those who will say he is a bad man. The prediction made when that boy was only eighteen years old has been ful-What caused him to know filled. this? How did he know? There must have been some information obtained by the young man that he was able to know these facts; know that all men were going to talk about him. I presume there are those here tonight who have a very high opinion of Joseph Smith, and there are those holding the opposite view. Both are fulfilling the prediction that he would be both "good and evil spoken of" in all the world. It seems they cannot help it. We will not dwell long upon this, but I want you to think about it.

This angel told him that there were plates hidden in the earth, and he saw a vision of the place where the plates were hidden; and when the opportunity came to go to it, he recognized the place because he had seen it in a vision, and knew right where to find the plates, recognizing the particular rock under which they were hidden. This angel appeared to him three times during that night and repeated the same thing to him. In the morning he arose and went to his occupation, laboring in the field. Having lost his sleep the night before, he was weak and unable to perform his task, and his father told him to go home. He started for the house, and while on the way this messenger appeared to him again and told him to return to the field and tell his father of the vision he had seen. It is a wonder he had not told his father before. Many a boy, if he had seen such a vision, would tell it to the first person he met. He had seen this manifestation and was told there were gold plates hid in the earth. He was told that if faithful he would get the plates. About all this he kept quiet, not mentioning it to any one until he was commanded to do so. He did not do anything until he was sure the time had come and it was his duty to do it.

The father received it immediately. and said "It is of God; you go to the place where the plates are hidden." The young man went to the place, and he recognized it and knew it as soon as he arrived there. He saw the rock he had seen in the vision. The rock was a rounding one, a little higher in the middle, and bare. All around the edges there was still loose dirt. He took a lever and raised the rock, and there he saw what he had been told would be found there. He undertook to take them, but was forbidden to do it by the messenger, and was told to leave them there until he would be commanded to take them, which would be four years from that time. This was September 23, 1823, and the messenger said, "You come back each year and I will meet you here;" and for four years that young man kept the appointment with the angel. want to read you what he says:

Accordingly as I had been commanded I went at the end of each year, and at each time I found the same messenger there, and received instruction and intelligence from him at each of our interviews respecting what the Lord was going to do and how and in what manner his kingdom was to be conducted in the last days.

What a wonderful thing that was! That boy was instructed once each year how the Lord was going to conduct his kingdom in the last days; and I presume right there and then the history of the church was mapped out before that boy so he knew just what steps to take afterwards and when to organize the church, when the particular quorums of the church were to be organized, for this angel told him in these interviews what the Lord was going to do and in what manner his kingdom was to be conducted in the last days. This young man never went to school very much; but some of our better educated men would be in a better condition if they had received such schooling as that boy did.

Now this young man was under the necessity of working by the day for his daily sustenance because of the condition that he and his father's house were in financially. He was employed by a man by the name of Stoal, and this man took him with others to work in a silver mine he thought he had some information of in the state of Pennsylvania. That is where he got his reputation as a money digger. The man told him to dig, and he dug. And while some talk of Joseph Smith digging money as a reproach, I think we would all be money diggers, if we knew where to dig. I think there was no disgrace in it.

I want to relate one incident that occurred while he was down there with this Mr. Stoal that will be of particular importance in the things to come, for you all, no doubt, have heard that Joseph Smith was guilty of stealing. There was a case while here in which the circumstantial evidence was quite strong against him, for there was an article missing and it was found in Joseph Smith's possession. He has been accused time and again of stealing it, and I heard the President of the Reorganization say, "I am glad he did do it, for it gave me the best mother I ever had." It was the daughter of Isaac Hale he took. Mr. Hale did not like the stories of Joseph Smith, and was very much opposed to taking him into the family. He no doubt believed the false stories told about him and did not want to have anything to do with him. Joseph did not say much. This is what he says:

Owing to my still continuing to assert that I had seen a vision persecution still followed me, and my wife's father's family were very much opposed to our being married. I was therefore under the necessity of taking her elsewhere, so we went and were married at the house of Squire Tarbill, in South Bainbridge, Chenango County, New York.

He said his wife's father's family were opposed to the marriage, so he was under the necessity of taking her That was the way with elsewhere. him; when he thought it was his duty to do anything, he did it. If opposition stood in his way, still he was under the necessity of doing it. He manifested the same trait of character in this as in all his work. He had an idea, and future events showed it was a good one, too, a conviction that the daughter of Isaac Hale should be his wife; and when they said, "No," he was under the necessity of taking her elsewhere, and I do not blame him. As a rule the judgment of the parents is the best, and hence their opinions should have careful consideration, but there are cases in which the judgment of the old folks should be set aside. and this is one of them.

This woman proved to be a helpmeet to Joseph Smith, and I believe that if God raised up a Joseph as an instrument to do his work, that he raised up an Emma as his helpmeet, and Joseph recognized her as such. She was his counselor, and a faithful one she was, too. In all the work that he did, and in all the trying scenes through which he passed, and in all that he was called upon to do, he confided in her; and he confided wisely, too, for by his side she stood through all the circumstances and trials through which he passed. There were no secrets between Joseph and Emma. He trusted her, and it was wise he did so. She stood by his side through all those persecutions; and when they brought her murdered husband and laid him in the home where they had seen a few days of peace, as she gathered her children around her and brought them to look upon his face, she said: "Oh, my husband, have they taken you from me at last!"

I do not know much about the environments of her birth; but I say that she was qualified for the station she filled; the choice was wise and God ordained it, and I am glad that Joseph Smith went down to Pennsylvania to dig for money, because he found Emma there. If Emma's name were not written the history would not be complete. She is a part of it, and may God help us to understand our places as well as Emma occupied hers. Like her husband's, her name has gone out for good and evil. She has been evilly spoken of by those who pretended to be her husband's friends. She is condemned simply because her very existence was a rebuke to the corruption of those who condemn her, and may God bless her memory evermore.

I leave this subject for the present, and trust that it has been interesting and entertaining to you.

POINTS ON THE WAY OF TRAVEL.

We recognized at once a new order of things in arrangement, the conduct of passengers, the manner of unloading the vessel; and even the fine, noble horses as they trundled the curious carts to position were peculiarly attractive and we were compelled at once to admit that our free America could well pattern after England in many things.

The stay in Liverpool was brief and we soon hurried on to Manchester in the odd shaped railway carriages, passing over a delightful country dotted everywhere with towns and villages. While the railway carriages were less pretentious and commodious than the American, yet for a short journey they were equally adapted in some regards to the wants of travel. The many doors that open on either side of the coach permit a very hasty emptying and filling of the train, and this is a great advantage in the populous districts of England.

Manchester is a large manufacturing and trade center. A population of eight hundred thousand; yet, in many respects it is not up to the average American city of fifty thousand inhabitants. But a few weeks have passed since it started its first line of electric street cars, and even now it is easy to see that there is a prejudice in favor of the horse train. The poor horses greatly suffer at these two-story trams and buses, carrying as they do from twenty to twenty five passengers.

Our first dinner on English soil was with Bro. and Sr. Joseph Dewsnup, Sr. We found them pleasant and interesting. They are the parents of Ex-President E. R. Dewsnup, of Graceland College. We have also had the pleasure of a meeting with the latter, and under his guidance visited his Alma Mater, formerly Owen's College, but now Victoria University, and in some regards the leading educational institute of Great Britain. Having been founded and built in more modern times it has the improvements and compliment of furnishings that are in keeping with the present enlightenment. Its vast museum, chemical laboratory, engi-Its vast neering department, and library are wonderfully fine in capacity and arrangement. The first evening in Manchester we attended baptismal services, where Bro. Dewsnup performed the Christian rite, taking four precious souls down into the water one by one and immersing them, according to the ancient order, in the water, then coming up out of the water as Jesus did when baptized in Jordan. We also attended meeting in the East Manchester branch, presided over by Bro Nathan J. Weate, on Wednesday, and at the North Manchester branch, presided over by Joseph Dewsnup, Jr., on Thursday evening. At the latter branch enjoyed also the session of their business meeting; the young Bro. Dewsnup showing good presiding abilities and hastening the dispatch of business. On Friday we went to the station to witness the welcome of the Lord Mayor of London who was to appear in full civic display with great retinue. As usual for Americans, we selected our place conveniently in the great depot so as to be in handy position to welcome the Lord Mayor with a hearty handshake, if need be, to have him feel at home, but ere the signal announced his train a platoon of police formed across the broad landing place and proceeded to drive all before them toward the outer entrance. Bro. Muceus and the writer had little perplexity over it, but our American wives contested every inch of the ground and only moved as the long line with elevated batons menacingly approached their position. We thought how amusing it would have been to their American friends could they have seen them marching defiantly along before this great body of police. On the outer edge we were permitted to stop, and soon the London train arrived, and the Lord Mayor in his carriage of state, green and gold, forwarded from London for the occasion, together with the High Sheriff of London in his carriage of blue and gold, and the High Secretary with his carriage of chocolate and gold, all decked in knightly order with coachmen with curled wig and emblazoned dress, and javelin throwers in gorgeous gold and silk, passed down the line preceded by horsemen and followed by dozens of attendant carriages. It was not an American reception, however,-we did not hear a cheer and saw few hats raised. The Lord Mayor bowed at the occasional recognized smiles of the people; but there was no outburst of feeling, or glorious reception as I have witnessed when a man who has been elevated by the people has visited an American city, without the least effort of tapestry display, or costly entourage.

But we were glad to see the Lord Mayor and witness the special cor-

Saturday morning, August 3, Elder G. T. Griffiths, president of the European mission, arrived, having been detained a week later in America than he had at first expected, and at six o'clock, p. m., the time having arrived for the opening of the European conference, we repaired to the meeting place of the South Manchester branch, where arrangements had been made for the gathering. So far as we were able to determine there was a good representation in the conference. The constant missionaries present were Elders Griffiths, Peter Muceus, and J. W. Rushton, Thomas Taylor of the bishopric, and a large number of local workers, all of whom could not well be named here. The conference was a good and very important one, lasting through the fol-New work was lowing Monday. accomplished and the old better understood. Elder Thomas Taylor was ordained a bishop, and Elder C. H. Caton a counselor to the bishop. Elder J. W. Rushton was by due ceremony ordained a seventy. Elders James Baty and Joseph Greenwood were by Apostle G. T. Griffiths ordained and set apart to the work of evangelists. Elders' and priests' quorums were organized, and presidents and counselors selected and ordained to preside over them as provided in the law. The Saints' meetings and preaching services were well attended, and a goodly portion of the Spirit of the Lord present at all the exercises; and considering the work done, the advancement made, the encouragement given to the Saints, and the good fellowship prevailing throughout, it is safe to state that the gathering was pleasing in many ways to the Lord. We enjoyed the association of our European Saints, and have found them excellent men and women, many able, humble, and courageous representatives, and to this time have seen no good reason why the gospel work cannot be as successfully prosecuted and with as hopeful results, in England, Scotland, and Wales, as in America. My time is limited, however, as also the HERALD space, so the experiences in Birmingham, London, Hamilton, and Glasgow must be deferred. E. L. KELLEY.

AN OPINION.

Without cherishing a remote wish to be intrusive or boorish, but in noticing the item under the caption of the Gospel Standard. Australia's mission paper, I thought I would venture to offer an opinion. Should it prove to the HERALD readers a foolish one, I trust no harm may accrue to any one thereby.

The minutes of conference for 1901 is found in the literary market, written, as it were, across the sky, that all who run may read. I have read and marked, essaying to learn; but the power for the inward digestive arrangements appears sluggish, possibly attributable to my peculiar makeup, you know. But to the

Firstly. I think the appeal for help from the brethren in the far-off land of Australia timely and proper, and I was sorry to see this last appeal in HERALD for August 21, 1901, having fondly anticipated that in view of the length of time since the first appeal in the HERALD columns, thousands of copies of the Gospel Standard, ere this, were being circulated, radiating gospel light among the tens of thousands who are, as it were, wallowing in uncertainty relative to the vital question of religion. But alas! for human expectations.

Secondly. The average of two cents from the entire membership of the church, forty five thousand, would have been more than enough to have met the financial help asked for by the brethren who, it must be admitted, have labored with a commendable zeal and perseverance in the advocacy and defense of the gospel among the millions of perishing souls in that far off land. Moreover, this appeal was made, as I understand, with a view to more fully carry out the solemn injunction, which is always imperative; namely, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," etc.

Thirdly. Since the first appeal, thousands of dollars have doubtless been spent for the realization of the gratification attributable to holding reunions, for which there is no command, while that which the Lord has commanded is hindered because of a lack of financial aid which the church is abundantly able to furnish. Is that proper? It is right? Is it evidence of a proper utilization of money? Answer, who may. I think it a proper interrogation. But if evidence is available to disprove the propriety thereof, it should not be withholden.

Fourthly. I have before me a notice of a reunion which states: "Tents can be had at the following prices: 10x12, $1.60; 12x14, $1.85, etc. Twenty five cents extra will be charged for setting up." Now who the setter up of tents may be, deponent saith not, nor is it mattered. Suffice it to say, It's business, you know. But if it please the reader, wouldn't it be possible for those going to reunion, hiring tents, to pitch their own tents, and send the cost, twentyfive cents, to the struggling brethren in Australia? Think of it! A few gallant men, in a country nearly as big as the United States of America. Suppose we were in a similar position and they were the United States of America. Wouldn't we like help from them?

Read the appeal found in HERALD for August 21. It is plain, but consistent and dignified.

In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL. HEBRON, Nebraska, August 27.

FALSE PROPHECIES. FROM WHAT SOURCE?

It sometimes occurs in the social services of the church that predictions are made in the name of the Lord that do not come to pass, and the writer presumes from observation that a majority of Saints, after seeing the promises fail, unhesitatingly pronounce them from the Devil.

It is a serious matter indeed to be deceived by the adversary of all righteousness. The faith of Saints has been tried to the uttermost along this line, and that of some badly shaken; while non-members, watching every move and sifting every word, have found herein a fruitful excuse for rejecting the work.

These facts naturally cause some to be unduly timid, until they "quench the Spirit of the Lord" when given. This ought not to be, for we need all the Lord sends us. He never gives a message to any soul but for a purpose, and that purpose is not fulfilled when the message is not received. It is not easy to calculate the loss that may be sustained by hungry souls in this way.

years ago, but considering the fact that the first to receive a visit and message from the risen Lord was she out of whom he had cast seven devils, and that all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, whose names are not written in the book of life are to be deceived by the Devil, therefore, I concluded I would rather wrestle with his satanic majesty in the church, with Jesus to help me, than to do so in the cold world, single handed and alone. And thirty years experience has furnished no occasion for changing my mind.

It would seem that since we are commanded to "try the spirits," and are informed that there are "foul spirits," "unclean spirits" in the world, and since some rules are given by which to apply the tests, there should be no danger of faithful souls being deceived by such false and delusive spirits. Still the experiences of the past show that occasionally prophecies uttered by thoughtful, model members fail to be fulfilled.

These predictions are of an order that cannot be called bad; they recognize the Christ, seem to be fraught with love, promise restored health to some dear one, or some advanced movement of the work that all Saints would rejoice to see. There is no element of viciousness in them, they can hardly be branded lies, so the receiver delivers them with a "Thus saith the Spirit."

The writer has always been inclined to dispose of these things as simple human errors or mistakes, with which the Devil has nothing whatever to do. And the longer I study the mechanism of the human mind the more strongly am I inclined to that decision. I therefore conclude that false prophecies are of two distinct classes: first, those actually from the Devil; second, those from a purely human source.

HOW DO THEY COME?

They usually come to the sensitive mind by way of intuition, sometimes faintly, but at other times strongly and vividly impressed on the mind. These impressions come from various sources. Divine inspirations sometimes come in this way, but there is no doubt in the mind of the prophet. He is entirely positive. There is no question about the matter with him. His spirit enters into perfect affinity with God, his entire mind is absorbed, and vibrates in harmony with his enraptured spirit. He sees the matter clearly, he knows for the time being that it is true. But afterwards, when this perfect conjunction between his mind and his spirit in severed, and the telepathic connection between his spirit and the Spirit of God is turned off, his finite reasoning mind some-The writer was thus confronted times doubts the declaration and he aroused in your very being. Follow-wonders if it really will come to pass? But we are looking after false prophecies at this time, and I will first examine those from a human

PERCEPTION, OR THE SIXTH SENSE.

In order to arrive at something definite we will examine briefly the sense of perception. I will go to the Bible rather than to standard lexicographers for the import of the word perceived. Jesus in Luke 5:22, 9:47, and Matthew 22:48. Peter in Acts 14:9, and the woman in 2 Kings 4:9 perceived things that our physical senses can neither see, feel, hear, smell, nor taste. And from Mark 8:16. 17. we conclude that perception is neither reason nor understanding, for "they reasoned," but they perceived not, nor did they understand.

Perception and intuition are to our spirits, what our five physical senses are to our finite minds. To just the degree that we recognize our spirits as an eternal intellectual force, and to the degree that our finite minds and our spirits become one, to that degree do we realize perception to be a perfectly natural sense. Our physical senses bring a knowledge of physical things to our finite minds. Perception and intuition bring a knowledge of spiritual things to our spirits. It is through our physical senses that our finite minds become acquainted with our physical environments. And through the sense of perception do our eternal, intellectual spirits acquaint themselves with spiritual environments.

In the beginning God joined the eternal, intellectual spirit to the finite mind, and placed them in the body as a "temple," or "house," and 'man became a living soul."

Inasmuch as we attain to that original oneness in ourselves, perception becomes a sense of the soul. But the delicacies of our spiritual environments are wholly unknown to the finite mind that is divorced from its eternal mate or spirit. Spiritual things are more natural than physical things. Our bodies may become dwarfed and twisted, but our spirits only become estranged by being ignored. If the reader is the happy possessor of perception, and it can be developed, or rather won back by study, you may sit in an easy chair or recline in a hammock, where people are passing, and place yourself in a receptive mood, and perceive the mental attitude of individuals as they approach you. Here comes one bubbling over with life and vigor, jubilant as a frolicksome schoolboy, vibrating with triumphant mirth. He may walk circumspectly and silently as a priest, but his atmosphere is recorded by corresponding vibrations ing him comes a pessimist, a habitual sufferer from the blues; down goes the temperature of your soul to zero.

In this way we catch a glimpse of why it is that some sensitive souls are today in the garret, hopeful and joyous, and tomorrow in the sewer of despondency: he may be registering the atmosphere of those around him, or recording the mental vibrations of some one with whom he is in rapport. When we understand the law of attraction and vibration it is easily seen how something like the following may occur: A sister is near death's door; the Saints meet to pray for her recovery. After a season during which many prayers are sent up, a few words of comfort and exhortation are being offered. There dwells an expectancy in their minds that a loving Father will give a message of love. Some brother now assumes a positive attitude. He is anxious and uncertain, but is trying to exercise faith, so he shapes a thought something like this, "Most surely God will answer these prayers. He will raise this sister up." He holds the thought for a time, and finally molds it in a still more positive term. "Yes, she shall be healed."

Now it happens that another brother is in a very sensitive attitude. He expects with the rest that God will speak comfortably to his waiting children. He looks for some one else to receive and speak. He is passively waiting. The positive thought reaches him in the form of a strong impression, the words are not his own, but the idea is in exact harmony with his expectations. He utters it with a "Thus saith the Spirit." It is received with joy. The minds of the majority are raised to where the fall is a terrible shock when it is learned that God has decreed otherwise.

An anxious person can never depend on impressions. He is very likely to be deceived if he does. A better attitude is one of loving trust. Our duty promptly done, then with perfect resignation leave it all with Jesus.

Anxiety plays the mischief in very many ways. Did you ever play any of the willing games? They are very simple, yet powerful illustrations of the point. Here is one: Agree on some simple article to be hidden; select a sensitive individual who is to go into another room and be passive while you hide the article; now call your sensitive person, who must remain in a careless attitude, not using the reason, but depend wholly on impression. Those of the entire company who are comfortably seated, are to unitedly concentrate on the hidden article, and the sensitive person will go straight to the place where the article is concealed and find it.

Another good illustration: Accompany the sensitive person into the kitchen where she must be seated, close her eyes, and be passive until you knock on the door. Instruct her to keep her eyes closed, and sit passive, after you knock, until some article is impressed on her mind. Then she is to bring it into the presence of the company. Now return to your company who are seated and request some one to name some simple article to be brought in, a dipper of water, the stove hook, or fire-shovel, anything easy of access. As soon as the article is named, all are to close their eyes and concentrate powerfully on the article and imagine they can see it, and will that it be impressed on the mind of the one who is to bring it. Let this concentration continue a few seconds before knocking on the door. If you make no mistake in the selection of a sensitive individual, and there be no refractory minds in the company, these experiments should rarely fail. They prove that mental telegraphy is possible. They illusstrate how different classes of impressions may occur. We can see that the occasion of prayer service, the mental expectancy, the unanimity of thought are all favorable to the transmission of impressions.

THE MINIONS OF SATAN.

While there is no possible doubt that the Devil by his servile flattery does take the advantage of saints, and that he has caused some to utter false prophecies, yet the chances are all against him. The natural discernment with which God has endowed his ministry, the natural protection of the gospel economy forms a bulwark so strong that Satan himself compared it to a wall of fire with which God had surrounded Job.

We are informed that the whole world except the Saints are to be deceived by the Devil, and that if it were possible he would "deceive the very elect." But the elect have armed themselves with the gospel which is specially adapted to our protection, that we be no more "carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Satan binds with his strong cords, but the gospel breaks his bonds and sets the captive free. The Devil enters into men and renders them dumb, but the power of the gospel casts him out and restores speech to the afflicted (Matt. 9:33).

Jesus armed Paul with the gospel and sent him to the Gentiles, 'to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." Paul wrote to the Romans thus: "And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly;" and to the Corinthians: "Lest Satan should get an advantage" paralyzed, her spirit went out, for hours it was absent, but returned and started circulation, so she was not buried with her sister who was killed at the same time. She attended her sister's funeral, yet she lay unconscious at home at the time. She saw her sister in the coffin, still her physical sight was not restored for

of us: for we are not ignorant of his devices."

The Devil soweth the seeds of error in the hearts of men, but the gospel gathers the crop to be burned and sows the seeds of truth instead. The Devil fills the human family with consternation and fear, but the gospel casts out the fear by impregnating our souls with perfect love, and fills our hearts with peace. It is not all the time that we wrestle against flesh and blood, "but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." But thank the Lord, if we put on the whole armor of God (the gospel), it will make us "able to stand against the wiles of the Devil." So although "Satan is transformed into an angel of light," if we have on our armor we have nothing to fear; absolutely nothing to fear. It is by and through the gospel that God designs to destroy the works of the Devil.

If God, in order to give some of his servants a perfect knowledge of the glaring contrast between the power of life and light, and that of darkness and death, gives them for a time into the hands of Satan, still there is nothing that shall separate them from the love of God. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

It is only when we step outside of the protection of the gospel and essay to stand in our individual strength that Satan has power to overcome us. So our admiration for the gospel is multiplied in so much as the loving protection of its author is revealed to us. I thank God that he has revealed to the church that the Devil does not know our secret thoughts, for we see by it that his power is circumscribed and his dominion over us is limited. But as his works do occasionally show forth in the church, it is no mean calling to examine into the ways and means of ingress into our personalities. "There is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."

I have been affirming that this spirit is an intellectual force distinct from mental force, and that it can live and act independent of mental force. I will cite one out of the many evidences I have gathered. Miss Harriet Smith (now Mrs. Swanson), of Lincoln, Nebraska, when sixteen years old was killed by lighting, circulation ceased, all her physical senses were paralyzed, her spirit went out, for hours it was absent, but returned and started circulation, so she was not buried with her sister who was killed at the same time. She attended her sister's funeral, yet she lay unconscious at home at the time. She saw her sister in the coffin, still her days after. Her spirit saw, heard, and realized, yet it partook not of the natural anxiety of the mind.

Our mental and physical forces cannot exist without the Spirit, but the latter lives on, when the former is not. The point I wish to make clear is that a living soul consists of at least three constituents, and that the real personality, the prime factor, is the Spirit. It is to the independent actions of our spirits that I now call attention. There are thousands of foul spirits desiring to enter visible personalities, and occasionally they succeed. (Luke 8:30.) Man is furnished with some natural protection, some strong barrier preventing such invasion. Our spirits are eternal vigilance, actuated by that "intelligence that never was nor indeed can be created," devoted to the sacred trust of protecting our souls from every inimical influence. Without a doubt they are thoroughly proficient as long as they are recognized, and accorded their proper sphere, but when ignored and maltreated, it is but natural that they should become estranged and lose their devotion, grow careless and negligent, dividing their interest and attention between that once sacred trust and going out after congenial associations and admitting strange com-

Let me compare the relation of the mind and spirit to that existing between husband and wife, for surely there should be the same union and oneness existing in each case. Is there a wife on earth so true, so faithful, as not to become estranged were her presence and her very existence worse than brutally ignored? Would she not in time lose her first love and search for more congenial associations? Could she be expected to attend assiduously to all the duties of a proficient wife? Why should she care what influences are brought to bear on him who has proven himself unworthy of her affections? At one time she was attentive to all the minor details of her happy home, her husband's interest was her interest, during his busy hours he was carefully guarded, no invasion of their home was allowed. But since she is set aside, and no longer acknowledged as a partner or benefactor, he has no right to complain of the company she may keep, or of any means she may adopt; he should expect her at times to be truant. Therefore they are anxious, nervous minds which do not know that the powers God has implanted within them are able to foil all the cunning devices of the dark demon. They are in constant danger of his mean adulations for they have only finite means with which to thwart the opposing spiritual forces of him who has had over six thousand years experience. They have small for us to notice.

thrown themselves out of reach of the protection of the gospel by being wrought up with many fears when God has commanded them to "fear not," to trust him, to cast their cares on him. If you seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be the richest of all people: for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give: but beware of pride, lest ye become as the Nephites of old.—Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 38, par. 9.

your light Therefore cease from all speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness, and from all your wicked doings —D. C. 85: 37.

Behold, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with many who are in the church at Kirtland, for they do not forsake their sins, and their wicked ways, the pride of their hearts.

And now in this two hundred and first year, there began to be among them those who were lifted up in pride, such as the wearing of costly apparel, and all manner of fine pearls, and of the fine things of the world. -Nephi, the Disciple, 1: 7.

In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, . . . not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array.-1 Timothy 2: 9.

Let your adorning be not that outward adorning of platting the hair, and wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel —1 Peter 3: 3.

Be not ashamed, neither confounded: but be admonished in all your highmindedness and pride, for it bringeth a snare upon your souls.—D. C. 87: 5.

Verily I say unto you, Behold how great is your calling. Cleanse your hearts and your garments.—D. C. 105: 13.

And again, thou shait not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands.—D. C. 42: 12.

Let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation.-D. C. 119: 3.

And Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I cannot receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things that they suffer.—D. C. 102:2

And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom. - D. C. 85:5

And now come all ye Saints with your gold and precious stones and let us pay the college debt. At the same time cleanse our garments and have them free from excess of ornamentation, and in place of drought and poverty let us have the blessings of God, prosperity, and the riches of the earth which are God's to give. Let us sanctify ourselves by that which we have received, even the law of Christ. God never gave a commandment too

THIS GENERATION.

In a book of 566 pages published in 1896, called "Prophecies of Jesus," by J. G. Matteson, a Seventh Day Adventist, I find that writer misquoting the plain printed words of our books in order to make points (?) against us. Yea more, for from page 134 to page 146, only twelve pages, Mr. Matteson is found guilty of making not less than seventeen misrepresentations, changing twenty four words, adding six, and recklessly omitting six others, besides having no regard for punctuation, which would mean, if the same unreliable work was done throughout the whole book, there are more than two thousand five hundred inaccuracies given out under the captivating title, "Prophecies of Jesus." If the work had been christened "Prophecies of Matteson," "Miller," or "White," there would have been nothing ambiguous or misleading in the appellation.

I wrote the Adventist Publishing House at Battle Creek, Michigan, calling their attention to many of the errors in the book in regard to the faith of the Saints, asking them to correct the next edition, or in some other way set their readers right, but received no satisfactory answer. They did write me, however, that the author was dead, which means, if their "pet" theory is true, he will "know not anything" until after the great resurrection.

One of the words omitted was all, as found in Doctrine and Covenants, 83: 2, where the Master said, "This generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord," etc. The Adventist made one of his strongest efforts against the Saints after misquoting that sentence. But we find they are very mild and elastic when a question on "generation" involves their position on Matthew 24. In proof of this please read the following taken from the "Question Corner" of a leading Adventist paper, Signs of the Times, published at Oakland, California, issue of December 22, 1898, which is well worth a place in your scrap book:

MATT 24: 34 'THIS GENERATION."

Please explain Matthew 24: 34. What generation is this? How long is this generation? When does it begin?

It means the generation which sees the fulfillment of the signs mentioned by our Lord. It began between the falling of the stars in 1833 and 1844, when the last part of the message of Revelation 14: 6-14 began, and ends when the Lord comes. A generation is not a definite time. It means generally the people living upon earth at the same time.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Sept. 5.

Editors Herald:—Before leaving home for my mission field I was privileged to assist Brn. White and Sawley in a series of meetings held in the tent in Stanberry. We got permission to pitch the tent in the city park; the attendance was fair and several manifested quite an interest in the services.

On Friday, August 16, I left for Council Bluffs and Weston, Iowa At the latter place I spoke in the church twice on Sunday, and on Monday evening preached for the Danish people in the south part of Council Bluffs. The next day I boarded the train at Omaha for the west and arrived in Provo the 22d.

Our reunion commenced there the 24th, continuing till September 1. We had a profitable time; the preaching and social services were good throughout. These annual gatherings are increasing in interest and will result in good to the work here if continued. The Saints realize this and all voted for another reunion next year. Great interest was manifested in the Sunday school work, and all seemed anxious to learn and adopt the best methods for the carrying on of the Sunday school.

On Friday, the 30th, the little seven-yearold daughter of Bro. and Sr. Stephens died quite suddenly, after but a few days illness. The affliction to bereaved ones was quite severe, and all the Saints felt it and sympathized with them; yet all seemed reconciled to the Lord's appointments.

On Monday, September 2, I arrived in Sandy, in company with Bro. and Sr. Condit and Bro. and Sr. Layland. A meeting having been appointed for that evening at the house of Bro. Wardle, quite a number gathered to hear Bro. Layland expound the law. The next morning we arrived here, Brn. Condit and Layland proceeding north to their fields of labor, while I remain in this city and vicinity for a short time to look after the interests of the work. Brn. Wight, Harris, and Pender also attended the reunion. For the remainder of the year Bro. Wight will devote his time to the building up of the work in Ogden, Salt Lake City, Pleasant Grove, Provo, and other points, while Brn. Harris and Pender will labor in Southern Utah.

And now, Mr. Editor, let me say that it surprises as well as amuses me to see how readily some of the brethren traveling through here, taking in the sights for a few hours or days, take in the situation, and how ready they are to give advice to the laborers in this field as to their manner of procedure. Now brethren, please do not hamper us with instructions. We are as much interested in the work as any one can be, and really like to see it advanced; but, with all respect for your opinions, we must study the situation and needs of the field for ourselves, and act in accordance with our own judgment and the directions of the Spirit. Perhaps General Conference will take notice and appoint you to this field some day. You will then have a chance to find out how little you knew about

I would like to say that I have in my possession the manuscript for a tract in the Swedish language; contents, Faith, Repentance, Baptism, the Mode, Object, and Subjects of Baptism, the Laying on of Hands, the Gifts and Fruits of the Spirit, and the differences between us and the Utah faith briefly stated. The tract is "short and clearly stated" according to the revelation of last spring, only containing eight pages. I think I could get it printed here very reasonably. Who are interested in this matter?

As regards Sandhedens Banner (please leave out the apostrophe, for it does not belong there): my understanding of the conference resolution regarding it was that the paper should be published, and I made preparations accordingly, and could have issued the first number in August. The business manager would not print it then, but thought best to wait until the Board of Publication could meet, and in the meantime call for subscribers, with promise that the paper would appear so soon as a sufficient number of subscribers could be obtained. I did not approve of his plan but was willing for him to try it. The result so far is four subscribers. People are often very slow in subscribing to something that does not exist, and who would blame them? The paper will not be self-sustaining to start with. I so stated to the conference, and with this in mind the vote to publish was carried.

In order to make a success of our work among the Scandinavians (or any other class for that matter) some literature should be had and those of our missionaries who speak the language be appointed specially to labor among them. We are slow in reaching that point, but I hope that we are not far from it. Following this plan others have been successful, why not we?

The Banner is very much needed in Norway and Denmark; and when it is a reality I believe that the Scandinavian Saints and others will come to its support. I believe an eight or twelve-page paper published twice a month, at seventy-five cents, would be more satisfactory. In bonds, SPRINGERTON, Illinois, Sept. 10. Editors Herald:-We are still working and trying to infuse the people with the idea that the latter-day work is divine. Just how much progress we have made along this line we will not undertake to tell. However we are having good audiences (so far as the size is concerned) and fair liberty in presenting the word, which is always encouraging to the heart of the missionary. We find many things in this world which seem to interest the people more than the gospel and lead them away from Christ. Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God seems to be the chief characteristic of the majority of mankind. The spirit of deep sleep having been poured out, it takes a great deal of work and forbearance to awaken the people from this dark, slumbering condition. The Lord says, There is a great work to be done by mine elders. And as we know that the mission of the church is divine, we feel encouraged to press on, knowing that the promises of the Lord will be realized by his faithful ones in this dispensation.

Through much prayer, observation, and study I have been wonderfully blessed and confirmed in this "marvelous work and a wonder."

The attempt to murder President McKinley is another evidence that we are living in perilous times. The Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants 45:4, Among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God, and die. And there shall be earthquakes, also, in divers places, and many desolations; yet men will harden their hearts against me, and they will take up the sword one against another, and they will kill one another. Truly the mercy of the Lord is manifested in his intention to gather his people out from among the wicked as we have it expressed in his revelations to the church. The organization of two stakes is a step towards the accomplishment of this work.

Yours in full confidence of the gathering, the building of the temple at Independence, Missouri, and the redemption of Zion, DERBY, Indiana, Sept. 7.

Editors Herald:—It has been twenty-eight years this fall since the first gospel sermon was preached in this county by I. P. Baggerly, at what was known as the Gleasson schoolhouse, about eight miles from here. Six were baptized at the first visit, and afterward others, until a good branch was built up. Several of its members have passed over to the other shore, and several others have moved to the state of Missouri, and several to this place. Among them is Bro. Robt. Eyres, the first one baptized in this county, now eighty years old, and the only one living of the first six.

Shortly after that Bro. C. Scott came to Perry county, and he branched out and came into this section of the country and a branch was organized; but it met with like fate as the other branch and became disorganized. After several years Bro. V. D. Baggerly came and did a good work, and several united with the church. Then Bro. V. D. was taken away and the branch became almost dead, spiritually. Some became very cold and unconcerned, and we had no meetings for a long time. Bro. Briggs came and preached a few sermons and baptized two, then Bro. George Jenkins came a time or two, but seemingly without much result. We had no meetings whatever for a long time until about the middle of last March Bro. M. R. Scott came and held a few meetings and awakened quite an interest, and left a promise to come again. In about four weeks he and Bro. W. C. Marshall, of Wirt, Indiana, came again, and since that time he has been coming once a month. And as a result he baptized thirteen. Eight of them are heads of families, and several more are very near the kingdom. Saints are much encouraged, and the Spirit of the Lord seems to be at work in this neighborhood again. But Bro. M. R. is a power against evil practices. He will be here again on Saturday night before the fourth Sunday in September, and stay until after the fifth Sunday. We also hope Bro. G. A. Smith and others will come with him.

Bro. George Jenkins began holding some meetings with the people at a place called Millstone, about twelve miles southwest from here, about two weeks ago, and baptized five. Thus the good work goes on. At other places they are wanting the elders to come.

Yours in the faith,

S. C. GRUVER.

GLENCOE, Ont., Sept. 10. Editors Herald:-Since my last communication, which was sometime in June, Bro. Alvin Knisley and I have been engaged in tent work in the Chatham district. We began at Forest, which is five miles from Lake Huron, not far from its southern extremity. We held forth every evening through the week except Saturday and at 3 and 8 p. m. on Sunday. The writer also preached out in the country in a private house every Sunday morning. Bro Knisley rendered valuable assistance, sold many books, and took several subscriptions for church papers; but the burden of the preaching fell on me. However, he sometimes talked ten or fifteen minutes in the opening of the services. He is a sincere, humble boy, the most prayerful colaborer I ever had.

Eight sermons a week are no easier on me than ten and no harder than two. Our ministers do not complain as much over preaching more sermons than there are days in the week than a clergyman of a so-called orthodox church does over his two Sunday services. Preaching is some like manual labor. One day's work is more liable to cause fatigue and blistered hands than a dozen. The more I do, the better I feel in spirit, and that of course helps the body.

We held thirty-nine services at Forest and baptized two, Mr. Thomas C. Jackson and Miss Gardetta Benner, both of whom will, we believe, keep their covenant. The former gives promise of especial usefulness. He has been a close Bible student for several years and now feels sure he is in "the strait and narrow way."

We have pitched the tent and are now busy at this place. It is a very pious, and of course prejudiced, town. We cannot as yet divine what we will accomplish. We are the guests of Elder Levi Annett who is very anxious about his fellow citizens and is hopeful even against hope.

My work in Canada has not been hindered by ill health as much as in California. Have not been sick a single day, but have overworked myself several times, and then rested in the harness. Have had some trying, and some very pleasant, experiences. Here as elsewhere we have to heed the maxim, "In gathering roses look out for the thorns." As I grow in years and experience I can more clearly discern the hand of God in all the events of my life.

Praying that all who have named the name of Christ may "depart from all iniquity," I am, Yours in hope of eternal life,

ALMA C. BARMORE,

FALL RIVER, Mass., Sept. 11.

Editors Herald:—Tent work has occupied some of my time since the opening of the season for this kind of work. I think our work here will prove successful, as a good interest has been maintained from our first service to the close. When taking down the tent yesterday we were assured we would be missed. The future will tell the story as to who will receive the message and let it regulate their

In some parts of this district the prejudice is so pronounced and rabid that no place could be found where the tent might be erected. This especially in the regions round about Plymouth and its famous rock. The beautiful hymn "Puritan" does not now (if it ever did) voice the sentiments of many of those who live nearest to the place from where this song borrows its inspiration. But sentiment and not fact is what largely prevails in this "guilded age." There is a greater unity among the people there than one usually finds; but it is not at all in our favor. They are determined not to hear us, not even to defend ourselves against the tirade of abuse which has no bearing upon our position whatever. They are united to get us out of their sight just as soon as they possibly can. And yet they sing, liberty, freedom, and human brotherhood with such holy fervor (?). One who did not know the predominating spirit would think there was not an enemy of the truth among them. But I "wot" in ignorance they act thus.

In company with Bro. C. H. Rich we nushed our wheels through the deep sand during the summer heat seeking one little spot about 20x40 to put up our "canvas," with hundreds of acres of land lying idle. I think I can truthfully say we traveled hundreds of miles without success. I reduced my weight about fifteen pounds in two weeks; but that did not militate in our favor. These are a few of the statements made to us: No. I guess this place is not what you want. There is a lot about three miles from here where you could get more people out to hear. You had better go and see the Rev. -The Rev. would say, Well I think you had better see the senior deacon. The senior deacon would say, What do you want here? We have the gospel. You would disturb our unity. If you put up your tent you would get no one out but disgruntled people, etc.

We got so used to this that we would just prognosticate what our success (?) would be. This is, of course, the common lot of ye elders many times.

How different here in Fall River where perhaps nine tenths of the population are of foreign birth. I was given the choice of the best position to place the tent, by the first man I asked, where the land is worth almost as much per foot as the place where room was denied us is worth per rod.

We were not idle where we could not preach, but went from house to house presenting tracts and talking on gospel themes, and thus made a few friends and perhaps caused some to read and think for themselves.

We started our tent to Attleboro, Massachusetts, last night, and expect to put in about two weeks of work there, and that will finish our tent work for this season. Opportunities for preaching through fall and winter have been opened through tent work, and we are hopeful of reaching the people this way.

This is a day for work—a day for us to arouse every faculty of the soul into action for the Master; the hastening day of God, and also of Satan. The young men of the church will be called into active service as they utilize the advantages provided for them in the church. The army of the Lord is to be made strong and great through this recruiting power. Oh, young men of the church, awake to your possibilities and power of usefulness in the great work of God! Let not the love of the world, the love of dress, and foolish pride dwarf your spiritual manhood! Let not the finger of scorn ever make cowards of you. Be loval to God and this great latterday work; but through humility of life, much prayer, the careful study of the works of the church alone can come your success as members of the household of God.

The times are pregnant with evil and danger. Anarchy and oppression will bring such a state of affairs as the world has never known. Secret societies and combinations will work havoc and great destruction in the world. Saints, do not join hands with this power, for it is not of God. In the gospel is all the provision the Saints need. If the law of God relating to tithes, offerings, and consecration are appreciated and obeyed by the whole church, Zion will be redeemed-a place of safety and refuge prepared for God's people, and that God-given principle of equality be established. Let us live within hearing distance of the Lord, so that the cry to come out of Babylon may be heard by us.

Many of our young people here in the East are certainly trying to live their religion and are proving their faith by their works. I am made proud in behelding the growth of our Boston branch and its willingness to respond to the demands of God and the needs of the church. Many of our future missionaries, able men, will be taken from our ranks here, for they are preparing for this work. May our Father bless them and keep them from the many hindering forces in and without the church.

Bro. Dr. Gilbert has spread his hospitable table with good things for us here and made us feel welcome. He has also preached several times in the tent with old-time zest and forcefulness, and used his influence in our favor. Bro. Rich is one of our promising young missionaries with a life of usefulness before him. There are many others who will soon be in the harness. Bro. M. H. Bond has also worked in preaching for us here. I hope the account given of the Boston branch will not reflect upon any others in the district. There are noble souls in all our Eastern branches; yet there are troubles existing which need wise handling. Nothing short of apostolic generalship will ever set them right. And I think when the missionary in charge gets on the ground he will not score me very severely for mentioning this fact. I think the district authorities will be willing to be directed in the best course to adopt for the straightening out and clearing up of many existing troubles. Come, Bro. Kelley, and let us get to work.

Your brother in the faith,

R Bullard

RAYMOND, Idaho, Sept. 9.

Editors Herald:-On Friday, July 19, we left the Lost river country, started across the desert, and drove thirty eight miles without water for our horses. Arriving at the home of Bro. Hyrum Grimmett, Moreland, Idaho, at three o'clock p. m., we were kindly cared for and the next day busied ourselves in visiting and notifying the Saints and others that religious services would be held at Moreland Saturday night, but none came to hear except Bro. Grimmett and daughter. However, on the next day we held Saints' meeting at Bro. Grimmett's house, confirming his daughter Francelle who was baptized the same day. At night Bro. S. D. Condit preached in the Latter Day Saint meetinghouse to a small congregation.

We have visited the Saints in the vicinity of Blackfoot and Iona and preached at both places in private houses. One was baptized at Blackfoot, Bro. S. D. Condit officiating. We visited as many of the Saints in the Snake river valley as time would permit, doing what we could for their spiritual welfare. They k ndly ministered to our bodily comfort, and also assisted us financially. I would like to mention by name each dear Saint and friend who so kindly cared for us, but space forbids.

On Monday, July 29, I parted company with Elder S. D. Condit. He went to continue the work in the Snake river country and I to visit the southeastern part of Idaho. I stopped at Soda Springs for a few days, visiting among the Saints, trying to strengthen them in the true faith. Preached once in the Latter Day Saint meeting-house to a fairsized audience. Also drove over into the Little Blackfoot valley where a few isolated Saints live and did what I could to encourage and strengthen them in the faith; but on account of it being hay harvest I did no preaching there. On the fifth of August I left Soda Springs and drove to Thomas Fork valley, a distance of fifty miles, where I remained until the 15th with my family, doing some necessary work at home, visiting among Saints and friends and trying to do something for the Master's cause.

I made an effort to do some preaching among the Mormon people but none came to hear. However, I am not discouraged, for there are in this valley some who believe, and I believe they will ere long unite with us.

On the 15th I started for Provo, Utah, to attend the reunion and conference to be held there beginning the 24th of August, visiting various places on the way, preaching in Logan, Ogden, and Sandy. The reunion was a success and was much enjoyed by all present. There were six missionaries in attendance and several local ministers, so the reunion was well supplied with speakers. But our enjoyment of the reunion was saddened to some extent by the death of little June Stephens, the seven-year-old daughter of Bro. and Sr. Stephens who live at Provo. Elder D. W. Wight preached the funeral sermon. May the blessed Master comfort the bereaved ones!

So far this year I have traveled with horses and buggy or spring wagon, finding it cheaper than traveling by rail, and it also enables me to reach places situated away from the railroad that I otherwise could not reach. Have traveled nearly seventeen hundred miles and visited many of the isolated Saints, some of whom had not seen a representative of the Reorganized Church for many years.

The outlook for the work in Idaho is better than for many years, and I feel like doing all in my power to carry the gospel message to all who desire to know the truth.

May God bless his Saints in all the world, is the prayer of your brother and colaborer in the cause of Christ!

A. J. LAYLAND.

FULTON, Ky., September 1.

Editors Herald:—Perhaps some would be glad to hear from the Fulton Saints. We have no branch organization at this place as this is a comparatively new place, the work being first introduced here two years ago by C. L. Snow, who baptized the writer and two others. Since that time seven more have been added to our number. Prejudice is very strong. It is impossible to get a church-house or schoolhouse for meeting, so we are obliged to meet at private houses. However, we have organized a Sunday school with twelve scholars enrolled. We meet at the house of the writer for prayer-meeting Saturday nights.

We attended the district conference held with the Eagle creek branch, some sixty miles southeast of Fulton. We enjoyed it very much as we do not often have the pleasure of meeting with the Saints. There we met all of our missionaries, also missionary in charge, I. N. Roberts, who was chosen to preside at our conference. Bro. Roberts is an able speaker. He was not long in gaining the good will and confidence of all present. He exhibits a type of character worthy of imitation, in that he is "no respecter of persons." We feel that he is the right man in the right place. Before leaving we obtained the promise of Bro. Roberts that he would visit our neighborhood and hold a week's meeting. The Methodist people refused to let us build an arbor on the church ground belonging to them. Their preacher advised them not to let us have it. However, we obtained a beautiful grove near by where we built us an arbor.

Bro. Roberts arrived here August 18, and as the weather was threatening the meetings were held at my house the first two evenings. The third night there were seven outsiders present; the next night eleven. After that there were too many to count.

Brn. Snow and Smith arrived the third evening of our meeting which was a glad surprise to us indeed. Bro. Snow remained but two days, however, as he had to go back to be ready to meet some Utah elders in a debate to begin the week following. The debate is to be held somewhere in Trigg county, Kentucky. W. R. Smith remained until the close of our meeting, greatly assisting Bro. Roberts in the services. There were no baptisms, though several are greatly interested and are investigating. Three or four expressed themselves as being convinced that this is the truth, but why they do not accept it is the mystery.

Our meeting closed with an increasing crowd, reaching something near two hundred. We realize that much prejudice has been removed, for which we are very thankful. We feel to thank the Eagle creek and Oakland Saints for their presence and valuable assistance in song service. Come again, dear Saints, as this was quite a treat.

Bro. Roberts thinks he will be able to meet with us again sometime in October and continue the effort a few days longer. We trust that much good may be accomplished and that those who are investigating will make up their minds and there will soon be a great ingathering at this place.

Your brother in Christ,
J. R. McCLAIN.

HAMLET, Ky., September 10.

Editors Herald:—At the time of my last communication I was at this place experiencing threats of destruction from parties we knew not of; but we are still in the land of the living and here again. Bro. I. N. White is also here, engaged in debate with Rev. Clark Braden. Bro. White is sick and in bed a good part of the time, but he has been able to be at the place of discussion every time, and we trust that his health will continue to grow better.

The first proposition, "Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God?" is now a thing of the past, and it is generally admitted by all outsiders, and even some of the Christian faith, that Braden made a complete failure; and while he has disgusted nearly all with his trickery, Bro. White has won their favor and sympathy.

On Saturday evening after Braden had closed his last speech he made the announcement that he would preach at eleven a.m. and three p.m., Sunday. Bro. White arose and asked for half the time. It was left to a vote, and it went in Bro. White's favor nearly three to one. Bro. White preached at eleven a.m., to a large, attentive audience and at the close many expressed themselves as never hearing the like before. They were completely captivated by his logic, reason, and manly appearance in the stand.

The second proposition is on the "Christian faith." Bro. White did exceedingly well in his reply to the opening and we hope that God will continue to bless him with health and strength to enable him to go through with it.

There are only two families of Saints here, and they have had the scorn to face for quite a while by themselves, but we hope that the time is near at hand when others will enter the fold and assist in holding up the banner of Prince Emmanuel that it may not be trailed in the dust.

Last week I was in Trigg county, assisting Bro. C. L. Snow in a discussion with the Utah people. They have several members there, but I think they will have less ere long. Bro. Snow acquitted himself nobly in the debate, showing the differences between them and us, making it so plain that even the little boys could see their weakness. We left with many invitations to come again and preach for them. I think some of them will be baptized ere long. There are some good, honest-hearted people among them, and they are anxious to know the truth.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am, Your colaborer.

P. S. Sept. 12.—The White and Braden debate is now a thing of the past, with a glorious victory for the truth, as great as I ever saw in my life, although Bro. White was hardly able to be on his feet. W. R. S.

PURYEAR, Tenn., Sept. 10.

Dear Herald:-Since writing you some time ago I have been very busy doing what I could to advance the cause we love so well. I have held meetings here for one week, and did much good to the Saints and outsiders. From here I went to Fulton, Kentucky, to hold a meeting under an arbor. The continued wet weather hindered much at first. After that people came out pretty well. Brn. Snow and W. R. Smith came there. Brother Smith staid with me the rest of the week while Bro. C. L. Snow went to the Davis chapel grounds to complete arrangements for the White-Braden debate that was on foot. Our meetings increased in attendance and interest to the close. Bro. Smith left to join Bro. Snow and the writer went to Fulton to visit one day with some Saints there and then come on here for the first Sunday in September to preach and baptize some.

Before leaving Fulton I was taken with cramps in my stomach. I suffered the severest pain I ever did in my life. Got no permanent relief for twenty-four hours. Bro. and Sr. Myers did all they could for me, for which I feel very thankful. By an extra effort and the assistance of Bro. Myers, I went to the depot and took train Saturday morning for this place. I was so weak that had I been back to the house I hould have staid there. I arrived at Hollow Book Junction at seven o'clock in the worning feeling sick and faint. I could get buother to eat there but a few raw peach = I swallowed only the juice, which seemed to strengthen me for a little while. At ten o'clock my train came. A goodly number of people got off there to take another train. They had their lunch boxes with them, and I at first thought of asking for a bite, but did not. Getting on my train, I found I was alone. Sitting down I prayed to the Father for strength for the rest of my journey. I then arose and went and got a drink of water. As I walked down the aisle I spied a nice biscuit of bread and the leg of a chicken lying on the floor under the edge of the seat. I said aloud, Thank God! Then I picked it up and asked the Father to bless it, and ate it with relish. This gave me much strength and I got through, but very weak. Sunday I preached, baptized, confirmed, and did other duties. Monday I was called to Davis chapel to look after Braden who was to be there and lecture against us before White could get there. I went and met the old fighter of the Saints. About the second lecture he gave, the people began to show signs of disgust. Of all the reading (?) of our books you ever heard of. Braden did it. No one could reply, but I gave him some shots when he was through that weakened him in the eyes of the people. He yelled out that if I. N. White came there and abused him about his poor dead wife he would kill him and send him to hell where he belonged. Many other things occurred of like character that I will not mention.

Bro. White came on Wednesday evening, feeling worn out and sick, with some fever. Thursday morning we met, when the debate begun as had been announced. But lo and behold! "I. Clark Braden," had to be forced into measures, so the debate did not begin until Friday morning. Then the little weakly man in body stood up and led off in the debate, "Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God." The change that came over that crowd at the first speech was plain enough to convince me that Braden was in the hole. He followed his old tactics, trying to lead the affirmative off the subject; but Bro. White attended strictly to his work, and every speech he made it was good to see how the people came over to our side.

I had to leave on Saturday at noon to come and preach the funeral of our dear Bro. P. B. Seaton, who died July 13, before I arrived in my mission. There was a large crowd at the funeral, the number being estimated at several hundred. In the afternoon we went to the water and buried some more in Christ.

Brn. Snow and Smith were having a tilt with the Utah elders, preaching sermon about, Bro. Snow doing the speaking. The result was the breaking up of their church—thank the Lord. I left the brethren with Bro. White, and I expect to hear by tomorrow of a glorious victory for the truth.

I am holding forth here this week. More are near the kingdom My health is now good, for which I thank God. We in the South are moving onward slowly but surely.

Brethren of the ministry will please report to me promptly by October 1, at Swan, Kentucky, in care of James Adair.

Yours in faith, I. N. ROBERTS.

CHILTON, Texas.

Editors Herald:—This conference year I have preached in six counties at ten places, nine in my own district, and as a rule have had good turnouts and interest. I took a trip out to San Antonio in July. Visited most all the Saints in and around the city. This was the first time I visited San Antonio. Was much pleased with the visit and hope to visit the Saints there again. It is a hard matter for a man to walk straight far in San Antonio on account of the crooked streets. Some are very crooked and narrow. Notwithstanding this, San Antonio is a fine city, some of the finest scenery I ever beheld, especially the San Pedro park. The Saints there are trying very hard to build a house to worship in.

I am now at Chilton in Falls county; aim to hold some meetings here. This is a new place, I am to go to Grimes county next Friday to hold a series of meetings. That is a new place also. Much interest was manifested when I was there last, which was about a month ago. I never felt better in spirit and body than now.

The editorial in last HERALD upon the Word of Wisdom is the best I ever read. It just suits my ideas about it. I have seen harm done by unwise talk about the Word of Wisdom. I believe in consistency, all around. I would that every member in the church did observe the Word of Wisdom in its entirety, and keep every commandment, then we would not have hobbies to ride.

I am yours in the one faith and in the conflict until the end,

E. W. NUNLEY.

CONIFER, Colorado, Sept. 10.

Editors Herald:—I have not been idle since the last General Conference. On May 12 I began mission work, going first to Denver, spending one Sunday there, preaching one sermon, and administered to one.

On the 13th I went to Conifer, and on the 19th held services. Preached once and blessed two children.

On the 22d I left Conifer for Como, where I found Bro. Chambers, a young man I had baptized some years ago at Coal Creek. I found him firm in the faith. He is married and has two children. I held two preaching services at the schoolhouse and blessed his two children. I was very kindly received by Bro. Chambers and wife.

On the 25th I left Como for Buena Vista. There I found Bro. and Sr. Burbridge, whom I had baptized some five years ago. They were very much pleased to see me, as they had not seen an elder of the church since they had been baptiz d. But they have been kept in the faith of the gospel by reading the HERALD and Ensign. How can the Latter Day Saints live without those grand church papers I fail to see, for they contain so much spiritual food. I spent about three weeks in Buena Vista, preaching in the Seventh Day Advent church, and I believe that good was done and one soul convinced that we had the truth according to the Bible. I met two of the elders from the Utah church who had been holding some meetings in the same place and in the same church. So I was requested by some of the people to tell the aifferences between the two churches. I announced that on Monday night I would. We had a good turnout, and we had good liberty in presenting the truth. The two elders had nothing to say, and would not meet the issue or discuss the differences between us. But they left the city for some other parts.

On June 7 I moved on to Rifle, where I meet the family of Bro. Jackson Taylor, where I staid for four days and rented a hall for three nights, paying one dollar per night. I preached three discourses, but the people were too busy to come. Only a few came so I thought it best to move on towards the Grand Junction country. On the 11th I arrived there, and was met by Bro. and Sr. Tomlinson's son and daughter, Robbie and Edna. With horse and buggy they took me to their home, about ten miles towards Fruita, where I was very comfortably domiciled until about the 26th. Held quite a num ber of preaching services, and on the 21st baptized three and confirmed them, and blessed two children and administered the sacrament to the members of the church, and had a good prayer meeting.

On June 24 I was joined by my worthy colaborer, James M. Stubbart, of Lamoni, who had been out to Utah on business and to see his mother. We held two more services in the North Star schoolhouse. Bro. Stubbart did the preaching. We had a pretty good audience, and the people were well pleased. On the 27th we in company with Bro. W. A. Park and Sr. Snooks went to Delta, about fifty miles, by wagon, to attend a monthly meeting of the Saints of the Fairview branch. We had a grand and happy meeting with those Saints that we had not seen for six years. We had one meeting that will long be remembered by the Saints. We staid in and around about Delta for six weeks, holding meeting whenever we could, and on July 2 bantized three. So the work is moving slowly on in Colorado. We found the people too busy to attend week night meeting, so we could only hold meetings on Sundays. I canvassed the country for forty miles around and made some friends to the cause.

On August 5 I left Delta for this place. Conifer, leaving my colaborer to hold forth and to keep the work moving until my return, which will be sometime in October, if all goes well, when I expect to join Bro. Stubbart for a winter's campaign in the western part of this great state. On the 6th of August I arrived home to spend a few days with loved ones, and also to visit with my brother Henry and his wife and daughter from Independence who came out to make us a visit. And we enjoyed ourselves. Bro. Henry did some good preaching while he was here, and on the 11th I baptized two dear children of Sister Elliot's, that have been attending the Sunday school for some time. May the Lord bless the children is my prayer. On the 20th I left home for the city of Denver, and on the 21st attended prayer meeting with the Saints in Denver. On Thursday, the 22d, went from Denver to Colorado Springs to attend the district conference and the Sunday school association. We had a grand good time, and one was baptized.

On the 27th I returned to Denver and spent a few days in visiting some of the Saints in the city. On Sunday, September 1, preached once and attended prayer and sacrament meeting, which was very good, indeed. The Saints all felt well, and went home rejoicing.

So Zion's cause is moving along in this mission, and I believe a good work will be done this conference year.

I ever pray for the prosperity of the work in all the world.

JAMES KEMP.

WAYNE, W. Va., September 10. Editors Herald:-The West Virginia district conference convened here on August 31, attendance of priesthood fair. We had Brn. V. M. Goodrich and J. F. McDonald from the Ohio district with us. They did some good preaching and left September 2 for their mission field. The interest manifested was such that Brn. H. R. Harder and W. R. Odell and the writer continued the meetings till the present. Eight have been baptized and we are expecting more to be soon. The best people of the country are interested. Brn. Harder and Odell will go from here to Wood, Wirt, and Ritchie counties, and the writer to Fayette and Summers counties.

Your brother for the restored gospel,

G. H. GODBEY.

HOLMESVILLE, Minn., September 5.

Editors Herald:—I have been in the church nearly two years, and so far I am glad for the step taken. God is merciful, hearing our prayers and revealing things to us. We have living apostles and prophets. He is the living King of heaven and the earth. If we walk uprightly before him we can always depend upon great blessings.

I see by the HERALD Sandheden's Banner is going to be published, and think it would be well for all the Scandinavians to subscribe, and then send one to some of the neighbors. By doing this it may help the work along, and good may come out of it.

How free and happy we feel in the latterday work! Let us work while the day lasts. Yours for Zion's upbuilding,

O. A. ERICKSON.

BELDING, Mich., Sept. 7.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Ellis and I are here with the tent, battling for the right. Prospects are good for a good work. Large crowds attending nightly. Last Sunday night Bro. Ellis preached to two hundred in the tent and fully one hundred outside standing around the tent.

We left Coral after holding thirty preaching services. Meetings there were good, and we left with a good interest. Baptized three and several more are very near the kingdom. One man who owns a store with a hall above said to us as we started away: "Well, you can have my hall whenever you want it; and if that will not do you can have the store room down stairs."

And so the good work moves along.

Your brother in the one faith,

CHARLES E. IRWIN.

ACCEPTANCE OF THE GOSPEL.

Adieu to honor, wealth, and fame, And every worldly pleasure, I'll bid farewell to my good name For to obey my Savior.

I covet not that high esteem,
To which I did aspire;
My Savior's love shall be my theme,
I care for nothing higher.

Yes, if I could advance his praise, By works of my performing; Among the Saints of latter days I would be called a Mormon.

Although they commonly are called,
A poor, deluded people,
Their prophets, priests, and teachers all,
Offscouring of the rabble;

Yet were not all the Saints of old, Derided by opposers Of light and truth, which did unfold, From Adam down to Moses?

Yes, all the holy prophets were, With Christ and his apostles, Accounted as these Mormons are, False prophets and impostors.

But truth is strong and will prevail, For it proceeds from heaven; It always did and always will, By inspiration given.

And when it does their systems rule, Proud men become uneasy; They call the Master, Beelzebub, And all his servants crazy.

Thus all in every age who live, Godly in Christ their Savior, Such base calumny shall receive From those they cannot favor;

Nor think as they would have them think, Nor do as they are doing, But blunder with them on the brink, Of everlasting ruin.

Men still love darkness more than light, Because their deeds are evil; And would declare that wrong is right, Though it were from the Devil.

That midnight, the old carnal mind, Remains as dark as ever; And all the blind that lead the blind, Fall in the ditch together.

Oh! how they earnestly contend,
And still sink in the mire,
Their broken systems cannot mend,
Till purified by fire.—Selected.

"The last glad soun of daytine dies,
Fades from the sea the left d light,
And I go down into the nig.
While not a star shines from the sa.
My boat is trembling from its leap
Into the dark. The sea makes moan.
Can it be safe to fall asleep
In this strange darkness and alone?
But I am tired of life's long quest,
So close my eyes and take my rest,
And leave my Afterward with God."

Dear Sisters:—I do believe that there are quite a number among us yet who have mistaken views regarding the work of the Daughters of Zion, and while I wait for an abler pen than mine to give a clear idea of the real spirit and object of this organization, perhaps the few thoughts I may offer will aid in that direction.

Some months ago Sr. B. C. Smith gave through our column in the Ensign an outline of the proceedings at one of our regular monthly meetings, and perhaps something along that line might not be amiss here.

You will see by consulting program as published in HERALD each month for Daughters of Zion meetings, that the meeting is opened by singing, prayer, and scriptural reading, after which the "lesson" or selected reading is read and discussed. It is desired that every one present should feel perfectly free to take part in this discussion, offering objections to any point or points, relating any experience she may have had along the line of the subject under discussion, or aiding in any way to get at the truth. Here the sister who has raised her family may render valuable service by giving bits of advice or information about her method of training her children. True, she may think as one mother expressed herself in meeting: never used any method in training my children. I just taught them to do right, and prayed God to take care of them." That is just the point we want; viz., how she taught them to do right. Perhaps she unconsciously understood just the treatment which would be best for her own children, but there are mothers who seem to lack that intuition. and they are the ones who will be benefited by hearing how others have dons. You know, sisters, we are not all alike by any means; one feels weak, where another can go forward with perfect confidence: so if you are one of those whose children are all grown up, and you feel that it is useless for you to attend these meetings, just stop and think of that saying of Jesus: "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and go, for the sake of the good you may do by your presence, influence,

As regards the young mothers, I can hardly see how any one can question the benefit to be received by them at these meetings. They are not by any means supposed to absorb all they hear without question or comment; on the contrary, any suggestion they have to give, any question, will be received gladly, to be discussed by the sisters. In fact, our Daughters of Zion meetings might truthfully be called the mothers' (or sisters') council meeting. The priesthood has its council meeting, the various quorums have theirs, the branch officers meet and consult together, all that they may accomplish in the best possible way the work they have in hand. If this is necessary for the brethren, is it not so for us also? We are, in a large measure, intrusted with the training of those who in the future must fill these places of trust, and that they may be trained to do so in righteousness do we not need all the help we can get? Yes, verily, and thank God that he has been pleased to bless our organization with his divine favor, so that we do truly feel that it is one of the "helps" spoken of by Paul, by means of which we are to perfect ourselves in performing our duty.

Dear sisters, I feel to speak earnestly to you upon this subject, especially to those who are in small branches where such work must, of necessity, depend upon a few. If a sister feels willing to take it up, do not you hinder her by placing obstacles in the way, but prayerfully investigate the work, attend the meetings, even if you do not altogether approve of them, and perhaps you may be the very one to accomplish untold good, if your heart is really set to do the will of God.

Look back to your own childhood, and note the awful change in conditions then and now, how the temptations of the young are multiplied, piling obstacles in the way of parents who would bring up their children in the fear of the Lord. Oh sisters, think! What will be our feelings if we fail in our duty to those who are more precious than our own lives-fail to fit them to resist evil. and cling to the right, where only safety is to be found! Do we need help by prayer, by study, by counseling together? What mother is there who can face this responsibility without feeling her weakness!

The wise man says: "In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom," and surely that is what we need. I do not mean to imply in the least that one cannot raise her family without attending Daughters of Zion meetings. Our mothers managed it, and there is many a noble mother, isolated from all church privileges, and even from the companionship of the Saints, who has raised and will continue to raise her children acceptably to our heavenly Father, but where we are able to avail ourselves of these helps toward our advancement, I believe we are under condemnation if we do not do so.

These thoughts, dear sisters, are not given in a dictatorial spirit. I have spoken from a feeling of my own great need, and a desire to see others benefited as I have been, and not from a desire merely to bring others to see from my standpoint.

CLARA M. FRICK.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho.

Dear Home Column:-Seeing the inquiry of the California sister, Where are all the good writers? I suggest that we try to get a little better acquainted with our good writers, and editors, too. It might be that some of them are sick and need our assistance, or some of them may be getting old, or some may be crippled. When the notice appeared in the HERALD asking us to get a list of subscribers to the Ladies' Home Journal in behalf of Sr. M. Walker, many of the sisters, like myself, may have been hindered from assisting. But there are other ways in which we may assist.

I rejoice in the latter-day work, and can truly say that I have received line upon line since uniting with the Reorganization. I have often been healed and relieved of pain. At other times, when the pain would remain, I have felt the quickening power of the Spirit, and the scripture would be made plain to me, so that even while suffering I was made happy. I pray God to keep me from departing from the faith, remembering my Savior and his sufferings, that it was to establish the gospel plan of salvation, wherein the human race, through obedience to that plan, may inherit eternal life. That is what he toiled, suffered, and died for, that we through obedience to the gospel may become heirs of help us to press forward. May we all arise and put on the whole armor of righteousness. is the earnest wish of your sister, JANE HEATON.

THE BOOK OF MORMON IN THE LITERATURE OF THE WORLD.

The above is the subject of a paper written by Sr. Louise Palfrey and read at the General Convention last April This excellent article will appear in the Autumn Leaves for October, and is the introduction to a course of reading on American Archæology prepared by the same writer for the Religio-Literary Society. This course has been prepared after a careful examination of the best authors who have written upon this very interesting subject, and no pains nor labor has been spared to make it the best possible. We bespeak for this article and the entire course a careful reading by all Book of Mormon students and those interested in the subject of which it treats. J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Pres.

In addition to the fashion feature and practical dressmaking advice that has made the Delineator famous, the October number is full of good general reading, most tastefully illustrated under the immediate direction of the well-known artist, William Martin Johnson. Mr. Johnson's work is known to lovers of the beautiful, by reason of the Garfield edition of Ben Hur, as well as some other books of large sale. Mr. Johnson believes in illustrations that illustrate, rather than in pictures that only ornament a page. The whole October number of the Delineator is full of interest to men as well as to women.

AS ANNOUNCED last week, memorial services were held at the L. D. S. church in Lamoni on September 19, in harmony with the proclamation of President Roosevelt, to commemorate the death of President William Mc-Kinley. The services were in charge of John Smith, Stake president. Prayer by Elder H. A. Stebbins was followed by an address by President Joseph Smith. It was the third time he has been called to make an address on a similar occasion; namely, the death of an assassinated President. in 1865 at the death of Abraham Lincoln, in 1881 at the death of James A. Garfield, and again at the demise of President McKinley. The singing was by the Lamoni choir, and was excellent, they singing with much feeling, "Lead, Kindly Light," and "Nearer, My God, to Thee," together with another appropriate anthem. The feeling of sorrow and sympathy at the meeting was very marked, and all were touched by the solemnity of the occasion. It will long be remembered by those present.

THE formal opening of Graceland College occurred this morning. Program will be given next week.

EDITOR ABROAD.

One cannot always record his emo tions; but as the poet has it, "Life is real, life is earnest;" so we found it in the transition from the sunny south of California to the fogs of San Francisco, in the northern district.

In company with Bro. Joseph Luff we reached the metropolis of the state on August 13, attended the prayer service held at the house of Bro. John G. Saxe, 1911 Mission street, on the evening of Wednesday, the 14th, where we found a very earnest band of coworkers whose testimony was very cheering; albeit, many by whom we were greeted twelve years ago are fallen asleep with the fathers. A few remain to give stability to the work by their long and tried experience; while a host of new and younger men and women give strength to the forefront of the battle. The branch is in charge of Bro. Charles A. Parkin, who is ably seconded by Brn. Kaighin, Saxe, Price, George S. Lincoln, Balchen, Severy, Pressley, Anthony, and others; all earnestly contending for the faith once delivered.

Bro. Luff and the Editor found a home with Bro. J. A. and Sr. Mary Andrews Anthony, whose house has always had an elder's room in it. We found Bro. A. H. Smith and his secretary already installed as of the household. It was a merry group that surrounded the hospitable table; and for whom Sr. A. provided with unfaltering kindness and sisterly care. Her son George, and wife Nettie, and blooming baby Lovica, and the preachers made a notable group, which will not be forgotten by those who composed it. Bro. Anthony is an "old salt" from the seas of Maine, a ship carpenter, and has a fund of anecdote; is a socialist, without anarchistic thoughts or tendencies; as free of speech as men from Maine usually

The reunion did not convene until the 30th of August, which left some days to be occupied. Bro. Luff left the 14th for Oregon, to be present at the reunion at Bandon, to begin on the 6th, to reinforce Brn. A. M. Chase and Charles Crumley, missionaries of that field. And from the report of his thirteen sermons in the ten days, it may be adjudged he was not idle.

Brn. A. H. Smith, Leon Gould, and in different parts of the city, as invitation and opportunity offered, the Patriarch answering to the requests of several for the blessings within his province to confer.

On Sunday, the 18th, we spoke at Oakland in the Saints' chapel there on the corner of Sixteenth and Magnolia streets, to the few Saints and their friends who responded to the call: but we were reminded that not many cared for the word, though it was a stranger from a far country who came to present it. The service was held in the morning in charge of the local officer, Bro. F. B. Blair being absent to fill other appointment.

We lunched with Sr. Cobb, of Lamoni; and her two daughters, Srs. F. B. Blair and F. M. Smith, also of Lamoni; it was a family reunion, comforting and cheering. Returning to the city at evening, we filled the pulpit in the David Temple, on the corner of Folsom and Fourteenth, where we had an excellent congregation in charge of Bishop Parkin. We had a good degree of liberty, and was pleased to know that quite a number of the Utah people were of the number, including F. S. Richards, son of Franklin D. Richards, who was a member of the quorum of twelve, and assistant historian of the Utah Church at his death a few years ago. Mr. Richards' wife was with him. met them at Soda Springs, Idaho, several years ago, and was pleased to meet them again as they treated uscourteously at our former meeting with them.

The early days of the ensuing week were too cold and damp to be out-much, for us "tenderfeet," so we remained indoors, venturing out a little in the afternoons. The Editor was reminded of the futility of human hopes, by a recurring attack of neuralgia in a modified degree, of which he was happily freed sufficiently to visit Santa Rosa, the home of Elder Thomas Daley, on the 25th, and preach to a very excellent and attentive audience in the Christian church on Fifth street, now controlled by the branch there. Bro. Parks was in charge; and Bro. Parker led the choir.

We could only occupy at the morning service, and went up by boat to Tiburon, thence by rail to Santa Rosa the Editor did what they could to answer to the social calls of the Saints time on Sunday a.m. We were cared for by Sr. Tupper, who with her husband not a member, made us very wel-

We found Bro. Daley slowly recovering from a severe sickness, caused by undue exposure in his last mission. We ministered to him, we were pleased to believe with beneficial results. At all events he was with us at the reunion in increasing health and renewing strength, bearing a staunch testimony to the goodness of God. He was accompanied by his wife, Emma, the daughter of Bro. James Caffall.

We returned to the city in time for the evening service, in which we were again greeted by a splendid audience. The Saints of San Francisco are entitled to much credit for the splendid manner in which they are striving to maintain the cause. Beset with difficulties as the work in all large cities is, the efforts in San Francisco are met with additional obstacles; from the fact that since 1846 the city has known the presence of nearly every phase of development in so-called Mormonism; and some of these have been not to the credit of its professors. The result was inevitable. The successors to the false had need to meet the obloquy and stain upon the truth left by the false, and by the slow processes for which the truth is noted, dispel the too lasting impressions left upon the public mind by the advocates of error, and the practices of those who professed better things.

Besides this; San Francisco is the entrepot of the west for everything new under the sun, and theories of politics, religion, and social and domestic economics are as prevalent as the air and the climate, and some of them are as equally charged with mysticism and mental fogs, as are the atmosphere and climate at seasons loaded with the coldness and damps of fogs and winds from the ocean.

The California coast is not the "Garden of the gods" for celestial pleasures, but it is, or appears to be, one huge pleasure ground for humanity of all classes. Many seek the country and the climate in search for health and prolongation of mortality's lease of life. Too many find not health but death; seeking too late the rest and the balm of ideal existence in the land of sunshine and flowers.

Under these multiplied untoward conditions, the little band in the city are fighting the good fight, and are winning "souls for their hire."

On the morning of August 30. Brn. A. H. Smith, Leon Gould, Joseph Luff, and the Editor, under the guidance of Bro. J. A. Anthony, made their way to Bushrod Park, on the Oakland side of the Bay of San Francisco, where the local camp of Israel was temporarily to be pitched. On ar-assigned to one canvas house and Bro. Luff and the Editor to another. We moved in and were "at home."

From enforced conditions the result of the "strike," the "big tent" had not arrived in time to be erected on Thursday; and so we found a corps of brethren under the management of Brn. F. B. Blair, John Striker, Charles Day, J. H. Saxe and others, engaged in "putting up the tent." This was in time accomplished, after getting the top up once and stakes driven to find that the said top was upside down, or inside out, requiring it to be lowered, turned right side out and half way round; but it was soon up, clean straw strewn on its floor space, platform for speakers, the organ and the choir in place, and seats for the audience to be, all arranged with excellent judgment and in good order.

Some thirty odd tents were up for temporary dwelling places, in the midst of which the two tents for the North and Central districts were placed as the kitchen and dining room of the Saints during their stay.

In the afternoon an organization was effected, Elders Luff and Blair were put in charge, and the reunion of the Northern and Central California districts was on.

The Editor was chosen to open the series of meetings at the evening service, which was well attended. The opening was auspicious. Whether the effort we made at the outset was conducive to that effect we cannot say; we may hope, however, that the willingness shown in response to call had something to do with the readiness of others to respond when appointed to the stand.

By direction of the officers presiding the morning hour from 9:00 to 10:30 was devoted to prayer and testimony; from 10:30 to 12:00 m. was occupied by the Sunday school and Religio workers, who occupied with profit and we trust with pleasure. Smith, Luff, Burton, Keeler, and the Editor; of the younger, Blair, Phillips, E. A. Smith, and Gilbert. Of the older ones it is needless to say anything; of the younger, it is quite safe to write that they are looking for the laurels, and the older ones will need be content to grant them. come the power of presentation, the force of argument, the flow of scripture proof, save from the ministration of the Spirit of the Master whom they strive to serve?

The entire session was fraught with well-tempered enjoyment of the occarival Brn. A. H. Smith and Gould were sion. The wants of the inner, fleshly man were plainly but amply supplied. The weather, though cool to some, was on the whole enjoyable. It seems to the "man from the east" a little unseasonable for Californians clothed in heavy underclothing, with overcoats and furs on them to boast of the lovely climate, when said eastern brother was shivering with the chill of the fog and the damp of the morning by which the sun was hid. However, it has been an unusual season both east and west; and the man from the east concedes all that the consistent dweller on the Pacific coast may justly claim; but men live and do not suffer overmuch on the plains of the middle west from Minnesota to Tennessee. There are things in either section that might be bettered, possibly, but God having "made of one blood all the nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth; and appointed the bounds of their habitation," we shall strive not to worry because our habitation is not fixed in the land of the cactus and the sage; fertile and productive as it proves to be under the dominion of man in the magnitude of his energy and the magnificence of his pluck.

The closing days of the session were made sad and anxious ones by the news of the attempted assassination of President McKinley. heard but one sentiment expressed concerning this unwarranted and wanton act, that of tender pity and sympathy for the man so wounded in the midst of the people and his patient, loved, and suffering wife; and grief for the possible loss to the nation, of the statesman president. This grief was somewhat relieved at the close by the assuring news sent out by the attending physicians that the President would recover from his wound. Aside from this unfortunate affair there was scant reason for any one in attendance to go from the reunion dissatisfied. To all it was a season of enjoyment, to many a spiritual

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Ammon White writes from Independence, Missouri, ordering five copies of the Book of Mormon sent to as many different addresses in Kentucky, and says:

These orders were taken after the debate with Braden—held on the same ground on which the Davis Chapel had been burned and our people ordered out of the country. Papa I. N. White] is ill with congestion of the lungs, but is improving nicely.

President Joseph Smith writes from Dow City, Iowa, September 21:

The reunion is in full swing. Quite a number are on the ground: more coming. The weather is fine, the grounds in excellent order, and we have hope of good meetings.

Bro. Alvin Knisley writes from Wardsville, Ontario, September 10, concerning the work of himself and Bro. Barmore:

We came here yesterday. Had meeting last night here. Go this afternoon to Newbury to hold services. Bro Barmore is to meet with Longwood Saints next Sunday.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

We have received copies of the program of the Independence Stake Religio and Sunday School associations. Sessions were held at Holden, Missouri, September 19, 20.

We have a letter from Bro. Kelley, dated at Dublin, Ireland, September

6. It will appear next week.

The HERALD Office is represented at Dow City reunion by Joseph Smith, editor-in-chief; John Smith, business manager; and J. A. Gunsolley, bookkeeper. They are recuperating, and, incidentally, working hard. Bro. J. R. Lambert and wife and Bro. J. W. Wight and wife are also there.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NOTES.

The untiring labor of Brother Elvin and other friends of our college seems to be bearing fruit; and as the school year advances the prospect grows brighter.

The college is now in good running order, and the attendance is larger than at this time last year. Many of the students are high school graduates, and the whole student body ranks high in intelligence, energy, and earnest, religious devotion.

More of the Saints are beginning to see the great advantage of sending their young people to Graceland, where they can receive a broad, liberal education amid the most elevating and refining surroundings.

An excellent opportunity is now offered for the student at Graceland to specialize in any of the departments advertised, and many of them are taking advantage of this fact. Each member of the faculty is a carefully trained specialist in his department, and has been educated in the best schools with especial drill in the chosen subject. And more than that, a majority are earnest, faithful members of the church, sacrificing a large part of the salary they could get elsewhere in order to advance Graceland.

Contributions are still coming to the museum and we now have, among other things, a very rare and beautiful collection from the islands of the Pacific.

The library is filling up, also, and more shelf room must soon be provided.

Taken altogether the college seems to be blessed of God, and it is to be hoped that the time will soon come when all the Saints will realize what great privileges and opportunities Graceland offers to their children.

PRECIOUS PEARLS.-NO. 6.

GATHERED FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

BY WILLIAM HAWKINS.

When Nephi, the son of Nephi, saw this wickedness of his people, his heart was exceeding sorrowful: and he went out and bowed himself down upon the earth, and cried mightily to his God, in behalf of his people: yea, those who were about to be destroyed because of their faith in the traditions of their fathers. And behold, the voice of the Lord came unto him, saving, Lift up your head and be of good cheer, for behold, the time is at hand. and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world, to shew unto the world that I will fulfill all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets. Behold, I come unto my own to fulfill all things which I have made known unto the children of men, from the foundation of the world, and do the will, both of the Father, and of the Son of the Father. because of me, and of the Son, because of my flesh. And behold, the time is at hand, and this night shall the sign be given.

And there was no darkness in all that night, but it was as light as though it was midday: and the sun did rise in the morning again according to its proper order; and they knew that it was the day that the Lord should be born, because of the sign which had been given: and it came to pass also, that a new star did appear according to the word, yea, all things, every whit, according to the words of the prophets. Now the Nephites began to reckon their time from this period when the sign was given, or from the coming of Christ.

In the thirty fourth year, in the first month, there was a voice heard among all the inhabitants of the earth upon all the face of this land, crying, Wo, wo, wo unto this people; wo unto the inhabitants of the whole earth, except they shall repent, for the devil laugheth, and his angels rejoice because of the slain of the fair sons and daughters of my people; and it is because of their iniquity and abominations that they are fallen.

O all ye that are spared, because ye were more righteous than they, will ye now not return unto me, and repent of your sins, and be converted, that I may heal you? Yea verily I say unto you, if ye will come unto me, ye shall have eternal life. Behold, mine arm of mercy is extended towards you, and whosoever will come, him will I receive; and blessed are those who come unto me. Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God; I heaven, and they understood not the created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are; I was with the Father from the beginning; I am in the Father, and the Father in me; and in me hath the Father glorified his name. I came unto my own, and my own received me not; and the scriptures, concerning my coming, are fulfilled. And as many as have received me, to them have I given to become the sons of God; and even so will I to as many as shall believe on my name, for behold, by me redemption cometh, and in me is the law of Moses fulfilled. I am the light and the life of the world; I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end; and ve shall offer up unto me no more the shedding of blood; yea, your sacrifices and your burnt offerings shall be done away, for I will accept none of your sacrifices and your burnt offerings; and ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit: and whose cometh unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, him will I baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost, even as the Lamanites, because of their faith in me, at the time of their conversion, were baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and they knew it not. Behold, I have come into the world to bring redemption unto the world, to save the world from sin: therefore whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child, him will I receive; for of such is the kingdom of God; behold, for such I have laid down my life, and have taken it up again, therefore repent, and come unto me ye ends of the earth and be saved.

O ye people of these great cities which have fallen, who are descendants of Jacob, who are of the house of Israel, how oft have I gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and have nourished you. And again how oft would I have gath. ered you, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings; yea O ye people of the house of Israel; ye that dwelt at Jerusalem, as ye that have fallen, yea, how oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens, and ye would not; O ye house of Israel, whom I have spared, how oft will I gather you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if you repent and return unto me with full purpose of heart. But if not, O house of Israel, the place of your dwellings shall become desolate, until the time of the fulfilling of the covenant to your fathers.

And there were a great multitude gathered together of the people of Nephi, round about the temple which was in the land Bountiful; and they were marveling and wondering one with another, and while they were thus conversing one with another, they heard a voice as if it came out of voice they had heard, and again they heard the voice and they understood it not, and again the third time they did hear the voice, and they did look steadfastly towards heaven from whence the sound came; and they did understand the voice, and it said unto them, Behold my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in whom I have glorified my name, hear ye him. And as they understood, they cast their eyes up again towards heaven; and behold, they saw a man descending out of heaven, and he was clothed in a white robe, and he came down and stood in the midst of them.

And he stretched forth his hand, and spake unto the people, saying, Behold, I am Jesus Christ, whom the prophets testified shall come into the world; and behold I am the light and the life of the world; and I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things, from the beginning.

And the whole multitude fell to the earth, for they remembered that it had been prophesied among them that Christ should show himself unto them after his ascension into heaven. And the Lord spake unto them, saying, Arise and come forth unto me, that ye may thrust your hands into my side, and also that ye may feel the prints in my hands, and in my feet, that ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world.

And when they had all gone forth, and had witnessed for themselves, they did cry out with one accord, saying, Hosanna! Blessed be the name of the Most High God! And they did fall down at the feet of Jesus, and did worship him.

And he spake unto Nephi, and he commanded him that he should come And Nephi arose and stood forth. before him. And the Lord said unto him, I give unto you power that ye shall baptize this people, when I am again ascended into heaven. again the Lord called others, and said unto them likewise, and he gave unto them power to baptize; and he said unto them, On this wise shall ye baptize; and there shall be no disputations among you. Verily I say unto you, that whose repenteth of his sins through your words, and desireth to be baptized in my name, on this wise shall ye baptize them: Behold, ye shall go down and stand in the water, and in my name shall ye baptize them. And now behold, these are the words which ye shall say, calling them by name, saying, Having authority given me of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

the water, and come forth again out of the water. And after this manner shall ye baptize in my name, for behold, verily I say unto you, that the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one; and I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and the Father and I are one; and according as I have commanded you, thus shall ve baptize.

And there shall be no disputations among you, as there hath hitherto been; neither shall there be disputations among you concerning the points of my doctrine, as there hath hitherto been; for verily, verily I say unto you, He that hath the spirit of contention, is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend with anger one against another; behold, this is not my doctrine, to stir up the hearts of men with anger one against another; but this is my doctrine, that such things should be done away.

Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, I will declare unto you my doctrine. And this is my doctrine, and it is the doctrine which the Father hath given unto me; and I bear record of the Father, and the Father beareth record of me, and the Holy Ghost beareth record of the Father and me, and I bear record that the Father commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent and believe in me; and whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved; and they are they who shall inherit the kingdom of God. And whoso believeth not in me, and is not baptized, shall be damned. Verily, verily I say unto you, that this is my doctrine; and I bear record of it from the Father; and whoso believeth in me, believeth in the Father also; and unto him will the Father bear record of me; for he will visit him with fire and with the Holy Ghost; and thus will the Father bear record of me; and the Holy Ghost will bear record unto him of the Father and me; for the Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost, are one. And again I say unto you, ye must repent, and become as a little child, and be baptized in my name, or ye can in no wise receive these things. And again I say unto you, ye must repent, and be baptized in my name, and become as a little child, or ye can in no wise inherit the kingdom of God. Verily, verily I say unto you that this is my doctrine, and whoso buildeth upon this, buildeth upon my rock; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them. And whose shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil, and is not built upon my rock, but he buildeth upon a sandy foundation, and the gates of hell standeth open to receive such, when the floods come and the winds And then shall ye immerse them in beat upon them. Therefore go forth tittle hath not passed away from the unto this people, and declare the words which I have spoken, unto the ends of the earth.

And behold he stretched forth his hand unto the multitude, and cried, saying, Blessed are ye if ye shall give heed unto the words of these twelve whom I have chosen from among you to minister unto you, and to be your servants; and unto them I have given power, that they may baptize you with water, behold I will baptize you with fire and with the Holy Ghost; therefore blessed are ye, if ye shall believe in me, and be baptized, after that ye have seen me, and know that I am. And again, more blessed are they who shall believe in your words, because that ye shall testify that ye have seen me, and that ye know that I am: yea, blessed are they who shall believe in your words, and come down into the depths of humility, and be baptized; for they shall be visited with fire and with the Holy Ghost, and shall receive a remission of their sins. Yea blessed are the poor in spirit who come unto me, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. And again, blessed are all they that mourn, for they shall be comforted; and blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. And blessed are all they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost. And blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy; and blessed are all the pure in heart, for they shall see God. And blessed are all the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God. blessed are all they who are persecuted for my name's sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven; and blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake, for ye shall have great joy and be exceeding glad, for great shall be your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets who were before

Verily, verily I say unto you, I give unto you to be the salt of the earth; but if the salt shall lose its savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted? The salt shall be thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men. Verily, verily I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of this people. city that is set on a hill cannot be hid: behold, do men light a candle and put it under a bushel? Nay, but on a candlestick, that it giveth light to all that are in the house; therefore let your light so shine before this people, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven! Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets, I am not come to destroy but to fulfill; for verily I say unto you, One jot nor one law, but in me it hath all been fulfilled. And behold I have given you the law and commandments of my Father, that ye shall believe in me, and that ye shall repent of your sins, and come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Behold ye have the commandments before you, and the law is fulfilled; therefore come unto me and be ye saved; for verily I say unto you, that except ye shall keep my commandments which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case entersinto the kingdom of heaven.

Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, and it is also written before you, that thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment of God: but I say unto you that whosoever is angry with his brother, shall be in danger of his judgment. And whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council; and whosever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire; therefore if ye shall come unto me, or shall desire to come unto me, and rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come unto me with full purpose of heart, and I will receive you.

Agree with thine adversary quickly. while thou art in the way with him, lest at any time he shall get thee, and thou be cast into prison: verily, verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, until thou hast paid the uttermost senine: and while ye are in prison, can ye pay even one senine? Verily I say unto vou. Nav.

Behold, it is written by them of old time, that thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery already in his heart. Behold, I give you a commandment, that ye shall suffer none of these things to enter into your heart; for it is better that ye should deny yourselves of these things, wherein ye will take up your cross, than that ye should be cast into hell.

It hath been written, that whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement; verily, verily I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whoso shall marry her who is divorced, committeth adultery.

And again it is written, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: but, verily, verily I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne, nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither shalt thou swear by the head, because thou canst | not into temptation, but deliver us not make one hair black nor white; but let thy communication be, yea, yea; nay, nay; for whatsoever cometh of more than these, are evil. And behold it is written an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, that ye shall not resist evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. And whoso. ever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. Give to him that asketh thee, and to him that would borrow of thee turn not away.

And behold it is written also, that thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy; but behold I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them who despitefully use you, and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good; therefore those things which were of old time, which were under the law, in me are all fulfilled. Old things are done away, and all things have become new; therefore I would that ye should be perfect, even as I, or your Father who is in heaven is perfect.

Verily, verily, I say that I would that ye should do alms unto the poor; but take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them; otherwise ye have no reward of your Father who is in heaven, therefore when ye shall do your alms, do not sound a trumpet before you, as will hypocrites do in the synagogues, and in the streets, that they may have glory of men; verily, I say unto you, they have their reward: but when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth, that thine alms may be in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret, himself shall reward thee openly. And when thou prayest, thou shalt not do as the hypocrites, for they love to pray standing in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets that they may be seen of men; verily I say unto you, they have their reward. But thou when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret; and thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly: but when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen, for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking; be not ye therefore like unto them, for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him. After this manner therefore pray ye, Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen. For if ye forgive men their tresspasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

Moreover, when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance, for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast; verily I say unto you, they have their reward: but thou when thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father, who seeth in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. The light of the body is the eye, if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil thy whole body shall be full of darkness; if therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness? No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one, and love the other: or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other: ye cannot serve God and Mammon.

RIGHTEOUSNESS UNTO SALVATION.

For some time my thoughts have dwelt upon the subject of righteousness and its attainment to that degree that its possessor might merit salva-In my personal experience I have been made to realize that obedience to the gospel brings about a great change for good, yet I have debated in my mind the question whether a new convert, a person who has been obedient to the gospel requirements but a short time, could merit salvation. I think I have considerable consolation to offer along this line to those who have not been long in the work of their Master.

I have wondered whether righteousness, as the term is comprehended in the scriptures, means the right course through life in any and all work, without making a single mistake, or whether the term means the full and complete consecration of one's power and time to the service of our heavenly Father, though the course through life is fraught with many mistakes. If the former position be the correct one. I never saw a righteous person; if the latter is the correct one, I have seen many.

If it be true that in order to be righteous one must never deviate from a true and proper course in his actions, never make a mistake, then surely all knowledge and all wisdom and much experience must be acquired, which would take years and years, and would be beyond the limit of this life, though it be long or short. Then would all be lost, not being able, because of inherent weaknesses, to enter into salvation.

I wish to make application of a few passages of scripture to show the incorrectness of such a position. Paul

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. . . . for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith.—Rom. 1:16, 17.

He afterwards declares that there was a crown of righteousness laid up for him. So the object for which the gospel is given is not defeated so far as Paul is concerned. How long must the gospel operate upon the lives of individuals before they are accounted righteous and worthy of salvation? This ought to be an important question with all, and its answer earnestly sought for, for there is certainly hope and joy and consolation in the answer.

The following bit of history will give us some idea of the length of time it takes those who fully consecrate their lives to the Master's cause to become righteous and worthy of salvation as the terms righteous and salvation are comprehended in the scriptures. Here are the words of Anti-Nephi-Lephi:

And now behold, my brethren, since it has been all that we could do (as we were the most lost of all mankind), to repent of all our sins and the many murders which we have committed, and to get God to take them away from our hearts, for it was all we could do to repent sufficiently before God, that he would take away our stain.—Alma 14:5.

How long did it take those Lamanites, "the most lost of all mankind," to become righteous? Why, the very first onslaught of the unconverted Lamanites upon them after the conversion of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies leaves its record that one thousand and five were killed, and that Those who had been slain were righteous people; therefore we have no reason to doubt but what they are saved.—Alma 14: 10.

That's how long it takes the "power of God unto salvation" to reach people if they allow themselves to be subject to it.

By reading on in the thirteenth paragraph of the same chapter we learn that the same Lamanites made an attack on the Nephites after the slaughter of the Anti-Nephi-Lehies, and, owing to their failure to overcome them, returned from Zarahemla, and many of them came over to dwell in the

and many of them came over to dwell in the land of Ishmael and the land of Nephi, and did join themselves to the people of God, who were the people of Anti-Nephi-Lehi; and they did also bury their weapons of war, according as their brethren had, and they began to be a righteous people.

The record states that Ammon and his brethren had only been among the Lamanites fourteen years, during which time two branches of them were converted and became righteous; yes, among a people who had considered themselves the most lost of all mankind.

Let us have confidence in ourselves and in God that we can become righteous in this life and that its crown will be ours to wear beyond the confines of the grave. Of course the word consecration means a great deal, but we can consecrate our lives to the Master's cause if many of the Lamanites did

For behold, and also his blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died, not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned. But wo, wo, unto him who knoweth that he rebelleth against God, for salvation cometh to none such, except it be through repentance and faith on the Lord Jesus Christ.—Mosiah 1:14

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PRAYER.

"The prayer of faith shall save;" whereas the faithless, hypocritical, sinful one is but adding insult to injury. When the path of duty, and the narrow, straight, plain road is open, and available, it is monumental folly to loiter, and pray; and not obey. To obtain favor, and retain the grace of God should be the object and aim of all. To gain a respectful hearing and secure favorable replies are lively memorial stones in the altar of The meek and lowly devotion. Nazarene was heard on high because he reverently feared, and loyally revered.

John's disciples were taught why they should supplicate; and how to importune aright Christ's followers, beholding the beneficial results, sought advice and received instruction. It is usual to ask amiss at the shrines of paganism.

Repetitions are vain, irksome, distasteful, and foolish. Such expressions as "Father," "our Father," "heavenly Father," "O Lord," abound not only in the ranks of idolaters, but, lo! they have invaded, and inhabit the church of God. The presence and power of wisdom will minimize this ungainly evil, and, in time, eliminate this intruder. While the righteous are to do the most of the praying they have metes and bounds they cannot go beyond, unless they transcend all right rule.

Jeremiah was prohibited from praying for apostate Israel several times. By their evil ways, and great wickedness, peril and alarm were at the door, and rejection and banishment were at hand. Jesus importuned especially for his children, and those the Father had given him from out the unregenerate world. The sin of death was not to be condoned by entreaty. The unpardonable one, even the blaspheming against the Holy Spirit, hath never forgiveness, but the guilty are in the hands of inexorable justice. David had it in for his enemies; but where misguided zeal, and honest ignorance abounded extenuating circumstances held forth the olive branch of mercy.

Long prayers, and much speaking are generally untimely. The spirit of the suppliant should be attuned to praise, and thanksgiving, the occasion suitable and favorable, the language and manner ought to be commendable and edifying, and true piety and holy zeal forthcoming. King Solomon evidently believed the God of the fathers had kept covenant, and fulfilled his gracious word. This recognition rendered the throne of grace accessible.

In the dedication, as duly chronicled in 1 Kings 8th chapter, and 2 Chronicles 6th chapter, the event is set out, in bold relief, as a masterpiece of trenchant thought, inspirational eloquence, and incomparable beauty and grandeur in the realm of letters.

Have you not heard long prayers, and sometimes several right along, till your knees did ache, and uneasiness, bordering on impatience, took hold of body and spirit? When we are led to beg in mind that such ardent adorers would use moderation, are we not in line of prudent duty, or are we wandering a trifle from the path of safety?

In large gatherings, where the ablest are wont to congregate, the timid and the careless too often do not participate. It is the enjoined duty of each and every church member to pray vocally, and in secret; publicly, and in private, in their hearts, and before the world, and, in fine, at all times, and in every place. Be instant, and always on duty and ever thankful, hopeful, and happy are the salutary conditions. Humble deportment. and meek demeanor, and solemn protestations, are the stock in trade for blind devotees, hirelings, and hypocrites. It is lamentably and passingly strange that people of wicked, deceitful hearts will compass the earth to proselyte.

A false faith is worse than no religion, in that it doth close up the avenues of honest investigation, and wrecks all in a dark, deep ditch. A broken, sorrowful heart, a humble, contrite spirit, a truly hungering, penitent believer, that hears and accepts the true gospel, and follows up the profession with an eye single to the glory of God, can have what he asks for in bounds of right reason, and that would be for his best good, and God's glory.

The prophets of Baal were numerous, ardent, persistent, and determined, but their god answered never a word: Elijah, single-handed and alone, witnessed their discomfiture, shame, and disgrace. He augmented the difficulties of the proposition with a full dozen barrels of water over the sacrifice, wood, altar, and the encir-cling trench thereof. The Lord God heard his servant, and answered by a consuming fire, according to the crucial test. Then these false prophets were slain at the brook Kishon, after which the man of God petitioned for rain that came bountifully. It had been dry for three years, according to his prayer and prophecy, but now after his servant was to view, or look toward the sea seven times from Mount Carmel the cloud arose, etc.

Hungering, thirsting souls have been fed, not merely with loaves and fishes, but with the bread of heaven, and the water of life freely. In response to asking at the proper place, seeking the one at the head, and finding him, it is done.

To importune the popular deity is to address a blind mute. He is set forth in the creeds as a nondescript "without body, parts, or passions, indivisible, uncompounded, simple essence; having neither size, form, shape, weight, nor color, and can in no way come in contact with matter." Is it any wonder if this huge nothing, this phantom of disordered brains, does not hear, much less answer Surely the god of this world, and his emissaries are playing "hide and go seek" so far as the gospel is concerned.

May that hidden fire, the soul's sincere desire, burn out the chaff, and eliminate the dross. May this divine light, this holy flame, purge and purify till a Savior's love, as it were, is mirrored in an open glass of reconciliation. A prayerless Saint is a foolish virgin, a noxious tare, and a bad fish among the good ones. When sickness and sorrow, poverty and disaster, death and destruction are nigh, and friends are few and foes are many, then the rainbow of promise, and the consolations of grace come as a fleet evangel to bridge the chasm and tide us safe over all difficulties.

M. T. SHORT.

A PECULIAR SHOOTING STAR.

Despite the old maxim. "Early to bed," etc., I love to watch the heavens of a starry night and view the wonders of their illimitable expanse. Intelligently considered, the study thereof broadens and ennobles the mind and goes far towards enabling us to better comprehend the might those shining orbs; while he seems to say continually to the children of his love, look up and strive for higher light and greater progress.

While engaged late Wednesday night, August 21, in what some are pleased to term star gazing, sitting at an open window in Graceland College, my attention was arrested by a most brilliant scene, the passing of the largest shooting star I recollect to have seen. The star and its tail gave forth a white light of most intense brilliancy. As it was, passing the line of my vision there was thrown off from the end of the tail a body apparently one third the size of the star, somewhat elongated and of a brilliant red color; to me a new appearance in these erratic bodies, and I pondered. How wonderful are thy works, O Lord! Teach us so to order our days that we may apply ourselves to un-E. L. PAGE. derstanding!

DID JAPANESE DISCOVER AMERICA.

America has been discovered again or, rather, it has been discovered that the Japanese discovered the country long before any of the dozens of other discoverers who discovered it before the time of Columbus. The latest discoverer, according to Associated Press dispatches, is Schuye Sonoda, a Buddhist priest of Japan, who has returned to San Francisco from Mexico with what he regards as convincing proof that his people discovered America one thousand years before Columbus, and carried their faith along the Pacific coast from Alaska to Mexico. Sonoda has been assisted by Senor Batres, archæologist of the Mexican government. Sonoda followed the chronicles of Hoeir Shin, a Buddhist monk, who in 499 A. D. returned to his native land with an account of explorations that reached to a land he called Fu Sang, now identified by Sonoda as Mexico because of the maguey plant. Sonoda says he found innumerable evidences of Buddhist influence over the natives of Mexico. Some of these were the Mexican zodiac with its twenty eight hours, Oriental letterings and signs on temples, stone images and pottery. and hundreds of names which are slightly corrupted from Japanese. He found the temples invariably facing south, as in Tibet, the home of Buddhism, and in mosaics at Uitla he found the common cross of Tibet. He also found strong racial resemblances in features between the Mexican and California Mission Indians and the Japanese. So strong were these resemblances that when a California and majesty of Him who fashioned | Mission Indian was dressed in Japan- | cares of the world are obliged to relinquish ese costume and photographed, Professor John Fyer of the chair of Oriental languages, University of California, declared that the photograph was that of a Japanese of the northern islands and bore no resemblance to a California Indian.

It is not at all improbable that both the Japanese and Chinese navigators, as well as those of other eastern races, were familiar with the west coast of America. The remnants of the ancient civilization in Mexico, Central America, and the northwestern part of South America all point to an eastern origin. Many even hold that the unknown land of Ophir, to which King Solomon's ships sailed for gold, was located somewhere on the Pacific coast of the Americas, basing their belief on ethnological grounds and on the length of time required for the voyage, which is almost exactly that which would be required by vessels following the coast around by Bering's Strait and down the coast to North America.

Such discoveries of previous discoveries are important, as they offer opportunity for intelligent study of the early civilization of this continent. But as far as they have bearing upon the question of who the discoverer of America was they are unimportant. It is certain that many persons had known more or less of this continent centuries, and perhaps tens of centuries, before the time of Columbus. But Columbus was the first to make the fact known to the world at large, and as such he will continue to receive credit for the discovery. — Boyce's Monthly, August, 1901.

BIRMINGHAM, Eng., Sept. 5.

Editors Herald:-I am pleased to state we had a good time at our late conference of the Birmingham district, and I believe that the prospect here is better than heretofore. The reports of branches, etc., were good and encouraging. The Sunday services were full of interest and spiritual life. Brn. B. Green (priest) and J. I. Norton (elder) were the speakers of the morning session. The afternoon service was devoted to prayer, song, and testimony. In the evening preaching by Elders G. S. Greenwood and W. Ecclestone. I believe that all felt stronger and better for the day's exercise, and could rejoice in the knowledge of the truth.

Efforts have been made of late to create additional interest in the work amongst our young people, by way of mutual improvement classes, both literary and musical. But, alas, the opportunities are but few, and in consequence the progress desired cannot be made. We have, however, a goodly number of young brethren and sisters who are doing all they can to be useful on the Sabbath, when the claim upon them, and permit them both to do what they can in imparting as well as receiving instruction. And so we are looking forward to the time when they will be in the harness of the church, and assisting to carry the truth to the people. We have this hope because we can see a greater interest displayed in seeking to obtain knowledge than ever before. May this grow until our expectations are realized.

The annual conference of the British Isles is now a thing of the past, so far as the conference is concerned, but not its memory. At it we had the pleasure of introduction to Bro. and Sr. Kelley, also Bro. and Sr. Muceus, and we also had pleasure to meet again and welcome Bro. Griffiths. Well, we had a most enjoyable conference under the conduct of the Bishop, G. T. Griffiths, and T. Taylor, and hope that what was done at the conference will do great good in this land.

We have since had a visit from Bro. and Sr. Kelley to Birmingham, for one Sunday and the following Tuesday evening. I think all were pleased with their company, and very much appreciated his discourses. We are expecting another visit before they return to America.

Praying for the onward progress of the work in this and all other lands, I am, Yours in the gospal,

CHAS. WALTON.

VANCLEVE, Iowa, Sept. 9,

Editors Herald:-The Saints at Rhodes have had some experience with the opposition, since our district reunion held there last August, which might be of some interest to those who attended. The ministers of the churches have been very much concerned regarding our doctrine ever since, and seemed to feel it necessary to make our faith and teachings a special subject of attack after the departure of the ministry. Bro. J. W. Wight's sermon on future punishment seemed to concern them about the most, evidently because of the awkward position they were placed in.

Sunday, September 1, Mr. Martin, minister of the Protestant Methodists, gave us a sermon or lecture on the Book of Mormon, and several principles peculiar to Latter Day Saints. He introduced his subject by claiming that we did not teach that the writings of Peter, James, and John were to the church only, as he said they were. He also claimed that we misconstrued the prophecies that referred to the returning of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity to the present time.

As objections and evidences against the Book of Mormon, the following were given. First, it had the marks, phraseology, and diction of one man. Second, it had quotations of whole chapters taken from the Bible. Third, it teaches that three hundred years before the birth of Christ, the people in America knew that his name would be Jesus. Fourth, that five years after the ascension of Jesus at Jerusalem, the Book of Mormon teaches he came to America, which would leave the world without an advocate with the Father. The speaker claimed to have injury. Many of his own congregation were given the book a thorough investigation. He certainly had not read understandingly.

During the discourse which followed the above, these statements were made. He said that "Holy men of God wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (misquoting 2 Peter 1:21), therefore we did not have that right nowadays, as they, once for all, had done the writing, and that no man now had a right to claim any new revelation unless he was able to establish it by signs and miracles like Jesus did. Not the healing of a few imaginary diseases like people often claim nowadays, but the healing of the lame, paralytic, etc. Something that was rather above the power of man.

It was rather hard to have to sit still and thus permit him to insinuate our healings were imaginary; but "wisdom" held her peace. I desired to arise and testify of the wonderful confirmations we have received of the truthfulness of the latter-day revelation. but I remembered we were not to boast of mighty works, and that some animals will turn again and rend us.

He further explained that the twelve apostles were authorized to write the Bible, therefore it became the foundation of the church Jesus built. I understand by that that the Bible, not apostles and prophets, was the foundation. That the coming down of the New Jerusalem was not literal, but spiritual (he did not tell how it was spiritual); that the twelve stones were the twelve apostles, therefore there could be no other apostles after the first twelve. In his praise of the Bible as our only revelation he told us that it had been preserved by means of the Greek and Latin through classic hands. His thought appeared to me to be that by the learning and wisdom of classic hands the Bible was saved from the perversions that would arise through the ignorant and unlearned. Possibly he had forgotten Isaiah 29: 14. The claim was also made that the so-called orthodox churches had never lost connection with Christ, never been a time when the gospel had not been preached upon the earth since Jesus came that the manuscripts of the Bible were where they could be looked upon by all who desired, therefore not like the "golden plates." I wondered how he could so soon forget being referred to the tables of stone by Bro. Wight.

King James was praised as a true saint because of his great work of translating the Bible, and expressed their belief (Methodist) in ALL the Bible (I suppose they have changed since I belonged to them). That they had eight or nine millions of a membership and about seventy thousand preachers. That other evangelical churches had even more, and that there was a great army of them; and that by means of the angel of Revelation 14: 6 (meaning messenger), and the "swift messengers" of Isaiah 18: 2 (which were the telegraph and telephone lines) they were enabled to send messages of salvation and warning to all nations.

The people who made no profession of religious faith could see the blindness of his position, therefore I believe he did our cause no very much displeased, and, as I am informed, most of them wanted him to let us alone.

In his closing remarks he thanked God for all the churches, said that he believed in all of them, that a person going from one church to another could not tell there was any difference in their religious teaching and doctrine, that all were teaching the same things, etc. He also promised us that the minister of M. E. church would take up the same subject the next Sunday night and tell us about the origin of the Book of Mormon.

At the close of service, while they were "continuing the worship" by taking up the usual collection, a brother Latter Day Saint asked if they would permit an exchange of ideas on the subjects under consideration, and make arrangements for the same. But he made the excuse that he could not be present, as he was going away. The closing speech was made by an elderly minister of their (Methodist) faith, who told how he had filled their pulpit for years and never "run other churches down," and that he had heard that Mr. Wight had transgressed his own declaration of intention, to not run down other churches, but had greatly antagonized them, and that he thought it was now time "to sit down on this business." After this short, fiery speech, Mr. Martin refused permission for any further remarks or questions, and closed the meeting.

We were unsuccessful in trying to have the town paper print a reply to some of Mr. Martin's misrepresentations.

Yours for the truth,

W. C. EARHART.

PORSGRUND, Norway, Sept. 4.

Editors Herald:-This is the second visit to my native land since accepting the angel's message; my first visit was to see the folks, but this time I have come to tell the beautiful story of God's love in again restoring the gospel, with its grand blessings and favors. so much cherished by those who have tasted its soul-satisfying influence.

Leaving Boston July 20 in company with our beloved Bro. and Sr. Kelley, our little company of four Saints turned our faces toward the east in order to attend to our Father's business. We had a most pleasant voyage, and by God's kind care landed safely on English soil July 29.

We spent a very pleasant and profitable time in England, enjoying the kind hospitality of Bro. and Sr. Clark, of Manchester, where we made our home while in England. and also others, who did all to make it pleasant for us.

After attending conference and receiving or doing the little good we could, wife and self left the dear Saints, among whom were Bro. and Sr. Kelley, who had been our companions nearly three weeks, and started out for our destination, Norway, where I was sent to proclaim the restored gospel. How sad we both felt to leave those we had learned to love in a gospel sense! How cold the world seems, and the little glow of fire we have seems almost too little to keep up our spiritual condition till we again be permitted to dwell in the land of liberty; but how cheering the thought that the fountain from which we have received even that little glow is continually flowing, and no power on earth or in hell is able to empty its happifying contents.

After a comparatively pleasant voyage over the North Sea our little craft landed us in Christiania on Sunday, 9:00 p. m., August 11, and for the first time my life companion walked the streets of a Norwegian town. We soon found a place to remain over night, and the next day we boarded the train for my birthplace and home, Porsgrund. About 10:30 p. m. our train rolled into the depot, where father, sister, and other relatives were anxiously awaiting us. A father's love was manifested in the handshake I received, and I could not help but offer to my heavenly Father a prayer of heartfelt thanks for such a reception.

After a short ride I was again back in the old home where so many happy days were spent. It was here I first received my physical light, and by a loving mother's care reached the years of manhood. It is a grand thing to be born and receive through our physical eyes light and beauty; but how much more precious to be born again and receive spiritual light which will enable us to behold and comprehend the glory of God.

What a change since I first left that home! I left young, thoughtless, with the determination to enjoy life among the giddy and foolish, regardless of God's holy law; and now to return a new man, with new desires, new aspirations, authorized as God's servant, to proclaim that light had come and to invite all to come and partake of the good things the Lord is willing to give.

After five days at home I left my beloved wife to battle with the new language and surroundings, and went to join Bro. Enge and give whatever aid I could in missionary work. I found Bro. Enge well and quite cheerful, and I believe glad to see me. He has been laboring faithfully in that vicinity, giving many an insight to this work; but there, as in many places, prejudice has such a hold on people that they are blind to the truth and unwilling to follow the injunction of the apostle to prove all things. We labored together about two weeks, during which time we visited many who had through his efforts become interested in the gospel. Some are very near the kingdom, who, I believe, will in the near future accept the work and make good Saints. We also visited Bro. and Sr. Olsen, the first and only Saints in Norway, who seem anxious to live their religion. Here we spoke twice to interesting audiences, the good Master blessing us with liberty and power to convince the people of the truthfulness of the message we bear.

The literature is so scarce in this language that our missionary work is hindered to a certain degree. I hope we may soon be able to have the other two standard books translated and printed in this language, so the Scandinavian people may peruse their precious pages and gather the grand and soulcheering truths therein contained.

We are waiting for the Banner to appear and hope it soon may be printed and sent on its missions of love.

Dear Saints, when writing to us, please remember only one half ounce can be sent for five cents, but write as often as you can afford.

Ever your striving brother,

P. MUCEUS.

LOOKING GLASS, Ore., Sept. 10.

Editors Herald:—We are now at the abovenamed place, and are finishing up our work in Coos and Douglass counties, preparatory to commencing operations in the Willamette Valley. The traveling facilities of this section of our field being so poor, we have devoted the greater portion of the summer to tion of our field being so poor, we have devoted the greater portion of the summer to it, leaving those places not so remote from the railroads for the rainy season, which is well known to be a long one here.

Since coming into our field, ten have been baptized, nine by Bro. Crumley, my colaborer, and the last one was baptized today by the writer. Six of the number were baptized during the reunion.

The stage is the only means of conveyance for the public in this locality, and as the fare is high, the missionaries find it more in harmony with their circumstances, financially, to depend on brethren and friends for transportation from place to place, by wagon or horseback. In this respect they have done well, considering the busy time, etc. When circumstances have not thus favored, we have had the benefit of the exercise derived from a walk of many miles over mountain and valley. Those portions of the road that lie through the timber are more preferable to the way-worn traveler, because of the lack of dust, and being more sheltered from the heat of the day.

Since coming into this field the writer has made two trips from Roseburg to the sea and back, by foot and wagon, and has seen many pretty things in nature, in the way of numerous large trees, beautiful mountain streams, rocks, sunsets at sea, etc.

Bandon is located by the seaside and is conceded to be the best place in this part of Oregon to hold a reunion, taking everything into consideration. There the Saints, while being renewed and built up spiritually, may also have the benefit of frequent strolls on the beach, where they can gather up the clear, beautiful, and delicate agates, or fish in the ocean from the rocks, as may best suit their fancy. They also may have their choice of fish, clams, etc., to their hearts' content, or rather their appetites' satisfaction. There is only one objection to Bandon as being an ideal place to hold a reunion, and that is the cold wind that usually blows. We found it necessary to hold our 2:30 p. m. meeting in the hall where the night meetings were held, instead of in the grove.

Our Bandon reunion held August 16-25 was a complete success, for we had our beloved Bro. Luff in attendance from California, who added greatly to the interest of the occasion, also our worthy Brn. Chase and Goodwin of the Eastern Oregon mission. This is the first one ever held in Oregon, being the reunion of the Saints of Bandon branch, who are scattered over Coos and Douglass counties, some eighty strong, and not a district reunion. Of the six that were baptized at the reunion, four were baptized as a direct result of the meetings. Others are interested and we think some more will follow soon. We feel so well pleased with the effort put forth that it was resolved to hold another reunion next year. A general good feeling prevailed throughout.

It seems that the conditions of the place are very congenial for such a gathering, for it has been noticed by the writer in times past that greater liberty was had by the servant of God, when standing before the people to proclaim the angel message, than is had in other places. It was hard indeed to give the parting hand and sing, "God be with you till we meet again;" but such is life under present conditions. Let us hope and strive, Saints and brethren of the ministry, that we may all meet in that great reunion where parting is no more. Your correspondent will long remember the Bandon reunion as one of the most pleasant experiences of his life; and as he speaks for himself so he can speak for others who were there. There were impressions left on the minds of some that time cannot efface. In the far distant future we shall look back upon the distant past, that is buried in time, but not dimmed by age; that stands out upon memory's walls as one of the brightest pictures, as being not only one of the most enjoyable times, but also one of the most profitable ones of our mortal

May God bless that time to the good of all who sat under the sound of his servants' voices, and doubly bless those that made the Savior their choice early in life, as some did, is the prayer of the writer, in Jesus' name.

Your brother in the faith,

ALMA UPTON.

OAKLAND, Cal., Sept. 12.

Editors Herald:—Our reunion has once more passed into history and we are now ready to renew the battle to overcome evil and its attending results.

On the 25th of July we had the pleasure of uniting in marriage Sr. Clara Moses, of Santa Cruz, and Mr. George Merrill, of Oakland. Sr. Clara is well known to nearly all the Saints, and has cast her fortune with a very estimable young man, who, I believe, has the qualities of character necessary to make a good Latter Day Saint.

On August 18 I visited a locality on Russian river, in Sonoma county, about ten miles west of Fulton, where, two years ago, I baptized Ann E. Archer, confirmed her at the water's edge, and had not seen her since. Sr. Archer had arranged for a basket meeting, with preaching at eleven and two. My rule is forty minutes for a sermon, but when I saw an audience of a hundred of Sr. Archer's neighbors and friends before me, seemingly anxious to hear, I shattered the rule and for nearly three hours (in the two sermons) tried to give an intelligent reason for our adherence to this marvelous latter-day work. At the close we repaired to the river and baptized and confirmed five. There will doubtless be others to obey there before long if opportunities offer. We did not hesitate to declare the whole counsel of God so far as time would permit. Sr. Archer is certainly entitled to great credit for her consistent life in the gospel, and she has been eager to "warn her neighbor."

Our reunion was a success, and probably the largest ever held in this part of California. In addition to our otherwise heavy expense we had to raise $100 to purchase a large reunion tent. This we did and had a small surplus. The Saints were pleased to clasp the hand of President Joseph Smith, even if he did abuse our climate a little. Brn. A. H. Smith, Joseph Luff, J. F. Burton, and J. W. Gilbert were also present, besides our regular missionary force. The preaching was fair to very good. The social services were spiritual and strengthening. We believe that much good was done, but time will tell.

One tent will continue the work begun in Sacramento, the other one will go to La Fayette and vicinity, while the writer expects to visit Lassen and Modoc counties. That which pleased the writer the most was to see the number of bright, aggressive young Saints present, engaged in Sunday school and Religio work, besides the regular church work. What is more to be admired than a real live, aggressive, zealous Saint of God, who does not wait to be driven to do his work because it is a duty, but goes ahead because he recognizes that this is God's work, and does it because of great love for the Master? May their number multiply, is my prayer.

Yours in bonds,

FRED B. BLAIR.

WOODBINE, Iowa, Sept. 14.

Editors Herald:—When last I wrote of my labors I was engaged in tent work at Bartlett, Iowa, where on the Sunday following my letter the tent was dedicated, many being present, the Spirit of God aiding in all the exercises. Tent meeting continued until the 18th of August with a large attendance each night except two or three, and the result was more than was expected. Many were left believing; six adults were baptized; one was received on her original baptism, which occurred in 1839 in Ray county, Missouri; a Religio organized; and the hearts of the Saints were made glad.

On the 22d ult. was brought to the place to be occupied by the Tabor reunion, and for three days assisted in making necessary preparations for the reunion which we felt would result in much good; and, as has been previously reported, none were disappointed.

Resulting from the reunion I learn several are interested in services being conducted in their locality, and speak in terms of commendation of the spiritual services held, and enjoyed by them during the time of the reunion. Tent meetings held near Tabor since are well attended, from reports all that could be expected in attendance.

I expect to return to the mission in about ten days, nothing preventing, and hope to experience the same excellent spirit that has been experienced during the heated term, during which time only two nights were not occupied and this because of heavy rains.

Have received extreme kindness from one and all, and great liberality has been shown, for which I have expressed, and now again express my sincere thanks.

Returned home on the 2d inst., and on the 3d moved my family from Magnolia, the place of my nativity, and where I have lived ever since, to Woodbine, to where, because of school and railroad advantages, I concluded it was best I should move, and where I had prepared for my family a pleasant home, which they are now enjoying.

Religio services at this place will begin again tomorrow after a recess of several weeks.

With bright hope of final triumph, I am, In gospel bonds,

J. F. MINTUN.

HORNINGS MILLS, Ont., Sept. 2.

Dear Herald: — Recently in looking through some of my books, I came across a letter I received from the editor of the Kinsman I presume, Mr. F. A. Wilkie, in answer to a letter of inquiry I sent him.

During the winter of 1898-99, Elder J. L. Mortimer and I were holding meetings around Wiarton, Bruce county, Ontario. While we were at a small place called Clavering, some of the preachers of Wiarton and Hepworth took the alarm. They would not come out and meet us, notwithstanding the urgent requests of some of their own church members.

Some tracts, supposed to be death-blows to Mormonism, because so guaranteed by writers and publishers, were put in circulation, but were so evidently poor that as far as possible, they were withdrawn. Then from the Kinsman office, a publishing house of the Presbyterian Church, in Salt Lake City, Utah, a variety of small tracts were obtained and put in circulation among the people. Some of our friends obtained a few, and we found they were just as unreliable as the others, but made greater pretensions to truth, being from Salt Lake City. We tried to show the people that these tracts were but an exposé of the Brighamite system, but a number insisted that there was no difference between the two bodies.

I then determined to write to the Kinsman editor, and from him or some one in the office obtain such information as would or should convince all fair-minded people that there was a material difference between us, and that we were not of that body that was charged with polygamy, etc. And surely, we argued, they, the people, will be perfectly willing to receive the evidence, especially when it emanates from the same source as did their tracts that were put in circulation against us.

I wrote under cover of Bro. Edwin Humphrie's name, for the reason that our names might possibly have been forwarded to them. I wrote as one who was seeking information, and that I had seen several tracts that were a sample of some circulated around here (Wiarton) that came from their office. I stated that a couple of men were preaching around here who disclaimed any connection with Salt Lake Mormonism, and that they claimed to be of the Josephite faction, that held no affiliation with the Utah church in any way, shape, or form; that their head-quarters were in Lamoni, Iowa; and that the circulated tracts were an expose of the Utah church, and not theirs, the Josephites. Would they kindly inform me as to whether these allegations were true or not. I further intimated that I did not wish to charge wrong upon an innocent people, or even think of it. This letter was written and sent on the 11th day of February, 1899. On the 17th, or six days after, I received the following:

"SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Feb. 17, 1899. "EDWIN HUMPHRIES,

Wiarton, Ontario, Canada,

"Dear Sir:—Your letter of the 11th just reached us. The issue of the Kinsman just out contains the very information you need. I also inclose some tracts that will shed some light on the subject.

"There are some twenty branches of the Mormon church. (See 'Mormon Oneness.') The two strongest being the 'Josephite' or 'Reorganized,' and the other the 'Brighamite,' or 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.' The article in the Kinsman, which I referred to, is a recent debate between representatives of the two last named bodies recently had at Logan, Utah. The two are at swords points.

"The articles of faith you speak of are those of the Utah branch, compared with quotations from their works from which they teach their children.

"Will mail you the Kinsman of this month. If we can be of any further service to you will be very glad. "Sincerely,

"314 State Street."

"F. A. WILKIE.

The underlining in the above letter has been done by myself.

In the right hand top corner of the sheet on which is written the letter, as above, are the following words:

"We give fair and accurate information as to what constitutes Mormon doctrine, and treat the attitude of Mormonism toward personal, civil, and religious liberty. We ask people to do their own thinking."

I have written this letter for publication so that the traveling ministry of the church may have it for use when it may be needed. It is almost incredible, when we consider the various facilities for information, that there are such a vast number of people who choose to remain in ignorance. Why is it? It can only be accounted for because, as Jesus says, "Men love darkness rather than light."

I am still on the warpath, having been in the field since 1899, with the exception of a part of the year 1894, when my wife died.

Elder John Wilson of the Masonville branch, at whose house I am at present stopping, enjoying his hospitality, and that of his estimable son-in-law, Bro. David Morrison, priest of the branch here, and superintendent of the Sunday school, is badly crippled with that universal scourge, rheumatism; but he is gaining some, and his pleasant face and genial manner is again seen in the neighborhood, after a lay-up of five years; and right glad are his many friends to hear his cheery voice. Bro. Wilson, who still has to use crutch and cane, used to be a terror to the average preacher, or sky pilots, as he called them, and their churches as "The horned beast," with that peculiar r-r-r-r in "horned," giving evidence that the place of his birth was the land of cakes, "Where hearts warm and true, and bonnets blue, and prowess and faith are there." It is quite a job to get him into a buggy, but he can manage to get himself out. He delights to drive the missionary around to his various appointments, and enliven the journey by reminiscences of the past, as of himself and Elder Shields at the "House of blazes," which was a tavern of some repute, but of what sort, deponent saith not, but the brethren secured the hall over the driving shed for preaching, considering possibly, that a house with such an euphonic name, if any, required some calls to repentance, and that they were just the ready cut and fit preachers to give the call and extend the invitation.

The habitues of the place, resenting this imputation of their morals, as soon as the meeting was well under way, proceeded to manifest their disapproval in a way that gave them some amusement, as well as bringing about the end desired.

Imagine Bro. John Wilson trying, in his usual forcible way, to impress those reprobates with the necessity of forsaking their evil habits, and of turning to righteousness by obedience to the gospel, and at the same time trying to prevent himself from being impaled by one of the sticks that some of the other reprobates, who were in the driving shed below the hall, were thrusting up through some of the many cracks with which the floor of the hall abounded, to the delectation of the reprobates above; during which time Bro. Shields, who was earnestly watching the situation, was perched on a chair, as far as possible out of the reach of said sticks. In disgust, Bro. Wilson threw down the book on the table to Bro. Shields, and said, "Here, Johnny, you try them a whack!" Bro. Shields responded, but very gingerly took his place and proceeded to enlarge on the subject as presented so far by Bro. Wilson, when, with a rush, and remarks more forcible than elegant, they vacated the hall. There were no ladies present. It was what would be denominated, in western parlance, "a stag party."

Again, he would tell of the time when he and the late Elder James A. McIntosh returned from a preaching tour, with what Bro. Wilson thought was "the Scotch fiddle," "An' cracious me," said he, "how we did play it;" but in this he was mistaken, as it proved to be those pests that start a man in a tearing business, making him scratch to live. I speak of graybacks, and to those who know them, experimentally, terrible pests they are.

Dear brothers and sisters, if it were not for the fact that we know this work to be true, these, and other annoyances and hardships would not be endured, but with the knowledge that it is the "way, the truth, and the life," and, in a sense, God manifest in the flesh," and is "the power of God unto salvation;" dangers and inconveniences may, and do come, we try in all things to approve ourselves as ministers of God, in much afflictions, in necessities, in distresses. We are discouraged at times, yet not utterly cast down. It is not from any lack of getting the word before the outsiders that discouragements come, but from the apathy and the indifference of the Saints themselves. It seems as if we must be very near the end, as this condition was to prevail at the bridegroom's coming, but there was a class, who, although sleeping, were better prepared than the rest.

Again, we find a terrible, unforgiving spirit manifest by some of the Saints. In reality, it had better be called at once the spirit of hatred. There are some Saints who will not forgive, and there are some who have given grievous cause for offence, who will make no attempt to put themselves right by meeting the demands of justice and judgment through truth and righteousness, that mercy be theirs. In speaking to a congregation of Saints not long ago on these matters, I remarked, "There are some Saints who love to hate, and who hate to love." As soon as the words were spoken, I saw that they were very forcible, and the more I think of them, the greater force do they appear to gain where applied to those who are under such a spirit.

Some will put forth every effort to defeat the just demands of the law of righteousness, and escape making a proper restitution to some brother or sister whose soul has been harrowed up and feelings outraged by cruel and malicious slander on the part of that one, and then, at some slip in the cogs of the wheels of justice, of which he is so quick to take an advantage, he will brag, "I have beaten him; that's all I care for." Yes, but has he beaten God? The poor brother, or sister, as the case may be, if he could only see how he has beaten himself! The day of compensation is coming, and is fast approaching, and then there will be some who will say, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I am not saved." May all of us arouse ourselves to the duties and responsibilities of life, face them heroically and courageously, and meet them cheerfully, with alacrity and delight. With love and prayer for all, your brother in Christ.

A. E. MORTIMER.

RAVENWOOD, Mo., Sept. 16.

Editors Herald:-Last night I closed our tent meeting at Enyard, having preached sixteen sermons. Bro. John Hawley spoke once, and J. T. Ford twice, making nineteen sermons in all. Bro. Will T. Ross assisted in some of the services. Most of the time the tent was filled with attentive hearers, at times making it lively for the preacher. The Seventh Day Adventists have quite a large membership in this section of country, both the Ellen G. White faction and the Church of God, or the "Longites," as some call them here. They were anxious that I should preach on the Sabbath question, and I announced I would. Oh my! what a crowd! Some came from six to seven miles. At the close of the services we had rather a "warm time," keeping us there till near ten o'clock. Next night I spoke on probation after death, and showed that the spirit of man was conscious after death of the body. This seemed to bring "fire," and now nothing but a debate will settle the matter. They have selected Elder W. C. Long, of Stanberry, Missouri, editor of the Advocate, to represent their side. The propositions are as follows: 1. "The spirit or soul of man is mortal, and unconscious between death of the body and the resurrection." Advents affirm. 2. "The Book of Mormon is of divine origin, its teaching harmonizing with the Holy Scriptures." Saints affirm. 3. "The Moral law, the Ten Commandments, were, and are now, and ever will be, primary, immutable, and obligatory on all men." Advents affirm.

I spoke Saturday night on the Book of Mormon. Elder J. M. Reese, of Kansas City, was out to hear me. This is the man with whom Bro. M. T. Short held an eight-day debate. He says if Elder W. C. Long will not meet us on two of the propositions he will; but he will not debate the Book of Mormon with us. We shall give them a chance to meet the issue or show the "white flag." We did not push this debate on them. We hope to arrange for it sometime in October. I am sure there is a good people here and we have many friends. I saw in a dream a few nights ago some fine fish, and we caught some of them; and by and by can get more if wise. Last Sunday, a week ago, we baptized seven, Bro. Ford baptizing four of them. At the close of our last sermon the Advent brethren said to me their church house was open to me or any of our elders, when not in use by them. A kind friend handed me a dollar, and wanted me to go home with him. May God bless them all and bring them to see the true gospel of the Son of God.

Yours in the work,

D. C. WHITE.

MANITOWANING, Ont., Sept. 16. Editors Herald:-We as a body of Saints moved here on this island in the spring of 1900, at which time we numbered five. We have been doing our best to get the truth before the people, through reading, but we felt things were going too slowly, so we resolved to have an elder come, and applied to R. C. Evans, and he sent two, Elders G. C. Tomlinson and his brother S. W. Tomlinson. The latter one, however, did not stop very long, but went farther up the road. We have not heard from him lately, so cannot state his progress. Bro. George has labored faithfully here and has baptized seven, two of whom were my uncle and aunt, but are only here on a visit. The people in Clover Valley think a great deal of Bro. George as a man; but so far as religion goes they have enough for the present. I feel his work is done here in the Valley until the people can see more of our actions.

Pray for us, Saints, that we may let our light shine into the darkness.

Bro. Tomlinson has been having larger crowds in a settlement called Budge's Appointment than have ever been drawn before by any sect. Some are interested, and some are satisfied to remain in Babylon.

Your brother in Christ,
JOHN RAVEILL.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, Sept. 12. Editors Herald:—Our conference at Atchison, Kansas, last Saturday and Sunday, was a very profitable one to the Northeast Kansas district. On Sunday I led two precious souls into the water of baptism. We had Bro. G. H. Hilliard with us, who gave us in his positive way two splendid sermons. Come over

I delivered twelve sermons at the McGalliard schoolhouse, near Troy, Kansas, leaving a fine feeling with old and young. The colored M. E. preacher said he believed what I preached was true. I'll see when I go back just how much he does believe in it.

to our district again, Bro. Hilliard.

I'll be at Troy, Kansas, next week with the tent, Bro. J. W. Roberts with me.

Yours truly,

J. C. Foss.

BUFFALO PRAIRIE, Ill., Sept. 13.

Editors Herald:-Buffalo Prairie is a branch of long standing, and well known, though we are not very many in number at present. One branch has been organized in our immediate vicinity, taking away some of our number, and some have moved away; thus the decrease during the past few years has been greater than the increase. We have been made to realize that it is not always the many, but the few may also receive of God's choicest blessings; though, dear Saints, we have our severe trials. Through it all the hand of a loving Father is safely leading us, the dark cloud is fast rolling away, and we can realize his loving, tender care for his people here.

Some have fallen by the way, but the earnest zeal and faithful labor of those whose duty it is to see that God's law is kept, and the unity of spirit and united effort of the body has brought this branch up to a standard it has not reached for years. Our meetings are good and spiritual, and we realize the fulfillment of God's promise to us.

O, how good it is to be a Saint in latter days! Our hearts swell with gratitude to our heavenly Father for his many blessings so graciously bestowed, and we strive to come up higher, to come nearer keeping the full law, realizing that to be able to inherit the celestial kingdom we must keep the celestial law.

We will not forget to mention the Sabbath school, where we meet Sabbath after Sabbath to enjoy the lessons so highly prized by all. Most of our school have become earnest Bible students; the Quarterly is indeed a wonderful help. God bless the hands that so faithfully labor in this great work. Could Sr. Salyards know of the benefit the Quarterly has been to one school at least, she would feel in a measure repaid for some of the many hours spent in her great work.

May we each strive to grow in grace and a knowledge of the word until we shall be able at all times to give a reason for the hope that is within us, and come up to the standard God wants us to.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am, Your sister in gospel bonds,

CARRIE HOLMES.

RAVENWOOD, Mo., Sept. 17.

Editors Herald:—My last letter to you was written from Beaver, Texas. My labors after this were mostly south and southeast of Vernon, Texas, where the people are more thickly settled. I took the advice of the submissionary in charge and went to Eagle Ford, one hundred and fifty miles southeast, and labored twelve days. Most of my preaching at this place was from house to house, and I am satisfied good was done.

I went further south with the intention of assisting Bro. Renfroe to conduct meetings for a week in the Spicer neighborhood; but before I arrived he had been called home on account of sickness. I remained in the neighborhood two weeks, preaching and visiting. I had four days of fever at this place, probably caused by the bad water.

I proceeded south from here to the Central branch. Among the Saints that attended the conference and reunion here I met many old acquaintances. I consider the meetings here did us all good. The elders of the district were all present, and H. O. Smith was also with us and did most of the preaching. I think we were all glad to have the missionary with us. He may have been too plain on the Word of Wisdom to suit all, but the word is also plain. I think good was done on that line.

From Central I visited Cook's Point and visited and preached for a week. At this place dwelfs the president of the district, Bro. E. W. Nunley. He is a Baptist in some points of doctrine, but a Latter Day Saint in about all points. I like the man, even if we did not agree in all points on doctrine. There are others that do not see as I do and they may be right and I wrong.

The day I left the Point I was taken down with fever, which lasted two days, but I was well cared for at Bro. and Sr. Riley's, at Cleburne. Here I met Bro. and Sr. L. L. Wight; we held a few meetings and then went on to Fort Worth. Bro. and Sr. McFarland cared for me well at this place. We only held one meeting, and I returned to my children at Vernon, Texas, and Bro. Wight to his home at Sweetwater. My intention was to labor with Bro. Wight, but I felt so trifling I gave it up. We may try it together again in November.

I left my mission and came here about two weeks ago. My wife and I will go to the Dow City reunion. I intend to winter in Texas. I can truly say I never took a mission in which I felt better than in this one.

JOHN HAWLEY.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Sept. 17.

Dear Herald:—Our district conference, which was held in San Antonio on the 13th to 15th inst., was quite a success. Our missionary, Bro. John Harp, was appointed to do the preaching, which he did nobly, having good liberty, notwithstanding his physical weakness. He had fever every day; but the great Physician was with him, enabling him to fill each appointment. I think the Saints in attendance are satisfied with the result of the meeting, while Bro. and Sr. North have cause to rejoice as their little son Orlando took upon himself the name of Latter Day Saint, and was buried in baptism by Bro. Harp, who left this morning for Bandera county, where he has labored some before in company with Bro. Tom Jett. They also labored about eighteen miles south of this city at Wildman's chapel, where I think considerable good was done, as he returned in about a month afterward and baptized two. Bro. Harp was appointed president of the district, and was granted the privilege of choosing his assistant, and he selected Bro. David Palmer. As both are good workers, we feel confident that the work will move out throughout this district, and the honest in heart will be gathered in, and there will be a time for rejoicing. I trust and pray that all the Saints of this district will waken to a sense of duty and arise and work while it is yet day.

May the Lord's work prosper everywhere, is my prayer.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
RUTH GIFFORD.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 18.

Editors Herald: — Leaving Independence about eighteen months ago I have moved around very much and have had some costly experiences, together with some happy ones.

My removal to the East was for the purpose of financial advantage, and have been measurably successful. I might have been much more so, if I could have conscientiously joined a labor union; and why I did not seems strange to some of my brethren. All I can say is that the liberty of the gospel amply satisfied me. I felt it unnecessary to assume a two-fold responsibility in some respects antagonistic to each other. In the gospel I found my obligations were to all mankind which I discovered were restricted in the labor union to a class. It is true that labor organizations do not prevent any class of religionists from entering. But a refusal to enter meets with an effort which practically refuses you the right to labor among its members. My experience clearly proves this.

If a man must, against his conviction of duty to all mankind, stand with a class of men who refuse to work with a man whose conviction of right will not allow him to attach himself to them, then his freedom is lost. This is what logically was expected of me.

Men who will work and do not belong to unions, where union interests are involved, are branded; and so far as the union can exert an influence he is prevented from receiving employment elsewhere. So if all work done were governed by trade unions, and federated, it could be made impossible for one refusing to join to secure employment: hence, work for himself, depend on charitable people, or starve.

By pointing out this I do not wish to be understood as encouraging selfish men to seek for advantage from their employers by conniving for other men's jobs by agreeing to work for lower wages, longer hours, or any other despicable method, to injure another; but to cause unions to be more considerate of the convictions of others and allow equal liberty to those who do not infringe upon their rights.

I took the matter up quite seriously and wrote to the president of the American Federation of Labor, giving him in detail the causes that led to a strike by me finally refusing to join them. But I received no answer from him, but one from his secretary directing me to enter my complaints to a local organization, which in part had decided against me. I wrote again, but received no reply. Then I concluded that what was done locally was sanctioned by the chief officers of the organization; which still makes it impossible for me to join them.

Personally, I think men might organize and resent oppression; but when that oppression is forced upon their fellow workmen, they forfeit my respect.

While at Ellwood City I visited the Saints of New Castle, also those in Beaver Falls. Many pleasant meetings were held. In the month of July three were baptized by the writer,-two daughters of Sr. Butler, of Bessemer, and one Martin E Vining, an earnest and practical man, whose wife has been a member for some time. Baptism took place at Mahoningtown. The Saints of New Castle and surrounding places meet under the direction of the president of the Sharon branch, Bro Hollibaugh, a faithful servant of God. Their kindness to me has shown itself to me frequently, and will be remembered. I trust they will receive encouragement.

At Beaver Falls I have spoken several times, and have been blessed in services with the Saints. Bro. W. H. Forbes has carefully guarded the interests of the work there.

We have many (fews) here and there who are trying to hold up the royal banner of light. These earnest workers will certainly be rewarded.

My wife and self, a short time ago, decided to take a trip to the place of our spiritual birth. We first visited Buffalo, stopping at the home of Bro. and Sr. Brothers, where we were received with kindness. Visited the beautiful city of light for one day, witnessing the magnificent display of electricity, the buildings of wonderful beauty and design, within filled with the marvelous manifestations of human intellect.

Then came to the mind, Is not God pleased with this exhibition of intelligence? and I felt he was. In our movements towards Toronto we passed the great Niagara, not before having had a view of its majestic, neverceasing, tumbling, roaring cataract - the Falls. Into a rubber suit, down in an elevator, and through an artificial tunnel we passed, to secure the best view possible of the Falls. Feeling satisfied we saw as much as others, we ascended. Then to depot, thence to Lewiston to take steamer for Toronto across Lake Ontario, the former home and birthplace of my wife. This being Wednesday evening, our minds inclined to meet with Saints; and, searching a short time, we found their nice brick church, and there met Sr. Devine, Joseph Luff's mother, and his sister, Bro. Thomas Hatty's wife, formerly residents of Independence. So we felt at over night, we looked for and found some of my wife's relatives, who treated us unusually well. Our stay was very enjoyable.

We left there Saturday morning, for London, Ontario, the place made famous by the the glorious light of heaven encircling a band of those who afterwards became Saints during a baptism in the River Thames, administered by Bro. J. J. Cornish, one of God's faithful and fearless ministers. Reaching there at noon, we surprised our much esteemed and faithful Sr. Hunt, whose generosity flowed towards us freely, making us feel at home. We were greatly surprised and made sad to hear of the death of Sr. Quick, with whom many happy seasons in gospel work were enjoyed.

Sunday morning we went to prayer meeting at the old church, which is much improved in appearance. Old acquaintances were renewed, and a revival of the past spiritual experiences were brought forward. So we blended our testimonies with those of old, and rejoiced at our privilege.

I responded to a request to speak, made by our earnest coworker, Bro. Flegg; again in the evening; fair attendance at all meetings. Bro. R. C. Evans had left, the day we arrived, for work in the field; so we did not get a glimpse of him.

Next morning we left for Ellwood City, having no regrets.

Some unpleasantness arose in connection with myself and workmen; and viewing the situation over I thought it best to leave. So wife went back to Independence, myself to Pittsburg. Not being content to stay there, moved still eastward till I reached Philadelphia. Here I have some relatives with whom I am at present staying, who may, perhaps, see something of worth in this latter-day work and yield obedience. I am hopeful.

Have met with the Saints a few times, and felt a good degree of the Spirit. Bro. Will LaRue is holding the fort, and causing some stir among the newspaper men. Philadelphia is in sad mourning over our late President McKinley, whose life was shut out by the fanaticism of anarchy.

Have secured employment here and may remain for some time.

> Yours in the kingdom, G. E. HARRINGTON.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., Sept. 19. Editors Herald:-On the day when all Americans are commemorating the abrupt demise of President McKinley, I thought a few lines about the Lord's work in this city might be fitting.

Of most importance is the state of Bro. Chas. R. Duncan's health, one of the missionaries who has spent years in trying to establish the Lord's cause in the earth. At this writing he is lying at the point of death. Since last spring's General Conference Bro. Duncan has not been himself, has been gradually failing, and in the past month has had frequent and severe pulmonary hemmorrhages. To us it seems that his life's thread cannot be lengthened much farther. He is hopeful of this life, and cheerful in the home. Staying with Bro, Thomas Hatty thought of passing into the beyond. His ambition even now is to be out again upon the frontier battling for the truth.

Tent work will soon be over for this season here. While the tent mission work this year has been trying upon those having the burden of carrying it on, yet we believe that lasting good has been done. Though our mission force was less than the number appointed by conference, those active and in the mission we believe have tried to do their work well.

There is a growth manifest in the Colorado Springs branch, and a determination that the metal shall not lose its polish.

Bro. J. F. Curtis anticipates going soon over into Southwest Colorado and Northwest New Mexico. Bro. J. B. Wildermuth is at Cripple Creek, and Bro. J. W. Morgan at or near Wray, Colorado. I will likely stay in this city a few months. The Saints are anxious that President Joseph, Patriarch A. H. Smith, and Apostle Joseph Luff shall stop here as they come home from their California Evidences of the Lord's presence with his people are numerous.

May the gospel message be hastened that the day of unrest may cease.

Yours in bonds,

A. B. HANSON.

SMUGGLER, Colo., Sept. 16.

Editors Herald:-I have been keeping on the move, as best my circumstances and surroundings would permit, since writing you last. My labors have been mostly among the Saints, as the outsiders were very scarce at most of my meetings. This, I hope, was due. principally to the fact that those who irrigate do so largely when they are not otherwise busy. This hinders them from attending evening meetings, Sunday too.

The Fairview branch, which is greatly scattered over this part of the state, is, in my judgment, making good progress. The most of them are making a commendable effort to "come up higher." My preaching, while with them, has mostly been along the line of Christian duty, and has been well received.

At their social meetings there has been a good spiritual influence. At some, the Lord made his will known through prophecy and tongues. The duties of the Saints were pointed out, and some were admonished of their faults and exhorted to do better. Others were promised spiritual light and evidence. At the meeting Sunday, week ago, the Spirit gave some good instructions to all and to some in particular, through Bro. M. L. Schmid, president. One brother claims to have seen the Spirit in the form of a dove resting on Bro. Schmid, and also saw four personages near him. I, with others, felt the Spirit, but saw not the vision. I spent a couple of weeks very pleasantly with the Saints at and near Fruita. I did some preaching there, and as a result expect to baptize a young man when I return. I have a partial promise of the Advent church to hold meetings in in Grand Junction. I will get back that way soon.

I came here on the 11th, and held a meeting the evening of the 12th; and while there are several hundred people in reasonable distance, mostly within two hundred yards of the place of meeting, there were but about a dozen came to the meeting; and while I tacked up several notices of our meetings to continue each evening till over Sunday, on the three following evenings not a soul came. I thought perhaps they thought me a Utah elder; so yesterday I tacked up notices that I would lecture on the errors of Utah Mormonism; still no one came.

That is what I call treating a man pretty coolly. I brought an overcoat to protect me from the cold weather I expected to find here in the tops of the mountains. I have not needed it, as the weather is fine, and it would not keep off a chill of that sort. I see but little prospects of doing much in the mountains, so think I shall soon return to the valley.

My labors here, I believe, have not been in vain. It has been a benefit to Bro. Saleno; and there is a Utah Mormon here I have been talking to, and he has told others he thinks I am right, but wishes to investigate more. I will prolong my stay a day or two to see if I can fully convince him.

Yours in the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

LONDON, England, Sept. 8.

Editors Herald: — My last communication was written to you at the close of the mission conference at Manchester. I remained in that city over the next Sabbath, and preached at two of the branches; namely, those presided over by James Baty and Joseph Dewsnup, Jr. There are five branches there, hence did not have time to visit them all, but expect to in the near future.

I was greatly pleased with the kind reception received from the officers and members during my sojourn among them. Bro. Dewsnup, Sen., was taken quite ill on the Sunday night of the conference, and had not quite rallied from the effects of the sickness, but was much improved, and I sincerely hope that he will soon be restored to his wonted health, his presence and labor always being in demand in the district over which he presides. He was not ordained as counselor to Bishop Taylor, as he was not present when nominated, on account of the sickness before mentioned. It is to be hoped that he will consent to act in this capacity, as we have every reason to believe that he is fully qualified for the position, and would fill it with credit to himself and the church.

Bro. Kelley and wife left to spend a few days at Birmingham on the way to this city. I arrived here on Tuesday, August 13, and Bro. Kelley and wife came the next day; and we met with the Saints in their commodious little hall in Bow Common Lane, East London, on Thursday, the 15th. The Saints gave us a hearty welcome. The branch is presided over by Elder J. Worth, assisted by Priest W. Goullee, William Gerrard as teacher, and Bro. James Newton and J. Knight as deacons.

I notice many changes have taken place since I was here eight years ago. Many faces that were familiar to me then are not to be seen now; and many who were not members few of the sights.

of the church at that time are now active workers in the cause, which proves that the London officers and Saints have not been asleep. But still among the old ones, and as faithful as ever, are to be found Thomas Bradshaw and wife, Brn. Kendrick, Tankard, Clift; Bro. Goullee and wife, Archibald Bradshaw and wife; Bro. Jennings, Sr. Furness, Wm. Gerrard, and a number of others. Sr. Adams is not at meetings as often as she would like, on account of failing health and the long distance she is away from the meeting room; but she is as firm in the faith as ever heretofore. Bro. Joseph Kemp and wife and a few others are doing their best to "hold the fort" at Enfield, a small town about twelve miles out. Brn. Bradshaw, Clift, and Gerrard have been traveling backward and forward, rendering them all the assistance within their power, holding services at the house of Bro. Kemp. There is a special movement on foot to rent a small meeting room, with a view to build up a branch there, as there are about eight members there now. However, some are not quite as active as they might be; but the object is to revive them and add others to their number by obedience to the gospel.

The Saints as a whole have been very attentive at the meetings, and we think that some good has been accomplished. I have established a mission in this city, and Bro. A. Bradshaw has been appointed to take charge of all the elders and priests who are not officials of the branch, there being no district. There are five elders and two priests who will take part in this work. I believe with proper care and faithful diligence on the part of these brethren some lasting good may be done and many souls reached in this way. The brethren do considerable street preaching, not only on Sunday but during the week also; hence it is that they believe in the admonition to "warn your neighbor," also the command to go into the highways and byways. It would be well if the brethren in the ministry in all the world would go and do likewise and thus give heed to the counsel of the wise man who said, "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." If it be a fact that this gospel of the kingdom must be preached in all the world for a witness, before Christ comes, and if we wait until the people come to us, it will be a long time before the Lord will make his appearance among men; therefore I am of the opinion that earnest endeavor should be made to get the gospel before the people; and the most successful way that I know of is to get out on the streets and into the parks where they are to be found, as a great majority shun meeting places, because of their dislike of the pride and lack of Christian charity in the churches of today.

The Bishop and wife left here two weeks ago for Scotland. We shall soon meet again in Wales, to attend a conference to be held at Llanelly on 21st and 22d inst.

London is still a great and wonderful city. There is about a little of everything under the sun to be seen; but for the want of time and the necessary cash I have seen but very few of the sights.

There is a very large amount of sympathy being shown by the peers and the people on account of the dastardly attempt made upon the life of President McKinley, which points to the high esteem in which he is held on this side of the Atlantic. I truly hope and pray that his life may be spared and the assassin severely punished, and that all those who are in sympathy with him may soon be driven from "the land of the free," as no prominent official's life is safe while the murder spirit is fostered and permitted to develop in our beautiful country.

We are surely living in the "perilous time" referred to by the Apostle Paul, when murder, suicide, and robbery walk abroad, and wickedness of every kind is on the increase. The newspapers of the day are filled with deplorable and horrible details. The question uppermost in my mind is, How long is this state of things to continue? I truly long for the day to come when wickedness shall have ceased and righteousness and peace shall fill the earth as the waters fill the mighty deep.

I leave for Lydney on Wednesday, and remain over Sunday, and thence to Wales. I have been domiciled at the home of Bro. Archibald Bradshaw, where I have felt quite at home. Many thanks to the brother and his companion in life for their kind hospitality. May the Lord abundantly reward them for their kind consideration for the traveling missionary.

Many of the Saints in America have requested me to write to them. I would indeed be very glad to comply with their request, but I find that it draws quite heavily upon my limited means; hence I desire that they take the will for the deed. I shall occasionally write to the church periodicals, and they will by this means be able to ascertain of my whereabouts and what I am deing. My health is excellent, and I am feeling well spiritually. With good will to all and malice towards more, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds, GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Sept. 17.

Editors Herald:—We expect to sail on Thursday morning, the day set apart for mourning; a day in which the whole nation will mourn; a day in which millions of people will shed tears of sorrow, for a great man, a nation's chief has been slain by wicked hands, without provocation, without mercy.

All public buildings, all large stores and many smaller ones, are being heavily draped in mourning, and it is now expected that all the leading men of the city, officers, merchants, and others will wear some emblem of mourning on Thursday, for great is the sorrow of the nation for its sad loss.

The lightning flashes over the wires words of sympathy and condolences from other nations as they mourn with us, by reason of the sad tragedy of Buffalo.

In 1832 the Lord said—on Christmas day—"By bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn." The word of the Lord is sure, and the mourning of now is but a little thing to what will be the mourning when this prediction shall be perfectly fulfilled, "and thus with the sword, and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn,"—a sad, sad day that, the earnest of which is with us now.

But this great sorrow first began at the house of God, when without provocation, without mercy, the two presidents-prophets of God-were smitten unto death by wicked hands, incited thereto by the selfsame unreasonable, diabolical spirit, upon that bright sunny June day in 1844, as was manifested in the awful tragedy of September, 1901. The same spirit nearly two thousand years ago, cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him!" and the Redeemer of men passed over Calvary into the eternal mansions of his Father in glory. Before that day he said: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, who killest the prophets!" And now he might say, "O America, America, who killest the prophets and presidents!" The land shall mourn by reason of bloodshed, until He who will rule in righteousness will reign; and binding the murderous powers of evil, liberate men from mourning and sadness. When he comes in the name of the Lord, then shall the nations rejoice and all nature be glad.

On November 3, 1896, William McKinley was elected president; on that morning a company of Saints gathered on the wharf in this city to bid good-bye to Emma and I as we started on our voyage to Papeete as servants of God to work as missionaries. And now on September 19, the President will be laid to his resting place until the resurrection day, and we shall again leave the wharf here, for like duties and cares and toils in those sunny isles. This time we are accompanied by the president and patriarch, A. H. Smith, and his secretary, Bro. Leon Gould, who after a short sojourn of a few months will go on to Australia; and Bro. J. W. Gilbert and wife, who go with us also to work and toil in the Master's name.

We are fairly well, and hopeful, though not over joyous. May God bless you all, and help us to prepare to dwell on the purified earth with him and his!

May peace abide with all the Israel of God! J. F. Burton.

WESTON, Iowa, Sept. 16.

Editors Herald:-I see an effort is being. made to again issue Sandhedens Banner. I have talked the matter over with several of the Danish Saints, and all promised to take the paper if it was published; but as I have no right to take subscriptions I can do no more at present; but I believe some one should be appointed in each branch to labor and see what can be done. I feel sure that if a united effort could be put forth the paper would soon be a success. Dear Saints, think about this matter, and remember our missionaries who have gone to our native land to preach the gospel. Think what a help and encouragement a Danish paper would be to them in getting the work before the people. I believe it is our duty to do all we can to roll on the work of God.

There may be many of the Saints, like myself, who cannot read the paper; but that is no reason why we should not help sustain it.

God is again blessing our little branch at Hazel Dell with his Holy Spirit, and we feel encouraged in the work.

Our district conference met with us some two weeks ago. We believe much good was done, and all went away rejoicing in the work of God.

Ever praying for the success of the work, I remain.

Your sister,

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

[IT is not necessary, Sr. Rasmussen, to send the money now. Do just as you have done,—get promises to take the paper, and send in the names. Those to whom the paper is sent can remit when they receive the first copy.—ED.]

HAMILTON, Scotland.

Editors Herald:—This morning I felt impressed to send a few details to your columns, so that your readers may be made acquainted with the present condition of the work in this land.

Since my last communication, by request, I visited Clay Cross to assist in the opening services of the Saints' brick church,-which is a neat little building with all requisite accommodation to make the worshipers comfortable. This expression of the Saints' love for the work of God is, doubtless, the fruit of much sacrifice and labor, and certainly speaks well for their zeal and perseverance, which has been manifest in the dauntless manner they have overcome the many difficulties naturally environing such an effort. The little church does them credit, besides standing as a monument to the work it represents. I was privileged to preach there several times to attentive audiences; also to baptize some thirteen, all of them being children of the Sunday school in connection with the branch, except Bro. G.W. Pollard, who for some time had been vainly trying to square the Bible to meet his former belief, and at last came to the conclusion that the safest way would be to square his belief with the Bible; so capitulated from the erroneous position and enlisted under the banner of Jesus Christ. To see the little ones step bravely into the cold water and confess Jesus was impressive and uplifting, speaking elequently of the power of Sunday school labor. May the peace of Him whom they serve ever preserve them in the way of truth and holiness, guard them from all the snares and follies of life, and equip them for the battle of life so that in the end, they, with all the faithful in Christ, shall be brought off more than conquerors!

I also spent a few days in the great Steelopolis, Sheffield, where under an eternal canopy of smoke and sulphur the ponderous hammers and machines, surrounded by myriads of men, bang and clash and whirr, hurry and scurry in bewildering commotion, turning out almost everything in the way of steel, from a pair of nail scissors and corn razor to the huge mountains of steel armor that encase the floating castles defending our possessions. Here I was kindly received and did what I could during my short stay. Surely there are great possibilities in that very busy city, with so many toilers; and one is constrained to believe that with good generalship, concentrated labor, prosecuted prayerfully and incessantly, some impressions would be left upon that place that would remain.

On August 1 I left Hamilton for Manchester, to attend the annual conference of the European mission, and was again permitted to renew my acquaintance with a great many of the Saints from various parts, also make the acquaintance of some who were new. After being so long isolated in a strange land among strangers, this privilege was fully enjoyed and appreciated. Here we met with Bro. and Sr. E. L. Kelley, and Bro. and Sr. P. Muceus, and on the following day with Bro. Griffiths, who had that day landed upon British soil after a pleasant trip across the ocean.

The conference convened on the 3d, at six p. m., a large number being in attendance. The spirit of unity, peace, and brotherly love seemed to manifest itself from the inception, and continued to pervade the entire assembly throughout all the sessions. The grave and important work outlined in the late revelation was naturally anticipated with some anxiety, but was prayerfully and solemnly entered upon, and, so far as practicable, was accomplished with a feeling of unanimity and peace that seemed to be peak the Divine approval of what was done. All were impressed and awed under the power of the Holy Ghost that seemed literally to fill the room, when the different brethren were ordained to their appointed offices. May God help all to discharge the duties imposed, with wisdom and grace, to his own glory and the good of others.

The meeting with Bro. Griffiths caused reflections of a sad nature, which would obtrude themselves like "shadows athwart the sunny skies," in the remembrance of the many changes that have transpired since last we met. Death has thrust its grisly hand into many family circles, and ruthlessly plucked the loved and dear, whether old or young, and left the empty place that never again will be filled; only in dreams memory will supply the fragrance that once was real. Change is the chief characteristic of this experience; and so used are we to gazing upon life's kaleidoscope that it is only at intervals that the gaps and fissures in the surface force themselves before our view so painfully. This fact introduces the thought that changes require time, and this time is for a purpose. The purpose is building up our character and record for the scrutiny of eternity. Some have finished their record, we remain: our task is unfinished. May we endeavor to build that record and character even more wisely than in the past!

We are grateful that it can be said the work in Scotland is slowly but surely winning its way. Not that many are being baptized, but numbers of people are becoming more and more acquainted with the truth, and that truth is being recognized; and while we have a number of inveterate enemies who, being blinded in their unholy zeal, cannot realize the truth, yet we have a multitude of friends who have heard the wondrous story of the restoration of the everlasting gospel, and express themselves as being satisfied we have the truth, though as yet they have not felt it incumbent upon them to render obedience unto the call.

In Hamilton, Glasgow, and Carluke we have very good hearings in the open air; and what is significant, is that our meetings are regularly attended by the same people, over and over again, who patiently and attentively listen to the word until the close. On an average we calculate that during the labor of one week considerably over 1,000 hear the truth, and we feel persuaded that we have that number of friends to the cause.

Ploughing, sowing, harrowing, and tending the sprouting seed is our business; to send the sunshine and rain in season is God's business, also to see to it that in due time there will be the harvest to reap. We are not anxious nor worried lest God should forget his work, but anxious to mind our own work and do it faithfully and well, being ready and willing to baptize when he thinks it is ripe for garnering home.

I rejoice that God has blessed us, though few in number; and each one of our little band is earnestly and prayerfully eager to do all in his power to spread the work. By God's help we intend to present a united front to the enemy.

The Devil is working overtime in Scotland. What a pity, it seems to us, that notwithstanding he is such a notoriously bad paymaster his employees never seem to think of going on "strike!" Apparently they are in advance of the toiling masses of our age on this matter, despite labor unions, socialism, and secularism. The only example worth copying from Satan and his myrmidons seems to be the almost indomitable pluck and energy which characterizes their efforts to ruin and defeat all that that is good. If at first they don't succeed, they try, try again. Surely if the work of damnation calls forth such energy and perseverance, how much more so ought the work of salvation God has called us to be ministers of.

Our monotony has been pleasantly disturbed by a visit from our Bro. and Sr. Kelley who stayed with us a little over a week. During that time our hearts have been gladdened by the wise counsel and ungrudging help that our brother has rendered. He has made friends by his courteous, Christian deportment; he is just fine for open air preaching, and soon discovered he did not require any apprenticeship to that work. Since he has left, some of the would-be critics have had some very severe and harsh statements to present that they evidently thought it prudent to reserve until he had gone before presenting. Such conduct, however, does not cause any to think more of these people or less of us.

We have succeeded in hiring a hall in Hamilton, which will seat one hundred and fifty, and had a fair audience to greet Bro. Kelley, who preached the first sermon in behalf of the work. Last Sunday we had still a larger audience, so that we are encouraged in the hope that the occupancy may turn out to be permanent.

We had the pleasure of showing Bro. and

Sr. Kelley some of the magnificent scenery for which Scotland is justly famous, including the city of Edinburgh, so rich in historic lore, besides being one of the most picturesque cities in the world. A trip down the Firth of Clyde to "Sweet Rothesay Bay" was interesting as well as enjoyable. The banks of the Clyde were busy and noisy as the armies of men and boys banged the blazing rivets into the steel plates and gradually evolved the ponderous ships that speed across the trackless main. A visit to the great exhibition in Glasgow was appreciated. On Tuesday evening Bro. Kelley gave his valedictory address to the Glaswegians, on the Cathedral Square, and closed with a long "joint stock" discussion, which seemed to please many of the congregation. On Wednesday morning, September 4, they left for the Emerald Isle, to prospect Belfast and Dublin.

This parting is the only disagreeable feature. One just begins to enjoy the companionship when the day of parting arrives, and once again we are left to continue the struggle and trust in Him who has promised to be an "abiding" Comforter.

We are all feeling well in the work; and so far the opposition, instead of making us anxious for the work, has been of an encouraging nature in that it has proved to a demonstration the impregnability of the work we are privileged to represent. Much of the criticism has been petty and narrow-minded "sniping." One person has been making an attempt to get a big gun trained upon our position, but so far without success. Ever praying for the advancement of the truth,

Yours in bonds, J. W. RUSHTON.

NEW CANAAN, Connecticut, Sept. 17. Editors Herald:-Yesterday evening, in company with Brn. Stone and Little, I visited the tent over on the ridge, in charge of Brn. U. W. Greene and David Anderson. It stormed the previous evening and barred the meeting. It is a pleasant location, and the tent, with things provided and essential to service is in good condition. The brethren have been in this and adjoining communities for some time, and have been very successful in allaying prejudice, and also gaining the confidence and respect of the people, so that the feeling of social confidence and freedom was about the same had all of them been Saints. An excellent impression has been made on the community by the efforts of the brethren-upwards of twenty having been baptized, and the interest continues. It will soon be time to fold the tent and adopt other means of holding service: but halls and houses have already been tendered with the view of having the work continued during the fall and winter.

There was no mistake made in associating Bro. and Sr. Anderson and Bro. and Sr. Greene in tent work here this season. They have wrought industriously and effectively, endeared themselves to each other, to the Saints, and the community where they have labored. These two sisters have labored together with their husbands, in tent work, for the good cause, and all the time with domestic felicity, confidence, and esteem. So that Sr. Greene returns home carrying with her the good wishes, respect, and esteem of the people who have made her acquaintance; and Sr. Anderson goes to her western home alike appreciated and esteemed by those who know her. Who shall say that sisters cannot labor together and be of service to the cause?

As a manifestation of their appreciation of the work being done in their neighborhood, the citizens got up several entertainments, to raise means with which to aid the brethren in their mission work, the last one netting them about $60.00. All of this is as it should be. So credit is given to whom credit is due. New England people know how to treat guests, when so minded.

One open-hearted fellow expressed himself on the ministers thus: "That Anderson looks like the honestest man of the two." It is not important to note this, but as we do not often get so good one on Bro. Greene as this, concluded to drop it in as spice. Then it goes to show that while people are listening to sermons they are also trying to size up the men doing the talking. But then, how easy it is to miss your man. "Let him that is not guilty cast the first stone."

.Fraternally,

WM H. KELLEY.

WHEN WEEDING MY GARDEN.

Tune -"Bringing in the Sheaves."

Toiling in the morning, in the noon, and evening,

In the Master's service, as his Record reads:

Firm in gospel purpose, sin and vice discarding.

From ourselves and others, pulling out the weeds.

CHORUS:

Pulling out the weeds, Pulling out the weeds, From ourselves and others, Pulling out the weeds.

Pluck the weed of "tattling," strife's installed official:

Love thy errant brother, help him in his needs.

Move with gentle fingers life's obstructive briers,

Christlike in true mercy, pulling out the weeds.

CHORUS:

Pulling out the weeds, Pulling out the weeds, Christlike in true mercy, Pulling out the weeds.

Take delight in doing, duty hail with pleasure; Angels are recording life-eternal deeds, And the foe is ever seeds of error sowing, Never cease in earth-life, pulling out the weeds.

CHORUS:

Pulling out the weeds, Pulling out the weeds, Never cease in earth-life. Pulling out the weeds.

Waiting for the summons, names on pay-roll calling,

Each receive his penny for his faithful deeds:

Hear the welcome plaudit, Come my Father's blessed.

Enter home Celestial-rest from pulling weeds.

CHORUS:

Pulling out the weeds, Pulling out the weeds, Enter home Celestial, Rest from pulling weeds.

A. Smith, W. E. Peak, and J. H. Lake, and by an appeal made over my signature and sent to General Conference being found in error, falsely placing said officers before the church, I now make this statement and conf ssion, tendering these brethren my apology, and ask their pardon for the same.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Northeastern Illinois District: Dear Saints:-The Northeastern Illinois district conference held in Chicago, Illinois, September 7 and 8, 1901, having elected me to the office of district president, I feel it my duty to enter into the work intrusted to me. Being largely unacquainted with the district and its spiritual condition, I hope that all who have named the name of the good Master will examine themselves and see if there is nothing in their lives which contradicts our profession.

Now, dear Saints, it is my desire to get acquainted with you all face to face, but as this desire may never be realized, I want to get in touch with every one holding the priesthood authority in the district, with the exception of the general church missionaries.

I will kindly ask the presidents or those having charge of branches to write me an accurate condition of the branch over which they are placed. The object of this is to find out where my labors are most needed that I may direct them there first. Were my hands loose, I would certainly visit every branch in the district before the next conference in Plano: but as I am situated. having a large family, I must "labor for the bread that perisheth" and be content to direct my personal efforts to help those who must have assistance at once. For that reason a large part of my work will necessarily have to be done by correspondence; and it is my desire that every branch officer will see to it that the responsibility resting on him will be discharged in such a manner that the good Lord will commend him for so doing; for brethren, the conditions of the branches are largely what you make them and what you allow them to become. are neglectful and careless in the obligations you have assumed, the members are very liable to partake of the same spirit of carelessness. If you have unruly members, and allow them to carry out their hobbies and cause dissensions, you will soon see ruin following in that wake. "Purge ye out the iniquity which is among you; sanctify your-selves before me."—D. C. 43:3.

Brethren, if there are any abuses being carried on, which cause reproach to come to the fair name of the church, and you close your eyes to them, the responsibility lies at your door, and will have to be accounted for. Let us all adhere strictly to the law given for our guidance, and be saved thereby. I will be pleased to have anyone interested in the work, write me at any time; but write so certainly, that you will not be ashamed to own your letters.

Looking prayerfully for the ecoperation of every member of the district in pushing this work on to final victory, I am, in bonds, PHILEMON PEMENT.

10,555 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO, Ill.

ADDRESSES.

T. W. Williams, 636 East Twenty-First street, Los Angeles, California.

An innovation of far reaching industrial importance has recently been made by the Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia. With the aim of turning out a class of technically skillful mechanics and mechanical engineers, the company has set up an apprenticeship system offering to boys and young men a chance to supplement their school training with two, three or four years' experience in the locomotive works.

The Baldwin apprentices are divided into three classes. The first is composed of grammar school graduates, who serve four yearsusually between the ages of 17 and 21—at wages of 5, 7, 9 and 11 cents an hour, and receive a bonus of $125 at the end of their period of service. They are obliged to attend night school three evenings a week, and study Geometry, Algebra, Drawing, and Perspective, in order to be thoroughly familiar with the technical language used throughout the shops. The company, under contract to teach them the "art and mystery of a trade," provides that their work shall be changed with sufficient frequency to initiate each boy into all the details of his craft. The second class serve three years at 7, 9, and 11 cents an hour, and receive a bonus of $100. apprentices of this class are high school graduates, but they, too, are obliged to take the technical studies of the night school for a part of three years; and they, too, learn a The third class - the graduates of technical schools and colleges—serve for two years, not as apprentices but as employees. at 13 and 16 cents an hour. Their education, of course, is taken for granted.

Only a few, obviously, will ultimately enter the works: if all became employees of the company the system would be paralyzed in short order; but in full operation the school —for that is virtually what it is—will send out over a thousand finished mechanics every In twenty years this institution alone will have provided the community with twenty thousand of these skilled workmen .-

THE UTILIZATION OF WASTE.

There are many instances of published experiments in the utilization of waste which read as if they were intended to be facetious, although the investigators are wholly in ear One chemist made a wine jelly out of old boots, and was enthusiastic about itmore so, probably, than those who partook of it and did not learn the fact until later. Another converts old shirts into glucose, ferments it, distils off the alcohol, colors and flavors it, and produces a fine grade of whis-Still another scientific experimenter feeds his whole family with cakes containing a large amount of powdered sawdust, and is pleased to find that the diet is relished and digested.

Speaking of sawdust, it is a singular fact that in the United States this waste has been allowed to accumulate in various places until it has become a nuisance, especially when it has been allowed to run into rivers and choke up the channels, disfigure the shores, and in other ways make trouble. Although there are not a few methods of utilizing sawdust, but little attempt seems to have been made The amount of sawdust proin this country. duced has been reduced by the displacement of the circular saw by the band saw, which makes much less dust. There is, however, plenty of sawdust produced, and as a rule it does not find any application. In view of this state of affairs a brief mention of some of the utilizations of sawdust will be of in-

The first use, as would naturally occur to anyone, is to burn it. Several special forms of furnaces have been invented to do this ef-In some cases the sawdust is dried ficiently. before it is burnt, while in others it is dried in the furnace in which it is burnt. It can also be mixed with coal slack, spent dyewood, turf, peat, etc., and compressed into briquettes, which allows it to be sold for use in place of coal. As coal is often very highly priced in regions where sawdust is produced, there is an opportunity for a large profit. By the dry distillation of sawdust all the distillation products of wood are obtained, and this manufacture can be conducted as an adjunct to the working of wood in a way to insure a profit. The products obtained are gas, wood alcohol, acetic acid, tar, and oils. From the tar there have been obtained, benzole, toluole, zymole, cumole, paraffine, naphthalene, and hydrocarbons which are used in Carbolic the manufacture of analine colors. acid and creosote are also obtained. As a last product charcoal is left in the retorts.

By sieving out the coarser particles, mixing the remainder with various fillers and agglutinants, compressing, and heating, some very interesting materials have been made, in the way of artificial wood, plastic masses, etc. Such a material was brought out by Latry in Paris, and was made from prepared sawdust and blood. It formed a hard, black substance, which could be tooled and machined like wood. It took a high polish, and could be glued, lacquered, and gilded. Imitation marbles have also been made from the fine dust of certain woods and the dust of ivory and similar waste. A mixture of sawdust and phosphate of lime with a binder has been used as a material for taking casts of sculptures, and has been called "Similibois." Slabs for parquet floors have Slabs for parquet floors have also been made from sawdust, as well as plates for bas-reliefs, art castings, panels, and decorations. Terracotta lumber and artificial lumber are both instances of the utilization of sawdust. Sawdust compositions have also been used for sidewalks and dinner plates.

A long list could be given of explosives and varieties of gunpowder that have been made from sawdust. In some the sawdust is used as an absorbent, as with nitroglycerine, in others as a filler, while in still others it is converted into forms of pyroxiline. By heating sawdust with caustic alkali and sulphur, a brown dye is obtained which is cheap and fast, resisting both acids and alkalies, and dyeing cotton without a mordant. By heating sawdust with caustic alkali, oxalic acid is formed. A large amount of the oxalic acid on the market is made by this process.— Prof. Petu T. Austen in the September Forum.

A Most Lamentable Comedy is the title of a powerful novelette by Mr. William Allen White, which begins in the September 21 is-The Saturday Evening Post, of Phila-ia. This absorbing serial is a study of political hysterics—the story of a State gone mad. The scene of the novelette is a Western State laboring under the burdens of a panic The central figure is a grocery store demagogue, whose harebrained oratory captures the State convention. The story rises to a height of dramatic power and intensity rarely equalled in the fiction of the day.

New features of this edition will be an added chapter on Foreign Combinations, an appendix and a complete index, which was previously lacking.

A study of the life and word of Dr. Robert Koch, whose paper at the Tuberculosis Congress in London has provoked so much discussion, is contributed to the Review of Reviews for September by Dr. Hermann Biggs, the eminent bacteriologist of New York. Dr. Biggs gives a full and authoritative statement of Dr. Koch's relation to modern preventive medicine, controverting much of the ill-informed criticism that has recently appeared in the press and setting forth clearly and succinctly the methods followed by the Koch school of bacteriologists here and abroad, together with the results thus far attained.

Four nights on the nature and object of the punishment of the wicked, and the final redemption of the human race. Some important statistics showing the rapid increase of deaths among the heathen over their conversions to Christianity were used in this proposition, and which will be found invaluable evidence of God's redemptive work becaute the life.

THE Dow City reunion closed last Sunday night. Heavy rains fell Friday night and Saturday, but not a meeting was lost.

THE College opening exercises were a pleasant interruption to the usual routine. They consisted of vocal and instrumental selections by the Music department, readings by the department of Elocution, and an address by Elder Fred M. Smith. Professor Salisbury read the Scripture lesson and Elder S. V. Bailey offered prayer.

New students are still arriving; good classes in the languages, including German and French, have been organized, and the work is progress-CONTRIBUTOR. ing nicely.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE.

What is called the American Bible has made its appearance. It is a revised version, and the revisers are prominent American scholars. the new Bible, the Chicago Tribune for August 29 says:

The American revision, just out, is the outgrowth of differences on points of phraseology that existed at the time the English and American committees appointed to modernize the King James Bible finished their work. The American committee submitted for harmony's sake to the preferences of their English brethren, with the understanding, however, that their ideas should be incorporated in an appendix to the revision, and that after fourteen years they should be permitted to issue a revision of their own. This is the work that has just been placed on sale. The committee having the revision in charge has aimed to cut out many of the obsolete idioms of King James' time and clarify the meaning of obscure passages. The aim throughout has been to simplify and render the interpretation of scriptural passages less difficult.

The book also presents typographical innovations. The text is paragraphed, and the divisions are designated by figures wherever they occur. At the top of each page are headings indicating the contents and figures showing the scope covered. The paragraphs are much shorter than in the English revision. Understanding of the poetical books is made easier by arranging the portions that assume poetical form in consonance. There are fewer marginal notes than in the English edition. The word "saint" is omitted from the headings of the gospels.

The New York Journal quotes the preface as follows:

In now issuing an American edition, the American revisers, being entirely untram-meled by any connection with British revisers or British presses, have left themselves to be free to go beyond the task of incorporating the appendix in the text, and are no longer restrained from introducing into the text a large number of . . . emendations.

The Journal says it required considerable research to find who the revisers were, but from an unpublished report a record was found of them. The Journal says:

There were originally thirty-two appointed, only twenty-seven of whom served. Here are George E. Day, secretary; William Henry Green, Charles A. Aiken, T. W. Chambers, Thomas J. Conant, John DeWitt, George Emlen Hare, A. C. Kendrick, Bishop Alfred Lag. of Deleware: Matthew B. Riddle Emlen Hare, A. C. Kendrick, Bishop Alfred Lee, of Delaware; Matthew B. Riddle, Charles Short, Henry Boynton Smith, E. A. Washburn, Charles P. Krauth, Taylor Lewis, Charles M. Mead, Howard Osgood, Joseph Packard, Calvin E. Stowe, James Strong, C. A. Van Dyck, T. D. Woolsey, J. Henry Thayer, Ezra Abbott, J. K. Burr, Thomas Chase, Howard Crosby, Timothy Dwight, James Hadley, Horatio B. Hackett, and Charles Hodge.

Only a few of them have survived to wit-

Only a few of them have survived to witness the crowning point of their labors.

The Rev. Howard Osgood, one of the reisers of the Old Testament, said to an Evening Journal reporter:

"All Bibles, Hebrew, Greek, Syriac, Latin, German, French, English, are the results of many revisions, not to add to or take from them, but to obtain the most accurate text and translations. The revision under King James, 1611, followed a hundred years of repeated revisions. That revision was an admirable work of high scholarship in Hebrew, Greek, and English.

But so great has been the change in the meaning and usage of words that some translations, accurate in their day, now misrepresent the Hebrew and Greek, as well as the English, of three hundred years ago. 'Prewent' then meant to go before, meet; now it means to hinder. "Let" then signified to hinder; now it means to permit. "Lust" then, as in German now, meant pure pleasure, desire, joy; now it breathes vile passion. And so through a long list of words.

Another celebrated clergyman, a great authority on Biblical matters, says "that the new revision restores some passages which were altered in 1885. Thus the celebrated words of the Psalmist, 'I said in my haste, All men are liars,' Psalms 94:11. In the 1885 edition this was readered 'I said in my 1885 edition this was rendered, 'I said in my haste, All men are a lie.'

"The latter reading is Platonism pure and simple. It is an enunciation of Plato's theory of the unreality of individual things. And it also savors of the "Veil of Maya, the transitory, dreamlike nature of the universe, according to the Hindoo doctrine, a doctrine so entirely un-Hebraic that it is morally impossible to have been used by the Psalmist or possible to have been used by the Psalmist or to have even occurred to him.

"Perhaps the most far-reaching change made by the American revisers is the omission of 'yet' in the Gospel of St. John, 7:8. The passage is in the King James and the 1885 editions, 'Go ye up unto this feast. I go not up yet unto this feast.' In the new addition it reach ('Go ye up unto the feast.') edition it reads, "Go ye up unto the feast; I go not up unto this feast."

"The new reading will no doubt tend to revive the old controversy started by one of the great pagan enemies of Christianity in the early centuries who claimed that the Savior was guilty of a deception, inasmuch as he did go up to the feast after denying that he would go.

"It also strengthens the contention of Schopenhauer, who cited the same passage to prove, by the example of Jesus, that there are circumstances when it is perfectly moral to state what one knows to be untrue.

"A feature which will probably be noticed immediately by all who know their Bible, is the omission of the word 'Saint' in connecthe omission of the word 'Saint' in connection with the evangelists and other New Testament writers. Thus it is no longer. 'The Gospel According to St. Matthew,' but 'The Gospel According to Matthew.' And it is no longer 'The Acts of the Apostles,' but simply 'The Acts.' Neither is it any longer 'The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans,' but 'The Epistle of Paul to the Romans.'

"In the famous address of St. Paul to the Athenians, Acts 17:23, in the new revision, he no longer charges them with being 'some-what superstitious,' but says: 'Ye men of Athens, in all things I perceive ye are very religious.

"The new revision sometimes follows the same reading as the Vulgate, the Roman Catholic canon, where the 1885 revision departs from it; and sometimes the reverse is true. Thus, in St. John 7:8, which I men-tioned before, it follows the Vulgate, while the 1885 revision differs from it; but in the passage just quotedfrom St. Paul's address the 1885 revision follows the Vulgate, while the new revision departs from it."

The new revision continues the practice of previous editions and avoids the use of quotation marks.

POLYGAMY AND THE SLUMS.

In a short editorial paragraph, the Desertt News, in the semi-weekly edition for September 9, made an admission which our readers will be glad to see. The paragraph referred to is as follows:

It is stated that the Chinese minister and his wife intend to visit Utah, in order to "study polygamy." They will make a big mistake. Washington, D. C., New York City, or Chicago would furnish a much wider field for investigation and many times multiplied more object lessons than can be had in this state.

We are glad to know that the News recognizes and admits the parity of the doctrine of polygamy as it has been taught by the News in the past, and the illegitimate and universally condemned practices of evil-doers of Washington, Chicago, or New York. We are glad to see this admission that the practice of polygamy is on a par with the conditions of the slums of great cities. We have for years been crying out against the abominations of polygamy as were taught and practiced by the people whose organ the News is; and it is really gratifying to see that organ now make the admission that the conditions arising from the practice of that "doctrine which will exalt man beyond the angels" is on a par with the conduct of vile men and women in Chicago, New York, or Washington.

"THE WORKINGMAN AND THE CHURCH."

The Rev. William Rader, of the Third Congregational Church, of Los Angeles, recently delivered a sermon on the subject of "The Workingman and the Church." His text was Luke 4: 8, and among other things he is reported as saying:

When the workingman is in trouble he seeks the church, but he does not attend re-ligious services. Only three per cent of the workingmen of our large cities are church

An article in the New York Outlook says: "The church of today does not teach the principles of Christ, but is much given to show and pomp. The hearts of the workingmen turn toward Christianity, but the meetings are too insipid. The lodge, labor union, or saloon takes the place of the church. Christ's principles are not being presented in their simplicity. So long as the present conditions stand the workingmen will never become interested in the church, for the church is not interested in them."

There is enough truth in this to lead me to make the following observations:

First, The church is not keeping pace with Christianity. If a Christian church and nation fail to give an adequate representation of the Christianity of Jesus, they fail. The church is not adapted to the peculiar needs of the masses, as is Christianity. The saloon caters to a man's baser passions, but the church must meet his higher needs. Many persons in the United States do not attend church simply from choice. This is a reflection on the people and a criticism on the church. This mighty institution that is so philanthropic is not in dead earnest. The theatre is more popular than the church. We are here to save the world industrially, socially, politically, and personally.

Second, We must fight the Devil with his own methods Christianized. We must spiritualize the attractions of the saloon and theatre. If the church had the enterprise of these places we would increase our power one hundredfold.

Third, The three types of religion—doctrinal, emotional, and devotional—must be translated into real hard life. Let us carry our enthusiasm into things and our devo-tional spirit into our irreverent daily lives. The church of the people must be a church of tremendous life. The vitalization of rites, symbols, and creeds is the revival we need. The real purpose of the church is not luxury, but hard, continual work. We must make this world happier, change the character of the individual, trust with a greater fidelity the indwelling life of God, and hold without fault-finding and criticism to the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

BRO. C. R. DUNCAN DESIRES PRAYERS.

By letter from Bro. A. B. Hanson, from Colorado Springs, Colorado, we learn of Bro. Duncan's critical condition, resulting from pulmonary hemorrhages and heart failure. Bro. Duncan desires the earnest prayers of all the Saints that he may be spared to work for the cause he so dearly loves. He long has been an earnest and faithful worker, and we sincerely trust the prayers of the Saints will avail much in his behalf.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton in a recent letter to us inclosed the following

The HERALD readers were once requested to note mistakes in the Inspired Translation, that they might be corrected. Possibly one is in Ezekiel 48:17. East in one clause probably should be south.

The passage cited reads:

And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty.

It is evident that the word in italics should be south instead of east, as it is in the King James Translation. Those who have the Inspired Translation should make note of the correction. Thanks, Bro. Burton.

ACCORDING to the Chicago Tribune of August 29, the Indians of the Fond du Lac reservation, near Duluth, Minnesota, are asking that the reservation be opened to public settlement. About seven hundred Chippewas are living there, in a reservation of about

The one hundred thousand acres. Tribune states:

Nearly every family has taken land in severalty, and the reds are living like white men and citizens. It is this that has caused them to make the unusual request that their lands be opened to the whites. All their pine timber has been cut, and there is nothing left but hard woods and cedar.

In order that their severalty lands be fitted for cultivation they must be cleared, but un-der the law the Indians are unable to sell any of this timber. They cannot, therefore, clear the lands and make farms.

ANARCHISM AND ATHEISM.

The following editorial appeared in the Chicago Tribune for September 22. It is worthy a thoughtful reading:

Anarchists are always atheists. Their fundamental proposition that there is no right-ful government begins with the assertion that there is no God. If there is no God there is no moral government of the world, and in the general chaos it is every man for himself. If anarchy has any logic, anything beside its brutal hatreds, that is it.

When that typical Anarchist, the unsavory Johann Most, was in Chicago, in a meeting of Anarchists, speaking freely in German, he declared that the first thing they as Anarchists had to do was to "destroy every altar, to extinguish every religion, to tear God down from the heavens." What right, he said, would any man have to govern other men unless God gave him that right? "Down with God." In this Most was only a rabid echo of Karl Marx. The assassin of President McKinley, like Emma Goldman, has been blatant in protesting his atheism, declaring that there is no God, that he has "no use for God."

It is a remarkable fact, and one that will not soon be forgotten, that just when the assassin imagined he was doing something to usher in the new social condition, in which there would be neither God nor government of any sort, there came from the heart of the President such an acknowledgment of God as had the effect to waken in the hearts of all the people such a sense of the relation of God to human affairs as had never before in our history found more impressive utterance.

"CURE FOR LYNCHING."

The Kansas City Journal, in issue for August 30, in commenting editorially on the increase of mob law and the recent record of lynchings, brands "lynch law" as a species of anarchy which menaces society. A cure for lynching is suggested, the cure being taken from the recent action of a Georgia court which sent to prison for life a man who had been convicted of participating in the lynching of a negro. The cure suggested by the Journal is to treat the participants in a lynching as though they had committed murder,—that is, arraign them on charge of murder, and, if found guilty, punish them the same as other murderers. "As a deterrent of crime," says the Journal, "the vigorous enforcement of law is worth ten times as much as the violence of the mob."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. M. T. Short writes from Hebron, Nebraska, September 24:

Conference closed here yesterday with few in attendance. Bro. Caffall, at Bro. Belville's, was too ailing to be with us on Monday, and could not preach Sunday morning as announced. He will go home today. We are within seven miles of line between this state and Kansas, my field proper, where I will shortly return; but at present they want me to stay a brief while and preach, etc. Breth-ren Waldsmith, Porter, and others return home today. Crops are almost a failure, and the people are hard up. Saints are few and far between in these parts. They are feeling fairly well.

Bro. D. L. Harris writes from Abraham, Utah:

Bro. W. S. Pender and the writer have succeeded in creating quite an interest in this part, an entirely new place. There is talk of debate; but as yet it is only talk. We go next week still further south. Remember us to all the HERALD workers.

Sr. Maggie S. Coffman, New Hope, Virginia, September 22, writing of the recent death of Bro. O. E. Cleveland, savs:

There is only a small remnant of Saints left in this state and we will miss him, but we do not feel to murmur, for we know our loss is his eternal gain. Brethren and sisters, pray for us, that we may be faithful unto the end.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Walter J. Haworth has written and widely distributed a little tract entitled, "Do You Know?" He begins every paragraph with a "that," and every "that" is followed by a question which bears directly upon the differences existing between us and the Utah church. He has used the tract to offset the work of some of the Utah elders working in the Newcastle district. The tract is a good one, and will do good.

Bro. J. W. Rushton sends us from Scotland a copy of tract he has been using. It is a four page tract, entitled, "Can Belief Alone Save?" At the close an epitome of our faith is given, and this is followed by announcement of meetings at the church or hall in Hamilton.

By the Kendall County Record, we learn that Elder A. J. Keck was one of the speakers at the Plano memorial services September 19.

Sr. Mary E. Dickey writes from Viola, Illinois, September 27, stating that Bro. E. Pine has been seriously hurt by an explosion in a coal mine at Gilchrist, Illinois. Several ribs on his right side were broken and his right eye put out. He sustained severe bruises besides. He and his wife desire the prayers of the Saints, and would be glad to see Bro. Frank Russell if he is where he can reach

The HERALD editors desire to secure a copy of Charles Thompson's little book on "Evidences in Proof of the Book of Mormon." It was printed in 1841, at Batavia, New York. shall be pleased to hear from those having copies.

We have received a copy of a tract by E. K. Evans, entitled "Why God does not Kill the Devil?"

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY. NO. 3.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, September 1, 1901.

Reported for HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen.

I am glad to meet with you again tonight and trust that our meetings may be of continued interest to all. When we closed last Sunday evening. we had just arrived at that point in the history where Joseph Smith and Emma Hale had united in marriage. It may be possible, and some have thought, that we did not make it quite clear enough on one point, and that was that this young lady was of age and had a legal right to contract marriage with whomsoever she pleased. and hence it could not have been a theft though he took her contrary to This is the wishes of her parents. true. It has been suggested by some that they do not believe he would have taken her if she had not been of age. Of this I do not know. I am satisfied of one thing, that is, if he would not have stolen her under the circumstances, he would not have stolen at all; for a young man that will not steal a girl whom he loves and who loves him, will not steal any. thing. You can trust him.

After the marriage in January he worked with his father upon the farm, and in the fall following, on the 22d day of September, 1827, four years after he had first had the opportunity of seeing the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon is translated, he was permitted to obtain them, to take them into his possession; but in taking them he took them under strict orders; very strict was his counsel from the angel regarding them. Allow me to read to you what he says:

At length the time arrived for obtaining the plates, the Urim and Thummim, and the Breastplate. On the twenty-second day of September, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven, having went as usual at the end of another year to the place where they were deposited, the same heavenly messenger delivered them up to me, with this charge that I should be responsible for them; that if I should let them go carelessly or through any neglect of mine, I should be cut off; but that if I would use all my endeavors to preserve them, until he the messenger should call for them, they should be protected.

As I have remarked before since we began this series of lectures, the great good we get out of history is to observe the principles that are involved and to learn where we can be benefited, both by the successes achieved and the failures made by those of whom we read.

I wish to invite your attention to the instruction here given. There is a lesson in it. Though this sacred charge was placed in the hands of Joseph Smith, he was given to understand that he could not depend wholly and solely upon divine power to protect them unless he was diligent and faithful in his duty; but if he would use all care that lay in his power to protect these plates and care for them, then the promise was made that they should be protected, and where he was not competent to do, the Lord would do for him. We can learn something from this, and that is, whatever sacred trust is put into our possession, whatever sacred duty is placed upon us, whatever charge we have to keep, God desires and expects us to be faithful and diligent and to do all that lies in our power, expecting him to assist us and supply the deficiency where we are wanting; but we can no more sit down and depend upon God to do the work alone, than Joseph Smith could expect God to protect those plates should he take no care regarding them. He was expected to be vigilant and faithful.

God expects us to be diligent and watchful and faithful in discharging the duties incumbent upon us; and if we fail, he will not always do what we may desire him to do. He will not take the sole responsibility and do all the work while we are idle. It is said. we are coworkers with God, and we are so in more ways than one.

Joseph said further:

I soon found out the reason why I had received such strict charges to keep them safe, and why it was that the messenger had said that when I had done what was required at my hand, he would call for them; for no sooner was it known that I had them than the most strenuous exertions were used to get them from me.

We understand from that statement that he did not make any secret of having them. I do not know whether that was wise or not. It may have accomplished more good had he not let it be known publicly that he had them, for as soon as people knew that he had them there was every effort made to obtain them from him, and he was very much retarded in his work. I think that there was no secret made of his having them. Of course everybody was curious to see them. You cannot blame them very much, either; but we can and do blame them for taking dishonorable means to see them. If there were any such things in our neighborhood, we would want to see them, but I trust we would be These people, honorable about it. many of them, resorted to dishonorable means to try to obtain them, determined to accomplish the end, if not by fair means by foul means; and failing to obtain them, they began circulating all kinds of reports about the Smith family in order to justify their own questionable conduct. these reports are still in circulation and have not lost anything since that time; such things hardly ever lose when they are told and retold, and I have found from the examination of past records and history compared with present reports that these things have not lost anything.

I wish to draw a comparison right here that this story-telling reminds me of, when I see that things once surmised are now stated as a positive fact. I was reading about a certain animal called the giraffe. According to the Darwinian theory it is stated as follows: First, The giraffe had a short neck, low shoulders, and a high rump. Second, It is possible he gained his long neck and high shoulders by reaching up after the leaves of trees that he had obtained a relish for in some way. Third, It is very probable the neck became long and the shoulders high by reaching up after the leaves of the trees, for which he had in some way cultivated an abnormal relish. Fourth, From the evidence we have presented it appears positive that the giraffe in the beginning had low shoulders and a short neck, and developed a long neck and high shoulders by reaching after the leaves of the trees for which he had a peculiar liking. In the first place they suppose a possibility, which leads to the conclusion that it is highly probable, and these two links complete the testimony of a demonstrated fact.

Those who are telling these stories now and those who have told them all the time have forgotten the wellknown rule of law (and even lawyers forget it, it has not been very long since I was reading some stuff from a lawyer where he forgets this rule) that the accused is always entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt, they suppose a thing might have been done by so and so and then go on and draw from the possibility a strong probability, which forms positive evidence of guilt, instead of giving him the benefit of the doubt. But we cannot dwell longer upon that. I want you to remember always the accused has the benefit of every reasonable doubt, and if there is such a doubt you have no right to conclude he is guilty.

The persecution became so intolerable at Manchester that Joseph was under the necessity of leaving there; they were constantly troubling him with their efforts to get the plates, and he could not have the time or opportunity to continue the work of translating the records. So he made up his mind to go to his wife's father's in Pennsylvania. It seems the old folks had become reconciled. He was unable to go as his financial condition was not very strong, and hence he was not in a condition that he could move down to Pennsylvania very easily. But when he made up his mind to go there was a provision made for him. Right at the time when he

to his assistance. That friend, we are told, was a respectable farmer living in the township of Palmyra. He had heard all these reports against the young man and his family, and he had no doubt heard the young man's statement in regard to this matter, and, moved perhaps by some higher power, or in the greatness of his heart, he came to the young man's rescue in the hour of need, and, without any solicitation whatever, presented him with fifty dollars for the purpose of helping with this work, and with this fifty dollars he removed to the place where his wife's parents lived, and commenced his work. While there, he tells us, he copied a considerable number of characters from the plates in his possession. (I might tell you many incidents in connection with his removal to Pennsylvania and how the plates were preserved, etc., but there is not time.) When he reached his father-in-law's place he copied a considerable number of the characters, and in February, 1828, (the next February after he obtained the plates,) this same farmer who helped him with the fifty dollars came there. His name was Martin Harris. He came down to Pennsylvania, and by agreement with Joseph Smith got some of the characters and took them to New York for the purpose of presenting them to well-known linguists, who would understand the language if anybody did. As I understand from reading the history, he took some of the characters with a translation of them, and he also took other characters that had not been translated. Accounts differ as to where he presented them first; some accounts would lead us to suppose he went first to Professor Anthon and then to Doctor Mitchill, while others say he went first to Doctor Mitchill and then to Professor Anthon. However that may be, he presented these characters with the translation and also the untranslated ones to Professor Anthon and Doctor Mitchill. have not anything from Doctor Mitchill regarding it; his statement if he ever made one has not been published, nor did Martin Harris say anything about what Doctor Mitchill said, only that he corroborated what had been said by Professor Anthon. He said when he showed the characters to Professor Anthon, he presented both copies, and when he presented those that were translated together with the translation, the Professor "stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian.' He presented those not translated. and the Professor told him they were Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic, and said they were true characters, and he told Martin Harris if was in need of a friend, a friend came he would bring him the plates he you could not tell whence they came, would translate them; but Martin Harris told Professor Anthon these plates were sealed, or a portion of them were, and he was not permitted to bring them, and Professor Anthon said, "I cannot read a sealed book."

I have not time in this course of lectures to refer you to the harmony that exists between this and the Scriptures, but I would invite you all to take the 29th chapter of Isaiah and read it and compare it with this account given by Martin Harris. There we are told a book was to come forth and that the learned would say, "I cannot read a sealed book," while the unlearned would make the excuse that he was not learned. The prophecy goes on to state the book was to be read, the supposition is that it was to be read by the unlearned man. Such was the case at least in this history, and we think it was a fulfillment of that prediction.

Professor Anthon has made one or two statements regarding this in which he seeks to throw discredit on the statement made by Martin Harris. He said there was a plain looking countryman called upon him with certain characters; so far Anthon and Harris agree; these witnesses agree in regard to the visit. But, says Professor Anthon, the stories told by Martin Harris in regard to his saying those characters were Egyptian, etc., were all untrue, that there were no such characters, and goes on to say they were Hebrew and Greek letters, some of them turned wrong side up, and that they were copied from the Mexican Calendar, but copied in such way as not to betray the source from which they came, and the whole ended in a rude delineation of a circle, divided into various compartments.

That is his story about it.

I want to call your attention to the fact that some of Professor Anthon's statement is positively untrue, so far as the description of the characters is concerned. The paper has been preserved, I saw it some years ago, as have several others, in the possession of David Whitmer, and I believe that all parties agree that it is the genuine, our enemies, at least, have recognized the characters in Mr. Whitmer's hands as genuine, that they are the identical characters, and have themselves presented facsimiles of the same to scholars for examination. We have been fortunate enough also to obtain the Mexican Calendar given by Humboldt, and we have had it photographed. It is a little amusing to read Professor Anthon's statement that the characters presented by Martin Harris were copied from the Mexican Calendar, and copied in such a way as not to betray the source from which they came. If it be true that they were copied in such a way that then they would not be the characters on the Mexican Calendar at all. If they were the same characters found upon the Calendar we could tell from whence they were derived. There is among the characters that Martin Harris took to Professor Anthon no rude delineation of a circle. You cannot find it there; nor are the characters like those upon the Mexican Calendar. He has wilfully misrepresented them or his memory has failed him. The story of Martin Harris is a very reasonable one, more consistent than the statement of a man who when he described the characters did not describe them correctly. I say we have the Mexican Calendar photographed and I believe Bro. F. E. Cochran has copies of the photograph which can be obtained by anyone curious to examine it.

Again Professor Anthon gave as his theory in regard to this matter that it was an attempt made by some one to defraud Martin Harris of his money. Martin Harris had told him that he was thinking of giving money towards the Book of Mormon, and he said when hearing this instead of considering it a hoax he considered it a plan to defraud this simple farmer of his money. According to Professor Anthon's theory, a swindler appears up there in western New York and gets around Martin Harris and tells him, "I have discovered a record, that is going to be a great benefit to the human family when it is published and I want you to subscribe money towards the publishing of it," and this scamp puts the characters right in his hands and says, "You go down to New York and show these characters to some learned men." This is the last thing a rogue would have done. He never would have sent him down there to learned men with evidence in his hands to detect the fraud. If he was trying to deceive this farmer, he would have said, "Do not go there;" he would have done everything in his power to keep him from going there. That is not a tenable theory, and I am surprised that an intelligent man like Professor Anthon would have introduced such a theory. Joseph was not a very smart rascal according to this theory. These circumstances, it occurs to me, proved the sincerity of Joseph Smith, to say the least. Joseph Smith believed these characters were genuine. You may say he was mistaken, if you will; you may say he had found something that deceived him and led him astray; but no intelligent man would say that he was aware that it was a fraud, and then took the very best means in the world to have the fraud detected by sending a man to have the characters examined.

There have been all sorts of stories told by men in regard to these characters, but let that be as it may, we know that there was a book produced; that book is before us now, and we have all had the privilege of its examination and comparison with the Word of God as received by all Christians. By a fair comparison we will be better able to judge of its merits than we are by the stories that have been circulated that are so conflicting.

Martin Harris goes back to Pennsylvania, his confidence in the record is not shaken, though Professor Anthon told him it was a fraud, and when he told the Professor how the plates were obtained, that an angel of God had shown the man obtaining them where they would be found and had permitted him to take possession of them, he said, "There is no such thing as angels in our time," and tried to convince Martin Harris that it was a mistake. He went back and commenced to write for Joseph Smith. When he had written one hundred and sixteen pages he became very anxious to show this record to others. He wanted to show it to his family and his friends, and he persuaded Joseph Smith to go and inquire of the Lord if he could not be permitted to take the copy and show it to his family and others. At first they were forbidden to do it; but they continued to importune for the privilege, continued to solicit God for his consent, and finally they obtained consent; and Martin Harris having obtained his wish and the manuscript being placed in his hands, took it home. I have no idea the man intended then to do anything wrong in regard to it. He took it home and he tells us he laid it away carefully; but somehow it got away from him, he lost possession of it; then he had trouble regarding it, and the Lord was displeased, and we are told Joseph Smith lost his gift of translating. The Urim and Thummim were taken from him and the plates were returned to the angel on his demand, and these men were in trouble. Why? Because they were not satisfied when they had been instructed what to do, but continued to supplicate God to be permitted to do what they had been told was not best for them to do. The Lord in permitting them to do it gave opportunity for a lesson not only to them but to others as well. It is possible that others, if they follow that example and continue to tease the Lord to permit them to do other than he has counseled to do, may have permission granted. I cannot say the approval of the Lord be obtained, but permission granted, but always to the sorrow of those who are not satisfied to do what they are instructed is wise for them to do. Then when we are satisfied that a thing is for the best and is wise for us, we ought not to desire permission to do something else. This was a serious lesson. These men suffered and suffered severely because they supplicated God to allow them to do what they were counseled not to do. They lost the gift for a season. Joseph tells us of the severe trials they passed through because of it. I presume these trials did him good afterwards, and that he learned the lesson that when he was instructed to do a thing he ought to do it and ask no further questions regarding it, or, at least not ask to be excused from doing what he was instructed to do. It was a severe lesson, but a very wholesome This is one of the mistakes the man made. We told you in the beginning of these lectures that we ought not to excuse the mistakes that we read of in history. These mistakes are as valuable to us as are the successes. It is not the history that is written for the purpose of lionizing somebody that we want; we want to benefit by their mistakes as well as their triumphs.

But, says some one, there is something peculiar about that. The Lord, we are told, provided for this loss in this way. He instructed Joseph Smith not to translate the record that he had translated before, for the one hundred and sixteen pages that had been translated were in the hands of enemies: and he said, if you do reproduce it, they have changed it and will produce the copy as an evidence that your translation is not correct, and therefore the Lord said he would permit him to translate from another record covering the same history of the people that the Book of Mormon is an account of. By producing another record instead of the one that had been stolen, it would disarm the enemy. Before we conclude that the Lord was overruled and that his purpose was interfered with by this act of men, we would have to prove it was his intention to preserve the first record translated; but is it not reasonable to suppose that the order followed was determined upon for the sake of the lesson taught by it, and that God intended the first record should take the course it did, and that his design was that the second should be the one preserved. I think that is as reasonable as any other thought that could be presented, and whether it was his purpose to present the first or the last, we have this reflection to present before you and that is, that this was not the first time a similar occurrence happened and that, too, by the direction of the Almighty. If God's purpose was frustrated, then, it is not the first time that such a thing happened. Let me invite your attention to the 36th chapter of Jeremiah. I shall not read all the connection, but enough to give you an idea of what took place. It appears that a roll had been written

(the records were anciently written and rolled up and unrolled as they were read) by the command of God. We read in the 20th verse:

And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

They did not take the record to the king, but they told him all the words.

So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll; and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber. And Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes that stood beside the king. Now the king sat in the winter house in the ninth month; and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him. And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with a penknife, and cast it into the fire which was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

Here was another record burned up by the king, and they had been instructed by the Lord to write it.

In the 27th verse, we read:

Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah, saying, Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

He was to reproduce it in another roll. Going on down to verse 32 we read the culmination of this.

Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many like words.

This is a parallel to the case so far as the reproduction of a record in place of one destroyed is concerned. We are told that Joseph Smith translated in place of the one hundred and sixteen pages, from a fuller account than the former; and in this Jeremiah had reproduced the words that were in the burned roll and many other like words. It is a parallel case. If the Lord's purpose was frustrated in the one case it was in the other. If you say that this story is contrary to the character of the Lord, that he should undertake to do a work and not finish it, you will have to remember that such a thing was done in Bible times; if one is out of harmony with your idea of right, so was the other. Is it not possible that your idea may need correction, instead of the record?

Joseph Smith did not resume the work of translating immediately after he obtained the plates again, for he was not in circumstances that he could. We are told that it was impossible for him to proceed very rapidly with his work for the reason that he was in indigent circumstances, and his wife, who had been his scribe. having her own household cares to look after, could not write all the time, and the work was proceeded with very slowly, and Joseph had to stop and go to work with his hands to obtain means to sustain himself and wife, and therefore the work was hin-In this condition he prayed earnestly to the Lord to send him a scribe. He was not able to hire one; it was impossible for him to do any more than he did do. They were doing all they could. Joseph was working for his living and Emma keeping the house. When he had time to work on the record he did it. They were diligent. He called upon the Lord to send him a scribe. His father was still living at Manchester, New York; and about that time, that same winter, a young man came into the neighborhood to teach the school, and he boarded with Mr. Smith. And while boarding there he heard this story of the gold plates, and how this son of his host had the plates in his possession. They talked to him about these things; and finally he told Mr. and Mrs. Smith, father and mother of Joseph, that he felt impressed that he would sometime have the privilege of writing for Joseph. In the spring, Samuel H. Smith, brother of Joseph, at the solicitation of this young man, went with him to Pennsylvania where Joseph was. There is a discrepancy of ten days between the account of Joseph and Oliver Cowdery as to when he arrived there. I do not know how that occurred. One thing it proves, that they did not make up their records together, or they would have had the dates just alike. probably a typographical error in publishing the account. There has been a mistake made and it may be possible that the mistake was made from memory; I do not presume to account for it. But, anyhow, they agreed when they met to pursue the work together. Oliver Cowdery very willingly consented because of the manifestation he had received that he would have the privilege of writing for Joseph. It was April 15, Joseph says; and Oliver Cowdery says April 5. They were very ready to enter into an agreement, for Joseph had prayed for a scribe; and he says he had been told that one would surely be forthcoming. Oliver Cowdery went there because he felt it was his duty to go, and henceforth they worked together in the translation of the plates of the Book of Mormon. One reason I want to call your attention to this point is that some of the writers against the work have abandoned an old theory that we may speak of in the future regarding the Book of Mormon, and one of the late writers against the church has it that Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith manufactured it. He savs. Mormon chronology agrees that Oliver Cowdery was connected with Joseph Smith in every stage of the development of Mormonism." This is an vestigation.

Joseph Smith claimed to have error. seen the plates in 1823, five years before. He received his vision in his fifteenth year; and if the man ever concocted a fraud, it was when a boy of that age, that the plan was developed or was developing, and the first stages of it were at that time. These accounts had their existence before Oliver Cowdery ever heard of it. He never heard of it until he came into the neighborhood to teach the school; and in 1828 he came to Joseph, and then he was Joseph's scribe while the book was being translated. .

They continued the work until May 15 without interruption; then there occurred something I want to dwell upon in our next effort, with reference to their inquiring of the Lord further regarding what they should do with reference to the ordinances of the gospel. They had gone as far as they had information to go, but they needed to be instructed of God before they attempted to organize the church. It may be that their minds were engaged on this point. The subject of organization had occurred to Joseph we know, for the angel that appeared to him in those annual visits talked to him about the kingdom of God. Joseph and Oliver now inquired of the Lord as to how they should proceed, and in our next we want to give you an explanation as to what transpired. Remember these men did not believe they had wisdom enough to organize a church, or authority within themselves to act in the name of the Lord. They acknowledged that they were entirely without authority to proceed, and prayed to the Lord to know.

Right here I wish you to mark this point: It is sometimes thought Latter Day Saints claim more than anybody else. Some say our claims are too great, or of such a character that they cannot accept them, and accuse us of being boastful. So far as my experience is concerned, Latter Day Saints claim less than anybody else. I have found in reading history, and by association with men who are representing this work now, that they never have claimed what others have. Others have claimed they had a perfect right and sufficient authority to preach the gospel and officiate in the ordinances without a special call from God. But these men, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, said: "We are helpless, we cannot move, we have not the right nor the authority to move unless God shall direct;" and they went by themselves silently into the woods, without any public demonstration, and there prayed before God and asked for instruction, because they knew not what else to do, and they could not go on until God had endowed them. Such is the history of their work, as will appear upon in-

"PROVE ALL THINGS: HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD."

Under this caption I shall undertake to lay before the HERALD readers a position that is not very generally understood as I see it; and while I do this the sole object in view is to present the matter herein to those whose ability and understanding, both natural and spiritual, may be superior to mine, and if the positions therein are not scriptural or tenable, that they may correct me and I may be able to present the matter in its true light. My attention was called to this when I read the article in the HERALD for September 4, from the pen of Bro. S. K. Sorensen, entitled "What of the Times?" The portion of said article that attracts my attention in particular refers to the second chapter of Daniel's prophecy. I am aware some advocate we should not occupy our minds in trying to solve the prophecies of Daniel and of John the Revelator; but I wish conditions were such that we could fully solve them. But myself and others are sometimes called upon to defend the faith of this body in public discussion, and when we are obliged to meet our Adventist friends, especially, we must be able in some degree to explain the statements of those prophets. Fearlessly, then. I shall undertake the examination of the second chapter of Daniel's prophecy, believing that if I am in error some brother will correct me.

The story of how Daniel was brought into the house of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, is found in the first chapter of Daniel; and in the second chapter we find this king, Nebuchadnezzar, had a wonderful dream, and the dream so troubled him that he could not sleep. He ordered that the astrologers, the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans be brought to show him his dreams,

And the king said unto them, I have dreamed a dream, and my spirit was troubled to know the dream -Daniel 2: 3.

But with all their wisdom they were not able to tell the dream. Then the king ordered that all the wise men of Babylon be slain, but Daniel asked that the king give him time and he would tell his dream, also the interpretation. So Daniel went to his house and made the thing known to his three companions and they asked the God of heaven to reveal to them the king's matter; and God did so. revealing unto Daniel the dream and also the interpretation thereof. And in the thirty first verse of this second chapter Daniel says unto the king:

Thou, O king, sawest, and beheld a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible.

And I ask the reader to follow me with this image very carefully as this image was to develop in parts, beginning at the head, while the natural man had his growth together. Each part of the image represents a kingdom or power that would arise; and while some referred to, and all others with whom I have conversed upon this subject, say that only four kingdoms are represented by the image, I think I see at least fifteen. And now let us proceed to find them. Verse 37 says:

Thou, O king, art a king of kings, And the last clause verse 38 says:

Thou art this head of gold.

This is one kingdom. Verse 39 speaks of two more that shall arise, which makes three; and verse 40 speaks of another that shall arise, which makes the fourth. Verse 41 speaks of a kingdom represented by the feet and toes, which makes five kingdoms, after which the kingdom would be divided into ten kingdoms, making, as stated, fifteen in all. Now let us go back to the head of gold, the kingdom that was presided over by Nebuchadnezzar, and ask, How came he in possession of that kingdom?

Was it a temporal kingdom only, or was it both a temporal and spiritual kingdom? for if we should find that God had anything to do in making him king, then by the wording of Doctrine and Covenants, section 28, paragraph 9, we are led to believe that so far as God recognized him king he was spiritual king, for it reads:

Wherefore, verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children

Now turn with me and read verses 37 and 38:

Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for [the reason of this] the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all.

Now, if the God of heaven gave him this kingdom, he surely gave him a law by which that kingdom should be governed, and as God never gives a law but a spiritual law, was it not then a spiritual kingdom he gave to the king? But, says the objector, God only gave him the kingdom in the sense that he permitted him to have it. If this be true, then with equal propriety I might say that God only gave the spiritual law to govern that kingdom, in the sense that he permitted him to have it. But the history of that country (Babylon), as I understand, tells that the kings for a time were head of both church and state, as many are today.

And thus we see the first kingdom showed itself in the head of gold. After Nebuchadnezzar arose another kingdom and took from Nebuchadnezzar his power and glory, because his heart had gone from God, and he had set to his lusts, women and wine, which displeased God then as now. The Medes and Persians, the second kingdom, is now developed in the image. Again, history repeats itself, and the Medes and Persians became exalted above measure, the Grecians came against them, and wrenched from them the kingdom, making the third kingdom in the development of the image; and they in turn were displaced by the Romans (pagan Rome). Do not conflict this Rome, as represented by the legs of the image, the iron kingdom, with papal Rome. We find that the Grecians represent the belly and thighs of the image, leaving the legs from the knees down to the feet to represent the iron or fourth kingdom. This Roman, or iron kingdom, was in full sway during the life of Christ and the apostles, Cæsar being at the head of that kingdom. But Daniel tells of still other kingdoms that would arise, the fifth one being represented by the feet of the image, and here begins the great difference of opinion. Many say that from pagan Rome, the iron kingdom, came forth the ten toe kingdoms. Did you ever see toes growing on the legs, and no feet? Notice the dates 456 A. D., to 476 A. D., the ten toes (or kingdoms) had their beginning and development. But where is the kingdom represented by the feet? Where is papal Rome, she who subdued pagan Rome? She is the kingdom represented in the feet of the image, and yet she did not come into power, at the very earliest, sooner than 538

By the above reasoning the whole ten toe kingdoms were completely developed sixty-two years before there were any feet on the image. Will this do? I think not and will give my reasons.

As before stated the image was to develop in parts, beginning at the head, and before we get toes we must have feet from which they may grow. More than that. Daniel tells us in verse 44 that in the days of these kings (the ten toes and feet) the God of heaven would set up a kingdom, and, if you answer in the days of the ten toe kingdoms given, then the kingdom we represent is wrong-too late in the world's history. But let us take another view of the situation. Papal Rome subdues pagan Rome, and that not earlier than 538; this makes the fifth kingdom of the image. After that ten toe kingdoms appear, and according to the development of the former portion of the image, these toes must come from the feet, or from papal Rome; and I ask, Did the Lombards or Saxons of the year 476 come from Rome, that did not exist earlier than 538? It would hardly seem so.

Again I ask, What is papal Rome? Is she not a spiritual kingdom, having temporal power also? Then she seems to me to fill the bill equally well with others that preceded her; and to sum up the matter, Daniel tells us in verse 44:

And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed [Christ's kingdom in the days of the apostles was destroyed]: and the kingdom shall not be left to other peo-ple, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for

Now I ask, When was this kingdom of God set up? Latter Day Saints answer me, About the year 1830. Agreed. Then what was to be in the days when God sets up his kingdom? Daniel says, these kings, the ten toes and the feet. Again a question, Were these eleven kingdoms to be temporal governments, or were they spiritual kingdoms or governments? Let us look at the one from whom the ten were to come. Papal Rome; is she not chiefly a spiritual kingdom or government? You will answer, yes. Then is it not just to conclude that her offspring, her children, her daughters, if you please, would be chiefly spiritual kingdoms also? And remember that God's kingdom is to break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms. Can any man show me where this kingdom of God is sent to break down, to consume any earthly, temporal government, such as Germany, Britain, France? Is it not written in our Epitome of Faith that to worship God in Spirit and in truth does not require a violation of the constitutional law of the land; this or any other land? Is it not then wrong to argue that the purpose direct of God's kingdom was to overthrow temporal governments?

Now to another position. What was that kingdom that the God of heaven was to set up? Was it not a spiritual kingdom, a church? I will here note that within the past month I heard Apostle Joseph Luff prove conclusively that the words kingdom and church were used synonymously. If this rendering be true, then we could read without doing violence. "in the days of these kingdoms, shall the God of heaven set up a church." But here again we run up against another stumbling block. For if the word kingdom, when speaking of God's kingdom, means a church, what does the other word in the same verse mean where it is kingdoms? Does it not also mean churches? And would we do violence to the verse if we should read: "And in the days of these churches shall the God of heaven set up a church that shall never be destroyed, and it shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these churches, and it shall stand forever?" What think you, reader?

Now let us summarize a little.

When we arrive at the feet of the image, the fifth kingdom, we find papal Rome represented: and as the ten temporal governments named by many were all in existence before Rome, they cannot then have come from her, as Daniel said they would come. So we will be obliged to look elsewhere for those ten kingdoms. We find also that from the earliest possible date, 538, to about 1507, papal Rome held supreme authority, and at that time a kingdom or church, was broken off from her, Martin Luther being its king, after which followed Ulrick Zwingli, John Calvin, John Knox, Henry the Eighth, John Wesley, Rodger Williams, William Miller, Alexander Campbell, and the Fox Girls, with Spiritualism. I have not tried to give them in order. Daniel said they would mingle themselves with the seed of men, but would not cleave one to another. Is this not true? And as all these kingdoms were in existence when God set up his kingdom in 1830, it seems to me very clear that herein is the correct solution of the second chapter of Daniel.

Let us for truth's sake hear from you, brethren.

PRECIOUS PEARLS.-NO. 7. GATHERED FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

BY WILLIAM HAWKINS.

And when Jesus had spoken these words, he looked upon the twelve whom he had chosen, and said unto them, Remember the words which I have spoken; for behold, ye are they whom I have chosen to minister unto Therefore I say unto this people. you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on; is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them; are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? consider the lilies of the field how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arraved like one of these: wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, even so will he clothe you, if ye are not of little faith; therefore, take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all But seek first the sied in thy name? and in thy name these things.

kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you: take therefore no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself, sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

And when Jesus had spoken these words, he turned again unto the multitude, saying, Verily, verily I say unto you, Judge not, that ye be not judged: for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull the mote out of thine eye; and behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then thou shalt see clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye. Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you. Ask, and it shall be given unto you; seek. and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you; for every one that asketh, receiveth, and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened. what man is there of you, whom, if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father who is in heaven give good things to them that ask him? Therefore all things whatsoever ve would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets.

Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat: because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves; ye shall know them by their fruits: do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit: a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit: every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and cast into the fire; wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophehave cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

Therefore, whoso heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man who built his house upon a rock, and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, who built his house upon the sand, and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it.

And when Jesus had ended these sayings, he cast his eyes round about on the multitude, and said unto them, Behold ye have heard the things which I have taught before I ascended to my Father; therefore whoso remembereth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, him will I raise up at the last day.

And Jesus perceived that there were some among them, who marveled and wondered what he would concerning the law of Moses; for they understood not the saying, that old things had passed away, and that all things had become new. And he said unto them, Marvel not that I said unto you, that old things had passed away, and that all things had become new. Behold, I say unto you, that the law is fulfilled that was given unto Moses. Behold, I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel; therefore the law in me is fulfilled, for I have come to fulfill the law, therefore it hath an end. Behold, I do not destroy the prophets. for as many as have not been fulfilled in me, verily, I say unto you shall all be fulfilled. And because I said unto you, that old things hath passed away. I do not destroy that which hath been spoken concerning things which are to come: for behold the covenant which I have made with my people, is not all fulfilled; but the law which was given unto Moses hath an end in me.

Behold, I am the law, and the light; look unto me, and endure unto the end, and ye shall live, for unto him that endureth to the end will I give eternal life. Behold, I have given unto you the commandments; therefore keep my commandments. And this is the law and the prophets; for they truly testified of me.

And Jesus said unto those twelve whom he had chosen, Ye are my disciples; and ye are a light unto this people, who are a remnant of the house of Joseph. And behold, this is the land of your inheritance; and the Father hath given it unto you.

And not at any time hath the Father given me commandment that I should tell it unto your brethren at Jerusalem; neither at any time hath the Father given me commandment that I should tell unto them concerning the other tribes of the house of Israel. whom the Father hath led away out of the land. This much did the Father command me, that I should tell unto them, that other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd. And now because of stiffneckedness and unbelief, they understood not my word; therefore I was commanded to say no more of the Father concerning this thing unto them. But, verily, I say unto you, that the Father hath commanded me, and I tell it unto you, that ye were separated from among them because of iniquity: therefore it is because of their iniquity that they know not of you. And verily I say unto you again, that the other tribes hath the Father separated from them; and it is because of their iniquity that they know not of them. And verily, I say unto you, that ye are they of whom I said, Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd. And they understood not, for they supposed it had been the Gentiles; for they understood not that the Gentiles should be converted through their preaching; and they understood me not that I said they shall hear my voice; and they understood me not that the Gentiles should not at any time hear my voice; that I should not manifest myself unto them, save it were by the Holy Ghost. But behold, ye have both heard my voice and seen me, and ye are my sheep, and ye are numbered among those whom the Father hath given me. And verily, verily, I say unto you, that I have other sheep, which are not of this land; neither of the land of Jerusalem; neither in any parts of that land round about, whither I have been to minister: for they of whom I speak, are they who have not as yet heard my voice; neither have I at any time manifested myself unto them. But I have received a commandment of the Father, that I shall go unto them, and that they shall hear my voice, and shall be remembered among my sheep, that there may be one fold, and one shepherd; therefore I go to shew myself unto them. And I command you that ye shall write these sayings, after I am gone, that if it so be that my people at Jerusalem, they who have seen me, and been with me in my ministry, do not ask the Father in my name, that they may receive a knowledge of you by the Holy Ghost, and also of the other tribes whom they know not of, that these sayings which ye shall write, shall be kept, and shall be manifested unto the Gentiles, that through the fullness of the Gentiles, the remnant of their seed who shall be scattered forth upon the face of the earth, because of their unbelief, may be brought in, or may be brought to a knowledge of me, their Redeemer. And then will I gather them in from the four quarters of the earth; and then will I fulfill the covenant which the Father hath made unto all the people of the house of Israel.

And now blessed are the Gentiles. because of their belief in me, in and of the Holy Ghost, which witness unto them of me and of the Father. Behold, because of their belief in me, saith the Father, and because of the unbelief of you, O house of Israel, in the latter day shall the truth come unto the Gentiles, that the fullness of these things shall be made known unto them. But wo, saith the Father unto the unbelieving of the Gentiles, for notwithstanding they have come forth upon the face of this land, and have scattered my people who are of the house of Israel; and my people who are of the house of Israel, have been cast out from among them, and have been trodden under feet by them: and because of the mercies of the Father unto the Gentiles, and also of the judgments of the Father upon my people, who are of the house of Israel, verily, verily, I say unto you, that after all this, and I have caused my people who are of the house of Israel, to be smitten, and to be afflicted, and to be slain, and to be cast out from among them, and to become hated by them, and to become a hiss and a byword among them. And thus commanded the Father that I should say unto you at that day when the Gentiles shall sin against my gospel, and shall be lifted up in the pride of their hearts above all nations, and above all the people of the whole earth, and shall be filled with all manner of lyings, and of deceits, and of mischiefs, and all manner of hypocrisy, and murders, and priestcrafts, and whoredoms, and of secret abominations; and if they shall do all those things, and shall reject the fullness of my gospel. behold, saith the Father, I will bring the fullness of my gospel from among them; and then will I remember my covenant which I have made unto my people, O house of Israel, and I will shew unto thee, O house of Israel, that the Gentiles shall not have power over you, but I will remember my covenant unto you, O house of Israel, and ye shall come unto the knowledge of the fullness of my gospel. But if the Gentiles will repent, and return unto me, saith the Father, behold, they shall be numbered among my people O house of Israel; and I will not suffer my people, who are of the house of Israel, to go through among them, and tread them down, saith the Father. But if they will not turn unto me, and hearken unto my voice, I will suffer them, yea I will suffer my people, O house of Israel, that they shall go through among them, and shall tread them down, and they shall be as salt that hath lost its savor. which is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of my people, O house of Israel.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, thus hath the Father commanded me, that I should give unto this people this land for their inheritance. And when the words of the prophet Isaiah shall be fulfilled, which say, Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing, for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem, for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.

Behold, when Jesus had spoken these words, he looked around about again on the multitude, and he said unto them, Behold my time is at hand. I perceive ye are weak that ye cannot understand all my words which I am commanded of the Father to speak unto you at this time; therefore go ye unto your homes, and ponder upon the things which I have said, and ask of the Father, in my name, that ye may understand; and prepare your minds for the morrow, and I come unto you again. And when Jesus had thus spoken, he cast his eyes round about again on the multitude; and beheld they were in tears, and did look steadfastly upon him, as if they would ask him to tarry a little longer with

And he said unto them, Behold my bowels are filled with compassion towards you: Have ye any that are sick among you, bring them hither. Have ye any that are lame, or blind, or halt, or maimed, or leprous, or that are withered, or that are deaf, or that are afflicted in any manner, bring them hither, and I will heal them, for I have compassion upon you; my bowels are filled with mercy; for I perceive that ye desire that I should shew unto you what I have done unto your brethren at Jerusalem, for I see that your faith is sufficient, that I should heal you.

And he did heal them every one as they were brought forth unto him. And he commanded that their little children should be brought; and when they had all been brought, Jesus stood in the midst, and he commanded the multitude, that they should kneel !

down upon the ground, and he himself also knelt upon the earth, and he prayed unto the Father, and none can conceive of the joy which filled our souls.

And when Jesus had made an end of praying unto the Father, he arose, but so great was the joy of the multitude, that they were overcome. And Jesus bade them arise, and said unto them, Blessed are ye because of your faith. And now behold my joy is full. And he wept. And he took their little children one by one and blessed them, and prayed unto the Father for them. And when he had done this he wept again, and he spake unto the multitude, and saith unto them. Behold your little ones.

And Jesus commanded his disciples that they should bring forth bread and wine, and he commanded the multitude that they should sit themselves down upon the earth. And he took of the bread, and brake and blessed it; and gave unto the disciples, and commanded that they should eat, and when they had eaten and were filled, he commanded that they should give unto the multitude, and when the multitude had eaten and were filled, he said unto his disciples, Behold there shall be one ordained among you, and to him will I give power that he shall break bread, and bless it, and give it unto the people of my church, unto all those who shall believe and be baptized in my name. And this shall ye always observe to do, even as I have done, even as I have broken bread, and blessed it, and gave it unto you: and this shall you do in remembrance of my body, which I have shewn unto you; and it shall be a testimony unto the Father, that ye do always remember me: and if ye do always remember me, ye shall have my Spirit to be with you.

And he commanded his disciples that they should take of the wine of the cup, and drink of it; and that they should also give unto the multi-And they did so, and did drink of it and were filled; and they gave unto the multitude, and they did drink and they were filled. And Jesus said unto them; Blessed are ye for this thing which ye have done, for this is fulfilling my commandments, and this doth witness unto the Father that ye are willing to do that which I have commanded you. And this shall ye always do to those who repent and and are baptized in my name; and ye shall do it in remembrance of my blood, which I have shed for you, that ye may witness unto the Father that ye do always remember me. And if ye do always remember me, ye shall always have my Spirit to be with you: and I give you a commandment that ye shall do these things; and if ye shall always do these things, blessed are ye, for ye are built upon my rock. But whoso shall do more or less than these, are not built upon my rock, but are built upon a sandy foundation: and when the rain descends, and the floods come, and the winds blow, and beat upon them, they shall fall, and the gates of hell are ready open to receive them: therefore blessed are ye if ye shall keep my commandments, which the Father hath commanded me that I should give unto you.

Ye must watch and pray always, lest ye be tempted by the devil, and ye are led away captive by him. And as I have prayed among you, even so shall ye pray in my church among my people who do repent and are baptized in my name: behold I am the light; I have set an example for you.

THE BUDDING FIG-TREE.

There is an old nation which has been very much like that fig-tree on which Jesus himself in vain sought fruit and which, cursed by him, soon was dried up from the root. God's callings and promises are, however, such that they cannot be repented of and broken, and there remains therefore an exceedingly great and glorious future for that nation. As Jesus wants us to look out for the buds on the figtree we had better do so directly, in order to be wise and understand the signs of these times. Let us look out for the beginning and fulfillment of the prophecies concerning that nation. THE STATEMENTS OF THE PROPHETS.

The following are some of the most distinct and explicit of these prophecies:

First—The Jews will return to Canaan, the land promised to the fathers. Acts 15:14-18; Jer. 30:17-22; 22:37-44; Ezek. 36:37, etc.

Second—The city of Jerusalem (and other cities in Canaan) will be rebuilt gloriously. Zech. 14: 10, 11; Jer. 32: 14; Ezek. 36: 33-38, etc.; Jer. 31:38-40.

Third-The devastated land will again be exceedingly fruitful by receiving the early and the latter rain. Joel 2:23-27; 3:18, etc.

Fourth-The Lord will bring to light Israel as well as Juda, the ten tribes, as well as the two or three. Ezek. 37:11-23; 48; Rev. 7:4-8.

Fifth-The spirit of grace and supplication, will be poured out over Juda and Jerusalem. Zech. 12:10-14; Romans 11; Ezek. 36, etc.

FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY.

The fulfillment of all these prophecies has indeed for many centuries seemed exceedingly improbable from the human point of view. The Jews have indeed, until recently, been absolutely forbidden to settle in the land of their fathers, and had at every visit there directly upon their arrival to sign an agreement not to stay more than three months. By a treaty between England and Turkey some eighteen years ago they are now no more forbid. den to settle there. The recent persecutions against the Jews in Russia and elsewhere have brought many there. More than half of the inhabitants of Jerusalem are Jews. There are in Palestine some great Jewish agricultural colonies, possessed by the Rothschilds, by Baron Hirsch, and other Jewish millionaires. The persecutions in Russia have also resulted in the formation of a Society for the Furthering of the Colonization of Palestine by Jews. The name of that society is Chovevi Zion-the Lovers of Zionand it seems to be a literal fulfillment of Isaiah 62:5. Two prominent men are named as the Joshua and Caleb of the new movement, which has upon its rolls even such names as Rothschild and Montefiore. All the Jews in many an English city belong to it. It supports also poor Jews in Palestine.

Two female missionaries of the I. M. A. in Jerusalem wrote in 1891, that 2,500 new houses were even then being built there in order to receive arriving Jewish families. They were built in the Bethlehem direction, and meanwhile 110 houses were being built for the same end in the valley of Kidron, and others on the plain of Goa. This is a distinct fulfillment of the prophecy in Zech. 14:10, 11: Jer.

A number of houses are now also being built outside of the walls, not only dwelling houses, but also synagogues and shops of various kinds. So many live now outside of the walls that there is no use in shutting the gates of Jerusalem at night. Thus another prophecy, Zech. 2:4, is being fulfilled.

THE CHANGES IN PALESTINE.

In Solomon's time Israel must indeed have been very numerous. 2 Chron. 1:9; 1 Kings 6:9. Canaan also was a land "flowing with milk and honey." But during the many centuries it has been trodden under foot by the heathen it has been mostly a desert and a waste, and God has withheld the latter rains, which begin with the middle of March. The early rains begin in October and last to about Christmas. The country and its scarce Arabian population stood very low until the end of the Crimean war, 1856. There was no security at all to property or person before that time. A rich man might easily be robbed, and murdered even, by the government officials. Not one of the great powers had a consul in Jerusa | their subjects in Palestine. There was not a school, nor a mission, nor a charitable institution in the land. The mail came but once or twice in the year to Jaffa. Now all this is changed. There is no small security as to property and life both for the inhabitants of the country and strangers. Schools, missions, and charitable institutions are found in quantity, and every year new ones are founded. All the great powers have their consuls in Jerusalem, and steamers carrying the mail come and go every week. Since some time there is the latter rain, as well as the early rain; it rains, indeed, often from the middle of March. The result is that the land is getting fertile. A missionary has been many years in Palestine and gone on horseback through the length and breadth of the little country, and he affirms that the land will be able to support an exceedingly great population, if good ways be built, if the agriculture be rationally done, and if capital can be spent in the agriculture. Railways are now being built in Canaan. The first one, between Jerusalem and Jaffa, was opened for traffic about three years ago. Another is being built between Akka and the Mediterranean and Damascus in Syria. It will pass through the holy places in Galilee, as Nazareth, Cana, etc., and south of the lake of Tiberias. A third railway will join these two railways with each other, and a fourth one will join the Jaffa-Jerusalem railway with the Canal of Suez. It is very probable when these railways be accomplished that the exceeding important commerce between India and Europe will pass through Immanuel's land.

MISSIONS TO THE JEWS.

There has been no mission to the Jews from the times of the apostles About 100,000 until this century. converted Jews, at least, are said to be the fruit of that mission in the nineteenth century. More than 600,000 Hebrew New Testaments have been sold or given away in that time. Among the old people-numbering in Russia alone some 5,000,000—God has raised reformers who point at Jesus of Nazareth as the only Messiah and Savior of Israel. Such reformers are, among others, Rabbinovitch, in Kischineff, Russia. Some thirteen years he has in the power of God held up Jesus Christ by pen and voice to thousands and tens of thousands of his brethren, and spread among them New Testaments and his own works. Another prominent Jewish reformer is the old Rabi Lichtenstein, in Buda-Pesth, Hungary, testifying mightily of Christ by his pen. Last among these Jewish reformers in our time, we will mention Mr. Hermann Warszawiak, of whose lem to take care of the interests of life and works we need not here speak. They are indeed, dear friends, many buds on the old fig-tree, and summer, the summer of God's Kingdom, is at hand. - Miss Nellie Hall, Swedish Missionary, in the Jewish Chris-

DARWINISM STYLED A MYTH.

In the "Beweis d. Glaubens" for July is an article by Dr. E. Dennert on "Is Naturalism Past?" It is a resume of an essay by W. Boelsche, a recent social democratic Darwinist writer, in the Socialist Monthly of December, 1900. Boelsche insists that after all that science can tell us, man is but a "fragment." He is a torso, with neither head nor legs. History shows only a section of man's development, behind and before which all is darkness. This is equally true of the individual; he is "a wave in an endless stream." Whence and whither are unknown. This fragmentariness appears too in all the thinking of materialistic evolution. "Man has crawled out of a pool of primitive evolutions. Heredity, sin of ances tors [he does not dare call it original sin], environment, ghosts, thick as sand on the seashore, cling to him and are dragged along by him . . . and back of all beginnings, abysses, with salamanders, dragons, etc." Hesays a whole man cannot live in this fragmentary state of things, and the problem of the twentieth century is to make room for a whole man. The view of the world must be "developed and transformed" to make this possible. Another article in the same number of the "Monthly," by Dr. C. Grottewitz, bears the striking title "Myths of Darwinism." He boldly declares that, with the exception of the general idea of the "descent of man" there is hardly a view of Darwin that can now be maintained. In con-clusion Grottewitz demands a new principle of development, for such must be possible. His closing words are significant: "We are all far from regarding this principle as teleological, mystical, or mythical, but the theory of Darwin, based on chance, cannot be regarded as anything but a myth." Darwinism is thus assigned to the region of mythology, by an evolutionist himself in a Socialist journal; no theologian has yet gone so far as that.—The Interior, September 26, 1901, DUBLIN, Ireland, Sept. 6.

Editors Herald: - I arrived in Ireland's capital today, from the great northern city of the island, Belfast. Was interested and pleased with the latter city. It is one of the nearest up to date of any that I have seen in Britain. However, throughout England, Scotland, and Ireland I have found many things to admire, and the country is just delightful. True, I have seen it in the best season of the year. The crops in all parts are good, although not up to par I am told, with their best in this country. But the land is cultivated to a fine state; the hedge and stone fences are all in fine condition; and while the divisions of the fields are small, yet the fences are kept in such neat and tasty condition that in the varied divisions into all shapes and figures, beauty is but added to the landscape. I have also noticed that many parts of the country are very rich agriculturally. Parts of England and Scotland visited will compare with anything I have ever seen; and today's ride brought me through a part of Ireland where the oat and wheat harvest is just well on, and some cutting of grass yet, and the indications were that the harvests were yielding as bountifully as I ever saw them in the famed Botna and Boyer valleys of Iowa. It is not difficult to perceive why there has been a contest waged so bitterly for the last two hundred years as to who should rule Ireland. It is a country worth a kingdom if properly sown and reaped.

Since the close of the European conference I have visited and labored in the cities of Birmingham and London in England; and Glasgow, Hamilton, and Carluke in Scotland. Also visited many other cities, but held no meetings, time not permitting. Our meetings at Birmingham were enjoyable, and the people thought would result in good. We stopped with Bro. and Sr. J. E. Meredith, but also shared the festal board with Bro. Thomas Taylor, and Mr. Roberts and wife. the latter being the daughter of Bro. Taylor. Two branches of the church at Birmingham, both of which have needed help, and we think they will conclude to take the advice given by the good old farmer, when his neighbors and friends did not rally to his liking, just to help themselves and take the reward for so doing, as it will then be justly theirs. Bro. C. H. Caton is president of the district, but of late made counselor to Bishop Taylor. Bro. J. E. Meredith is a good man for his present business, but would also be able to do much as a minister if set out to work. Bro. Swan is presiding over one of the branches in an efficient manner, but his business prevents very much time to the work. They need a good live elder to open up street preaching in Birmingham in connection with the other work.

In London, England, Bro. Thomas Bradshaw is still a progressive factor in the Master's work. A young man by the name of Worth is presiding over the branch. I found him a humble, diligent brother, and well liked by the Saints. He has a number of good helpers, too, and no doubt London will do better work soon than it has for years past. Our meetings were small, with few or no outsiders. Bro. Griffiths was present here also, and fully engaged in his work, and remained to help awhile in the city, while I visited Scotland. It was an eight and one half hours ride from London to Glasgow, a distance of four hundred miles. The quick time in which this was done, including stops, shows that some good things attach to the English railways after all. Twelve miles from Glasgow the family of Bro. J. W. Rushton was met with. They reside in Hamilton. Bro. Rushton and his young assistants, Brethren Wilson, Miller, and Skene, were at the depot at Glasgow when we got in, and they soon informed me that ample arrangements had been made for meetings, either in houses or the open air, so no time was to be lost in Scotland. This I like, as it showed the kind of metal Bro. Rushton was made of for missionary purposes. Well, we remained eleven days and attended twelve meetings, seven of which were outdoor efforts. But they were enjoyable, notwithstanding the hard talking in the open air. Our outdoor meetings ranged in numbers from two hundred to five hundred persons, who were close and respectful listeners. The speaking lasted an hour, and at the close questions and answers occupied quite a little time. The last evening in Glasgow the questions and answers just took one hour. You can well imagine the strain on one person in holding open air meetings. Where work is required like this they should without doubt be sent two and two. The habits and customs of the people are such in Scotland, that the proclamation of the gospel can be better made by outdoor preaching than any other. People are all out in the streets in the evenings. No trouble to get an audience; and Bro. Rushton has his regular appointments and the people come to hear at these times often, and wait for the hour for meeting. From what I observed in Manchester, Birmingham, and London, I believe this is the way to carry on the work successfully in all these cities. I know there are some who do not feel to do this kind of work. But the history shows clearly that Christ had to gather his audiences often in this manner, much of his preaching was done in the open air. So also of the apostles. The poor were to be preached to and this was about the only way they could be reached and if it is the best to be done, I shall not hesitate to cry aloud as opportunity shall offer. Scotland as well as England and Ireland is a great country for hedges; and in noting the kind of work we had to do and observing the surroundings the words of the Master often came to me,-"go into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in." Bro. Rushton has secured a hall in Hamilton for the winter, and at our first meeting last Sunday seventeen strangers who had simply heard upon the street corners were present. We had also ten Saints present, so I felt hopeful of Scotland.

You may know that there is nothing out of tell you that Sr. Kelley attended them both in Glasgow and Hamilton and enjoyed them. Many ladies were present also, who were strangers and listened attentively. Of course a few over-zealous persons in the "traditions," and a few infidels try to confuse, but when they get too brassy the crowd politely halloos out, "Hold your tongue," and they hold for awhile. I found that an American is in good favor in a Scotch crowd. At Carluke, where a couple of drunken fellows had been interrupting, I took occasion to state that I was an American and we believed in fair play, and I believed the Scotch would grant me the same. There were a number who assented; and when a drunken fellow put in a little too loud I noticed they simply pulled him outside of harm's way, without a word from either Bro. Rushton or myself. What I saw among the Scotch outside of the great intemperance of many, was admirable, and my opinion is that the church has no finer mission field before it than Scotland, if it will rise to the situation and go in and occupy.

For the coming year we should send two live working elders to Glasgow, two to Edinburgh, and two to Aberdeen. Then do not forget Ireland. There is a fine chance for work at Belfast and small towns in the north of Ireland. Two should be sent to Belfast, Ireland. The people are kind, intelligent, honest, and already fighting priestcraft and bigotry. The Lord has many children there I am sure. Why not the church make a supreme effort and go and plant the work in these places? We have Irish and Scotch elders of courage and ability. We also have American elders who can do good in either country. England needs help, too, but is preparing to help herself by putting some of her young elders to labor permanently. This will be the right thing to do. But the other help is needed also.

I go to Leeds, England, for meetings on Sunday next, and thence to Sheffield. Clay Cross, and some other points; then to Wales, hoping to finish my work in Britain early in October; not do all there is to do, for should I put in every hour from now till next April, there would be plenty yet to do.

The last word from Brn. Muceus and Enge left them making a strenuous effort in Norway. May the Lord go before them and open the way. Hopefully yours,

LOUISVILLE, Ken., Sept. 20.

Editors Herald:-Faith and confidence in the Christ and this great latter-day work fill my heart as I contemplate their greatness and goodness, and I praise God for a real gospel salvation. This great work has given me a clear understanding of the gospel, which is the only means of salvation. When one comes in contact with this work it affects him as did the coming in contact with Christ affect the woman at Jacob's well. He told her everything she had ever done. All a preacher has to do is to preach the word and the gospel of Christ shows up the good and the bad that is in a man.

I am striving to preach the gospel of the the way with the outdoor preaching when I kingdom, not in word only, but with power and with the Holy Ghost and in much assurance. I have gotten the truth before a large number in this great city this summer by preaching on the streets; but as the evenings are beginning to lengthen I am holding forth more indoors. The sectarian preachers warn the people not to come and hear us, and it makes work in this city very hard. I have been threatened with eggs and stones while preaching on the streets, and I have been notified different times that my life was in danger. I told them that I was born and raised in the mountains of Kentucky, where the owls howl at night, and where men do not become afraid to attend to their own business, and that I am too old now to get afraid.

In spite of all their fighting against us down here I have led sixteen precious souls into the waters of baptism, and I am waiting to see others take the step soon, who have expressed themselves favorably to so doing. I have pushed the work as best I could here this season, and have sowed the seed that I think will be reaped in days to come. I am satisfied that I am correct in this. I should be pleased to see our branch of fifty-four at this place increase to one hundred or more before April 1.

If I am permitted to work in this city another summer I would like a large tent, which would be the best method of working here.

I met a young man yesterday who has been called for ordination in the Baptist Church. He began to try to teach me on the second birth: I just sat still until he had told me all he knew about it. I then told him that I did like to talk to a man on the gospel, and listen while he talked. I then asked him to listen as I had done, and I explained to him the plan of salvation and the second birth, what it took to make a kingdom and how to get into it. I also spoke to him of the apostasy, and the restoration of the gospel through an angel. He confessed he was in error and told me I had given him great light. I therefore hope that ere long he shall be led into the light of the kingdom of God.

Your humble servant,

JAMES W. METCALF.

FROM OVER THE BORDER.

On the 27th of September it will be four months since I left home and launched out once more into the lively field of missionary service. My home and permanent address is Selkirk, Ontario. That is, if I have a home—if it is proper under existing conditions to speak of the place where my parents live as my home. I expect to always be in the field in time to come, unless misfortune or the unseen will drive me from it. I expect henceforth to spend comparatively little of my time at home. For this reason I not unfrequently tell people that my home is wherever I hang my hat up.

In company with Elder Alma C. Barmore, my genial companion, who had been laboring some about Selkirk, I came to Waterford on the 27th of May. From there we came to St. Thomas, from St. Thomas to Ridgetown, from Ridgetown to Zone conference, from Zone conference to Rond Eau where we spent about three weeks visiting and preaching, from Rond Eau indirectly to Blenheim, from Blenheim to Chatham, from Chatham to Wallaceburg, from Wallaceburg to Forest, where we first pitched the tent, preached about fortyfour sermons and baptized two; from Forest indirectly to Glencoe where I am at time of writing, Bro. Barmore having gone to Chatham yesterday to spend a couple of days. He is to return tomorrow and we are to be met here in the afternoon and conveyed some eight miles to the vicinity of a place called Wardsville, where we fill appointments and labor indefinitely, or up to conference time.

We took the tent down yesterday and shipped it to Wabash, where the conference meets first Saturday and Sunday of next month. After continuing here about two weeks we have decided that the time could be better spent than to hold meetings nightly in the tent with so many odds against us. It is becoming uncomfortably cold, the attendance small, and the raw, solemn winds of autumn blow everything out of place. Also the latter rains are falling, to add to inconvenience and discomfort. These many disadvantages arrayed against us have led us to believe that at this late season the tent is not the best facility for reaching the people. It is time to take it down and resort to other means.

We made a reasonable effort to induce the people to hear our claims. As in Forest we canvassed the town from house to house, distributing meeting announcements and epitomes, so that all would be left "without excuse." We advertised in the papers at both places, and at the latter, with the aid of Bro. Annett, the writer improvised a bulletin board for the announcing of the subjects.

The only family of Saints living here is that of Elder Levi Annett. At Forest there were no Saints living in town. To avoid the vexation of daily driving, Bro. Hughson procured lodgment for us in town with outsiders. It was there our effort of the season was made. Forty-four sermons-an awful expenditure of ammunition for casualties so few, -only two. But there may be more later on: there is a time of reaping. But if no casualties now there will be in a day to come, if it is in another way than we could wish for here. The number will be proportionate to those who reject truth here. The gospel, like a twoedged sword, always takes effect one way or another. It either saves or damns. There is no faithful effort, then, that is made in vain: cannot be, because there is sure to be an effect. Justice is a true principle. I pity the lost, but I would rather see a man damned any time than see justice perish.

On my way here I spent a few days in Petrolia, the town of oil wells, perpetual derricks, and a most offensive odor. I failed to get the statistics of the output of crude oil, but it must be enormous when so many thousands of pumps are in operation day and night. All you need to do to grease your boots is to stick them in the ditch. It is a very busy, industrious little town, profoundly dirty and profoundly stricken.

While there I came in contact with the Seventh-day Adventists. One of the preachers, a Mr. Ballenger, who, according to his own story, has good reasons for being acquainted with J. J. Cornish, loaned me Sheldon's book on Mormonism, in which he answers Blair's Joseph the Seer. It is a very argumentative work. Character and slander are left aside in his attack, which is directed against three standard books of our church, and confined to them. It can be answered and refuted, but not so easily as some others, for it is very technical and close. The readers of the HERALD may have a few installments on it later on. I once read Paine on the Bible. When I read this I thought it was the nearest like Paine of any book I ever read. Only, Paine is harder to answer from a sectarian standpoint than Sheldon is from ours.

Within the past four months I have read about 2,000 pages of book literature, including volume 3 of our Church History. I had previously read volumes 1 and 2. It is very elaborately compiled, indeed; a work of which we have reason to feel proud. It fills a long felt want and should be cheerfully accorded place in every brother's library; it should receive shelter in every home where it can be afforded.

I have already bought and disposed of one of the new edition of the Book of Mormon at thirty-five cents. Certainly no home need be without that sacred record any more. And now I notice a Book of Mormon concordance advertised; I have also sent for one of those. I want the latest that's going, the best that's to be had. Not long since I had in my possession a Book of Mormon with references, but not issued by our church. I could wish that when the next edition of said book is issued by our church that it will contain the concordance in the back and also the references marginally inserted. References are a facility. Every time a book is republished why not make it handier if we can. No matter who has been the inventor of that which is useful, whether he be an enemy or a friend, use it. The old must give way to the new. That has been the story all along the line of our literary enterprises. We always publish the Voice of Warning because it seems that there has never been a book written to take its place; and after all is said it is probably now the best and most complete thing we have to give to outsiders.

Some of our books have been supplanted by others in recent years. There are others to be born; there are more to die. I can call to mind one or two long extinct that in my mind ought to be republished. They have been buried, but if they were once more permitted to come to the surface and the gentle zephyrs of human observation could blow over their anxious pages, they might speak louder than any of their supposed successors. There are a few publications now in use that could easily be done without. It takes just so much energy, so much cost, to produce either a tract or a book, so why not give them all the improvement we can. Either add to or take from them anything that will make them better. There is no book but what will admit of improvement, of being made better every time it is published. If a fifteen-year-old boy in this church can write one worthier than another which happens to bear the authorship of a prominent man, let it take precedence every time. It may not sell as readily among the Saints at first, but it will do more good, because it is better. People should be taught to prefer the best. The only life and fortune of some books is that their author had notoriety. Perhaps if the same books had been written by some obscure fellow, upon whom the sunshine of notoriety had never smiled, they would have been short lived. They would never have seen the cradle, never had been rocked, their cries would never have been heard.

Some men conclude that because they are great in some particular respect, and thereby win for themselves a name in the world, that they are great in every other. As a result of this most foolish proclivity we have Talmage going to Australia a number of years ago and making science paramount in his lectures. He was resented by his compeers because they knew he was not a scientist. We have from the premier of Ontario a book on the evidences of Christianity. We have one from Gladstone on the "Impregnable Rock of Revelation." I have read neither of them: don't know that I ever will. Both were statesman, but neither was a theologian. Neither made theology his life's study. I might want to read something along the lines they wrote, but I prefer some one like Beecher, Paley, Watson, Leslie, or Locke, who were not only equal to those statesmen as individuals, as thinkers, as orators, perhaps, but they were in a position to know something about what they wrote. They made it the study of their lives.

Then again there are those who affect to believe that because they are popular in a certain locality they are popular everywhere. A politician will go stumping his constituency in an election campaign. He will go to an old blacksmith shop where an anxious hundred are awaiting his harangue of two hours' duration, in which he will tell them why they should support him and how he will fill their pockets and make them rich. They become enthused, and in return they enthuse him with their bombastic shouts, hurrahs, and deafening applauses. To another place he will go and meet with similar gratification. He begins to prophesy his victory, and goes so far as to point out some things that he will do for them after the election. He meets more admirers than enemies; their yells are always louder to him than those of the other side. Finally the day of doom arrives and he is met with a crushing defeat, is completely snowed under. Even then it will not do to admit that he overestimated his influence. No, he will say that many of his supporters wore "false faces," that they were all right to yell, but not when it came to voting. Why could not the big parcel of conceit see that while his few were shouting for him, others were somewhere else shouting for somebody else.

Back to Nauvoo now leaps my thoughts. The idea of a man supposing that because he could preside over a community and was fostered by two hundred thousand people, he could preside over the whole United States when their national attitude toward him was that he was a charlatan, an impostor.

We cannot defend everything we have done nor do we want to. One thing we can prove, that God spoke to Joseph Smith and that this is the church of God.

September 18.

OAKLAND, California, Sept. 19.

Editors Herald:—On September 19, at ten a. m., our missionaries, Bro. and Sr. Burton,
Bro. and Sr. Gilbert, our Patriarch, Alexander H. Smith, and Bro. Gould left San France

ALVIN KNISLEY.

der H. Smith, and Bro. Gould left San Francisco on board the steamer Australia, bound for the South Sea Islands. The following poem describes their departure:

Today the sun throws not its beams O'er land or water; but it seems That this great ocean fairly teems With mountains made of mist.

And yet upon this wondrous sea, This deep, dark tomb of mystery, Our friends will venture out; and we Have come to see them go.

They sail for distant isles of France, The cause of Jesus to enhance. Like other pilgrims they perchance Will never more return.

Alas, that needs so dire exist
That these dear ones who'll be so missed,
Should have their names upon the list
Of passengers this day.

Their steamer, anchored in the bay, Tugging at chains and tossing spray As if impatient of delay,

Will sail at ten a. m.

With ocean breezes blowing strong, Amid a busy, mottled throng, We slowly wend our way along And reach our destined wharf.

Here other friends by watch and wheel Have come to wait for clank and peal Of steamer bell and creaking reel— Some fifty Saints or more.

The sailing time is drawing nigh;
With throbbing heart and smothered sigh
That we may say our last good-bye,
The Australia we board.

Their officers do not object
That we their vessel should inspect;
And surely we will not neglect
To peep in every nook.

The kitchens where the meals are planned,

Then cabin, hold, and deck were scanned, And while we're gathered in a band, The kodak on us snaps.

Hark! There's the signal for the boat To heave her plank and be afloat! She rocks, and her huge whistle's throat Is opened wide and long.

The separation is at hand—
These partings are so hard to stand!
But we must hurry back to land,
And so the scene is brief.

One sorrow cannot be dispelled,
One grief is hardest to be quelled,
One hand is longest to be held—
That of our Patriarch.

His dear, sad face and tearful eyes Bespeak his gracious sacrifice. We all would wish it otherwise, But God himself has called.

Again the pier our feet have pressed, Our sobs and tears must be suppressed; But welling up from every breast Flow prayers for voyage safe.

And now upon the wharf, we'll keep Our vigils, though the heavens weep. Yes, here beside the briny deep We'll stand, come rain or shine.

Soon loudly creaks the launching ship; We see her hempen cable slip. We hear her heavy anchor drip, And feel her mighty jar.

And soon her whistle's piercing blast Resounds and she goes steaming past; Then 'kerchiefs waving high and fast Completes the sad adieu.

We watch the ship! her whitened sides Deep in the foamy sea she hides, As out upon its breast she rides, Shunning her fellow crafts.

She onward moves with slackened pace, From out kind Nature's resting-place, Where ships lie moored from every race And nation 'neath the sun.

She turns at length, as in disdain, From sheltering gulf to mighty main And then all signals proving vain We sadly turn away.

It rains; but we resolve to try
To keep ourselves and luncheon dry
And catch the train that's puffing by
Along the rocky beach.

And were it not for fogs like night, That drape the water on our right, We often could the steamer sight, As she plows through the Bay.

But clouds arise and mists amass; We reach the Cliff House, seize a glass, In hopes, should the Australia pass, To catch a fleeting glimpse.

Alas, our hopes fruition lack,
And disappointed we go back;
She doubtless swerved not from her track,

But plowed her way to sea.

She sighted last the city's domes,
Sailed past the camping soldiers' homes,
'Mid rocks and shoals and breakers' foams
Swept through the Golden Gate.

May He who wind and wave controls See that no needless trouble rolls Upon those six most precious souls Whom she now bears away.

In every one's life there comes a waking-up time, and it's well for them if it comes at the beginning and not at the end, when it is too late to mend the past. These times are private revivals and do more good than any public ones.—September Ladies' Home Journal.

PALMER LAKE, Colo., Sept. 27.

Dear Herald:—Of my recent whereabouts you and the church have been kept posted through the articles of your editor-in-chief, but I pen you a few lines nevertheless.

With President Joseph Smith I left the blistering heat of Missouri in early July and hastened to California. The reunion at Sycamore Grove, in Los Angeles, was our first objective point, though we halted at Santa Monica and Downey, as he has informed you. The "coon dance" prelude to our reunion, with its fantastic features, have been touched upon too ably for me to attempt a supplemental effort. Its influence did not extend beyond the line of our introductory service, however, and a spiritual atmosphere seemed to pervade all our assemblings. The preaching was excellent. Our President and Patriarch seemed to outdo themselves. and it was a joy to witness the freedom and power of their appearing and labors upon the platform. Never have we seen them to better advantage.

At the close Bro. Joseph and self proceeded to San Bernardino, thence to Santa Ana, Garden Grove, back to Los Angeles, and on to San Francisco. At the last-named place, after one night's rest, I started for Bandon, Oregon, to attend the reunion at that place. Five hundred and seventy miles by rail, sixty-three by stage, and another thirty by wagon tells the distance and made of transit; but tongue or pen will never tell all the facts about that stage ride. A heavy buckboard with a dead axle, and the spring under the seat broken and replaced with a solid block of wood. Rocks, stumps, corduroy, and kindred contributors to graceful or disgraceful motion, mountains on one side, and a chasm deep and close on the other, for many miles of the journey,-first climbing, then descending the mountains in a weirdly serpentine whirl, at an average gait of six miles an hour -part of the time on the seat and some of the time balancing in the air about six to eight inches about it, and struggling to hang on by the iron rims, and make the frequent downsittings as tolerant to the spine as practicable -all this and something more enters into the recital. I have been "stage-struck" before, but never so frequently in the same space of time, nor in the same place either.

About 8: 15 at night Myrtle Point was reached, and I was welcomed by Bro. Daniel Giles and family to his home, which is always full of hospitality, to be shared joyously with the missionaries. About eleven o'clock I retired to seek rest in sleep. I found a little, but it was terribly adulterated with rheumatism, spinal meningitis, hip contusions, and several forms of renal and hepatic derangement. I had hoped the romance of the stage ride, which had failed to materialize along the road would have shown up while I was in bed; but it didn't, for my dreams were spent in vainly reaching and groaning for Radway's Ready Relief, Mustang Liniment, and arnica, which always kept beyond me.

Shortly before six next morning I arose and stroked gently the tender places, then dressed and after breakfast climbed with

Bro. Giles and family into the wagon loaded with camp equipage, and started for Bandon, about thirty miles away. The road was quite as bad as that of the day before, but the springs under the seat and the reduced speed, together with the occasional spells when we climbed out and footed it, supplied the romance for which we sighed the day before. Arriving at Bandon, we met Brn. C. E. Crumley, A. M. Chase, W. A. Goodwin, and J. A. Upton, of the missionary force, and a number of local Saints, who welcomed us gladly. It would seem partial to select names for publication, for they all contributed to our happiness, and we felt glad to be among them.

Within four hours after landing, we were in the stand, preaching to a good audience. and during the nine days of our stay we preached seven times. The brethren above named all occupied when called upon-Bro. Chase most frequently, with Bro. Goodwin next. Bro. Crumley was in charge, and as he and Bro. Upton had been laboring at Bandon for some time, they pressed the newcomers forward. It was a pleasant and profitable season. God was with us. Six were baptized and others nearly convinced. from whom we will, doubtless, hear later. The services closed on the night of Sunday. August 25. On Monday morning we were on board the little steamer, headed for Coquille City, where Bro. Giles' skiff was pushed from the deck into the river and filled with living freight. Fourteen of us piled in, and the rest of the return journey to Myrtle Point was made therein. About a mile from our destination the ladies and children disembarked and walked by a near route to their home, while Brn. Giles, Crumley, Upton, and the writer tried to complete the journey by water to a point where the boat could be tied close to Bro. Giles' property. But the tide that had backed up the river water left us and we were stranded.

It was fun, of course, for boys, so we parted with shoes and socks, rolled up the trousers and jumped into the water, and by some pulling and some pushing, succeeded in gliding the skift along for about an eighth of a mile till we reached deeper water, when we climbed aboard again and "finished our course with joy." Somehow the water had climbed up on us while wading, and for a few hours after the writer wore a cold wet pack around the places where he had been "stage struck" and mortified some days before, and had good opportunity to test the virtues of hydropathy thus applied. Perhaps it was fortuitous, for next morning we mounted the stage and returned over the sixty-three mile course already described. This time, however, it was a real stage, which had been undergoing repairs, and was in fair trim, and as a seat companion we had Sr. Hansen, of Council Bluffs, sister of Dr. J. H. Hansen, who had been visiting Bro. Kennedy Hansen, at Myrtle Point, and was now returning homeward. It was a decided improvement on the first run. and the time seemed shorter. At Roseburg, Sr. Hansen took train for Portland, and next morning before five o'clock the writer was heading by train for San Francisco, where he spent two days and then crossed the bay to Oakland, and with Bro. Blair was placed in charge of the reunion then beginning which lasted ten days. You have learned of this reunion from the chief editor's pen, so I refrain from repetition. Our home in San Francisco was with Bro. and Sr. J. A. Anthony, and that tells a tale of comfort and plenty. It was home indeed.

We had hoped to be able to witness the departure of the missionaries to the South Sea Islands, but a postponement of the sailing day for a week made this impracticable. So we gave them each the parting hand and started with President Smith eastward. Several interests combined to urge my course in this direction, and as President Smith was called home by telegram, it was agreed that I should accompany him by the Salt Lake route and stop over in that city and fill the appointment made there for him. This I did, and was surprised to find Bro. Peter Anderson still in the city, as we had been led to believe he was en route to Montana. During the five days' stay there the time was spent in visiting the aged and feeble and afflicted ones who could not get out to the services. Bro. and Sr. Barrows supplied us a home as usual, and Sr. Alice Wilson and her mother, Sr. Robinson, and others were on hand with table supplies, and upon leaving, Sr. Wilson furnished a lunch that made the dining car display look cheap. One night's stopover at Pleasant Grove allowed a pleasant visit with Bro. Hosea Sterrett and family and Srs. P. A. Sterrett and Condit. The next day—the funeral day of our nation's President-was spent in making the trip to Grand Junction and in sorrow as deep as was ever awakened within this breast by death. At Grand Junction the night was spent at the home of Sr. McKinney, who was an acquaintance of years ago. At six next morning the train was speeding us to Denver, where we arrived at midnight, and took shelter in a hotel for the balance of the night. In the morning Bro. J. B. Roush was found and his offer of home accepted. Occupied the pulpit twice on Sunday and filled the time of our stay there with visiting and writing constantly.

Yesterday I made the run from Denver to Husted, near Colorado Springs, to visit our colaborer in the missionary service, Bro. C. R Duncan, who, to all human appearance, is very close to the end of his earthly pilgrimage. He has been unable to labor for quite a time and has gradually failed. A succession of lung hemorrhages has reduced him to almost helplessness, though he still expresses his hopefulness of recovery. It was sad to see a faithful coworker thus broken and incapacitated. Left him this morning and am stopped for change of train at the place named at head of this letter. Expect to remain in Denver over night, and to proceed to Wray tomorrow, and thence --?

My health, which for several months seemed to improve, has been failing during the last three weeks. May have to retire for fall and winter again. With love for the cause and its adherents everywhere,

I remain, as ever,

FOR VICTORY!

There is no battle man can win,

No glory 'neath the shining sun,

That can compare with conquered sin,

And o'er ourselves a vict'ry won.

Through all mankind there runs a blight Of Adam old, that reigns within, That holds the soul in darkest night Of Erebus, and this is sin.

What's foul is fair, where sin depraves; What's wrong is right, is its decree. A traitor's flag above it waves, And love and truth the victims be.

Shall right then yield the way to wrong, And evil be our only good? Forbid it, God! O make us strong, To stand and fight as martyr's stood.

No forlorn hope be ours to lead,
Nor cowards who fear their cause to lose;
With humble hearts and contrite, plead
With Him who will not help refuse.

Then, brothers, put your armor on,
And seek the thickest of the fray;
Be yours to fight against the wrong,
And God will give the victory.

That man has lived to little purpose who has not learned that what the great world pities, and its teachers disallow, even though mixed with weakness, is many times deepest in truth and closest to the real sublimities of life.—Horace Bushnell.

LITTLE WILLIE'S FIRST VISIT.

I hear no shouting in the hall,
No pounding on the floor;
He isn't marking on the wall
Or swinging on the door;
His battered toys are put away,
The cat is deep in dreams—
He's been away a week today,
And, oh, how long it seems!

His books are not strewn on the stairs,
His gun is hid from view;
His paints are not left on the chairs,
The rugs are not askew;
He went away a week ago,
He's coming home again—
To-morrow he'll return, but oh,
How can I wait till then?

INDUSTRY.

Webster in his definition of the word says: Habitual diligence in any employment, either bodily or mental; steady attention to business; opposed to sloth or idleness.

The subject is one of vast importance to us, and it is something that we should try, with all diligence, to impress upon the minds of the children, teaching them to be industrious in all they undertake. We can teach the children a perfect lesson on industry by showing them how the busy little bee or ant works all the long summer to lay up in store for winter. By this we can impress upon their minds the need of labor with an object in view.

If we are not working with our hands at bodily labor, let us be improving the time by studying, reading, or thinking good thoughts. Let us learn to economize the time, that none of it go to waste. God placed us here for a purpose, and he is not well pleased with us if we waste the time he has given in slothfulness or idleness. If we idly sit and dream of what we would like to be or to have, we will be wasting much valuable time, when we might have been improving along the lines we had been dreaming Of course children can not always over. work, but in their play you can teach them industry. Teach them to do well what they undertake in anything, in work or play. If a child is left to grow up in idleness, it is not an easy matter then to get rid of the habit. Habits formed in childhood are apt to go with us through life. How important, then, it is to teach children to be industrious, for if there is anything more distasteful in a person than idleness, or laziness, as we commonly call it, we hardly know what it is.

Idleness leads to other evils. If you keep a child busily engaged in some good work or play, you do not give him a chance to become indolent. Teach him when he plays to be active and earnest in it, and when he works to go at it as though he meant business. Of course this all applies to older people, but I speak of teaching the children, as you all know it is so much easier to make lasting impressions upon them than upon older ones. "As the twig is bent, so will it grow."

Industry pays debts, idleness or despair increases them. Industry and study keep young men and women from idleness and prepare them for honored success in life, and honored old age; idleness leads to dissipation and wreck. Shrink from idleness in yourself and others if you would maintain a right position.

An old man at more than eighty years of age was found busily writing, and a young man said to him, "Why do you keep busy?" He answered, "I keep busy to keep out of mischief." No man is strong enough to be idle.

Our amusements are intended to keep us in some earnest mission, and recreation is grand to give us muscle and spirits for our regular toils. The thunder-cloud hath an edge exquisitely purpled, but with voice that jars the earth it declares, "I go to water the green fields." The wild flowers under the fence are gay, but they say, "We stand here to make room for the wheat-field, and to refresh the husbandmen in their nooning." The stream sparkles and foams and frolics and says, "I go to baptize the moss. I lave the spots on the trout. I slake the thirst of the bird. I turn the wheel of the mill. I rock in my crystal cradle the water lily."

And so, while the world plays, it works. Look out for the man who always plays and never works. Therefore let us be industrious in all that we undertake in life, that will lead to good, for in so doing we will be crowned with success.

OLD DANESMOOR, Eng., Sept. 4.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I have often thought I would like to write to the HERALD, and especially to the Home Column; for when I have read the letters of other sisters, I have thought how very selfish it was of me in not trying to do likewise. But I have felt perhaps with many others of our sisters a lack of confidence. But I must confess many times I have been enlightened and blessed when I have read the letters from others, so I concluded to do my best by contributing these few lines.

I have been benefited by reading the letters from the mothers upon the subject. Our Boys. True, as one of your writers said, it is a question which is forcing itself upon many thoughtful minds and one which must sooner or later be met, if we are not willing to allow the adversary of all righteousness to make of our homes his most prolific recruiting grounds. I trust that I, as a mother. may by the help of God be enabled to train in righteousness the dear little boy he has given into my charge. When it pleased the Lord to intrust so great a responsibility to our care, it was the prayer of my husband and myself that he should be consecrated to the Lord's service. And then, dear Saints, you may well imagine how our hearts rejoiced when our dear little Alex, was blessed by Elder Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., of Manchester, and we heard our brother use the very words which had been our constant prayer, as though we ourselves had told him before he spoke. For this and many other similar recognitions by our heavenly Father we feel truly grateful.

I am often made to feel very unworthy when I think of some of our sisters who are separated from their companions in life who are out in the missionary field almost constantly, winning souls to Christ, for I feel my loneliness many times when my husband is away just on Sundays. But I try to make the best of it, believing that he is doing some good, and I think that inasmuch as so great a sacrifice has been made by our Savior, we ought to do something in some way, if only a little.

The place where Elders S. Holmes, J. Arber, and Priest G. H. Holmes are laboring at present, is Sutton-in-Ashfield, which is only about ten miles away. There is not much convenience in reaching the place, only by road. So they usually set off in good time in the morning on their bicycles. They do not always have the pleasantest of experiences. One Sunday in August Bro. Joseph was thrown from his machine, and afterwards went to preach with his wrist bandaged, himself much shaken up. Bro. and Sr. Rouland and family are the only Saints out that way, but my prayer is that there may be at no distant day a good lively branch organized there.

My greatest desire is to live a worthy and upright life before God and man, so that it may be said of me, as well as of all the faithful, She hath done what she could. Ever praying for the onward march of Zion's cause, with love to all the dear Saints,

Your sister,

S. E. ARBER.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sr. Mattie Hughes, of Rhodes, Iowa, requests the faith and prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union in her behalf, that if it please God her health may be restored. It is the earnest desire of her heart to assist in the Master's work, and she is worthy of your prayers and sympathy.

NATURE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AND THE RELIGIO; AND THEIR NECESSITY IN SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT.

In God we recognize the creator of all things, the source of all life. In him is the perfection of wisdom and understanding. Of unlimited power, it is not possible that aught of his creations should have left the shaping hand in an imperfect condition. It can only be by the setting aside of the divine law that imperfection exists. Complete obedience to the perfect law will restore all that was lost by transgression. Hence it is that the greatest stress should be laid upon the necessity for strictest obedience to that law by which is to be accomplished the "restitution of all things."

The Lord in giving expression to the law of life does not always give it in the detail, but by the exercise of the faculties of mind and powers of reason with which he endowed them to "bring to pass much righteousness, for the power is in them, whereby they are agents unto themselves." He, therefore, often speaks in quite general terms, leaving room for exercise of the principle, "He that waiteth to be commanded in all things is a slothful servant." For instance, he speaks of his people gathering themselves together for worship, etc.; but he has given nothing in the law directing how, when, and where houses of worship should be built. The same is true to a large degree of branches and districts, and many other phases of the work.

It must be evident to everyone who will take a little time to reflect, that if the

in the keeping of the law is to be left entirely to the pulpit it will necessarily be a slow and tedious work: but when we remember that all are to be teachers of each other, there is some hope of the matter being accomplished. Pulpit teaching is of necessity too general and incontinuous to bring the people up to a knowledge of the details of individual duty.

TRUE SPIRITUALITY

comes only from an observance of the law of spiritual life, which observance must be preceded by an understanding of the law. There is only one way to come to a knowledge of the law, and that is by a study of it. The Lord has emphasized this principle of study in these statements: "My words, they are spirit and they are life." "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me." "Search these commandments; for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises in them shall all be fulfilled." It is absurd to suppose that an entrance into celestial glory can be gained except by a keeping of the law; and equally absurd to assume that one can keep the law which he has not learned.

The Father has sought to encourage

by speaking of the loss suffered by neglecting the study of it, especially naming among other things the Book of Mormon. He said the whole church was under condemnation. If the whole church was under condemnation for neglecting these books, certain it is that any individual who now neglects such study and observance is under condemnation.

I wish here to introduce

THE TESTIMONY OF A VENERABLE BROTHER whose hair is silvered o'er by the frost of many winters. After the close of the General Convention last spring, this brother said to the writer: "I want to say for your encouragement what the Spirit said to me when in the convention when you were discussing the Book of Mormon. I was shown that the Sunday school and the Religio by bringing about a study of the books of the church, and especially the Book of Mormon, are instruments under God of removing that condemnation. Oh! if I could only tell you as I could have told you then when the Spirit was upon me." As he told this his eyes moistened and his voice trembled; and you may well suppose how thankful the writer felt that he, among others, had been accounted worthy to have a small part in the work.

It is a truth which goes without question, that is the family-the home; that if the home be pure and enlightened, then the nation will be an enlightened and progressive one, one which subserves the best interests of its citizens, whose rulers govern with equity and impartiality. Indeed, it is considered that the ideas of government originated in the home government. It certainly is a pleasing thought that the Lord in restoring the gospel not only recognized this principle as in the days of Israel under Moses and even earlier, but that he gave anew commandments relative thereto, when he said, "Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ, the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized. And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of hands. And they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before the Lord."-D. C. 68: 4. From this we readily see that the Lord recognized the supreme importance of the home being right before the law. And he has told us further, in Doctrine and Covenants 90:6-8, that certain individuals were under condemnation for neglecting this solemn duty; and of one individual he said the evil one had power over him, and that if he would be delivered he should set in order his house. (D. C. 90:6)

Doubtless, some present are wondering what connection this has with

THE SUBJECT UNDER CONSIDERATION. I will tell you. The Lord left many details of the work to be arranged by the church as necessity and occasion might demand, commensurate with the development of the church; so the privilege of utilizing every means and help within their reach is certainly extended to these parents and brethren and sisters upon whom the burden rests of teaching the children the principles of the gospel, in order to make their work most effective.

Now the writer does not believe, nor has he ever advocated such a thing, that the Sunday school and Religio can in the slightest degree detract from the weight of the parent's responsibility. But he does believe, and has said, and does say now, that these helps for where much is given much is required, and parents with these aids at their disposal will rest under heavier condemnation for neglecting this duty, than those will be who did not have such help. These auxiliaries can at best only be considered as supplements to the home work. They emphasize and make more effective the home teaching, but they cannot take the place of it. These organizations are as much the legitimate outgrowth of necessity resulting from the growth and development of the church, as are districts, to the mind of your speaker, and many other things that might be mentioned.

Does any one question today but that there is of the church books than there would be without these aids? Certainly no one ought to question a fact so apparent as that. Then a more general reading of the word argues a better understanding of the law. And a better understanding of the law argues one of two things; either more spirituality through an observance of what the law requires, or a greater carnality through failure to observe the known provision of the law. In either case the auxiliaries are doing a great work, because the gospel is a savor of life unto life or of death unto death. The world must needs be warned before it can be condemned. The church and its members must come to an understanding of the law before it, or they, can reject the law or accept it. I mean those higher requirements of the law which appertain to the building up of Zion and the salvation of her people.

IN CONCLUSION

let us remember that the parents and those feeling the responsibility of heeding the plain requirements of the law to educate the children in the doctrines of Christ, have felt the necessity of organized effort, and have instituted the Sunday school and the Religio-Literary Society, as a means for bettering their work, and that as such they seek in all their methods and policies to further the work of the church.

There can, therefore, be no tenable ground for a question as to their necessity in spiritual development; and that their nature is purely and emphatically that of auxiliaries to the church, or in the church, more properly speaking. And may they ever so remain, is the prayer and desire of September 27, 1901.

P. S.—I respectfully suggest to my coworkers, that prerequisites for baptism are faith in God and repentance from dead works, or the production of fruits meet for repentance. Further: I have not learned that per action of the body paragraphs 7, 18, section 17, in Doctrine and Covenants, have become null and void. I therefore suggest that when and wherever it is practicable, members be re-ceived into the church as per direction of paragraph 7, and that in the event of confirmation, the 18th paragraph be by no means ignored; and that in the event of baptism being requested in unorganized territory, that the representative of the church be particular in calling the attention of applicants to the prerequisites of baptism. Those starting in the divine life should start right; hence the necessity of instructing those starting as God's law directs. Having done that, we can then commend them to the Then, too, I suggest whenever evidence as to the necessity exists, that attention be paid to instruction found in paragraph 20, section 42, Doctrine and Covenants. Study the paragraph in its entirety with special attention to that following the last period in said paragraph: "And again I say unto you, That ye shall be watchful and careful," etc. There are two kinds of watching referred to in God's word: Isaiah 29:20, which every one having but a tithe of manly dignity would studiously avoid; Ezekiel 33:6, which every one claiming to be a watchman on Zion's walls should studiously consider with a practical evidence of a zeal according to knowledge, and thus act when confronting exigency necessitates as given and accepted law directs without deceit, partiality, sentimentalism, or the like, which may tend to complicating instead of bringing about a proper understanding or a legitimate and authoritative adjustment.

In reporting labors, do so plainly and truthfully, that your reports may be relied upon. Don't allow yourself to grow too sanguine or too despondent. Seek and pursue the golden mean or a medium every time. 'Tis best; 'tis safest; the most digni-fied. There is a medium in all things; and in a general way the greatest pleasure is found in the mediocrity.

Labor well while strength permits.

Crooked age, with silent steps, will soon arrive.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of Eastern Colorado District:—As most of us know, we have had an extra force of missionaries appointed to our district this year and their families allotted to our care. I have been compelled to call upon our worthy Bishop for assistance each month, until he now informs me that his funds are exhausted too, and some families are without any allowance this month.

Let us all make an effort and try promises of the Lord, those who pay tithing by sending what they can now, and those who have not done so before, by beginning at once, that we may all receive those blessings promised to those who serve him faithfully.

Your brother in the gospel, CHAS. E. EVERETT, Agent. 2809 Welten St., DENVER, Colorado.

I take this opportunity of letting the Saints in this district know that I have been appointed Bishop's agent for Washington. each of us send in our tithes and offerings that the elders and their families may be supported, for it is said in Malachi 3: 10: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes. and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground." Saints, this is surely a great promise? Let us prove him by doing as he has commanded us and by living righteous lives before him.

Your brother in bonds, FRANK HOLMES.

The Ebeling-Riggle discussion upon the following propositions

For five nights the nature, extent, time of establishment, and final location of the kingdom of God. In support of the millennium, much important history, aside from the many Biblical proofs, was quoted, giving name of history, chapter, and page, which can only be found in the leading libraries.

Four nights on the nature and object of the punishment of the wicked, and the final redemption of the human race. Some important statistics showing the rapid increase of deaths among the heathen over their conversions to Christianity were used in this proposition, and which will be found invaluable evidence of God's redemptive work between this life.

Two nights on the authority and origin of the so-called Church of God. Under this proposition Elder Riggle labored hard to trace his church back to Pentecost, but by their own history we proved they could trace their beginning no further back than 1870.

Two nights on the identity of the Reorganized Church with that of the Bible.

DAVID W. WIGHT DEAD.

It is with deep sadness that we find ourselves called upon to chronicle the death of another of the bright young men of the church. Bro. David W. Wight has passed through the dark valley of death. He died at Ogden, The sad news Utah, October 3. reached Lamoni, Friday morning, in a telegram to Sr. Wight's sister, Sr. George Bandy, and a wave of sadness passed over the community of Saints. Bro. Wight's wife and his sister, Estella, were both with him in his field; and it is comforting to know that in his last moments those near and dear to him could be at hand to smooth his pillow and do the innumerable little things which ease to some extent the suffering of the sick ones. Sr. Wight in a letter to her sister here, touchingly wrote:

David was taken suddenly worse the morning of the third, just as the doctor came in at the door. He was taken to the Sacred Heart Hospital, and was operated on between one and two, and passed away that evening at 8:45. His disease proved to be peritoritis caused by a diseased vermiform appendix; and the physicians said there was no human power that could cure it. So I feel that his work was done here, and that he has gone to a place where he will suffer no more. As for myself and baby, I cannot think yet.

Bro. Wight was born July 2, 1869, at Newtonia, Kansas. On September 24, 1882, he was baptized at Lamoni. by Joseph Smith. At Cainsville, Missouri, October 1, 1893, he was ordained an elder by J. R. Lambert and C. Scott. As an elder he served some time as a missionary, and was for a time secretary of the Fifth Quorum of Elders. At Independence, Missouri, he was ordained a seventy on April 13, 1898, by J. W. Wight and J. H. At that conference he was assigned to the Rocky Mountain mission, where he has since served, being placed in charge of the same by the General Conference of 1900. On February 21, 1900, he was married to Miss Martha F. Brown, they settling in Lamoni. On April 30, at Lamoni, Iowa, 1901, he was ordained a High Priest by I. N. Roberts and R. C. Evans, and at same time was ordained a counselor to the president of the Stake, John Smith, who had selected him as his second counselor. nearly two years he has been on the editorial staff of the HERALD.

This brief sketch shows Bro. Wight to have been very active in church work; and yet his duties were all accomplished or executed with a marked His coworkers all thoroughness. speak in highest terms of him, and he will be greatly missed by them. As one in authority he was characterized by mildness and absence of pomp; yet his natural dignity commanded respect. As a student of religion and church doctrine he showed himself to be a close analyst of theories and principles.

Considering his capabilities and what he had already accomplished though yet a young man, his friends were fond of predicting for him a brilliant and useful future in church work. His prospects as a minister were good for a life of great activity and utility. But we are once more compelled to bow in submissiveness to the will of Him who rules and overrules for the good of humanity. While we in our finite limitations cannot see why one in position to do so much good here should be taken away in the very midst of his usefulness. yet we acknowledge the great wisdom of God, and shall find consolation. in the belief that our brother on the other side has a greater field for the use of his powers for good than he "It is God's way; his will, had here. not ours, be done."

Of late the church has been called upon to mourn the loss of a numberof young men of promise; and from present indications it will in the near future be called upon to mourn still others of its active force. And we cannot but ask, What means it? Are there lessons to be learned in this way which we have not yet learned? All men must die; and when we see men who have spent long lives of usefulness in the church pass quietly to their rest, while we mourn their departure, the naturalness of their going merely reminds us that death finally comes to us all; but when we see our young men stricken down in the midst of health and activity, we are prone to wonder at God's ways. And while we bow in submissiveness, we cannot but look for the lessons tobe learned. Are our young men, in their impulsiveness and vigor, wontto overtax themselves? And if they do, is it right? If they are indiscreet in the use of their natural powers, have they claim on God for extrastrength and reserve force? Are we careful not to overload our willing workers? Or are we prone to let the "willing horse" pull the load? Has not the day come in which each should have his share in the work? Has notthe increase of our numbers brought us material sufficient so that some of our overtaxed workers can be relieved of some of their burdens? These are questions which come to us as we consider what to us appear as the untimely deaths of some of our energetic

There is one great lesson to learn in it all, which we shall do well to take earnestly home to ourselves. work of God depends on no man. True. God always works through human agencies when possible to do so, by delegated authority and power; but are we not disposed to over-estimate the part individuality plays in this great work? However that may be, we submit to God's will, and pray that the lessons he may wish us tolearn may be learned by us with profit to ourselves and to the cause.

EDITOR ABROAD.

The transition from sunny climes to the middle lands of the continent is a wide one, in the features of the face of nature. But such transition is made so quickly that it is but a dreamcovered space between snow-capped mountain peaks and plains of sage and chapparal brush, to grass-covered hills and fields of corn and vales of verdure. The face of physical nature may change, but the people, cosmopolitan as the mixed races that go to make up the American public have become by assimilation, are seemingly unchanged.

We left a circle of love-beating hearts and smiling faces, all saddened by the parting scenes of the closing reunion, and the dread inspired by fear of the result of the mad attempt upon the life of President McKinley. We found a circle of hearts buoyant with hopes for another reunion to be fraught with reminiscences of associations running through years of effort and trial, and faces bright with smiles of welcome and the joy of living.

A brief call at the home as we passed, which call was darkened by the fact that the assassin's deed had ended the life of the nation's honored representative chief, and the occasion of the national observances in memorial token of reverence and citizen regard for a dead ruler.

It is hard for the American citizen to appreciate the force of the principle. "The King is dead; long live the King." And yet it is as true of this government, as of any other; for the principle of perpetuity holds good; and, though the leading officer of the government may be taken, there will still be the one who shall succeed him. for the state cannot die. How blind. then, is the unreason of anarchy that fails to see that the mere removing of a present incumbent is not the death of what he has taught himself to hate. the hand of restraint in organic gov-

To leave home for the annual reunion held in western Iowa, was but to take up the role as intended, so that when in company with Bro. George H. Hilliard of the Bishopric. we reached Dow City, Iowa, the place where the assembly would convene, on the date set, we found the big tent in its place and a coterie of small ones to shelter the visiting hosts of increasing Israel.

Rains following the season drought had interfered with the preparations, and it looked as though the meetings would need to be abandoned. But, though rain fell heavily on Thursday, October 19, it began fairing on the Friday, and not a session was lost. It rained one night, and till late the next morning, but dripping of the wet canvas roof was a model of terseness of statement and clearness of logic, thoroughly enjoyed by the Saints.

The assembly was organized on the 21st, although services were held the evening before, when the Editor again took the initiative.

To be chosen to preside with Brn. J. W. Wight, missionary in charge, and James M. Baker, president of the district, as associates, was accorded to us, and the work begun.

The day, Saturday, September 21, was in the most part passed in the organizing and perfunctory arrangements, but the dawn of Sunday, the 22d, brought a pleasant day.

The attendance though good was not so large as on the corresponding day of the preceding year. It was attributed to the long-continued drought, to the unusual wet weather, to the shortened crops, and other causes; but no matter what the cause of the loss of numbers, the assembly was a typical one, and the Saints and their friends were present to make the best of the conditions.

The citizens' committee were represented at the morning service for Sunday the 22d, by Mr. Black, a citizen of Dow City, and Judge W. R. Green, of Audubon county, who gave to the Saints a characteristic address of welcome. We quote from his discourse the following:

There is an organized effort on the part of evil to overcome the organized effort for good. Your church represents one part of the organized effort for good. In my experience and observation I have found that the members of your church have been always supporters of law and order.

This assurance coming from a man of Judge Green's standing in society, was comforting to the Saints, and an indorsement of no small value to the church at large; for the reason that it shows that those who live in the confines of the judge's circuit have been trying to live as their profession of religion required.

It is something to be pleased with that one on the judicial bench should without solicitation commend a people as a church, in a public manner, as being supporters of law and order. when men of the common pulpits, professedly Christian, should industriously charge that same people with being advocates of pernicious dogmas, calculated to pervert the public mind and subvert the adhesion of men to the best good of society, enemies to the well being of the social

The burden of the preaching service was borne by veterans, Brn. C. Derry, J. R. Lambert, J. W. Wight, G. H. Hilliard, and the Editor. These were ably seconded by Brn. J. C. Crabb, W. A. Smith, Oscar Case, Paul Hanson, J. A. Gunsolley, and John Smith. Bro. J. C. Crabb's sermon under the The preaching was excellent, judging it from our partial point of view. and the commendation of good attention and expressions of satisfaction. The Editor writes not of his own effort, but he was much pleased and delighted with the efforts of others.

The attendance upon the services of the afternoon and evening of Sunday 29th was large. Not so large as on the last occasion at Woodbine, but equally as satisfactory as listening congregations, there not being quite so many moving about outside the tent.

The impression made by the reunion services at Dow City upon the citizens of the village and vicinity, was undoubtedly good. There had been out of doors meetings held in the park by the M. E. and Holiness people; and our meeting following so closely upon the close of theirs gave an opportunity for contrast, which was in our favor judging from the expressions of those who attended both.

We judge this to be the case also from the cordial reception accorded to the Saints who sought quarters among the citizens. Many houses were thrown open to the visitors, wherein the dwellers gave them the welcome and good cheer for which the western, or Missouri slope, is so iustly celebrated.

We noticed placards in the windows of one of the largest stores with the legends "Welcome L. D. S." Welcome to the Reorganized Church of L. D. S." It was pleasing to us, but was a pretty good bid for the gibes of some, who may not feel quite so friendly.

The little town is showing some signs of improvement, some new buildings, and renovating of others, including the M. E. church, which is being thoroughly made over and enlarged. Four years ago the Editor was invited to deliver a temperance lecture in that same church, and responded to the invitation tendered by the acting president of the W. C. T. U. At the lecture the M. E. people were "conspicuous by their absence." So that it was a meagre audience, mostly Latter Day Saints, that heard our lecture.

There are now two saloons in the place, where intoxicants are sold, where idleness is fostered and the seeds of physical and moral ruin are sown. Will the M. E. Church be held responsible for any part in supporting the damnable traffic? We are sure that the Latter Day Saints will not support the trade, either by vote or patronage. Their religion tells them that no drunkard hath eternal life, and that those who aid or abet the making of drunkards are accessories to soul murder and will fare hardly in the other world. Two saloons in a town of scarcely more than a hundred inhabitants to each saloon! Whence comes the money on which the traffickers thrive, for thrive they do?

There is an end to all things human; and so on the evening of October 29 the reunion of 1901 came to its close, in a quiet, unostentatious way. The sermon was by Bro. J. W. Wight assisted by Bro. John Smith. It was close and terse with argument; and at its close the assembly was dissolved by limitation without formality of

In the business session for Saturday afternoon it was resolved to hold a reunion in 1902, at the same place. The time of assembling will be with the committee to determine, due notice of which will be given. The committee are J. M. Baker, A. H. Rudd, W. A. Carroll, C. A. Butterworth, Clair Butterworth, and J. L. Butterworth, all good men and true who unselfishly work for the good of the cause and the camp of Israel. The actual expense of the reunion was small and was cheerfully met.

Some of those whom we greeted last year had passed over to the other side no more to be with us till the Great Reunion convenes. these "Uncle" Jack Conyers, P. C. Kemmish, and Uncle Frank Rudd. Who shall be missed at the next roll

Bro. Jonas Chatburn, well past his eightieth year, was with us, and presided at two or three sessions of prayer and testimony in his characteristic and pleasing way. Long may he live to give the Saints a trusting soldier's welcome.

A BRIGHT SPOT IN THE RAGE OF BATTLE.

We quote the following from the Carter County Bugle, published at Grayson, Kentucky, for Friday, September 27, 1901. It is from the pen of R. B. Neal, of the Christian Church, who, as it will be seen. avows antagonism to what he is pleased to style "Smithianity," forgetting that the faith be holds may as appropriately be styled "Campbellism," which he would necessarily We are glad, however, object to. that Elder Neal is willing to concede that there are differences between the Utah and Reorganized Churches, and we may be pardoned for expressing the thought that recognizing the existence of such differences our Christian ought to be able to see that it is possible that Joseph Smith was not responsible for much of the teaching, dogma, and practice which he is so strenuously "battling with tongue and tract" as error under the appellation of Smithianity. If there were any argument in misstatement and prejudicial misconception and misconstruction, what Elder Neal calls "Smithianity," so con-temptuously, would long since have been a thing of the past. But the faith brought by the angel's message lives on, and is gaining ground as the elder concedes:

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again; the eternal years of God are hers.

It is pretty generally known that I am battling with torgue and tract the advancing and aggressive hosts of Smithianity as best I

Indifference to this work, I am satisfied, grows out of ignorance of its magnitude and pressing necessity.

I hand out a sample of the work the "elders" are doing in city and county in Kentucky alone. I gather this from a Mormon paper, of this week's issue. It is but a sampaper, of this week's issue. It is but a sample of what they are doing in every other state. The first is from Elder W. R. Smith, and is written from Hamlet, Ky. They had a district conference at "Eagle Creek Branch," and every "branch" in the whole district was represented. This is generally true. They have full representation at every conference.

Smith left the conference at Eagle Creek, expecting to hold meetings at Hamlet. I let him tell his own story: "I came to this place (Hamlet, Ky.) expecting to hold meetings in this vicinity, but on arriving here found the Campbellites in full blast in a protracted effort. On our way to Bro. Hamilton's we passed where some of the neighbors had met and were raising a barn. After we had passed by, the burning of the schoolhouse (Davis' Chapel) was discussed and that night it was consigned to the flames. So, not willing to be beaten out of a meeting, we decided to build an arbor and try it anyway. So I sent some tracts to the Campbellite meeting, and had them distributed, announcing that our meeting would begin August 10. The next day the following notice was tacked up, which speaks for itself:

"'Any Mormon elder that is caught at Davis' chapel, or in the neighborhood, or about Briensburg, preaching their infamous doctrine, will be dealt with as we see people from ambush. We aim to have no Mormon preaching in this county, and if you value your lives anything stay away.
"'KENTUCKY REGULARS."

"So, to hear of us being shot in the back from ambush, please don't think we are on the run. We are here to stand by the work, the run. We are here to stand by the work, let it cost what it may. Although I do not feel anyways uneasy about it, yet we cannot tell what people will do when they are stirred up by the hireling shepherds. If all passes off all right here, we will try to be at Fulton, Kentucky, some time in the next month to hold a meeting there. Let the Saints pray for our protection."

I have often advised against the rail-riding and house-burning methods of opposition, and do so again. Very often the provocation is great, no doubt, of that, especially where the Utah wing is at work, but the rotten-egg, rail-riding, feather-coating methods are to be vigorously denounced by every man who understands what the Stars and Stripes symbol-

More, such a course is desired by the Mormon leaders. It confirms their followers in the faith in Mormonism, and creates a sym-pathy for the ism on the part of many. No one is compelled to go hear them or feed them. Meet argument with argument, and tract with tract; a fair honorable method is most effective.

Now hear a report from Elder J. W. Metcalf, 1819 Ninth street, Louisville, Kentucky, under date of August 5:

"Editors Herald:-I am pushing the work here, and have considerable opposition, because some of the heads of the man-made orders of worship are getting their eyes open. I baptized four persons yesterday, and one of them was a young man of good talent. He was president of the Epworth League. Another very good exhorter in the Methodist Church has confessed that he cannot find a flaw in the doctrine we preach, and said he could not approve of the Methodist doctrine any more, and that he was going to get out of it. I loaned him my Book of Mormon to read."

Such present going-on facts should be eyeopeners to those who think I am "beating wind" or "battling a pigment of imagination," that there is "no danger from Mormonism," and so on.

MORMONS VS MORMONS.

There are Mormons and Mormons. Most of folks know only the Utah wing, with the headquarters at Salt Lake City. These are frequently called "Brighamites." This is, by far, the largest denomination of the Mormons. It is the elders of this wing that are all over Kentucky and the South pushing their plea.

There is another wing or denomination of Mormons, and a much more commendable one every way, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa. The president, or Seer, of this wing is Joseph Smith, son of the so-called Prophet Joseph Smith, Jr., founder of Mormonism.

The elders of this wing denounce in severest terms the Utah Church as an apostate church, a bastard affair.

More, they are anxious to meet the Utah elders in debate over vital issues. I suggest that whenever the Utah elders are troublesome, simply challenge them to meet a La-moni elder. Let us have the original and pure Mormonism if we are to have any kind. After that point is settled between them it will be an easy matter to settle with the survivor, if it fails to prove a Kilkenny cat affair.

Here's a challenge from a legal representative of the Lamoni wing:

CHALLENGE.

I will give $500 to any man who will persuade the presidency of the Utah Church to appoint an apostle or elder of their church to meet an apostle or elder of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints in a public debate of twenty sessions to be held in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, then the contest to be repeated in Lamoni, Iowa.

The Reorganization stoutly affirms that Brigham Young was the author of the infamous document on polygamy and that it cannot be preven that Joseph Smith, the Seer, ever taught, practiced, or even sanctional plants represented the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services of the services tioned, plural marriage. C. J. HUNT, Deloit, Ia.

In addition they say, and can prove, that Joseph Smith, Jr., predicted that "if ever Brigham Young got the lead of the church he would lead it to hell."

Let this challenge be printed in all our county papers all over the whole land, and fling it in the teeth of the Utah elders until they are forced to "come to time." R. B. NEAL.

Regarding the challenge referred to. It is Bro. C. J. Hunt's individual affair. It may not be known to Elder R. B. Neal that Bro. E. C. Briggs, at the visit of Bro. Alex. McCord and himself to Utah, issued a challenge to the authorities of the church to discuss the then differences between the two bodies of believers in the teaching of Joseph Smith; that similar challenges have been offered at different times by various elders sent to the Utah mission, including Jason W. Briggs, Zenas H. Gurley, and others; which challenges have always been refused, on the part of the Utah people; the instruction of their authorities being to their elders not to discuss with the Josephites.

We doubt now that Bro. Hunt's challenge will have any different result than has followed the others. The Reorganized Church has been always ready to give in discussion the reasons for the course it has taken and is now willing to maintain its cause in debate, under fair conditions and in proper places.

Our contention is one based on principles and not a war on persons, and we distinctly disavow the use of epithet, or language derogatory to the honesty and virtue of our Utah contemporaries, other than such as may be couched in the statement that they are believers in and practicers of plural or polygamous marriage, which they themselves have admitted and avowed. The Presidency of the Reorganized Church is ready to furnish its quota of forces in discussion if such is agreed to by both parties to the issues joined. In the meantime Bro. C. J. Hunt is capable of taking care of his own affairs.

A: PLEASING EPISODE.

The enjoyment of the Saints assembled at Dow City reunion was pleasurably enhanced by the presence of a part of the Bigler's Grove band. who being members of the church and attending the reunion brought their instruments and enlivened the intervals between services, and the Sunday school services, with music, in a way pleasing to the Saints and creditable to themselves.

The roster of the members present is here given: Bert J. Fry, Ed C. Fry, Fred A. Fry, Arthur Reynolds, Fred Reynolds, Bert E. Reynolds, Orpheus Carroll, Auburn, Iowa; William Alters, Persia, Iowa.

We are pleased to commend the "boys" for their kind thoughtfulness.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Was Philip, who went down into Samaria, and who baptized Simon, only a priest; and if not, what was he; and if only a priest how was it that he was able to cast out evil spirits and heal the sick?

Acts 8: 5-7 reads as follows:

Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

It is quite clear from the reading of these verses that the unclean spirits were cast out, and the palsied and lame were healed, by the administrations of Philip. There are only two priesthoods, according to Doctrine and Covenants, section 104:1, viz., Melchisedec and Aaronic: The specific duties are enumerated to some extent in various places in the Doctrine and Covenants, more particularly in sections 104, 83, and 17. The authority or power to cast out evil spirits and administer to or heal the sick rests with the Melchisedec priesthood and not the Aaronic. Hence we must conclude Philip held the Melchisedec priesthood.

While at Hornerstown, New Jersey, I met Sr. S. B. Hopkins. She was born in 1816 near here. So you see she is quite aged, but has retained powers of body and mind won-derfully. She united with the church in 1837, and has been in the faith ever since, in which she yet expresses strong confidence. She was baptized by Erastus Snow, and confirmed by Lorenzo DeBarnes. She distinctly remembers that at the confirmation she was told by the Spirit that there were trying times coming on the church; but if faithful she would live through it all. She now re-joices that she did live faithfully, and her heart is yet in the work. She said she heard Joseph Smith when preaching near Cookstown (near here) deliver a prophecy in which he spoke of the Rebellion. Sydney Rigdon visited her several times. Among other things he told her that he never knew anything of the Book of Mormon until he saw it in print. She also said that he told her that he had seen Joseph Smith present little Joseph to the church and bless him and set him apart to that office which he now holds. She rejoices yet in the goodness of God

On September 19 Bro. A. P. Cantrell wrote from Ray, Georgia, that he had been preaching at a place ten miles east of Elligay, and had appointments out. He thinks there is a chance to do good there, and asks prayers that he may do a good work. He wants to know if there are any branches in Georgia, and where they are.

"Facts about the Filipinos" is the title of a publication issued from 12 Otis Place, Boston. Its aim is apparent from its title. Its price is $2.00 per year.

Bro. M. T. Short writes that he has recently baptized M. P. Miller, formerly of Millersburg, Illinois; his daughter, Ruth, on her eighth birthday; and Miss Reynolds, who is a half sister of W. A. Brn. M. T. Short and L. G. Gurwell have been advertising their meetings by means of handbills, in which they announced the subjects which would be treated on certain dates, such as "Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon," "Prophetic calling and Divine Authority of Joseph Smith," "Eternity of the Priesthood," "Perpetuity of Spiritual Gifts," "Signs of the Times, etc.

Bro. Joseph Ward writes from Williford, Arkansas, September 30, stating that the Ward-Black debate closed on the 29th. He reports a large attendance from the first, the house at times not holding all who desired admittance. He thinks many friends were made for the cause, and feels hopeful. Brn. W. S. Macrae and D. E. Tucker went south from Williford about sixteen miles, while Bro. Ward went to Pomona, Missouri.

Pure milk is necessarily the foundation of good dairy products of all kinds. This question has been the subject of careful investigation by the Dairy Department of the Iowa Agricultural College. Bulletin No. 59 just issued gives the results of a bacteriological study of the college creamery milk supply, by Professor Eckles, and the milk supply of some creameries in the state where serious trouble existed which was due to impurities of milk. The purification of milk by the centrifugal separator has also been the subject of careful investigation.

This bulletin contains information that will be of much practical value to the milk producers and creamerymen of the state. It may be had free by application to the Iowa Experiment Station, Ames, Iowa.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY.
NO. 4.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, September 8, 1901.

Reported for HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen.

I wish to read a few verses before commencing tonight. I will read the first six verses of the third chapter of Malachi:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.—Malachi 3: 1-6.

One reason why I read this passage is, that it is one of the passages read, or quoted rather, by the angel to Joseph Smith on the night of September 21, 1823, when he appeared to him three successive times during the night, and as our subject matter tonight, or a portion of it will be in connection with the work referred to in this prophecy, we wish to read it. I wish to invite your attention to what Joseph Smith has said in regard to the angel quoting this passage to him on the occasion referred to. He says:

He first quoted part of the third chapter of Malachi; and he quoted also the fourth or last chapter of the same prophecy, though with a little variation from the way it reads in our Bibles. Instead of quoting the first verse as it reads in our books, he quoted it thus: "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall burn as stubble, for they that cometh shall burn them saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

You will notice the difference. In the book it reads:

For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

And again he quoted the fifth verse thus: "Behold, I will reveal unto you the priesthood by the hand of Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord."

As it reads in the book,

Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

One is indefinite, as the purpose for which Elijah was to come is not stated; the other says, Behold, I will reveal unto you the priesthood by the hand of Elijah.

The next verse, the sixth, was quoted by the angel as follows:

And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers; if it were not so the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming.

In the book it reads:

And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.

To me, the rendering given by the angel is the more intelligible, though I will not stop to comment largely The idea conveyed in the upon it. rendering given by the angel is instructive, "And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers," that is, the promises made to the fathers in former dispensations, and the hearts of the children shall turn to the fathers in the last days. If it were not so, if these promises were not planted in the hearts of the children and their hearts turned to the fathers, then the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming; the earth would not be saved from utter destruction at the coming of Christ.

As we have it in our book, "He shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers." it would be rather difficult to understand how, in the last days, or in this dispensation, the hearts of the fathers, who are now dead and gone, could be turned to the children. The other, as quoted by the angel, sounds more reasonable, that the promises made to the fathers should be planted in the hearts of the children, and the hearts of the children should turn to the fathers, lest the earth should be destroyed at his coming. You will be able to make your own conclusion in regard to these comparisons, so I leave them for your consideration without further

In continuing the narrative of the history, as we have it given to us. we find that after they met on the 5th or the 15th of April, whichever time it was, Joseph with Oliver Cowdery as his scribe continued to translate from the plates containing the record. We told you in our last account there was a difference in the dates given by these two men. They continued to translate without interruption until the 15th day of May. On the 15th of May, 1829, their minds having become considerably interested in regard to certain things in the record, especially in regard to baptism, they concluded between themselves that they would go aside and pray in regard to the matter and ask for light. could understand from the record that certain ordinances, including baptism, were necessary, and that authority to administer in these ordinances was also essential, but they did not understand that it should be performed by any one until he was authorized of God. Finally, we are told, they went aside from the abode of men. They did not state definitely the locality, but they united in prayer, asking God for light upon this subject. We have the statement of both men in regard to it, and though the language is not the same, in all that they do relate they agree in regard to the events that transpired. Joseph Smith says:

We still continued the work of translation, when in the ensuing month (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray [he states, "into the woods," and Oliver Cowdery says, "aside from the abode of men"] and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."

How near these words agree with those we have read tonight where the prophet said that the Lord shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he shall purify the sons of Levi and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness! These words, "The sons of Levi," evidently signified that priesthood, for there can be no doubt that in the times that are past in the days of the tribes of Israel, that Levi was set apart to hold that priesthood; and when this language speaks of the sons of Levi, it evidently refers to the places they occupied, "The sons of Levi shall offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."

This personage that appeared to Joseph and Oliver in a cloud of light and ordained them used almost the identical words the prophet used when he was speaking of Christ and said, "I will purge the sons of Levi as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." He defined to them then what powers this priesthood had, and in defining the powers of this priesthood the answer to their question came. They were instructed in regard to baptism for the remission of sins, and he said this Aaronic priesthood held the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. And he further said the "Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me."

You will observe by reading the history that they had two separate ordinations to this priesthood. The angel laid his hands upon them, we are told, and ordained them to the Aaronic priesthood, by virtue of which they held the right to baptize, the thing they wanted particularly to know about. And when he ordained them he commanded them that they should baptize each other, holding the authority by virtue of the ordination received under the angel's hands. But when they baptized each other they ordained each other also. may seem peculiar that they should be twice ordained, but it seems to me the peculiar condition under which they were at the time will explain this. If their ordination by the angel had been one that was to remain as a permanent one, we would have been under the impression from reading the history, that ordination preceded baptism in its order, and it would have been a very difficult thing for us to carry it out. We would necessarily have had to know before persons were baptized what office they were to hold in the future, that we might ordain them to such authority before we baptized them. Evidently, and the natural order of things would be to baptize first, and as the time came and the Lord pointed out their calling they could be ordained; but on this particular occasion, when there was no one to baptize who held the authority. the angel, no doubt, or the personage who appeared to them, ordained them for this specific reason, that some one could be provided with the authority to do the first baptizing. Thus a special provision to meet the emergency, when there was no other authority upon the earth was made. After that, the regular order of things was taken up; and after baptism the men were ordained as the Lord had appointed.

Some have thought that as certain parties in the beginning of the work were ordained by angelic hands, that this order should be kept up all along the line, and that men would not be legally ordained until some personage from on high should come down and lay his hands upon them. If I ever had such an idea as that I have gotten rid of it. I am thankful that the Lord has considered man worthy and has so recognized him, that when he established his kingdom here that he chose man as his representative. I am not such a lover of foreign government that I fail to recognize the goodness of God in establishing our rights in this, and choosing from among us men to act for him, by delegated authority from on high. I do not care to have angelic hands laid upon me particularly; I am just as well satisfied as I could be if they had been. They tell us of the circumstances that attended this first administering of the ordinance, and from the words used we gather that they had manifestation of great power that confirmed them in the work; not only then but in the years to come through the difficulties and trials through which they passed.

Joseph said:

Immediately upon our coming up out of the water, after we had been baptized, we experienced great and glorious blessings from our heavenly Father. No sooner had I baptized Oliver Cowdery than the Holy Ghost fell upon him and he stood up and prophesied many things which should shortly come to pass. And again, so soon as I had been baptized by him, I also had the spirit of prophecy, when, standing up, I prophesied concerning the rise of the church, and many other things connected with the church, and this generation of the children of men. We were filled with the Holy Ghost, and rejoiced in the God of our salvation.

We cannot describe better than this the manifestation of power by which this work was confirmed in its beginning, nor do we hope to explain so that you can comprehend fully the manifestation of power these men received, because these things have to be felt to be understood. Our own experience tells us that, yet every one of us has longed to tell others how we feel under the manifestation of God's power. but we cannot; we never will, and sometimes I think it is a good thing we cannot, and that no man can understand it except by experience, no mind can grasp it until he passes through it. It is necessary for every man to receive it, and necessary that he shall not obtain it in any other way.

It seems to me we can determine that these manifestations at this and other times must have been very confirming; otherwise how could they have suffered, how could they have met the indignation of the world in the circumstances under which they lived, unless there was some power more than man has realized which sustained them and gave them the assurance that they were right and that God was upholding them in what they did.

Oliver Cowdery in his description tells us in eloquent language, his language was perhaps far better, so far as its diction was concerned, than Joseph Smith's, though he did not tell the events more clearly than Joseph did. The language is not only grand, but the events are narrated there in such a way as to engage our attention. He says:

This was not long desired before it was realized. [That is, what they went up there to pray for.] The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the vail was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance! What joy! what wonder! what amazement! while the world was racked and distracted-while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard. As in the "blaze of day," yes, more —above the glitter of the May sunb am, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow-servant," dispelled every fear. We listened—we gazed—we admired! 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory—'twas a message from the Most High! and as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were wrapt in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? Nowhere: uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled forever.

It seems to me that the conclusion reached by Oliver Cowdery was legitimate. If indeed they saw the glory descending in a cloud of light, and the voice of God as though from eternity, and they heard the message they were looking for, there was certainty and peace, and uncertainty no longer remained. And so I presume it was as he described it there; while the world was distracted and groping as blind men for the wall, their eyes saw and they enjoyed the blessing of the glory of God. But he says further:

What joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you my fellow-servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness."

You will notice the words are a little different from those of Joseph; his were nearer in harmony with those of the angel, and that is natural, for he had a talk with the angel before, and these words were fresh in his memory, and it is reasonable that he would write nearer the exact language of the angel. But Oliver Cowdery conveys the same meaning when he said this authority would remain upon the earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness. He says:

I shall not attempt to paint to you the feelings of this heart, nor the majestic beauty and glory which surrounded us on this occasion; but you will believe me when I say, that earth, nor men, with the eloquence of time, cannot begin to clothe language in as interesting and sublime a manner as this holy personage. No; nor has this earth power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit! Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, or one word from the mouth of the Savior, from the bosom of eternity, strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it forever from the mind! The assurance that we were in the presence of an angel; the certainty that we heard the voice of Jesus, and the truth unsullied as it flowed from a pure personage, dictated by the will of God, is to me, past description, and I shall ever look upon this expression of the Savior's goodness with wonder and thanksgiving while I am permitted to tarry, and in those mansions where perfection dwells and sin never comes, I hope to adore in that day which shall never case.

I think if Oliver Cowdery cannot describe it there is no use of anybody else trying. He gives us a grand description so far as he is able. I will leave it there for your contemplation.

For a time, it became necessary that their baptism and ordination to the priesthood should be kept secret on account of the persecution against them, for if they were to herald it abroad and had to meet the persecution and efforts to destroy the work or to hinder them, and possibly to use personal violence upon them, they would be hindered in the translation of the plates, so they kept quietly on with their work translating until they had finished, and how long afterwards I do not know. While they were yet impressed with this experience and before they returned to the house, as they went back, so the history informs us, (Joseph Smith does not give the time sufficiently clear, but Lucy Smith says as they were returning from their baptism), they saw Samuel H. Smith praying in secret. They approached him and talked to him in regard to these things, and he was baptized, making the third one who was bap tized into this latter day work. Their persecutors became so violent, however, that it was only by the efforts of Mr. Hale and family (Emma's father) that they were preserved from mob violence; and they both being in poor circumstances, and having no reserve to fall back on, it became evident they would have to be succored before they could go on with their work, and the question arose as to what they should do; whether or not they should quit and go and earn money for their support. About this time (whether it was the providence of God or not. you may judge, we do not pretend to give the cause, we simply present the facts) Mr. Joseph Knight, Sr., (and this name Knight becomes a prominent one in history later on,) comes to them to visit them, and bring them supplies, and after this first visit he came often and brought them provisions, and helped to feed them while they continued with their work. They did not go there soliciting money; they troubled no one. So far as we know of their actions, they went on about their work, of course anxious as to what should transpire, how they would be provided for. But Mr. Knight came to the rescue. I want you to notice that particular point all along the history, that in every emergency that arose some one rose up to meet that emergency. It seems to me very peculiar that in a work like this, started without money, without the finances to back it, that when an emergency arose it was met by somebody before those who were engaged in the work knew anything about it.

While this provision was made for their sustenance, they were hindered in their work by the necessity to leave that place. About this time came another honest man, David Whitmer; or rather, his father was at the back of it. Mr. Peter Whitmer sent his son David up there where they were and invited them to come to his house and he would take them under his own roof and provide for them while they were translating the plates. What moved Mr. Peter Whitmer? What moved Mr. Knight? What moved Oliver Cowdery? What moved Martin Harris, to come to the rescue? What object did they have in view? There was no prospect of earthly gain, no prospect of gaining popu-Some power, something moved them, something was behind them that said, "Send, or go, and succor this young man." And they did. Joseph accepted the invitation of Peter Whitmer, and accompanied his son down to Peter Whitmer's house, where their conditions were far more favorable. We are told that from that time David and John and Peter Whitmer became fast friends to Joseph Smith, and John assisted in recording the record as translated by

The people of Seneca county were friendly; they did not have the desire to resort to violence. But here in Seneca county, we are told, they desired to inquire about these things. About the only difficulty they had there was that so many individuals came to inquire and it took up so much of their time talking about it that their work was hindered. Not only was the difficulty occasioned by persecution removed for the time, but the anxiety regarding daily sustenance was removed also.

Peter Whitmer boarded and supplied them for awhile, and it was during the time they were there at Mr. Whitmer's house, and when the translation had been proceeded with to a certain extent, the provision was made for others to bear testimony as well as Joseph. Martin Harris had also gone down there to see how they were getting along, and while there, Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery, and this other young man, David Whitmer, who came and moved Joseph to his father's house, desired that they might become the three witnesses spoken of in the record, to have the privilege of looking upon the plates, and we are told that when they had made this request they received a promise telling them they might have that privilege, and that they should be the chosen ones. After the promise had been made they went into the woods to pray and ask that the promise might be fulfilled. Let me read you the words of Joseph Smith upon this point:

Not many days after the above commandment was given, we four; viz: Martin Harris, David Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery, and myself, agreed to retire into the woods, and try to obtain, by fervent and humble prayer, the fulfillment of the promises given in the revelation; that they should have a view of the plates, etc. We accordingly made choice of a piece of woods convenient to Mr. Whitmer's house, to which we retired, and having knelt down we began to pray in much faith, to Almighty God, to bestow upon us a reali-zation of these promises. According to zation of these promises. According to previous arrangements I commenced, by vocal prayer to our heavenly Father, and was followed by each of the rest in succession. We did not yet, however, obtain any answer, or manifestation of the divine favor in our behalf. We again observed the same order of prayer, each calling on and praying fervently to God in rotation; but with the same result as before. Upon this our second failure, Martin Harris proposed that he would withdraw himself from us, believing as he expressed himself that his presence was the cause of our not obtaining what we wished for.

The narrative goes on to say that when Martin Harris withdrew, Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and David Whitmer continued in prayer, and when they had prayed again they beheld a light above them in the air of exceeding brightness, and an angel stood before them. We made some remarks before about the light that attended angelic personages. angel had in his hands the plates which they had been praying to have a view of. He turned over the leaves one by one. He turned over those golden leaves and they beheld them just as those witnesses often testified to. He addressed himself to David Whitmer, and said: "David, blessed is the Lord, and he that keeps his commandments." Immediately afterwards they heard a voice from out of the bright light above them, saying:

These plates have been revealed by the power of God, and they have been translated by the power of God; the translation of them which you have seen is correct, and I command you to bear record of what you now see and hear.

If you will read the testimony of the three witnesses, you will see the strength of their testimony as compared with this command. I shall not take time to read it,* but you will see

*Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came that they testified to that which they were commanded to testify to, and by virtue of what they had seen and heard. But Martin Harris was not How came it that his name there. was signed with the other two? Joseph says:

I now left David and Oliver, and went in pursuit of Martin Harris, whom I found at a considerable distance, fervently engaged in prayer. He soon told me, however, that he had not yet prevailed with the Lord, and earnestly requested me to join him in prayer, that he also might realize the same blessings which we had just received. We accordingly joined in prayer, and ultimately obtained our desires, for before we had yet finished, the same vision was opened to our view; at least it was again to me, and I once more beheld, and heard the same things; whilst at the same moment Martin Harris cried out, apparently in ecstasy of joy. "'Tis enough; mine eyes have beheld," and jumping up he shouted, Hosannah, blessing God, and otherwise rejoiced exceedingly.

So Martin Harris, though he did not see it at the time the others did, saw exactly the same thing. Why the Lord did not see fit to show Martin Harris at the same time, we We might presume do not know. he had not sufficiently humbled himself and that it was necessary for him to humble himself more; and up there in the solitude of the woods he poured out his soul in prayer, and he got favor with God, and God bestowed upon him this blessing, and he testified to it. We might say that these men have never wavered in regard to this testimony, they all continued to assert that they had seen the plates. They did not always agree with others regard ing other things. Some of these witnesses afterwards in 1838 did not agree to all the policies of the church. That was not in any sense an evidence that there was something wrong on the part of their testimony, it simply showed they were men of independent thought; when they did not agree they said so, but they never wavered in their testimony, and testified to it upon their death bed, each of them with their last breath testifying that their former testimony was true. are told that Oliver Cowdery in particular told his attendants on his dying bed that he had something to say and could not die until he had said it; and when they had propped him up in bed, from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety, that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bare record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that if we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

he held his hand to heaven and testified that the Book of Mormon was true and his testimony regarding it was also true, and then sank back in death. If he had lied before, there was no need of him repeating it, it seems to me.

I have hurried through this part of my subject, and I have not gone as far as I would like to have done in the investigation of this testimony, but I will leave it with you for the present, hoping and trusting that we may continue our interest, and may God bless us in the investigation.

PRECIOUS PEARLS.-NO. 8.

GATHERED FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

BY WILLIAM HAWKINS.

When Jesus had spoken these words unto his disciples, he turned again unto the multitude, and said unto them, Behold, verily I say unto you; ye must watch and pray always, lest ye enter into temptation; for satan desireth to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; and whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, which is right, believing that ye shall receive, behold it shall be given you. Pray in your families unto the Father. always in my name, that your wives and your children may be blessed. And, behold, ye shall meet together oft, and ye shall not forbid any man from coming unto you when ye shall meet together, but suffer them that they may come unto you, and forbid them not; but ye shall pray for them. and shall not cast them out; and if it so be that they come unto you oft, ye shall pray for them unto the Father, in my name: therefore hold up your light that it may shine unto the world: behold I am the light which ye shall hold up-that which ye have seen me do. Behold, ye see that I have prayed unto the Father, and ye all have witnessed; and ye see that I have commanded that none of you should go away but rather have commanded that ye should come unto me, that ye might feel and see; even so shall ye do unto the world; and whosoever breaketh this commandment, suffereth himself to be led into temptation.

And now Jesus turned his eyes again upon the disciples whom he had chosen, and said unto them, Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, I give unto you another commandment, and then I must go unto my father, that I may fulfill other commandments which he hath given me. And now behold, this is the commandment which I give unto you, that ye shall not suffer any one knowingly, to partake of my flesh and blood unworthily, when ye shall minister it, for whoso eateth and drinketh my flesh and blood unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to his soul; therefore if ve know that a man is unworthy to eat and drink of my flesh and blood; ye shall forbid him; nevertheless ve shall not cast him out from among you, but ye shall minister unto him, and pray for him unto the Father, in my name, and if so be that he repenteth, and is baptized in my name, then shall ye receive him and shall minister unto him of my flesh and blood; but if he repent not, he shall not be numbered among my people, that he may not destroy my people, for behold I know my sheep, and they are numbered: nevertheless ve shall not cast him out of your synagogues, or your places of worship, for unto such shall ye continue to minister; for ye know not but what they will return and repent, and come unto me with full purpose of heart, and I shall heal them, and ve shall be the means of bringing salvation unto them. Therefore keep these sayings which I have commanded you, that ye come not under condemnation, for wo unto him whom the Father condemneth. And I give you these commandments because of the disputations which have been among you. And blessed are ye if ye have no disputations among you. And now I go unto the Father.

And when Jesus had made an end of these sayings, he touched with his hand the disciples whom he had chosen, one by one, even until he had touched them all, and spake unto them as he touched them; and the multitude heard not the words which he spake, therefore they did not bear record, but the disciples bear record that he gave them power to give the Holy Ghost. And when Jesus had touched them all there came a cloud and overshadowed the multitude, that they could not see Jesus. And the disciples saw and did bear record that he ascended again into heaven.

And on the morrow when the multitude was gathered together, behold, Nephi and the disciples whom Jesus had chosen went forth and stood in the midst of the multitude, and behold the multitude was so great, that they did cause that they should be separated into twelve bodies, and the twelve did teach the multitude, and they did cause that the multitude should kneel down upon the face of the earth, and should pray unto the Father in the name of Jesus. And the disciples did pray unto the Father in the name of Jesus, and they arose and did minister unto the people, those same words which Jesus had spoken. They knelt again, and they prayed for that which they most desired, that the Holy Ghost should be given unto them. And they went down to the water's edge, and the multitude followed them. And Nephi went down into the water and was baptized, and he came up out of the water, and he baptized all those whom Jesus had chosen. And when they were all baptized, they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. And behold they were encircled round about as if it were fire; and it came down from heaven, and the multitude did witness it, and do bear record; and angels came down out of heaven and did minister unto them.

And while the angels were ministering unto the disciples, behold, Jesus came and stood in the midst, and ministered unto them. And said unto them, So great faith have I never seen among all the Jews: wherefore I could not shew unto them so great miracles, because of their unbelief. Verily I say unto you, there are none of them that have seen so great things as ye have seen; neither have they heard so great things as ye have heard. And he brake bread again and blessed it, and gave to the disciples to eat; and when they had eaten, he commanded them that they should break bread, and give it unto the multitude; he also gave them wine to drink, and commanded them that they should give unto the multitude: and he said unto them, He that eateth this bread. eateth of my body to his soul, and he that drinketh of this wine, drinketh of my blood to his soul, and his soul shall never hunger nor thirst, but shall be filled.

Behold now I finish the commandment which the Father hath commanded me concerning this people who are a remnant of the house of Israel. Ye remember that I spake unto you, and said that when the words of Isaiah should be fulfilled, behold they are written, ye have them before you; therefore search them. And verily, verily I say unto you, that when they shall be fulfilled, then is the fulfilling of the covenant which the Father hath made unto his people, O house of Israel; then shall the remnants which shall be scattered abroad upon the face of the earth, be gathered in from the east, and from the west, and from the south, and from the north; and they shall be brought to the knowledge of the Lord their God, who hath redeemed them. And the Father hath commanded me that I should give unto you this land, for your inheritance.

And I say unto you, that if the Gentiles do not repent, after the blessing which they shall receive, after they shall have scattered my people, then shall ye who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, go forth among them, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, and as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he goeth through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

And I will gather my people together, as a man gathereth his sheaves into the floor, for I will make my people with whom the Father hath covenanted, yea, I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass. And thou shalt beat in pieces many people; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth. And behold I am he who doeth it. And it shall come to pass, saith the Father, that the sword of my justice shall hang over them at that day; and except they repent, it shall fall upon them, saith the Father, yea even upon all the nations of the Gentiles. And it shall come to pass that I will establish my people, O house of Israel. And behold this people will I establish in this land unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I made with your father Jacob; and it shall be a new Jerusalem, and the powers of heaven shall be in the midst of this people; yea, even I will be in the midst of you.

Behold I am he of whom Moses spake, saying, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me, him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul who will not hear that prophet, shall be cut off from among the people. Verily I say unto you, yea; and all the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have testified of me.

And behold ye are the children of the prophets, and ye are of the house of Israel; and ye are of the covenant which the Father made with your fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall the kindreds of the earth be blessed: the Father having raised me up unto you first, and sent me to bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities, and this because ye are the children of the covenant: and after that ye were blessed, then fulfilleth the Father the covenant which he made with Abraham, saying, In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed, unto the pouring out of the Holy Ghost through me upon the Gentiles, which blessing upon the Gentiles, shall make them mighty above all; and they shall be a scourge unto the people of this land. Nevertheless, when they shall have re-ceived the fullness of my gospel, then if they shall harden their hearts against me, I will return their iniquities upon their own heads, saith the Father: and I will remember the covenant which I have made with my people, and I have covenanted with them, that I would gather them together in mine own due time; that I would give unto them again the land of their fathers, for their inheritance, which is the land of Jerusalem. which is the promised land unto them forever, saith the Father. And it shall come to pass, that the time cometh, when the fullness of my gospel shall be preached unto them, and they shall believe in me, that I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and shall pray unto the Father in my name; then shall their watchmen lift up their voice; and with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye. Then will the Father gather them together again, and give unto them Jerusalem for the land of their inheritance. Then shall they break forth into joy-sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Father hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Father hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of the Father; and the Father and I are one. And then shall be brought to pass that which is written, Awake, awake again, and put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city, for henceforth there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean: shake thyself from the dust; arise, sit down, O Jerusalem; loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion. For thus saith the Lord, ye have sold your-selves for naught; and ye shall be redeemed without money. Verily, verily I say unto you, that my people shall know my name; yea, in that day they shall know that I am he that doth speak; and then shall they say, How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth glad tidings unto them, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth. And then shall a cry go forth, Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch not that which is unclean, go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessel of the Lord. For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight; for the Lord will go before you; and the God of Israel shall be your rearward. Behold my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high; as many as were astonished at thee; (his visage was so marred more than any man, so shall he sprinkle many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths at him, for that which had been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider. Verily, verily I say unto you, all these things shall surely come, even as the Father commanded me.

Then shall this covenant which the Father hath covenanted with his people be fulfilled; and then shall Jerusalem be inhabited again with my people, and it shall be the land of their inheritance. And verily I say unto you, I give unto you a sign, that ye may know the time when these things shall be about to take place, that I shall gather in from their long dispersion, my people, O house of Israel, and shall establish again among them my

And behold this is the thing which I will give unto you for a sign, for verily, I say unto you, that when these things which I declare unto you. and which I shall declare unto you hereafter of myself, and by the power of the Holy Ghost, which shall be given unto you of the Father, shall be made known unto the Gentiles, that they may know concerning this people who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, and concerning this my people who shall be scattered by them; Verily, verily I say unto you, when these things shall be made known unto them of the Father, and shall come forth of the Father, from them unto you, for it is wisdom in the Father that they should be established in this land, and be set up as a free people by the power of the Father, that these things might come forth from them unto a remnant of your seed, that the covenant of the Father may be fulfilled which he hath covenanted with his people, O house of Israel; therefore when these works. and the works which shall be wrought among you hereafter, shall come forth from the Gentiles unto your seed. which shall dwindle in unbelief, because of iniquity; for thus it behooveth the Father that it should come forth from the Gentiles, that he may show forth his power unto the Gentiles, for this cause, that the Gentiles. if they will not harden their hearts. that they may repent and come unto me, and be baptized in my name, and know of the true points of my doctrine that they may be numbered among my people, O house of Israel: and when these things come to pass. that thy seed shall begin to know these things, it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel. And when that day shall come, it shall come to pass that kings shall shut their mouths; for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider: for in that day, for my sake, shall the Father work a work which shall be a great and a marvelous work among them; and there shall be among them those who will not believe it, although a man declare it unto them. But behold, the life of my servant shall be in my hand; therefore they shall not hurt him, although he shall be marred because of them. Yet I will heal him, for I will shew unto them that my wisdom is in expecting the aid and encourage | Norse discovery, except so far as greater than the cunning of the devil. Therefore it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not believe in my words, who am Jesus Christ, whom the Father shall cause him to bring forth unto the Gentiles and shall give unto him power that he shall bring them forth unto the Gentiles, (it shall be done even as Moses said,) they shall be cut off from among my people who are of the covenant; and my people who are a remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, yea, in the midst of them, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who if he go through both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver: their hand shall be lifted up upon their adversaries, and all their enemies shall be cut off. Yea, wo be unto the Gentiles, except they repent, for it shall come to pass in that day. saith the Father, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots, and I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down thy strong holds; and I will cut off witchcrafts out of thy land, and thou shalt have no more soothsayers; thy graven images, I will also cut off, and thy standing images out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt no more worship the works of thy hands; and I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee: so will I destroy thy cities; and it shall come to pass that all lyings, and deceivings, and envyings, and strifes, and priestcrafts, and whoredoms, shall be done away: for it shall come to pass, saith the Father, that at that day, whosoever will not repent and come unto my beloved Son, them will I cut off from among my people, O house of Israel, and I will execute vengeance and fury upon them, even as upon the heathen, such as they have not heard.

AT IT AGAIN.

After nearly two months active missionary labor, somewhat to the neglect of my duty to the particular interest of Graceland College, I am again on duty, and will promptly meet some of the to me unpleasant features of duty.

The opening of the college this fall has been quite satisfactory, and the outlook for this year promises to be one of good results to this church institution, and notwithstanding there is considerable of a change in the personnel of both faculty and students, the prospect for our work was never better, and any reflections upon either faculty or students, either of the past or the present, would be unfair, unfriendly, and injurious to our educational institution.

We ask for, and feel fully justified ment of all Saints and earnest friends of education. Give us the cheerful word and contribute to our museum. which is one of the finest of any in the country for its age and size. Also, we are desirous to have our library increase with time, we shall be thankful for your donation of books. And the herbarium as a helpful aid in instruction still awaits your contribution. This department is under the watchful eve of Bro. Jacob P. Anderson, who is ever alert to the advancement, and the careful arranging of specimens.

We are still asking for your kind remembrance to aid us in the running expenses. Last year we were successful in cutting down expense, and we fully expect to do better this year, nevertheless we are still needy, and trust you will not turn us away empty, and thereby put the cause to an open shame. For surely a church of fifty thousand membership can contribute three thousand dollars for educational purposes annually; and that amount, together with receipts from students, would be ample for needed repairs and improvements.

On receiving the word of the Lord last spring, we had every reason to believe that ere this the "college debt" would have been wiped out. am fully satisfied that it will not be to the spiritual advancement for any to either neglect or oppose the wise and business-like advice vouchsafed to the church in that word; therefore I can heartily indorse and urge immediate compliance, for if we be not faithful and prompt in this small matter. what assurance has our heavenly Father that we would be in a more important requirement.

Dear Saints, let no one sow seeds of doubt or unbelief in your heart, and thereby cheat you of your crown and reward.

For truth and right, ROBT. M. ELVIN.

CHRISTIANITY IN AMERICA BEFORE THE NORTHMEN.

Historical theories of the early settlement of the Western Continent are almost as numerous as are literary theories of Hamlet. The Welsh, the Irish, the Israelites, the Chinese, the Japanese, the Phenicians, and many others are supposed by different writers to have been acquainted in one way or another with America. Each hypothesis has its fond advocates, although no absolute consensus among historical students exists as to any pre Columbian discovery, even as to the comparatively well authenticated Greenland is concerned. Among the most fascinating of these hypotheses is that relating to an alleged early Christian evangelization of the Central Americans. Some further light is thrown upon this theory in a recent work, "The History of America before Columbus, according to Documents and Approved Authors," by Father De Roo, an erudite Roman Catholic priest of Philadelphia. In the Catholic World (June), another historical student, Mr. William Stetson Merrill, gives a resume of what facts we possess pointing to a possible early introduction of Christianity among the natives of Mexico, Yucatan, and Peru, basing his statements mainly on Father De Roo, with some references to Dawson, John Fiske, and others. He writes:

"The civilizations found by the Spanish in Mexico, Central America, and Peru were described by their historians. The religious rites, ceremonies, and beliefs excited the amazement of the Spaniards by their remarkable resemblance to Christianity; just as the early missionaries to Tibet found there another pope of a heathen religion, with convents and bells and rosaries. The Spaniards and the Jesuits who reached Tibet could not account for this remarkable fact unless, forsooth, Satan had himself taught these people Christianity out of spite! . . .

"Our author's explanation of them is novel. He claims that Christianity was introduced into America before Columbus, before the Norse even, and introduced by the Irish monks, whose widespread missionary labors are so well known. He believes also that the Apostle St. Thomas actually visited our shores, and that St. Brendan in his famous navigation did the same. Through some one, or perhaps through all of these agencies, the doctrines of Christ—in fact of Catholic Christianity -were introduced and taught to the natives, by whom they have been preserved. The following is a summary of the points of resemblance which De Roo claims to prove an early evangelization of America:

"The Mexicans and Peruvians believed in one God, and there are traces of a belief in the Blessed Trinity. The story of the creation is told in their famous book called the 'Popul Vuh'; so also man's First Fall, the immortality of the soul, intercessory prayer for the dead, rewards and punishments hereafter, resurrection, and the Last Judgment. The account of the deluge is widespread, and its very universality in America has been urged as proof of its actual occurrence; in fact, the advocates of a partial deluge must square their theory with this tradition preserved in tribes separated by great oceans from the scenes to which they would restrict!

the flood. Even the Tower of Babel figures among the traditions of the Nahuas, Cholulans, and tribes of Central America and California. Turning now to distinctively Christian teaching, one can almost reconstruct the life of Christ, in its theological aspects. from the aboriginal records. more: we find the sacraments of baptism; Holy Eucharist, with its attendant fasting and communion; penance and auricular confession, with its requirements of contrition and its complement absolution. We find an organized priesthood, duly ordained, vested, and maintained; we find celibacy, religious orders, convents of nuns, hermits, pilgrimages, holy water, exorcisms; nay, the New Fire and liturgical prayers.

"It is to be noted that the Aztecs had some practices of a very different character from Christian celibacy and cloistered purity, and the latter practices were admitted by them to be anomalies in their system. According to the Zapotec tradition, they were really foreign features introduced by an early white-skinned teacher or apostle, 'who came by sea, bearing a cross in his hand, and debarked in the neighborhood of Tehauntepec.' This stranger, whom they called 'Wixipecocha,' is described as 'a man of a venerable aspect, having a bushy white beard, dressed in a long robe and a cloak, and wearing on his head a covering shaped like a monk's cowl. Wixipecocha taught his disciples to deny themselves the vanities of this world, to mortify the flesh through penace and fasting, and to abstain from all sensual pleasures' [Father De Roo, vol. 1, p. 503].

"A similar tradition is that of the Aztecs relating to Quetzalcoatl. hero god, he comes from a foreign land to Mexico, venerated under divers names all over Central America. nay, perhaps canonized in Europe, De Roo says. His name signifies Beautifully feathered serpent.' He is described as 'a white or pale-faced man, of portly person, with broad forehead, great eyes, long black hair, and a heavy rounded beard' (1, 542). He was reserved in his manners, spent much time in prayer, ascetic, and celibate. His date is perhaps the eleventh century or earlier, for aboriginal chronology is obscure. His works were converting the natives and teaching them the arts of civilized life. Accompanying him were a number of companions, or disciples, who imitated their master in mode of life. Their success may be measured by their fame preserved in widespread traditions, and by the reverence in which their memory is held. He taught the unity of God, the Creator and Lord of heaven and earth; condemned idolatry, and especially human sacrifices. Peace and charity were the cardinal virtues of his creed: 'From these few details of Quetzalcoatl's teaching one naturally feels induced to believe that all the vestiges of Christianity of which we have spoken had their beginnings from him and his disciples, or colaborers, in the American mission' (1, 550). These reforms were not accomplished without opposition from the established priesthood, who finally forced Quetzalcoatl to retire to a western province, where he passes from view. A belief in his future return lingered among the people, and some of the later Christian missionaries were received peacefully under the belief that they were the great hero-god with his disciples, returning to his own.

"Was this remarkable figure a mere leader of a colony from the northeast (so Bandelier); or was he a personification of a nature god—in fact, a sunmyth (so Brinton); or was he the Apostle St. Thomas (so Sahagun); or, finally, was he an Irish monk with a colony from over sea? The last is the conclusion of De Roo, who finds in these aboriginal traditions a confirmation of European allusions to the Irish occupancy of America.

"The points of resemblance outlined above between Christianity and the American religions are certainly remarkable, and they establish the fact to our author of an early evangelization of America. Is he aware that precisely this line of argument has been followed to prove the derivation of Christianity from Buddhism, from Mithraism, from Essenism, nay, from the Greek mysteries? Does he claim that the Abbé Huc was anticipated in his travels to Tibet when he found, to his amazement, a pope—the Lama—a hierarchy, religious orders, penance, bells, and rosaries? Let him read the following passage relating to the religion of Mithras, an old solar deity, probably older than Zarathustra, who was worshiped in Persia in the time of Alexander the Great:

"'Like the Christians, the adherents of the Persian God [Mithras] lived in close relationship with one another, using the terms "fathers" and "brothers." Like the Christians, they had baptism; a kind of communion; they taught an imperative morality; preached continence, charity, self-abnegation, and self-control. They speak of a deluge, believe in the immortality of the soul as well as the resurrection of the dead, in a heaven of blessed ones, and a hell inhabited by the powers of evil' [F. Comont, in Roscher's "Lex. d. Gn. u. R. Myth.," quoted in the Monist, April, 1900, p. 358].

"We quote this passage, not to establish anything regarding the relations of Mithraism and Christianity—for the discussion of these ethnic types of Christian truths, if the term may be used, cannot be introduced here—but to show how dangerous, not to say illusory and baseless, it is to argue from similarities to origin."—Literary Digest, September 7, 1901.

ROSLYN, Wash., Sept. 26.

Editors Herald:—We have had Elders John Davis and David Powell with us for three weeks preaching for us. They baptized two, and one more promised to be baptized when they come back. They are at Spokane now but expect to return here about the last of November. We enjoyed their preaching and company very much, and look forward with pleasure for their return.

We have a nice little church here. We have had it built a little over a year. It cost between six and seven hundred dollars as it now stands. We have been expecting some one to come and dedicate it, but so far we have been disappointed; but we are glad to have a place for the elders when they come, and to have our meetings and Sunday school in. We have Sunday school and social meeting on Sunday, and prayer meetings on Thursday evenings. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion I remain, In bonds,

FRANK HOLMES.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 23.

Editors Herald:-The writer has been spending a few days in this city. Yesterday he attended the services in the order in which they came. Sabbath school and preaching in the forenoon; preaching in the afternoon and evening. At the close of the Sabbath school, which was well conducted, it fell to the lot of the writer to occupy the morning hour for preaching, assisted by Bro. William LaRue. In the afternoon Bro. George Smith preached a good discourse out at Germantown assisted by Bro. Hosea Bacon. At evening Bro. William LaRue was the speaker at the regular place of meeting, assisted by the writer. Bro. LaRue's effort was very catchy and entertaining, being listened to with rapt attention. An excellent spirit prevailed in all of the meetings of the day, including the Sabbath school, which, by the way, is a leading feature in the work being done here; and the prospects are favorable for enlarging and increasing the interest in this part of the work.

It was a happy appointment in sending Bro. LaRue here. He seems to be an exact fit for the place—suited to the work. He likes the people and the people like him. So the outlook is good for a harmonious movement among the Saints of Philadelphia, and a successful one. A long stride has been taken in the last few years in the interest of the work here. At one time the fire seemed to be almost out, but the Lord had a seed left and it is growing. Bro. George Smith, now of the local force, is well liked and aids the cause to the best of his opportunities. George should be in the constant field work.

The Saints are hopeful and feel that success is coming their way. Of course this depends (and they know it) upon their diligence and faithfulness. May their most ardent hopes be realized in giving perseverance and success in the City of Brotherly Love.

A few days were spent in Brooklyn, New York, but not eventful, except that occurring without, the dastardly act of shooting President McKinley. If solemn faces, tear-bedimmed eyes, miles of crape, speak for the heart, the people mourn the demise of this great chief of the nation. He was, indeed, a great and good man.

Bro. George Robley has returned home for a season, but will be busy in the Massachusetts district. Fraternally,

Editors Herald:-There was a manifestation of the power of God at our house a few days ago that will be of interest to the Saints. Bro. G H. Godbev came to my house on an official visit on the 18th of September, and staid over night. At three o'clock in the morning he called me to come and rub him, that he could not move. I found him perfectly helpless, and by daylight he could not move a finger or toe. We sent for Elder Charles Moore, who administered to the sick man twice that afternoon; and the next morning Bro. Godbey got up and ate his breakfast as if nothing had been wrong with him; and on Saturday, the 21st, he rode seven miles and filled an appointment, and is perfectly well. To God be all the glory.

R. P. CADLE.

THAYER, Mo., Sept. 23.

Herald Readers:—A word from this point of the woods may interest some.

"The little boy preacher" and the writer are at present at Cain Hill schoolhouse. Our audiences are not the largest; but there are some interested ones. Two were baptized today by Bro. Baker; he also baptized six while at Woodside.

The writer tried to interest a few that came out to the pleasant home of Bro. Bert Bootman a few nights. But we found it rather a hard task to interest them with our small 22-caliber rifls, when the artillery of I. N. had so lately been booming in their ears; and we also learned that the noise of his gun had caused them to retreat behind barred doors, for they learned that the Bible and Bible alone was not sufficient barricade to stop such shots. So they depend upon the more sure refuge—stay away, and closed doors.

But we have got reinforcements at Thayer now in the person of Bro. Charles Bootman. I tell you we have a team now, and we expect to see good done at that point.

Bro. Baker is making charts, and I feel a litt'e jealous lest he will rob me of my fame as "The South Missouri Artist," for I see he has an angel on his last chart, with bangs, a blue waist, green skirt, trimmed with a flounce of white, red stars, a red sash, and red shoes. He calls that his "United States Angel." If that is not enough to make an old artist weep, I do not know what would. By the way, chart preaching surely takes the cake in these parts, and the writer and the "boy" have about fifteen.

We had one of the best district conferences it has been my lot to attend; and I am sorry that so far there has been no report of it. The Saints turned out well, and we had a very spiritual time. Bro. William Bootman was ordained to the office of priest, and we look for a life of usefulness.

I would say to the Saints in South Missouri: Although the drought has stricken this part, yet many of you have been blessed in other ways. So do not forget your tithes. Remember God requires his share. Do not keep it back to speculate on, use your own only.

I believe all those of the missionary force are pushing along; I wish I could say the same for the local force.

May God help us to keep to the front of the battle, is my prayer.

HENRY SPARLING.

BRUBAKER, Ill., Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference which was held at Tunnel Hill is now a matter of history. The Spirit of peace and love was manifested there.

Bro. I. A. Morris was chosen to preside over the district for one year, and Bro. J. E. Bozarth his assistant. Bro. P. G. McMahon was elected secretary. Preaching was by F. M. Slover, F. M. Davis, J. E. Bozarth, I. A. Morris, and W. R. Smith. The prayer meeting was in charge of I. A. Morris and W. A. Kelley.

Thus closed another conference of the district, which we are satisfied was a blessing and a means of strength to those present. Our next conference will be held at Springerton, beginning on Saturday before the third Sunday in February, 1902, and last over Sunday.

I hope to be able to keep myself pure in body as well as in mind, that I may be qualified to do the Lord's work.

This is a new place, and we have the use of the town hall for preaching every night this week and over Sunday.

I have a desire to retain a Spirit of humility. May peace and unity abound everywhere. Your brother,

F. M. SLOVER.

FORD, Iowa, Sept. 29.

Dear Herold:—I cannot give a very flattering report of my work in the Des Moines district. I do not find all the Saints as zealous as they ought to be; still some make sacrifices, and seem to be alive to the perilous times. Others seem to forget, and are slothful in their duty.

From the reunion I went to St. Charles, where I found Bro. Peters and his esteemed wife ready to assist in having meetings. I discoursed eight times on gospel themes.

From there I went to the Valley branch and spoke three times. Learning that Brother Sorensen had commenced meetings at Sandyville, I went to his relief, as he had to go home, and continued the meetings over two weeks. I had good attendance, the tent being filled at times; but none have obeyed as yet. Have some hopes for the future. Brother Knox and his very much esteemed family seemed all alive to the work. His two daughters, Zula and Mamie, played the organ and led the singing. It does an elder good to see the Saints live so as to be lights to those around them.

Your brother in Christ, G. W. SHIMMEL.

TUNNEL HILL, Ill., Sept. 30. Editors Herald:-Last night closed our district conference. The attendance was good throughout. The good Spirit was present and the preaching services were excellent. The speakers gave good instruction along gospel lines showing the great necessity of obeying the gospel and living in harmony with God's word in order to receive the greatest reward in the life that is beyond this. There was a great interest manifested among the Saints, also those who are outside of the church. God seems to be moving upon the people by his Spirit, helping them to see their true condition and enlightening their minds concerning the glorious truths of the Elder F. M. Slover preached a very excellent sermon on Sunday, taking for his text Matthew 24:31 and 2 John 9:11. He showed the great calamities that would come upon the inhabitants of the earth before the coming of the Son of God, and that the condition of the people in wickedness would be as it was in the days of Noah, and of the great necessity of abiding in the doctrine of Christ in order to escape the things that are coming upon the inhabitants of the world before the coming of the Son of Man, and to be among his jewels when he shall come as a refiner and purifier of silver.

Bro. Morris gave good instructions along the line of duty. Elder W. R. Smith was the speaker Sunday evening.

The work here is gradually growing and spreading among the people; still there is some prejudice. There are people who are not willing to investigate our claims, and who will not consent to open the doors of their churches that the angel's message delivered in this the last dispensation of time may be presented to the people in its true light. May God have mercy on such people, and help them to see the true light as it is in Christ Jesus.

We have some good Saints here, who are trying to overcome the things of the world. and to attain to that Christian perfection and divine nature that has been designed by the God of heaven that they should attain to in this life, while on the other hand we have some who are careless and negligent concerning their duties to God and the church. May the Lord move upon such by his Spirit to go forward in discharge of duty. I believe the Saints can do more in spreading this grand message of the gospel in their respective localities by right living and keeping in harmony with the law of God than a great number of sermons would accomplish. My desire is to so live and act in this life that I may not bring any reproach upon this great work of the Lord that he is performing among the people in these the latter days, and my prayer is that those who have taken upon themselves the name of Christ may go forward in discharge of duty and so live that they may receive the great reward promised to the faithful ones.

Your brother, P. G. MCMAHAN.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Sept. 26.

Editors Herald:-The Saints generally are enjoying good health, and our branch is moving along. In some respects we have made quite an advancement. A little over one year ago we were left without a missionary, something that to many of us seemed strange and unwise, for we had been so accustomed to having at our head as a leader a General Conference appointee. Yes, for fifteen years the work was cared for by good, able men such as H. C. Bronson, Joseph F. McDowell, M. H. Forscutt, J. M. Terry, and H. O. Smith. To leave us alone seemed to many to be a grave mistake, but such was the case. and many were the kicks made. This was not all that happened to discourage the Saints of this city, for we lost so many faithful workers who moved away, such as Bro. R. Winning, D. J. Krahl, David and William Blair, John Burlington, William Lawrenson, and their families. It seemed for awhile that the St. Joseph branch was certainly going to be scattered and that we would have to close the doors of our beautiful church, and possibly lose the same, for we had a debt of over $5,000 to pay.

I confess it looked very blue to my mind. The St. Joseph branch was like a family of overgrown children who had not been left to hustle for themselves, for they had always been cared for by pa and ma. But pa was removed by death, the burden of the family then fell on the dear mother. She called her sons and daughters together, explained the condition; stated that now the head was gone and for the first time did all learn what was before them. Here they had a large farm, well stocked, but a heavy mortgage on the farm. They knew that had pa been permitted to stay, all would have been well. But here they were without him. What to do? Well, there was only one of two things to do: give up the home and farm, drift out into the world each one for himself, or unite and shoulder to shoulder go to work. With the counsel of the dear mother they would pull through, and they did. Today this family has presented to the world men and women competent to stand at the head of some of the leading enterprises of this land. They were given the opportunity in life to do something.

So with us here. We had a good brother sent to look after the work, and Sunday after Sunday we all came together to be instructed and fed by him. We had not the care for the work we should. For fifteen years its interest had been watched by our missionary, who seemed to think it wise to do all the work himself and let able-bodied men sit in idleness,—no chance to develop home talents; but the chance came—we were left to ourselves-sink or swim. Well, I am glad that I can say that we are still in the swim, and on top. We have paid out in cash about twenty-five hundred dollars, and the spiritual condition of the branch is good. Three have been ordained to the office of elder; four priests, one teacher, one deacon; and all are working. We are still holding meetings in the missions, and Bro. J. M. Terry has come to our help. He is doing what he can himself, and calling to his assistance some of the local forces. So we look for a good and greater work to be done in St. Joseph the coming year than the last. I do not wish it to be understood that our missionaries that have labored with us during the fifteen years did not labor hard and faithfully; the only complaint I have heard is that they did not give the local forces the privilege to develop. In their judgment it was not advisable to place one of the locals in the stand on Sunday, if they could be present. My understanding of the work is that the strong are to take the weak with them, and not sit down, but give him a chance to occupy. Never mind if some one will say we do not want you to call Bro. A. or B. to the stand; you do all the speaking. No, brother missionary, do not do that; but call to your assistance the weak and inexperienced, and sometime let him speak before you. If he has the spirit of the work his talk will do good, and he will grow, and later on he too will be strong and can say to the weak, Come, occupy the stand. Let the membership not ignore the weak brother; rally around him, and I will assure you that something will be said that: will do good. Remember that the Lord has chosen the weak things; and if we despise them by going home just because they are going to speak, or find fault, we certainly find fault with him who has chosen them. Please think of this, you Latter Day Saints who cannot go to preaching service unless some strong, able speaker is there. The strong do not need your presence; but the weak do, and your sympathy and prayers. The weak always need encouragement: if you will rally to his support you will be blessed.

I am glad that some of the brethren and sisters who moved away have not forgotten us, but are still sending of their means to help to pay on our church debt. We thank you for this. We are also glad to report that Brn. Lawrenson and Burlington have returned; and I assure them that they are welcome. May others follow in their footsteps. The writer has sold his business to Bro.

This part of the state has suffered from the extreme dry hot weather this past summer. Corn is sixty-five cents per bushel; oats forty-three; hay twelve to fourteen dollars per ton; potatoes $1.20 to $1.35 per bushel; apples from fifty cents to one dollar per bushel; peaches from eighty cents to $1.50 per bushel; but they are good, as is the grape crop. The latter are one and one half to two cents per pound. We have had some good rains the last three weeks, and are having good, warm weather, so that we are in hopes of good pasture. Had light frost—no damage.

WM. LEWIS.

COOK'S POINT, Texas, Sept. 29.

Rditors Herald:-I see a reference to me in last issue of the HERALD which I think needs some explanation. Bro. John Hawley said "I was a Baptist on some points, but a Latter Day Saint on most all points." When I left the Baptist Church and joined the Church of Jesus Christ I brought with me all the truth which I learned while in that church. All truth, is my creed. Now as to the part Bro. Hawley had reference to. It is that I believe that all that we receive from God is numerated so far as we are concerned; that is we receive whatsoever we do or will for Christ's sake and not for our works, while we are saved through obedience from sin and its effects with an everlasting salvation and rewarded according to our works; yet not for our works, for we cannot earn anything, because we are the Lord's, by creation, preservation, redemption, our time and all we have. except our sins, so that we cannot merit anything of the good Lord. As Jesus said, when you have done all that you are commanded to do, then say you are unprofitable servants. because you have done only that which is your duty. I cannot see any means, time, or place for me to earn or merit any reward from the good Lord. It will take me all the time to glorify God in my spirit and body in discharging my duties. The foregoing is true former-day saint doctrine, and I take it to be true Latter Day Saint doctrine. So Bro. Hawley is just a little mistaken, that's all. He is a good soul, and he will see his mistake sometime.

I am glad to say that the more I know of the Latter Day Saint doctrine, as it is called, the stronger in the faith I get. There is not a single point that I object to or disbelieve as I understand it; but there are some constructions that some of the brethren put upon some points which I do not believe as they do.

I have just returned from Grimes county. Met good turnouts and splendid interest. I expect good results.

When I read the cheering letters in HER-ALD from the Northern States, how I would rejoice if such could be written of Texas. But such is not the case. Texas is surely the hardest field that the church has in the United States. If any of ye missionaries think not, just try it a year; and see if you do not agree with us.

I am in the conflict until the end. Yours in the one faith,

E. W. NUNLEY.

MIAMI, Ind. Ter., Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:-Our camp meeting near Fairland, Indian Territory, was not as largely attended as former meetings, but seemed to be a success. During the meeting one Dr. D. B Ray came to Fairland and delivered four lectures against us. I happened to be there, and arose after his first lecture, and proposed to defend our cause. But ah, he did not have any time then to debate, but would leave propositions and return sometime and dedebate; preferred to meet E. L. Kelley or his superior. Dr. Ray is of considerable fame among the Baptist people. His lectures were very flimsy, and seemed to do us more good than harm. I answered him for two nights, and examined the Baptist church the third night, to a full house. Much good was done. I left the people very anxious for a debate; and if Dr. Ray does not back out we will have one sometime in the future.

I came to this place Saturday; preached at 7:30 p. m., Sunday night 7:30 and at 11 a. m. Will continue all the week. Good interest here in this nice little city, which reminds me of Lamoni, Iowa, only it is larger. Bro. R. M. Peck built a nice church, 20x30, and we have some fine people in Miami.

I have been very busy-one continued meeting ever since I came into Spring River district last May. Have no time to waste tramping around after Utah elders.

Editors Herald:-As I am alone this morning, thought I would drop a few lines to our dear paper. Tomorrow is the day for the Saints here to meet to worship God and sing praises to his holy name; but as I am twentyeight miles from the place appointed, it will be impossible for me to be with them. But I hope they will all be there, and that God will bless them with his Holy Spirit. The first Sunday of each month is our day for meeting, as the Saints are so scattered here it seems impossible to get them together; but God loves sacrifice, and never fails to bless us when we make an effort to serve

It has been the daily longing of my heart since I embraced this glorious latter-day gospel to work for the Master, to keep his commandments, and do some good for poor wayfaring Israel, though I realize that I am weak and unworthy; yet I hope by the grace and power of God to come up higher and be able to set an example worthy of emulation. All Saints are required of God to live honest, upright lives, observing the commandments to keep them, and be cheerful, not to indulge in idle conversation, or mingle with bad company. This I am sure is not meant for a few of his Saints, but for all. May all the Saints realize that the hastening time is nearing, and put their shoulders to the wheel, for there is work for every one. Saints, we must prepare ourselves for Christ's coming; for, as he has said, no man knows the time of his coming, for he will come as a thief in the night. Therefore, dear Saints, how necessary that we have our lamps filled with oil, and be watching, that the Bridegroom find us not sleeping, but up and marching with the wise, with truth and righteousness written on our hearts, that we may gain an inheritance in his kingdom, to reign with him a thousand years.

I wish to ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints and Prayer Union, in behalf of my poor old mother, who has been very delicate all her life, and has been deaf for over thirty years. Her suffering is something terrible to see at times, and, dear Saints, I beseech you to remember her in your prayers and at the Prayer Union, that God may heal her of her afflictions. O what a joy it would be to her children, as well as to her, to have her well; and I know God can heal her if it is his will. Therefore, dear Saints, pray for her, that God may have mercy and heal her afflictions. Your sister in Christ,

FRANCES HEATON.

DELTA, Colo., Sept. 28.

Dear Herald:-Permit us space to say we are thoroughly alive and striving to build up the Master's cause. We have had twenty six additions to our branch since March 1 of the present year, nine of which were by baptism. Others are near the kingdom.

We hold our regular Sunday school and church services, and for the scattered condition of our membership have good attendance, some coming thirteen miles to meet with us. Our monthly meetings are a source of much comfort and strength to Saints, and all are becoming more united in all things pertaining to the welfare of the cause. Some of our membership come over fifty miles to meet with us at these meetings.

We contemplate building a house of worship this winter, and trust when our scattered members return for the winter we may be able to secure labor sufficient to complete it by spring, as most of our winters are quite mild, and many of our number go into the mountain district for work, lumbering during the summer months, and then winter in the vallevs.

We have the manifestation of the Spirit with us, in tongues, prophesy, and revelations regarding the work in this place. Under the direction of the Spirit through our branch president we selected a committee to go and investigate the timber and grazing lands on the range adjoining the valleys, and to act quickly that we might secure property in common to be used for the spread of the gospel and to be held for the branch for the benefit of all, that none need to want. The committee report abundance of available land, and have located a half section of the best timber land in this section of the State. with several sections adjoining that are very good, in all, nearly one fourth of a township, which can be taken under the preëmption act. All of it is fine grazing land, and much will soon be valuable for potatoes and barley hay, as well as pasture, which alone will soon be valuable and a source of revenue, to say nothing of the timber which is on the land adjoining the tract located, and perhaps is worth from five to ten thousand dollars as soon as a title is secured for the same just as it stands.

Now we cannot take it all, on account of lack of means to pay for proof. The three sections we would like to secure will cost $2.50 per acre, to be paid in ten weeks after application, with some $16 00 costs for proof, for 160 acres, or $1.25 per acre under preemption, having thirty-three months to make proof; but will have to make certain improvements, such as a house, etc. We have chosen the former, for the one half section which was applied for yesterday. We could secure most of two and one half or three sections with our membership here by the preëmption act, and let all who wish to assist financially do so as each one uses his or her right, but as soon as they secure title from the government they turn it over to the association and board of control within the branch, said association paying all expenses and actual cost and the entire property being held in common, all having their individual homes and holdings. It has been given to us that we will receive help from those within (or they who will come into the church) to carry what we have successfully, but we invite any of the Saints who have money and wish to cooperate with us in the matter to write us and we will be glad to give any information desired; and in case we have to borrow money to carry us the first year to secure title, etc., we prefer to secure the same of the Saints and secure them with the property. It is indeed a rare opportunity for the Saints to exemplify the law of the church; and as the subject of a common fund in the branch has been talked of the direction as given by the Spirit was in answer to fasting and prayer for the welfare of Fairview branch.

Praying God's blessing upon the whole church, and upon our efforts, with all who wish to join with us in this undertaking we subscribe ourselves,

P. S.—We discovered at the land office where we filed our application, September 27, that there are six sections, a part of which we wish to secure in the future, that are unsurveyed, which we think could be squatted on and held until surveyed. We will investigate and give particulars to those who desire.

Original Poetry.

THE DECLINE OF MAN. OR, A VICTIM OF MOBS.

Like Time's grim clock, he slowly swung
In silence in the azure air;
A ghostly sign to God he hung,
A blot to those that hung him there.
I was there when they cut him down,
He was pallid and cold and white;
They laid him out upon the ground,
A picture of death's grim blight.

I brushed the curls back from his brow,
This aim of quick unguarded sin.
I pictured him as he lay now—
Pictured him as he might have been.
Some fond mother fondled that hair,
As I brushed and fondled it now,
And built hopes on him lying there,
And kissed his young and fun-lit brow,

But those fond hopes have passed like chaff, In the midst of a sin hung haze, Leaving no trace of a boyish laugh, Or innocence of younger days.

How different this might have been If his poor soul had strove and tried To steer itself from mortal sin, From its treacherous, fiendish side.

He was human, that luckless lad
With heart and feeling, love and all;
Only a cup of misfortune he had,
Only a slip and fatal fall;
Only a light of life lit up,
First a flutter, then sparkle bright,
Now by ruffians is quenched abrupt;
That light is turned to darkest night.

But where was Justice, pure and white?
Why was he slain in rashness raw,
Without one chance for life to fight,
Without respect for state or law?
No more should his bear lawless blame
Than the crimson, blood-stained hands of

Who seared their souls with brands of shame By spilling blood and slaying him.

Like mindless curs, they raved and swarmed, Thousands against a helpless one; With life's young blood the ground they warmed.

Cries of mercy they dared to shun!
Oh, fain would I have trained a gun
With countless grape upon that place,
And from beneath our spotless Sun
Have swept them from our Earth's fair face!

Has Creation failed in her great plan?

Does Immorality hold the sway?
Is this upright for mortal man

To show respect for flesh this way?
As with Thought's eye that throng I scan;
Oh, such a crazed and heathen swarm—
Is this what God has meant for man

As he formed him in His own form?

Oh, friends and brothers of this life,
Above the brute let's lift ourselves;
Make not others drink draughts of strife
When we refrain from them ourselves.
A Judge there is, who waits above,
Justice from one he never robs,
But wrath for wrath and love for love
Will be the fate of wolfish mobs.

PREPARED READING FOR NOVEMBER MEET-INGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION LOCALS.

In this article we deal with the small boy because first, all men were once small boys, and second, because we agree with the Catholic priest who said, "Give me a child until he is eight years old and he can never be made anything but a Catholic."

This is, if we may be allowed the expression, the molding period. The time when to all intents and purposes the child is like clay in the hands of the potter. As parents or instructors of boys this truth ought always to be with us, we ought to realize the mighty power we have, or can have if we will it, over the future of the boys by using wisely and intelligently the opportunities afforded us during the first few years of their lives.

We come now to ask the direct question of every mother who reads this: What do you want your boy to be? Have you ever seriously thought what kind of a man you would like your boy to become? If you have not, is it not almost morally certain that other influences than yours will have a large, if not a predominating, share in the formation of his character? We have referred to the expression of the Catholic priest in regard to the lasting influence possible to be obtained over the mind of a young child, but let it not be forgotten that the priest knew well what he wanted to make of the child. In his mind there was no wavering, not even the shadow of a doubt. He wanted to make a Catholic.

Why? The question may appear superfluous, but the answer embodies a world of meaning. He himself was a Catholic and he firmly believed in Catholicism. We cannot escape the conviction of the truth, that if as parents and instructors we work successfully, we must work intelligently, untiringly, but above all there must be clearly defined in our own mind the aim we have in view. We must first know what we want our boys to become and then with unwavering faith in the power and willingness of God to help us, we must labor to make them just what we want them to be. This, of course, is a general principle, but is an underlying one of such vital importance as to challenge not only the attention, but demand the adherence of every parent who wishes to send out into the world a son to honor his name.

Do you want a brave, courageous boy? Then both by precept and example, constantly as occasion may demand, teach him the beauty of this noble quality. You may be gentle, loving, thoughtful, and tender with your boy. All these are qualities which belong to bravery, but if you would have a brave, courageous boy, you cannot indulge in episodes like the following:

Little John was playing horse and came bounding in to show mamma. As he came through the door he tripped and fell, receiving a hard bump on his forehead. His mamma jumped to pick him up, but he was already screaming vigorously. 'Mamma's poor little man! There, darling, don't cry! Naughty door to trip mamma's baby boy like that. Let's whip it. There! (striking the door several times) you naughty door, don't you hurt my little boy again, and all the while little John is screaming and acting in every way derogatory of a 'little man,' and, if such training be continued long enough, so will he most likely always act, for the 'little man' is but the 'large man' in embryo."

Would not a wise mother have bathed her boy's head, assuring him meanwhile of her sorrow, but telling him that he must not cry? That crying would not help it the least hit, but made the pain worse and harder to bear. Would she not have said, "Yes, mamma knows it hurts and she is sorry for you, but you must be her brave little man and not cry."

And so we might go through the entire list of all the virtues which we ourselves admire and desire our boys to possess, and we will assuredly find that if we ourselves love the characteristics and earnestly desire our boys to have them we must and will cultivate the same love in them. Ways and means will be sought for doing this, and we will not be satisfied until we see the fruits of our labors.

This presupposes cultivation upon the parent's part, as we cannot impart to another what we do not ourselves possess. How diligently then ought each mother to seek wisdom from every available source, but above all through faith and prayer to obtain it of Him who "giveth to all men liberally" and without upbraiding.

It may be that our boys are no longer "little men," and that being older, habits have already been formed which if not overcome will wreck forever the hopes nearest our heart for their future lives. The problem has thus become more difficult. Work has to be undone and done anew. Let our courage rise equal to the occasion and let us put our trust in God with all the more faith as our need is greater.

"In "School and Home Education" we find the following excellent advice:

Jacob Abbott, author of the Rollo books and much other useful and interesting, although old-fashioned, literature, lays down the following fundamental rules for teachers and parents:

"When you consent, consent cordially."

"When you refuse, refuse finally.

"When you punish, punish good-naturedly.

"Commend often. Never scold."

Commend often. Never scold. These are among Abbott's rules as just given. They suggest a thought important enough for further elaboration. "Don't" is far too common a word on the teacher's or parent's lips. Aim to encourage the right, instead of forever striving to repress the wrong. Fill up the life with good things and there is no room for the bad. Flood the dark room with light; it is of little use to try to take out the darkness.

There is a law for regulating and securing family harmony that is at the same time one of the simplest, and also one of the least understood, of all family laws. It is simply this—to let the language of praise rather than the language of blame be the rule between the different members of the family circle.

A child brought up by the language of blame will be confirmed in his naughtiness, and, finding very early that only naughtiness is expected of him, will form a character in accordance with this expectation; while a child brought up by the language of judicious praise, who finds out that goodness is expected, is almost sure, sooner or later, to turn out well. Many a child's moral nature is determined for life by nursery treatment in this respect.

We should accustom ourselves, therefore, to correct faults, not by blaming the fault, but by praising the opposite virtue, whenever it may chance to display itself. When a selfish member of the family displays a little generosity, we should at once notice it and express our pleasure in it, if possible, over the instances of selfishness. In the same way with carelessness or pettishness or any other fault. The possible will gradually kill out the opposite fault. Especially in the care of children is praise the secret of home influence that but few parents understand.

Whenever the child is good, the mother should express her pleasure. How often a child in utter discouragement at continual blame has said in his heart, "Well, it is of no use; they always tell me I am naughty, anyhow, and I guess I can't be good so I won't try."

The thought which follows is found in the writings of Mrs. Sangster, and is worthy of careful reading:

It is customary to speak of the wife as the home-maker, but this is only a partial truth. Husbands have as much to do with the happiness of home life as wives have. It is as certainly a husband's duty as it is that of a wife to be a cheery, bright-spirited comrade on the road, and an agreeable inmate of the household. If a man thinks otherwise, it shows him to have been badly brought up and deficient in observation. Neither party alone is the home-maker. The sweet privilege of home-building belongs to both.

Particularly in the discipline of children there should be perfect accord between parents, and in all questions involving the common interests of the home there must be pulling together, pulling in absolute union and unbroken harmony of desire, purpose, and behavior.

As I heard a husband say one evening: "Helen and I are trying to live as if we were one soul. Our children have never heard us differ. If we disagree about their management it is never in their presence. They belong to us both and we to them and to each other."

Here was the true comrade spirit. And the husband bringing home day by day the fresh, breezy atmosphere of the outdoor world, to what end did he woo and win his wife if not to make her blessed among women to the very end?—Margaret Sangster, in Home Life Made Beautiful.

PRAYER UNION. SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

The faith and prayers of the sisters are earnestly solicited for the restoration to health of Mrs. Helen Webb, of Dallas, Oregon. Though not a member of the church, having had little opportunity to hear, she is in every way worthy and has suffered severe criticism for kindness shown to missionary and Saints. She is a widow, sick and poor, but full of faith, and love for all that is good and true.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

The Home! O, that it might be what it ought to be! If only all in the home were interested, and in most homes it may be they are; if so, there will be no trouble in organizing Home Classes of both Sunday school and Religio, where no local is or can be organized near enough to be attended regularly.

Home Class work as is here being treated is for those who are not in reach of a local, for the aged and infirm, or those hindered for other causes over which they have no control from attending a local.

PREPARATION.

If all are interested, especially father and mother. Interested in what? you may here ask. Why, in the gospel, for we are now making preparation for one part of the gospel work;-then will we find but little trouble in completing preparations for the organization of Home Classes. Now in the homes of the Saints (especially in older homes) you will find the Book of Mormon, and all new homes need one, and should have one. And all are surely able to have one now, since they are now sold as cheaply as thirty-five cents per copy, then will this necessary preparation be made in order to do the work now required to be done in the study of the lessons of Religio, as the lessons are now prepared and published in the Autumn Leaves, which is another necessity for the home, not only for Religio study, but also for Daughters of Zion work, and to furnish excellent literature for all who compose the home. These two, the Book of Mormon and Autumn Leaves, are especially necessary. Of course the Book of Mormon map and Archæological Committee's report are good, but one does not need to wait till they can supply themselves with these ere they take up the study as outlined by the Program Superintendents.

WHERE IS THERE A BETTER PLACE TO PREPARE ourselves for any work than in the home? What kind of local members would we make if we waited until we got to the place of assembling, before we prepared ourselves for the Religio, Sunday school, or church work in any of its departments?

THE OBJECT.

That we may keep pace with the work, and workers; not only this, but that we may be helpers. And this is not all, but that we may work in harmony with all other workers. God placed in the church certain officers, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." He has also said to his people in these latter days that they were lacking because they treated lightly the former commandments as found in the Book of Mormon, and Bible, with the revelations given to his people in our own day. Now, how can we keep these commands unless we know what they are? and how can we know what they are unless we search them with a desire to understand them? Further, how are we going to, or how can we expect to enjoy ourselves if we are gathered with the Saints in Zion if we do not understand the laws that should and must govern in Zion? This we can partially understand without waiting till we get to Zion, by knowing how much better we enjoy our convention work in the district and general work and at our reunions, and how much more we would enjoy ourselves at these gatherings if we were right up with our work in its every department.

These are some of the objects to be answered by these organizations. Shall we improve the ### OPPORTUNITY?

Where there is much given there is much required, but where there is little given there is but little required. Until we have heard the gospel our Father will not condemn us for not accepting it, because no opportunity has been given, though loss may occur by reason of not understanding how to obtain it. But, if as soon as opportunity is given, we accept, then our Father in heaven will so assist us that we shall not long feel that loss. But when we do not accept, then we feel the loss so much greater. I heard one sister say who had taken Autumn Leaves from the beginning of its publication, yet had never taken any interest in the Religio department, not even to see what it contained until the last year or so, when there was a local organized near by her home, and she united with it, "O, how I regret that I have neglected so grand and blessed an opportunity!" So let us improve upon the opportunity now given us, and secure Book of Mormon and Autumn Leaves. and if we feel we can get no more at present except these, then let us begin.

We are informed that when the Book of Mormon has been sufficiently examined for the present, then Church History and the revelations of God will be considered, and the more we study the one the better we will understand the other. Now, some may say when asked to take up the study of the Book of Mormon, "We have read the book through several times, or ever since we were children." That may be true; haven't you read the Bible even more? You who have tried reading either book before the Quarterlies and programs have been studied and since, you can readily decide when you received the most light and the clearest understanding. If you have never thought of this take notice of it now, especially in relation to the study of the Book of Mormon. Take the Religio lesson, read it over, then take the Autumn Leaves, and ask yourselves the questions, and see if you would not have to read it over again before you get the main thoughts, as presented in the reading.

Though you have the privilege of meeting with a local (which is a blessed opportunity) this study should be done in the home. If the lesson is thus studied in the home, and for reasons you are deprived of meeting with the local, you will be in advance of what you would have been had you not studied in the

Now, we hope that every Saint will either become a member of some local, where he will be helped, and become a helper, or join the Home Class, the latter opportunity being offered to all.

What will be your answer to the opportunities now offered you, to grow in the knowledge of the truth, and to help to advance the study of God's word? Do you still desire to suffer loss?

A PLEDGE.

It is a difficult matter to at all times know just where one's Christian duty and responsibility begins, or where it ends. We find a very safe guide for all Christians in the following pledge copied from Mrs. Alden's book entitled Ester Ried:

I solemnly agree, as God shall help me:

- 1. To observe regular seasons of prayer at least in the evening and morning of each day.
- To read daily at least a small portion of the Bible.
- 3. To attend one or more prayer meetings every week if I have strength to get there.
- 4. To stand up for Jesus always and everywhere.
- 5. To try to save at least one soul each
- 6. To engage in no amusements where my Savier could not be a guest.

Do not neglect the prayer. If one is at home both at morning and evening he cannot wander far away during the day.

WHY THE HOLD OF POETRY IS GROWING WEAK.

It is generally felt that the hold of poetry upon the Anglo-Saxon mind is becoming seriously weakened. Many reasons for this may be suggested, and the subject demands independent and thoughtful discussion by itself. But there can be no doubt that, in our speech, end-rhyme is a grievous fetter. prevents the use, with due emphasis, in lyric verse, of many of our noblest words. Many other words equally needful can occur only in more or less incongruous pairs, which soon produce a hackneyed effect, rendering them, too, almost unavailable. Again, an exaggerated emphasis is thrown on one word in each line, and that in a position not, as a rule, naturally supreme in importance.

word must usually be a curt monosyllable.
All this has grievously cramped, narrowed, and weakened lyric utterance, until it is almost never instinctive, necessary, supremely natural. Those who believe, as the present natural. Those who believe, as the present essayist does devoutly believe, that poetry, with music, is the chief among educational influences, must deplore and combat whatever tends to cripple its vitality. Rhyme is a selfish tyrant, which has largely conquered and impoverished the fair fields of song, where all men, fully endowed with power to enjoy the beautiful, should range as free and as much at ease as the improvisatori through

It seems to the writer that the crying need of our literature, on the artistic side, is a fearless, wide-extended effort for natural, earnest, poetic expression, which shall use any and all forms of linguistic ornament, while resolutely refusing to be enslaved by The student of classical poetry perhaps finds such an emancipation easier to conceive than do most other men. When a lyric utterance of Sappho, or a brief choral inter-lude in Euripides, delights us with its simple trochaic melody, why should every attempt to echo it in English tag the verses with jingling rhyme? . . . But at any rate, every man, and every child, should be disabused of the deadly heresy that end-rhyme is the one distinguishing mark of poetry. As a matter of fact, it is but a distorted and exaggerated trick of English or modern European utterance, which always ceases to be an ornament when felt as a fetter by the poet, or as a bar to full enjoyment by the listener. We say, of course, listener, not reader, for all utterance, and above all the enthusiastic winged poetic word, lives only on the lip of living man.

Five generations ago, only ten-syllable lines, in jangling rhymed couplets, were accepted as poetry. We have loosened that chain very materially. We may yet slip our free limbs out of such bondage altogether. Such freedom Milton foreshadowed in the preface to "Paradise Lost."- William Lawton in October Chautauquan.

THE MONASTIC DANGER IN HIGHER EDUCATION.

The reaction against this policy of haste and superficiality brings with it, however, perils of its own. Antipathy to the degradation of education involved in its appraisement by the standards of the market and the counting-house is in danger of leading to an aloofness which affects to ignore the principle that education, at its highest and best, is a preparation for life. If utilitarian theories of education err, it is because they unduly narrow the true conception of utility. The parent who wishes his by to be taught nothing but what is "practical" is, in principle, profoundly right: a training that bears no fruit does naught but cumber the ground. It is by his interpretation of the "practical," by his understanding of the demands of life and the means by which they may be met, that the true teacher distinguishes himself from the quack.

Hence, to overlook the close contact into which the individual will inevitably be brought with the affairs of his fellows is to be guilty of a serious failure to grasp one of the fundamental requirements of any real education. The student with whom the teacher has to deal is not destined to spend his existence in vacuo, or even—the next thing to it-in a hermitage of intellectual anchorites carefully shielded from every sound of vulgar human speech. Whether he is his brother's keeper or not, there is no getting away from the fact that he is his brother's brother. The impossibility of isolating him from his kin, or of emancipating him from his own share of responsibility for whatever in his environment is the result of human effort or neglect, puts the solution of the problem of his education beyond the reach of the intellectual recluse as well as of the intellectual cheap-jack. No one who regards the affairs of the extra-academic world from the point of view of either a dilettante or a cynic can reasonably hope to achieve any real and permanent success as a teacher.

If this be so, it may be pardonable to hesitate before accepting the usual complacent view of the tendencies of contemporary higher education in America. Is not the number increasing of colleges which are making it their great ambition to become "monasteries devoted to the purposes of knowledge and research" rather "schools for preparing the minds of youth for the discharge of public affairs"? Perhaps it has been too readily assumed that the incorporation of "modern" subjects in the course of studies would in itself secure the desired contact with actual life. There might, of course, be mediævalism in Latin, but surely bacteriology must be closely relevant to the needs of our own times. The science of bacteriology—yes; the teaching of bacteriology—not necessarily. To a practis-ing physician a knowledge of this subject is evidently of the greatest value; but its inclusion in the course of study pursued by a non-professional undergraduate must be justified on entirely different grounds from those which give it a place in a technical school of medicine. It would be quite possible for a college to banish from its curriculum the classical languages and literatures, with every other branch of old-fashioned scholarship, and place upon its staff representatives of all the sciences that have sprung up during the last fifty years, and at the same time to be hopelessly monastic, as far as its educational work was concerned. And, after all, it is for purposes of education that a college Its efficiency must ultimately be measured by the quality of the men whom it sends out into the world, not by the degree in which its professorial body approximates to a miniature edition of the Royal Society.

—By Herbert W. Horwill in the October Forum.

HEREDITY IN MAN.

William Seton in the October number of the Catholic World Magazine has a deeply philosophical article on Heredity. Speaking of the importance of such study he says:

"A good many centuries have passed by since a wise old Greek summed up the whole of philosophy in two words: 'Know thyself.' Yet how few of us when we look inward and ask ourselves what we are, do more than take a narrow, superficial look. We do not realize that the human body contains within itself vast potentialities and that we are only beginning to penetrate its mysteries. We forget that every human being is the sum of his ancestors, and that influences which affected our mother while she bore us in her womb are still potent to affect us, her child. Nay, long before our mother lived, some forefather may have placed his mysterious seal upon us and may hold us today in the grip of heredity. Now, in saying this, we do not, of course, deny that each one of us has been gifted by Almighty God with a Will, and our will, like the helmsman of a ship, does what it can to guide us safely amid the pitfalls and temptations of life. But if the rudder which the helmsman holds in his hand is badly constructed, if the wood is decayed, it may fare ill with the ship that he is steering: despite all the helmsman's skill she may run upon the rocks. Even so, man's will-power is strong or weak according to the physical substratum through which it works. A drunkard's brain-cells, for example, do not cease to work evil when the drunkard dies; the poison is transmitted; woe be to his children and his grandchildren!"

In an interesting and suggestive conversation with Tolstoi, recorded in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for October, the talk turns upon creeds.

"But don't you still teach creeds in America?" Tolstoi asked me. I said we did America?" Tolstoi asked me. I said we did not allow creeds to be taught in public schools. He asked me to explain the public schools of America, which I did. "Oh, that is grand," he cried, "knowledge, true science for every child." Still, he said he was under the impression we taught creeds. "Now the for every child." Still, he said he was under the impression we taught creeds. "Now the Congregational, Baptist, Presbyterian, Meth-odist, as well as the Catholic; they must teach the church beliefs somewhere." I said that in the parochial Catholic schools I understood there was a certain amount of the creed taught. "But in your home, your mothers, your teachers, somebody, somewhere teaches a great deal of church belief." I replied that some parts of the Bible, like the Sermon on the Mount and the Lord's Prayer, were read in our schools.

"That is good. How about the parents? Do they teach dogma to the infant?" I had to tell the truth, that some of our mothers teach dogmas, but nearly all let the young brain of childhood form itself according to reason, and teach the child by example rather than precept.

"No creed should be taught a child," exclaimed the philosopher. When I said that some parents are so afraid to wrong the child's intellectual freedom that they do not teach the child any religion at all, just hoping it will grow up and be converted, he said: "Ah, that is fatal; religion, God, morality, the divine, sublime. It wrongs the child for a parent to withhold strong, definite teachings there. But religious and moral teaching should be all proved, all true, all scientific, all fact."

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX TALKS TO MOTHERS.

A mother must realize that childtraining is a work quite as important as any profession, and one which requires an equal outlay of patience and persistence. Women with but small talent will devote years of time, and expend money and enthusiasm upon the study of music or the drama in order to enter on these careers. They will relinquish social life, and give up all pleasure and amusement not connected with their chosen professions. It is only when mothers are ready to show a like interest in the profession of child-training that they can hope for success. The constant care of a talkative child is very taxing. I do not believe a mother should be constantly with her child; but when the child is in her company she should devote herself to making every moment valuable, mentally and morally. She should plan and arrange the amusements of her child when it is in the care of others, and should see that the right people are employed to carry out her designs, just as she would take pains to employ the right coachers and teachers for herself were she preparing for the stage.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in the October Woman's Home Companion.

His wife will be with him, on her return from Canada, where she has been visiting relatives for some months.

PROSPECTS are such as to indicate the approach of a serious famine in Russia. Advices from St. Petersburg say it can be clearly foreseen that the widespread crop failures, the consequent famine, and the relief work of the government and of philanthropists will be engrossing subjects during the approaching winter. A government report estimates the amount of assistance required for the province of Viatka alone as 782,000 poods of rye.

LORENZO SNOW DEAD.

President Lorenzo Snow, of the Utah Church, died at his home in the Bee Hive House on the afternoon of October 10. According to the Descret News of that date the "cause of his demise was hypostatic congestion superinduced by aggravated bronchitis."

He was born in Mantua, Ohio, April 3. 1814, and received an education at Oberlin College. He became a follower of Joseph Smith in 1836, and immediately began proselyting. He followed the ursurper, Brigham Young, and in 1848 led a company of one hundred wagons overland to Utah. He served as a member of the territorial legislature. In 1855 he with fifty families founded Brigham City, Utah, his home for many years. In 1886 he was convicted of unlawful cohabitation and sentenced to three terms of six months each, but was later released on a writ of habeas cor-

Mr. Snow succeeded Wilford Woodruff as president of the Utah Church, September 13, 1898, being the fourth president of that church.

He will be greatly missed by the people of Utah, he being recognized, by member and nonmember, as a man of worth and liberality.

His demise naturally gives rise to the question of his successor. It has been the custom of that church to promote the president of the Quorum of Twelve to the position of president of the church. Under the caption of "Presidency of the Church," the editor of the Deseret News, in issue of October 11, in discussing the matter of successorship, after quoting section 107, paragraphs 21 to 24, and 33, in the Utah edition of the Doctrine and Covenants (section 104: 11, 12, our edition of 1897), says:

It is clear that when the First Presidency, as a Council or Quorum, is dissolved by the death of the President, the quorum next in order is then clothed with equal authority and power to the First Presidency, and is to regulate all the affairs of the church in all nations. Under the inspiration of the Lord the Twelve may reorganize the First Presidency when expedient, as it shall be manifested to the head and upheld by the confidence, prayer, and faith of the church.

The quorum or council of the Twelve has its president, who is the senior member of that body. This seniority is that of ordination into the quorum. The oldest ordained member thereof is the president, when so sustained by the body and by the church, all things therein being done "by common consent." There may be and have been men ordained apostles, bearing the power and authority of that calling which is the fullness of the priesthood, and yet not having a place in the council of the Twelve. It is not seniority of age nor of ordination to the apostleship that brings the presidency of the quorum, but of ordination or reception into that body.

This will answer to some inquirers the question, who is the present president of the Twelve. President Joseph F. Smith occupies that position, being the oldest member of the quorum. Apostle Brigham Young stands next in order, for, though he was ordained an apostle under the hands of his illustrious father, President Brigham Young, at an earlier date than was President Joseph F. Smith, he was not a member of the Quorum of the Twelve until a later date than when President Smith was ordained into that body.

President Joseph F. Smith, then, now stands at the head of the Twelve, and at the head of the church, and his associate counselor in the First Presidency, Apostle Rudger Clawson, will return to his place and standing in the council of the apostles, when the Twelve take their place as the presiding quorum of the church. It will rest with that body, under the direction of its president, to determine when the Quorum of the First Presidency shall be reorganized.

The Salt Lake Tribune in speaking of Mr. Snow editorially, characterized him as a "genial man, but a born fanatic—one of the kind that would have died at the stake for a cause, and would have smiled as he died." The Tribune says:

When convicted of living with two or more women as wives at the same time, he made a speech to the court, in which he declared that the man, or people, or nation that opposed polygamy would be swept away. . . . He has, since he became President, struggled with all his might to extricate the church from the business perplexities that his predecessors had plunged it into, and has raised vast sums in tithing.

On this point, the Deseret News of October 10, says:

President Snow, at his first active assumption of the position to which he had been called at the head of the church, had the strong desire to lift it from the burden of debt which was upon it in consequence of the troubles through which it had passed. He was inspired to revive among the Saints obedience to the law of tithing, and his travels through the Stakes infused a new spirit among them in relation to it. The response was remarkable. It enabled him to pay off many obligations, to reduce the rates of interest that were being paid, to financially aid many of the interests of Zion, and to see before him the approaching end of the debts of the church.

THE following appeared in the Gazette, of Carthage, Illinois, issue of September 27, 1901:

Chas. Tyler, of Ft. Green, was in the city Wednesday attending the old settlers' meeting and handed the editor a relic of the Mormon days in this county in the shape of a pamphlet entitled, "A Narrative of the Adventures and Experiences of Joseph H. Jackson in Nauvoc, Disclosing the Depths of Mormon Villainy." This pamphlet was printed at the Signal office at Warsaw in 1844. At that time the late Thos. C. Sharp was its editor.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. W. R. Odell writes from

Genoa, West Virginia, October 7: Bro. H. R. Harder and the writer have just closed a series of meetings at this place, and baptized eight persons, and organized them into a branch, with Bro. H. B. Thomp-son as presiding priest. This is a new place, ten miles from the Wayne branch, and prospects are good for quite an ingathering in the near future. We go from here to Jackson, Wirt, Ritchie, and Calhoun counties, West Virginia, for the winter.

In a letter to Bro. H. A. Stebbins. dated at Grimstad, Norway, September 30, Bro. N. C. Enge writes:

There are several here near the kingdom, but they are very slow in taking the final step, the severing from the dominant church being the hardest task. I had decided to leave this part of the field for a while, and go to the capitol city; but the Spirit seems to have more work for me yet in this place. I am anxiously awaiting developments. I expect to accomplish more in the future by visiting in this part of our field than by public preaching. Bro Muceus is operating in Porsgrund—his home. He had not secured a place for meetings last I heard from him, but he thought he would succeed in getting a place in the near future.

If there are any Norwegian Saints in the church who have been connected with the Utah people, and they will write to me and tell me of their relatives, and state their ex-perience while in the Utah Church, and how they discovered the error, it will help us a great deal in convincing the people of our true position. One sister has written to me from Stewartsville, Missouri, and it worked like magic when I read the letter to her rela-

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

When a member dies and leaves his property to his wife, who is a member of the church also, does she have to pay a tenth to the Bishop's agents. Also the widow dies and the property is divided amongst the family; do each of the family have to pay a tithe upon what has fallen to them as a legacy, all being Saints and in the same branch?

The payment of tithes and offerings to the Bishop, whom the Lord has appointed to receive for the aid of his work, is the method by which God's people render an account, as stewards of those things which come into their hands of a temporal nature; and the performance of the duty, as is the case in the observance of all other commands, is proof of the individual's faith and love to God and his work.

By works faith is made perfect.-James

He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much.-Luke 16: 10.

And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation to all them that

Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.—James 2:24
Blessed are they that do his commandments.—Rev. 22:14.

Each must comply with the law for him or herself. The husband cannot answer for wife or children; neither the children for parents.

And every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor. -1 Cor. 2:8.

In the payment of tithes and offerings by husband and wife, the wife having united at the time in the effort to fulfill the law, in case of the husband's death she would not again, in order to fulfill the law, be required to pay on the property that was her own and which she had so paid upon with the husband. But all property coming into her hands by gift or otherwise from the husband, which he had a right to bestow or withhold, or to devise otherwise, should be paid upon by the wife as fully as though received from a stranger. So also with the children. It is not a question of whether the parents performed their duty or not, but rather, will the children perform their part. In considering this question it ought not to be overlooked that in instituting the law of tithes and offerings the object does not seem to have been to make the people poorer, but better; hence the promise is, if you do these things, God will open the windows of heaven. "and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." (Mal. 3: 10.) The Apostle Paul referring to such necessary work the memory of our departed brother. on the part of the brethren says:

This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men—Titus 3: 8.

Let no man or woman then think that because father and mother have performed their duty, they are excused; but rather let them rejoice that their parents proved themselves worthy stewards while here, and then move forward to perfect their own faith by good works and a faithful stewardship.

It need hardly be added that it does not matter whether all of these belong to the same branch or to different branches. The church is one and the law is one and applicable to all alike; there being no difference between Jew or Gentile, it being ordained for the good of all and not a

Should a person teach that the poor need not pay tithes and offerings?

Not unless he wants to always have them poor. Men and women are to be blessed and rewarded upon the honest efforts to discharge duty, however varying the circumstances, and not simply upon the amount performed. Jesus did not tell the "poor widow," who cast her mite into the treasury, that there was not anything for her to do; but commended the act. By her efforts and faith she made herself rich. Why should not this poor widow show her worthiness to riches by her faith and sacrifices, and receive a reward in God's own time? If those who are rich will not in like manner sacrifice and labor for the Lord's work, by and by, they will change places with the poor widow. She will then be made rich, for did she not prove herself worthy?

On what should a person pay, in observing the law of tithes and offerings?

He should pay upon all that the Lord has blessed him with in goods and riches-"the mammon of unrighteousness." This of course will embrace everything that a person has that he is not in debt for and has to pay upon to some other person. If he has paid a part upon it, let him tithe such part. If a person has any property that he did not get honestly. he need not pay upon this. God did not bless him with such; but rather let him return it to the party, if possible, who is the rightful owner, making full satisfaction as the law demands. Let no man or woman wait until the other side is reached to settle such things, in the hope that it may be forgotten. It is upon the other side that uprightness, honesty, and fair dealing will be rewarded. Hence, "All things, therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them. E. L. KELLEY.

ARE WE IN ERROR?

This question is suggested to us by reason of a strong opposition to the projection, maintaining, and operating Graceland College.

In this paper it is the intention of the writer to make as full an examination of the incipiency, rise, and progress of this church institution, as also a careful and patient consideration of the opposition, and a defense of our cause, as time and space will allow.

To commence with, I might as well confess to a prejudice favorble to education, and more especially so to that which is founded in inspiration, and husbanded by the church. There is no tax so willingly paid by me as that which goes to the support of education.

As we preachers usually have a text when we either speak or write, here is one furnished for the occa-

DIGHTON, Kan., Aug. 31, 1901. R. M. Elvin, Graceland pen pusher, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir and Brother:-I being one of the forty-five thousand to whom you are so frequently sending out pleadings in behalf of Graceland, I feel that I must send a contribution, not to the relief of the college, however, but of the facts as they most surely exist. Do not think me angry because I speak plainly and with boldness, for I truly know whereof

I say unto you, the Lord never authorized the building of that college; neither will he permit it to prosper. The foundation thereof is pride; it is a leech to the church, and the church will never prosper so long as that institution exists.

The building of it is a part of the works that are to be burned. It is a man-made institution attached to the church by man. The church is under condemnation for instituting the same; and if it is not speedily severed it will be destroyed by the hand of God, and the instigators will be removed, and the natural branches grafted in according to the parable of the tame olive tree, as recorded in the third book of Jacob, Book of Mormon; and the signs of the times are right at hand when the wild branches are to be cut off and the natural branches grafted in.
The wild branches are the Gentiles who now have charge of the work of the Lord, and have almost entirely ceased to bring forth the natural fruit.

The time is close when that pruning will take place, except the church speedily repent.

The angel's message, which is the Book of Mormon, was sent to the Gentiles to be preached to all the world, and it is not being preached. I have been in the church about fifteen years, and have never heard a sermon preached from that book.

My dear brother, there is not one passage in all the scripture that you have quoted in your pleadings for Graceland that has the least reference to that institution. You represent it as a child of the-a creature of the church, etc.; you represent it as the poor and needy, sick and afflicted, when it is people that is spoken of, and not a building. You represent that my destiny depends on the manner that we treat the cause of Graceland. In your last article you quoted the so-called revelation in two different ways. I say as the Lord liveth that declaration was not from God, as will very soon be demonstrated.

Ever praying for the welfare of God's work, I am your brother, A. P. PELTON.

This brother being an absolute stranger to me, I wrote him as fol-

Dear Brother:-Yours of the 31st ult. is before me.

Is it your wish to have this published in the HERALD, address and signature included? My humble opinion is, dear brother, that you lack both knowledge and the true light of the Holy Spirit.

Write me at my home address. In gospel bonds,

This brother was prompt and decisive, and wrote as follows:-

R. M. ELVIN, Keb, Iowa.

My Dear Brother:—Yours of the 5th at hand asking if it is my wish to have my letter of August 31 published in HERALD, with address and signature. Why should I hesitate to say, most emphatically, Yes! Not that I particularly desire to see my name in print, but because my heart's desire is that the truth may go to the ends of the earth. For assuredly as the Lord liveth I know whereof I speak.

I see by the last Ensign that they are agitating a gymnasium instituted in Graceland for the ladies. That will fit them circus instead of the kingdom of God. That will fit them for the

Dear brother, you can also publish this with the other, and in both HERALD and Ensign if you wish. The truth can do no harm, but it may do good.

Yours for the arousing of the Saints to action of duty to the true and living God. My heart is with this latter-day work

A. P. PELTON. One of the lamentable conditions of our membership is a lack of an acquaintance with the history of the church, and a unity of understanding of the commandments given for our guidance and instruction. It is therefore no wonder that misunderstandings should arise.

It will never prove safe for anyone to become self-opinionated to that degree that they deny and combat both the history and revelation of the church. The better plan is to hear and consider before we make an imperial demand to be heard, and our conclusion accepted as the flat in the matter.

December 27, 1832, the Lord, instructing those who sought to learn his will, and their duty, said:

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, Call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize your-selves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God; that your incomings may be in the name of the Lord; that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord; that all your salutations may be in the name of the Lord. with uplifted hands unto the Most High.—D C. 85:36

Let no one place upon this a narrow or local interpretation, for in the commitment to men by angelic ministration God laid the foundation of a plan world wide in its conception, and eternal in its duration, and fully compatible with man's happiness in this life and the unending one.

The loving Master said while sojourning in the flesh:

Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, -Matt. 4:4.

And he likewise taught the disciples to pray:

Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth.—Luke

We are so deficient in the education of divine things, limited too frequently on account of our unwillingness to receive of the knowledge and understanding so graciously offered by the all-Father to his widespread off-

Well might be say:

For what doth it profit a man if a gift is betowed upon him, and he receive not the gift? Behold, he rejoices not in that which is given unto him, neither rejoices in him who is the giver of the gift.—D. C. 85:7.

There is a beautiful harmony in all the works and provisions of God, and the soul of the obedient, trusting child is ravished with delight in the inspiration of the communications of the Holy One. As amid trials and perplexities we arise above the human darkness, the brightness of heavenly light shines askance our path.

To read is not the acme of perfection, but the full comprehension of what we read is the desideratum; and if we fail to obtain the diploma that God alone can grant, then never will the crown of celestial glory adorn our head.

Here is a lifting of the vail, letting in light upon our benighted souls:

All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions.

All beings who abide not in those conditions, are not justified; for intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy, and claimeth her own; justice continueth its course, and claimeth its own; judgment goeth before the face of him who sitteth upon the throne, and governeth and executeth all things: he comprehendeth all things, and all things are before him, and all things are round about him; and he is above all things, and in all things, and is through all things, and is round about all things; and all things are by him, and of him; even God, forever and ever —D C. 85:9, 10.

All the government of God here and hereafter is most beautifully reflected in the above. Among the provisions in this revelation is for "a house of learning," and Graceland College is in direct line and harmony with this wise provision. There is more than a gospel study comprehended in the counsel, "seek learning even by study." This requirement is over and above—yes! something added to the seeking learning and wisdom "by faith." Neither should be omitted lest the Master be constrained to say to us as he did to another people, "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

It seems to be quite patent that other than the inspired text books are the books indicated by the words, "best books;" and these books are to furnish wisdom by study—that is, the time of the individual is to be employed in acquiring knowledge from these "best books;" and the universal experiences of mankind unite in testifying that the best results come from method, organization, and the imparting of knowledge by a wise and intelligent Master.

There is no intimation in the arcana of the divine will, that God will take man by the ear and lead him into the full details of all duty and responsibility; but contrariwise is the naked truth stated:

It is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is companied, and receive the thing until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned. Who am I that made man, saith the Lord, that will hold him guiltless that obeys not my commandments?-D. C. 58: 6. This word of the Lord came unto the church August 1, 1831, and has never been revoked, so still stands.

Over and above those revelations passed upon by the several quorums, and adopted by vote of the church for its government, there is promised to the eldership inspiration and revelation to aid and guide them in their several duties; and upon those who raise their voices against Graceland College, and withhold their hands. rests the responsibility of furnishing the proof that the church is in error for erecting and operating the college, and that those men of the church who have uncomplainingly met the storm of opposition, and faithfully accomplished their appointed task are without the approval of God. Nay! it is clear they have been strictly in harmony with the polity and spirit of the church, and are not chargeable as slothful servants.

An intimation of what is to be taught in the "house of learning," is in the following:

And verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my scriptures, and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion.—D C. 90: 12.

Had the church established a college in 1832, and operated the same, we would now be better prepared to comply with the instruction of 1901, which says:

It is the duty of the church to provide tracts in the Scandinavian, German, Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese languages, and others, as the missions may require.—D. C. 125:11.

The past, however, with its opportunities, is gone, and the present is big with invitation for us to enter and occupy. Shall we improve our privileges, or allow opposition to turn us down, and another people to win the crown?

In the SAINTS' HERALD, volume 18, President Joseph Smith, in writing upon the "Situation," has this to say relative to schools:

The establishment of schools we are most decidedly in favor of. What may have been the character of the school at Kirtland, so far as its personal conduct was concerned, we are not aware; but suppose it to have been for the purpose of receiving and imparting necessary instruction to those wishing to avail themselves of its advantages. Such was evidently the intention of the establishment of the school or schools at Nauvoo; and the only bad feature that we now remember in connection with any of the literary institutions at Nauvoo, is that the library belonging to the "Lyceum Association," was grossly robbed of its books, at or about the time of the breaking up there. If a people would be free, they must be intelligent, and intelligence other than the light of the Spirit must be cultivated, and cultivation must be had in the schools, and these schools to be effective for the people, must be of and by the people.—Church History, vol. 3, pp. 668 and 669.

As a follower of Christ, and as a United States citizen, and a friend of humanity, I can fully, freely, and cheerfully support and advocate the above sentiments; not because of the party expressing them, but as an individual I believe them to be sound and true.

The Reorganization has from an early date been alive upon the school question. At the annual conference of 1869, they had for their consideration, "The following preamble and resolution presented, and resolution passed":

School of the Prophets.—The need for an educated, intelligent, and sincerely devout body of seventies to promulgate the gospel, and high priests to preside over the churches, has been, and now is, felt very sensibly by very many who have the salvation of souls and prosperity of the church at heart.

Etiquette is not taught in the camp, nor the art of war in the nursery, neither are priests educated at Oxford, nor rabbis with the Jesuits; nor can we reasonably expect a plentiful supply of genuine Latter Day Saint elders to be furnished by the schools of the Gentiles; as well might we look for the sturdy oak in the hothouse, or the orange in Lapland, as for thorough, devout, self-abnegating elders from the popular schools of fiction and fashion; 'tis contrary to the common course of nature—the child clings to the breast from whence it derives its nourishment, and the faith of the pupil is tinctured with the mind of his professors.

Church property contributes to the stability of the work, and we need a school wherein to educate our own young men.

wherein to educate our own young men.

As discipline detracts not from the courage of the soldier, neither would a proper ministerial education detract from the piety and earnestness of the ambassadors of truth; but on the contrary would give confidence, couple wisdom with knowledge, and judgment with their zeal.

Suggestions.—A quarter section of land could be purchased, a building erected, the land fenced and broken, professors elected, and the land worked conjointly by professors and students. Four or tive hours a day of close study is sufficient, six or eight hours a day of farm labor would contribute to the health of body and mind, and by this means a school could be made both efficient and self-sustaining.

In keeping with the above, I respectfully offer the following: Resolved that this conference recommend for the consideration of the Twelve and the general church authorities, the feasibility and advisability of establishing a school for the education of our own young men, with a view to the ministry; and that the question be brought up at the next sitting of the General Conference.—Church History, vol. 3, pp 520, 521.

Too late now to approve or disapprove the phraseology of the preamble, the practicability of the suggestion, or the wisdom of the resolution; but it is clear that nearly a third of a century ago the church was keenly conscious of the necessity of a college.

The semiannual conference of that year failed to accede to the desired action. The record reads:

The subject of establishing a theological school was again deferred.—Ibid., p. 546.

The question of a college was too deeply rooted in the mind and heart of the thinking people of the church to down and die; so at the annual conference of 1870, up bobbed the college question once more:

The subject of establishing a school for the education of "young men," "with a view to the ministry," was taken up and discussed. After the offering of several amendments and substitutes, the following was passed: Resolved that the School of the Prophets be organized, with Joseph Smith as its president, at the close of this conference. This was subsequently reconsidered, and the resolution lost upon the statement of President Smith that he was not prepared to enter into his duties connected with the school.—Ibid., p. 566.

There seems to have been an unintentional mixing of the order of the "School of the Prophets," with an educational institution, and it is most unfair to seek to create a contradiction in the statements of President Smith, wherein he declined to enter upon the duties of president of the "School of the Prophets," and his utterance, "The establishment of schools we are most decidedly in favor of." It is most unfortunate to resort to such to oppose a worthy and church authorized institution.

At the General Conference of 1893, note is made as follows:

COLLEGE.

The subject of the proposed college was spoken of, the names of the committee heretofore appointed were read, and a meeting thereof was appointed to be held this evening.-Minutes, p. 66.

On the 14th day of April, 1894, I find as items of business by General Conference:

COLLEGE COMMITTEE.

President Smith reported the resignation of Bro. Israel L. Rogers as a member of the college committee. On motion and after Bro. Rogers had expressed his desire to be released, his resignation was accepted. Bro. David Dancer also asked to be released, but by vote the conference refused to accept it and he was retained. To supply the vacancy of he was retained. To supply the vacancy of one there were put in nomination the names of Brn. Daniel Anderson, Henry C. Smith, William Anderson, Ellis Short, and J. H. Peters. Brn. Smith and William Anderson declined to serve, and the vote being taken finally resulted in the choice of Bro. Ellis Short as one of the college committee, which choice was made unanimous. - Minutes, p 42.

And on April 18, the same conference, I find:

COLLEGE COMMITTEE

Bro. David Dancer presented his resigna-tion as a member of the college committee, and it was accepted. Proceeding to nominations to fill the vacancy, Brn. Daniel Anderson, J. H. Peters, Henry C. Smith, E. A. Blakeslee, R. M. Elvin, J. A. Gunsolley, and F. M. Weld were named. The final result was the choice of E. A. Blakeslee to supply the vacancy.-Minutes, p. 58

Have been thus particular with the history to show that in some form this college question was agitated and kept before the Saints in General Conference for many years. At the conference of 1894, the Lord kindly spoke from the plentitude of his divine mercy, and among other things said:

The Spirit saith further: The twelve should remain at Lamoni, and continue in council with the presidency and the bishop, and his counselors if practicable, a sufficient time after the adjournment of conference to counsel together, and agree on the things of the law and the general affairs of the church, so that when the traveling council shall separate for their several fields, there may be no longer reason for distrust, suspicion, or dissension; and if these officers will so counsel together in the spirit of moderation and mutual forbearance and concession, my law will be more perfectly understood by them and a unity of sentiment and purpose will be reached by them. It is the will of your Lord and your God that this should be done. It should have been done before, but the adversary hath hindered, desiring to prevent the success of my work in the earth. D. C. 122: 13.

The same Evil One who put sprags in the spiritual wheels, is still at work, and his success depends upon the amount of saintly (?) help he may obtain.

Those mentioned who should counsel together were not unmindful of the invitation, so we read:

In compliance with the requirement of paragraph thirteen of the revelation received during conference and by agreement between the quorums affected, the first presidency, the twelve, and the bishopric met in joint council in the editor's room of the Herald Office at nine a. m., Friday, April 20, 1894. There were present: Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, of the first presidency; Alexander H. Smith, E. C. Briggs, James Caffall, W. H. Kelley, J. H. Lake, J. R. Lambert, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, and Gomer T. Griffiths, of the twelve; E L. Kelley, G. H. Hilliard, and E. A. Blakeslee, of the bishopric. . . .

LAMONI COLLEGE.

Resolved, that we look with favor upon the effort to build a college at Lamoni, to be controlled by the church.

Resolved, further, that we believe it should be a purely educational institution and free from sectarian influences or bias.

Resolved, further, that we give our hearty support to the present movement looking in the above direction. . . . Thus ended the work of the council convened in accordance with the requirement of the revelation which had been formerly accepted by the church. All present were convinced that the appointment had been wisely made and that the results were and would be such as would fully attest the divinity of the call.—D: C. 123: 1, 4, 5, 6, and

Here we have fourteen of the leading men of the church, met by appointment of revelation, and they are a unity in their action upon the college, and by their united vote testify that they were fully satisfied of the divinity of the work accomplished; and from the hour of that joint council the life and operation of Graceland College has been a part and parcel of the work of the church, and it is the height of folly to charge that because a debt was incurred in the erecting of the building and the running of the school, that anyone has been guilty of wrong doing, or misapplied any money, or turned it from its legitimate purpose. The facts in the case are simply these: The building involved the church in debt, and this debt, bearing interest, increased the debt annually. The running expense was in excess of the income of the college, and the deficit was met by borrowing money, and this money was also bearing interest. Now who was responsible? The agents of the church who were appointed to do specific work, or the church who appointed these agents, and then failed to furnish the sinews of war? When a government assigns men to duty, it is the business of that government to supply all needed means to accomplish the required work; therefore the word of the Lord is in direct harmony with every right principle of man or government in the transaction of business. "The college debt should be paid," has the right ring to it; and never were truer words uttered than. "Their right to free speech, their right to liberty of conscience, does not permit them as individuals to frustrate the commands of the body in conference assembly.'

Some I fear have put themselves in the shoes of Uzzah seeking to steady the ark, forgetting that God doeth all things by rule and order, and is still an unchangeable being.

In the matter of paying the college debt, permit me to suggest to one and all to take into prayerful consideration the following:

I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise —D. C. 81: 3

Without any compunction of conscience I make this apply to the latest revelation, in the statement. "The college debt should be paid." This is the word that the Lord hath spoken, and a refusal to regard its requirement takes us from under the promise. Saints, is it safe for us to rebel against any word that God bestows?

January 19, 1841, God spoke to the

But I command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, and during this time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me. But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God.—D. C. 107: 10, 11.

We of the Reorganization believe that the church as a church failed to complete that work within the appointment; and as a church was rejected. Nevertheless thousands of good, honest, faithful Saints sacrificed and did all they possibly could to accomplish that work, and to a degree suffered with those who disregarded the counsel of God. I do not present Graceland College as an exact parallel to the Nauvoo Temple; but as we preach to the world "that like cause will produce the like result," so I will ask the Saints: If refusing to comply with the word of God sixty years ago brought the rejection of the individual and the church, what will be the result to those who treat with silence or open opposition the word of God today?

I will not venture to pass an opinion; but as a duly appointed servant of the church, lift my voice in timely warning to one and all: Beware how you decry the word of God, lest you thereby shall lose the Spirit and be found kicking against divine truth.

The following are self-explanatory. and are a sufficient defense that Graceland College is preparing and graduating females for the circus:

LAMONI, Iowa, Sept. 14, 1901. Sr. Mina Cook Hart:-In Zion's Ensign, for Sr. Mana Cook Hart:—In Zion's Ensign, for the 5th, in the Lamoni items, over the signa-ture of "C. C.," appears a statement relative to your organizing a "gymnasium club." Will you please be kind enough to explain the intent and purpose of such organization? Also, be particular and inform me as to what relation such club has with Graceland Col-In bonds, ROBT. M. ELVIN.

Answer to the above:

LAMONI, Iowa, Sept. 15.

ELDER R. M. ELVIN, Lamoni, Iowa. Dear Brother:—In complying with your request I will state that the Gymnasium club bears no relation whatever to Graceland College. It is an individual affair, organized for the purpose of benefiting the women of Lamoni

We meet twice each week at 4: 30 p. m., for vigorous, hard gymnastics, hoping thereby to gain excellent health and strength through systematic, proper exercise. A fee of $1 00 is charged for ten weeks' work, which meets the expense of hall, janitor, etc.

The extent will be just as many as avail themselves of the opportunity and conform to the regulations of the class.

Most respectfully yours, MINA COOK HART.

It may appear strange to some, but, nevertheless, I am constrained to believe that God has permitted this college debt, as a means of testing the fidelity of his people against a day near at hand in which millions will be needed for the redemption of Zion, and the building of temples unto the Lord.

God will have a tried people, and those not faithful in small things will not be permitted to take part in the greater affairs of Zion's preparation and triumph.

As an individual I have no personal interest in Graceland College, further than that which is prompted and begotten in the gospel, and as one with my fellow trustees desirous to prove faithful to the trust reposed in us as servants of the church.

In conclusion, let me advise: Do not follow the lead of any spirit contrary to the received, approved, and adopted written word of God.

History and revelation Graceland College, and we kindly invite and urge all for the good of the church, and their own good, to contribute to this cause, and those who can to do so immediately.

With true charity to all, and malice to none, I am, your fellow servant and advocate of our own Graceland, ROBT, M. ELVIN.

THE PROHIBITION OF ANIMAL FOOD UNDER THE MOSAIC LAW AND ITS PURPOSE.

If the iron be blunt and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength. But wisdom is profitable to direct.

It is said that man was the crowning work of God's creation, and it is certainly true that as far as human knowledge and research have extended there has not been found another organism so marvelously complete in its adaptability to all the conditions of its existence, superlatively beautiful in its arrangement, and the symmetry of its proportions, as the perfect, healthy, human body. If we consider it simply as a piece of mechanism it is a marvel even to scientific minds; for with all the dissecting and analysis of the present age they have not yet learned the use of all its parts. How stupendous its possibilities in the developing of energy, and the exerting of power, and so marvelously responsive to the thought of the inner man whose habitation and instrument it is. Truly, "We are fearfully and wonderfully made." We read in Genesis!

(Inspired Translation) that God made all things spiritually before he created them naturally; and in providing this marvelous material organism for the spiritual man, it would seem that the purpose of the Creator was that with this means of expresssion of his thought, this enginery for the execution of his purpose, he might develop along those lines which would make him truly a child of his Creator at the end. That this development might be accomplished it was necessary that this spiritual man should from time to time receive direction, encouragement, and strength from the Author of his life; and being clothed upon with this tabernacle of flesh he became more or less circumscribed by it; so that even when the material organism was perfect there was a certain warring against the spiritual, and the spiritual man must needs keep it in subjection that it might serve its purpose as a means of perfection.

In every piece of delicate mechanism perfect results are dependent on the perfection of the several parts, and their adjustment in relation to each other. We place the receiver of the telephone to our ear, and if the adjustment is right we may hear the voice of our friend perhaps hundreds of miles distant as though he were at our side; but if the connections are imperfect the voice sounds faint and uncertain, or it may be we hear no voice, though our friend shout ever so loudly.

So I apprehend that the Author of life in seeking to communicate the divine intelligence to this dual man which he has created may be hindered at times by the imperfection of some part of the organism or its inharmonious adjustment. In the words of our text, "If the iron be blunt and he do not whet the edge then must he put to more strength. But wisdom is profitable to direct."

The Lord in his wisdom saw that the sensibilities of his people Israel were blunted by their long service of bondage among an idolatrous and gluttonous nation, and it was necessary that they be sharpened by abstemious living before they could be effective instruments in his hands, and so he gave them commandments what they should eat and what they should drink; but their appetites had become so abnormal that even though he gave them manna from heaven they longed for the leeks and garlics of Egypt.

We must conclude that the great Designer of this matchless piece of enginery, the human body, knows just what kind of fuel should be used in it. to produce the results he intended, which must be the highest attainment Whether it was his purpossible. pose in the beginning that his crowning work man should be purely a! vegetarian, it is not the province of this paper to discuss. We notice. however, that the list of beasts of the field that the Israelites were permitted to eat contains those which subsist on vegetation alone. All beasts and birds of prey were prohibited. So also to a great extent were the fishes; only those which have both fins and scales, and those beasts which both split the hoof and chew the cud being allowed.

When we examine the anatomy of these animals in the light of modern science, we are enabled to see a hygienic reason for this selection. Take for example the sheep or the cow, and we find them furnished with a set of digestive and assimilating organs so complete and perfect that it is comparatively a rare thing under normal conditions to find them with impure blood. Although in these days of artificial breeding of stall-fed cattle there have been developed some very dangerous diseases even among these cattle, which shows to us the necessity of the further counsel to later Israel found in the Word of Wisdom that, even these beasts that were called clean should be eaten but sparingly save in times of winter and famine. Among the forbidden animals there was a special prohibition placed on the swine. They were not only forbidden to eat its flesh, but even to touch its carcass was a defilement.

Again we find in anatomy the explanation. Its digestive organs, like man's, are not adapted to perfect digestion except under favorable conditions; and being naturally a scavenger of unlimited appetite, when abundantly fed its blood becomes vitiated. and its body a fatty mass, full of scrofula and ulceration, its skin covered with scales, and its pores sewers of corruption. The very thoughts of the unclean thing is nauseating; yet Bible readers, and doubtless many Latter Day Saints, will eat with relish the revolting flesh that Israel was forbidden even to touch, and take of the scrofulous extract for their sweetmeats and pastry, when God has provided plentifully of healthful vege-

We cannot canvas in detail this law of meats to ancient Israel; but it is sufficient to say that its wisdom and purpose have been demonstrated in the lives of those who have observed it. Through all the ages to the present there have been found in Israel those who have led the world in science, music, art, letters, and in everything which shows the finer, higher intelligence. Out of Israel has come the light of the world. Her prophets have been permitted to draw very near the divine mind; and through them, and them only, he has spoken his messages of love to the world in all ages.

In all this we may discern the Lord's purpose in restraining Israel in the use of meat as food.

PRECIOUS PEARLS.-NO. 9. GATHERED FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

BY WILLIAM HAWKINS.

But if they will repent, and hearken unto my words, and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them, and they shall come in unto the covenant, and be numbered among this the remnant of Jacob, unto whom I have given this land for their inheritance, and they shall assist my people, the remnant of Jacob; and also, as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem; and then shall they assist my people that they may be gathered in, who are scattered upon all the face of the land, in unto the New Jerusalem. And then shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in the midst. and then shall the work of the Father commence, at that day even when the gospel shall be preached among the remnant of this people. Verily I say unto you, At that day shall the work of the Father commence among all the dispersed of my people; yea, even the tribes which have been lost, which the Father hath led away out of Jerusalem. Yea, the work shall commence among all the dispersed of my people, with the Father, to prepare the way whereby they may come unto me, that they may call on the Father in my name; yea, and then shall the work commence, with the Father, among all nations, in preparing the way whereby his people may be gathered home to the land of their inheritance. And they shall go out from all nations; and they shall not go out in haste, nor go by flight; for I will go before them saith the Father, and I will be their rearward. And then shall that which is written come to pass. Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child; for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord. Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited. Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed: neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame; for thou shalt forget the Gentiles.

shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more. For thy maker, thy husband, the Lord of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; the God of the whole earth shall he be called. For the Lord hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God. For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. For this, the waters of Noah unto me, for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth, so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee. For the mountains shall depart and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my people be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee. O thou afflicted tossed with tempest, and not comforted! behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sap-phires, and I will make thy windows of of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children. In righteousness shalt thou be established; thou shalt be far from oppression, for thou shalt not fear; and from terror, for it shall not come near thee. Behold, they shall surely gather together against thee, not by me; whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake. Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire; and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord. And now behold I say unto you, that ye had ought to search these things. Yea, a commandment I give unto you, that ye search these things diligently; for great are the words of Isaiah. For surely he spake as touching all things concerning my people which are of the house of Israel; therefore it must needs be that he must speak also to the Gentiles. And all things that he spake, hath been, and shall be, even according to the words which he spake. Therefore give heed to my words; write the things which I have told you, and according to the time and the will of the Father, they shall go forth unto the And whosoever will hearken unto my words, and repenteth, and is baptized, the same shall be saved. Search the prophets, for many there be that testify of these things.

And when Jesus had expounded all the scriptures unto them which they had received, he said unto them, Behold, other scriptures I would that ye should write, that ye have not, and he commanded them that they should write the words which the Father had given unto Malachi, which he should tell them. And these are the words which he did tell unto them. saying, Thus saith the Father unto Malachi, Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me, and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Juda and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord. as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger, and fear not me saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said. Wherein shall we return?

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse. for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the fields, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed, for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts.

Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord. But ye say, What have we spoken against thee? Ye have said, It is vain to serve God, and what doth it profit that we have kept his ordinances, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts? And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up; yea, them that tempt God are even delivered.

Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened, and heard; and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not. For behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

But unto you that fear my name, shall the Son of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth and grow up as calves in the stall: and ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts. Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments. Behold, I will send you Elijah, the prophet, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord; and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.

And when Jesus had told these things, he saith, These scriptures which ye had not with you, the Father commanded that I should give unto you, for it was wisdom in him that they should be given unto future generations. And he did expound all things, even from the beginning until the time that he should come in his glory.

And the disciples whom Jesus had chosen began from that time forth to baptize and to teach as many as did come unto them; and as many as were baptized in the name of Jesus were filled with the Holy Ghost. And they who were baptized in the name of Jesus, were called the Church of Christ.

And as the disciples of Jesus were journeying and were preaching the things which they had both heard and seen, and were baptizing in the name of Jesus, the disciples were gathered together, and were united in mighty prayer and fasting. And Jesus again shewed himself unto them, for they were praying unto the Father in his name; and Jesus came and stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them. What will ye that I shall give unto you? And they said unto him, Lord, we will that thou wouldst tell us the name whereby we shall call this church: for there are disputations among the people concerning this matter. And the Lord said unto them. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Why is it that the people should murmur and dispute because of this thing? Have they not read the scriptures, which say, ye must take upon you the name of Christ, which is my name? for by this name shall ye be called at the last day; and whoso taketh upon him my name, and endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved at the last day; therefore, whatsoever ye shall do, ye shall do it in my name; therefore ye shall call the church in my name; and ye shall call upon the Father in my name, that he will bless the church for my sake; and how be it my church, save it be called in my name? For if a church be called in Moses' name, then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man, then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel. Verily I say unto you, that ye are built upon my gospel; therefore ye shall call whatsoever things ye do call in my name; therefore if ye call upon the Father, for the church, if it be in my name, the Father will hear you: and if it so be that the church is built upon my gospel, then will the Father shew forth his own work in it; but if it be not built upon my gospel, and is built upon the works of men, or upon the works of the devil, verily I say unto you, they have joy in their works for a season, and by and by the end cometh, and they are hewn down and cast into the fire, from whence there is no return; for their works do follow them, for it is because of their works that they are hewn down; therefore remember the things that I have told you. Behold I have given unto you my gospel, and this is the gospel which I have given unto you, that I came into the world to do the will of my Father, because my Father sent me; and my Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross: and after that I had been lifted up upon the cross, I might draw all men unto me; that as I have been lifted up by men, even so should men be lifted up by the Father, to stand before me. to be judged of their works, whether they be good or whether they be evil, and for this cause have I been lifted up; therefore according to the power of the Father I will draw all men unto me, that they may be judged according to their works.

And it shall come to pass, that whose repenteth and is baptized in my name, shall be filled; and if he endureth to the end, behold, him will I hold guiltless before my Father, at that day when I shall stand to judge the world. And he that endureth not unto the end, the same is he that is also hewn down and cast into the fire. from whence they can no more return, because of the justice of the Father: and this is the word which he has given unto the children of men. And for this cause he fulfilleth the words which he hath given me, and he lieth not, but fulfilleth all his words, and no unclean thing can enter into his kingdom; therefore nothing entereth into his rest, save it be those who have washed their garments in my blood, because of their faith, and the repentance of all their sins, and their faithfulness unto the end. Now this is the commandment: Repent, all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may be sanctified by the reception of the Holy Ghost, that ye may stand spotless before me at the last day. Verily, verily I say unto you, this is my gospel: and ye know the things that ye must do in my church; for the works ye have seen me do, that shall ye also do; for that which ye have seen me do, even that shall ye do; therefore if ye do these things, blessed are ye, for ye shall be lifted up at the last day.

Write the things which ye have seen and heard, save it be those which are forbidden; write the works of this people, even as hath been; for behold, out of the books which hath been written, and which shall be written, shall this people be judged, for by them shall their works be known to man. And behold all things are written by the Father; therefore out of the books which shall be written. shall the world be judged. And know ye that ye shall be judges of this people, according to the judgment which I shall give unto you, which shall be just; therefore what manner of men had ye ought to be? Verily I say unto you, even as I am. And now I go unto the Father. And verily I say unto you, whatsoever things ye shall ask the Father in my name it shall be given unto you; therefore ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you; for he that asketh receiveth, and unto him that knocketh it shall be opened. And now my joy is great even unto fullness, because of you, and also this generation; yea, even the Father rejoiceth, and also the holv angels, because of you and this generation; for none of them are lost. Behold, I would that ye should understand; for I mean them who are now alive of this generation; and none of them are lost; and in them I have fullness of joy. But behold it sorroweth me because of the fourth generation, from this generation, for they are led away captive by him, even as was the son of perdition; for they will sell me for silver, and for gold, and for that which moth doth corrupt, and which thieves can break through and steal. And in that day will I visit them, even in turning their works upon their own heads.

And Jesus saith unto his disciples, Enter ye in at the straight gate: for straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it, but wide is the gate, and broad the way which leads to death and many there be who travel therein, until the night cometh, wherein no man can work.

I, Mormon, make an end of speaking concerning these things for a time. And now behold I say unto you, that when the Lord shall see fit. in his wisdom, that these sayings shall come unto the Gentiles, according to his word, then ye may know that the covenant which the Father hath made with the children of Israel, concerning their restoration to the lands of their inheritance, is already beginning to be fulfilled; and ye may know that the words of the Lord. which have been spoken by the Holy prophets, shall be fulfilled; and ye need not say that the Lord delays his coming unto the children of Israel: and ye need not imagine in your hearts, that the words which have been spoken are vain; for behold, the Lord will remember his covenant which he hath made unto his people of the house of Israel. And when ye shall see these sayings coming forth among you, then ye need not any longer spurn at the doings of the Lord, for the sword of his justice is in his right hand, and behold at that day, if ye shall spurn at his doings he will cause that it shall soon overtake you. Wo unto him that spurneth at the doings of the Lord; yea, wo unto him that shall deny the Christ and his works; yea, wo unto him that shall deny the revelations of the Lord, and that shall say, the Lord no longer worketh by revelation, or by prophecy, or by gifts, or by tongues, or by healings, or by the power of the Holy Ghost; yea, wo unto him that shall say at that day, that there can be no miracle wrought by Jesus Christ, to get gain, for he that doeth this, shall become like the son of perdition, for whom there was no mercy, according to the words of Christ. Yea, and ye need not any longer hiss, nor spurn, nor make game of the Jews, nor any of the remnant of the house of Israel, for behold the Lord remembereth his covenant unto them, and he will do unto them according to that which he hath sworn; therefore ye need not suppose that ye can turn the right hand of the Lord unto the left, that he may not execute judgment unto the fulfilling of the covenant which he hath made unto the house of Israel.

Hearken, O, ye Gentiles, and hear the words of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, which he hath commanded me that I should speak concerning you, for, behold, he commandeth me that I should write, saying, Turn, all ye Gentiles, from your wicked ways, and repent of your evil doings, of your lyings and deceivings, and of your whoredoms, and of your secret abominations, and your idolatries, and of your murders, and of your priestcrafts, and your envyings, and your strifes, and from all your wickedness and abominations, and come unto me and be baptized in my name, that ye may receive a remission of your sins, and be filled with the Holy Ghost, that ye may be numbered with my people, who are of the house of Israel.

THEOLOGICAL RESEARCH AND THE BIBLICAL CHRONOLOGY.

In our number for August 10 (p. 170), we reproduced an article in The Independent assailing Prof. G. Frederick Wright's conclusions in favor of the historical verity of the Scriptural narrative of the Flood. Professor Wright, it will be remembered, has been making geological researches in Central Asia and claims to have found scientific facts that render credible not only the account of the Flood but the narratives of other Biblical miracles, such as the crossing of the Jordan, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, etc. The Independent, in its criticism of his conclusions regarding the Noachian deluge, insists that acceptance of the Biblical chronology compels us to assume that the Flood occurred not more than 5,000 years ago, and that neither historical records nor geological records warrant any such conclusion.

Professor Wright now writes evidently (though not ostensibly) in reply to The Independent, his main point being that what we call the Biblical chronology was never designed as a chronology, and that there are gaps in it that render it impossible to make up an exact chronological table from the Old Testament writings. He admits that "upon the face of it" it looks as though there were no way of escaping an indubitable conflict between the Bible and geology, as the genealogical tables seem linked together in an unbroken chain from Adam down to Abraham. Writing in 1 Chron. 6: 3-14. The condensation

The Advance (Chicago, August 29) he

"From the course of my own studies during the last twenty years. I presume I have felt this difficulty as keenly as any one has done. close study of the subject will convince any one, I think, as it convinced me, that even the linked genealogical tables of the first chapters of Genesis were not intended by the writer, nor understood by their readers, to teach a definite chronology, but are rather inserted to show lines of descent in which any number of intermediate terms may be omitted without interfering with the purpose of the tables. This conclusion is based not upon mere speculative reasons, or the necessity of making out a case, but upon the manifest usage of the sacred writers in numerous other places, and upon a careful consideration of the tables themselves."

As "one of the most instructive examples" of the way in which the Biblical writers referred to these lines of descent, Professor Wright cites the genealogical record in the first chapter of the Gospel according to St.

Matthew, and says:

"It is noticeable that the names are divided into three groups of fourteen each. To bring them within the limits of these exact numbers, however, we find that three names are omitted in verse 8. It is said that 'Joram begat Ozias' (Uzziah), when we know from the Book of Kings that three names have been omitted-Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah; while again in verse 11 Jehoiakim is omitted after Josiab.

"What now is it reasonable to conclude from these passages? Shall we say that the writer of this chapter did not know of the existence of those links which he dropped out? Certainly not, for this is the Gospel that was written by a Hebrew, and both he and his readers had ready access to, and were devoted believers in, the Old Testament, and they were surrounded by Jewish opponents who would readily find fault with any serious misuse of it. The only explanation, therefore, is, that they were so familiar with the use of the genealogy to indicate simply lines of descent, without any reference to chronology, that nobody thought of raising any question concerning such use.'

Similar freedom in treating genealogies is seen, says the writer, in 1 Chron. 25: 24, where Shebuel is spoken of as "the son of Gershom," though we know from the records that six or seven generations must have elapsed between Gershom and Shebuel; also in Ezra 7: 1-5, where the writer in giving Ezra's genealogy skips from Meraioth to Azariah, omitting six names which appear in of genealogical tables, says Professor Wright, was in fact the rule with the Jews, not the exception. They used them in a rhetorical way much as we say sons of the Pilgrim Fathers, leaving out of view everything but the line of descent. He refers, for the fullest and clearest discussion of this subject ever presented, to an article by the late Prof. William Henry Green, of Princeton, in the Bibliotheca Sacra, April, 1890. He quotes from Prof. Green's article the following passage:

"The structure of the genealogies in Gen. 5 and 11 also favors the belief that they do not register all the names in these respective lines of descent. Their regularity seems to indicate intentional arrangement. Each genealogy includes ten names, Noah being the tenth from Adam, and Terah the tenth from Noah. And each ends with a father having three sons. as is likewise the case with the Cainite genealogy (4: 17-22). The Sethite genealogy (chap. 5) culminates in its seventh member, Enoch, who 'walked with God, and he was not for God took him.' The Cainite genealogy also culminates in its seventh member. Lamech, with his polygamy, bloody revenge, and boastful arrogance. The genealogy descending from Shem divides evenly at its fifth member, Peleg; 'and in his days was the earth divided.' Now as the adjustment of the genealogy in Matthew 1 into three periods of fourteen generations each is brought about by dropping the requisite number of names, it seems in the highest degree probable that the symmetry of these primitive genealogies is artificial rather than natural. It is much more likely that this definite number of names fitting into a regular scheme has been selected as sufficiently representing the periods to which they belong, than that all these striking numerical coincidences should have happened to occur in these successive instances.

"The notion of basing a chronological computation upon these genealogies is a fundamental mistake. It is putting them to a purpose that they were not designed to subserve, and to which from the method of their construction they are not adapted. When it is said, for example, that 'Enoch lived ninety years and begat Kenan,' the well-established usage of the word begat makes this statement equally true and equally accordant with analogy, whether Kenan was an immediate or a remote descendant of Enoch; whether Kenan was himself born, when Enoch was ninety years of age or one was born from whom Kenan sprang.

"We conclude that the Scriptures furnish no data for a chronological computation prior to the life of Abraham; and that the Mosaic records do not fix and were not intended to fix the precise date either of the Flood or of the creation of the world."—Literary Digest, September 21, 1901.

THE BLACK-WARD DEBATE.
A FEW DIFFERENCES.

On Sunday morning, September 22, while the hours were yet small, the writer, astride a young, stubborn, sullen mule, whose proclivities remind one of the animal that was beaten by the prophet Baslam (which won for the young mule the name of the ancient beater), started across the foot-hills of the Ozarks, over finely wooded ridges, rough, jagged, gigantic ledges of mighty but silent sentries, fertile valleys, oozing springs, thorny, barren glades, brushy thickets, winding brooklets, etc., to the pleasant little town of Williford, on the Kansas City, Fort Scott, and Memphis railroad, and on the bank of Spring River, which flows from the renowned Mammoth Springs, said to be the largest in the world. The house was densely packed. Elder Black was on his "high horse;" his sharp visage, quick wit, keen, sparkling, black eyes, clear ringing voice, a tongue reminding one of leathern thwangs in a cyclone, with every joint in his body responding to wild gestures, with a mighty vitality and herculean physical force, he was holding the audience spell bound, while he distorted. tied into knots, brushed to one side, covered up, smeared over, and in various ways disposed of the eternal truths which had been presented from the scriptures the day previous. He was followed by Bro. Ward, who, though much the milder, was armed with the truth, which he handled like a two-edged sword. He was in the negative, but used no personal thrusts, no slang phrases, no vituperation, but continually compared the wild speculations and deficiencies of the Christian. Church with the fullness of the gospel as found in the New Testament.

Thus, long before the end of the first proposition, the large crowds had a fair understanding of what he was going to defend when he reached the affirmative of the second proposition. He paid assiduous respect to Rev. Black's denials of the "principles of the doctrine of Christ;" and several times did Black whip around onto the negative of the second proposition before finishing his affirmation of the first. His negative efforts on the second proposition consisted very largely of flat, forceful, emphatic denials. misrepresentations, naked affirmations, garbled quotations, filth, "slush and mud." In a word, he proved himself (as he has done on other occasions) a graduate and an expert in Bradenology.

The debate lasted from the 21st to the 30th, giving the writer ample opportunity to note the foregoing and following contrast between the disputants with their associates. He mingled freely with, and has the respect of both Elder Black and his moderator, Professor Fry. He has held no less than five public debates with them, and they frequently say: "Elder Baldwin, we are bound to respect you as a man, and as a worthy disputant; but we do hate the doctrine you present.

Brother W. S. Macrae was moderator for Bro. Ward, and proved himself a faithful and efficient worker. They were oft found in prayer, something their opponents indulge in only on the rostrum. They fasted frequently-an act of which their opponents make sport. They regard and respect the Word of Wisdom by abstaining from meats in hot weather, which is considered an indispensable staple of food by their opponents. They make no use of coffee, and their opponents are seized with headache if they get not their regular beverage. They use no tobacco, while their opponents are literally saturated. They enjoy a joke; they are good, lively, clean company; coarse, obscene, profane jesting is studiously avoided. They were seldom seen on the streets; their studious habits were plainly manifest by their devotion to their books several hours each day, during which time their opponents were on the sidewalk, chewing, smoking, spinning yarns, and making sport because God did not inspire his servants independently of books.

Williford is a stronghold of the Christian Church; and at the time the propositions were signed it was not known that we had any friends there. But as arrangements were being made to erect a tent for our head-quarters, some said, "No; bring no tent; we will care for your elders." So we were furnished a pleasant room, bed and board, by a gentleman who belonged to no church, his good wife being a Methodist.

The visible results of the debate are: friends have been made, a new opening for preaching effected, and some are ready for baptism but are prevented by domestic obstacles.

Elder Black's people are well pleased. They raised him more than the stipulated sum of money; but what have they gained? Their "itching ears" have been tickled, they have actually feasted on that which they love; namely, slang and misrepresentation. They have grown mentally fat; they have enjoyed it hugely; they feel sure they are the victors; but what have they gained? The poor souls ought to have a good time occasionally, as they are sure of missing eternal riches.

The few Saints present were strengthened. A sister shook hands with Professor Fry at the closing hour, and remarked, "I am still a Latter Day Saint."

Still they clamor and challenge for debate.

Oconee is the next place they have selected. Who says they shall not have their fill of it, since large crowds come to a debate that could not be otherwise attracted? It seems to be the only way open at present to get the gospel before this people. Of course they will come out to hear us get a genuine tongue-lashing; and those who can discriminate between the truth and a lie may get good if they want it.

Respectfully,
D. R. BALDWIN.

ELVIN-ELLMORE DEBATE.

The debate took place at Davis City beginning September 15 and lasting twelve nights.

The following were the propositions under discussion:

- 1. Resolved, That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is, in organization, faith, and practice, in harmony with the New Testament. Robt. M. Elvin affirms; Will Ellmore denies.
- 2. Resolved, That the Church of Christ is, in organization, faith, and practice, in harmony with the New Testament. Will Ellmore affirms; Robt. M. Elvin denies.

Elder Elvin in his opening speech dwelt on the apostasy of the ancient church, showing that if there was not a complete apostasy or falling away from the ancient faith, there was no place for either the church that he or the church that his opponent represented.

Elder Ellmore in his first speech said he believed in the apostasy as much as Bro. Elvin, and said he could shake hands with Bro. Elvin on that; but as the argument proceeded and it was made apparent that if the entire church were destroyed from the earth it could not be reinstated without new revelation, he went back on his statement and claimed that the church was only partially destroyed, that a remnant was left. But Elder Ellmore did not point out where that remnant was or what relationship it bore to the church he represented.

Bro. Elvin read many passages from the Bible to sustain his position, and we think made his case strong by reading Revelation 13:15.

Elder Ellmore worked hard to dislodge the affirmative, but he was too strongly entrenched behind "Verily, thus saith the Lord." Notwithstanding Elder Ellmore said in his first speech that there was no such thing as apostolic succession, and it was impossible to trace the church down, link by link, yet he tried hard after the first night to prove just the opposite. He said that none of the apostles ever wrote to the R-organized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which was true; and it is just as true that they did not write to the Christian Church, so in this the elder gained nothing.

Bro. Ellmore tried to lead the affirmative away from the point and get him to spend his time in answering his many objections. He said God set in his church "first apostles." but in the Saint's Church the first is the first presidency, next patriarch, etc. The elder took the Catholic view and claimed that Peter was the rock upon which Christ built the church, and from the language "I will build my church" claimed that the church was set up after that sentence was written, and he made a long argument to prove that the church was set up on Pentecost day. But Bro. Elvin brought forth many evidences from the New Testament to prove that the church was set up at least two years before that time. Elvin read Matthew 12:28: "If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." And this was two years before Pentecost. It put Elder Ellmore in rather a tight place; he must either admit that the kingdom or church was set up before Pentecost, or that Jesus cast out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils.

Mr. Ellmore admitted that the church and kingdom spoken of in the New Testament were one and the same thing, which was very damaging to his side of the question, as it drove him to claim that all that were saved before Pentecost were saved outside the church or kingdom of God, which was defeated by reading Acts 7: 38: "This is he that was in the church in the wilderness," etc.

Elder Ellmore quoted and misquoted a great deal of scripture, but we failed to see where it had a direct bearing on the subject. Mr. Ellmore was bound to keep ahead of the affirmative and pitched into any church that claimed to have living apostles or made any pretense to the spiritual gifts that are promised in the gospel; yet he was there to prove that the church he represented was, in its faith, organization, etc., in harmony with the New Testament. When pressed by Elvin to produce like officials as were in the ancient church, he had to go to the graveyard for them. He claimed that the apostles ministered to them now in spirit, but this placed the brother in rather an awkward position. for he had already taken the ground that all spiritual manifestation had ceased with the lives of the apostles. As proof that the apostles ministered in spirit, Elder Ellmore quoted 1 Corinthians 5:5, but the wind was all taken out of him by Elvin showing that when Paul wrote the text he was alive and active in the work. The difference between the church represented by Mr. Ellmore and the one by Elvin was already apparent; it was just the difference between a living man and a dead man, and it brought up the saying of Publius Cyrus: "A living dog is better than a dead lion."

Mr. Ellmore said it was just as reasonable that Jesus Christ should have a successor as that the apostles should have successors, but it was shown that the Christ could have no successor, as he was "The only name given in heaven or on earth whereby we can be saved;" but apostolic succession was practiced in the New Testament church.

Mr. Ellmore claimed that Joseph Smith was a false prophet, for he placed the fulfillment of the third chapter of Malachi as yet future, and he said it was all fulfilled by the ministry of John the Baptist, but Elvin proved that little if any of Malachi's prophecy was fulfilled by John, and that the evangelist in speaking of John's ministry quoted from Isaiah 40:3. The brother had much fault to find with Joseph Smith for his contracting the Scripture in the above quotation and many other instances, but he utterly failed to produce the "other instances," as well as to prove that Mr. Smith was wrong in placing Malachi's prophecy in the future.

The third night Ellmore fell back to the apostasy and spent some time quibbling about the word apostasy. Said the word was not in the Bible, but before he closed he admitted that its equivalent was in the book, and so wasted his time.

Elder Elvin made a good argument on the gifts of the gospel, showing that they formed a part of the faith and experience of the former-day saints, but Elder Ellmore answered: "If Elvin can prove that the gifts are in the Latter Day Saints' Church it will only prove that the church is wrong, for such things are done away; besides, there was no more use for them, God was in heaven and the Devil was in hell, and neither of them had anvthing to do on this earth." He took the word for it and knew that such things were done. forever, but a little later on said if he could see a miracle he would believe and never would apostatize like Oliver Cowdery did. Said an apostle without a sign was no apostle at all; but he could not inform us what the sign of an apostle was. We concluded that if it were simply to work a miracle but few of the ancient apostles were true ones, for as we are informed the majority of them worked no miracles. The brother said that prophets always worked miracles to prove their mission to be divine, but here his attention was called to several of the prophets that worked no miracles that we are aware of, and Elvin read the scripture that says John did no miracle, and yet Jesus ranks John as one of the greatest of prophets.

Ellmore said the names of "Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery are not in the Bible," which is true; and he might have added, "Neither are the names of Thomas and Alexander Campbell," but still they might all be great and good men.

Mr. Ellmore spent nearly all of his second speech the third night in giving a brief history of Emanuel Swedenborg. Ellen White, and Joanna Southcott, but no one could see what they had to do with the question in hand.

Mr. Ellmore spoke rather lightly of Joseph Smith's prayer and his "pretended" angelic visitation; thought it absurd that God would answer "that boy," and him a sinner. It was shown that God spoke to Samuel when he was but a lad, and he also spoke to Saul of Tarsus when he was a great sinner, and Mr. Smith's experience was not unlike the experience of some that lived in Bible times.

Mr. Elimore objected to the church of Latter Day Saints because they claimed to have high priests in the church. He said Christ was the last high priest, and he took his priesthood to heaven with him after he had abolished the Levitical priesthood, so he left the world without any priesthood at all, which Elvin claimed would leave the world in a state of theological anarchy.

Elder Elvin stuck closely to his affirmative and made his case quite clear, and it was noticeable that Elder Ellmore evaded the main issue, and instead of trying to disprove the affirmative went on making his objections; and, as he is a rapid talker, it was next to impossible to answer them all and still get in his affirmative argument.

Ellmore next tried to make Joseph Smith and St. Peter clash in regard to Joel's prophecy. Peter said it was all fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, and Joseph said it had not yet been fulfilled in his day. Elvin read the prophecy of Joel and made a clear cut argument, showing that on the day of Pentecost there was no manifestation that was spoken of by Joel. Joel said nothing about speaking with tongues, but he says there shall be visions, dreams, and prophecy, etc. So it was made to appear that the Spirit that was poured out on Pentecost day upon the hundred and twenty is the same Spirit that will be poured out in the last days upon all flesh. Ellmore then changed his mind and claimed that Joel's prophecy was fullfilled in part. He again called for a miracle and agreed to believe if he could see one, and yet he has said from time to time that miracles were all done away with at the close of the apostolic age. It was shown that we only have the statement in history that miracles were performed anciently, and Elvin furnished three cases where history records miracles in this age. One of them he read from Hayden's "History of the Disciples in the Western Reserve," and this case was given by a witness that Elder Ellmore had introduced on another case. It should have been satisfactory to the brother, but it did not satisfy him; he wanted to see something that did not exist or something done that he "knew could not be done."

Next Mr. Ellmore objected to the church on the ground that a revelation was given through the president, calling a man to an important office, and soon after the man began to decline in health and finally he went insane, etc. But as Ellmore did not tell the time to which a man should enjoy good health after being called in order to prove that his call was genuine, it cut no figure in the debate.

The fifth night Elder Elvin hung up back of the stand large cards with the names of the witnesses that he had introduced, and told his opponent that they were there for cross-examination. He had read more than one hundred and fifty passages from the Bible and from many of the books and papers of the Christian Church, but all were ignored, and Mr. Ellmore persisted in wandering off and hunting for defects in men's lives, instead of in the doctrine of the church. He told of a man out west that took up a rattlesnake and it bit him. Says he had too much faith; but he did not say that the man was a Latter Day Saint and we think he was not.

Mr. Ellmore says Joseph Smith was a false prophet or he would have healed his traveling companion when he had a broken leg, instead of watching with him so long, as is recorded in the history of the church. But it was shown that by the same rule Paul could be proven false for not healing Timothy, and others that he mentions as being sick. The brother said that when God heals he does it at once and complete, but perhaps he did not recollect the case where Jesus had to anoint the man's eyes the second time before they were fully healed.

Mr. Ellmore introduced an affidavit to prove that Olivery Cowdery left the Latter Day Saint Church and joined the Methodists, but as the witness' name was not given, nor time nor place where the affidavit was made, it had no effect upon the more intelligent part of the audience.

Bays was next introduced as a witness against the Saints, but as it was shown that he had testified the other way—had blown both hot and cold—his testimony was of little force; and after it was shown that Bays was by his own confession an infidel, he was excused from the witness stand.

Elder Ellmore in his first speech the fifth night said he was going to give something systematic, give them some analytical reasoning, and of course we pricked up our ears and put our thinking faculties in the best condition possible, in order to get all the good we could from the systematic and logical reasoning; but we only got an extract from Braden and Kelley's debate, and then we were told again that Joseph Smith contradicted himself; but he did not tell when, where, nor what about.

Elder Ellmore found great fault with the Inspired Translation for having the not in the sixth chapter of Hebrews, which reads according that version: "Therefore, not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ;" but Mr. Ellmore read several paragraphs from different translations that were not in the common version.

Next our friend gave us a lecture on false prophets that were to appear to deceive the people but was kind enough to give us a key to try them by: "By their works ye shall know them." This we took to indicate that genuine prophets were also to appear, otherwise we would not have been warned to look out for the false ones. Mr. Elimore in referring to some that he called false prophets and prophetesses, could only point out the false doctrine and false predictions they made, but he did not favor us with any that Mr. Smith had made. We are satisfied that it is not his fault.

Next Bro. Ellmore tackled the spiritual gifts as taught in the New Testament and believed in by the church. He took the same old stereotyped position, that they had them to confirm the saints in their faith, but when the plan was all written out and the New Testament was all written, then the gifts were no longer needed, but a "more excellent way" was put in operation. The attempt to prove the "perfect" thing of which Paul speaks to be the unwritten part of the New Testament was a complete failure, for if the unwritten part of the New Testament was the perfect thing spoken of then the written part of the New Testament was the imperfect thing spoken of; and if so, they, the saints, should on receipt of the unwritten part throw away that which they already had, and that would put them in a worse fix than ever.

In order to cast discredit on the gifts and show that they were damaging instead of elevating, the elder brought up the case of the Corinthian church, that had more gifts than any other; and they were also guilty of more crime than any other. Thus carrying the idea that the more gifts of the Spirit the more iniquity they had, and yet, strange to say, the brother pledged himself to fall right in with this demoralizing business if he could only see a little of it in operation.

He puts great stress on "whether there be prophecies they shall fail." He admits that when prophecies fail and tongues cease and knowledge vanishes away, that it is Godly or miraculous knowledge that vanishes away; and upon this point there is no quarrel, for it it is the Holy Spirit that gives one a knowledge of God as well as the gift of tongues and and prophecy. So it is equal to saying that the Holy Spirit has left the church, and we may employ the language of James and say: "The body without the spirit is dead." That is tantamount to saying that Elder Ellmore was trying to uphold a dead church.

Mr. Elimore says Paul was an "especial apostle," but we are at a loss to know from where he gets this idea, for he claims to speak where the Bible speaks, and where the Bible is silent he is silent. Mr. Ellmore says there are three orders of apostles in the church, but he did not tell us what the orders were. He says when the Devil was here God was here, but now the Devil is in hell and God is in heaven, and neither one is operating among the people. It seems that Elder Ellmore thinks they made a kind of draw game of it and agreed to quit and let the human family try it alone.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 23.

The debate was renewed this evening with Eider Eilmore in the lead, and it is hoped that he will now stick closely to his subject as he has been trying to get on to the affirmative for the last six nights; that we may have the chance to hear the strongest points that he has in his possession in favor of his church and its similarity to the New Testament church.

The gentleman starts out by saying: "We have all the organization of the church here in the book; and the church and the book are in harmony." This failed to convince some that there was any proof in the assertion that his church was anything like the New Testament church.

He said: "The church that I belong to is an exact reproduction of the one Peter built." It will be remembered that on the first proposition Mr. Ellmore said Christ built the church on Peter, now he has Peter the builder of the church, and we felt like asking if Peter built the church on himself or on Christ. It seems that if Peter built a church on Pentecost day it was a different institution than the church of Christ.

Mr. Ellmore in his second affirmative speech quoted Jude 3: "Contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the Saints," claiming that the words for all were according to the translation that he had. He quoted several passages from the Bible that he thought favored that idea, and argued that any later revelation than that would be an infringement upon the complete plan as revealed in the New Testament.

Elvin demolished this last fortress by showing that a great part of the New Testament was written after Jude wrote the text quoted, and consequently according to Ellmore's argument was an infringement and should be rejected. In Mr. Ellmore's next speech he claimed that the faith was first preached and afterwards committed to writing, but as he could not show that the disciples wrote all they preached one of his strongest props was removed.

Mr. Ellmore also dwelt strongly on Paul's saying in Acts 20: "I have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God." This is true, but did Paul write the whole counsel of God? And if so, what use have we for any writings but Paul's?

Elder Ellmore's next argument was that the New Testament was the last will and testament of the Lord; that it was written by the evangelists and apostles at different times, and when all the writings were gathered together it formed the perfect will, etc. When the elder made this argument he was in a happy mood and no doubt felt quite secure behind the fortress that he had erected. But when Elvin turned on the light and showed how unreasonable that a last will and testament should be written at different times, by different parties, from different parts of the country, many years after the testator was dead, and inquired as to when the will was probated and when it was signed by the testator, it put a different complexion on the whole thing, and it utterly failed to do duty where the shaper intended.

Mr. Ellmore said God gave all that was essential for salvation and nothing more, and if we through our carelessness lost any part of it, it was our own fault and God was under no obligation to come down and speak to us again. We thought that this might be a good argument if there were no other people to exist except the ones the salvation was given to, but hardly to generations yet to come onto the stage of action.

In looking over my notes I find from this on nothing but a repetition of the same old unsustained objections. And a determination to evade the main issue. In fact all that Bro. Ellmore said about the church he was there to defend was mere assertion, with no effort to prove that it was like the New Testament church. Elder Ellmore was forced to go back on several of their most prominent men and books. He ignored Alexander Campbell and his work, such as the Christian System and the Millennial Harbinger. He also ignored the History of the Disciples in the Western Reserve, by Hayden. He went back on the testimony of his own father. He also had to ignore the Christian Standard and quite a number of books and pamphlets that were issued from their own publishing house.

In conclusion we have this to say of Bro. Ellmore; that in the debate just closed he has acted the part of a gentleman in every respect. In fact we cannot call to mind an unbecoming word or action during the twelve nights that the conflict was on, and we find nothing but good wishes in our heart for Mr. Ellmore. One of the best, or the best wish, in our judgment, is that he may yet see the truth and be converted and healed, and saved in God's kingdom.

FORMOSO, Kan., Oct. 7.

Editors Herald:—We are still going on in the work here. Two of our missionaries have been here with the tent, preaching, Brn. L. G. Gurwell and J. C. Vaughn. They have done some splendid work. Two were baptized and others are interested. We would have liked to have the tent stay longer, but it got too cold for it. We hope some of the other missionaries will come and preach some more for us soon, as there are a number anxious to hear more preaching. We will do all we can to find a place for them. There is a small band of Saints here, nine in number, all in good health and enjoying a portion of the Spirit.

Ever praying for those in the faith, I remain, Your sister,

EVA A. RAMSEY.

SIMS, Texas, Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:—A few lines from northeastern Texas. We are still trying to carry the angel's message to the people. Bro. E. L. Henson, of Vernon, Wilbarger county, Texas, has been laboring with us since July 26. Bro. Henson is a fine young preacher, and bids fair to make a bright light in the church. He is called to defend the work.

We have been blessed with the Spirit of our calling. Have enjoyed some fine meetings. Some baptisms, and a great many interested, and the prospects are that a fine work will be done in this country in the near future. Prejudices are giving away very fast. People have begun to realize that we are near some great event. The signs of the times are foreshadowing some great event, and the time is here for the Lord to hasten his work; and we pray that all of us may live so that God can bless us with great power to tell the gospel to the people and warn them of their sad condition, and what is soon to overtake them. May God bless us to faithfully discharge our duties.

Yours in Christian bonds,

E. A. ERWIN.

LISMORE, N. S. W., Australia, Sept. 3. Editors Herald:—Since last writing, wife, myself, and family, have journeyed from our home to this place. We arrived here June 27, and intend to remain in the district till towards the end of the year. We have rented a house, and bought a few necessary articles of furniture, and are fairly comfortable.

On August 18, I baptized two promising young ladies, named Eva Hayten and Molly White. The former resides twenty miles further north, and I am expecting to go and do some labor near her home shortly. Recently I took advantage of a little ruffle on the usually calm theological waters of this place. An Orange sermon, preached by a Wesleyan minister on July 11, brought forth a sharp rejoinder by a representative of the Roman faith. The Christian minister also offered a few "friendly criticisms" on the Wesleyan minister's position, and propounded a few questions. The Wesleyan declined to answer them; so I thought it a splendid opportunity to ask the Christian a few questions, and in this way get the truth a little more prominently before the people. I asked by what authority did the founders of that church discard the principle of the laying on of hands, when agreeing upon their system of belief? Since provision was made in the Jerusalem Church for apostles, prophets, seventies or evangelists, elders or overseers, bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons, why are these officers not in this so-called Church of Christ today? By what authority does the "Church of Christ" teach that men who have never been called by direct revelation, have full authority to administer in the gospel ordinances? The minister deputed one of his flock to make a pretense at answering the second question, with the evident intention to "choke off" further controversy. But they did not succeed, for the editor opened his columns to me, and I gave them three good long letters. I guess they were glad when I stopped; and you may depend I stopped when fully satisfied.

Previous to my last letter the minister had preached a sermon on the subject, in which he remarked that to teach the principle of the laying on of hands was to display one's "ignorance," and he characterized, such teaching as "preposterous." In my next letter I called attention to this statement, and remarked that if teaching the laying on of hands displayed ignorance, Peter and John must have been "ignorant" indeed, when they journeyed from Jerusalem to Samaria to attend to that ordinance. Paul also, when he laid hands upon those of whom we read in Acts 19: 1-6, instead of administering a necessary gospel ordinance, simply displayed his own "ignorance." He again displayed lamentable "ignorance" when he wrote the Hebrews that the fourth principle of the doctrine of Christ was the laying on of hands. (Heb. 6:2.) But Paul "received not the gospel from men," but, "by the revelation of Jesus Christ," so the very Lord of glory himself, according to this Campbellite Church, displayed his "ignorance," when he taught Paul that the fourth principle of his doctrine was the laying on of hands! Ah, well! perhaps they know more about it than Jesus and his apostles! Perhaps Jesus and the apostles were an "ignorant lot;" but I have so learned to love my Master that I cannot desert him to follow those who style themselves "wise," I prefer the "ignorant" company of my Lord and his faithful servants, to the boasted "wisdom" of those who repudiate his doctrine. I still believe there may be something in the statement, that God will choose the weak, foolish, or ignorant things of this world, and make them confound the "wise" and mighty.

I then stated that I should not write any more letters, in view of the fact that in order to prove our position on the laying on of hands, I would have to quote the ignorant New Testament writers who believed as I did. I think this correspondence should be productive of good.

We are all pleased with the help sent us at the last General Conference. We hope that as the mission opens out we shall receive more help, for we are very, very short handed yet. Was also pleased with the instruction received at General Conference with regard to tracts. I think we do not sufficiently appreciate the amount of good that can be accomplished in circulating our literature. In circulating literature we come in contact with many people; and if a systematic plan is adopted, much good can be accomplished.

The editor informed us some time back that some brother did not approve of leaving a tract at a house unless he was assured it would be read. I would say to that brother, that sometimes I go fishing; but I never expect to catch a fish for every bait. I always believe that I can afford to lose a few baits, in the hope that at last I shall hook a few nice fish. So with tract distributing. I do not expect everyone who takes a tract to be converted, but I hope for a percentage of good results. I have found that it is easy to tell where the tracts will be read. My plan is as follows: I first take out a supply of single leaflets, such as"Questions and Answers," "Epitome of the Faith," etc., and call at each house, and say that on a certain day I will call again; and I ask each one to preserve the tract after they have read it, and hand it back when I call again. In this way, by one or two questions, I soon find out who has read the tract and who has not, and of course I do not leave another unless assured that it will be read. I recently lost fifty or sixty one-page leaflets in this way, because the people could not find them, and finally admitted they had not read them. In such cases I did not leave a larger tract unless assured it would be read. We can afford to use our small, cheap leaflets, as a means to find out who will read and who will not.

Have been hampered much by wet weather and sickness of late. Have been ill almost ever since we came here two months ago; mildly at first, but severely the past week—bodily neuralgia. Have had some bitter experiences of late, in the way of insulting treatment, but am still joyful in the conflict. Yours as ever,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

VAN CLEVE, Iowa, Sept. 24.

Editors Herald:—Sunday evening, September 8, a number of the Saints at Rhodes, Iowa, went to hear what the Methodist minister had to say in regard to the origin of the Book of Mormon, and refuting the doctrine of eternal judgment as believed by us and set forth by Bro. J. W. Wight the last evening of the reunion.

I mentioned in my former letter that Mr. Martin, the Methodist Protestant minister, had promised us that on the next Sunday evening Mr. Witzigman, the M. E. minister, would continue the subject.

The speaker commenced his remarks by offering apologies for not calling Bro. Wight down the night of his sermon on eternal judgment, when he so heavily bombarded their stronghold of "once in hell always in hell." He accused Bro. Wight of not keeping his resolution to not oppose other churches. He continued by saying he was not versed in the Book of Mormon, therefore would read from a man well qualified to speak regarding Mormonism. As usual, he had a talk with a man whose father was well acquainted with Joseph Smith and the whole family who had informed, him of their ignorance and general worthlessness. He read extensively from the writings of Elder George Reynolds, in which were many things true and many things false, which in the whole was a falsehood because the truth written was misapplied. The Spalding Romance was alluded to as usual, as the true origin of the book. Also the testimony of Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, Peter Whitmer, and others as to how the Seer was able to translate the plates. They were represented as saying that when the Seer was looking on the Urim and Thummin the word to be translated would appear to view and remain until it was properly recorded. The speaker claimed if this were true the result must necessarily be correct in every sense, in orthography, phraseology, and composition, claiming as we do that God knew the correct way, and hence if the translation were a true inspiration it would be in good plain English, which he claimed was not the case, as many words were incorrectly used, and that we had changed many words in latter editions, such for instance as changing which when it alludes to persons, into who. He claimed there were about three thousand such changes in our present edition compared with the origi-

In reading from Mr. Reynolds' work Mr. Witzigman found the statement that the printer had kept a copy of the original edition from which the present one shows so much alteration. He did not fail to remind us that the Book of Mormon contained the Sermon on the Mount recorded six hundred years before it was uttered. In closing his lecture, quotation was made from Mr. Reynolds concerning Joseph Smith, that he was "born in deceit and perfected in falsehood," and that a most careful examination proves the Book of Mormon is not a divine book.

The speaker tried to deny the truth concerning the fertility of Palestine. Pretended it never had been very barren, and that now it was not such a rich land as we tried to make out, etc. He did not make a point-blank lie, but maneuvered all around one, as if it would be very convenient for his purpose.

Scripture was very extensively read to prove "once in hell always in hell." Our position was entirely misrepresented; passages that were strong proof against their position and in favor of ours were read by them and wrested to their own destruction.

After the close of the discourse Bro. W. C. Nirk asked for a short time to make some remarks, but was very bluntly refused and told if we wanted anything of that kind to go some place else, for that was the house of God, etc. Another brother asked permission to make a few corrections, but was very flatly refused permission.

The minister was very much afraid we would infringe upon the sanctity of the place by causing an argument; but I perceived they could speak lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with hot iron. It reminded me of the Jews who would not go in unto the Gentiles for fear of being defiled, but would commit murder by crying, "Crucify him! crucify him!" against an innocent person.

I must not forget to tell that great sport was made by the speaker of baptism by proxy. He thought the Saints would be pretty well water-soaked by time they were baptized for all the dead.

The people in the vicinity of Rhodes heard a great deal of our doctrine during the reunion and these feeble efforts against the truth seem to me to fall far short of the mark aimed by our opponent. Their unkind, uncharitable conduct, their fear of being examined concerning their statements, all tend to show to all unprejudiced minds the superiority of our position and the spirit that moves this work.

I am glad and rejoice in the fact that we have received that which will endure examination; that we can with a good conscience recommend our faith to all men, and not have to hide behind a refuge of lies.

Your brother in the one true faith, WILBUR C. EARHART.

McBain, Mich., Oct. 7.

Dear Herald:—Having spent nearly a week in the tent here at this place assisting Brn. Berve and Lambkin, I feel to rejoice in the hope of some obeying the gospel. The turnout to the meetings is not the best; but those who come seem to be interested, and some are believing; and on yesterday, four were baptized by Bro. Berve, and others are receiving our message. The weather has been rather bad for tent work for some time, and the brethren will likely pull stakes and pack the tent away for the winter in a few days.

Bro. Lambkin is a priest; was ordained at our last June conference held at Fork; but he just likes tent work, and takes hold and assists in the singing, etc., and has proven a good help to Bro. Berve. Bro. Berve is also a good companion, and one willing to help a young brother all he can. The brethren have done a good work and have made many friends to the cause.

We have thought a good work has been laid at this place, and that it might be well to pitch the tent here again next spring, putting in a few discourses occasionally during the winter.

We had a good two-days meetings at Freesoil last Saturday and Sunday. Bro. J. Kaplinger, the president of the Freesoil branch, baptized one intelligent man who had been investigating the work for some time.

The Saturday and Sunday before that we had some fine meetings at South Boardman, at which time three persons were baptized by Bro. G. D. Washburn; and the ministry in sending in their reports, report baptisms occasionally here and there throughout the Northern and Eastern districts. It may be remembered by some of the readers of the HERALD, that I baptized five right after my debate with R. B. Brown at Shabbona this last summer, and two days later Bro. William Davis baptized two more: and a few days ago I received word from Bro. F. C. Smith that he had "baptized three more" at that place, and that others were near the kingdom. And so the good work moves on.

Our conference convenes at Whittemore next Saturday, where we think we may have a little "tilt" with the Seventh-Day Adventists on the Sabbath, as they have been operating in their tent at that place, and telling the people that others have the "mark of the beast"—"keeping the wrong Sabbath," etc.

We think since our first debate with them, some twenty years ago, that we are prepared to meet them and successfully refute their arguments upon the same.

May success attend our work everywhere.

Editors Herald:-The local Religio held a very interesting debate on Tuesday evening, September 10. The question was, Resolved, That in consideration of our present privileges and blessings, we, as true Saints, should not call medical doctors and take drugs and medicines prescribed by them, in cases of severe sickness. Bro. Adolph Leckney and Elder George H. Gates affirmed and Brn. Daniel Joy and John D. Suttill denied. Many good points were brought out by the principal speakers in the opening fifteen minute speeches. It was then thrown open for discussion by the house, in which about a dozen Saints from the floor participated. The debate closed with five minute speeches by the leading disputants, and a house vote of fourteen for and five against the resolution. Bro. Fred Roberts presided. There seems to be quite an urgent sentiment for another debate at the earliest opportunity.

The McKinley memorial service in the local chapel on Thursday, September 19, was timely and appropriate. Elder George Gates presided and offered the opening prayer. Elder George W. Robley delivered the address on this occasion. He said that Latter Day Saints, of all people, ought to be patriotic. He spoke in highest terms of the murdered president, and thoroughly denounced the assassin.

Yours for the truth,

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 7.

Editors Herald:-I feel truly grateful to God for the privilege and ability to do even a little for the upbuilding of so glorious a cause. It is certainly worth our best and continued efforts. On the other hand, a sense of sadness pervades the soul in contemplation of what, to me, has appeared to be a striking probability; that is, that many of the Saints are permitting, and will permit, the love of the world, the god of ambition, carnal and selfish desires, loose and immoral conduct, the wrongs and supposed wrongs of others, etc., to diminish and destroy their love for God and his truth. How careful we should be, especially if we occupy high positions in the church, to avoid giving any real occasion for the stumbling of others.

I am impressed with the thought that there is a necessity, and that the time has come for all to make a vigorous effort to come nearer to God. In my opinion, where this effort is not properly made, and soon, there is danger. Any effort in theory or practice, in ordaining men to the ministry or in any other department of church work, which lowers, or has a tendency to lower, our standard of morality and spirituality, is greatly to be regretted. If anything of this kind exists, as some think it does, it is not in harmony with the progressive movements of the work, nor the command of the Spirit which says, "Come up higher."

The late reunion held at Dow City, was one of the best, if not the best, in my judgment, that I ever had the privilege of attending. It was not difficult to see improvement in the character of both the preaching and prayer services. They were intellectual and spiritual. But let me ask: Were there any of the Saints who failed to enjoy these services, for the causes set forth in the former part of this letter? Answer individually to your own souls, and then (if the answer be yes), take the course that you think to be safe and right Jesus said: "Therefore be ve also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Matt. 24: 44. "And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." Luke 21:34.

In gospel bonds,

OMAHA, Neb., Oct. 11.

Editor Herald:—Last Wednesday evening about thirty of the Saints gathered at the home of our much loved Bro. Edward Rannie, as a surprise on the good man on the eve of his departure for his mission field in Colorado. Bro. Charles S. Kennedy representing the company made a short, eloquent speech setting forth his high calling and the magnitude of his work as a minister of the gospel, referring to the sacrifices he and his family were about to make for the good of others, and presented him with five dollars as a token of the high esteem in which he was held by the Saints of Omaha branch where he had labored so long.

Bro. Rannie responded feelingly, stating that while it would be a great sacrifice for himself and family it was a mutual willingness on the part of both; that his wife in no way had tried to hinder him, but was ever willing to assist him in his work.

A number of short speeches were made by several of the brethren, all pointing to the fact that Bro. R. had ever been a willing and ready man.

Refreshments were passed around and a good social time was had. The hand shaking and the words of comfort and confidence spoken when it was time to say good-bye will surely form a green spot in his memory for years to come.

I think I express the sentiment of all when I say, May the love of God, the favor of Christ, and the light and power of the Holy Spirit be his to enjoy in all his work.

", Tis slander,

AMONG the many excellent things which have been enunciated from the pulpits of our land since the assassination of President Mc-Kinley, none seem to us to be quite so applicable to the underlying causes rendering such a crime possible, as those found in a sermon by Bishop Doan, of Albany. Did space permit, it would afford us much pleasure to give the sermon entire, but as our space is limited we quote those parts only which have a direct bearing upon our work as Daughters of Zion, and recommend most earnestly that it be used as "supplementary reading" in all locals at November meetings.

We have made the remark upon several occasions, when our feelings have been moved by the seeming indifference of the churchas well as individual members of the churchto the work which the Daughters of Zion have undertaken to do; and we here repeat it with a solemn conviction of its truth: We may long and pray earnestly for the redemption of Zion, for the gathering of the Saints. but Zion will never be redeemed until the work contemplated by the Daughters of Zion is done. Understand, we do not claim it will be done by them. They may fail in what they have undertaken to do; but we do claim that it will, for it must, be done by some one before Zion will ever "arise and shine, her light having come, and the glory of the Lord being risen upon her."

Why are we so confident? We answer, because it is a fundamental work; a work which no one can neglect and still claim to be a follower of Christ. It is a work which has called forth special revelation and instructions in this last dispensation, a work which lies at the very root of all gospel work and which a church or a nation neglects at its peril.

The subject of Bishop Doan's sermon was "Anarchism and Atheism." He makes the assertion that before a man is an Anarchist he is an atheist. "Before he has hatched his plots of foul conspiracy against earthly government: before he has defiled the air of heaven with the bombast and bitterness of his contempt of human authority; before he has lifted his treacherous hand against the civil magistrate, or laid his underground mines to break up social order, he has dethroned God. He is an atheist before he is an Anarchist: he is an Anarchist because he is an atheist. With the resistless force of a progress from the premises of unbelief to a conclusion of crime, the unrelenting and infernal logic runs-there is no God to ordain powers, there are no powers ordained of God, there are no powers at all."

"God save us from this other anarchy of men who call themselves and count themselves above and beyond and independent of authority and law. We picture to ourselves an Anarchist in the unlovely personality of man or woman plotting, scheming, conspiring in the dark, or blatant and bitter in their denunciation of all government; cruel and stealthy and deadly, with the trail of a serpent and the tread of a tiger, and the snapping and snarling of a mad dog-unsexed women and dehumanized men; and such he is, such she is, in the finished development of their rabies. But the incipient stage, the embryonic beginning of all this, bears such faint and far away resemblance to its outcome that we fail to detect the symptoms in ourselves. I have spoken here, I think none too strongly, of the too prevalent tendency in our time to violent personalities of speech; presuming to assign motives, to condemn character, and to assail the individual under pretense of criticising methods and opposing policies. There can be no question but that in an atmosphere of embittered violence the murderer gets the inspiration which chooses a bullet or a dagger instead of the weapons of 'tongues which are spears and arrows and sharp swords.' Out of the reek of all his licentious and unbridled speech come the spawn and the sputum of the Anarchist and the assassin. But when we are seeking to heal disease, to eradicate evil, we have need to get at the roots and germs, and I am constrained to look for these in earlier lives and quieter places than in the grown-up censoriousness of self-conceit and unbridled partisanship, or in the halls of public harangues and the offices of the public press. I am compelled to look for them in the attitude of the nineteenth-century childhood and the atmosphere of the nineteenth century home. It must, it seems to me, begin with us elders. Parental indulgence, parental indifference, parental impatience, parental inconsistency; the inconsiderateness with which we let our uncontrolled tempers, our unbridled tongues, our unguarded actions, betray the unreality of our own characters in which we are proposing to mold the clay of childhood in its plastic time; the proxy bringing up of children, because fathers are too busy and mothers too lazy to watch over them themselves; the homes which are merely houses to sleep in and to eat in, but not to live the common life in, with its shared interests, its divided duties, its common joys and sorrows and concorns; the envies and rivalries and strifes for position, the utter earthliness of aims and ambitions, of training and example; the unblessed food, the ungathered family for prayer, the uncertainty and variableness of discipline; and the stigma, in the base counterfeit sense of the modern use of the word. the stigma set on homes by the disgrace of divorce. Oh, what a stern protest such a married life as that of the dead President lifts up against the criminal cowardice or the incontinence of men who use the misfortune of a woman or the misery of a misfitting marriage as the excuse for synchronous or successive polygamy! And then, on the other hand, in the child of to day, pertness and impertinence, discourtesy and disrespect and disobedience, resistance of control, either in open rebellion or in the evasions of deceit. questioning and criticising and self-assertion as the habit of its mind. What are we breeding, brethren, in these caricatures of home, if not the very contempt for authoritywhich too often makes itself contemptible by its inconsistencies-which is the source and spring and 'root of bitterness,' from which flow and grow the spirit of insubordination which disturbs the governments of the world? Is it not time to hark back to God's old commandment and say to the child, 'Honor thy father and thy mother,' and to plead with fathers and mothers to make themselves honorable to their children? Have we not need, if we would cure this frightful evil and arrest this threatening destruction of all that makes society safe, life sweet, and authority secure, to pray, 'O Lord, turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers,' and 'smite not the earth with the curse' of disobedience and lawlessness and disorder and misrule?"

HOME DEPARTMENT OF RELIGIO AND SUNDAY SCHOOL.

There is no better way of bringing the word of God to little ones than by a study of it between them and the parent. Can you think of any plan by which the Sunday school and Religio work might be brought closer to the home than in a home class in which either parent becomes the teacher of his or her own children? The necessity and benefits of prayer would naturally receive due consideration, and thus a lasting impression be left upon the minds of the children. No Latter Day Saint who can testify of God's goodness will fail to call his children's attention to the wonderful results of offering up our petitions to Him who is always waiting to hear from us. And since it is said that "a song from the heart is a prayer unto God," we should not forget that singing is a part of the home class work.

Every member of the church, no matter what his position or circumstance in life,

MAY NOW HAVE THE BENEFITS of the Sunday school and Religio if he so desire. This privilege is not limited to the church members only, but it extends to all.

is to get all those who cannot attend the regular sessions of Religio and Sunday school to make a systematic study of the Bible by following the course as outlined in the Sunday school Quarterly, and of the Book of Mormon by following the course as outlined in the Autumn Leaves. Those who have been in the habit of studying at random can appreciate a systematic plan only by giving it a thorough trial. This home class study will be found comforting and profitable to those who are isolated from church members and church privileges.

Should there be

TWO OR MORE PERSONS

in a family belonging to a home class, they should study the lesson together, discussing the various thoughts that may be presented, memorizing scriptural portions, looking up map references, etc. Invite your neighbors to come in and study with you. All home class students should begin their class work by first asking God's blessing. The work should close by benediction. Bishop John H. Vincent in his book, "The Modern Sunday School," gives the following as his experience: "From the beginning of my work as Sunday school specialist I have exalted the HOME AS THE MOST IMPORTANT SCHOOL in the world, and its cooperation as necessary to the efficiency of both week-day and Sunday school. In all addresses on Sunday school work for twenty years I have insisted upon the home as the first, best, and most important of all educational agencies."

Without going into detail regarding the

of conducting Religio home class work, you are referred to revised "Leaflet of Instruction, No. 2," which provides for a general home class superintendent, district home class superintendents, and local home class superintendents.

To my knowledge there are as yet no written instructions for the government of the home class department of the Sunday school. Notwithstanding this some local schools and also district associations have made provisions for organizing home classes. Having no by-laws for the government of the home class need hinder no one from advocating and advancing the home class work. The duty which lies nearest each one of us is to help establish the home class. After the class has been established there will be a need of, and a demand for, "rules and regulations," for which the general association will make provisions.

EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT SHOULD BE INTERESTED in this department and see that his school appoints one or more home class superintendents to canvass all in his locality who do not attend the main school, and if possible induce them to form a home class. No elaborate machinery is needed to organize a home class; anyone may start one by enrolling those wishing to take up the study as cutlined in the Quarterly. After the class is in running order it should be reported to the local, the district, or the general superintendent. Do not become discouraged if the results do not come up to your ideal, but keep right after it for fifty-two weeks in a year.

THE PLAN.

The schools of most denominations supply their home classes with lesson leaves and contribution envelopes, and they report that their home classes are more than self-sustaining. No certain sum is required, but offerings should be made just as if they had the privilege of attending a school. These envelopes are returned to the school at the end of each quarter when they are replaced by new ones, together with new Quarterlies for the ensuing quarter. These are taken to and from the home class by one known as the "visitor," who corresponds to our local home class superintendent. Should our schools feel unable to furnish sufficient Quarterlies for home class work, I suggest that those canvassing for membership also take subscriptions for Quarterlies; and should there be a deficiency in the subscriptions, that the school supply what is lacking.

I know of home classes that are thriving on back numbers of Quarterlies furnished by the local Sunday schools. The Sunday school paper should be in every home class where there are children old enough to read it.

Reports from other denominations show that every year

LARGE NUMBERS JOIN THE MAIN SCHOOL from the home department. The addition to the church from this department is also considerable. Thus you see that the home department is a very important part of God's work, and should therefore receive a due portion of the time and talent of all church, Sunday school, and Religio workers, that it may reach and maintain the aim designed for it, that of establishing the study of God's sacred word in all the homes not reached by the Sunday school and Religio proper.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Sunday schools are of a very ancient order, although in olden times they were not run on the same plan nor named the same name that they now are.

IN EARLY JEWISH TIMES

the Jews held services in their synagogues for the purpose of instructing the members in the ceremonies and rights of the Jewish faith. The early Christians gathered for the purpose of studying the word of God.

They did not enjoy the religious freedom that we do today. Their government did not allow them to believe as conscience dictated, hence their meetings were few and secret. Even at their stolen meetings they incurred a great risk, for if discovered, they were punished by torture or death.

When Martin Luther began his work as a reformer, he established Sunday schools throughout Germany. Thus we see that we are not the first to reap the benefit of Sunday schools, only we enjoy them to a far greater extent than did those of earlier days. As has been said before, the manner of conducting the meetings has been changed, and the honor of producing that change belongs to an Englishman, Robert Raikes. Robert's father was a printer and taught his son the same useful trade.

When a boy Robert was interested in educational affairs, and this interest grew stronger as the boy grew older. When he became a man he formulated a plan by which the children of the streets might be helped and educated. He gave notice through some London papers for the children to gather for instruction, at eight a. m., Sunday. He hired teachers, at twenty-five cents per day, to teach the children reading and the catechism. Those schools lasted from eight o'clock in the morning until church services, and after services until five o'clock in the afternoon.

From England Sunday school work spread to America; teachers were no longer hired but did their work for the love of humanity. They no longer taught reading in the Sunday school, for that was not necessary; but instead, taught the word of God according to their understanding. There are now over eighteen million Sunday school scholars in our land.

I wish I could give a history of Latter Day Saint Sunday schools; but cannot. But this we all know, that the work is growing stronger each year; the older people are becoming interested as well as the children, and we trust that in time there will be no disinterested ones in our church.

Let us put forth our best efforts to instruct the children in the work of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

In the Catholic World for October, A. Diarista, of Rome, writes interestingly of the daily occupations of Pope Leo, under the title, "Leo XIII.'s Busy Holiday." In the article attention is called to the fact that in the majority of instances news items sent out from Rome, in which the policy of the Pope on certain questions is given, are totally unreliable, being concections of the brains of imaginative reporters. Mr. Diarista thinks the Pope is in condition to live until he is one hundred years old, his present condition of health being excellent.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Colorado, Eastern Wyoming, and New Mexico, Greeting:-The condition of the church treasury is such that I feel it necessary to address this letter to the Saints of this mission and call their attention to it. For some time past the families of the missionaries have not received the full amount of their allowances, for the reason there has not been sufficient money in the hands of the Bishop's agent to supply them, and the Bishop is unable to supply the deficiency. The families of the elders get little enough when they receive the full amount promised them, and now that winter is approaching, bringing with it additional expenses for fuel and clothing, it will simply be impossible for the families of some of the elders to subsist on anything less than their full allowances. If they do not receive it, some of the brethren have written me they will be under the necessity of quitting the field to support their families. This mission field to support their families. This mission has already lost two or three of those ap-pointed here, and we cannot afford to have any of those remaining quit the field. I be-lieve they are all worthy men and are mak-ing a commendable effort to stay in the field and push the missionary work, and should be sustained by earnest cooperation on the part of the Saints. All are not called to be preachers of the word, but all can assist and share in the missionary work if they will. The law of tithing offers an opportunity for each one to assist according to his ability. On! if we would all do what we are able to do such appeals as this would be unnecessary. If we have only a little of this world's goods, we are the ones who most need the blessing of the Lord on the little we have. If we pay our tithes and offerings in the right spirit we have the promise. (See Malachi 2:7-12.) Where is our faith if we cannot take the Lord at his word? And how can we consistently ask the Lord to bless us temporally while we live in violation of his law by withholding the tenth of our increase which properly belongs to him? Nine dollars is better with the bless-ing of the Lord upon it than ten dollars without his blessing. I would like to see more names on the Bishop's agent's book. How many new names will he be permitted to record between now and January first? you have not been paying tithing, it would be a good time to begin now. We would like to hear from Eastern Wyoming and New Mexico. Some of you have written me, urgently requesting me to send a missionary to your locality. Men are now on their way to both of these places, but let me suggest that it is not only necessary that the traveling expenses of the elder be met some way, but his family must have something to live on while he is away from home. You surely would not ask nor expect him to go three or four hundred miles from home and leave his family with no means of support. pend on you, together with all other Saints of the mission to contribute your part to the support of the families of the traveling ministry, by placing your tithes and offerings in the hands of the Bishop's agent that there may be means in store.

Thanksgiving Day will soon be here, and all of us have many things to be thankful for. I do not think it necessary for us to partake of a bounteous feast, incurring considerable expense of money and labor, in order to be thankful to God on that day. I would like to suggest a plan to the Saints of this mission for the observance of that day, which I believe if they will follow they will feel a greater degree of thankfulness, materially aid our church treasury, and thereby make the families of the missionaries feel especially thankful. Let Thanksgiving Day, which will probably be the 28th of November, be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, and let the money that would have been spent on this day for eatables, be sent to the Bishop's agent as a free-will offering. In order that there may be concert of action in this, I would suggest that in every place where there is a branch in the mission that they meet together at their place of worship on that day at 2:30 p. m. and offer to God thanksgiving and praise, and pray his bless-ing upon the work here and the laborers engaged in it both local and general, and bring your free-will offerings to this meeting to be put in the hands of some one to forward to the Bishop's agent, giving name of each donor and the amount. Let the scattered Saints in the mission also remember the hour appointed and engage in prayer in their homes and also send the offerings of their families. Send all tithes and offerings to the Bishop's agent, Charles E. Everett, 2809 Welton street, Denver, Colorado. I hope all branch presidents and the ministry in general will cooperate with me in carrying this out. May the Lord bless and prosper us in his work. Your brother and coworker, JOHN B ROUSH,

In Charge Colorado Mission.

THE DOW CITY REUNION.

Friday, Sept. 20 -Owing to the recent rains many were hindered from coming on time, and services were not begun until evening, at 7:30, when Bro. J. M. Baker called the people to order, and after opening the meeting, announced Pres. Joseph Smith as the speaker, who spoke of the condition of the church morally and spiritually from 1830 to the present, and gave as his opinion that the church was in higher standing morally now than at any time in its history.

Saturday, Sept. 21.—The Saints gathered for prayer and testimony at nine o'clock and a spiritual meeting was had.

At the 10:45 service an organization was effected as follows: Brn. Joseph Smith, J. W. Wight, and J. M. Baker, presidents; A. H. Rudd and Ocar Case, secretaries; S. B. Kibler and James Pearsall, choristers, with permission to choose organists and assistants; Bro. Carroll, janitor, to receive six dollars for his services; J. M. Baker, George Shearer, D A. Hutchings, and C. Butterworth, police, with permission to choose assistants.

The remainder of this service was spent in short speeches, the following brethren being called upon: G. H. Hilliard, D. A. Hutchings, Oscar Case, C. E. Butterworth, and J. W. Wight.

At the afternoon service Bro. Joseph Smith preached to the edification of all, and at night Bro. W. A. Smith spoke on the principles of faith.

Sunday, Sept. 22 —Nine o'clock found a goodly number of Saints ready to engage in the services of God on such a beautiful day. The meeting was spiritual; five prayers and twenty-two testimonies.

Lambert was introduced as speaker, who spoke from Revelation 21:4, 5. He was well blessed with liberty of thought and delivery and spoke to the comfort and cheer of Saints and all present, and we are confident that all felt to press on to obtain the glory of the new earth yet in future.

The speaker at 2:30 was Apostle J. W. Wight, who spoke of the personal coming of Jesus Christ to the world to reign a thousand years in his kingdom.

Wednesday, the 25th.—Forty-five testimonies, seven prayers, and one prophecy were given at the social service.

At 10: 45 Elder Charles Derry spoke on the subject of "The Fruits of the Spirit." The Saints were taught a plain, forcible lesson, showing them that if they enjoyed and manifested the forcible lesson, fested the fruits of the Spirit, the Lord would see to the giving of gifts, and this would finally result in eternal life.

September 26—The morning prayer service was a spiritual feast. A goodly number of prayers and thirty-six testimonies.

At 10:45 Elder Oscar Case spoke from Revelation 14: 6, 7.

The 2: 30 service was in charge of the Sunday school and Religio and was profitable and instructive to all.

service was highly edifying.

At 10:45 Elder J. A. Gunsolley spoke in the interests of Graceland College, also Bro. Hilliard. The efforts were very interesting and instructive. The Spirit's presence was in the meeting. It closed with a song for Graceland, composed by Bro. J. A. Gun-solley.

a soul-stirring discourse.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Northeastern Missouri District: Of necessity I am forced to appeal to the Saints of this district to come to the rescue. A good work has been opened up in different localities by our missionaries, and God's government, like all earthly governments, requires means to carry it to success. All quires means to carry it to success. All governments are taxing their subjects to meet the demands. God also has established means for the government of his church and kingdom, to bring about the final accomplishment which he has designed. His command-ments are still binding upon all of his subjects to bring in their tithes and offerings that there may be meat in his storehouse. Our financial condition at present requires a little sacrifice on the part of each Latter Day Saint to come to the rescue of God's work. We are aware that the drought this year has affected finances a little, but perhaps God is trying us, to see what effort we shall make under the pressing circumstances. While this might be true, the Lord has made a promise through the Prophet Malachi that he will open the windows of heaven and pour upon us blessings that we shall not be able to receive, and he makes a proposition thus: Prove me and try me. How shall we prove him? By our sacrifices and obedience to the law of tithing. How many of us, Saints, are willing to try the Lord, and prove him? I know some who have proved the Lord, and his promise has been verified to them.

I would like to see the Saints throughout this district come to the rescue of this glorious work, especially at present, as the condition of the work temporally is not as I would wish it to be. If we will not respond to this appeal I am afraid the work is going to suffer, and some of the missionaries will have to go home for lack of means to support them. I have the same confidence that I have had that the Saints of this district will come to the rescue in this case of emergency, as they have done in the past. The interest of one is the interest of all. Let all the branches act at once, and also the Saints where there are no branches, and God will bless you in basket and in store. Let this appeal not be ia vain, but show your faith by your works, and God will abundantly bless you.

J. T. WILLIAMS, Agent.

To one interested in the new books of the day, "The Lounger" in each number of The Critic is always of great interest. Lounger is always alive to the happenings of the day in literary and allied circles, is a lively critic, and picks up many interesting incidents.

The World's Work with the October number completes its second volume and its first year. The aim of the magazine—to explain and to interpret the most interesting things that are done especially in American activity -brought it immediate success; and it ends its first year thoroughly established, prosperous and cheerful. It declares editorially: "A year ago The World's Work flung itself into the activities of our most active era, with the earnest purpose to interpret the important things that are done. It was a task as definite as it was serious, and a somewhat new one-to make an interesting magazine that should tell whatever men do better than men before have done."

Into the midmost field of cheerful and significant work this magazine has tried to carry its readers and to interpret the farreaching meaning of it—to present the literature of action. Although this difficult task has been inadequately done during this first year, a serious effort to do it was at once recognized and it brought instant success to the magazine-conclusive proof, if proof were needed, that the idea upon which it is founded is a sound one.

Works advocating and works opposing the faith of the church, the value of which students and debaters will best appreciate. These books have been collected in Europe and America during the past fifty years, and some of them are very rare. I have also works on history, science, biography, theology, archæology, philology, and about fifty volumes of the poets, which I will sell at less than half what they cost me.

I sell not from choice, but from necessity. I need the money now. If you are prepared to buy, this is a chance you may never have again. Write and tell me what you want. Inclose stamped, self-addressed envelope, and I will tell you what I have in the line you need. Address Mark H. Forseutt, Nebraska City, Nebraska.

TO EXCHANGE.

No person likes broken volumes of church papers. If any reader of this would like to exchange what numbers he has no use for, and get numbers that will complete his volumes, write and tell me what you have to spare, and what other numbers you want for them. I have 284 HERALDS, volumes 17 to 44, I wish to exchange for other numbers I lack. Some of you are similarly situated. Also numbers of Autumn Leaves, Olive Branch, Saints' Advocate, and other church papers. Terms of exchange: Paper for paper of same kind.

THE man who, having received at the hands of his brethren forgiveness of his debts, be they of whatsoever nature they may be, then prosecutes his brother without showing him the degree of mercy and forgiveness for which he himself plead, is very like the unmerciful servant. Forgiveness is a virtue in all alike; but if a man be forgiven and straightway fails to forgive, is it not evidence of a lack of another virtue, and one which lies very near the beginning of our lives as Christians,—even that of repentance? When does forbearance with such an one cease to be productive of good?

MRS. HAYDE ON POLYGAMY.

The Kansas City Journal for September 28 contained an account of the work of the "Kansas City branch of the Ladies' Relief Society of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." An interview with Mrs. Anna T. Hayde, of Salt Lake City, is given. Part of it we reproduce:

Mrs. Hayde is from the fountain head of Mormonism.

You call us Mormons," she said to the re-Porter, "but we call ourselves Latter Day Saints. Out in Utah we are doing a great deal of work. We women own real estate, grain, stocks, and this year we have taken up the industry of silk raising. Not long ago we presented Susan B. Anthony with a beautiful black silk dress made from our own silk, so you see we have been doing some-

"To which branch of the Latter Day Saints do you belong?" was asked.

"Well, there are no two distinct branches," she replied, "I suppose we come under the head of what people call the Brighamites."

"Then do you or do you not believe in-the reporter hesitated for a word.

the reporter hesitated for a word.

"Polygamy—you might as well say it," said Mrs. Hayde. "Yes, we all believe in it, but, understand, we don't practice it. You see one of our doctrines is 'obedience to the law of the land.' The law of the land is against the practice, and so we submit. I do believe firmly in this—in what you call polygamy—for I have seen it practiced, and the women and men are more virtuous and happier. If Isaac and Jacob virtuous and happier. If Isaac and Jacob and the others of the Bible believed in it, why cannot we? There is foundation for it all in the Scriptures. The women out in Salt Lake are not jealous of their husbands, neither are the husbands jealous of them, and they all live happily. The husband takes they all live happily. The husband takes care of and educates all the children and provides for his wives. I believe in it, and some day I think the world will come to take the same view of the matter. In my mind, it is the best and only true relationship."

WHY THEY ARE DIVIDED.

"Is it on this subject of polygamy that the Latter Day Saints are divided?"

Mrs. Hayde smiled, "no indeed," she answered. "It is upon one of our strong religious beliefs that we are divided. We believe that every son and daughter of God will have an opportunity to have the gospel preached to him whether it be here or after death. When a man dies he goes to a place preparatory to heaven. If he has had no opportunity of having the gospel preached to him here, he has it there. We have out in Utah what we call temples of the dead. I officiate at one of these. Now suppose a relative of yours who has not been baptized or not yet received the gospel should die. When he went away he could not take his body with him and yet the Scripture says he must be baptized in the flesh before he can enter the kingdom of God. While that relative is in that preparatory state, you may pray for him and be baptized for him—a woman for a woman relative and a man for a man. The churches where we pray and are baptized for our dead, we call the temples of the dead. The others don't believe this and so far as I know we are the only church or denomination who do."

In the Journal for October 14, Bro. R. J. Parker appeared in an article of about one and one quarter columns, in which he shows up some of the errors of Mrs. Hayde. After briefly tracing the history of the church down past the death of Joseph Smith and the usurpation of authority by Brigham Young, Bro. Parker says:

In the interview referred to, the question is asked Mrs. Hayde: "To which branch of the Latter Day Saints do you belong?" "Well, there are no two distinct branches," she re-plied. "I suppose we come under the head of what people call the Brighamites."

The writer of this article is a representative of what is known as the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," who have a membership in Kansas City and suburbs of something over 2,000. He has been sent to Utah three times on a mission to try and show the people of that place the evils into which they have gone. We desire the public to know there are two distinct the public to know there are two distinct branches, or churches, who call themselves Latter Day Saints, and that we have no connection nor affiliation one with the other. The next question put: "Then you do or do not believe in polygamy?" Mrs. Hayde answers: "Yes, we all believe in it, but, understand, we don't practice it." Here the inference is very strong that all Latter Der inference is very strong that all Latter Day Saints believe in that doctrine, while the facts in the case are, no true Latter Day Saint believes in it; for it is no part of the Latter Day Saints' doctrine. I think I am safe in saying that the church the writer represents has done more against this abominable doctrine than any other church in this country. This doctrine of polygamy was in-troduced publicly into the Utah faction on August 29, 1852, eight years after the death of Joseph Smith.

To give this doctrine prestige Brigham Young said he had a revelation in his possession that was given through Joseph Smith before his death, and he had kept it under his lock and key all these years, but he said he did not have the original copy, he had a duplicate; that Emma Smith, wife of Joseph Smith, had burned the original. Emma Smith, had burned the original. Emma Smith said all her life and up to the time of her death she never burned nor heard tell of such a revelation till it came from Utah. Everything that Joseph Smith has written that can be found in any authentic work is against that and all other immoral conduct.

He then gives the teachings of true Latter Day Saints upon the marriage question, showing the principles to be truly monogamic, and that the Utah church departed from the original and true teachings. He also quotes from the Journal of Discourses to show by Brigham Young's own words that the practice of polygamy did not produce happiness among the women, as Mrs. Hayde claimed. He also asked Mrs. Hayde to inform us in what chapter of the Bible she read about Isaac having more wives than one. Bro. Parker closes his article thus:

Mrs. Hayde is then asked: "Is it on the subject of polygamy that the Latter Day Saints are divided?"

She smiled and said, "No, indeed." Inferring again that we agreed upon that doctrine, which, as you can see from the above, is incorrect.

Mrs. Hayde says we are divided upon the subject of probation after death or baptism for the dead. It would take too much space to give our belief on that subject, but we will say that was not the cause of division, for we believe every man and woman that God has created will have a chance to hear and obey the gospel either in this world or the world to come. We believe Mr. Young introduced many things into the church besides polygamy that are foreign to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

In the Journal of Discourses, printed by themselves, in volume 1, page 50, Brigham taught as follows: "When our father, Adam, came into the Garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. . . He is our Father and God, and the only God with whom we have to do." He also says, on the same page, "Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost," while the Bible says he was. Brigham also taught in the Journal of Discourses, volume 4, page 220, that it was necessary to shed some men's blood in order to save their souls.

He also taught that we could leave the written word of God and obey the living oracles and all would be well. These and oracles and all would be well. many other doctrines which those people believe in are the differences between the two organizations.

In 1852 the church the writer represents, was partially reorganized, and in 1860 Joseph Smith, the oldest son of Joseph Smith, who was killed in 1844, was made the president of the Reorganized Church, and has from that time until the present maintained the principles that were taught by his father, and has opposed all the innovations that have been introduced by these men who have departed from the faith which was once delivered to the Saints.

Our headquarters are at Lamoni, Iowa, our doctrine is the doctrine of Jesus Christ as found recorded in the Bible.

If our Utah friends think we have been unfair, we invite them to a public discussion at any suitable time and place, where the public can hear in detail both sides.

We have given these few items of history that the public may know the facts in the

BRITAIN AND THE BOER.

Without a thought or intent to a censure, direct or implied, upon the Government of England in the conduct of the war being waged in South Africa by England for the subjugation of the little Boer republics there, we give place to the following from a British statesman and published in the Manchester Guardian, England, for September 20, sent us from Llanelly, Wales.

The following letter has been sent by Sir Neville Chamberlain to Mr. H. J. Ogden: LORDSWOOD, Southampton, 18th September, 1901. Dear Sir:—I have received a copy of "The War against the Dutch Republics," which you were so good as to send me; and I thank you, as the author of the work, for having brought to my notice a book so full of facts bearing upon the causes of the war, as also upon the manner in which the war has been carried on by our army. It would be well that this work should become better known to the public, and I trust that the National Reform Union will be in a position to give it a large circulation. I must further express the hope that you will not relax your exer-tions to gather together all the events that may throw light upon the future conduct of the military operations, and upon the measures that may be taken to restore order throughout South Africa after hostilities have been concluded. It is certain that such a record will be a sad one for the historian of the future to deal with; but the failures and humiliations that have beset the march of events since the piratical inroad of Dr. Jameson and his filibusters must rest upon those who brought about the war and have since allowed the military operations to degenerate into the condition implied by Sir Philip Sidney as "cruelty in war." Those three words include all that is opposed to the humane and authorized use of military power; and the nation has already discovered that the adoption of measures opposed to humanity have only had the effect of exciting the Boers to more strenuous resistance and to a more reckless retaliation. When the war ends a feeling of hatred and revenge will be left in the minds of a brave people who have so greatly suffered. The history of the world sets at naught the rose-colored views of our Con-servative leaders, for it is the nature of every foreign people held in subjection to look forward to deliverance from their conquerors. So far from brotherly love springing up between the British settler and the Dutch Africander, there is more likely to arise another Ireland five thousand miles away, and only to be held down by a strong armed force.

One disgraceful aspect arising out of the hatred now prevailing in our country against the Boers is the Jingo cry which denounces as pro-Boers and Little Englanders all those who cannot concur in opinion with the majority. A more malicious falsehood was never coined. It is a miserable device to excite hatred against those who have, for conscience' sake, opposed the policy of the Government, and have also been opposed to various military measures adopted for carrying on the war. As an example of the pernicious influence that has been exerted by the extreme war party, I give a copy of an anonymous letter lately sent to me:
"Your figures prove nothing. War is hor-

"Your figures prove nothing. War is horrible. Untold miseries follow in its wake. Women and children are always inevitably sufferers in every war. The concentration sufferers in every war. The concentration camps are an instance; they are part of the warfare—unavoidable. Of course there will be deaths. Do not women and children die in Southampton? Does this show inhumanity or neglect? The Boers should have thought of what they would bring upon themselves and families before they sent their damnable, presumptuous ultimatum. Fight on, Kitche ner! fight on! Kill, slay, fire, burn. have listened only too long attentively to the croaking of pro-Boers."

Lamentable as is the spirit evinced in the above communication, it does not stand alone, for I have been told by a gentleman not long ago that he hoped the war would be ended by all the Boers being killed and the women and children shipped off to Holland. Even in the earliest days of the war the Boers were often spoken of in my presence as "those brutes." And, let me ask, have the casualofficially reported as "bagged"? That term more resembles the phraseology used by a rat-catcher than the public announcement of the losses sustained in battle by a brave enemy.

The original demand made by Government was unconditional surrender, which means no offer of terms, or war to the bitter end. The 15th September has come and gone, and the result of the last proclamation has been, as was to be expected—the dogged, brave Yours faithfully, Boer fights on.

A COMMENDABLE WORK.

Bro. Gilbert J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii, under date of October 8, writes:

HONOLULU, H. T., Oct. 8. ELDER JOSEPH SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa;

Dear Brother;-From a recent HERALD I noticed that you had returned from Oakland, and I write you about the publication of a tract in the Chinese language. A short time ago I received the manuscript of a tract from Bro. Elvin, of Lamoni, entitled: "Salvation to All," and addressed to the "Great Brotherhood of China." I am much pleased with the way in which Christ is presented as the Savior of the world in its pages, and also with all of its contents. I have already had it translated into the Chinese language, and by the aid of a Chinese interpreter have compared the translation with the original. After some slight changes have been made I am going to have ten thousand copies printed. Three Chinese spent a whole day in translating it, and I am sure they have endeavored to do the work well, and think they have succeeded.

I was astonished when I asked them how much the translation and printing of the tracts would be to find that they were prepared to do the whole work for the small sum of twenty-two dollars.

So far I have only received two tracts from any of the Saints, but hope to receive more. Since our heavenly Father instructed the church that this work should be done, can we expect his blessings unless we endeavor to do his will? There are still the Japanese and Portugese to be reached, and I shall be glad of further assistance from any who feel capable and desirous of engaging in such

I ask you to remember us here, and to pray that God may move upon the hearts of these people to whom the gospel is now being presented, as he did anciently upon the Gentiles when the work was sent to them.

Kind regards to you and yours.

ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETIES are interested in the payment of the college debt; at least some of them are, as evidenced by the following letter to Bishop E. L. Kelley:

Inclosed you will find sixteen dollars and fifty cents from Pleasant View Religio of Spring River district, to help cancel the present debt on Graceland College.

We had hoped to do better, but drought, together with the building of a church, has been trying on our society.

Respectfully,

MISS L. Ross, Sec.

Brother, sister, what is your society doing?

CORRECTION.

In the letter from Bro. E. W. Nunley, HERALD of October 9, page 826, the 11th, 12th, and 13th lines should read: "It is that I believe that all that we receive from God is unmerited," etc.

UNDER the heading of "Mormon War Relic," the following appeared in the Nauvoo Independent for September 25:

While plowing on Jake Reichel's premises one day last week Barney Juttemeyer unearthed a six-pound cannon ball. It is a relic of the Mormon war of 1846. A number of our citizens have similar relics in their possession.

THE ZIONISTS' MOVEMENT.

Israel Zangwill Says They Are After Charter for Palestine.

New York, Oct. 14.—The London correspondent of the Press sends the following interview with Israel Zangwill upon the Zionists' movement:

Israel Zangwill, the novelist, poet and playwright, concerning the coming conference of the Zionists in Basle, Switzerland, said:

"It is not impossible that Dr. Hoezl may have a great surprise for the world, to be announced at that convention. He has been negotiating in person with the sultan of Turkey for a charter for Palestine, and it is possible that he has obtained that charter. It seems likely, at any rate, that the charter may be had before many months.

"Once the charter is assured, much larger contributions should be obtained. We have at present about $1,000,000, most of it from three or four subscribers.

"And after the charter is obtained and the money is raised the poor folk among the Jews will have a place of refuge at last."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Isaac True writes from Chicago, Illinois, October 16:

I cannot do without the HERALD It so often strengthens and cheers my soul from week to week.

Bro. W. P. Franklin and wife write from Cross, Texas, October 17:

We are a long ways from a branch of the church, and there are no other members of our church in this county. Bro. E. W. Nunley came over this summer and preached a few times for us.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Some time ago some brother sent us a copy of the Denver Times for Sunday, August 11. It contained a story entitled "Lucia and Giovanni; a Romance of Old Naples," which was written by Sr. Floye Josephine Lewis, a one-time student of Graceland, and graduate of the preparatory department. The same issue contains an excellent portrait of Sr. Lewis. The Times speaks highly of her stories, and we congratulate our young sister.

We have received a copy of a book entitled "Early Conversion," written by Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M. A., and published by the J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Co., 57 Rose street, New York. The book purports to show how "children and young people can be led to Jesus and prepared for church membership."

We have just learned, with regret, of the death of Bro. William O. Thomas, of St. Louis, Missouri, who departed this life the 6th September. He was well known throughout the church, especially in Wales, as a tried and faithful veteran; a helper financially. We presume brethren in charge of the obsequies will send obituary notice,

WHEN SHALL OUR CHANGE COME?

According to the popular opinion of the day, when a man dies he, or his spirit, goes to its final abode or resting place. If the spirit of a righteous person, it goes to heaven, there to remain; if of a wicked person, it goes to hades, there to remain for all time and eternity. This we think is erroneous, and we will try to give our reasons for so thinking.

If this be true it would destroy the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, which we cannot afford to deny, for it is taught very plainly in the Bible

Paul says in his first letter to the Corinthians, 15: 22, 23:

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order.

It is very easy for us to believe that all must die, for we see evidences of that each day of our lives. That grim master, Death, comes and claims our loved ones, no difference what our rank may be in society; religiously, politically, or socially, and we have no power in the day of death. Death is a separation of the spirit and body. We read in Ecclesiastes 12:7:

Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it:

And again in Luke 8: 54, 55, where the daughter of Jairus had passed away; her spirit had left her body: But when the Master came and called, saying, Maid, arise, her spirit came again. This shows that the separation caused death, and the reuniting of the spirit and body caused life. And now, as it takes the union of the spirit and body to produce life, the spirit must return and reënter the body. Many of the servants of God foresaw the resurrection of the body. Job 19: 23-27 says:

Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.

Isaiah 26: 19:

Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise.

Ezekiel 37: 12-14:

Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel, and ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it, saith the Lord.

Hosea 13: 14:

I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plauges; O grave, I will be thy destruction.

The Savior also taught that all men should be resurrected. John 5: 28, 29:

Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.

The beloved disciple was permitted to see the resurrection and the difference of time between the two. In Revelation 20 he saw an angel bind Satan and cast him into the bottomless pit. Then the saints of God came forth in the first resurrection; but the rest of the dead did not come forth for one thousand years. During the thousand years Christ reigned and ruled over his people, preparing them for an inheritance in the beautiful city that is to come down from God out of heaven at the expiration of the thousand years. During this time we understand that peace, or the Spirit of God, will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea; enmity will cease between man and beast, and we will be led on to that perfect state that we must attain before we can enter into the pearly gates of celestial glory. Those that are alive on the earth when Christ comes, and are in the faith, and are wise virgins, will be changed from mortality to immortality.

Now the question arises, When will that change take place? Many say at the beginning, and some say at the end. But we think both are wrong, and that the change will take place all along through the thousand years, or whenever we are in a condition for the change. We learn from Isaiah

There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die a hundred years old.

Now let us see what the Lord has said in the last days. Doctrine and Covenants 45:10:

At that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver.

It is easily seen that all will not be changed in the beginning for immortal beings will not multiply. If they do it would be contrary to God's divine law, for he says that in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, and marriage is ordained of God that the earth might answer the end of its creation. Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3. Hence we are compelled to admit that all that are here on the earth at that time will not be changed or resurrected beings. Again in Doctrine and Covenants 63:

When the Lord shall come, and old things pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance be-fore the Lord, in the holy city, and he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; wherefore, for this cause preached the apostles unto the world the resurrection of the dead.

Doctrine and Covenants 98:5:

And in that day . . . the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face. And in that day whatsoever any man shall ask it shall be given unto him. And in that day Satan shall not have power to tempt any man. And there shall be no sorrow because there is no death. In that day an infent there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious.

We think the above quotations prove beyond a doubt that we that are alive when the Master comes will not be changed until we have arrived at the age of man or are prepared for the change, and those that are born after he comes, section 45:10, will grow up until they are old before they are changed, thus making his work continue on and on during his reign, and not doing all instantaneously, as many are wont to believe.

This is my brief attempt on this line, and I have never seen an article on this subject. Maybe it will call out some one who can do justice to the subject.

Ever praying for truth and right to prevail, I am,

Your brother in bonds,

J. W. ADAMS.

TEMPERATE USE OF HOT DRINKS; WHAT ARE THEY?

The few words to which our mind is directed by the subject before us, and which have been the cause of much discussion among the Saints, are in the Word of Wisdom, Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1, wherein the Lord in setting forth by revelation to the Saints that which would be conducive to bodily health, says, "Hot drinks are not for the body or belly." We have heard two opinions expressed by the members of the church in general regarding what are here designated "hot drinks." The most general one is, that they are tea and coffee; the other that reference is made to anvthing at a high temperature, and refers as much to hot water as to tea and coffee.

In endeavoring to determine what is here meant by hot drinks we premise the following, which we hold to be axiomatic, that as nothing but truth can emanate from God, any word from him will be in harmony with that, which being legitimately within man's sphere and subject to demonstration, has been proved by him to be true.

We next notice that the hot drinks here mentioned, are not classed with the ordinary articles of food with which the drinks made of barley and other grains seem to come, but with wine, strong drinks, and tobacco, and that the use of them is forbidden both externally and internally, carrying the legitimate inference that it had been, or would be, the custom to use them in both ways. If tea and coffee are here meant to the exclusion of other drinks at an equally high temperature, the word itself certainly bears no evidence of it; it must be from something altogether outside, and not contained in the revelation from which we form the conclusion. Again, if tea and coffee are meant because they are of themselves injurious to health (as is generally claimed by the advocates of this interpretation), we submit that cold tea and coffee is equally, and we believe used in the ordinary manner during the course of the regular meal, more injurious than We have seen both tea and coffee served cold, and iced tea and coffee are common drinks, and in some places during the summer months are perhaps used more than hot tea and coffee. So that the Word of Wisdom, as it excludes only hot drinks, would fail in its object if this idea were correct. Again, is it customary to apply tea and coffee externally? If so we must confess we are ignorant of it.

We will examine the idea that the hot drinks of the Word of Wisdom applies indiscriminately to all drinks at a high temperature, and includes hot water as much as tea and coffee. the head of this list would naturally stand hot water, and the idea that hot water is not for external or internal application is enough to defeat the idea at once, for it is a well known fact that hot water is one of the greatest theraputic agents known.

At the foot of the articles enumerated for food in the Word of Wisdom, is mentioned barley and other grains for mild drinks. Prepare your drinks from grain in any manner known for table use, use them cold, and see how you will enjoy them; you will soon be able to tell as a matter of personal experience, especially if you have a tendency to nervousness or dyspepsia, that such drinks taken during the course of the regular meal are not only more palatable, but more healthful hot than cold.

Drinks that are wholesome are not injurious because they are hot, but in some cases, at least, are preferable to cold drinks. Therefore the Word of Wisdom does not appy to all hot drinks. If it applies to tea and coffee because they are of themselves injurious (which in the light of what we have already said is an absurdity), then as we are dependent wholly upon outside demonstration, the Word itself is useless.

There is one class of drinks which we have never heard mentioned in connection with the Word of Wisdom. which seems to us to fill the conditions there set forth. We have seen a man by strenuous efforts drink a tumbler full of strong solution of We have known cayenne pepper. men to mix up large quantities of black pepper and drink it as a supposed remedy. We have seen whole families regale themselves with strong ginger tea before retiring at night. In every drug store in the land are numerous preparations known as universal stimulants, jamaica ginger, hot drops, etc., which are widely used both externally and internally.

It used to be our custom, when out late on a cold night, to stop at some of the many places in the city where such things are served, and get a glass of strong extract of ginger, under the impression that it was bene-We never thought of its ficial. harmful effects until one day chanced to see an article in the daily paper by a physician condemning the practice that was being indulged in by thousands besides ourselves, and saying that such things should never be taken into the stomach. Had our attention been directed to the Word of Wisdom, we would probably have replied, innocently enough, that that applied to tea and coffee.

For the purpose of this paper we called upon a physician and inquired concerning what is taken as hot drinks, and used also for outside application. The following are some of the things used: ginger, anise, caraway, myrrh, cinnamon, turpentine, opium. Common to most of these mixtures is a large proportion of cayenne pepper in the form known as tincture of capsicum. I also inquired as to effect of those upon the system. The answer was, if taken in excess internally they act as an astringent, drying up and disintegrating the tissues and cells with which they come in contact; the same effect would follow their outside application, but to a lesser degree on account of the greater resisting power of the skin.

If tea and coffee were meant by hot drinks, no more expenditure of time, space, or energy would have been required to say tea and coffee, than to say hot drinks. The class of drinks we have mentioned could be aptly described in no other way; they are hot drinks, and from their nature can be nothing but hot. They are used both externally and internally, and while we are not acquainted with local conditions in Kirtland and Zion at the time the Word was given, we find that it was intended to apply to all Saints everywhere, and in localities where we are acquainted. We know that the use of ginger, pepper, hot drops, etc., is a common thing, not only in case of colds and other sickness, but sometimes on account of cold weather only. It was therefore more necessary for the Lord to speak about such drinks than tea and coffee. for not being used as common articles of food, and being to some degree under the protection of pharmacy and the medical profession, they were not so readily subjected to scientific investigation.

If the temperate use of hot drinks is confined to those mentioned in the Word of Wisdom, our task is about done. The Word itself settles the question as to their temperate use, they are to be totally abstained from both as to external and internal use. We may, however, add a few lines about drinks for table use that are commonly used hot, as perhaps in assigning this subject, it was intended to bring these up for discussion.

The temperance that we as Latter Day Saints should practice, should be that use of all things which is in the highest degree beneficial to the end sought to be attained. It should include total abstinence from all things not conducive to that end. It should be, and properly is, a part of our religion to keep our bodies in the highest attainable state of health, as in that way only can we reach the highest degree of intellectual and spiritual attainment.

As Saints we are equally responsible, and our condemnation will be as great for failing to live in harmony with scientific truth, as though God had spoken on the subject.

Tea and coffee are injurious when made articles of common use. Not only is this the practically unanimous testimony of physicians, and others in a position to know their effects, but in the case of tea, we have seen examples of the evil effects of its excessive use that are sufficient to convince us that it should not be used, except, possibly, under conditions where it may have medicinal value.

Hot drinks at meal time, if properly used, are not harmful, and are preferable to cold. Cold water, and especially ice water, we regard as one of the worst drinks that can be used during the course of the regular meal.

One or two cups, or even more if it is desired, of hot drink, made of barley or other grains, or otherwise prepared, so that it is wholesome, may be taken during or immediately after meals, provided it is not used to wash down the food. It is an important point, and one we wish to emphasize, that care should be taken that such drink is not to be used to wash down the food before it is properly masticated; but otherwise it warms the stomach and promotes that general good feeling which is highly conducive to good digestion, especially in cases of weak stomachs or nervous-

We must confess that we have not made a study of this subject in the light of scientific knowledge, if there be such. What we have said of the use of these drinks we regard as facts of our own experience, and as such we state them for the purpose of bringing the subject before you. We will be glad to hear from those who know more about the matter, and who will add what we have failed to say, and correct what we have said amiss.

We wish to call attention to the fact, that as all heat is relative, that degree of heat which is pleasant to the natural taste, about one hundred and twenty degrees would be hot when applied to drinks; this is what is generally understood, and was the thought we had in mind when preparing this paper. Anything excessively hot, whether food or drink, would be injurious, and we do not deny that the Word of Wisdom may be broad enough in its application to include all drinks at an excessively high temperature.

We never gave the subject much thought until asked to write this paper, but the more we think of it, and of the Word of Wisdom as a whole, in the light of what little we know of present day knowledge and developments, the more we are impressed with its wisdom, knowledge, and foresight, that stamps it as a product of the infinite mind.

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST, AND MAN-KIND.

In the 9th chapter of Paul's letter to the Hebrews, 22d verse, we learn these words:

And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.

It is my purpose to speak but little of the law to which Paul is referring, and under which Israel was governed in the days of Moses. It was those who obeyed the commands of God that the blood on the side posts and door posts preserved from death; and it was through their obedience to the law given through Moses that the blood of sacrifice atoned for their sins through the priesthood appointed of God. (Exodus 12: 21-28, and 25: 1-8.) But the question is, How can the blood of Christ be applied to mankind? Some will tell us that it is very easily seen, if we are willing to take the Bible for it. I think so too, but to what part of the Bible can it be applied? One may say turn to the First Epistle of John, chapter 1 and part of verse 7, which tells us that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. So I believe, if we obey the conditions, or I make God a respecter of persons. What are those conditions if we walk in the light, which bring fellowship with the Father and the Son? In the third verse, John tells us that their fellowship was with the Father and the Son, as well as each other, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleansed them. We have a way in the doctrine of Christ to get this fellowship, for John tells us in the Second Epistle, 9th verse:

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son.

And I do not think I could abide in that doctrine until I had obeyed it. The principles of that doctrine are spoken of by Paul to the Hebrews, in the 6th chapter 1st and 2nd verses, so I take it for granted that if this be the word of God and he be no respecter of persons, I must obey that form of doctrine spoken of by the same writer to the Romans, found in the 6th chapter, 16th to 18th verses. Then, and only then, can we place ourselves with them spoken of by John.

I was once asked by a young man in London, Canada, if I believed that water baptism was for the remission of sins. I said, "That is how I understand the reading of Mark 1: 4. And Luke 1: 77 tells me that John came to give knowledge of salvation unto God's people by the remission of their sins; and the statement was a part of the revelation that came through Zacharias, as you will see from verse 67. The commission given by Christ, as found in Luke 24: 46-48, tells us that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem; and they were to be witnesses of the same. If we turn to Acts 1: 8 we see it would be told, under the power of the Holy Ghost, for the Lord said:

Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

This is very strong language; and if we turn to Acts 2:36-41, we learn that the same truth was told:

Repent, and be baptized . . . in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, etc.

And Peter himself said that baptism helped to save him. (1 Peter 3: 21.)

This teaching the young man did not seem willing to accept for that purpose, and said:

"You destroy the blood of Christ, for I can show you where we are washed from our sins by the blood."
"Not of Peter," I said; "Let us have that passage of Scripture."

So he turned to Revelation 1: 5:

Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood.

"There," said the young man. "The blood washes us."

I said: "Were you there among them? Let us see who this instruction is to; and if you and I are where they are, then, believing that God is no respecter of persons, if we belong to the church of Christ as they did we must expect the same right. Let us read a few verses, a revelation of Jesus Christ to John, for him to give to the servants of the seven churches. or as I understand, to the seven branches of the church of Christ unto Him that loved us and washed us, members of the church of Christ. How did they become such as to enjoy this right? How did the Lord tell us he added to the church? In Acts 2:41 we are told that they who gladly received his words were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. What was that word? Verse 37 and following. They were commanded to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of their sins and they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, etc.; and Acts 8:14-19 tells us how they at Samaria received it under the hands of Peter and John. So we see that obedience to the doctrine of Christ brought them into the church, and John was speaking to those who were in the church. Peter tells us in Acts 10:34, that God is no respecter of persons, so we must come into the church before we can claim this right. This would open a large field for truth regarding the true church of Jesus Christ. I passed on and gave other statements so that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word might be established as is given by Christ in Matthew 18:16. Permit me to take you to another of Paul's statements found in his epistle to the Colossians, first chapter, 14th verse, and there we learn that those with Paul had the forgiveness of sins through the blood of Christ. Were there any conditions to be met? Let us read what the Bible tells us along those lines, and see if it agrees with what has already been said. As Paul expresses the "we," it would give us to understand he was referring to himself as well as to the Saints and faithful brethren in Christ. Now let me take you to a statement made by

Paul to Timothy, his son in the gospel. 1 Timothy 1:15:

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.

And he says in the next verse, that it was for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on Christ to life everlasting. If he were one of the chief of sinners, did he have to do anything before the blood of Christ was applied? Let us hear his own confession. Turn to Acts 22: 1:

Hear ye my defense which I make now unto you.

Let us hear it and follow the pattern. Sixth to ninth verses:

And it came to pass, that as I made my journey . . . I fell unto the ground, and neard a voice . . . And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? . . . I am Jesus . . . what shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

He went, and Acts 9:10-18 tells us that God sent Ananias; and in the 14th verse of chapter 22 Ananias told Paul God had a work for him to do, but he was to arise and be baptized and wash away his sins, calling on the name of the Lord. Paul tells the Romans afterwards:

Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.—Romans 10: 13.

And:

God is no respecter of persons—Romans 2: 11.

Now let us turn to what Paul said when talking to the Colossians.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son: in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins.—Colossians 1: 13, 14.

Then, what is the act of obedience? To come from the kingdom or power of darkness, into the kingdom of Christ. And how is that to be done? Let Christ tell it, and let us obey it. John 3: 5:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

Then if Paul and the Colossians and John with his brethren were in the kingdom of Jesus Christ (Rev. 1:9). he having enjoyed this right, a cleansing from sin by the blood of Christwe must obey the teachings or doctrine of Christ. Please tell me if God be the same today as he was then, and is not his word like himself-eternal. How then will the blood of Christ reach me if I do not obey, when I become accountable before him? I feel that if it were needful I could bring much more proof, both from the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; but I will confine my evidences to the Bible, with the exception of one reference found in Doctrine and Covenants 28: 1-4:

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the great I AM, whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins, who will gather his people even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, even as many as will hearken to my voice, and humble themselves before me, and call upon me in mighty prayer. Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that at this time your sins are forgiven you, therefore ye receive these things; but remember to sin no more, lest perils shall come upon you. Verily I say unto you, that ye are chosen out of the world to declare my gospel with the sound of rejoicing, as with the voice of a trump; lift up your hearts and be glad, for I am in your midst, and am your advocate with the Father; and it is his good will to give you the kingdom; and as it is written, Whatsoever ye shall ask in faith, being united in prayer according to my command, ye shall receive; and ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts; wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent forth upon the wicked; for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe; and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth; for the hour is nigh, and that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke, so shall it come to pass; for I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand. And again, verily, verily I say unto you, and it hath gone forth in a firm decree, by the will of the Father, that mine apostles, the twelve which were with me in my ministry at Jerusalem, shall stand at my right hand, at the day of my coming, in a pillar of fire, being clothed with robes of righteousness, with crowns upon their heads, in glory even as I am, to judge the whole house of Israel, even as many as have loved me and kept my commandments, and none else; for a trump shall sound, both long and loud, even as upon Mount Sinai, and all the earth shall quake, and they shall come forth, yea, even the dead which die in me, to receive a crown of righteousness, and to be clothed upon, even as I am, to be with me, that we may be one. But, behold, I say unto you, that before this great day shall come, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall be turned into blood, and the stars shall fall from heaven; and there shall be greater signs in heaven above, and in the earth beneath; and there shall be weeping and wailing among the hosts of men; and there shall be a great hailstorm sent forth to destroy the crops of the earth; and it shall come to pass, because of the wickedness of the world, that I will take vengeance upon the wicked, for they will not repeat; for the cup of mine indignation is full; for, behold, my blood shall not cleanse them if they hear me not.

This is a commandment of God today, to this generation. May we be willing to obey it, is my prayer. I would like to draw the attention of my readers to a few more statements given to us by John found in his first epistle 5: 5, 6:

Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood.

Yet somebody might say, Was there not water and blood, that flowed from his side when the Roman soldier pierced him; and this is what John means. Well, let John tell it. He tells us in the same verse:

And it is the Spirit that beareth witness because the Spirit is truth.

Then I ask, Did the Spirit bear witness as the Roman soldier lifted that spear? I do not find it there (St. John 19: 34); but I find in Matthew 27: 45 that from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour. And the fiftieth verse tells us:

Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost.

Nothing said of the Spirit bearing witness; but permit me to draw your attention to another place in the Scriptures where Christ did come by water, and the Spirit did bear witness, and see if we can make them agree, as is said in the eighth verse of chapter 5, epistle of John. Matthew 3: 13-17.

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering, said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

Then where did the Spirit bear witness to the water? When Jesus was found fulfilling all righteousness we get the water and Spirit, and we go to the cross and get the blood; and John tells us these three are the witnesses on earth, the Spirit, water, and the blood. These three agree in one. We must not separate them; and if we want the right of the blood for our personal sins we must obey the gospel, be born of water and the Spirit, and be cleansed by the blood of Christ; for without the shedding of blood there is no remission. Much more could be said as it is given by Paul when speaking to the Ephesians as found in the 2d chapter 13th verse:

But now, in Christ Jesus, ye who sometime were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ.

Paul tells us in Galatians 3: 26, 27:

For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.

If we believe that God is the same today as then, and the law of the Lord is perfect, we cannot alter it and expect the same results.

That truth obeyed may make us free, is the prayer of the writer.

BY WILLIAM HAWKINS.

I, knowing that these things must surely be made known, and that all things which are hid must be revealed upon the housetops, and also that a knowledge of these things must come unto the remnant of this people: this I speak unto their seed, and also unto the Gentiles who shall possess the land, who have care for the house of Israel, that realize and know from whence their blessings come; for I know that such will sorrow for the calamity of the house of Israel, yea they will sorrow for the destruction of this people; for this people shall be scattered, and shall become a dark, a filthy, and a loathsome people, beyond the description of that which hath ever been amongst us; yea, even that which hath been among the Lamanites; and this because of their unbelief and idolatry. Now, behold, they are led about by Satan, even as chaff is driven before the wind, or as a vessel about upon the waves, without sail or anchor, or without anything wherewith to steer her; and even as she is, so are they.

O ye fair sons and daughters, ye fathers and mothers, ye husbands and wives, ye fair ones, how is it that ye would have fallen. O that ye had repented before this great destruction had come upon you. But behold, ye are gone, and the Father, yea, the eternal Father of heaven knoweth your state; and he doeth with you according to his justice and mercy.

Now these things are written unto the remnant of the house of Jacob; and they are written after this manner, because it is known of God that wickedness will not bring them forth unto them; and they are to be hid up unto the Lord. And this is the commandment which I have received; and behold they shall come forth according to the commandment of the Lord, when he shall see fit in his wisdom. Yea, behold I say unto you, that those saints who have gone before me, who have possessed this land, shall cry; yea even from the dust will they cry unto the Lord, and as the Lord liveth, he will remember the covenant which he hath made with them; and he knoweth their prayers were in behalf of their brethren. And behold, their prayers were also in behalf of him that the Lord should suffer to bring these things forth. And blessed be him that shall bring this thing to light; for it shall be brought out of darkness unto light, according to the word of God. And none need say they shall not come, for they surely shall, for the Lord hath spoken it; for out of the earth shall they come by the hand of the Lord, and none can stay it; and it shall come in a day when it shall be said that miracles are done away; and it shall come even as if one should speak from the dead.

And it shall come in a day when the blood of the saints shall cry unto the Lord, because of secret combination and the works of darkness; yea, it shall come in a day when the power of God shall be denied, and churches become defiled, and shall be lifted up in the pride of their hearts; yea, it shall come in a day when there shall be heard of fires, and tempests, and vapors of smoke in foreign lands; and there shall be heard of wars and rumors of wars, and earthquakes in divers places; yea, it shall come in a day when there shall be great pollutions upon the face of the earth; there shall be murders, and robbing, and lying, and deceivings, and whoredoms, and all manner of abominations, when there shall be many who will say, Do this, or do that, and it mattereth not, for the Lord will uphold such at the last day. But wo unto such, for they are in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity.

And now behold, who can stand against the works of the Lord? Who can deny his saying? Who will rise up against the almighty power of the Lord? Who will despise the work of the Lord? Who will despise the children of Christ? Behold, all ye who are despisers of the Lord, for ye shall. wonder and perish. And he that shall breathe out wrath and strifes against the work of the Lord, and against the covenant people of the Lord, who are the house of Israel, and shall say, We will destroy the work of the Lord, and the Lord will not remember his covenant which he hath made unto the house of Israel, the same is in danger to be hewn down and cast into the fire; for the eternal purposes of the Lord shall roll on, until all his promises shall be fulfilled. Know ye not that he hath all power, and at his great command the earth shall be rolled together as a scroll? Behold, are not the things that God hath wrought marvelous in our eyes? And now, if ye have imagined up unto yourselves a god who doth vary, and in him there is a shadow of changing, then have ye imagined up unto yourselves a god who is not a God of miracles.

But behold, I will shew unto you a God of miracles, even the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; and it is the same God who created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are; behold, he created Adam; and by Adam came the fall of man, and because of the fall of man, came Jesus Christ, even the Father and the Son; and because of Jesus Christ came the redemption of man; and because of the redemption of man, which came by Jesus Christ, they are brought back into the presence of the Lord; yea, this is wherein all men are redeemed, because the death of Christ bringeth to pass the resurrection, which bringeth to pass a redemption from an endless sleep, from which sleep all men shall be awoke by the power of God, when the trump shall sound; and they shall come forth, both small and great, and all shall stand before his bar, being redeemed and loosed from this eternal band of death: and then cometh the time that he that is filthy, shall be filthy still, and he that is righteous, shall be righteous still; he that is happy, shall be happy still; and he that is unhappy, shall be unhappy

And now, O all ye that have imagined up unto yourselves a god who can do no miracles, I would ask of you, Have all these things past, of which I have spoken? Has the end come yet? Behold, I say unto you, nay; and God has not ceased to be a God of miracles. Yea, who can comprehend the marvelous works of God? Who shall say that it was not a miracle that by his word the heaven and the earth should be; and by the power of his word man was created of the dust of the earth; and by the power of his word hath miracles been wrought? And who shall say that Jesus Christ did not do many mighty miracles? And there were many mighty miracles wrought by the hands of the apostles; and if there were miracles wrought, then why has God ceased to be a God of miracles, and yet be an unchanged being? Behold, I say unto you, he changeth not; if so, he would cease to be God; and he ceaseth not to be God, and is a God of miracles. And the reason why he ceaseth to do miracles among the children of men, is because that they dwindle in unbelief, and depart from the right way, and know not the God in whom they should trust.

O then despise not, and wonder not, but hearken unto the words of the Lord, and ask the Father in the name of Jesus for what things soever ye shall stand in need. Doubt not, but be believing, and begin as in times of old, and come unto the Lord with all your heart, and work out your own salvation with fear and trembling before him. And I would that I could persuade all ye ends of the earth to repent and prepare to stand before the judgment seat of Christ. And then, O ye Gentiles, how can ye stand before the power of God, except ye shall repent and turn from your evil ways? Know ye not that ye are in the hands of God?

I speak also concerning those who do not believe in Christ. Behold, will ye believe in the day of your visitation; behold, when the Lord shall somewhat unto the remnant of this come; yea, even that great day when the earth shall be rolled together as a scroll, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; yea, in that great day when ye shall be brought to stand before the Lamb of God, then will ye say that there is no God? Then will ye longer deny the Christ, or can ye behold the Lamb of God? Do ye suppose that ye could be happy to dwell with that holy being, when your souls are racked with a consciousness of guilt that ye have ever abused his law? Behold I say unto you, that ye would be more miserable to dwell with a holy and just God, under a consciousness of your filthiness before him, than ye would to dwell with the damned souls in hell. For behold, when ye shall be brought to see your nakedness before God, and also the glory of God, and the holiness of Jesus Christ, it will kindle a flame of unquenchable fire upon you.

O then ye unbelieving, turn ye unto the Lord; cry mightily unto the Father in the name of Jesus, that perhaps ye may be found spotless, pure, fair, and white, having been cleansed by the blood of the Lamb, at that great and last day.

And again I speak unto you who deny the revelations of God, and say that they are done away, that there are no revelations, nor prophecies, nor gifts, nor healing, nor speaking with tongues and the interpretation of tongues. Behold I say unto you, He that denieth these things, knoweth not the gospel of Christ: yea, he has not read the scriptures; if so, he does not understand them; for do we not read that God is the same yesterday, today, and forever; and in him there is no variableness neither shadow of changing?

Behold, I speak unto you as if ye were present, and yet ye are not. Behold the Lord hath shown me great and marvelous things concerning that which must shortly come at that day when these things come forth among you. None can have power to bring it to light, save it be given him of God; for God wills that it shall be done with an eye single to his glory, or the welfare of the ancient and long dispersed people of the Lord. plates thereof are of no worth, because of the commandment of the Lord; for he truly saith that no one shall have them to get gain; but the record thereof is of great worth; and whoso shall bring it to light, him will the Lord bless. Yea it shall be brought out of the earth, and it shall shine forth out of darkness, and come unto the knowledge of the people, and it shall be done by the power of God; and if there be faults, they be the faults of man.

people who are spared, if it so be that God may give unto them my words that they may know of the things of their fathers. But behold, it shall come to pass, that they shall be driven and scattered by the Gentiles; and after they have been driven and scattered by the Gentiles, behold, then will the Lord remember the covenant which he made unto Abraham, and unto all the house of Israel.

Yea, I speak unto you, ye remnant of the house of Israel. Know ye that ye are of the house of Israel. Know ye that ye must lay down your weapons of war, and delight no more in the shedding of blood, and take them not again, save it be that God shall command you. Know ye that ye must come to a knowledge of your fathers, and repent of all your sins and iniquities, and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, that he is the Son of God, and that he was slain by the Jews, and by the power of the Father he hath risen again, whereby he hath gained the victory over the grave; also in him is the sting of death swallowed up: and he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead, whereby man must be raised to stand before his judgment And he hath brought to pass the redemption of the world whereby he that is found guiltless before him at the judgment day hath it given him to dwell in the presence of God in his kingdom, to sing ceaseless praises with the choirs above, unto the Father, and unto the Son, and unto the Holy Ghost, which are one God, in a state of happiness which hath no Therefore repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus, and lay hold upon the gospel of Christ, which shall be set before you, not only in this record, but also in the record which shall come from the Gentiles unto you; for this is written for the intent that ye may believe that, and if ye believe that, ye will believe this also; and if ye believe this, ye will know concerning your fathers, and also the marvelous works which were wrought by the power of God among them; and ye will also know that ye are a remnant of the seed of Jacob; therefore ye are numbered among the people of the first covenant; and if it so be that ye believe in Christ, and are baptized, first with water, then with fire and with the Holy Ghost, following the example of our Savior according to that which he hath commanded us it shall be well with you in the day of judgment.

And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover; and whosoever shall believe in my name, doubting nothing, unto him will I confirm all my words, even unto the ends of the earth.

Behold the judgment of God will overtake the wicked. Therefore I write unto you Gentiles, and also unto you house of Israel when the work shall commence, that ye shall be about to prepare to return to the land of your inheritance, yea, behold I write to all the ends of the earth, yea, unto you twelve tribes of Israel, who shall be judged according to your works, by the twelve whom Jesus chose to be his disciples in the land of Jerusalem, and I write also unto the remnant of this people, who shall also be judged by the twelve whom Jesus chose in this land, and they shall be judged by the other twelve whom Jesus chose in the land of Jerusalem. And these things does the Spirit manifest unto me; therefore I write unto you all.

And for this cause I write unto you, that ye may know that ye must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ; yea every soul that belongs to the whole human family of Adam; and ye must stand to be judged of your works, whether they be good or evil; and also that ye may believe the gospel of Jesus Christ which ye shall have among you; and also that the Jews, the covenant people of the Lord, shall have other witness beside him whom they saw and heard, that Jesus whom they slew, was the very Christ, and the very God. And behold they shall go unto the unbelieving of the Jews; and for this intent shall they go; that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God; that the Father may bring about, through his most beloved, his great and eternal purpose, in restoring the Jews, or all the house of Israel to the land of their inheritance, which the Lord their God hath given them, unto the fulfilling of his covenant, and also that the seed of this people may more fully believe his gospel, which shall go forth unto them from the Gentiles. Be wise in the days of your probation; strip yourselves of all uncleanness; ask not, that you may consume it on your lusts, but ask with a firmness unshaken, that ye will yield to no temptation, but that ye will serve the true and living God. See that ye are not baptized unworthily; see that ye partake not of the sacrament of Christ unworthily; but see that ye do all things in worthiness, and do it in the name of Jesus Christ the Son of the living God: and if ye do this, and endure to the end, ye will in no wise be cast

Behold I speak unto you as though I spoke from the dead; for I know that ye shall hear my words. And these things are written, that we may rid our garments of the blood of our brethren who have dwindled in unbelief. And behold these things which we have desired concerning our brethren, yea, even their restoration to the knowledge of Christ, is according to the prayers of all the saints who have dwelt in the land.

And now the Lord Jesus Christ grant that their prayers may be answered, according to their faith; and may God the Father remember the covenant which he hath made with the house of Israel; and may he bless them forever, through faith on the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

DOWNEY, California, Oct. 10.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference held at Los Angeles, beginning October 4, passed off very pleasantly, an excellent spirit being manifest in all the meetings.

At present I am staying at Bro. Van Fleet's, near Downey, holding evening meetings. Expect to go to Santa Ana Sunday to resume the work Bro. Carmichael and myself have been engaged in; that is, visiting from house to house, distributing tracts and explaining our position.

In August the valleys were to a great extent deserted, all who could do so having gone to the beach or to the mountains to escape the heat. So, like the Rev. McTavish of Ian Maclaren fame, Bro. Carmichael and myself planned a raid; not however to swoop down upon the lowlands, but rather to carry the war into the midst of the mountaineers. Accordingly, one fine morning we "found ourselves," as story-writers say, encamped beneath majestic pines on the summit of the San Bernardino Range.

This pleasing tableau, however, did not obtain without a prelude, including a day and a half of hard travel, walking where the road inclined upward, which we noted seemed habitual with mountain roads. Also there were a few preliminary remarks about dust.

We had figured on securing a hearing at some of the numerous and populous camps, or at the sawmill where many are employed. In this, however, we were disappointed in a measure.

We approached Camp Lincoln first. Here a man, who announced himself as mayor of the camp, and bore evidence of intimate acquaintance with that which made Milwaukee famous, gave us permission to preach upon the following Sunday. This camp was largely composed of "Old Pioneers," and was really under the oversight of a Mr. Brown, a lawyer and a nice man, but something of a diplomat, as you will see.

Promptly at the hour appointed we appeared, our congregation came later, such of it as came. Mr. Brown, however, took us in hand and entertained us while we waited. He said among other things that he thought "that while up among the lordly pines and everlasting hills" we ought to give their Creator at least a casual thought. "It is very appropriate to hold service once a week, with a short discourse on some suitable subject."

Notice how nice, diplomatic, and far-reaching that last sentence was. Our dream of week night meetings vanished away; we put aside thought of presenting our peculiar doctrines. We saw our time limited to about twenty minutes, and all by a single sentence. The present sentiment of the world was never better stated: "Since preachers must preach we think it very appropriate that they only preach once a week, avoiding all unpleasant subjects, and above all being brief."

As the mayor above mentioned said, "These religious services on Sunday kind of break into our game of quoits but we can take it up again when they are over."

Mr. Brown said he regretted that he did not have some good cigars at hand to offer us.

We held our meeting, those of the pioneers who were present listened attentively, and furnished the music. Their available hymns were few, and we were amused to hear them close with a funeral hymn. We did not know whether it expressed grief that we were about to leave or sorrow that we had ever come.

Our success at the saw mill was not commensurate with the labor involved in getting there and back, and as no other openings were to be had we only sojourned there about a week.

My wife, mother, and sister-in-law accompanied us on this trip, and Bro. James Miller kindly furnished conveyance for most of the party, the rest going in the "gospel rig."

Since that experience we have worked mostly around Santa Ana; have held some meetings in El Toro, and some in a hall at Santa Ana, with fair interest: but most of our work has been in visiting.

In this work Bro. Carmichael and myself take the streets and houses as they come, each taking his turn in calling up the inmates. We tell them of our meetings, and at every house explain the difference between our church and the Utah faction. If any interest is manifest we explain points of doctrine and leave tracts to be called for later. It is slow work, but will do good. One could spend a year in a town the size of Santa Ana or San Bernardino.

We meet all classes, from the strict Presbyterian to the believer in spiritualism, anarchy, and free love, only one of the latter so far; at least only one who confessed it,—a woman.

Our reception is something like this: the lady of the house answers our ring. Her face is set in an icy look of impatience; she thinks we are book agents. We politely state that we are two ministers. Her face relaxes; sometimes she smiles, until we name the name of Latter Day Saints. Then there is another sudden and severe freeze up, with signs of a storm. We set to work to state our true position; and in proportion as we are successful the countenance of our hearer becomes genial again.

There are blessed exceptions to this routine, where the party approached personally knows some family of Saints who live their religion. In such cases we are always well received, and the church is well spoken of; but deliver us from the task of opening the heart of one who knows only Saints who are renegade.

Here is a lesson for all to heed; the responsibility of this work is a burden that rests upon all, and there are none exempt; 'no not one, not one."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

HAVERHILL, Mass., Oct. 14.

Editors Herald:—I came here Friday last from Boston. Our district conference closed on Monday last, with remainder of business left over from Saturday's sessions—ordination of five of our brethren to offices of elder, priest, teachers, deacon respectively; all good men, tested and tried, and can be depended upon for good service in the respective appointments, unto which we believe the Lord has called them, and as the church unanimously confirmed and sanctioned.

The prayer and social service that followed, occupying until the noon hour, was full of comfort and significance and abounding in evidence calculated to gladden the hearts of God's people with continued assurances of the heavenly recognition of our efforts to cooperate with him in spreading abroad the gospel witness among men.

Brn. Greene and Anderson, who have been laboring successfully in Connecticut in tent work, were with us, and remained during the week, holding services every night. They were to go to Fall River to occupy on yesterday, and if possible conduct some meetings in, or adjacent to Fall River. These brethren are to make a tour of the district while with us; and we bespeak for them a welcome and hearing in the interests of our gospel work.

Bro. Robley, whose field of labor has been in the Philadelphia district the past summer, was also with us, and rendered service during conference and the meetings following at Somerville. The rite of baptism was also administered to two persons.

Our trip to this place via "electrics," through Molden, Reading, Andover, and Lawrence, was a thoroughly enjoyable and interesting one. Thirty miles on a trolley car may or may not be an interesting or profitable experience. It all, or largely, depends upon circumstances surrounding, or the state of mind or soul of the individual.

"Bring forth the blind people that have eyes"—"Having eyes, they see not;" was the statement of our Savior concerning certain people or individuals, and of whom it may be said there are still in the world today.

"Day unto day, uttereth speech," "the earth is filled with His beauty;" and at no time of the year more so than in this autumn time—glory crowned with a magnificence of changing hue and color of our New England woods, that smites the deeper senses of the soul, awakening them to praise and thanksgiving toward the great Architect and Master Artist of this beautiful world in which we too much of the time, exist only, but do not live.

It is written, "Man shall not live by bread alone;" heaven pity the man or woman whose soul is not nourished and fed with sight and appreciation of the beauties of field and wood that God himself has limnered upon nature's canvas, or whose ear is closed to the sound of nature's voices as their harmony and beauty ring and resound through the chambers of the soul that is awakened to something of the possibilities that lie wrapped up in the word or consciousness of the true significance of the word "life."

By the kindness of Bro. Thayer of this place, we were furnished with an excursion ticket to and upon Lake Winnapasawkee, New Hampshire; and I do not remember to have ever gotten so much out of one dollar in "the coin of the realm" as we did last Saturday in the one hundred and seventy mile ride by rail and boat, via Boston and Maine railroad and the steamer Mt. Washington, in a sixty mile tour around this—especially at this season of the year—superlatively beautiful body of water, Lake Winnapasawkee.

The hills-or mountains as we would call them in the Middle or Western States-piling themselves up against and sometimes above the mist or cloud sky in successive ranges, and all clothed with a luxury of foliage of color that had in it fairly a sense of intoxication in its wondrous beauty. Islands of this inland sea are rising up on every hand, with glimpses of cottages where refugees from dust and din and heat of city life, breathe new life, embowered in evergreen life of pine and hemlock admixtured with their forest sisters of the maple and the oak, who now before their final disrobing for their winter's rest and sleep have put on their most gorgeous and beautiful array, before they say to us and the world their annual season "good-bye."

I thought of the friends, brethren and sisters in Christ, all over the country whose friendship and acquaintance had enriched my life, way over in Independence, Lamoni,—East, West, North, South,—how much I would like to have had them share the refined enjoyment of this, one of the most enjoyable days of my life.

Yesterday morning we again took up the gospel service and work of preaching and counsel with and to the Saints of Haverhill and strangers who came in with us. Good, we think, has resulted; and this is our consolation, and enough of reward and satisfaction. A series of meetings should be had ere long, and is desired and will be supported by the Saints in Haverhill. If health and other duties will permit we are willing to return with some fellow minister to undertake in the matter.

And this brings us to the reference and to the sad news conveyed by the HERALD which reached us yesterday—of the death of Bro. Wight, and a contemplation of the thoughts expressed concerning this event in HERALD editorial. "Be ye wise servants," "harmless as doves," was the Master's enjoinment when he sent out to the world his first missionaries.

Of our ministers, so far as I had acquaintance with or knowledge of him, Bro. Wight was an efficient, capable, worthy minister, and possibly above the average of "wise" and "harmless servants." I am speaking only of the thought expressed by HERALD editor in connection with my own experiences in this regard. There are and have been men who through lack of wisdom-a zeal-untempered by judgment and a knowledge of the limit of their physical needs and capabilities, have sapped the fountains of vigor, unwisely, prematurely, harmfully, to themselves and the cause they were and are so anxious to serveand the church, and their brethren and critics so anxious they should so energetically represent. That there is more intellectual worry and labor, more of deprivation of home comfort and worldly emolument, recognition or praise; far more danger to health, or tranquility of mind, naturally speaking, for our average minister and demanded of him by reason of his heavenly calling and appointment, than is laid upon the minister of and over settled pastorates or congregations of the world's religious faith, is of course conceded: and especially is or was this true in the beginning of church work-organization and building, not only in our Savior's, but our own time. The necessity for this kind of disposition of, or for, all the members of the ministry of this church in its present state of advancement is, as we understand by the terms of the law governing in the case, and the revelations of former and later or last time or times especially, made neither obligatory nor wise.

"Let every man learn his duty, and act in his calling," and it is not the will of God that he or they should be subject to the call, order, or undue criticism of those who are not at the head, and to whom before God and in his fear alone must his ministers look for orders, direction, and, if need be, criticism or rebuke. It may be not only just, but a wise and wholesome thing to recognize and take account or inventory of what men have done, are doing, as well as what we think they have plenty of time to do or are not doing.

The work of preventing misrepresentative, hasty baptisms, ordinations, the presence of wise direction, and stable counsel, the holding together of what has been accumulated, the weeding out of that which has proved itself to be positively vicious and hurtful to the permanent growth and peace of the Saints, the intellectual and religious subtilities which "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now" as aforetime "worketh in the heart of the children of" ignorance of God's law and "disobedience" to its counsels; all these facts force upon the faithful minister of the church a worry and a care and a consciousness of things not shared by many, very many, of his associates, his brethren and sisters of faith in the church we are undertaking through God to build, and to restore, so that it may ultimately-sometime-when, only God knows-"be presented" through Christ "to the Father, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing."

Happily, there are encouraging signs of improvement all along the line in this regard. Ministerial jealousy, failure to recognize the labors and intent of others—envious of their success or praise is, we think, abating. Especially is this true among ministers of experience; certainly is it true among those given to prayer and spiritual mindedness and who are bent on cultivating the spirit of peace, love, and good will and a disposition to mind every one his or her own business, and look out for failures at home.

May His kingdom come! May neither our unwise zeal, unlawful striving, or lack of diligence prevent its coming, is our prayer.

M. H. BOND.

ELLISON, N. D., Oct. 8.

Dear Herald:—It has been a long time since I wrote to the HERALD. We are at Ellison, North Dakota, on a claim, trying to get settled down. I hope and pray that we are not so far out of the line that none of the elders can come and visit us. They will always find a home with us. There is a schoolhouse at our southwest corner.

The dear sister at Langdon finds it very lonely since we moved away from there. Bro. Sparling baptized her last summer. It seemed so good to hear the gospel preached. He preached us some grand sermons. It made us rejoice that we were in the true gospel.

I ask an interest in all the Saints' prayers, for my husband and self, that we may live faithfully and be worthy to be called Saints, and be able to bring up our little children as the dear Lord wishes. I wish to asked you also to pray for my dear father and mother, that they may enjoy the blessing of God.

Oh how I long to see the Saints and gather with them again. Ever praying for Zion's welfare, I remain,

Yours for the truth,
BERNICE CROWE.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 7.

Editors Saints' Herald:—Our district conference closed yesterday. Peace, harmony, and good will preval ed throughout all the deliberations of the various sessions. The Spirit of the Master was markedly manifest. It was truly gratifying to note the equanimity and perfect blending of hopes and aspirations amongst laity as well as the ministry.

A communication was read from Bro. Joseph Luff, recommending to the conference the name of Bro. Nelson Van Fleet, Sr., for ordination to the office of an evangelical minister. It received universal indorsement. Present district officers were sustained for the coming year. They are: T. W. Williams, district president, 636 East Twenty-first street, Los Angeles, California; Albert Carmichael, assistant district president, Anaheim, California, Rural Delivery No. 1; Maggie Pankey, secretary and treasurer, Santa Ana, California.

Brn. E. A. Smith, A. E. Jones, A. Carmichael, and the writer dispensed the word, whilst Brn. Van Fleet, Dana, Earl, Wixom, and Thompson contributed to make the other services a success.

There are some fifty-seven persons holding priesthood in the district; thirty of these reported by letter. I am endeavoring to impress all of these into service. I do not deem it for the best interests of the work and the good of the individuals to permit them to become pieces of statuary in the gospel hall of fame. Priesthood is conferred upon men for action. Those who do not intend to magnify their calling in any sense would evidence their respect towards God and their good will to the brethren and the church by turning in their licenses. Such should remember, however, that no man can lay down his priesthood as a laborer would his coat. The manner in which we use this heaven-imposed obligation will surely be taken into account when we stand before the judgment bar. If every man holding the priesthood in the church could compass the magnitude and sacredness of his calling, what an impetus would be given the work. God demands it of every man having accepted ordination that he does all in his power to further the interests of the cause. Why labor so incessantly for the things which perish? Why hoard and scramble for this world's possessions to the neglect of your duty when Christ says, "Wherefore seek not the things of this world, but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Many of our otherwise noble men are stifling the divine unfolding within, and are throwing themselves into the seething, writhing stream of business strife and financial competition; and it is only the question of time when we will find them stranded on the island of despair; wrecks, morally, spiritually, temporally. The accumulation of wealth should not be paramount, only incidental. Whilst millions of our fellow men stand wholly unenlightened as to this gospel of peace and power, think you, my brother, that our apathy is excusable? Then let us labor with our might, even though the flour bin may have a little less in it.

The law of the Lord says: "It is my will that you should go forth and not tarry, neither be idle, but labor with your mights, lifting up your voices as with the sound of a trump, proclaiming the truth according to the revelations and commandments which I have given you, and thus if ye are faithful ye shall be laden with many sheaves, and crowned with honor, and glory, and immortality, and eternal life."—D. C. 75: 1.

And again: "Let all those who take their journey as I have commanded them, going from house to house, and from village to village, and from city to city; and in whatsoever house ye enter, and they receive you, leave your blessing upon that house; and in whatsoever house veenter, and they receive you not, ye shall depart speedily from that house, and shake off the dust of your feet as a testimony against them; and you shall be filled with joy and gladness and know this, that in the day of judgment you shall be judges of that house, and condemn them; and it shall be more tolerable for the heathen in the day of judgment, than for that house; therefore, gird up your loins and be faithful and ye shall overcome all things and be lifted up at the last day."-D. C. 75: 3.

In harmony with this provision of the law it becomes the duty of the ministry to go from house to house and warn the people. This can be done in no better way than by the circulation of tracts. An epitome of faith should be left at every house. If there is anything of a favorable reception a second visit should be made in the course of a week; and if the parties are willing to continue the investigation, other tracts can be left, and in this way an effectual opportunity is afforded the elders to present our claims. We will not make the progress we should and can make until we adopt this policy. True, it is humiliating to go from house to house and be subject to the scorn of the majority; but we are no better than our Master. We propose a thorough test along these lines in Southern California.

A promiscuous distribution of literature does not amount to much. We need to have personal contact with the people. The tracts open the way; we must follow up the opening thus made with personal explanation. The written word can never take the place or do the work of the "preacher," but it can serve as an introductory element.

R. B. Neal, the self-appointed Mormon annihilator, speaking of the Utah contingency, says: "Fifteen hundred Mormon evangelists are in the field advocating and defending their "ism.' Tracts should follow in their wake and cover all their tracks."

Tracts become under some conditions the best medium of getting the truth before the people. Anybody can circulate tracts. Why do not the laity, sisters as well as brothers. all over the country, enter and occupy in this inviting, languishing field? Wherever the attempt has been tried it has more than fulfilled expectations. There is scarcely a sister in the church but what could call and leave or exchange tracts at half a dozen houses in a week. Many of the brethren could do more than this. What a large number could be reached in a twelve-month! One should approach every house with a prayer on his lips that God would open the hearts of the people to receive the message. Brethren and sisters, wherever you are, try this work: you will be delighted in realizing in a limited way at least, the fulfillment of the promise, "you shall be filled with joy and gladness and know this, that in the day of judgment you shall be judges of that house."

With us the district has provided for a tract fund; all parties in the district who desire to do systematic and judicious distribution are to be supplied with the necessary tracts to make their effort a success. We propose if the people will not come to us we will go to them, and thus rid our skirts of the blood of at least a part of this generation.

The visit of Brn. Joseph and Luff, together with that of Brn. Alex. and Burton, was salutary.

Bro. Joseph has given you a representation of our climate from an Easterner's standpoint. It may be interesting to read this as to your country from a typical Westerner:

"In these two months astray, the Lion has seen more hot days and nights, has perspired more, has seen more thunder-storms, mosquitos, wilted collars, mud, wrecking winds, and discomfort in general, than in seventeen years in California. He has read the accounts of more deaths by sunstroke than ever died in California of an epidemic; and twice as many people were killed by the sun in one day in New York City as have perished by earthquake in the West since history began. Sunstroke, by the way, is absolutely unknown on the Pacific Slope. The Lion in this trip has personally seen but two people killed by the sun-a man in Chicago, and a little girl in New York, who went down on the sidewalk, as if struck by a bullet. Also seven horses. Thousands of horses in the big cities wear big straw hats to save them from a like fate. Fancy telling that to a native Westerner! And one pleasant July day he saw the thermometer stand at 118° on Dearborn street. .Chicago. The official record was 103°-taken at the top of the Auditorium tower, some two hundred and fifty feet in the air. This was doubtless authentic; but the Lion didn't observe many Chicagoans walking around on a level with that observatory-most of them were using the sidewalks."-Chas. F. Loomis, in Land of Sunshine.

Ever yours for Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Editors Herald:—The inclosed letter of W. B. F. Treat is in answer to mine of August 30, as published in HERALD of September 4. It is another instance of the enemies of the truth giving up reason and argument, and resorting to their last means of defense—evil speaking—to blacken the character of those whom they cannot meet in scriptural argument. The truth cannot be overthrown by such methods. All that is necessary to meet such opposition is for the Saints to live their religion and let their light shine and God will take care of his servants.

I also inclose a copy of my reply to Mr. Treat. Fraternally,

O. J. TARY.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 9, 1901. O. J. TARY, Wheeling, W. Va.

Dear Sir:—The whole system of Mormonism is so absurd, and its so-called evidences so false, that it is difficult to see how an intelligent man can be deluded by it.

Your claim for your apostles is in direct contradiction of the Bible, which requires an apostle to be an eye witness of the fact that Christ rose from the dead. For this reason Christ appeared in person to Saul of Tarsus. The popes and all others claiming to be the successors of the apostles are known to be impostors by this fact.

Your quotation from the Book of Mormon to disprove polygamy is proof that you do not understand Joe Smithism. Since "the keys of this last kingdom and dispensation" were given to Joe to hold forever, of what value or authority can the Book of Mormon be? It is a dead letter. There is no authority except that exercised through Joe. All old covenants are repealed. Even the covenant of the gospel through Christ, the Christian covenant, is repealed. Therefore Mormonism is not Christian.

You ought to know that the first publications made by the "Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints" admitted that the revelation establishing polygamy was given through Joe Smith, the prophet, and that Smith was killed as a punishment for being deceived by a lying spirit.

You ought to know that the Inspired Translation of the Bible, made by Joe Smith, has been changed in important statements, by later hands, both in the Josephite and in the Utah editions. Proof that it is not of God

Mormons have too many Bibles, too many covenants and dispensations—too much to defend and uphold. If they will throw overboard Joe Smith and his imaginary gods they will find enough in the gospel of Christ to preach, and save themselves from infinite trouble.

Respectfully,

W. B. F. TREAT.

WHEELING, W. Va., Oct. 10, 1901. REV. W. B. F. TREAT, Indianopolis, Ind.

Dear Sir:-Your communication of the 9th inst. received. Evidently your stock of argument (or anything bearing the least semblance to it) is exhausted. You entirely ignore the proof I gave you of the true position of the church I represent, and like many another person who arrays himself against the truth, when driven to the wall for lack of proof to support the position you have taken, you adopt the methods of the infidel and with one broad assertion, that it is all delusion, try to get a bad job off your hands. The voice of God through his servant ages ago was: "Come now and let us reason together." (Isa. 1: 18.) But it would seem from your letters that you have been so busy trying to overthrow Mormonism, that you do not read much in the Bible, but occupy your time in reading the unreliable productions of some unscrupulous persons who have sought to make money and gain notoriety in writing so-called exposures of Mormonism. Let us examine your attempt to dispose of this matter as you have in your last letter. Suppose what you are pleased to term "Joe Smithism" (a very ungentlemanly and discourteous term for a professed minister of Christ to use) were on trial before a civil court. You appear as a witness against it. You are asked what proof you have that this doctrine or religious system is a fraud, and you answer: "That its whole system is so absurd, and its so-called evidences so false that it is difficult to see how an intelligent man can be deluded by it." Would you expect an intelligent jury or a just judge to render you a verdict on such evidence? Where is your proof? You claim the Bible alone is sufficient as a standard of evidence, but you do not use it. If you have the truth, the pure gospel, unadulterated, you have nothing to fear. Allow me to suggest to you that if you pattern more after the doctrine of Christ, you will have no occasion for such mud-slinging and evil speaking as you have resorted to. However, there is a precedent recorded in the New Testament that perhaps you are following. The Pharisees, not able to overthrow the doctrine of Christ, accused him of being possessed of the devil. There are some modern Pharisees just as much opposed to Christ; and they are using the same methods to oppose him as did those of ancient times. Please inform me what chapter and verse of the Bible my claim for apostles contradicts. And also where it is stated that no one who was not an eye witness of Christ's resurrection is excluded from becoming an apostle. Also kindly tell me, if Christ could appear unto Saul of Tarsus after his resurrection, just to qualify him to be an apostle, what would hinder him from appearing unto other men later on for the same purpose? Did he just lack one witness of having the required number and appeared unto Saul for the purpose of completing the quorum? Excuse me for being so inquisitive; but how or in what sense did Paul become an eye witness? When on his way to Damascus he was struck blind, so that he could see nothing for three days. He could testify to the great power manifest, and to what he heard; but where in his writings does he say he was an eve witness? I asked you some time ago if Judas was an eye witness of Christ's resurrection; but like many other inquiries it remains unanswered.

And so you have concluded the Book of Mormon is a dead letter. I suppose then you will no longer attack it. Too much truth in it for you, eh? When I proved by it that Latter Day Saints could not be polygamists, then you assert that it is a dead letter to us. There are many people who are fighting it who do not know this. You should inform them, and save them time and trouble.

You seem to be very much troubled about some passages in Doctrine and Covenants relative to the keys of the kingdom and the priesthood. But you have them jumbled together in such shape that it is hard to tell just what you refer too. The most prominent idea you express is that as the keys of the kingdom were committed to Joseph Smith, the church is bound to his words regardless of what anyone else inspired of God may have written. You are entirely wrong in your premise, and also in your conclusion. But suppose we admit for argument sake your position to be tenable. Let us see what we will have. Let us see whether that will help you fasten polygamy on the church, the one thing which you are so anxious to do. Doctrine and Covenants 42:7: "Thou shalt love thy wife [it does not say wives] with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else: and he that looketh upon a woman, to lust after her, shall deny the faith and shall not have the spirit." Now according to your claim that is the only thing that the church is bound to respect on the marriage question. Is there anything unscriptural in it? In section 42:5 is something more that will help us to see what the faith of the Saints is. "And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel." Now this came to the church through the same individual that you claim the church must follow. This instead of abrogating any principle of the gospel, makes it obligatory upon them to teach them all, as recorded in the Bible and Book of Mormon. I quoted you the teaching of the Book of Mormon on the marriage question, and you replied that it was no authority, because "There is no authority except that exercised through Joe." Now I show you by your own logic that through the command to the church, that teaching is binding upon, and accepted by the church, and it leaves no possible room for polygamy. You mention several things which you say I ought to know. But of one thing I am sure, that if I cannot find some one to give me more proof of them than you are doing I will never know them. That I "ought to know the first publications made by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints admitted that the revelation establishing polygamy was given through Joe Smith," exists only in your vain imagination. Whether you have willfully stated an untruth, or whether you believe it to be true, I will not say. But one thing is certain, there is no true foundation existing to justify any one making such a statement. Why do you not name the publication and give date and place of publishing? That would be proof. You advise Mormons to throw overboard Joseph Smith and his imaginary gods and find enough in the gospel of Christ to preach. You would do well to heed the latter part, and study the gospel of Christ and find in it the perfect plan of salvation. Had you been clinging to that you would never have written the abusive tirades against the Latter Day Saints you have, and which were solely responsible for this correspondence. As an individual I bear you no unkind feeling; but as a professed minister of Christ you will admit the truthfulness of the scripture, "As ye sow so shall ye also reap." You publicly and privately did all you could to injure the Church of Jesus Christ, and when shown the truth, you then reject it by saying it is all false and absurd. However, I am pleased to know that you can bring no argument or proof to bear against the truth that we have, but must content yourself with speaking evil of the work and of the ones who have been instrumental in establishing the gospel in its fullness in this age of the world in fulfillment of Revelation 14:6 Query: If that prophecy of John has not been fulfilled, to what does it refer?

Where do you learn that the Inspired Translation of the Bible has been changed since its publication, by the Reorganized Church? Name some of the important changes, please. It was first published by the Reorganized Church in 1867. Did you ever know of the Utah Church publishing the Inspired Translation? Joseph Smith's widow had the original manuscript from the time of Joseph's death, until it was delivered to the committee of the Reorganized Church for publication in 1866. It is really too bad that you are worried so over us having so much to defend. Now why not be frank, and admit that it is not because we have so much to defend that gives you trouble, but because we have so much of the word of God with which to defend our faith. I feel sorry for people who will hold on to a few fragments of the word of God and then try, in order to bolster that up as the gospel, to overthrow the faith that accepts all of God's revealed truth. But you have your free agency, and as you have been the aggressor in this case it must be to your liking. If you have any proof from the word of God to sustain your faith or overthrow mine, bring it forth and I will carefully consider it. But mere bluster and assertion, coupled with bitter tirades, carry no weight whatever. Paul was forgiven for persecuting the Saints, because he did it ignorantly. But I fear some modern persecutors who shut their eyes to the truth, and continue to persecute, may not fare so well.

Respectfully,

O. J. TARY.

Editors Herald:-Our conference passed off nicely, all feeling well repaid for the sacrifice they made in coming out. The Spirit of the Master was greatly enjoyed by those present, both by the speakers and the hearers. The Saints of Ross Grove were out en masse. I believe they are mostly alive to the work. The church building and its furnishings, together with the Sunday school supplies, reflect great credit on the Saints of that locality. Bro. Fannon, our worthy president, was in his place, and presided in his goodhumored way, meting out justice and equity to all. Bro. D. C. White, of the missionary force, was on hand, giving good instructions for all. Also Brn. Snively and Hutchings, who seemed to enjoy themselves hugely. We were royally entertained by all.

With an earnest desire for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

R. F. HILL.

FARNAM, Neb., Oct. 9.

Editors Herald:-We are still trying to keep the banner of truth floating in this portion of the vineyard. We cannot see how any Saint can get along without the HERALD. Sometimes when I am a little discouraged I pick up the HERALD, and every time I find something to cheer, just what the occasion requires. Then I thank the Giver of all good, from the depths of my heart, and the dear brethren and sisters whose letters are so cheering. Last Sunday I read to our Sunday school the poetry describing the departure of our missionaries for the islands. All present seemed pleased. May the Lord help those who are making such sacrifices for the cause of truth.

This is the scene of the Payne-Adams debate nearly three years ago. The prejudice which existed then is melting away; and while but few have accepted the angel's message, our position is pretty well understood. Bro. Payne is in the western part of his mission. I presume Bro. Prettyman is with him by this time. Bro. Payne prepared a wagon in which to travel, so they can take care of themselves when necessity compels, as it does sometimes. The wagon is just what has been needed in this country, as so many places can be reached that could not be if they traveled by rail. And they have become experts at getting over this rough country.

We read with much interest Bro. Caffall's experience in the sand hills. When convenient again we would be glad to see Bro. Caffall southeast of the sand hills.

Pray for us, you who know the worth of prayer.

Editors Herald:—We are made glad every week by the arrival of the HERALD, and it makes our hearts glad to read its contents. We are a long way from the branch out here, and we get hungry for some preaching; we are also glad to see God's ministers come this way, and we welcome them. We have several different denominations out here to contend against, and we have fought a long, hard battle; now they let us alone on the Joseph Smith question.

There is an Adventist out here, and we have had several rubs on the Sabbath question. It was pretty warm on both sides, until the last one, when it was about all one way. He declared the Catholics changed the Sabbath and tried to prove it by Daniel and Revelation, and so I asked him if Jesus did not break that day when he went into the cornfields and plucked the corn, and quoted the scripture where Jesus said he came not to do his own will but his Father's which is in heaven, and a great deal of other scripture. Then I got my HERALD of August 7, and began to read Bro. D. S. Crawley's writing about their Sabbath day, and he squirmed and twisted and tried to evade quite a bit of it, but, brethren, I held him right to the point. Then to get out of it he said that part of it was erroneous, and he wanted my paper; but I needed it, as I wanted to study up on the question more. But I told him I would send and get him a couple. He wanted one for himself and wanted to send one to their paper to have it answered, and then he would give me one of his papers. I would like to see their answer to it, and I want to see this grand and glorious work move on, that all the honest in heart may see the truth and accept the gospel in its fullness. May God bless all his people, that they may live aright and enjoy his Spirit, to help them out in their trials and temptations, is my prayer.

Yours in Christ,

J. L. SAWYER.

FILLMORE, Mo., Oct. 16.

Editor Herald:—October 4 and 5 the Nodaway district conference convened at the Pleasant Hope church in Holt county. The attendance was fair, the meetings were spiritual, and the business all passed off in the best of feeling. Bro. E. S. Fannon was chosen district president for the next twelve months.

After conference adjourned Bro. J. S. Snively began services at the Union church, some four or five miles northeast of Mound City. The people at this point seem to be gospel proof. An earthquake might wake them up.

On October 7 D. A. Hutchings and I went eight miles southwest of Mound City, on the Missouri river bottom, to a little town called Fortescue; there we obtained the use of a new hall. Doctor Isaac Minton is the owner of the hall, and he kindly offered us the use of it and lights furnished free of charge. We preached six sermons and had a good hearing from the first. We should have continued another week, but found it very difficult to get some place to stay at night. One night just at the close of the services a fearful rain storm came, and no one asked us home with them. We were left in the dark with our buggy and horse, and the rain just pouring down, and we were soon wet to the body. By and by we found a place to put our horse, but the man said he could not keep us, on account of extra company he had. We continued our search, through mud and water, the rain coming down in "sheets." Soon we came to a little box house-the plank put up and down. Here we aroused the folks and they kindly took us in. We were soon in bed to dry our clothes. I had quite an advantage over Bro. Hutchings; he weighs two hundred and sixty pounds, and I only one hundred and thirty, so you see he had more surface to dry. The man's name with whom we stopped is Jasper Williams. He would not charge us anything for our lodging and breakfast. We also shared the hospitalities of Samuel Collins and Ben Gilbreth; both of their ladies are very favorable to the gospel. Fortescue has lots of spirit in it, but most of it is corked up. Anybody wanting to find the town, after leaving Mound City, just look for empty whisky bottles along the roadside, and if you see them you are on the right road.

On the morning of October 14 we returned to Bro. Ross's; there we found Bro. Snively pounding away on some of the "hardheads" at the Union church. He wanted me to try my hand, so I did. It is hard to convert a man who thinks he knows it all and has enough.

On the 15th inst. we left Ross's; are now in Andrew county, near Fillmore. Bro. and Sr. W. G. Bronson live here. They have secured the use of the Baptist church, in which we commence meetings this evening and continue up to the 26th if we have a good hearing. Brn. Snively and Hutchings will occupy here, and Bro. W. T. Ross and myself are to commence tomorrow night at the Fairview schoolhouse, two and one half miles northeast of Barnard, and we expect to continue two weeks.

We have enough openings for preaching now to keep us busy up to Christmas. I am glad to say that all the missionaries in this district are cheerful and at the post of duty. It is our duty to sow the seed with liberal hands, and leave the rest to a kind and loving Father.

This work is of God, if there are but few who obey it.

Yours in the faith, D. C. WHITE.

LITTLE COOLEY, Pa., Oct. 16.

Editors Herald:—I have been preaching in schoolhouses as best I could, and from house to house. I have a new field to work in; no Saints nor elders here. I am alone, and not alone either, for I feel that my Employer is with me. They have named me the cowboy preacher; they say I preach so plainly. One day a Baptist preacher came to me and said he never heard baptism preached so plainly before. I had taught that our Savior said a man must be born of water and of the Spirit.

and that after the baptism of water we have the promise of the Spirit, and we know the Spirit by the manifestation thereof. The Holy Ghost is the testimony of Jesus, and that is the Spirit of prophecy. So if we have the Holy Ghost we have the Spirit of prophecy.

We need more laborers in this part of the vineyard. I hope and pray the Lord will send forth more laborers to this place.

I am trying to teach the people the principles of the gospel and to show them the necessity of becoming sons and daughters of God; that the whole family in heaven and in earth is named after Jesus Christ, and that we must be born into that family or we cannot have an inheritance in the new heaven and new earth.

I am trying to so conduct myself that I may be worthy of the name I bear and the confidence of the church.

Yours in bonds,

EZRA W. DEPUE.

Editors Saints' Herald:—After about three weeks of excessive labor physically under the title of "moving and getting settled," I found myself illy prepared, compared with previous years, for the special work of the "organizations for good" at the Dow City reunion, but I felt that, under the circumstances, I had done the best I could.

On the 21st ult. I journeyed to Dow City to commit the preparation I had made to the execution of others, and then hie away to Glenwood where the Fremont district tent had been raised, to which place I came on the 25th ult., beginning meetings that eve, continuing till the 15th inst. each night, save one, when rain prevented service. Was assisted by Bro. Charles Fry in all these services until the 13th inst., when the tent was taken down and stored for the winter, after which for two nights I held meetings in the little church at Glenwood, being assisted by the local brethren, who also rendered assistance during all the services held. Bro. H. Kemp, who assisted in a few of the introductory services, took his departure for Shenandoah and other points to cheer and instruct the Saints.

On the 13th Bro. Fry baptized four, who though young in life, manifested a living faith by expressing an urgent desire to be buried with Christ by baptism, for the reason as expressed by one that "Jesus wants me to," and for the purpose as expressed, that "I may do good." While some of the evenings were quite cold ere we enjoyed the presence and warmth of a stove in the tent. vet the attendance was quite good, averaging forty or more. Several were left fully convinced that the gospel taught was true, but for personal or social reasons could not get the consent of their minds that "now is the day of salvation," but deferred their duty to what they looked forward to as "a more convenient time." I feel well satisfied with the results of our meetings at this place, and the Saints showed by their heartfelt expressions and liberality how much they had appreciated the services. They feel anxious that the tent may be used there again another year.

Came to the "hill country of Tabor," through the kindness of Bro. A. J. Davison, on last Wednesday, since which time I have been occupying nightly with increasing audiences. While I have felt physically ailing since coming here most of the time, yet I have been spiritually aided and greatly blessed.

Enjoyed the privilege of taking birthday dinner with Grandma Hershey, October 5, when the record of her life showed that she was seventy-seven. She and her companion, who is now past eighty-one, both enjoy quite good health, and are very devoted in the service of God, so much so that during the three weeks services they attended every service held, walking about one quarter of a mile. It was inspiring to the missionaries to see them, on some very dark, cold, and cloudy nights come into the tent with their lantern to light their pathway, and a joyous expression upon the face to lighten others' pathway with whom they associated.

Again on the 17th inst. I enjoyed a birth-day dinner with Grandma Goode, when she passed the eighty-fourth annual milestone in life's journey. Her faith is firm and unwavering, and her mental faculties are yet bright, but her inability to enjoy physical strength deprives her of church and many social privileges, but she endures these with cheerfulness and uncomplainingly. How blessed are such examples! How they cheer up the depressed spirits! May I be permitted to retain such devotion and cheerfulness of spirit as long as God permits me to remain, that I may give to others what I have received from such as the above mentioned.

Editors Herald:—I am in Hardin county; have just closed meetings at this place with the best interest I ever had in Kentucky. The people are thoroughly awakened. This is a good opening and I have been heartily invited to come back again. Nearly all are of the Christian and Baptist persuasions. Kentucky is a hard field to work, but it seems that the Lord has greatly helped me and raised up friends to the work.

DEER LODGE, Mont., Oct. 12.

Editors Herald:—In the items from Beaver
City to the Descret Semi-Weekly News, of October 7, I notice the following:

"Two missionaries from the Reorganized Church are here holding meetings and making an earnest effort to explain the tenability of the organization and doctrines of their church. The Latter Day Saint meetinghouse has been placed at their disposal, and has been used by them for two nights this week, and more meetings are to follow. But the proselyters are sadly handicapped as the history of their church is pretty well known here. The house was full of attentive listeners each evening."

The two missionaries referred to above are Brn. Pender and Harris, who, it seems, have obtained permission to hold a series of meetings in the tabernacle at Beaver, perhaps the first ones of our missionaries thus favored. This is good; and we hope that ere long all the tabernacles of the Utah people will in like manner be opened to us.

Of their efforts there Bro. Harris has this to say in a letter of recent date: "There is talk of debate; they have decided to reply to us anyway. Several are leaning our way. . . . We are told this is the greatest awakening they ever had."

They, the Brighamites, wanted one of their elders to engage in debate with the "missionaries," but he refused to be "drawn into any such thing."

But the correspondent avers that the brethren are handicapped because the history of our church is so well known down there. I wonder who informed them. Strange that they should be so well informed about our history, and, usually, so ignorant concerning the history of their own organization.

Perhaps it may interest some to learn that an elder of the Utah church admitted to me last winter that he believed there was "priesthood" with the Reorganization. The first admission of the kind that I have ever heard of coming from that source. Likewise did one of the bishops of the church state to me lately that they recognized the Reorganization as a "factor for good." It seems, from those statements, that all do not agree with B. H. Roberts that the Reorganized Church is formed by the "confluence of two corrupt streams." Thus there are evidences. all along the line, that the people of the Utah Church look upon the Reorganization with more favor than formerly.

Well, the church in the mountains is once more without a presidency, President Snow having died a few days ago. I say, without a presidency, for it is the order among them, without any law to that effect, however, that when the president dies, his counselors fall back to the position held before their appointment as counselors. President Snow stated to the conference, on October 6, that the Lord had directed him to choose Rudger Clawson as his second counselor, and hoped the people would sustain him. President Snow had had but one counselor since the death of George Q. Cannon, but now he is directed to choose another; and, four days before Mr. Snow's death, Mr. Clawson is elevated to the presidency-just for four days, unless, indeed, the Lord should also direct the next president to choose him as counselor!

Presidents are not ordained in the Utah Church. The law in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 17; 104:11; 99:6, etc., has never been observed by them; they claim that an ordination to the Quorum of Twelve is sufficient, and simply install them by vote.

The death of President Snow will, perhaps, make at least one of the "living oracles" feel uncomfortable. Recently Apostle F. M. Lyman made this statement from the stand:

"President Snow is to live to see this pec-ple made free, and relieved of their embarrassments, financial and otherwise."—Deseret News, September 7, 1901.

As to who will be the next president, that is not a matter of speculation, for, if the utterances of some of the leading men of the church may be relied upon, that question has been settled long ago, and even the newspapers assert that Joseph F. Smith is to be Snow's successor.

Usually, with them the senior in office is made president of the Twelve; and the president of the Twelve succeeds to the presidency of the church. Joseph F. Smith has been out of the quorum for many years, having acted as counselor to John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, and the late President Snow. Brigham Young is the senior member of the Twelve, and George Q Cannon admitted in a speech, last year, that he was ordained before Joseph F. Smith, still, he has not been made president of the quorum; and the only reason for this, that I could ever hear of, was that he was not wanted for president of the church. Now, if the precedent established by the Utah church relative to the selection of presidents, was based upon the law of God, and if he directed in such selection, which the leaders claim he does, which one of the two persons named above would he be most likely to point out as the successor of President Snow?

Relative to this matter, Apostle Teasdale remarked, at the Bear Lake Stake conference, held at Paris, Idaho:

"And who was the presiding authority in the Twelve? The oldest ordained of the apostles. And who is he? Bro. Joseph F. Smith; but our beloved president wanted his services in the First Presidency, so that he is out of the quorum; but when the President dies, he will take his position as president of the Quorum of Apostles."

It will be observed that Cannon and Teasdale do not agree as to whether Young or Smith is the oldest ordained of the Apostles. Cannon says that Young was first ordained, but notice of Smith's ordination had been first served upon the people, and for that reason he must be considered the senior. Young, he says, had agreed to this arrangement. We also notice that, while Joseph F. Smith has been out of the quorum for many years, serving in the presidency, the position as president of the Twelve has been kept open—a kind of reserved seat—for Mr. Smith, I think, in order to prevent Mr. Young from becoming president of the church.

As to the embarrassments, out of which President Snow was to lead them, according to F. M. Lyman, perhaps the most serious one is that mentioned by Mr. Teasdale, in the same speech. He says:

"We have made two failures as a people... Another failure was when the Lord revealed unto us the law of celestial marriage. But a very small percentage of the people honored that law, and the result was that our enemies came upon us and made it impossible for us to longer practice it, and we were deprived of the blessings of increased glories as a result of an obedience to that law."—Montpelier Examiner, as copied from the Paris Post, a Mormon newspaper.

Surely, the Mormon people of Utah have been left in a very embarrassing condition on account of polygamy; but is it not possible that the situation would have been still more embarrassing had the majority of the people accepted that doctrine?

The late conference, at Salt Lake City, had some interesting features, a consideration of which might interest the HERALD readers. Straws will show which way the wind blows; and it is evident to my mind, that there will be turning and overturning, in rapid succession, until deceived Israel in the mountains is made free.

"LITTLE BROWN BESS."

Little Brown Bess on her milk-white mare Rides all day long in the fresh, spring air; Rides fast and free, with never a care, Does little Brown Bess.

She dashes by at break of day,
A flash of black hair, then of gray;
A smile thrown back—not a moment to stay
Has little Brown Bess.

A child's small hand guides the milk-white steed.

Of bridle and saddle there is no need, While over the prairie with fearful speed-Goes little Brown Bess.

The little maid has no thought of fear,
Though only this great, white horse be near,
For a human friend there are none more dear
To little Brown Bess.

Many years ago, one wintry night, In the midst of a terrible Indian fight, To the fort in a wild and dangerous flight Came little Brown Bess.

She was bound to the back of the faithful mare

Which had flown like the wind—not a second to spare!

Then dropped at our feet with her burden rare—

Our little Brown Bess.

GOVERNMENT ESTIMATE OF THE CORN CROP.

The Agricultural Department at Washington has just issued its estimate of the year's corn crop, showing a total yield for all the states of 1,250,597,000 bushels. Of this the statement shows that Nebraska, notwithstanding the dry weather which prevailed during July, will furnish 103 367,000 bushels, or more than one-tenth of the entire crop. This is interesting as showing the wonderful recuperative properties of the Nebraska soil. There is probably no other state in the Union which would, under the circumstances, make such a magnificent showing. Nebraska is a grand state and is rapidly increasing in wealth and population.

BOOK NOTICE.

We are pleased to be able to announce that the book, "Fireside Talks With Our Girls," published under the auspices of the Daughters of Zion, is now on sale at the HERALD Office. Price: Limp cloth, 35c.; paper, 25c., postage prepaid.

This book has been carefully prepared with the view of meeting a want which has long been known to exist, and mothers who have felt their inability to talk freely with their daughters in reference to matters which so closely affect the life, happiness, and usefulness of those who are so dear to them, will find in this little volume an invaluable help.

It has been submitted to the critical examination of the First Presidency of the church and has received their unqualified indorsement as well as the added expression from them that "it meets the need which existed for its preparation." These men are the fathers of young girls, and this of itself, to say nothing of their position in the church, ought to have weight with every father and mother who has charge of young girls, for is there an honorable father in the land, be he Christian or Infidel, who would willingly or even patiently see the purity of his daughter contaminated by improper association or counsel from the pen of any one? We think not.

We trust that the mothers of our church will order this little book promptly in order that the society may be encouraged to publish others. The price has been put as low as possible under the circumstances.

WE WILL FOLLOW NONE BUT JESUS.

"We'll follow none but Jesus,"
You love to sit and sing,
But if you follow Jesus,
A sickle sharp you'll bring.
You'll reap at early morning,
Nor tarry mid the day;
When evening shades have gathered,
Kneel on the mount to pray.

"Thrust in thy sharpened sickle;"
Why will ye idle stand?
The golden grain is waving,
Full ripe on every hand.
But if you have no sickle
To mow the golden wheat,
Then gather up the bundles,
That're falling at your feet.

That sheaf has long been lying Beneath the rain and sun; 'Tis waiting to be lifted, And you're the very one, So bend your back, my brother, And bear it in your arms Safe to the sheltering cover, Away from sun and storms.

No grain should lie there wasting
In this great harvest day,
So gather up the bundles
That're lying on your way.
Then you will follow Jesus
Who died your soul to win,
And wear a crown of glory,
Redeemed from earthly sin.

THE BEST DAY.

How pleasant it would be if everywhere the Lord's day were welcomed with songs and shouts. We know a household in which the Sunday is hardly over before the little ones begin to inquire, "Mamma, when will it be Sunday again?" To these children Sunday is the "red-letter" day of the week, looked forward to and backward to on every other day. And this because on Sunday they have their father at home all day. This wise father makes Sunday the children's day. He dismisses his business cares, gathers his children close about him, listens to their histories of the week, reads to them, or talks to them, or walks with them. He is making beautiful day.

This should be the day of days in every household. Six days must the bread and butter be earned and the bread and butter be prepared, the raiment taken thought of and the raiment stitched. Six days must the fathers and sons and daughters and little children go abroad to their work and their lessons. But then comes the seventh day, the beautiful Sunday, in which business may be set aside, the lessons dismissed, husbands and wives, parents and children, brothers and sisters reunited. Let this day be consecrated to all that is highest and best in our natures, to thanksgiving and aspiration, and to the development in the home of those spiritual graces which make our homes heavenly places. Wise parents will make the day so bright and sweet with their joy in their children, their sympathetic conversation, their choice books, their songs, and their bits of poetry, that those who come to the hearthstone weary or discouraged will be renewed and cheered for the work of the coming week, and all will bear in their hearts a bright memory to shine on them in all cloudy weather. - Margaret Sangster, in Home Life Made Beautiful.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

We have just finished reading the Book of Mormon, and we wish to speak of its merits to others, but we feel unworthy and incapable of expressing the greatness of its worth. And we would ask, Is there one who fully realizes its worth and appreciates the same? If there is, O how glad we would be to converse with such a one.

O, how wonderful, how grand, how stupendous are the gospel truths revealed on its pages! 3 Who is there that has a sound mind and an honest heart, and is willing to lay aside prejudice, and ask God for guidance of his Holy Spirit, that can shut his eyes and close his heart to its blessed and glorious instruction? Many parts of it, and especially where the Son of God spoke to the people, it seems as though Jehovah himself is speaking direct to the reader, and how sweet, how precious are the words, how encouraging, how uplifting to the hungering, thirsting soul.

Many portions are so sublime, so pure and so direct from the Father and the Son, every humble, contrite heart will be affected by the same Spirit by which the book was written—or we believe so. Many can testify to the fact that thus they have been filled with awe and reverence, and felt like prostrating themselves at his feet and crying, Abba, Father, O cleanse me, too, from all sin, that I may be filled with thy wondrous love and power, as have many of thy purified children, even those of other climes and other ages!

We have read the book through four times, and each time it grows more plain and more precious-so like the word of God, and so like the works of God. If one examines a work of art by the aid of a magnifying glass, the imperfections are more plainly seen, but if a work of nature is examined, the perfections are shown more plainly. In both cases the greatness of the view depends on the strength of the glass. Just so it is when a work of man and a work of God in literary form is brought before the gaze of mortal and read by the aid of his Holy Spirit. For illustration we will take Rev. Solomon Spalding's story and the Book of Mormon. There can be no better illustration, and only one more that can come quite up to it, and that is the poorest dime novel ever written, and the Bible. Do not understand that we would speak disrespectfully of the Bible;

We do not doubt the claims of the Book of Mormon in any respect. We believe it is God's work, and he chose whom he would to deliver it to the children of men, and all who reject its teachings will shut off great spiritual blessings that might be theirs. How can one doubt it when there are so many witnesses of the facts in the case? Many witnesses gave their testimony to the same, and some of them on their dying bed, and later, old mother earth by the aid of man has disclosed heaps upon heaps of testimonies, each proving the truthfulness of the book. Again, every one who peruses its pages with faith and a prayerful heart has a witness in his own soul that it is God's work; that in each revelation there is made a new revelation to the student. His mind grasps the beautiful ideas, his soul is filled with joy and gladness, and his heart expands with a new conception of the wonderful works of God and his justice and unbounded love to the children of men. Such is the result of the ingrafted word, and it matters not whether the scion is taken from the stick of Judah or the stick of Ephraim, for they are one, and to us inseparable.

In reading the book carefully, we noticed some ideas that we do not fully comprehend, so wish to ask through the columns of the HERALD for some one who does, to give us light on the subject, and we think it will be profitable to others too.

It seems as though the Jaredites occupied a large part of what now is the United States, and their last battles must have been fought on the soil of the State of New York. Ether speaks of his party having lost two millions, and the other party as many. Does it mean exactly that number, or is it used to express a large number as we sometimes say a thousand or a hundred times as many, wishing to express greatness.

Again: During the last century of the Nephites they had almost continual wars and were cut down by thousands and tens of thousands, till they were blotted out. It is astonishing how so many were born and raised in so short periods of time, and then were cut down to enrich the earth.

We read in the Book of Nephi 5:64-66, words of Jesus exactly as given in the King James Translation, also in 79th verse, same chapter: "And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," agreeing with the same translation. We believe the Book of Mormon was translated by the gift and power of God, and that the Inspired Translation is a revision of King James', by the same power. Please tell us why they do not agree on those points as well as on all others.

Same chapter, 31st verse, we read that twelve were chosen by Jesus and authorized to preach and baptize, Nephi being the first. We would like to know who baptized him, also John the Baptist, and later Joseph the Prophet. They could not fulfill all right-ousness without having that ordinance administered, if Jesus could not.

If I err in asking these questions, I beg pardon, but would like to know.

QUITE ANOTHER THING.

"Are you a Christian?"

"No. What use have I for your vaunted goodness. There's Brother Smith! He is a pretty specimen; and Deacon Jones. O, don't talk to me! Two very consistent men, indeed! Why, I can't help knowing I'm as good as either of them any day!"

"Did it ever occur to you that in condemning them you are condemning yourself?"

"I'd like to know how you make that out. I do not make any profession, and never have."

"Then am I to understand that this is your position? That because these men are trying for the mark and doing it poorly they are inconsistent? and because you are not trying and never have been you are all right? Ah, my friend! To sit in a pleasant room among one's friends and discuss the inconsistencies of Christians is one thing, to go out into the thick of the fight and live a Christian life is quite another." # SOWING THE FIRST SEEDS OF INTEMPERANCE.

The depths of that dreadful vice, which has destroyed the homes and wrecked the happiness of many, is not reached by a single bound. The young man who starts out in life with hope and ambition before him, when he takes the first glass with a friend, does not mean to become a drunkard. When he spends his evenings at the club, indulging in a friendly game of cards and the social glass of wine, does not realize that it is only one step farther on the road to ruin. The parents who place the enticing beverage upon the table for their children to partake of do not comprehend the great danger in which they are placing their little ones' future. They do not know they are sowing the first seeds of intemperance.

Let me paint to you

of the beautiful Niagara as it winds its course through the hills and valleys, a sparkling, silver stream, where it seems no harm can linger. See a young man launch his boat, and idly drift along with the current. How delightful it is! How the soft breeze fans his cheek as he lifts his eyes to the bright blue heavens above him, and gazes with fond anticipation upon the scene before him. But he is not alone; a group of comrades joins him, and their merry song is borne across the waters. On they float 'neath the golden rays of the sun, with no thought of aught but idle pleasure. But in their idleness they think not where they are drifting.

See! now they have drifted until they are in a rapid, flowing current. A call from the shore is heard, "Young men, beware of the falls!" A merry shout or a careless answer is all the response. Again they indulge in their gayety, and, little realizing their danger, drift carelessly on.

A second call is heard, warning them of their danger.

BEWARE OF THE FALLS!

Some are seen to turn back, and only by a hard struggle can they again reach safety. The others float idly on, not heeding the warning. On, on; over the falls to death.

How many a young man with LIFE'S PROMISES BEFORE HIM steps out on the river of intemperance. They begin with the social glass with a group of friends. From this they frequent the saloons, indulging in the poisonous beverage until it becomes a habit whose chains are hard to break.

The warning is given by the temperance cause, or by some loved one, a mother, or perhaps, a sister. But with a careless remark or an evading answer they pursue their downward course. Young man, beware of the fall; for when you become caught by the swiftly flowing current of this terrible vice, the fall is certain.

On, on his downward course he goes, caring not for the warning voice he hears, heeding not the entreaties of friends or loved ones. He is seen staggering along on his homeward way, perhaps to meet a heartbroken wife or a sorrow-burdened mother. He hears her sobs and pleadings, but his heart is hardened now, and he heeds them not—his soul is caught in the whirlpool of vice and wickedness.

The swiftly flowing current is nearing the fall. The end must come, and the fall is not only the death of the body which fills a drunkard's grave; but the soul must go before its God to be judged according to his works.

SCHEME TO INTEREST INTERMEDIATE SCHOLARS.

I have been thinking lately that I would write of a few ways I have used in my Sunday school work with intermediate scholars. I had been trying to think of something new, as I find that one must keep getting something new for the children. Newness always has a charm for young folks. I kept thinking and praying over the matter for I believe if the teachers will "only pray for the Lord's guidance, we will be able to surmount many difficulties.

One day in our language work at school we had a lesson in written work where the children had to fill in the blanks with suitable words. The thought came to me, why not use something of this kind in your Sunday school work. I acted accordingly, and the next Sunday told the children that I wanted them to write a story for me. I had them take some person, as Joseph, and write all they could about him, but not use his name, and then the rest were to guess, if they could, the subject of the story. I appointed four to do the work for the next Sunday. It was surprising how well they did, and they had some that we all had to get our thinking caps on before we could tell the name. They all enjoyed it, and I believe it will help them to remember the persons we have studied about better. Sometimes when I knew just about where we would find about the one they had described I let them look it up in their Bibles, and in this way I hope to get them better acquainted with the Bible. I was glad to notice that some of them were so careful in selecting the chief events of the lives of those they chose for their story.

I have tried having them learn verses. I commenced with a and took that for my verse and gave a letter to each one and had them get a verse that commenced with that letter and tell where it is.

I think that with children we must continually try to change, but we will have to be careful that in getting something new it will be instructive as well as something novel and interesting. Get the children sometimes to help think of something different. A child takes more interest in what he himself helps to do. In our work if we can get the children to feel that we are in sympathy with them and their work we will have gained half the battle. If we do not do this I believe our work will be a failure.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH returned to his home, accompanied by his wife and boys, on Friday, October 18, after an absence beginning on July 9, broken only by a short visit from noon the 15th to noon the 19th of September, when he delivered the address at the memorial services held at the burial of President McKinley. He reports a successful trip.

JUDGE HENRY J. HUDSON, of Columbus, Nebraska, is again to run for Police Justice, although about eighty years of age. He still possesses his faculties in good repair. May he live to be an old man yet.

IS IT INTOLERANCE?

From a note and clipping out of the North American, of Philadelphia, for Sunday, October 20, we learn that "America's Council of Women," are striving to stir up a great row over what the women composing the council are pleased to call the "Dire possi-bilities" of "Mormonism."

The article in the North American opens in the following lucid manner:

The dark clouds of Mormonism from the storm center Utah are spreading, insidiously, stealthily, in ever-widening circles over the land. The Mormon peril is creeping eastward, northward, southward, westward.

Then follows a stirring statement of what it is supposed the Mormons are striving to accomplish, and an appeal for the crushing out of the sect.

The following are said to be utterances of Mrs. Annie McKean White. who is lecturing in the East in the interest of this war against the Mor-

"Lot Christian America remain inactive for a few years longer," she says, "and we shall be bound hand and foot in the power of the iniquitous Mormon hierarchy.

"Our own state of Pennsylvania is overrun ith their missionaries. There are in the with their missionaries. eastern portion of the state alone over twenty preachers of their damnable doctrine working among the poor, the ignorant and the ill-advised foreign population.

"People do not realize the nearness of a new civil war. Granted apathy and indifference on the part of our Christian population, and in three years the mask of monogamy will be thrown off and the Mormon hierarchy will repeat the dark deeds of thirty and forty years ago. Then will our men, and our women, too, have to carry the fight to the field for the sacredness of their homes and the chastity of their people.

"The systematic, the persistent manner, the almost fiendish exactitude with which the Mormons are carrying out their schemes of conversion and colonization show the scope of their plans to seize this country.

"We, the men and women of Christian America, are standing by. They are working in the night and in the dark places spreading their evil faith. Last year they threw a colony of 30,000 Mormons into Wyoming. For years they have been buying up the best tracts of land in the states adjoining Utah and colonizing them with converts. And what is Christian America doing to offset this?"

The foregoing are typical statements used in the so-called Christian campaign against the religionists of Utah conducted by this America's Council of Women.

Some part of this talk is brutally sensational, and carries a strong aroma of proscription and violence with it. What other construction can be put upon the language:

"Then will our men, and our women, too, have to carry the fight to the field for the sacredness of their homes and the chastity of their people."

The "chastity of the people" is not assailed by the principles of the gospel as given in the New Testament and the Book of Mormon, nor is any of the Council of Women in any danger of any sort, nor any of their kinor friends, from even Utah Mormonism, unless their consent is first obtained to the doctrines the elders teach, and after that become habituated to the inductive methods by which plural or polygamous marriage has been taught, and may possibly be now taught, though that admits of a doubt.

There are four elders from Utah at work in Philadelphia, under the direction of one Hans P. Ipsen. One of the force, an Elder Barnard, made the following statement, according to the article in the North American:

Oaly two and one half per cent of our people ever practiced polygamy, and those were our best Mormons. They did it to protect our maidens, and to keep pure our life. In all Utah the social conditions could not have been improved upon until the Gentiles came. Now there are low women, there are saloons, there are iniquities, but they came with the non-Mormons.

It may be that it is true that "only two and one half per cent" of the Mormon people of Utah "practiced polygamy," as from the nearly equal number of the sexes in Utah, as elsewhere, it would be impossible for all the men to have two, or more wives; hence only the favored few could practice it. But, if the other statement of Elder Barnard is true, that polygamy was practiced "to protect the maidens and keep pure" their "life," referring to the life of the people, it is pertinent to inquire who they were against whom the maidens were being protected, and from what were they being protected; from whom were they in danger?

At the time polygamy was introduced and during all the time in which it flourished, the church people were in the sole rule and control of the domestic relation in the territory of Utah; the statutes enacted by the territorial legislature left all matters appertaining to the conditions of marriage under the rule of the church, and the conclusion seems to be almost inevitable that if their maidens were in danger and needed protection, this danger was from those of their own membership and not from those outside the pales of membership.

This statement of Elder Barnard throws something like suspicion upon the men, whether married or unmarried, who were not in the practice of plural marriage, as no other classes were there from whom the maidens were in danger.

We have not called the virtue of the women of the Utah church in question, no matter who says to the contrary, and seriously doubt the propriety of Elder Barnard's statement.

What is more astonishing in this affair, is the unchristianlike attitude of these American women seeking to incite acrimony, hatred, and violence as a way to overcome or suppress a religion which to them is abhorrent. The method pursued by them is the outcropping of the same spirit as actuated the crusade against the Piedmontese Christians, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, the burning of Servetus and John Knox, the persecution of the Quakers, the burning of the witches, and the murder of the martyrs Joseph and Hyrum and the expulsion from Missouri and Illinois; and shows evidence of what these people and their zeal-blinded adherents would do if it were in their

There is no sort of doubt but what the Presbyterian, M. E., or Christian Church, would be and are just as clannish, and would talk, act, and vote as a unit to accomplish their ends, as would any portion of the believers in what these churches are pleased to call "the Mormons." So, in like manner, and with equal promptness, would either of these churches exercise their privilege if they had the balance of power in any part of the country—the days of unreasoning bigotry are not all passed yet.

Why do not these anxious stirrers of strife meet the deluded people in the forum and show the people among whom the missionaries are at work what the terrible, awful, atrocious, deceptive doctrines, so threatening to the peace and safety of society in America, are? Instead of doing this, they refuse to meet them in discussion, but insist that the people shall take their statements of what the Mormons believe, without permitting them to present their own faith as they see it. What a wretched travesty on the freedom of religious belief in America, this raid of the American Women's Counsel is, to be sure.

We make no apology or defense of the dogma of polygamy; the practice of it is bad; it has no legitimate place in true Mormonism; never was and never can be a valid belief in the gospel economy, but we can see no good to come of such methods of warfare as the Women's Council proposes, and denounce the resort to proscription and unlawful violence, no matter whom they are used against. Let unlawful and evil things be dealt with in lawful ways, always and everywhere.

THE EDITOR ABROAD.

It was an easy stage across Iowa and Illinois from Omaha to Wirt, in Southern Indiana, in company with Bro. T. A. Hougas, the prevailing Sunday school superintendent, on October 10 and 11, with a sleep at Peoria, on the way, to avoid overweariness for work at the conference of the Southern Indiana district, which convened on Saturday, October 12 and 13, in the Saints' chapel near the village of Wirt.

At the convening of the session on the morning of the 11th, Brn. M. R. Scott, president of the district, and George A. Smith, missionary, were called to preside, and the work of the conference began, and was completed after the Sunday services of the 13th.

We found an excellent feeling existing in the district, the presidency of Bro. Scott over the district having been productive of good results. He was again chosen to preside at the selection of officers of the district. We are pleased with the outlook.

We met Brn. George Jenkins, W. C. Marshall, T. J. Bell, G. A. Smith, M. R. Scott, Jr., W. H. Kelley, of the working forces of the district, with several of the local brethren, all of whom gave evidence of love for the work.

Bro. Hougas was successful in organizing the district Sunday school association, and made a good impression upon the Saints present at the conference.

We were invited to visit several places in the district, and Louisville, Kentucky, but conditions were unfavorable for so doing.

We returned by the way of Chicago, meeting the family there, and reaching Lamoni on October 18, weary and glad to be at home.

Doubtless there may have been some correspondents neglected while the editor has been abroad, but we tried to keep up all that was of importance; if any have been aggrieved we will try and make amends.

THE following from a letter from Bro. A. H. Smith will be read with pleasure by the Saints:

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Oct. 5.
We arrived safe in port on the 2d inst., all well. Bro. J. W. Peterson came on board to greet us ere the ship lay alongside the dock. As soon as we could get on shore we were taken in carriages direct to the chapel, where the native Saints had arranged to receive us. At the chapel door we were met by a committee who escorted us into the chapel, where we found all the Saints arranged, a part on either side, leaving a broad aisle up which we were led. As soon as we stepped inside the porch, the Saints broke forth in singing a song of greeting. We were led to seats near the pulpit. After the first song was a prayer, another song, then a speech of welcome, to which I briefly responded, Bro. Burton interpreter. Then each in turn spoke briefly except Leon, then another song and prayer, and then a general hand-shake, then another song and benediction, then a general rejoicing, and we were made welcome.

I confess I was surprised, and made to feel that the Spirit was with this people, in our reception. The Saints seem anxious to do anything they can for us. Their singing is excellent in its execution, and I must say they can give our folks at home pointers, and beat them as to time, and the harmonious blending of their voices; their voices are harsh as a rule, however. Yesterday we went up to Ziona, and were received there, Bro. Metuaore presiding. Here again the same rule and ceremony were gone through with. Then we received some nice presents: Hats, a small gift of coin, and I received some nice shells; after which we had a feast or dinner. Our folks had failed to take along knives and spoons, and there were only two or three forks, for the entire company, but we got on very well indeed. When one is hungry, fingers are very useful to assist in feeding. We had a very enjoyable day.

I am more than ever struck with the intelligence of this people as a rule. Their men are intelligent fellows. Kind and loving, they have been cruelly imposed upon by the whites who have no principles but those of self-gratification. Of course I have not been among them long enough to give a more extended opinion. We sail on our trip to visit the other islands on Tuesday next. Will probably not return here till in December. I cannot give you names of those we have met simply because I cannot remember nor spell them. We will have to report later when we know more of the condition of the work.

Bro. J. W. Peterson looks poorly; is very thin, but seems well generally. Lillie is in the hospital; was sick and had to have an operation, but John reports her as getting along nicely. I am well; better than when I left San Francisco.

PRESIDENCY OF THE UTAH CHURCH REORGANIZED.

By the Descret News of October 17, 1901, we are advised that on the same date there occurred, in the Temple in Salt Lake City, a reorganization of the First Presidency of the Utah church. The official announcement of such reorganization is given below:

To the officers and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints:

Woodruff, Rudger Clawson and Reed Smoot; also Patriarch John Smith, the following business was unanimously transacted:

Joseph F. Smith was chosen and set apart as President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. And John R. Winder was sustained and set apart as First, and Anthon H. Lund was sustained and set apart as Second Counselor in the First Presidency of the Church.

President Joseph F. Smith was then sustained as Trustee-in-Trust for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

President Joseph F. Smith was also sustained as President of the Salt Lake Temple, with John R. Winder as his assistant.

Elder Brigham Young was sustained and set apart as President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles.

And it was decided to hold a special general conference of the Church for the purpose of voting upon these several actions, said conference to be held in Salt Lake City, on Sunday, the 10th of November, next. GEORGE F. GIBBS, Secretary.

To the Officers and Members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints:

Dear Brethren and Sisters—Agreeable with the decision of the Council of Apostles at their regular meeting today, as set forth in the above official announcement, we hereby call a general conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to be held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, on Sunday, the 10th of November, next, at ten o'clock a. m, for the purpose of voting on the above proceedings.

JOSEPH F. SMITH, JOHN R. WINDER, ANTHON H. LUND, First Presidency.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Sr. Minnie E. Bassinger, 306 Green street, Danville, Illinois, writes that Bro. Bassinger and herself are the only Saints living there. They would be glad of a call from elders or Saints passing that way.

By letter from Bro. William Coffman, Mondamin, Iowa, we learn that the interest at Sandy Point, where the editor assisted in dedicating the little chapel, October 6, is still excellent. Bro. W. A. Smith had baptized one, a very influential man by the name of William Motz, and was still preaching there. Bro. H. N. Hansen had also been with them and aided in the work.

Letter from Bro. A. H. Smith, in this issue, will be good reading, so far as the reception of himself and party at Papeete goes. We regret the illness of Sr. Peterson. Trust it will be temporary only.

By letter from Bro. W. E. La Rue, dated at Philadelphia, we learn that the Saints there are building a church edifice which will be ready to dedicate before long. Good work for the Philadelphia Saints. May God prosper them.

An arrangement for debate Montevallo, Missouri, in the M. E. church, has been entered into between a minister of the Christian Church and Bro. F. C. Warnky, to begin December 23, 1901.

By the Galien, Michigan, Advocate for October 18, we learn that Bishop E. A. Blakeslee's store at Galien was burned the morning of the 14th, to the financial damage of Bro. Blakeslee of some $15,000, partly covered by insurance. The fire was the work of an incendiary, and resulted in the loss of four other business houses beside the store of Bro. Blakeslee.

SERMON IN MEMORIAM OF PRESI-DENT M'KINLEY.

BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, September 19, 1901. Reported for the HERALD by Sr. Annie Allen.

I recognize this occasion as an unfortunate one for all of us, unfortunate for me, and yet I ought to exercise a species of thankfulness that it has been thought fit to present me for this occasion to represent the people of this vicinity upon the occasion of the death of President Mc-

I was selected in 1865 to preach the memorial service of President Lincoln in the town of Plano, Illinois, and at the death of President Garfield I was one of four who were selected by the citizens to represent the people of the town upon that occasion.

I am thankful that I have lived long enough to represent a portion of the American people in a service of commemoration of President McKinley. I do not know that I shall be able to close the service, but so far as it is possible for me to conceal my emotion, I shall do so. I realize the thought that we have no language sufficiently strong, sufficiently expressive to give voice to the sentiments of the American people upon the fact that with all our boasted liberty, with all our recognized forms of law, the life of one whom we might choose to represent us in the White House is not safe, and for similar reasons the lives of all leaders in the community are subject to like injury. We do not know who may be safe from the assassin's attack in all this wide land of ours. A land in which we prided ourselves with the thought that the circles of kingly court had no place, the one on which the persons of royalty had no claim, the one in which the people are sovereign and all the rulers are chosen by the voice of the people.

It is a sad comment upon the esteem that is placed upon this priceless boon of liberty by those who reached forth their hands and in their blind frenzy undertook to correct what they took to be erroneous in the government for which those rulers chosen by us are by them made responsible. Those unfortunate, misguided men undertook, in an unfortunate direction, to remedy what they recognized as wrong but which they had no means of rectifying within themselves.

Abraham Lincoln was a man of the people, raised from the people, reaching the highest point of renown that was within the gift of a mighty people, and perished at the height of his human glory, a fitting close for so eminent a life as he had lived. He made use of no part of his power to oppress the people or to enrich himself, but in true humility as an honorable citizen chosen for the time being to represent the principles of American jurisprudence, as an executive he lived an humble and honorable life. I can say now, and have always felt, that no man could perish. or lay down the weapons of his earthly warfare upon any more striking and honorable occasion, or receive any more honor at any time during the period of his existence than was accorded Abraham Lincoln. He died at the height of human renown; there was not left a single round in the ladder of fame for him to climb; there was not left for him a single aspiration for honor that the people had not conferred upon him. It was a glorious death. It was inflicted upon him from an evil motive, by one in sympathy with an unfortunate cause, by a misguided man who sought to wreak his vengeance upon the people by sacrificing his own individual honor in the assassination of the representative of the people. It was the result of sectional hate that led to the death of President Lincoln, all that took place that led to that unfortunate war that began and ended so disastrously.

Scarcely two decades from that time another man chosen from among the people because of his manly qualities, because of the evidence he had given of statesmanship, was chosen by the American people to represent them as their executive head. He was stricken down by an individual through personal spite, representing no especial cause, from no especial reason for the accomplishment of so dark a deed, and yet President Garfield was a man of the people, chosen from among the people, and by the voice of the people to represent the people among the nations of the earth; and as the chief executive to carry on the affairs of the government in which you and I have our personal liberty.

I cannot mourn him so deeply as I did the loss of Lincoln, and yet it is sad to reflect that he too, having risen to the highest point of official excellency in this government, should have been stricken down ere yet the policies that he might have pursued had reached their height, and the nation was called to mourn him.

Twenty years after that, this day notes the anniversay of the death of President Garfield by an assassin's hand, an assembly meets to commemorate the death of President McKinley. Two decades of time have passed and you are now called upon again to mourn as a nation and as individuals, the death inflicted by an individual without just cause, without an adequate reason so far as it is possible for us to discern, by a man who undertook to rectify what he believed to be the wrongs of society, a mistaken effort that has caused the whole nation to be thrown into mourning, and in such a way that it makes an appeal to the personal heart of every member of this nation.

There is no family so humble but what today may put crape upon their doors; there is no city so grand in all this broad realm of eighty millions of people but what today may meet, and every man and every woman that may gather at their places of worship may honestly put up a mournful petition and expression of grief for one taken out of the midst of men; a kindly man, a man of the people, chosen by the people to represent them; a man who had given every evidence that is possible for a man to give from the time he first began to serve his fellow men until his last hour, that his only purpose was to do good to his fellow men, to discharge his duty so far as it was possible for him to conceive of, and without favor, without undue display of affection. Though he may have been chosen by party vote to serve, the entire nation honored him as the representative of its best interests. If this man who has been stricken by the hand of an assassin had shown a disposition to establish a kingly government, then you and I might have found some fault, and some of us may have been justified in striking such a man out of existence because of kingly rule in a government like ours. But no such thing as that occurred. Neither of these men aspired to such a course as that, but they came from the humbler walks of life and governed in the performance of their duty. They made no use of their power to accumulate wealth or undue honor. You and I may point our sons to the example set by these men, and perhaps the most striking one of the three is the one whose body today is to be deposited in the grave at his home in Canton, Ohio.

Born in 1843, serving his country as a soldier almost before his majority was attained, and attaining unto the highest degree of reward in the service permissible at that time, he showed himself, during all his career as a soldier, as a man who had the interest of his fellow men at heart. And do you not remember that when he was adjutant-general, how that his men having gone out fighting with-out food, were met by him with food and drink, taken to them by him that his men should not faint in the hour of their duty. It was not his pride as a soldier that led him to do that. It was not because he thought that military exaltation awaited him that caused him to do that. It was because in his heart he had a feeling for those men that were standing in armed rank to represent this nation, that imperishable principle of liberty, and that they who might possibly be depending upon his aid might not think he had forgotten them, he put himself into danger and saw that they were served. It was the outcropping of that kindliness of heart that has marked his career from first to last.

You will remember that President Garfield, at the time of the convention at Chicago, almost at that time an humble politician, undertook in that convention to vote, "No," if he saw proper. Do you not remember that James A. Garfield rose in his place and defended the rights of an American citizen to vote, "No," whenever a question requiring the exercise of this right was presented to him? And when he took the oath of office, when being installed as President of the United States, his first act after taking the oath was to turn to his aged mother and imprint a kiss upon her lips. Do you remember that? The next attention was to his wife, marking the grandeur of his manhood, marking the estimate which he put upon the duties as a citizen taking the oath of office. And yet in his heart there was that respect for the home, that respect for his companion and for his mother, that he did not forget them in the hour of his elevation.

You will remember that the wife of President McKinley has been a weakly woman, and that in their early married life they buried the only children of their union, two beautiful girls, and that from the time the last one was laid in the grave, Mrs. Mc-Kinley has been an almost helpless invalid, and yet there is not a house in all this broad land of ours in which the story of the filial devotion of President McKinley to his wife has not made honorable the name of husband. There is not a family in which that has been said, but what it ought to have a refining influence. Do you remember the expressions of devotion when he was touring the country, and Mrs. McKinley was taken seriously ill in California, he cancelled every appointment he had made and devoted himself to his wife, and returned with her to the White House, tenderly caring for her as though they were but lovers. That shows you the manly qualities of this man. And do you not remember that at the close of his life, when he became convinced that he could not recover, that he asked that she might be brought to his bedside, and there, with no one between them and God, he realized that he was passing away and he said to her, "It is God's way; his will, not ours, be done."

Is there husband in my presence today who will not feel that if he can in the last hour of his sojourn upon the earth, if he is fortunate enough to have with him the companion of his youth, he will be fortunate if he be able to say, "I shall be pleased and" those who had ruled robbed the people, making assessments and taking from them what was not theirs to exact. The ruler desired to make a change, and a shepherd of the hills was recommended to his notice, and was appointed to govern that section.

happy if I can say unto my companion, 'It is God's way; his will, not ours, be done." And should any one think it wrong for this man or any other man in similar extremity and conditions to use the words of our Master, who made such an expression as that, "Thy will, not mine, O God, be done"? May this be pointed to you, the fact that this man who was a citizen of this wonderful country of ours, a man from among the people, a man who had been chosen to represent the people, was not only fit to be intrusted with the reins of the government, but also gave such evidence of his worth by virtue of his manly acts and conversation in his own home. There is where we ought to see the finest expressions of character. And when we can find such men as those among our citizens and choose them from out of the midst of the people, it is safe for these American people to take such men and intrust their liberty to them; because they have given all the evidence that we as a people could possibly ask of them, that they will earnestly consider the people's trust; because they have proved themselves to be faithful in the private affairs of life. The nation mourns; it is wise that it does so. The nation prays; it is is wise that it does so. That they who shall succeed President McKinley may emulate his virtues and prove themselves to be statesmen while they are yet citizens in the affairs of every-day life.

I make no apology for my efforts to place President McKinley before you as I see him. I make no apology to place President Garfield as I see him. I make no apology for placing President Lincoln as I see him. I recognize these men as the teachers of the American republic, as the truest and best in political life. Chosen, not because they may have had an influence in certain circles, but because their fellow men at home prized them and understood them. Because they presented themselves before the people for election to their high office as requested to do, and in their administrative life they still remembered the people when they came into power.

I remember reading a little article upon one occasion, and it was illustrative of a principle, whether a true story or otherwise. One of the rulers of the far East had one district which caused him much anxiety. It was a mountainous district, infested by robbers; traveling was not safe, and those who had ruled robbed the people, making assessments and taking from them what was not theirs to exact. The ruler desired to make a change, and a shepherd of the hills was recommended to his notice, and was appointed to govern that section.

After awhile suspicious tales were started in regard to this man. Envious tongues related evil and surmising stories about him. It was said that he was making use of his authority to enrich himself, and as an evidence of this it was said that there was led a camel in his train, and upon his back a chest was carried carefully guarded; and that in the tent at night the gleam of silver and gold was seen by different parties. These rumors reached the ears of the ruler, and he set off to ascertain if the man were ruling properly or not. He sent him word to meet him, and he did so. There was the camel, there was the chest, and the ruler's heart was sadly biased against this shepherd of the hills. He sternly commanded his soldiers to bring to him that treasure chest. It was brought and opened in his presence. And lo, in the chest-its only contents - lay the garments which the shepherd of the hills had worn while yet a shepherd before he put upon him the habiliments of his office. As the ruler gazed down into the chest and saw that vesture. he was disturbed, confounded, and demanded an explanation. Dara, the shepherd, with unclouded brow replied: "If I have ruled well, this all the spell I had. I simply remembered that I was Dara, a shepherd of the hills."

And when our public men, wherever they are, whoever they are, however small the office they may aspire to in the gift of the people, however grand may be their ambition, it is well for the liberty of the American people, if that sentiment remain with those whom we choose to represent the people when they come into power; if they still retain their sympathy with the people, remain in touch with the people, still recommend themselves to the people by virtue of their uprightness.

President McKinley was known to be a man of efficiency. What was necessary to be done was done. His sense of honor led him to the performance of his duty. He followed this rule not only with sacred obligation to his wife, but to the state and country, and in every one of the positions he held, he proved himself to be an upright citizen.

Do you not remember when misfortune overtook him in the financial line, and took everything that he had. He had become indebted, but managing to keep his honor untarnished from the debts which he had chosen to assume, desired to keep nothing to himself, refusing help offered him, and making an effort individually to remove the load from him that his name might still be honored, and his friends in spite of himself, friends that he had made by virtue of his kindly deeds, helped him unknown to himself and almost without his consent, and yet he was a poor man and continued to be a poor man, and probably would have come out of the White House still a poor man so far as the filthy lucre that has poisoned so many honorable lives is concerned.

As a citizen of this republic, as a man feeling to some extent the grandeur that attaches to a citizen of the United States, I feel it a pleasure, so far as pleasure may be taken on such an occasion as this, from so sad an occurrence that we have met to commemorate, in referring such men as this to you. I am not here to unduly praise these men. I am here to speak of their virtues as I see them as a citizen, and I believe if there are times when we may put away every thought of partisanship, it is when the nation is called by such a service as this to meet around the bier of such men. They have ended their service, and we have met as they would meet around the grave of a common relative and there give expression to their grief without hindrance.

I would that I were able to express the feelings of contempt, how utterly inadequate any punishment for the creature who executed his personal wrath upon the person of President McKinley. I would that I had words by which I could express my sentiments. I believe you feel with me that we keep our tongues still be cause we know not how to express the unutterable contempt we feel for such a being.

Our hearts go out to that mournful cortege at Canton, Ohio, and we stand as they stand beside the open grave waiting to see the remains of that man who stood as a man among men, and we ought not to be ashamed of the tears that they or we shed.

As a representative of the people and in the discharge of his duty as a public servant, he was stricken down at his post. No grander death can come to any one than to die at his post, and President Lincoln, President Garfield, and President McKinley have been stricken down in the front ranks of this grand representative era, and have perished from the earth so far as mortality is concerned, while in the discharge of their duty; and this last perhaps is of all the most pitiable, because it was so The kindly utterly inexcusable. character of the individual as he stood among the people to give his hand to the humblest as well as the highest. almost entirely exposed to the attack of the assassin, and in the midst of those who should have been his friends, especially by the one who took his life. There is not one of us present if we had been there, if it would have been possible for us to prevent that deed but would have gladly done it. There is not one of us who holds dear the security of the lives of those who mingle among the people, but what recognizes that the humblest of us may pay the penalty of the trust that may be reposed in us by our friends as well as citizens if they should see fit to call us to the public duties. We must do it with a consciousness that some one may undertake to destroy us from among our fellows. Let us hope that this last lesson may be sufficient to prevent the recurrence of such a thing as this. Let us hope the American people may awake to the fact that life should be held sacred, and that we may offer to the world yet those principles of law and order and peace among the people in such a way that the life of a citizen may be safe wherever he may be in all this broad land, or under what flag he may be found when he is the servant of this great republic. Let us hope that such a condition as this may accrue, and if so, then Lincoln and Garfield and McKinley may not have been sacrificed in vain, and there cannot be a grander death than these men have met.

I ask pardon for any undue emotion I may have exhibited, but I feel as a man and as an American citizen that we have lost a friend, such a loss as comes home to every household, one that every citizen must feel. I do not wonder that strong men who knew it wept, or are weeping today. I confess that from the hour I heard he had expired it has been all I could do to think of it or speak of it without being moved to tears of grief. I know that sooner or later we can speak of his death as we can that of Lincoln, without undue emotion, but I hope it will be sanctified to us as a memory, that the lesson taught us by the life of President McKinley may be told to our sons and daughters, that the expressions of sympathy of the home, the sacredness of the domestic relations may be truly forced upon the attention of husbands and wives and those who intend to take upon themselves these relations.

I need not say in conclusion, May the peace of the Lord rest upon us. I feel that we can safely trust to his hands to pass sentence upon those who disturbed the nation's peace, a nation's emblem of uprightness. We may trust him to order in that way that when the emergencies of the nation may require, there will be found a man of the earth upon which the faith of the nation may rest, that there will be found an instrument for the accomplishment of his own desire and the better interest of our race.

Twice are we born; once to the physical existence, and then in the period of awakening personality to the mystery of the soul.—

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY. NO. 5.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN.

Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, September 15, 1901.

Reported for Herald by St. Annie Allen.

When we closed last Sunday night we had just arrived at the period of time in our investigation where Joseph Smith ceased to be the only living witness of the existence of the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. Conditions were such just at the close of our discourse that we did not consider the testimony of these witnesses as much as we desired to consider.

I wish for a few minutes tonight to invite your attention to the condition that existed at that time. These men, with others, had been told by Joseph Smith that he had in his possession these gold plates that he had found by the direction of an angel from heaven, and that he had been privileged by the use of the Urim and Thummim found with the plates to translate them. Two of these men had had the privilege of writing as he dictated, but had not had the privilege of looking upon the plates; he was the sole witness of their existence. A revelation had come through him to these three men prior to that time, giving them the promise that they should behold the plates and be witnesses by the power of God to their translation. Considering these circumstances from the standpoint of fraud and that this man was practicing an imposition upon these other men, it will take a great deal more credulity than I possess to believe that Joseph Smith imposed upon these witnesses, for he would have had to invent some means to satisfy them. he had to do something to make his word good that they should behold the plates and that the power of God should testify to the correct translation. It appears to us that it would tax his ingenuity considerably to deceive these men, to make these men believe and testify to such a thing unless it were true. They were men of different temperaments, and occupying different conditions of life, and living in different circumstances. Martin Harris was a man of middle age, a well-to-do farmer, while Oliver Cowdery was a man of some education for those times, and was following the occupation of teaching school. David Whitmer was a comparatively young man and I believe a farmer also, or living with his father who was a farmer; and these three men had to be satisfied that the promise made to them was verified. We read concerning that event how they went into the woods to pray and plead with God that the promise made might be fulfilled, and after praying twice in regard to it and failing to get an answer, Martin Harris suggested to the others that it was because of his presence, and he withdrew himself, he probably was not so well prepared to receive this manifestation, and when he had withdrawn, and prayer was again offered, two of these witnesses saw what they subsequently testified to. They saw an angel of God come down from heaven and he had the plates with him, and he turned them over leaf by leaf, and they saw the engravings thereon, and they heard the voice of God declaring that the book was true and the translation was correct.

Immediately after receiving this manifestation Joseph left the other two and followed Martin Harris, whom he found a little distance away engaged in prayer. Joseph united with him in prayer when suddenly Martin Harris leaped to his feet and shouted, "It is enough, mine eyes have beheld," and Joseph says the same manifestation was presented there that was presented when he was with the two other witnesses.

To my mind it takes a great deal of credulity to believe that Joseph manufactured that scene to satisfy these There is another possibility of fraud that ought to be considered. That possibility is based on the supposition that all four of these men were in a conspiracy to defraud the people and that they agreed to manufacture this testimony and thus lead the people into a deception. What possible motive could they have had in doing so? Men do not usually engage in anything fraudulent without expecting to accomplish something. The prospect that was held before these men was this; they were testifying to the world of the truth of something that had no standing. It had only a local reputation, and that local reputation was not a very favorable one. The most of those that knew anything about it had already branded it as a fraud, there was no prospect that money should be made out of it. If something of the kind should arise in this neighborhood, and some one were to make a declaration that he had seen a vision of that kind and that gold plates were promised him, and all the people would rise up against it, just once in a while an individual believing it, who of you would try to make money out of it? There was no prospect of getting any compensation in the world, they could expect nothing else only that the people would be displeased with them as they were with Joseph Smith, when they joined with him in stating that the Book of Mormon was true and the translation was correct. The opposition had gone so far as to threaten the life of Joseph Smith; they had undertaken to take his life and persecuted him until he had to flee from place to place for better protection. Yet some men say these men joined in a conspiracy to deceive the world. Here was, as I said before, a respectable farmer of middle age, a prosperous man, another man whose living depended upon his receiving support as a school-teacher, it seems very inconsistent that he would make himself unpopular, and detract from his chances to make a living with so little hope of success; another man just starting in life taking upon himself the reputation of trying to deceive the people, for the sake of what? Can anybody tell me what they had in view? To my mind to say those men were engaged in a fraud takes a little more credulity than most people have. They believed they saw what they testified to. To my mind there is no question about that. If they could possibly believe it and it not be true, there is a chance that the whole scheme was a deception, but not otherwise. It seems to me we must stretch our credulity a great deal if we could believe they imagined all this. They prayed the first time and they did not see anything, then they prayed again and they did not see anything, no imagination yet, and about the third time they prayed their imaginations were wrought up sufficiently to see something. Was that correct? And again, after Joseph left these two men and went to Martin Harris, Harris' imagination had to be wrought up as were the other two when Joseph prayed with them. Can you believe that? I cannot. I am too skeptical to believe so much as that. I think there is nothing hard to believe in the statement they make; it is not necessary for me to read that statement, you are all acquainted with it.

In addition to these three there were eight other witnesses. did not see just what the three did. If they wanted to lie about it they could have told as big a story as the others did. They said Joseph Smith showed them the plates. He simply was permitted to show the plates to these eight men and allow them to handle them and see the engravings thereon. They said they saw the engravings and they had the appearance of ancient work and curious workmanship. They did not overstate it. They could easily have said they heard the voice of God, but they did not; they have simply testified to having seen the plates. It appears to me that there is nothing about it that would suggest any exaggeration on the part of these eleven witnesses, twelve including Joseph Smith. It must have been a happy thought to Joseph Smith when he realized that he did not stand alone. Instead of being the sole witness of these things, other men had seen and heard, and other witnesses were to join their testimony with him. I can imagine it was great relief to him, and in that condition he was stronger, better prepared to meet the responsibility and meet the persecution than he had been before. It must have been a source of great strength to him.

What seems to me very peculiar was that these men all continued to bear their testimony in regard to Some have thought these things. because these men disagreed with Joseph Smith about some other things and they did not affiliate together as closely as they had done before, that it is an evidence that their testimony was false. To my mind it is an evidence that their testimony was true. The difference demonstrated that they were not the tools of Joseph Smith, they were not the kind of men to just simply say what Joseph Smith told them to say. If their actions had been of that character-if they were so much under Joseph Smith's influence that they would do just what he wanted them to do, then they would have done it in 1838, at the time they disagreed with him. Perhaps neither party was purposely wrong. It was simply an evidence that they had the kind of stuff in them that they were not the tools to be led by any man. Each stood upon his own responsibility as a man that dared to do what to him was right. I am sorry the difference occurred, for somebody was wrong, and in error. It is not our purpose to say who was wrong. There might have been mistakes made on both sides; very seldom a difference arises between two parties where one is entirely innocent of wrong doing.

Let that be as it may, it shows these men were independent in their characters and dared to act according to their convictions, and the very fact, as I referred to the other night, that they testified upon their death beds, removes all possibility of their testifying for the purpose of getting anything in this world, and certainly nothing in the world to come if it were a false testimony. The last words of the three were in regard to this testimony and all affirmed that it was true. There was no occasion for it; if they had not wanted to say anything in their last moments it could have been avoided. If they had kept still nobody would have urged it upon them. But I am told that Oliver Cowdery (his is the most conspicuous case) said in his last moments, "I have something more to say and I cannot die until I have said it," and they propped him up in bed and he lifted his hand to heaven and renewed his testimony to the Book of Mormon, and then sank back in death. There was no occasion for him again to do this; there was no occasion for his wanting to reaffirm that testimony only on the hypothesis that his testimony was true, and he knew into whose presence he was about to be ushered.

We might occupy all the evening in giving instances of these men renewing their testimony, but it is not necessary. In connection with the Book of Mormon I wish to invite your attention to some other points that have received considerable criticism. One of the instances is this; on the title page in the Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith is called the author. Some of the opponents of this work have made a great deal of ado about that; they say he did not deny the authorship then, but afterwards the authorship was denied, and they take advantage of this fact to mislead the public. The Palmyra edition says that Joseph Smith is the author and publisher, and subsequent editions do not call him the author, but I think that this question was explained in the certificate filed with the clerk of the Northern District of New York when the copyright was applied for. Here is the certificate of the clerk:

Be it remembered. That on the eleventh day of June, in the fifty-third year of the Independence of the United States of America, A. D. 1829, Joseph Smith, jr. of the said District, hath deposited in this office the title of a Book, the right whereof he claims as author, in the words following, to wit: "The Book of Mormon: an account written by the hand of Mormon, upon plates taken from the plates of Nephi. Wherefore it is an abridgment of the Record of the People of Nephi; and also of the Lamanites; written to the Lamanites, who are a remnant of the House of Israel; and also to Jew and Gentile; written by way of commandment, and also by the spirit of Prophecy and of Revelation. ten, and sealed up, and hid up unto the Lord, that they might not be destroyed; to come forth by the gift and power of God, unto the interpretation thereof; sealed by the hand of Moroni, and hid up unto the Lord, to come forth in due time by the way of Gentile; the interpretation thereof by the gift of God; an abridgment taken from the Book of Ether. Also, which is a Record of the People of Jared, which were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people when they were building a tower to get to Heaven: which is to shew unto the remnant of the House of Israel, how great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever: and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile, that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting Himself unto all nations. if there be fault, it be the mistake of men; wherefore condemn not the things of God. that ye may be found spotless at the judg-ment seat of Christ.—By Joseph Smith, Jr. Author and Proprietor."

In conformity to the act of the Congress of the United States, entitled, "An act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of Maps, Charts, and Books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies, during the times therein mentioned;" and also the act, entitled, "An act supplementary to an act, entitled, 'An act for encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of Maps, Charts, and Books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies, during the times therein mentioned, and extending the benefits thereof to the arts of designing, engraving, and etching historical and other prints."

R. R. LANSING,

Clerk of the Northern District of New York.

This is a fair description of the work; he claimed the rights of an author, under the law, and in his certificate describes the work just as it has ever since appeared and shows conclusively that he was not the author from a technical standpoint, but that he claims the rights of an author. When we read the description, as set forth in the certificate. we learn without reservation in what sense he was the author, and to what extent. He was entitled to the rights of an author. The title-page may not have been written in the best form to express just in what sense he was the author of the book and what part he took in the matter, but notwithstanding this he describes it so fully and completely that no deception or misunderstanding could result. It is not necessary perhaps to pursue this part of the subject any further, only to state that the certificate above quoted was published in the first edition of the book, so there was no excuse for misunderstanding.

I wish to invite your attention to another very important occasion when these men received from God authority and power greater than they received under the former ordination, when they received what is called in church parlance and what is designated also in the Scriptures, the Mel-chisedec priesthood. The description of how this was given is related in the language of Joseph Smith. Perhaps it is not necessary to read it in detail. There is a difference of opinion in regard to the ordination. Suffice it to say that these men were ordained by the laying on of hands unto this authority. It has been stated in a revelation that they received it under the hands of Peter, James, and John, or rather that Peter, James, and John bestowed it upon them. Some think that Peter, James, and John laid their hands literally upon Joseph and Oliver. The word ordained means more than simply the rite of laying on hands. It is often used in the sense of direction, appointment, instruction, etc. It is very certain that they did direct them to lay hands upon each other. If they received a second ordination, or more than one, Peter, James, and John may have laid their hands upon them. And right here allow me to say that some people in reading the first volume of the history have understood the authors of the history to say that Peter, James, and John never laid their hands upon Joseph and Oliver. They knew when they wrote the history that there was a difference of opinion in regard to the fact of the literal hands of Peter. James, and John being laid upon these men, and went on to say that it might not be so, and gave the definition of the word ordain to show that it was not necessary to lay their hands upon them individually to ordain them, and they did not say that they did because there is no such statement made in the history to their knowledge. This is an open question, and it is so treated in the history. But the question as to whether they ordained each other or not is not an open question. Joseph says in regard to this:

We had for some time made this matter a subject of humble prayer, and at length we got together in the chamber of Mr. Whitmer's house in order more particularly to seek of the Lord what we now so earnestly desired: and here to our unspeakable satisfaction did we realize the truth of the Savior's promise; "Ask, and you shall receive, seek, and you shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you;" for we had not long been engaged in solemn and fervent prayer when the word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber, commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ, and that he also should ordain me to the same office, and then to ordain others as it should be made known to us, from time to time: we were, however, commanded to defer this our ordination until such times as it should be practicable to have our brethren, who had been and who should be baptized, assembled together, when we must have their sanction to our thus proceeding to ordain each other, and have them decide by vote whether they were willing to accept us as spiritual teachers, or not, when also we were commanded to bless bread and break it with them, and to take wine, bless it, and drink it with them, afterward proceed to ordain each other according to commandment, then call out such men as the Spirit should dictate, and ordain them, and then attend to the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost upon all those whom we had previously baptized; doing all things in the name of the Lord."

There is a positive commandment that Joseph was to ordain Oliver and Oliver was to ordain Joseph. there is another principle involved here that I want to call your attention to. These men notwithstanding they were commanded by the Almighty to do this ordaining, were told to wait until the voice of the church which they were to organize could be heard. At first thought it may seem superfluous that the voice of the people should be heard; I used to think so myself and wondered at it, but it has ceased to be a wonder to me, and has appeared to me of late to be a very beautiful and grand provision. I rejoice in the fact that God does not force men upon us, I am glad he has so recognized the rights of men that he selects from our midst men to represent him, and he selects men whom we approve, or at least we have the right of approval or rejection. He recognizes our rights in this matter and it is proper, proper from this standpoint; if he did this work and forced upon us men without our consent and without our approval, we would be in no sense responsible. Responsibility attaches to us, God wants us to feel the weight of that responsibility, he has recognized our rights not only to accept that which is from God, but to reject it as it comes from God if we choose. Of course, if we reject it we must take the consequences. If he calls men and we reject them, it is no more than we have the privilege of doing in other things. We have the privilege of doing wrong if we want to, we have that privilege in everything else. We have the privilege of rejecting the word of God when he gives a revelation of his divine will, we are left at liberty to say whether we will obey it Should not we be left the privilege of saving whether we will accept a man sent of God or not? If we reject him we reject him at our peril. That right shows that he does not wish to force upon us that which is not in accordance with our will and I am glad of it. I like the thought that if ever I shall stand in the presence of God, if ever I shall receive a reward for what I have done here. I shall have the satisfaction of knowing that nobody forced me to accept the work, but I did it of my own free I accepted God's service bewill. cause I wanted to, not because he forced it upon me. That I shall be redeemed because in the strength of my manhood I shall have stood against the opposition that shall have been hurled against me and have stood firm. I would not like the thought that I had to receive the word of God. I like the other better, and I am glad it is so, I am glad the Lord told Joseph and Oliver to wait until the voice of the people was heard, and when the vote of the people is taken, if they approve you, then you are to ordain Oliver and Oliver is to ordain you. And they were accepted, very seldom the people reject anything that comes by inspiration of God. It may be possible that the people may be imposed upon by false leaders, but when they are the responsibility is upon them, for leaders are not forced upon them.

There is another thought in connection with that which I want to impress upon you. That revelation came through Joseph Smith. Now I ask you to think about it. What reason could he have had to have concocted this scheme, what could he have gained, by representing that God instructed him to do nothing without the consent of the people? Would he have pretended to have received a revelation that said to him, "You are not authorized to act unless the people accept you?" Find a parallel to that in the history of the world if you can! Do you find it in Mohammed or any other false prophet? Did they say, I shall not act in the name of the Lord until the him on the hill where the plates were people accept me? No. They told found. It is said he gave him instruc-

the people the Lord had sent them and they expected the people to accept it and recognize it, and that too without any voice in the matter. They received their authority exclusively from God, as they claimed, requiring no confirmation from the body. If we are to be coworkers with God then the work accomplished is God's work and our work, and that may account for the mistakes that have been made. If God had forced us into line and said we must do that and we must do this, and used physical power to compel us to do as we were told, there probably would have been no mistakes made so far as acts done are concerned. But we are left at liberty to say whether we will have the good or the bad. In our weakness we make mistakes, that is the human part of it, and if there is no human part in it, you and I would have no place in it. I am glad there are imperfect instruments used, and that they have the privilege of manifesting these imperfections. If he should say the time has come when he will no longer work with imperfect individuals, it would leave me out. Hence I am not ready for the time when perfection shall be exclusively used in the work of God, and while imperfect instruments are used in connection with this work, and so long as present conditions remain, you must expect to see mistakes, and those mistakes may be of such a serious character as to cause us to blush with shame at times. We will find in this history, as in all other histories, there have been mistakes made, and as I have shown you before we must profit by those mistakes by guarding against the repetition of There have been mistakes them. made in the past that I am satisfied we never will make again. The necessity for avoiding them is thoroughly impressed upon us and this church will never go into those things. But there are other rocks we may be wrecked upon if we are not careful. But this principle of government is sufficiently plain, we will not dwell upon it longer.

After this work, this receiving of the priesthood and authority, the Melchisedec priesthood, which holds the power, we are told, of administering in spiritual things, holding communication with God, and the church of the First Born, had been restored to men, the work was in a condition where organization was necessary to the perfecting of the plan, and hence the Lord gave directions, more particular directions than he had done You will remember before. Joseph Smith received instructions in regard to the kingdom of God long before this when the angel came to him on the hill where the plates were tions in regard to the organization and government of the work of God. These hours he spent there in secret conference with the angel were no doubt hours of education and information, and he knew something about this organization perhaps from that time. But the direction was given to organize the church, and the history of it is very simple. That is one thing that strikes me forcibly in studying the history of the church, that such events, events of so much magnitude as the organizing of the church, the receiving the Melchisedec priesthood, were told in such plain, simple language, without any effort at display, without enlarging upon it, or explaining it in detail. To me it is an indication that these men were sincere; they told a plain, simple story, and told it in few words. Here is all they said about it:

Whilst the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, we still continued to bear testimony and give information, as far as we had opportunity; and also made known to our brethren that we had received commandment to organize the church, and accordingly we met together for that purpose, at the house of the above-mentioned Mr. Whitmer (being six in number) on Tuesday, the sixth day of April, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and thirty.

Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our heavenly Father we proceeded (according to previous commandment) to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by a unanimous vote. I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and or-dained him an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints after which he ordained me also to the office of an elder of said church. We then took bread, blessed it, and brake it with them, also wine, blessed it, and drank it with them. We then laid our hands on each individual member of the church present that they might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and be confirmed members of the Church of Christ. The Holy Ghost was poured out upon us to a very great Some prophesied, whilst we all praised the Lord and rejoiced exceedingly.

These men certainly were honest, there was no disposition shown on their part to exaggerate or picture things other than they were. They told the facts as plainly as it was possible for them to be told. One thought in connection with this ordination that I want to call your attention to. Some have the idea that this ordination could not have taken place without something transpiring, such as Peter, James, and John laying their literal hands upon them. I think if we pause and reflect upon it we will discover this fact, that a command of God is sufficient authority for anything. If God should say to a man who himself has not been ordained, to ordain another, he has the authority, you may call it priesthood, if you want to, for priesthood is authority. But some one uses that oft-repeated illustration, that has become very common among a certain people, viz., "a stream cannot rise higher than its fountain," and hence they reason, a man cannot ordain another to an office that he himself does not hold. If you call the priesthood a stream the comparison may be a very good one. But the mistake is in locating the fountain of the stream in the man doing the ordaining. They say a stream cannot rise higher than its fountain, which we admit, but the fountain of the priesthood is not in the man that ordains, but in God. But a stream does run in channels lower than the fountain sometimes, and it will rise by the force of power in the fountain from a lower plain to a higher one, and may rise under favorable conditions to any height not exceeding the fountain. Men who locate the fountain in the men who ordain make a mistake. Ordination, then, can take place, if God commands it, to higher offices than the one who does the ordaining, because he simply uses the man as a channel, and therefore it is done by proper authority, being under the supervision of God himself. I believe it is a rule, however, that the higher ordain the lower, and is a law to govern us in the absence of any direct commandment from God, a standing law, a perpetual law for men where they are not directly com-manded, otherwise men are only to do the ordaining who hold the authority above or equal to that which is to be bestowed. It is a very good law, I think. However, the Lord has a right to direct in cases like this. He says to Joseph, "Ordain Oliver Cowdery," which is as good authority as ever was given to man-the authority of God's word.

The church organized at that time was only a partial organization, the old order of things was to be reestablished, the church was to be organized according to the pattern given in the New Testament, there were to be twelve apostles, and the seventy and the other orders named in the New Testament in the church, and the revelation that so provided was given prior to this time, in which it was said there were to be other witnesses also, even twelve, and instruction was given concerning the manner of their choosing. They organized the church with only six members. They had not yet the material at hand to organize according to the plan given. How did they know that they would ever find the men to fill the positions provided? Here was a chance to have it exposed if the thing were a fraud, but fraud or not it came along all right. Men who had never known Joseph Smith and had never heard of him at that time came forward one by one as the news spread, and were prepared to step into posi- say it is because of his adherence to tions hitherto prepared for them and complete the organization. If it had been a fraud they would have been under the necessity of explaining the conspiracy to each one whom they wished to use, and get them to consent to it. If this were the plan is it not strange that they never made any mistakes? Every man they approached accepted the fraud. Do you believe that? Men may say what they like about it being a fraud, to my mind there is the stamp of honesty upon it. Every move they made future events demonstrated the wisdom of. Every place provided for material was found to fill. These men were right. Some of them afterwards turned out to be bad, some of them did wrong, perhaps all of them more or less. One man in Christ's time turned out to be bad; Judas chose to do something very reprehensible. I am prepared to believe that Judas was a good man at one time, I believe he had evil traits of character and that he was predisposed to do wrong, but he may have made a commendable effort to overcome, and succeeded in a measure. Some of these men of the latter-day work might have been evilly disposed by nature, but they certainly made a brave effort to do right for many years, and I am satisfied they suffered, perhaps more than some of us would suffer. I am sorry to say that some of them did do wrong, but if they were evilly disposed by nature, and made a strong effort in favor of the work they are entitled to credit. If notwithstanding this bad disposition and their inclination to do wrong, they were unable under the influence of this work to stand by the right and conquer or keep in subjection these evil tendencies; it is more of an evidence that this work is right, that there is virtue in it, than it would be if they were all angelic in their natures and were not inclined to do wrong. You may form your own conclusion in regard to it, but so it appears to me. If men who are evilly disposed by nature can control that evilly disposed nature, while they labor in harmony with the doctrine taught by Joseph and his colleagues there is something good in it. If a man does that which is wrong and it can be shown to be a violation of the rules and government of the church, there is good in it. There cannot be found a single instance, there cannot be pointed out one single wrong connected with this latter-day work that was not a transgression of church discipline. Whatever men's transgressions were, a strict adherence to the law of God was taught by Joseph Smith and his associates. If you see a man that is doing wrong, and who is making a profession that he is a Latter Day Saint, you cannot the church; so from whatever point you look at it, whatever way you view this latter-day work, it has been proven to be a benefit to the human family. I have seen things that made me think anxiously, and sometimes it looked a little doubtful to me, but the more I investigated the more I have been satisfied this work is of God, and those men in the beginning of the work wrought under the inspiring influence of God's power. The only way we can doubt this work is to quit thinking about it, for the more you investigate it, the more you find something to make you think it

The first public discourse ever preached in this church was preached on April 11, 1830, at the house of Peter Whitmer, by Oliver Cowdery; so the church was organized before ever a sermon was preached. work was promulgated by testifying, mingling with the people, telling them what they had heard. One thing I want to call your attention to is this, there was no confirmation, no laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit prior to the organization of the church. It occurs to me that is perfectly in harmony with the rule, that to confirm them members of the church there must be a church. They were baptized. These people were baptized before there was any church. Confirmation, one of the ordinances of initiation, was deferred until the church was organized, then they were confirmed members of the church. They might have been members of the church in a sense, but they were confirmed members after the organization took place. So is the practice still, so I understand it, so it was in the days of old when Christ and his apostles were representing the work of God on earth.

I am sorry I have not time to go any farther tonight with the history, but I trust that the events that we have described and the personages connected with them were entertaining to you. In fact I do not care to relate the events alone, as I said before; the events that have transpired from the beginning until now would do us no good, if we did not take into consideration the effect of those acts, how some contributed to success and some to failure. The good of history is in noticing the mistakes and successes and profiting by them, so as to know how to conduct our own history. From this standpoint we want to study history.

AN AGNOSTIC VIEW OF PRESBY-TERIAN CREED REVISION.

A statement (already quoted in The Literary Digest, June 8) made by Dr. Minton, moderator of this year's General Assembly, and chairman of the committee to prepare formulas of creed revision to be submitted to the Assembly next year, is criticized by The Agnostic Journal (August 31), which thinks that the statement "breathes the Jesuitical spirit." It betokens, says The Journal, an attempt to invent a form of expression for a short creed which, "while not contradicting the barbarous old doctrines of infant damnation and predestination, will yet allow very different interpretations to be authoritatively put upon the fuller statement in the Confession itself." That part of Dr. Minton's utterance against which the criticism is directed is as follows:

"The statement of the faith of the Presbyterian Church, to be prepared by the committee of twenty one, is not to be regarded as a new constitutional confessional formula. It is to be an official pronunciamento, to which no one, however, is to declare allegiance in ordination vows. It is to be popularly didactic. If any one wants to know what the Presbyterian Church believes, this statement will answer his inquiry."

Says The Journal:

"He [Dr. Minton] is willing to stand by the old creed, and to refuse a victory to those who wish to change it; but he is also willing to sanction the adoption of an 'official pronunciamento,' which, however, is not to be obligatory on any one! The meaning of this is simply that, to answer the popular objections to the old creed on the ground of its absurdity and barbarity, a new creed is to be adopted for popular use, so that when a humane objector to infant damnation puts forward his difficulty, he may be confronted by the new official pro-nunciamento, in which the 'love of God,' as we are told, will be emphasized, and his infinite and atrocious cruelty will be ignored. As Dr. Minton says: 'If any one wants to know what the Presbyterian Church believes, this statement will answer his inquiry.' And it is hoped, no doubt, that the Presbyterian Church will be able, like the Jesuits of today, to successfully meet the attacks of those who, bringing history and common knowledge to their assistance, attempt to expose the secret teachings and workings of these ecclesiastical

In the case of the Jesuits, the agnostic editor goes on to say, while one priest is asserting the beneficent character of the order and the oaths taken by its initiates, another flatly denies that any oath was ever taken by its members:

"The Presbyterian Church is preparing the way for an exactly similar quality of exoteric and esoteric teaching, following the example given by Ezra, who relates how, having written the Books of the Law, some were to be read publicly and the rest were to be reserved for the inner service of the temple. Such an outcome appears inevitable in every church. What is transpiring in the Presbyterian Church is only a repetition, slightly varied, of what occurred in the Roman Church, what has occurred in the English Church, and is producing its present disorganized condition, and what must occur in every church founded upon any supernatural belief. The priesthood such a belief necessarily originates as its authoritative exponent will inevitably fight to the death to maintain its divinely given prerogatives, and as knowledge and humanity grow among the laity, the outcome must be the same in all cases-tyrannical priestcraft on the one side, with its credulous and conservative following; growing intelligence, skepticism, heresy, schism, and rebellion on the other. The idea that Presbyterianism, any more than Romanism, can maintain its creed or its organization intact is one of those delusions the hollowness of which is proven by the history of every religion in the world, and it will no doubt be fully exemplified when finally decent Presbyterians refuse to put up with such subterfuges as those of Dr. Minton. and demand the formulation of a creed that a civilized man can honestly stand by."

KNOX, Ind., Oct. 20.

Editors Herald:-Our two-days meeting convened over last Saturday and Sunday. We had quite a pleasant time; there were not as many out as we might have wished for, and we were disappointed that Bro. Leonard Scott and others of the ministry could not be with us. Bro. Stroh, of Coldwater, was with us and proved himself equal to the occasion. I want to say for Bro. Stroh that he is a very able defender of the work, and his influence as a man is for good wherever he goes. He stayed over until Thursday morning and held services Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings. Wednesday evening he spoke from Revelation 22:18, 19, and to my mind he made it clear who was adding and taking from this book. He took up the first principles of the gospel and showed how they had added to and taken from baptism, also the laying on of hands; and many more places he showed where they had added and taken from, and that we had no right to be liberal with God's law; we must go only as far as his law goes.

The Christian minister was present; don't know how he enjoyed it, but I trust he, as well as all those present, will find it in their hearts to prove all things and hold fast that which is good.

Trusting that we may live so as to be able to lead those of our own family to the light of the gospel, that we may be an unbroken family in our Father's kingdom.

MOLLIE PIERSON.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Oct. 5.

Editors Herald:—According to the last time advertised, we left the wharf in San Francisco on Thursday, September 19, 1901, for Papeete. Our company were all well, and in joyful mood, anticipating a pleasant voyage. None of us were seasick, and a canoe might safely have come with us all the trip, with the exception of a few days of fresh breezes.

On Sunday, the 22d, I tried to preach to our party and a few other passengers in the saloon from the texts of Deuteronomy 18: 15-19, and on the 29th President A. H. Smith preached an excellent discourse from the text found in Matthew 27: 23, "What shall I do with Jesus, which is called Christ?" Following up the subject of the previous Sunday, he delivered a most convincing line of argument sustaining the divinity of Jesus and his mission. Quite a number of passengers were present in the main saloon, who listened to the speaker with rapt attention, as by inspiration he convinced them, by the marvelous acts of Jesus the Christ in all his life, even to his expiring utterance—a prayer for his murderers-that he was more than mortal man, and that in him God was made manifest to

On Tuesday, October 1, we made the island of Tikahau, a half point off the starboard bow, and soon after we raised first the cocoanut trees, then the long line of white coral sand of the beach. Soon after we sighted Rairoa and entered the pass in which the little Evanelia was driven to her death—overloaded and overburdened she sank, and the silent waves bear no record of the spot from whence she passed from the gaze of men.

On Wednesday morning at day dawn we were off Point Venus lighthouse, and by the middle of the forenoon we were in Papeete and met by Brn. Peterson, Metuaore, and Varoa, by whom we were escorted in vehicles to the chapel in Tarona, where we were all royally received with many manifestations of joy, and especially in seeing Bro. Alexander. or, as they expressed it, "Our eyes now behold the face of one of the seed of Joseph the father, one of the Presidency, and the Patriarch of all the church, our father in the Lord, and we are all his children, for he is of the seed of Abraham, and we also, for in Christ is neither bond nor free, black nor white, male nor female." It would be very difficult to portray to English-speaking people the joy of these people in seeing Bro. Alexander.

Yesterday we were also royally received in Tiona by the branch there; and now today we must get our mail ready.

Our joy was mitigated by the fact that Sr. Lillie is at the hospital, having undergone an operation which is believed to have been necessary; we have not yet been permitted to see her, excepting Bro. and Sr. Gilbert stopped in a few minutes last evening. They and Bro. John report her as getting along excellently and convalescing nicely.

We expect to leave here for Raroia on Tuesday next, and probably will be back in Papeete by the middle of December. May peace be and abide with all the Israel of God.

Your brother in Christ.

BYRNEVILLE, Ind., Oct. 18.

Dear Herald:-While I have not troubled your columns very much I desire while I have a little leisure to jot a few lines for your readers. I am still in the work down here in the hills of the Hoosier state. Since the extract from the letter sent to your office some two months ago, giving notice of the shooting through the schoolhouse door, the throwing of stones in at the window, and threats of eggs as a warning for my departure, I supposed it so intended, I have continued onward in the work, trying to improve every opportunity as it came to me. I have preached in Davis, Crawford, Harrison, and Perry counties principally. The most of the time I have been in company with Bro. George Jenkins, a noble, agreeable, trusty man. We have had a good measure of God's help in our efforts. While I have had success in preaching the word Bro. Jenkins and some others have met with success along the line of baptisms. Some thirty or thirty-two have been added since last district confer-

While in the vicinity of Millstone, on September 25 I received a letter from Bro. Thomas Wheeler of Galena, notifying me to come at once to fill a promise I had made about three weeks prior, to go with him and wife to Lincoln and Casey counties, Kentucky, where they had formarly lived. They had relatives that united with the Brighamites in that vicinity some time ago, and by some means they became disgusted with what they had heard from those deceivers, and so wrote to Bro. and Sr. Wheeler of their dissatisfied condition, with a request to come and be prepared to show them what the Reorganized Church believed. They made choice of your humble servant to meet the issues between the two churches. I left my companion at Millstone to take the responsibility of the work there and elsewhere until my return.

Early on the morning of September 26, from the bank of Hoosier state just below Tobinsport, Bro. Jenkins so kindly with me, we seated ourselves in a little rowboat and away we sailed across the Ohio to Old Kentuck, reaching the little station of Skillman. One and one fourth miles from the river I took train to Louisville.

The morning of the 27th, at 8:20 o'clock, in company with Bro. and Sr. Wheeler, we boarded the Louisville and Nashvile train for Junction City, ninety-five miles south of Louisville, drove from there to the pleasant little town of Moreland, Lincoln county, to C. C. Wheeler's, cousin of Thomas Wheeler, and remained their guests one day and two nights. Our stay there was very pleasant, indeed; during our stay I put in about eight to ten hours teaching the family and some others this grand and glorious work, and I will not try to tell how much time our brother and sister put in. Sure there was but little time left unoccupied.

Sunday we took hack for Cousin Dick Wheeler's, twenty-one miles away, arriving there about 2: 30 p.m. This place is near Liberty, just amid the tall hills and the narrow valleys. Here not much time was lost in teaching the gospel.

We had to hasten on Monday; had several miles to go on foot to reach the den, there to see what we could do in meeting those seductive spirits and doctrines of devils. On our way back we stopped with a Mr. Brown and wife, he a member of the Christian Church and his wife a Mcthodist Episcopal. I informed them of the latter day message, time about two hours. We partook of the noon meal thankfully.

About five more long miles over rocks, hills, and rough roads, we trudged along slowly and patiently, and just before the sun hid itself we reached our destination and became guests in the home of Priest T. J. Edwards, the writer of the letter for us to come. Now the work began, and continued up to a late hour at night. The next day an appointment was circulated for meeting to commence at Scott's chapel by a Josephite elder. Of course it was no trouble to get a crowd. The three nights I just occupied about five and one half hours, showing up the marriage covenant as taught in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, their crookedness in Utah from 1852 up to Brigham Young's death. Had a good hearing, good order, good liberty. We also visited from house to house and all that expressed themselves, except three members, told us they were ready to lay it down as a deception, and the one that had been the main leader, T. J. Edwards, said: "I am done with the institution. Will my Book of Doctrine and Covenants be of any use to you?" "Yes, sir," I replied, "It's what I have been wanting for a long time." I thanked him very much for the good deed. I now have one more weapon with which to meet their elders.

October 6 we returned to Moreland. During the time we were away, Mr. C. C. Wheeler had made an effort to get one of the church buildings in the town, but to his surprise was refused the use of them. This brought a division among their members; several felt very indignant in regard to it. So as a last resort Mr. Wheeler opened his house and seated it, and we had the privilege of addressing a goodly number two nights. This closed our work in Kentucky.

Monday morning we bade the folks good-bye, took train for Louisville, on to Hoosier state now for a day or two, to see my feeble mother, now past seventy-one years of age. Closed my visit with her and my youngest sister, bidding them good-bye. Now to the Saints at Louisville, to board the Indiana steamer for Madison, to meet in conference which convened at Marion Branch, Jefferson county, near Wirt. So, twenty-two on board, we sailed from the banks of Kentucky up the Ohio to Madison, meeting Bro. John Boswell, who was awaiting our arrival. By team and afoot we arrived at Brn. Jacob Ford's and M. R. Scott's, Jr., at about 1:30 in the night.

Notwithstanding the rain on the morning of the convening of conference, a goodly number of us met, found Brn. Joseph Smith and T. A. Hougas present, in connection with our sub-missionary in charge, Elder G. A. Smith. Business passed off nicely, and all were pleased to hear the voice of Bro. Joseph as he delivered four excellent sermons during conference.

After close of conference I returned to Byrneville and there held three meetings in company with Bro. George Jenkins.

I bade the Saints and friends good-bye and moved on down to Corydon, and from there in company with Bro. James Wynn, wife and son Will, arrived at their home to arrange for a series of meetings among those of the Lutheran belief principally, by special request of some of these brethren.

Have a desire to do what I can. May God speed the work. In bonds,

DECATUR, Neb., Oct. 21.

Editors Herald:—The Saints of this branch have their neat little chapel, 24x30, nearly completed. When accomplished it will be a credit to them and will greatly assist in their endeavors to keep themselves alive in Christ, and to keep the truths of the gospel before the people.

The conference of the Northern Nebraska district convened at this place on the 18th inst., and while the representation from other branches was small, we had a fair attendance at all services. Business sessions passed off pleasantly and profitably and the social services were characterized by that peaceful influence which gives an inward assurance of the presence of the Holy Spirit, melting each heart to love and tenderness, imparting hope and good cheer to all who were touched by its power. The preaching was good so far as the writer was able to discern, being seasoned by a portion of the Spirit, and seemed to be appreciated and enjoyed by all.

Bro. H. S. Lytle was ordained to the office of elder, in harmony with a recommendation from his branch, and is to preside over the Saints at Blair and vicinity. May God help him to wisely nourish and feed the church under his care, ever keeping each and every member alive in Christ and active in the discharge of every present duty.

On the afternoon of the 19th inst., when the Sunday school delegates assembled and found themselves without their regular officers, Bro. Oscar Case was chosen to preside pro tem., and Sr. Rogene B. Munsell, of Omaha, was chosen to act as secretary protem., and a profitable session was had.

The missionaries present will remain and continue the meetings over next Sunday, if all goes well.

While God is the author and sustainer of our work and gives many blessed assurances to each worthy member of his church, yet it is but reasonable to believe that we will meet with many trials and temptations, individually, as we endeavor to work out our salvation with fear and trembling before God. If we use all our powers to resist and overcome. God by his Spirit will enable us to succeed and win the prize. Unless we are willing to bear and forbear we would not be true followers of Christ, neither could we win the crown of life. If one has a conscience void of offense toward God and man, and ever holds himself subject to the laws of God and man. it is but natural to feel that in the great day of judgment God himself will not condemn. One of the most consoling features of our work is found in the fact that "The Judge of all the earth will do right," because he will not judge after the sight of the eye nor the hearing of the ear, but, being in possession of the actual facts in each and every case, he will in goodness, justice, mercy, and truth mete out equal justice to his children.

Editors Herald:—I last wrote at the close of White and Braden debate at Davis Chapel. I am here again looking after the work. Have been preaching in one of their members' houses for the past week with excellent liberty. Baptized one Sunday from the Christian Church.

Others are near the kingdom. We will have to trouble the waters again the first Sunday in next month. Just how many, I cannot say, but I hope there will be several, as there are quite a number who are convinced that we have the truth, and will make worthy Saints if they will only accept the gospel. So we have lost nothing, if Braden did publish in the county paper over the signature of two of his brethren that he had "annihilated Mormonism." I will reply to his letter before I leave here if we are granted space in the paper.

From the best I can see and learn of the work in this district, it is on the move. There were twelve added at our reunion with Sedalia branch the first of this month.

We will cross the Tennessee River this week and visit the Utah people again. Brigham Young said that they "had the greatest and smoothest liars in the world." Well, I don't say whether they have or not, but after the debate between them and Bro. C. L. Snow they crossed the river to a settlement where Bro. Snow had done some labor and told the people that Bro. Snow got up after the debate and acknowledged that he was whipped and that he had been in error, but he was honest, and that he was going to be baptized. So I have been informed. If he has been baptized

I have not heard of it. How about it, C. L., eh?

Bro. Henry Fields, who was ordained at our conference, is now with me. He spoke last night and did excellently. I hope that he will be able to do a good work for the cause of truth. He intends to put in the most of his time from now on in the ministry. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your colaborer,

W. R. SMITH.

WHITE-BRADEN DEBATE.

Editors Herald:—I have been urged by a number to write an account of my late debate with Rev. Clark Braden, held on the Davis Chapel grounds, near Briensburg, Marshall county, Kentucky. These grounds were made famous by some malicious person burning the chapel where the Saints had been holding meetings. Also tacking placards to the trees ordering the Saints to leave the county; and if they attempted to worship in the county would be shot from ambush.

Elders C. L. Snow and W. R. Smith had held services in this Davis Chapel which had created quite an interest in the work. Elder Snow had had some talk with the Christian brethren about debating the differences between our people and theirs. Elder Snow thought he could accommodate them with such a debate if necessary. The Christians have two congregations near by, and Elder Snow expected an opponent from home quarters if they were to have a debate. But in a few days he was written to by Bro. Hamilton, stating that Clark Braden had been secured to lecture on Mormonism, commencing August 27; Braden sending circulars to that end, and the country was flooded with them. and everybody invited to come and see Mormonism annihilated. Elders Snow and Smith sent me the circular and urged me to come and answer this so-called Mormon annihilator's lecture. Braden's friends notified him of my invitation, and the probability of a debate. Braden writes them: "There is no use fooling with White, as he cannot be got to terms." Then he advised a better way, which was for him to come and lecture on Mormonism and leave the matter there.

This changed the face of things somewhat, and Braden withdrew his appointment made for the 27th, and prepared a new schedule altogether. He was to have $50 for his new arrangements in "annihilating Mormonism" in his lectures.

This brought out a new handbill, headed, "Mormonism Unmasked!!" This peculiar document was scattered all over the country. It stated that Braden would commence his lectures on September 3, at ten a. m., on Davis Chapel grounds; subjects: "What is Mormonism?" "The Mormon Bible." "The Inspired Creed of Mormonism." "The Book of Mormon." "Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy." "Joseph Smith was an illiterate, ignoramus, villainous impostor."

Braden was conversant with the facts that surrounded the burning of the Davis Chapel, and these subjects were calculated to gratify the spirit that was already imbibed by some against the few Saints who lived in the neighborhood. Hence, Braden's idea was to fire up this spirit with his lectures, and thus assist them to annihilate Mormonism, as he afterwards said he did.

Braden's handbill stated how he had debated fifteen times with eight different champions of Mormonism. Also how E. L. Kelley had "backed out;" and J. W. Wight had "backed out:" and I. N. White had "backed out" and refused to meet him at Norman, Oklahoma; Clyde, Kansas; De Soto, Illinois; Independence and Harrisonville, Missouri; and in fact, "No Mormon dares to meet Clark Braden in fair, honorable debate." Then the handbill ends up with: "Come and hear the man that Mormons honor by calling him 'the arch enemy of the faith;' and by confessing that 'he has done the faith more harm than any other man, living or dead." Indeed, this was enough to shock and discomfit our brethren that knew not Braden.

And what about the other side rejoicing over the thought that they now had the man who would bury Mormonism clean out of sight? This sounds almost like a "fish story"; but this is the history of the "situation." No braver man ever lived, than is "I, Clark Braden." when he is six hundred miles away from his foe and surrounded by friends who are willing to pay him well for his attempts to annihilate Mormonism, as he calls it. But it so happens that a few of our men have been there, and no man knows that better than does Mr. Braden. Braden was so fearful of White putting in an appearance at his lecture, that he formulated propositions and rules, and sent them to his brethren and commanded them to call that "mass meeting" (which was chiefly composed of Braden's church members), and it was influenced to adopt Braden's propositions and rules, which, if complied with, would compel the "Mormons" to meet Braden in debate upon his own favored propositions with rules attached, or "back square out," as Braden has it.

This "mass meeting" met August 27, and things went flying in favor of Braden's plans. I had written Elders Snow and Smith that I would not come there to wrangle over indorsements. I did not ask for Braden to be indorsed further than an indorsement by their church where the debate was to be held. This I must have, or I would not meet Braden on the Davis Chapel grounds in debate.

I was apprised of this "mass meeting" to be held August 27, and wrote the following indorsement for Braden, and sent to Elders Snow and Smith to have signed by the officers of the meeting that were working things up for Braden.

"INDORSEMENT.

"To All Whom it May Concern: This is to certify that Eider Clark Braden is an accredited representative of the Church of Christ; that is, he is sound in the faith as we hold and teach it; and a Christian gentleman to an opponent in debate. Therefore, we cheerfully indorse him as our representative in every particular in a debate to be held near Briensburg, Kentucky, with the Latter Day Saints, upon the following propositions, to wit: 1. Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God? 2. Is the Christian Church (commonly called Campbellites) in fact the church of God, harmonizing in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice, with the Church of Christ, set up by divine authority, nineteen hundred years ago?" This indorsement failed to reach the brethren in time to get at the mass meeting on the 27th, but it was carried to the secretary and chairman of that meeting on September 1, and they, thinking to favor Braden, signed it as chairman and secretary of the aforesaid meeting. I was notified of this transaction on the 3d, while at St. Louis. This indorsement upset Braden's whole plan, as will appear later, though this chairman and secretary and Braden were all ignorant of how I was "working the wires" to catch Braden in his own trap, although he had a "mass meeting" at his back.

Braden met on the Davis Chapel grounds on the 3d with a big crowd to hear him attempt to "unmask Mormonism," and no I. N. White in sight. But Braden had learned of that "indorsement" being signed by the chairman and secretary of his mass meeting -thus committing him to the propositions in my circular challenge. This frustrated Braden's whole arrangements. But, as he said, "He would not be bulldozed by I. N. White." He now presented to his congregation for their adoption a wordy document, reading: "We, citizens of Marshall county, Kentucky, residing in the vicinity of Davis Chapel grounds, that are neither Mormons, nor sympathizers with Mormons, in mass meeting assembled, on Davis Chapel grounds, Tuesday, September 3, 1901." Then followed, "terms of debate;" and, "The propositions discussed shall be:" and, "Rules of debate." Everything gotten up to Braden's hand. In fact, a strange set of rules coupled with propositions that he knew I would not, nor could I with a shadow of a show for saccess, meet. But Braden got a "rising" vote to adopt them. Though not one fourth of the congregation voted, yet it was, as Braden said, "Adopted by a unanimous standing vote." Braden said: "We now have White fixed, if he comes; I know White." Elder I N. Roberts, who was in the congregation, cried out: "You bet you know I. N. White." "Shut your mouth," said Braden. This caused a ripple among the people, and every eye was on Bro. Roberts, but the excitement soon subsided.

On Wednesday, 4th, at ten o'clock, the people met again to listen to Braden "expose Mormonism." Another session was held at night also. During this time my circular challenge to Braden to repeat my former debates with him, in every hamlet, town, and city where he attempted to preach or lecture against us, was finding its way among the people, who were hearing the man that "Mormons dare not meet in debate." The brethren say they could easily observe that Braden was showing signs of uneasiness, and commenced to be a little more cautious about some of his wild assertions.

Between four and five p. m. on the 4th, a livery rig from Benton, Kentucky, dropped me off within three fourths of a mile of the famous Davis Chapel grounds. The first man I met was Bro. I. N. Roberts. He certainly felt some relief, as he had a big job on his hands, when considering all the surroundings. I was in poor health, having taken a severe cold at the Wheatland reunion, and had high fever and was suffering with congestion of the lungs. I felt more like going to bed than I did entering into a debate. But I soon took in the surroundings, and made note of how our cause was at the mercy of a bad enemy of the faith. Bro. Roberts proceeded to read to me the findings of Braden's mass meeting held on the 3d. This gave me some idea of what I had to cope with. I took the document and threw it into my grip, where it remained till I was at home some days afterwards. My first question was: "Who authorized Braden and a mass meeting to transact business for me?" I had written our brethren to make and sign no contracts: make no agreements of any kind unless I ordered it, and tell the people I ran my own business. This advice had. been strictly observed by the brethren, hence I was left free to talk back to Braden and his mass meeting.

Braden had announced for his subject that night, "The Mormon circus." Lots of fun was to be had at the Mormons' expense. My health was such that I did not go to see the "circus." Brn. Roberts and Smith went, and when getting on the grounds were asked: "Is White here?" "He is in the neighborhood," was the reply. This was at once carried to Braden in the stand. He arose and said: "White is here, and I suppose you are all glad of it; you can't be any gladder than I am." Braden forgot his "Mormon circus," and the lecture proved to be the tamest thing he had yet presentedcouldn't get the people interested, and Braden seemed to be at sea. Ten o'clock was announced for the debate, or something else to take place, the next day.

The next day I met Braden, and an anxious crowd of people at the Davis Chapel grounds. The proceedings of Braden's mass meeting that had everything "cut and dried,"-and "White fixed if he comes," was to be accepted or disposed of. Our brethren with the rest, seemed to be on the anxious seat to know just how some of these things were to be disposed of. Braden was gruff. I waited patiently for the watch to say ten o'clock. It came and I arose and broke the monotony by saying: Ladies and gentlemen, this hour was appointed in which to commence a debate. I am here and ready for that work. Mr. Braden, here is my moderator, Elder I. N Roberts; where is yours? Braden arose and said: "I don't need a moderator till some other things are settled." He was not there to dictate to the people; but those Kentuckians had said in mass meeting what must be debated, and what rules must govern in the debate. Here the fight commenced. Braden designated one of his elders for a chairman, and he was "voted in." Then Braden attempted to get a vote from the pecple, in order to compel me to debate the propositions and be governed by the rules that the mass meeting had decided by vote, on the 3d.

I read from my circular challenge: "The Rev. Clark Braden is hereby challenged to repeat the debate held with me at El Dorado Springs, Missouri, and later near Orchardville, and Alma, Illinois, at Harrisonville and Independence, Missouri." I then read from his "Handbill": "Mormon champions have backed out of the debate with Clark Braden as follows: I. N. White, at Norman, Oklahoma; Clyde, Kansas: De Soto, Illinois; Independence and Harrisonville, Missouri . . . No Mormon dares to meet Clark Braden in fair, honorable debate." I said to the people: This looks a little like "big Injin!" and more especially, when I have met Clark Braden in public debates, upon the very propositions I now ask him to say yes or no to. Will Braden dare to say to this people that he dare not now deny in another debate with me, that Joseph Smith is a prophet of God? Will he say to this people that he dare not affirm again in debate with me that the Christian Church is in fact the church of God, harmonizing with the church set up by divine authority nineteen hundred years ago? If he will get up and admit all of this, I will agree to drop these propositions, and will agree to consider something else. I wanted to impress the people with another feature of this "big Injin" affair. Braden has, here in his handbill, that I backed out of debate with Clark Braden at Independence and Harrisonville, and at other points. I want to read you a point or two that appears here in my "circular challenge." It says: "I also challenge him to repeat it in every hamlet, town, and city where he may attempt to preach or lecture against the faith taught by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This challenge holds good, the Lord willing, during my natural life." This holds good during my natural life, you see. Now, Mr. Braden, I want to say to you, that I am the liveliest corpse that you have ever met. If there is any backing out it is on Braden's part, as I hold myself ready to repeat my former debates with him, not only here on the Davis Chapel grounds, where you Kentuckians can judge as to who has the truth, but repeat it at Harrisonville and Independence. Missouri, at any time during my natural life.

Braden took in the situation, and had no trouble to see that the people were commencing to get their eyes open, and he now argued that I had always "bulldozed" everything through, at other debates, and he proposed to have his way this time. He had left all this matter with those Kentuckians, and they had decided in mass meeting just what they wanted debated and the rules that had to govern; he was subject to them.

I here arose and read that "indorsement" that the chairman and secretary of his first mass meeting had signed. It said: "This is to certify that Elder Clark Braden is an accredited representative... Therefore, we cheerfully indorse him as our representative in every particular in a debate to be held near Briensburg, Kentucky, with the L. D. S., upon the following propositions, to wit." (Here follows Joseph Smith a prophet, and Braden's church just as found in my circular challenge.)

This was a nail driven in a sure place. "That secretary" that signed that "indorsement," was then and there taken to task for signing it. He arose and intimated that he was deceived by Snow and Smith, which induced him to sign it. I asked him if he could read. Getting an answer in the affirmative, I challenged the idea of it being possible of him being "deceived." But, now, I wanted to know if they refused to indorse Braden as being sound in the faith as they hold and teach it? If not, why are you trying to set aside this indorsement that was signed by the chairman and secretary of your mass meeting? This put them in the straits. They now had the work of two mass meetings on their hands. One held on August 27, where Braden was indorsed to meet the L. D. S. in debate upon the propositions found in my circular challenge. The other to force White to meet Braden upon something else. It was easy to be seen that a contention was rising in the ranks of the Campbellite Church.

Braden was still hopeful that a vote from these Kentuckians would decide the matter in his favor. He contended that I had had my own way in four debates, and "bulldozed my propositions through," and now these Kentuckians had said in mass meeting what they wanted debated and what rules should govern. This he was determined to have voted upon and force me into terms.

I here frankly told the people, that if they wanted to vote Braden out of the debate. they could do so, by saying he should debate other propositions than those found in my circular challenge. At this juncture I gave a short explanation of the propositions found in my circular challenge; then walked over to where Braden sat, and said: I lay this challenge at your feet; dare you deny in debate, Joseph Smith a prophet of God? Dare you now affirm, that the Christian Church is in fact the Church of God? Now, sir, all you have to do, is to raise before this people and say, I will, or I won't. You have been telling this people, how you had snowed White under, and how he had backed out, now, sir, I want to give you another opportunity to snow me under again. Will you attempt it? These are the propositions that I have met you on in four successive debates; and have you been so successful, as you have been claiming during your lectures, I now offer to you the fifth opportunity to be all of that. Will you say no, or yes?

This certainly grounded Braden, and so flustrated the people that Braden completely failed to get his "vote" taken. The noon hour was approaching, and no debate in sight, although one and one half hours had been spent in what might be called a "pitched battle."

An adjournment was announced to 7:30 and the meeting broke up.

cheerfully indorse him as our representative in every particular in a debate to be held near Briensburg, Kentucky, with the L. D. S., upon the following propositions, to wit." (Here follows Joseph Smith a prophet, and Braden's church members were urging him to accept my propositions, as they were fair. The meeting was opened, and Braden arose and said he had a document to read and present to these Kentuckians. This document was in effect to rescind the findings of the mass meeting held on 27th. This also set aside the indorsement of Braden, which the chairman and secretary of that mass meeting had signed, wherein Braden was indorsed to meet the Latter Day Saints in debate upon the propositions found in my circular challenge.

The paper that Braden read quickly found a mover and seconder in two of his church members, and was about to be put upon its passage, when I arose to oppose it. Braden at once said to me, "Sit down!" I contended for my rights to speak to the question before it was put upon its passage. The chairman, (a Campbellite preacher) arose in excitement and commanded me to sit down, as I had no right to speak. Here I appealed to the congregation to sustain me in my rights, as I was an American citizen, and asked for nothing but what would be granted to me by any civilized assembly. The contention became so sharp that I thought best to yield the floor for fear of an interruption that might cause violence, as several parties about this time commenced to express themselves in tones louder than a whisper; and I saw that the congregation was much divided. The document then readily went to its passage by a rising vote: about thirty voted for, and through fear or intimidation, I suppose, none voted against the document.

But few could tell where we were at. I yet felt there was some way out of all of this. Before my opponents could get their whirling brains quieted, I arose and presented the claims found in my circular challenge, that Braden had recognized upon four other occasions as being fair and honorable. And then I again pressed his indorsement that had been signed by the chairman and secretary of the mass meeting held on the 27th. Asked if they intended by this vote to let it go out to the public that they went back on Braden's indorsement, and that they feared to let Braden deny Joseph Smith a prophet of God; and feared to let him affirm the Christian Church as being the church of God in fact? Now the case stood just this way: If they voted for Braden not to debate these propositions which he had debated with me upon four other occasions, then there would be no debate; for I positively refused to debate other propositions than these, unless Braden would acknowledge before this people that he dare not deny with me in another public debate that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God; nor did he dare to affirm the Christian Church in fact the church of God. If he would do this, then I would consider other propositions, but not without.

At the conclusion of my speech a resolution was offered to the effect that Braden meet me upon the propositions named in my challenge, but the propositions should be changed in their order: First. The Christian Church; Second, Joseph Smith. Braden spoke in favor of this, and contended he had met me at four different times upon these propositions, as they stood in my challenge, and now he intended not to be "bulldozed by me any further."

I spoke to this and said my challenge and word, too, were out just as named in my circulars, and he could meet it just as it was there, or say he dare not do it.

At this Braden flew mad and rushed over to me and said: "I accept your cowardly propositions, you cowardly scoundrel, you, and will give you one of the worst floggings you ever had."

At this I rose to my feet and said: Braden, here is my hand on that. At once there was such an outburst of applause from the assembly that it made the woods ring. The noise was so sudden and loud, that horses broke loose from their hitchings and ran pell-mell through the woods at breakneck speed. The horse that brought me to the grounds, though considered tame and gentle, took fright at the noise and broke loose and ran through the woods with the buggy, nearly stripping himself of the harness, and so demolishing things that the rig had to be left and I had to seek other conveyance to get from the grounds.

It was now too late to commence a debate that night; but Braden had on his war paint, and told the people he wanted to speak, and commenced on Joseph Smith, calling him a polygamist and other bad names. I arose to a point of order, and contended that such an assault upon Mr. Smith at that time was certainly out of order and not in keeping with any rules of debate I had ever met. Joseph Smith was the question of the debate which was not to commence till the next day at ten o'clock. But for all of this. I was ruled down and Braden occupied about one half hour in his tirade. I made no answer to Braden more than to tell the people that I would attend to his case next day, and during the debate. I could see that I was not without friends. My considerate way in handling an opponent was taking with the better class, and a number did not fail to so express themselves, even thus early in the conflict.

The far-seeing reader can now see the wisdom there was in me challenging Braden to meet me in debate in every hamlet, town, and city where he attempted to lecture against our faith, and repeat former debates. This challenge being "during my natural life," settled the question as to what propositions, and their order, and what rules should govern in debate. Had I not done this, I would have been forced to meet Braden upon just such propositions as his "mass meetings" would vote; or reject them, and leave the grounds with the appellation of "coward" on their lips. But, as it is, that "circular challenge" has met Braden at every point where he has attempted to lecture against us, since its issue. The vindictive letters that Braden has sent me after the "circular" got before the people during his lectures, indicates how it disturbs his equilibrium. At the Davis Chapel grounds, his fight was an uncommonly hard one, to get out from under the requirements of that circular challenge.

The next morning at ten we met to commence the debate. We had a half-hour fight upon "rules." Notwithstanding Braden's acceptance of propositions the night before, he was now determined not to let the same "rules" govern in debate as did at our four former debates.

The contest became spirited, and Braden turned his back to me and threw his hand behind him and with a backward jesture said: "Yes, let White run everything, as he generally does." I retorted: White generally runs things just about right. Our old rules governed, and the debate was on.

ROCKWELL CITY, Iowa, Oct. 21.

Editors Herald:—Since Dow City reunion
I have been holding meeting six miles southwest of Rockwell City, at Center schoolhouse.
Have preached eight times and am having good interest and attendance. This is a new opening, and I believe good can be accomplished; it should not be forgotten. I am stopping with Bro. A. B. Reynolds. Bro. Reynolds tries to make things pleasant for misisonaries. Bro. Reynolds' family are all members of the church excepting his youngest daughter.

I have been laboring with the tent up till the reunion, then I returned to my home in Dow City, where the reunion was held. While in tent work I labored with C. J. Hunt, J. M. Baker, and W. H. Kephart. I find them all noble men to be associated with. Our last effort with tent was in Rockwell City. We had good interest at first, and then it came rainy, cold weather, so it broke up our meetings.

I expect to stay here this week. I expect to go from here to Auburn to hold some meetings and continue there till district conference, which will convene the 15th of next month. I hope to see a goodly number of the Saints present and look for a good time; hope that good may be accomplished.

My family was well except my little boy, who was taken sick at the reunion. He was taken worse last week. But the last letter I received from my wife he was better. This has caused me uneasiness, but knowing and realizing as we do, I placed him in the hands of God, that he might be restored to health. Oh what a grand thing it is to trust a God that hears our prayers.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain, In bonds,

N. V. SHELDON.

Parrish, Ill., Oct. 23.

Editors Herald:—I am taking a tour in the Southeastern Illinois district with Bro. G. H. Hilliard. We have had some good meetings and I think good has been done. Some of the Saints have aided with their tithes and offerings, while others have done nothing along this line. Dear brethren and sisters, if you will be perfect you must observe the perfect law of which the law of tithes and offerings is a part. Perfection can only be attained by full obedience.

Yours with full confidence of a rich reward when Jesus comes, F. M. SLOVER.

HAMILTON, Scotland, Oct. 14.

Editors Herald:-I wrote to you last from London. From there I went to Lydney, where I held six or seven meetings in their neat and commodious chapel. The attendance was not very large with the exception of the last night, when there was a good gathering of strangers. The interest, however, was very good. The branch and this district (Eastern Wales) are presided over by Elder Thos. Griffiths, who is an earnest and energetic worker. By the way, there are a number who have removed from this place to Gloucester, and a few to Llanelly, making the branch rather small, but the few left are doing their best to keep the work prominently before the people. There is ample scope for missionary labor in that part of the country and Gloucester, and we hope the time is not far distant when a capable, zealous elder will be located there. My wants were amply provided for at the home of Bro. Griffiths, Sr. Griffiths and little Nellie making my sojourn with them very pleasant. While in this place I received the sad tidings of President McKinley's death. The people of Great Britain seemed to take the sad news almost as hard as the people in the states; flags were half-mast, special services were held in churches and chapels, and the press paid feeling and elequent tributes to his memory and expressed great indignation at this outrage, the revolting fruit of anarchy.

I next stopped at Cardiff; spoke twice in their little hall; had quite an interesting audience on both occasions. Bro. Gould and wife and Bro. Bevans and wife are still endeavoring to uphold the banner of King Immanuel despite many trying circumstances, but we have reason to believe that there is a good future for Cardiff yet. We hope Bro. William Lewis, if he comes to Wales, will locate with his family in this place, as it would give the branch an impetus.

On the 18th of September, I arrived in Llanelly. I was pleased to meet with Evan Davis and wife, who have done so much in the years gone by in providing for the missionary's comforts, also Sr. Treharne and her daughters, and Sr. Elizabeth Lloyd, also Arthur Edwards and wife. The former was in very poor health, but all seemed alive in the work of the Lord.

The district conference, which was held on the 21st and 22d ult, was a profitable and encouraging one, and was fairly attended by the Saints in the district. Bishop Kelley was in attendance and rendered valuable aid by his wise counsel and instruction. Bro. D. Lewis was elected president. I remained after conference and held a few meetings in the Saints' chapel. By the way, Bro. Kelley did his best to pronounce the word Llanelly. Had he been able to pronounce the following: Gilfach Goch, Aberystwigth and Machyulleth, Abergeirch, there would have been some hope of him getting over Llanelly.

I am pleased to say that Gwilym Davies, David Thomas, Edward Williams, Thomas Philips and wife, and William Morris, of Poutyeates, are striving to keep the "campfire blazing" in their respective localities but have much opposition and bigotry to contend with. We hope that there will be a good man appointed to labor there and a good branch built up.

At Aberaman I found Bro. Evan Lewis and wife with one or two others standing faithfully at their post of duty, but the branch is in rather poor condition; one elder and another officer did not show up during my stay there. We are of the opinion that a little labor from the missionary will adjust matters and the branch will rally from its present lethargy. Bro. Lewis and wife are thoughtful of the wants of the ministry and provide a home for them, also pay their tithes and freewill offerings, which is very commendable.

The branch in Porth is in fair condition spiritually and is presided over by Bro. John Jenkins, whose efforts are ably supplemented by David Morris and David Edwards. Sr. Bessie Bishop has charge of the Sunday school, whose efforts are successful in producing fruit. Sr. Bishop, wife of our late Bro. Alma Bishop, is in poor health, however. She and her sons and daughters are alive to the interests of the work. My wants during my sejourn in Porth were looked after by them and duly appreciated.

On my way to Nantyglo, I called at Merthyr and visited my cousin and family, who gave me a kind reception with a pressing invitation to call again. The branch at Nantyglo is under the care of Brn. Thomas Jones and Evans. They have a nice, convenient place of meeting, and they are lively stones in the building. We truly enjoyed our short visit with them. Elder John Jones is resident here. He, too, makes it his business to obey the temporal law as well as the spiritual law. The Saints here, as well as in all parts of Wales and London, did not forget that an elder required money as well as faith to travel on English railroads.

On the way to Manchester I stopped off at Birmingham and had a council with Bishop Taylor, C. H. Caton, J. E. Meredith, and Charles Walton, district officials, on church matters, during which a kindly and loving spirit was manifested. The district conference held at Manchester on the 5th and 6th inst. was fairly attended. The business session was scarcely up to the work in some respects, but the Sunday services were excellent. Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., resigned the presidency of this district after a faithful service of twenty-five years. During that time he has been a father to the Saints and a protector to the work. His assiduous efforts have been highly appreciated by the Saints under his care. As a matter of course, old age is creeping on, but under the providence of God there are many years of continued usefulness before him yet. We sincerely hope that he will live to a good old age. Bro. Henry Greenwood, who has been vice president for many years, was elected president for the ensuing six months. I need not comment on this brother's faithfulness, as that is, as it has been for years, well known to the Saints of this land.

On the morning of the 12th inst. I arrived in Glasgow. Was met at the station by our young brother and missionary, John Rushton. Reached Hamilton shortly afterward. On the Sabbath we held three meetings, at night in the hall, where we were greeted with a large and interesting audience. Again at eight o'clock on the street, Bro. John and I preached to a good and attentive company of about two hundred, notwithstanding the cold and inclement weather.

Brn. Miller, Porteous, and Skene are doing all in their power to get the gospel before the people, and have truly worked up a great interest here, the best I have seen in all Europe. Better attention could not be given to the preacher than we received here. The large crowds stand on the streets perfeetly quiet, so much so that you could almost hear a pin drop throughout the entire discourse. If this interest continues there will be a great ingathering in this land by and by. The weather is very unfavorable at present. Rain, rain, every day. We were at Carluke last night, where there is quite an interest, which should be kept up by all means. This is a small town twelve miles away from Hamilton and about twenty-four from Glasgow.

We regret to learn of the severe illness of Bro. C. R. Duncan, as he is one of my "boys" in the gospel. I baptized him twenty-three years ago this coming sixth day of April. I have felt proud of him because of his faithful record he has made in the service of his Master. We would be glad to have the Lord preserve his life a few years longer; however, we feel to bow to the will of him who doeth all things well to those who trust him.

By request of John J. Watkins, I called on David Philips, Pengam, South Wales. I was kindly received and they urged me to come and see them oft, and they would be glad to have me come and stay with them for days at a time if I so desired.

Yours in the conflict,
GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

WHEELING, W. Va., Oct. 21.

Editors Herald:—I am much pleased and blessed by reading of the advancement of the Lord's warfare. The blessings which have come into my life since being obedient to the word of the Lord have been many. In gleaning the words of eternal truth is the only anchor by which hope is made secure to my soul.

I am pleased to note the work of a Religio Society, and have hoped it might have been begun years ago. The gospel is bearing fruit among us as a branch of God's people, by which many are made followers of the risen Christ. We know the leaven by which the blessings of the Lord are obtained is beginning to work.

May I prove faithful is my desire.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Fall, gentle rain, in blessed, brimming drops;
Cool with thy kiss the city's burning streets;
Moisten the meadows where the hot sun beats,
And fall refreshing on the thirsty crops;
The warm wind for thy cordial greeting stops;
The panting flock a merry welcome bleats;
The famished fields unfold a thousand sweets;
The grass bends dimpling on the mountain tops!"

STEAMER AUSTRALIA, Sept. 21.

Sister Walker:—In keeping with the request of our many friends to "be sure and write us of your voyage," I have absented myself from our company who are sitting or reclining in deck-chairs in a little group on the upper deck singing cheerfully, while our good ship glides smoothly over the moonlit waters, this pleasant Sunday evening.

This is the third day since we gradually swung out from pier 7 of San Francisco, leaving a goodly group of Saints thereon with uplifted kerchiefs waving us a friendly goodbye. The morning was overcast, and at the time of our leaving, the heavy fog had condensed itself into a drizzling rain, but only for a short time. There was a fresh breeze while in the harbor, which led us to believe there was more outside, but the farther out we went the lighter the wind and smoother the sea. Most of our party wished to see the waves in their grandeur on the "bar," but were disappointed. It was as smooth as a pond, and has been ever since until today. the little whitecaps played at a game of "hide and seek" on the broad surface of the waters, but all is serene again this evening. The under current or "swell" gives our ship a pleasant swinging motion, just enough to keep us from forgetting that we are at sea. and rocks us to sleep as gently as a mother's lullaby. I never before saw the ocean on or near the coast so smooth as it has been this time. I did not know that it ever was so smooth and for such a distance. The stewardess remarked yesterday morning, "This voyage must have been gotten up to order." There are only about twenty cabin passengers, some of whom are residents of Papeete. and former acquaintances of ours; viz., Mrs. Atwater and niece; Mr. Droulette and daughter; Mr. Levy, the pearl merchant; a son of the late Captain Hart; and Mr. and Mrs. Cady, the Advent missionaries. These together with all others, are very friendly and

During the forepart of the evening the promenade deck is like a children's playground. Some promenade while others run and skip, and altogether it is pleasant and jovial with the chatter and laughter of the young people. Gradually the upper deck is deserted and the spacious dining-room becomes inhabited and converted into a drawing-room. There is a piano for the amusement of the passengers, and the room echoes with music, both vocal and instrumental, and by times with the mirthful merrymaking over their table games.

The wife and family of the present French governor of the islands, consisting of three children with their governess, are on board, also the governor's secretary's fiancee. But they cannot join in the social relationship of ordinary passengers; they must needs, because of their station in life, or that of the husband, remain in partial seclusion, a dignified solitude that cannot exactly be called "splendid misery." So far we have not seen them except at meal time (they come in and eat when the rest do, but at a table by themselves) until today, I saw them in a little group on the side of the deck opposite to that of the other passengers.

Some one of the authorities of the ship proposed having services this morning, and invited Mr. Burton to preach, and one of the young ladies kindly officiated at the piano. In the afternoon we sighted a sail; a large ship making her way slowly towards San Francisco, or in that direction.

Monday Evening .- Another beautiful day has passed. Awnings have been put all over the upper deck, for the sun is getting too warm, or giving too much heat to be comfortable. When in the shade the air is soft and balmy, so even I can go out bare-headed. Passengers are donning their light, loose dresses. So far the voyage has been to me one of solid comfort. But we try not to be lazy. This is my routine: The first of the morning is spent in the ladies' parlor on the main deck, where, through the open windows and doors, I look out on the beautiful blue ocean and fill and refill my lungs with the pure sea air, while waiting for breakfast. The first hour or two after breakfast is spent in reading the Tahitian Testament, with the other as an interpreter when needed, and thus gain the understanding of the language. Then sew awhile both before and after lunch. When tired sitting on a high round stool, without any back, (the only sitting place in our room where I sew.) I put the sewing away, get some pleasant reading matter, doff shoes, loosen clothes, and drop comfortably in my narrow bed (Joseph's bed is on the other side of the room, and a little wider than mine) and enjoy a quiet read, or perchance drop to sleep, which is not so quiet. At five o'clock the gong sounds to get ready for dinner at six, whereupon we fix ourselves up to look as genteel as possible in whatever we choose to wear, and at the second sounding sally forth to dinner. That being through with, all repair to the upper deck and join in the general promenade.

Thursday Morning.—One week out. Are in the doldrums today. Will probably cross the equator tomorrow evening. It is dull and cloudy today and there is more sea than there has been. If we were in a ship the size of the Evanelia, she would be tossed about some, but this large ship pays little heed to so small a sea. However, the waiters wet the tablecloths so the dishes would not slide. We were all treated to strawberries yesterday morning and the morning before. Brn. Gould, Gilbert, and Burton keep up a lively "click" during the forenoons with their typewriters. Sr. Gilbert has not been very well for a day or two, but not seasick.

This morning the cabin, as well as the passengers, are being attired in linen to cover the crimson velvet.

There does not seem to be newsy items enough to make an interesting letter, so I will defer for the present, after saying to Sr. Palfrey, who has manifested a glowing interest in my Book of Mormon project, that while studying over the matter as to just how to proceed, and making the attempt to outline the first lesson, my mind was enlightened so that I saw much more plainly than before in what manner to proceed, which will be given in due time in its place after being tested; and also that we casually learned through the stewardess that Bro. and Sr. Peterson intend coming back to America on this return boat, or so Sr. Peterson informed her while in Papeete the last time.

Sunday Afternoon, Sept. 20 -I find myself all alone here in this large dining saloon. The passengers are indulging in their afternoon siesta. I have had mine; got through quicker than the rest. Probably began sooner. This is a most beautiful day. Since Friday we have had a strong, cool breeze, though it did not get up much of a sea. Today the wind is much lighter and warmer, causing us to realize that we are in the delightful South Sea, having crossed the equator yesterday morning early. Another addition to the enjoyment of this Lord's day is the good sermon preached this morning by Bro. A. H. Smith, "Christ," the subject, and the Holy Spirit was present bearing witness to the truth. I think I can safely say that all felt its peaceful influence, and manifested eager interest. I trust it will result in a pleasant reception for him into Papeete, saying nothing of the farther reaching results. Bro. Smith has been well all the voyage, and enjoys himself pretty well; homesick sometimes, but probably he will speak for himself. and, never having made a similar trip, may find more to write about than I.

Papeete, Oct. 5 — Well, here we are at our Papeete home again, having arrived Wednesday, October 2, and to tell the truth, it seems more like home to me than anywhere since I left here, except Mount Olivet. There have been some very pleasant changes made in the house, though, and when ceiled overhead it will be as comfortable as there is any need for.

The native Saints gave us a cordial reception. There were two carriages in waiting for us at the dock. When we were seated within, Bro. Peterson, with Metuaore and Varoa, who were on the shore waiting while the ship was being warped in, told the driver to drive us down around the water-front up by the Catholic chapel around through the market and back to Tarona, making quite a nice little drive. As we stepped on the porch of our own church, the Saints, who were standing in rows on either side, the brethren on one side and the sisters on the other, commenced to sing and continued singing while we walked up the center of the church, Metuaore going in front and indicating our positions. When the singing was over Metuaore made a greeting speech, and was responded to by all, and then they passed in orderly routine before us and shook hands. First the elders, then the brethren; afterwards the sisters and children. Afterwards there was some general talk, then some more singing and dismissal, and we repaired to the missionary house followed by a few. Our first meal was prepared for us in the feast house. Since then Sr. Gilbert and I have done the cooking, and all eat here at the missionary house. I have not seen Sr. Peterson yet. She is at the hospital; has been having quite a serious time, I learn, but is doing nicely now, though many visitors are not allowed as yet. Bro. John begged permission to take Bro. and Sr. Gilbert to see her last evening. I will go tomorrow sometime. Bro. Peterson spends his days here when not elsewhere, and at night goes and stays with her.

On Thursday evening we attended the "society," as the natives call it. The exercises consisted in singing and recitations, the opening and closing program being similar to any other society. It is not a Religio, but is a very good substitute, and keeps the mind occupied preparing and learning their recitations, and also keeps them from spending the evenings elsewhere. Besides, it teaches them how to conduct a society, all of which are good.

On Friday, yesterday, two carriages were sent here to take us out to Tiona, where we had a pleasant visit. Today I have been delving into trunks somewhat, and making some necessary arrangements for another trip. We all, that is, the company of us who left America together, are to start again for a three or four days' voyage to Rairoa on Tuesday. Our men-folks will miss the oranges and bananas; of course we two women folks will miss them too, but we will not miss so many as they will, therefore our loss will not be so great. The natives provide us with abundance of whatever the market produces. All we have to do is to cook and eat it. And while we are eating breakfast, we hear a great scurrying about in the front of the house. Two of the sisters come in each morning, after we get out in the dining-room, and make all four beds, and sweep and set in order the rooms. Bro. A. H. and Bro. Gould each has a good big bed to himself in one comparatively large room. Joseph's bed is in the front room, and mine is on the side porch, which porch has green lattice-work nearly up to the roof and a Venetian blind across the front. The nights have been so calm and free from mosquitoes, I sleep like a top, breathing in plenty of good fresh air, and just cool enough to sleep well. Bro. and Sr. Gilbert have Haroatea's house close by to sleep in; but this is the general dining-hall, and none are at a loss for an appetite.

I have not written individually to nearly so many as I intended this mail, because our time here is so very limited, and it has been such a short time since we left America. We expect to be in the Paumotus until December. But all mail matter will be forwarded to us, and we will write when an opportunity offers to send it to Papeete, which perhaps will not occur until it is too late for the next month's boat.

The natives seem much pleased because I have become so much more fleshy than when we left here. Metuaore tells them that America is paradise, where they have a great many good things to eat. But we are enjoying the fare here very well at present, —minus good butter. More anon.

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father in his infinite wisdom and mercy to remove from our midst our well-beloved brother and coworker, Bro. William O. Thomas, we hereby wish to tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved members of his family and also his friends. He has always been found a faithful attendant and supporter of the Cheltenham Sunday school, and the loss we have sustained will be long felt by the members of this school. He loved this latter-day work, and was always ready to give a helping hand. He lived the allotted time unto man. And be it,

A SPECIAL APPEAL.

To the Saints Interested in Scotland, Wales, and Scandinavia; Greeting:—I herewith once more appeal to you on behalf of the work in these lands. The following Welsh brethren have responded liberally: Brn. William Bowen, $25; William and David Lewis, each $10; Henry Griffiths of Australia, $5; Bro. Backer, near New Philadelphia, Onio, $5; but we have not received a penny from any of the Scotch or Scandinavian brethren. The following extract from a letter received from Bro. P. Muceus will show the needs of the work in Scandinavia:

"For the last four Sundays I have preached on the streets, where I have had an average attendance of three hundred, and the best of attention, although the weather has been rather cool here. I had splendid liberty and held the audience for nearly two hours each time. Last Sunday evening I preached in a rented hall and had sixty out. It is getting too cold to hold outdoor meetings any longer, so it is necessary to rent some halls this winter. The Utah people are strong, having about forty missionaries here and in Christiania about eight hundred members."

From the above it will be seen what the prospects are in that land for spreading the work. There are but few Saints in all Scandinavia and they are poor; the question is, How can these brethren prosecute the work there through the fall and coming winter when they have not the means to rent halls? Now, it seems to me that if all the Scandinavian Saints will make a sacrifice, and each send a little, that halls can be rented and Brn. Eoge and Muceus be kept preaching every night through the winter. Utah Mormons are putting forth a special effort in this European mission, and the members in Utah supply them with means to enable them to rent halls in almost every town and a house to live in. Is it possible that the Saints of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are not as interested as these mistaken devotees of an apostate church? Think of their having eight hundred members in Christiania alone, and forty missionaries in Norway, and the Reorganization two for all Scandinavia and not one branch.

Now if you Scandinavian Saints in the States will supply means to furnish halls we venture to assure you that there will be some branches established in that country in another year or two. Hence we hope that when you read this appeal you will respond immediately.

To the Scottish Saints in America and Canada. Now we wish to call your attention to the condition of the work in Scotland. We have two missionaries assigned to this field. Bro Rushton has created a great interest in Glasgow, Hamilton, and Carluke by preaching on the streets. I have never seen better interest anywhere than is to be found here, but the weather now is cold and wet, so street preaching is almost impossible, and unless halls can be procured the efforts put forth will be in vain, and it would be a pity to let the interest die out as a number are on the verge of coming into the church.

There are only twelve members in all Scotland and they are doing all they can. In Carluke the people not in the church have been subscribing for a hall, but we cannot get more than half that is needed to defray expenses. Surely when strangers are willing to help, the Saints should not be backward in doing their share. We want to hire halls in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Hamilton, and Carluke, and unless help can be procured the missionaries will have to rest until spring.

The Utah Mormons have twenty-four missionaries in Scotland and a large number of members in many of the big centers, and are creating quite a stir. Here is an opportunity for all the Scottish Saints to manfest their love and interest in their native land, to sacrifice a little of their means to get the gospel before their countrymen. Now, who will be the first to respond? Some of the Scotch brethren, who have been here on a visit, have promised to help the work here, but their promises have not materialized yet. This appeal is to all Saints of whatever nationality who desire to help on the good work in this mission.

Remember this is a day of sacrifice and this gospel must be preached to all nations

A DAUGHTER'S READING.

For those mothers who are anxious that their girls should read wisely rather than widely, there is a valuable article in the Nowember number of the Delineator describing "The Book Life of a Girl." It shows how, with a little assistance, her book reading can be so manipulated that she will be broadened out by her reading without the necessity of later being obliged to unlearn or forget pernicious books that may only be pernicious by having been read in advance of the time when she could comprehend their deeper and fuller meaning.

The recrudescence of anarchy in this country has occupied much space in recent issues of our leading magazines but in none of them has the problem been treated more rationally than in "The Gospel of Destruction"—the title of the leading symposium of the Arena for November. Dr. Felix L Oswald, A. M., discusses "Its Evolutionary Aspects" and Mrs. E. H. Roberts, the wife of a Congregational Congregation. tional minister, presents what she conceives to be its only effective "cure." The Rev. James H. Batten writes a little pessimistically but instructively on "The Failure of Freedom." Joseph Dana Miller considers the "Futilities of Reformers" in a timely article, and a distinguished educator of New England has a contribution on "The Ethics of the Land Question" that will delight the followers of the late Henry George. "The Office of the Preacher," by Stanton Kirkham Davis, and "Some Ancient New Women," by Ella S. Stewart, are excellent papers. Government ownership of the telegraph and telephone is discussed in a brief interview with Justice Walter Clark, LL. D., and Will Allen Dromgoole introduces the new "fiction" feature of the magazine with an admirable negro character sketch. Prof. Frank Par-sons's series of articles on "Great Movements of the Nineteenth Century" and Miss F. A. Kellor's study of "The Criminal Negro" are both brought to a close in this issue. Editor Flower's comments on timely topics and reviews of the latest books are interesting, as usual. (25 cents, at news-stands. The Alliance Publishing Co., Fifth Avenue, New York.)

THE first snow of the season fell in Lamoni on the night of November 2. which was quite a surprise, as the 2d was a very pleasant and mild day. Another light snow fell on the night of the 4th.

PROFESSOR HERBERT SALISBURY. of Graceland College, placed on our desk a copy of Evening Dreams, words by Grace Salisbury and music by Florence Salisbury, sisters of the Professor. We are pleased to note this token of talent in our young sisters Grace and Florence.

YALE recently celebrated its bicentennial. It conferred honorary degrees upon a long list of prominent men.

LEON CZOLGOSZ, the assassin of President McKinley, paid the penalty of his crime on October 29, when he was electricuted in the prison at Auburn, New York. Just before he died he said he was glad he committed the deed.

WHO WAS PHILIP, OF ACTS EIGHTH CHAPTER?

It is stated in this eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles that while the persecution raged about Jerusalem, the followers of Jesus were scattered throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles.

There was a Philip named in the second four of the Twelve, as given in Matthew 10:3. But as this places this Philip with those who remained at Jerusalem, he is not the Philip of Acts 8.

In Acts six a history is given of the calling, choosing, and ordaining seven who were to have oversight over the maintenance of those dependent upon the daily ministrations. One of these was Philip.

It is not stated to what specific office Philip was ordained. But in reading the account of what occurred after the persecution began, we find him acting in the calling of an evangelist; and notice that those who were scattered "went everywhere preaching the word." And further, that Philip in exercising his ministry visited Samaria and "preached Christ unto them," and wrought miracles, such as casting out unclean spirits. and healing those sick of the palsy and lame.

Taking our latter day teaching into the account and applying it, we discover that the things which Philip did were such as come within the province of the Melchisedec priesthood, to which belongs the right to lay on hands, cast out evil spirits, heal the sick, and confer the Holy This reasoning would dispose of the idea that Philip was of the lesser priesthood and a deacon only, as neither priest, teacher, nor deacon, could perform the acts which Philip is stated to have done, according to sections 17 and 104 of Doctrine and Covenants. We therefore conclude that Philip of Acts 8 was an elder, or an evangelist holding the same priesthood as that of the apostles, but not the same office; that is, he was not of the twelve apostles.

The fact that extraordinary things were wrought under the ministry of Philip is clear if we note the attitude of Simon toward him, as shown in Acts 8: 13.

Besides this, the historian who wrote the Acts distinctly calls Philip an evangelist in Acts 21: 8, and identifies him as "one of the seven;" so that there is no need to mistake who is meant.

The time stated in the margin, of the occurrences mentioned in Acts 8, is A. D. 34, and the one of Acts 21:8, is A. D. 60, or twenty-six years after; but as no account is given of any second ordination of Philip it is quite certain that his ordination at the start was to the work of an evangelist.

Smith in his Bible Dictionary writes of Philip as "the evangelist;" and he is so treated of in the American Encyclopedia.

It by no means follows that Philip held only the lesser priesthood, because Peter and John were sent down to Samaria by the apostolic quorum when they heard of Philip's work at that city. It was a most natural thing to do. And it may be true that the information the apostles received, was sent them by Philip, with a request for help, such a case as frequently occurs now among the ministerial force in the field. The cry, "Come over and help us," began a long time ago, and was likely in vogue before this episode at Samaria. Philip being an evangelist, had by his preaching roused a great interest in the city; many heard and obeyed, Philip became wearied by constant labor, and feeling sure of his ground, desired aid; he sent a message for help, and the apostles considerately sent him two of their quorum; to these Philip courteously yielded the enlarged spiritual work of laying on of hands for confirmation and the conferment of the Holy Spirit, just as he should have done; just as one of the seventy, or other evangelist would now do in similar circumstances.

As to why the apostles sent Peter and John, instead of leaving Philip to finish his work alone does not appear; but we are safe in concluding that in the exercise of their spiritual supervision over the work of evangelization they deemed it to be the necessary thing to do.

We are frequently asked why this or that was done, or why this or that was not done, when the reasons for not doing or doing can have been known only to the divine mind, or to the individuals who required or commanded them to be done, or left un-"What has been revealed done. belongs to man; what has not been revealed belongs to God."

Furthermore, according to section 17, paragraph 8, it appertains to the duties of an apostle as an elder to so lay on hands.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER.

To inquire into and become acquainted with things is the privilege and province of the human mind. To become familiar with the affairs in which men are specially interested is their duty.

It is the privilege of the members of the church to become acquainted with the general affairs of the church. Its doctrines, public movements, leading men and their views, are all subjects for proper inquiry upon the part of all. And as it is manifestly out of the question for the church at large to become acquainted with all leading men, their views, and the public affairs of the church in which they are participators, by actual personal contact and knowledge, it remains for them to gain information of those things by means of the press of the church.

The HERALD is the property of the church. The real estate, buildings, presses, types, and all other property attaching to the printing plant located at Lamoni, are all the property of the Saints as a body. The poorest and the weakest, as well as the richest and the strongest, have an equal interest in the HERALD. It does not belong to those who may be installed as business manager, editor, press-These men, binders, or compositors. are all present at the place of occupation temporarily. They may be here to-day, and elsewhere to-morrow. They have personally only the same interest that other members have; except that while they are employed about the business of publishing the HERALD, Hope, Autumn Leaves, and the books the church may need, they are under obligation to use their every power to make the different matters intrusted to their care successful.

The HERALD is the church organ, the church paper, the official channel through which by means of the press the church may be reached. While the Ensign, as a property, also belongs to the church, it is not the official organ. Neither is the Glad Tidings. And while each of these papers may be doing a good work, as we believe they are, they do not fill the position of the HERALD.

As a matter of fact the HERALD ought to be found in the house of every family in the church, without exception. The price of subscription is by no means excessive. It is, as it ought to be, within the reach of every man who has public spirit enough to take it. It costs more to feed one mouth of a family with tobacco for a year than it would to pay for all the church papers, and enough over to pay for the best and newsiest weekly secular newspaper published in the United States. Foot it up at five cents per day expended for tobacco, and see. Try it once and find out how the whole family mind may be fed at less than it costs to feed one mouth with an altogether useless article.

Besides this, the HERALD is the printed method employed as an aid to bring about a unity of understanding among the Saints, laity as well as ministry, by a proper exchange of ideas, a proper discussion of topics about which there may be variety of opinions.

We therefore enjoin it upon all who may be now taking the HERALD to see that their own subscription is paid, and also to urge it upon those who may not be taking it to subscribe for it at once. Or, if you know of those who are not taking the HERALD whom you think ought to take it, send their names and addresses to the Herald Publishing House that we may send them sample copies of this issue, and so help the work along.

Not only this, it must be remembered that by action of the Board of Publication there is quite a large number of the HERALDS going free to the families of elders in the field who are not expected to pay for it; and also to quite a number of the Saints who are so poor that they can not afford to subscribe for it; but whom the Board think should have the benefit of reading it.

It would be an act of commendable charity for those who may be able to subscribe for one, two, or more copies, to be thus sent out to the needy ones, and so help them and the office as well to bear the burden. Is there not wisdom in this?

THE following extracts are from a letter received from a good sister, whose name we do not give for proper reasons; and will emphasize the teaching of the HERALD in the past in which honorable, faithful, and prayerful living have been enjoined:

Oh! how my heart leaps with joy because I can write you stating that my dear mother, who, about one year ago, was nearly wild because I stood firm as a rock in the latter-day work, to-day is herself immovable in the faith. If you only knew what I have suffered in my mind for her and how I prayed that she would change and see and read. Now my prayers that I offered for her have been answered, and she has read and is a faithful student of many of our books. Among them are the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Autobiography of Joseph Luff, all the sermons advertised in the Ensign, and other small books that I have sent for.

I must tell you that mother was a firm Methodist. You know how hard it is to reach some, especially when they think that they have possessed holiness, which she did; now she stands as firm in the latter-day work as any one can. Why, she is so happy when she can talk about it to any one and induce them to read her books, that truthfulness and earnestness cause her face to fairly beam with joy.

I have an uncle who professes holiness. I have tried my best, seemingly, to persuade him; he will have nothing to do with me, nor come near our home. He told mother some time ago that we were going to the devil; but mother induced one of his sons to take a "Voice of Warning" home, and the last I have heard is, he is reading it. Isn't that good news? Do pray for him and his family.

One of our neighbors, a very rich man, told me some time ago that if I continued advocating this work I would not be respected by people as I then was; and if I joined this church I would lose all my friends. I told him that if the whole world rejected me, I would stand firm. Later he told me that if any of our elders came to my home, to send them to his house and he would give them the best he had. He is reading some of our books; is a Methodist, but admits that he is not satisfied, and comes here to talk about our work. And, think of it, he told me the other day that if I would go and get a place to speak in and explain our doctrine to the people, he would give me twenty-five dollars to help pay for the hall.

A man of considerable means offered me one dollar the other day to help pay for a place in which to explain our work. He says that now he enjoys hearing it.

When I first let my belief in the latter-day work become public I was ridiculed on every side, but the clouds are rapidly passing away and most of those who vowed they would have nothing more to do with me, called me ignorant and crazy, a know-nothing, and other names, are nearly all changing, and many are coming again, and a lady asked me last Sunday evening, why I did not preach and let the work be understood.

FROM a late statistical article on the census, it appears that in a population of 76,303,387 in the United States, that there are 1,800,000 more men and boys than women and girls, 512 males and 488 females in every 1,000 people.

The greatest excess of men is to be found in the far west, in the great agricultural and mining districts. In Minnesota and Nebraska there were at least 54 men out of every 100 people for a long time, from 55 to 58 in the Dakotas, and from 60 to 68 in most of the regions south and southwest. The ratio in Montana was once as great as 81 out of 100, and even in 1890 was 66½ to 38½. A slow, steady tendency towards equality has been observable, however, except in Utah, where the excess of men kept below the national average until 1880 and then increased only slightly. The connection between this fact and polygamy is too obvious to need pointing out.

FROM the supplement of the Clipper, Beaver, Utah, for October 12, we clip:

The Josephite meetings are interesting a great many of our people at the present. Whether any souls have been won over to the faith we are not able to say but the attendance has been very large and of the best class.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Jay Hoffman, Bazine, Kansas, writes under date of October 29:

The work here is in fair shape. Have bought a lot and we are trying to build a church. Do a little missionary work as well as looking after the branch.

In a letter dated at Baxter, Iowa, October 29, Bro. H. A. McCoy has this to say of the debate between Bro. J. W. Wight and Elder Will Ellmore, which took place at Eagle Grove,

So far as our side was concerned, the debate was a success. Mr. Elimore acknowledged he had met a champion worthy of his steel. Mr. Eilmore was a gentleman in de-bate, having no smut mill in his vocabulary; and those who were privileged to attend this debate had a rare treat, as each debater strove for the mistery in a fair and legitimate manner. The only trouble with Mr. Eilmore was repetition. He took substantially the same grounds he did in the Eivin-Ellmore debate, as reported in your columns. I believe much prejudice was removed by the debate, and that good will result from it. The Saints rejoiced at the masterly way their champion met and overcame all objections made by his opponent to the church we represent. We believe such debates as this one do good to the cause.

Bro. E. L. Kelley writes from Manchester, England, October 21: We have arranged for passage homeward on Campania, leaving Liverpool on Saturday, November 16. Fairly well.

LECTURES ON CHURCH HISTORY. NO. 6.

BY HEMAN C SMITH, CHURCH HISTORIAN. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, September 22, 1901. Reported for HERALD by Sr. Apple Allen.

On a former occasion, you will remember that we spoke of a Mr. Knight, who had supplied Joseph and his wife with provisions from time to time while they were at work on the translation of the plates. Immediately after the organization of the church in Seneca county, April 6, 1830, Joseph paid a visit to Mr. Knight and family, who resided in Broome county, New York, during this same month of April, 1830. He tells us that Mr. He tells us that Mr. Knight and his family were Universalists. And right here it occurs to me that this is very peculiar that a Universalist, believing in the ultimate salvation of all mankind, would think it necessary to do anything towards bringing forth this latter-day work, when from its beginning its advocates have preached a conditional salvation. It occurs to me there is no other way of accounting for it only that some power higher than his own had moved this man to do what he did. It could not be the love of gain that he was sacrificing for, for no remuneration was expected; it could not be love for the final salvation of mankind, for he did not expect his acts to benefit men in that way, believing that they would be saved whether this latter-day work was a success or not, as he was a Universalist, believing in the final salvation of all men. He was moved by some power, and I am willing to believe a divine power, to do the good he did and to assist in this work.

Joseph says, however, that he found Mr. Knight and family willing to reason with him in regard to the hope of salvation. They were willing to talk the matter over in a friendly manner, and finally after Joseph's visit to them in April, 1830, they became interested in the work and many in the neighborhood where Mr. Knight lived be came interested also. Joseph and others began holding services in the neighborhood and people came out to They began to hold prayer services and those who desired would pray publicly in these meetings. We have no record of such meetings being held prior to this time, and this seems to be the beginning of what we call prayer meetings, where people pray vocally in public. There was a son of Mr. Knight who became interested and finally he said he would take part in these meetings, but from time to time he postponed it and did not engage in the prayer service. He told Joseph, when Joseph was talking bled at the place and they witnessed to him about not complying with his resolution, that he thought he would wait until he could go by himself in the woods to pray, and the next day after he had failed to perform that duty in public he retired to the woods and tried to pray there, but there was a power took hold of him, we are told, that caused him much uneasiness of mind, and he found himself unable to pray. I mention this for two reasons, and one of them is that we may learn a lesson from this, not to postpone the time when we are resolved that a duty belongs to us. This man had been postponing his duty from time to time. One thing that we can all learn is that every time we hesitate to perform a duty when we are convinced that it is a duty we become weaker by the postponing. Everv time a man gives way to this spirit of procrastination he gives away part of his strength, while every time a man steps forward in the discharge of his duty he gains strength. It is not to be expected that he can do better tomorrow because he is stronger to-day than he will be to-morrow if he hesitates, while a prompt discharge of duty gives a man strength, hence it is foolishness to wait. I want this lesson impressed upon your minds, it is foolishness to expect to do better by and by when you are weaker than you are to day; when if you would go forward in the discharge of your duty you would be stronger. So with this young Newel Knight, we are told, he deferred praying until next morning, when he retired into the woods; where (according to his own account afterwards) he made several attempts to pray but could scarcely do so, feeling that he had not done his duty, but that he should have prayed in the pres ence of others. He began to feel uneasy, and continued to feel worse both in mind and body, until upon reaching his own house his appearance was such as to alarm his wife very much. He requested her to go and bring me to him. I went and found him suffering very much in his mind, and his body acted upon in a very strange manner. His visage and limbs distorted and twisted in every shape and appearance possible to imagine; and finally he was caught up off the floor of the apartment and tossed about most

You will all come to the conclusion by this description that the man was possessed of an evil spirit. He had given way from time to time to this influence and it had gotten control of him, and when he undertook to do his duty he was too much in the grasp of the evil one to do it, and the evil one took possession of him in mind and body and used him at his will. Let us be careful that we do not give way in the time of duty to this spirit of procrastination lest Satan get the advantage of us. I shall not take time to quote all this occurrence, but suffice it to say, in this condition Joseph found him. It was noised about the neighborhood and some others assemthis distortion of body, and the condition of mind, and were acquainted fully with the circumstances. Joseph said he succeeded in getting hold of his hand and as soon as he did so Mr. Knight recognized the condition he was in and asked Joseph to cast the devil out. So Joseph rebuked the evil one and he immediately departed from him.

There are many occasions in the history of the church where power like this has been manifested, but I mention this one because it is said to be the first miracle ever performed in the church—the beginning of the marvelous power of God in the church in the working of miracles. After Joseph had cast the devil out of him we are told, he said:

I now began to feel a most pleasing sensation resting upon me, and immediately the visions of heaven were open to my view.

Of a subsequent event Joseph says of Newel Knight:

All of a sudden, a vision of futurity burst upon him. He saw there represented the great work which through my instrumentality was yet to be accomplished. He saw heaven opened, and beheld the Lord Jesus Christ seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high, and had it made plain to his understanding that the time would come when he would be admitted into his presence, to enjoy his society forever and ever.

What a glorious manifestation of God's power this was to a man that had yielded to the power of the evil one to the extent that he could be controlled by him. He was controlled by that power until through the servant of God the evil one was cast out, and when he departed the visions of heaven were opened and joy and peace were his, with the assurance of their continuance in the ages to come.

To my mind there may be a great many others in like condition who can not control evil influences; they have enveloped the mind so long that it would be impossible for them to extricate themselves without the power of God exercised in their behalf. It occurs to me that it is a very uncomforting doctrine for us to believe that such things can not exist in the church We are told that we can have no working of miracles with us at this What an uncomforting doctrine to believe that men that are in the condition of Mr. Knight can find no relief open to them. I have found many in my travels, you can find them perhaps in this audience, you can find them everywhere, that are partaking of things that are evil and doing wrong, and they confess frankly that they can not help it. They say, "I can not quit it, I have tried and failed," when talking about certain habits. You can not quit it, you say. Is it not a pitiable condition to be in if God has withdrawn himself, and though you desire to quit there is no power to come to you to give you strength, peace, happiness, glory, and satisfaction in place of being handled by the evil power to which you are subject? I can not believe this and at the same time believe that God is no respecter of persons.

When we are talking about miracles there is a mystery thrown about it by some. It is mysterious in a sense. A miracle is what? A miracle is something that is marvelous, that is all. If something happens and you can understand the cause of it, if you can trace it back and see what causes brought about the result, it is not a miracle to you. If you see something and can not trace it back and see what causes produced it, that is miraculous to you. What does it mean then if there are no miracles? It means that God is doing nothing that is not perfectly comprehensible to man, nothing but what can be traced back to its beginning. If nothing is doing but what can be traced to its cause by man then there is no higher power than man's at work. Just as certainly as God does something that is beyond our comprehension, so certainly a miracle has been performed. I can not believe that God has ceased to work in this way. Many have had manifestations of God's power; you are acquainted with the power of God to a large extent in your own bodies and minds. From the beginning, as related in the instance of Mr. Knight. the work has spread and grown in its marvelous character as well as in other respects.

In June, 1830, the first conference of the church was held. I am informed by some that there were only about thirty persons there. In April there were only six when the church was organized. That was a small beginning, a large increase however from April to June and yet their numbers were very small, considering the wonderful work that has been done. They were not known at large, their reputation was only a local reputation, and not a very good one at that, but from a small beginning the work has gone on and on, it has reached every part of America and in many other parts of the world the word has been proclaimed, and now from the rock-bound coasts of Maine to the golden strands of California, from the spicy groves of the sunny South, to the frozen regions of the North, from the islands of the ocean, and from foreign lands, east and west, north and south, comes back the testimony in thunder tones, We know these things are true. Joseph is not the only witness, for they are legion.

Shortly after this, persecution became stronger than it had been before. Joseph had been persecuted before, but now his persecutors were planning to have him arrested, and undertook to find some pretext for prosecuting him. They had him arraigned in Chenango county, New York. We have no time to go through all the particulars of this trial, but strange to say that it was first suggested by a minister of the gospel, who began this persecution. They arraigned Joseph before the court and tried to prove that he had taken property from individuals by illegal means, but they failed to prove it and he was acquitted by the court. Immediately after he was acquitted by one court he was arrested under other charges and taken to Broome county and there another trial was had. was hurried from one place to another and they tried by every means possible to convict him of some kind of crime. I shall not give you Joseph's version of this matter, but the words of Mr. Reed. He and Mr. Davidson had been retained by Joseph's friends, Mr. Knight in particular, to defend Mr. Reed says: Joseph.

Those bigots soon made up a false accusation against him and had him arraigned before Joseph Chamberlain, a justice of the peace, a man that was always ready to deal out justice to all, and a man of great discernment of mind. The case came on about ten o'clock a. m. I was called upon to defend the prisoner. The prosecutors employed the best counsel they could get, and ransacked the town of Bainbridge and county of Chenango for witnesses that would swear hard enough to convict the prisoner; but they entirely Yes sir, let me say to you that not one blemish nor spot was found against his character. He came from that trial, notwithstanding the mighty efforts that were made to convict him of crime by his vigilant persecutors, with his character unstained by even the appearance of guilt. The trial closed about twelve o'clock at night. After a few moments deliberation, the court pro-nounced the words "not guilty," and the pris-oner was discharged. But alas! the Devil not satisfied with his defeat, stirred up a man not unlike himself, who was more fit to dwell among the fiends of hell than to belong to the human family, to go to Colesville and get another writ, and take him to Broome county for another trial. They were sure they could send that boy to hell, or to Texas, they did not care which; and in half an hour after he was discharged by the court he was arrested again and on the way to Colesville for another trial. I was again called upon by his friends to defend him against his malignant prosecutors, and clear him from the false charges they had preferred against him. I made every reasonable excuse I could, as I was nearly worn down through fatigue and want of sleep, as I had been engaged in lawsuits for two days and nearly the whole of two nights. But I saw the persecution was great against him. And here let me say, Mr. Chairman, singular as it may seem, while Mr. Knight was pleading with me to go, a peculiar impression or thought struck my mind, that I must go and defend him, for he was the Lord's anointed.

A peculiar impression for a lawyer to have, was it not? He was prompted to defend Joseph for he was the Lord's anointed.

I did not know what it meant, but thought I must go and clear the Lord's anointed. I said I would go; and started with as much faith as the apostles had when they could remove mountains, accompanied by Father Knight, who was like the old patriarchs that followed the ark of God to the city of David. We rode on until we came to the house of Hezekiah Peck, where a number of Mormon women had assembled, as I was informed, for the purpose of praying for the deliverance of the prophet of the Lord. The women came out to our wagon, and Mrs. Smith among the rest. O my God, sir; what were my feelings when I saw that woman who had but a few days before given herself, heart and hand, to be a consort for life, and that so soon her crimson cheeks must be wet with tears that came streaming from her eyes. Yes sir, it seemed that her very heartstrings would be broken with grief. My feelings, sir, were moved with pity and sorrow for the afflicted; and on the other hand they were wrought up to the highest pitch of indignation against those fiends of hell who had thus caused the innocent to suffer.

The next morning about ten o'clock the court was organized. The prisoner was to be tried by three justices of the peace, that his departure out of the county might be made sure. Neither talents nor money were wanting to insure them success. They employed the ablest lawyer in that county, and introduced twenty or thirty witnesses before dark, but proved nothing. They then sent out runners and ransacked the hills and vales, grog shops and ditches, and gathered tocome from hell and had been whipped by the soot boy thereof, which they brought forward testify one after another, but with no to testify one after another, but with no better success than before, although they wrung and twisted into every shape, in trying to tell something that would criminate the prisoner. Nothing was proven against him whatever. Having got through with the examination of their witnesses about two o'clock, in the morning, the case was argued about two hours. There was not one particle of testimony against the prisoner. No sir, he came out like the three children from the fiery furnace, without the smell of fire upon his garments. The court deliberated upon the case for half an hour with closed doors, and then we were called in. The court arraigned the prisoner and said: "Mr. Smith, we have had your case under consideration, examined the testimony and find nothing to condemn you, and therefore you are discharged."

I have read this long extract in this particular place concerning these persecutions and trials, because some of the stories that were told in that court, some of the things attempted to be proven at this trial, some of the stories about Joseph Smith claiming property because of an alleged revelation are told all over the land to-day notwithstanding the failure to prove them. It seems they ought to be suppressed because they failed to prove them then, but when they are talked about and passed on from mouth to mouth, they lose nothing in the exchange. Here is the testimony of Mr. Reed, we presented it instead of the testimony of Joseph himself because he was not directly concerned.

Now comes another peculiar trial to Joseph, one which seems to be even worse than the persecution of the enemy. Oliver Cowdery, his fast friend, a man who had been with him through many vicissitudes and trials, and had been faithful in the performance of his duty, now had a difference with Joseph, of which Joseph says:

I began to arrange and copy the revelations which we had received from time to time; in which I was assisted by John Whitmer, who now resided with me. Whilst thus (and otherwise at intervals) employed in the work appointed me, by my heavenly Father, I received a letter from Oliver Cowdery, the contents of which gave me both sorrow and uneasiness. Not having that letter now in my possession, I can not, of course, give it here in full, but merely an extract of the most prominent parts, which I can yet, and expect long to remember. He wrote to inform me that he had discovered an error in one of the commandments: . . "And truly one of the commandments: . . . "And truly manifested by their works that they had received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins."

You remember this statement in section 17 of Doctrine and Covenants as it reads to day. Oliver Cowdery said it was erroneous:

The above quotation, he said, was erroneous, and added, "I command you in the name of God to erase these words, that no priest-craft be amongst us!"

Let us look at this from the standpoint that Joseph and Oliver were concocting a fraud, and that this revelation was manufactured by them, and that it was done for the purpose of deceiving the people. What would Joseph have done in such a case as this? He would not have risked the friendship of his colleague for the sake of retaining that sentence in the revelation, or stood for it against the declaration of Oliver Cowdery, who said, "I demand that it be stricken out." He would have compromised, of course. Do you not think so? He is persecuted from without, his enemies are seeking his life. within a more severe trial is upon him for here comes his tried and true friend, and says, I demand a concession, that one sentence be taken out of a revelation. Joseph says, "No." He contended for that sentence, which, with the rest, he claims was revealed from on high, and it had to remain there and it is there to day. he have risked it under the circumstances for the sake of something he knew was a fraud? For the sake of that one sentence would he have risked that friendship, if he was wrong and he knew he was wrong? No man would have done it, he would have compromised with his colleague, if they had been colleagues in fraud. But he did not do it. Joseph says:

I immediately wrote to him in reply, in which I asked him by what authority he took upon him to command me to alter or erase, to add or diminish to or from a revelation or commandment from Almighty God. In a few days afterwards I visited him and Mr. Whitmer's family, where I found the family, in general, of his opinion concerning the words above quoted; and it was not with out both labor and perseverance that I could prevail with any of them to reason calmly on the subject.

Had this revelation been a fraud he could have made the erasure without detracting much from the document, and have avoided a rupture. Not only Oliver Cowdery, but the Whitmer family, his best friends were turned against him, and the prospect was that he would be alone, divested of every friend he had. But he said he real of a stone that he claimed was a seer soned with them and by and by Christian Whitmer got convinced that it was reasonable, and according to scripture, and, finally, with his assistance, I succeeded in bringing, not only the Whitmer family, but also Oliver Cowdery, to acknowledge they had been in error, and that the sentence in dispute was in accordance with the rest of the command-

There is something to be learned by that; it shows that Joseph was firm in his convictions and would sacrifice every friend he had rather than strike out that which he firmly believed was from God. There is another thought; notwithstanding Oliver Cowdery and Mr. Whitmer were wrong, it shows they were not moved by the dictation of Joseph, they were independent men. It dispels the thought of Joseph's leading them wherever he would. These men all seemed to be men of independent character and firm in the courage of their convictions. Could fraud exist in such company as that? We think not.

There is another circumstance that happened about that time. hardly credible to people that had never seen anything of the kind. They were going to a certain place, Joseph and some others, and the enemy were in waiting seeking to destroy him, and they prayed that they might be able to pass the enemy unmolested to meet with their brethren; and they went through the ranks of their enemy, and though they were acquainted with these men they did not recognize them. I say that is hardly credible to those who know nothing of the kind, but to those who do, strange as it may appear, they know it to be a fact. You will excuse me for being personal to night, but I will never forget an occurrence of that kind that happened to myself and Bro. George Montague when we were in Red River county, Texas, holding a debate, and the mob were excited and gathered together and threatened us day by day, and at the close of the debate they gathered together in the road, but notwithstanding this we took our satchels and walked along the road; we thought they saw us, we had no means of determining otherwise, but afterwards they went to hunt for us, and when they failed to find us they said they did not know how on earth we got through without being seen. Having passed through an instance of this kind it is very easy for me to believe something of the same character was possible with Joseph Smith.

Joseph now returns to the house of Mr. Peter Whitmer and makes his home there, and again, shortly after he removed to the house of Mr. Whitmer, Hiram Page, one of the eight witnesses, a son in law to Peter Whitmer, had found or obtained possession stone. He looked through the stone and saw things that he regarded as right. Joseph in writing of this says:

To our great grief, however, we soon found that Satan had been lying in wait to deceive, and seeking whom he might devour. Brother Hiram Page had got in his possession a certain stone, by which he had obtained to certain revelations, concerning the upbuilding of Zion, the order of the church, etc., etc., all of which were entirely at variance with the order of God's house, as laid down in the New Testament, as well as in our late revelations.

The Lord had prepared a means through the Urim and Thummim. Satan on the alert, as he always is, is counterfeiting the work of God and is making Hiram Page believe that through this stone he could tell about the redemption of Zion, but he tells it so it is at variance with the work of God, and the people who were with Hiram Page were in perfect harmony with the proceeding and accepted it, and again Joseph was in danger of losing some of his friends by contending against it. He says:

As a conference meeting had been appointed for the first day of September, I thought it wisdom not to do much more than to converse with the brethren on the subjet, until the conference should meet. Finning, however, that many, (especially the Whitmer family and Oliver Cowdery.) were believing much in the things set forth by this stone, we thought best to inquire of the Lord, concerning so important a matter.

Joseph received a communication in answer to this inquiry. That revelation said that the things received by Hiram Page were wrong and he was deceived. Finally the company were persuaded to accept the revelation received through Joseph, and the other message was rejected. I do not know what became of it, whether those revelations were ever preserved or not; we have not access to them at least, and I presume when the people became satisfied they were wrong they were destroyed. You can see some power was at work planning to make Joseph's friends leave him, and I believe that Joseph would never have risked the loss of his friends if it had been a fraud. He would have said "All right, take out this sentence, it is good enough without it." He would have done something for them if he had been engaged in a fraud with these men and they were agreed in trying to work a deception upon the people.

Still another trial comes to Joseph and Emma in this connection and if you will keep all these things in your minds you will see how sorely they were tried. The family of Isaac Hale had become reconciled after the first objection to the marriage, but now, when persecution became so violent, the Hale family also joined in the persecution and they told Joseph and Emma that their presence there would not be acceptable, or words to that effect, and she, like the true wife she was, went out from her father's house and followed the fortunes of her husband through all the vicissitudes through which he passed, through all the trials he endured in after years. Isolated from her family, not only from their presence but their affections as well, she stood by and followed this man whom she agreed to become the consort of, and made a glorious record, (I am not ashamed to say,) in connection with this latterday work, and it was appreciated by her husband as will appear from certain statements made in after years. In 1842 in passing through another great trial and affliction, when it became necessary for him to absent himself from the places where he might usually be found, he met this wife of his bosom upon the island between Montrose and Nauvoo where he had made an appointment to meet friends. She came to him and met him there and they had a conversation and conference together. Of this meeting he says:

How glorious were my feelings when I met that faithful and friendly band, on the night of the eleventh, on Thursday, on the island at the mouth of the slough, between Zarahemla and Nauvoo: [Zarahemla was as that time on this side of the river a little farther north than Montrose.] With what unspeak able delight and what transports of joy swelled my bosom, when I took by the hand, on that night, my beloved Emma—she that was my wife, even the wife of my youth, and the choice of my heart. Many were the revibrations of my mind when I contemplated for a moment the many scenes we had been called to pass through, the fatigues and the toils, the sorrows and sufferings, and the joys and consolations, from time to time, which had strewed our paths and crowned our board. Oh what a commingling of thought filled my mind for the moment, again she is here, even in the seventh trouble—undaunted, firm, and unwavering—unchangeable, affectionate Emma.

Here is the tribute paid to Emma by her husband after many years of faithful service together in this great cause that some would have us believe was a fraud, and these individuals were the causes of that fraud.

I want to call your attention to a few instances in the life of Emma, for the reason that she has been grossly misrepresented. Her enemies can not say too much against this woman simply because she would not accept of their assumption of authority. She was driven from Missouri when her husband lay in a dungeon, driven from her home in the winter of 1838 and 1839, and when she arrived at the banks of the Mississippi River she crossed on foot on the ice with one child in her arms and three others clinging to her skirts.

I want to give you a testimony in regard to her character from a man who afterwards joined in the persecution against her. Some reports had been circulated in regard to this woman, and Mr. John Taylor who was then editor of the Times and Seasons took this matter up and published in the paper the following; he says:

Suppose we say a word concerning the "prophet's wife," Mrs. Emma Smith; she honored her husband while living, and she will never knowingly dishonor his good name while his martyred blood mingles with mother earth!

Though this man was one of the party who afterwards joined in traducing her name, here is a testimony which occurs after the death of Joseph which will go down to history and he can not escape the responsibility of it. But we go back to New York, while these trials and persecutions were going on and Satan was trying to overthrow the work.

In the fall of 1830 a revelation was given commanding Oliver Cowdery. Parley P. Pratt, Ziba Peterson, and John Whitmer to take a mission to the West for the purpose of visiting the Indians. They took their departure shortly after the revelation was given and went most of the way on foot, visiting with a tribe of Indians at Buffalo, New York, and then went on to Kirtland, Ohio, where they stopped for a while, not because they had found Indians, but because Parley Pratt, one of the four, was an intimate acquaintance of Sidney Rigdon who resided near Kirtland, and he desired to see his friend and present this new found faith to him. So he called on Sidney Rigdon, who was a prominent minister in what was known as the Disciple Church, and presented the Book of Mormon. are told Mr. Rigdon objected to the book at first, but the testimony was so strong in its favor that he finally consented to investigate, and after a careful investigation he accepted the truth of the message, and became from that time a prominent defender of the work, and later occupied a prominent position in the church. I may not be able to finish this narrative, but I want to call your attention to a few points in regard to it. There was an effort made afterwards to connect Sidney Rigdon with the Book of Mormon, and to do this they trumped up the story that Rigdon had some connection with what is known as the Spalding Manuscript, and they said that Sidney Rigdon had stolen this manuscript from a printing office in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and after he had examined it he sent it to Joseph Smith, and out of the manuscript the Book of Mormon was made. You know more about this theory than I am able to tell you to-night. This story has been circulated from time to time, and has found its way into some of our encyclopedias and histories, where it has done great damage. You will never read in history where any attempt is made to prove it to be true, it is simply asserted that it was stolen by Sidney Rigdon and changed by him into the Book of Mormon. When public speakers have been called upon to prove that assertion they have totally failed to prove that Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith ever met before the publication of the Book of Mormon, that they ever were nearer each other during this time than when Joseph Smith was in western New York and Sidney Rigdon was in northern Ohio. Almost all of the time Sidney Rigdon is accounted for in public records and some of our enemies have come to the conclusion that they can not prove the Spalding story and have abandoned it, while others cling to it.

Mr. Rigdon knew nothing of Joseph Smith or the Book of Mormon until Parley Pratt brought it to him when he was residing in Mentor, Ohio, in the year 1830. There is about a fourth class lawyer in Salt Lake City who, having more cunning than logic. and more of the disposition of the buzzard than the dove, has tried to revise that old story. You have heard something of the missing link in the Darwinian Theory, and he undertakes to supply the missing link in the Spalding story theory. He says that link is Parley P. Pratt. He could not connect Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith, so he tells us that Parley Pratt was a friend of Sidney Rigdon's and they were associated in northern Ohio, and Pratt went back to New York and there he became acquainted with Joseph Smith, there the Book of Mormon was published and Pratt took it to Rigdon. The theory is that Rigdon stole the manuscript and sent it by Pratt to New York and Joseph and Pratt worked it up and thus the Book of Mormon was manufactured. That is the newest story and you will probably think it is a little more plausible than the old one, but it does not account for how Sidney Rigdon and Parley Pratt ever knew of that obscure boy up there in New York; how they got the information that he would be a suitable person for their scheme; or how they became acquainted with Joseph. It seems to me a strange thing that these men, both ministers of the gospel, would send the manuscript to an obscure boy and make him the leading character in the whole scheme. They never knew him but they trusted him and preferred him without being acquainted with him. This story is just as bad as the old one so far as dates are concerned, and dates are stubborn things.

In October, 1826, this young man Parley Pratt went to a place about thirty miles west of the city of Cleveland, Ohio; there he took some government land, and stayed there all the winter. In the spring of 1827 he made some improvements and then did like a great many other young men do, went back home to New York. Somebody lived there that was interesting him, and when he got back he got married, and he and his wife in October, 1827, went back to his place that he had been opening in the forest of Ohio, and there they stayed for several years. In 1829, mark the date, Sidney Rigdon came into the neighborhood where this family lived and began preaching the reformation then being promulged by A. Campbell, Rigdon, and others, and Pratt united with the movement and thus became a colaborer with Rigdon. In August, 1830, Parley and his wife again moved back to New York. Like a great many other young people do, they went back to the old home. They left in 1827 and got back to New York in August, 1830. According to the public records, Joseph Smith presented the title-page of the Book of Mormon in the office of the District Clerk of Northern New York on the 11th day of June, 1829; a little over a year before Parley Pratt got back to New York. Mr. Gilbert, who set the type of the Book of Mormon, says, "The manuscript was put in our hands in August, 1829, and all printed by March, 1830." Just a year before Parley got there the printers had it in their hands. It was all printed, Mr. Gilbert says, five months before Parley got back, so Mr. Schreder falls down on this as badly as Messrs. Howe and Hurlbut did on the original story. He has Parley coming to Joseph with the manuscript five months after it was in print. These dates are historical. This man has spent a great deal of time in research. I would have thought he would have discovered the discrepancy in the dates, for dates cut quite a figure in law, and this man is said to be a lawyer. I speak of this because you may know of the theory, and because it is a concession that the old theory is faulty and a revision necessary. Now we have something new, and the new theory is faulty also. I said in the beginning that Sidney Rigdon knew nothing of the Book of Mormon until his friend Parley Pratt called upon him at Mentor, Ohio, and presented him with the book, a few months after Parley Pratt had embraced the faith, and was baptized in September, 1830, in Seneca Lake, by Oliver Cowdery. These dates can be verified by history, and there is no history that contradicts it in a single particular. Take these matters into consideration and judge ye, what moved these men in their work. I will simply say as I go along that these men in the beginning of 1831, after their work in Kirtland and vicinity, moved on west, went on foot through the snows of winter, suffering all kinds of hardships for the sake of the message they bore, passed all civilization, into the Indian camps, and preached the gospel to the Indians. What could have been their motive, or could there have been any other motive than the motive of doing right. Parley P. Pratt says in regard to this:

In the beginning of 1831 we renewed our journey; and, passing through St. Louis and St. Charles, we traveled on foot for three hundred miles through vast prairies and through trackless wilds of snow—no beaten road; houses few and far between; and the bleak northwest wind always blowing in our faces with a keenness which would almost take the skin off the face. We traveled for whole days, from morning till night, without a house or fire, wading in snow to the knees at every step, and the cold so intense that the snow did not melt on the south side of the houses, even in the midday sun, for nearly six weeks. We carried on our backs our changes of clothing, several books, and corn bread and raw pork. We often eat [ate] our frozen bread and pork by the way, when the bread would be so frozen that we could not bite or penetrate any part of it but the outside crust.

All this to perpetrate a fraud upon the Indians! Do you believe that? Do you believe these men went away out there to perpetrate a fraud on these redskins, traveled 1,500 miles afoot all for that purpose? It seems to me if they wanted to perpetrate a fraud they would want to get some-thing out of it. Men do not perpetrate frauds without the prospect of obtaining something. They could not expect the Indians to give them any prestige with the white people. They did it only for the purpose that they believed they were doing right, and they believed they were divinely commissioned to preach the gospel unto the Indians.

Their experience with those Indians upon the frontier is too long for me to read to night. Finally the white people interfered. Some missionaries who had been out there among the Indians, and the government officers, interfered; they were afraid they were going to convert these Indians to their theory and then their avocation would be gone. So the work was not quite as successful among the Indians as it might have been, but while on the way to present the gospel to the Indians they went to Kirtland, Ohio, and began the work there; a work that will have its part in the history of the church and to which in the future we will pay more attention. I thank you for your attention and trust these things will engage your consideration, and that you will read the history more fully than I am able to tell it to you.

A comparison of the advantages and disadvantages of "The Small College and the Large" is made in the November Forum by President C. F. Thwing, of Western Reserve University. He holds that each of these types has its place in the educational equipment of the present day. "To ask which is superior is like asking whether one prefers purple or golden sunsets."

POINTS ON THE WAY OF TRAVEL. _NO. 3.

BY E. L. KELLEY.

My last notes were from the city of Dublin, capital of Ireland, important seat of the Romish Church in Britain, and chief city in moulding the manners and customs of the southern half of the island. It is situated on the river Liffey, in the midst of a fine fertile valley, and, but for the valley to the west, encircled at no great distance by lofty hills and the sea, the latter being easily seen a few miles toward the east. It is fairly well built up, and in many ways more advanced in the improvements of the age than many of the cities on the English coast.

Phœnix Park is finely located and There are a extensively improved. few broad streets, but usually they are narrow and little interesting.

Dublin has many natural advantages, but notwithstanding these, it does not seem to have benefited from them in such a way as to lead its great Protestant rival in the north, Belfast. The latter city, in trade and manufacturing interests, is outstripping the capital city, and the push and energy displayed by its people in all departments of business will soon make it the metropolis, unless Dublin shall awake to the possibilities of the future and strike a different pace to that of the past.

Besides the commercial rivalry between the two cities there are interesting contests in politics and religion. Belfast is Protestant and is determined that Dublin and its policies shall not obtain in the north. To show the stubbornness of this contest I quote from memory a statement made in a leading editorial in one of the Belfast daily papers the morning after our arrival there:

Even should home rule for Ireland be granted by the government, we would not accept it, and would fight before we would consent to it.

With such strong views against "home rule," as it is termed, by a strong minority party in Ireland, it is not wonderful that little or nothing should have been done for the island during the past century. The parliament which grants the demands of the majority of the Irish members will not only incur the displeasure of Protestant England, but will at once be in open warfare with their Protestant brethren in Ireland. openly claimed that priestcraft and priestly domination in the island, has been the greatest foe to Irish progress and Irish liberty, and my observations confirm the correctness of the position.

The people of Ireland have fine natural gifts; they are intelligent and quick to observe; open and frank of manner, and full hearted in neigh-borly and social ways; and I am inclined to the opinion from what I have seen and heard, that the jolly "wakes," the cunning trickery, and the petty meanness which enters into the reputation of so large a portion of the people, comes more from miseducation and wrong tutelage than from blood and lineal descent.

The way to free Ireland is to strike off the shackles of priestcraft and religious proscription, so the people may open and read the Bible for themselves, and learn the truth, and the truth will make them free. If they are freed in this way, then, in the language of the Man of Galilee,

"They shall be free indeed."

The people of Belfast and Dublin speak better English than is usually heard in England and Scotland, and the statement is quite common in England, that the best English is spoken in Dublin and Edinburg of any places in the world. While this is doubtless an over statement of the facts, yet it is evidently better than many other parts of Britain.

From Dublin we passed down the celebrated Liffey to the sea, and hoped that the four hours ride ahead of us would be of the pleasantest. wind was blowing quite briskly, however, and when we got fairly outside, the Irish sea, true to its long reputation, seemed to be having a jolly, rollicking time. Mrs. Kelley was doing finely as a seaman, and I was surprised to see her make such a goodly battle, despite the tossing of the ship, walking the deck and watching the dashing waves. Finally, while we were standing well forward on the vessel, a shower of spray seemed to leap from the waters and dash toward us, just managing to give us a warning sprinkle. I suggested that we move to the leeward side of the cabin. "Oh, we can get out of the way." came the response. But scarcely had the words been uttered when a wave dashed into our faces, wetting us from head to foot. Fortunately we had wraps and overcoat already on, but before we could go into the cabin below and change and return, our sailor qualities were greatly impaired, and it was but a short time till old Neptune was master of the situation. In one hour I saw more contributions to the briny deep by the boat's passengers, than during the entire voyage across the Atlantic. We reached the pier at Holyhead, England, in due time, however, and were soon on the way to Manchester. On the road my traveling companion incidentally remarked, that "the next vessel I go aboard of will have its prow turned toward America."

I had one day of rest at Manchester, and then proceeded to Leeds, where appointments were already out for a few days of meetings. At Leeds I was entertained by Bro. Henry Sharp, our blind brother in that place. Walker, who had charge, I also found to be a very kind and worthy English lady, and if I had any misgivings as to a hospitable home for a few days, they were entirely removed when Mrs. Walker said to me: "You will not be any trouble to me in the least; while I do not belong to your church I feel that it is my duty to help you all I can, and I am glad of the opportunity." And I was quite content to fall into such kindly care as Mrs. Walker was ever watchful to give. Bro. Sharp is a good, worthy Latter Day Saint, and this is commendation enough for any one. It means that he is industrious in serving the Lord; upright and honest in his deal and association with others, tolerant in his views to others, and a lover of the truth himself; not bigoted nor high minded, but given to meekness, and ready to exchange views with all whom he meets; not a brawler, nor a busybody, but quiet and faithful in work, and courageous in the discharge of duty. In few words,-a follower of the Lord.

There are two branches of the church in Leeds. One is presided over by Bro. Walter Aveyard, the other by Bro. Tom Roberts. Neither branch has such suitable place of worship as the city of Leeds should have. The meeting places are too hard to find, and too difficult to enter after they are found. The gospel work deserves a prominent place before the people. But our meetings at both places were quite enjoyable, and I found many good, worthy young people in Leeds, who are willing to work. Also visited and dined with Brn. William Rudd and wife, Elijah Abbott and family, W. R. Armstrong and father and sister, and in company with Brn. Sharp and Austin visited Roundbay Park, the pride of the city. Also made a visit to the old Kirkstall Abbey, and was greatly interested gleaning the work and uses of such an institution as an Abbey. Kirkstall Abbey was founded by Henri de Laci in the year 1147, and in the year 1152 the monks of Barnoldswick of the Cistercian order, proceeded to occupy and build further. It is in Norman style of architecture, and originally supported three hundred monks and workmen. In the building of it, the workmen received one penny a day and board. They had no families and could not leave the premises, but with the monks were kept under the closest surveillance. The monks were not permitted to speak to each other or hold any communication whatever, except in the conversation parlor, and then by signs and not spoken words. When they retired at night the stairway, which formed a kind of drawbridge, was drawn up, and no one could get out till morning. The whole government seemed to be upon the plan that it would be impossible for them to organize any opposition against their surroundings, and to continue the will of the Abbot supreme. The Abbot was a person of about the same authority as the present Bishops of the Romish Church, and had the influence of a seat in Parliament by virtue of his office. The square around which was located the Cloisters, was 115 by 143 feet. It was claimed that the twelfth century house was the best preserved specimen in Britain. It had the Herring fireback-Saxon style-and one Fishback window, only five of which remain in England.

2. Jail and exercise space.

3. Mortuary or dead house; stone table in center and stone seats around the wall.

4. Conversation parlor—communication by signs in presence of othersthis was a silent community.

5. Chapter house, where all laws were made and enforced.

6. Dining rooms and kitchens.

7. Squint room. This was adjoining the reading room, with an opening so arranged that the Abbot could peep in and see the monks and see what they were doing, but they could not observe him.

8. Sacristy or vestry.

9. Apartments for workmen.

10. Main chapel; the room arranged in the form of a cross with an extreme width of 118 feet, and extreme length of 226 feet, with a small chapel each side of the high altar. One of the special things in this chapel, was the places cut in the stone pillars to permit the erection of screens which were placed in the chapel in the fourteenth century, and females were permitted to stand behind these screens four times a year and listen. This was the first admission of women to worship in the monasteries of Europe, so my guide claimed; and he con-tended that it applied to all churches of the Roman Catholics. I thought, No wonder it was a dark age that preceded; and if the women had not been let in, it would have been dark yet. This Abbey was finally broken up by Henry VIII. of England. Bad blood arose between this king and the papacy, because the latter refused to divorce the king from Catherine of Aragon, and permit him to marry Anne Boleyn. The pope, of course, was in a close place. Catherine was a sister of the Emperor of Germany, and to grant the divorce meant war with Germany. He refused. Henry VIII. took his own course, and between the years 1539 and 1540, in Britain, demolished 643 monasteries, 90 colleges, 2, 374 churches and chapels, and 110 hospitals. It brought before the magistrate and as this did more to influence the development of the succeeding centuries than was ever effected by Alexander's success at the Granicus, or Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo, upon the ages ensuing the events.

Exploring monasterial life may not be as interesting to the reader as to the writer, however, and I take my leave of the city of Leeds, and proceed to Clay Cross, Derbyshire, where appointments had been arranged for me by Bro. S. Platts, president of the Sheffield district. We first met in Clay Cross, the president of the branch, Bro. Joseph Naylor, and family. They are worthy Saints and are striving to extend the gospel work. Our home was with Bro. William Holmes. entirely enjoyable and devoted Saints. Also met and visited with most of the Saints at their homes. Bro. Harry Holmes and wife, the latter, Mrs. Carrie Holmes, the Clay Cross agent for the HERALD Office; Bro. and Sr. Charles Cousins; Bro. Cousins has spent some little time in America. Was also very much interested in a number of the younger Saints at Clay Cross, and would have been glad to to have continued the meeting for a week or two, had time for this kind of work permitted.

Bro. Simon Holmes took me a fine ride through the beautiful valley and to the top of Ashover Hill, where an excellent view of some of England's most rugged country is furnished. This was on the 13th of September, but the blackberries were just good and ripe and seemed very plentiful. The first part of the month I had noticed blackberries just ripening in Ireland, and some in full bloom, and the wild running branches peeping out about the fences everywhere. The berry is not quite so large as in the States, but was enjoyable to the traveler. Bro. Holmes notified me that the berries continued, plentifully, until late in October, but that they were not good after St. Michaelmas day, the 11th October. On that day old Satan sets his foot on the berries, and they are not to be eaten.

The Derby people have a fund of stories that are as interesting as the myths of Greece and Rome. One of the greatest fatalities that can happen to a family, is to "move the parsley in the garden." Some hideous thing is sure to occur. Sister Joseph Naylor is a good witness to this. Bro. Naylor moved the parsley one day, and a day or two after he got hurt and could not work any for nearly a year. Bro. Simon Holmes showed me the place where a great judgment fell upon a woman who told a lie. The lady had stolen a "tuppence" from a little boy. She denied having taken the pennies. But she was seems to me that such a mailed hand | there she still denied taking the pennies. Finally she said, "If I am lying about it let the earth open and swallow me up." And immediately the earth opened and swallowed her, and they never saw her any more. Well, it is fair to presume that this put a stop to the boys and girls lying in Derbyshire, and that whatever a Derby citizen tells you is entirely reliable.

The Saints in Clay Cross have a new brick chapel with a seating capacity of about two hundred persons and which cost them sixteen hundred and fifty dollars. There is a goodly demand for work in Clay Cross, and if an elder will go there and abide; as the Master bids to do, and will patiently labor,-first sow the good seed of the kingdom and then patiently cultivate and wait for the time of the maturing of the crop, -he will reap a goodly harvest. But we ought not to expect to plant one day and reap the next. If a crop is reaped before the time, the grain is of but little account. And this is true in the harvest work of the Lord. The Savior taught that the seed which sprang up at once soon withered and died, and our ministry can afford to wait for results. What if no baptisms do take place for one year, or two? Can that be said to indicate that there are no worthy people of the Lord in the place? Not at all. It may, on the contrary, show that there are some most worthy ones. who take time to consider and prayerfully weigh matters before accepting. These are properly the result of a goodly soil. Let the missionary be diligent in sowing and planting; no crop can be had without this, and after all, it is only God who can give the increase. So may the way open for the telling of the gospel story and the conversion of many to the truth in Clay Cross.

I arrived in Sheffield on the 14th of September, and soon my attention was attracted by the din and clamor of bells, the ringing and the tolling breaking forth from every part of great manufacturing this city. Hastily making my way into the central portion, I noticed that the flags hung at half-mast, and everywhere the Stars and Stripes were displayed, alongside the Union Jack. This revealed the entire story. News had been received of the death of President McKinley, and the people of England were stirred as never before at the death of a foreign ruler. The news was truly sad to an American in a foreign land; and doubtless my feelings were, despite my efforts to the contrary, fully betrayed in my countenance; for upon entering a tram to cross to my stopping place while in the city, I noticed that soon most every eye was upon me, and when the collector entered for the fare and asked to what part of the city I wanted to go, two English ladies, who had heard me make inquiry upon entering the car, quickly answered for me, as though to relieve me from the reply. I heartily thanked them, and although the incident was but a small one, yet involuntarily I felt that Britain's daughters were dearer to me than ever before. And I thought, that if in the death of our chief magistrate a closer tie had been drawn between the peoples of the world, the terrible deed of the assassin had also sent a bullet into anarch. ism, which cause he had thought to advance by the destruction of law and order. Twenty four hours had not elapsed before we had the news, from around the world, deprecating the cowardly assault, and fully indicating that in his death the President had strengthened the bonds of order and good government for which he had so manfully contended in his useful life. So anarchism made the failure. Our stay at Sheffield was made pleasant by the hospitable entertainment of Bro. and Sr. John Austin. Two meetings upon the Sabbath, and attended the Sabbath-school in the afternoon. Trust the Lord may bless the efforts of the brethren and advance the work in Sheffield. Bro. S. Platts, the president of the district, was present and assisted in the Sabbath-school work.

On the 18th, met with the Saints at Wigan and enjoyed the services, as also the visit with the Saints. Bro. James Spargo is president of the branch at Wigan and anxious with others to see the work move forward.

On the 20th I began my first journey to Wales. Passing from Manchester south, a fine, picturesque country is traveled over before reaching the objective town, Llanelly. The mountain scenery of Wales is delightful, and its queer little villages odd enough to greatly interest the traveler. At the station in Llanelly I met with Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths, who had been laboring in the south of Britain while I was north. We met with a number of excellent Saints here and were pleasantly provided for by Bro. and Sr. Davis. The conference was opened on the evening of the 21st, and the attendance and interest seemed to surprise, in a measure, Bro. Griffiths, as he expressed himself as more than pleased with the prospects. Bro. Bishop, the president of the district, did not arrive till next morning, owing to business matters, but the conference work proceeded, and by Sunday evening the business had been transacted and two preaching services and one social or Saints meeting held. Brethren were also present from the Eastern district and aided in the conference work, and all seemed determined to strive to advance the cause of Christ.

The following evening I preached in Cardiff and enjoyed the hospitable home of Bro. Thomas Gould, the Bishop's agent for South Wales. Bro. Gould is also presiding over the branch in Cardiff and striving to perform his duty. The meeting was pleasant, and it would have been pleasant to have tarried longer, but work otherwise prevented.

On the 24th I started for Penzance in southwest England, 250 miles distant by rail. This route was through Bristol via the seven mile tunnel that passes under the river Severn. During the day we passed the rich hills containing the porcelain clay, or kaolin, from which so much of our china, and china stoneware is made. The kaolin is white and sufficiently soft so that it is easily dug with the spade, and hundreds of tons of it were distributed along the railway in the warehouses and cars awaiting shipment to the north. Penzance is in the county of Cornwall, a part of Britain historic in Phoenician and Roman history, and noted in early times for its fish, tin, and copper. This whole peninsula of southwest England consists of elevated, rocky hills of greatheight standing as promontories to the sea in every direction. They seem to be formed of granite rock literally pushed up from beneath the ocean's bed. The decomposition of the feldspar, one of the chief ingredients of the granite, produces the kaolin, or porcelain clay.

Cornwall, so far as history shows, was first explored by the Ibernians of Spain, who furnished the Phœnicians and traders of the east with tin, and it is claimed by some, that the tin for Solomon's temple was dug in this The Romans took possession of the shire at an early time, and remains still exist of their work. The elevated pile of stones standing in Mount Bay, and now known as St. Michaels Mount, is well described by Diodorus Seculus, who wrote of it 9 years before the beginning of the Christian era. The mount rises 195 feet high from the waters of the bay and is 1,680 feet distant from Marazion Cliff, the place where it is claimed the tin was mined to aid in adorning the temple of Mount Zion, Jerusalem.

In journeying to Penzance we pass through Plymouth, England, in incidents closely related in the past with our Plymouth of New England. fine view is to be had here also, of the harbor, upon which rested, as the drifting swan, a section of England's renowned navy. Vessel after vessel of various styles and patterns lay at anchor here, bristling with armor, awaiting the orders of the new ruler, King Edward VII.

On the following day I attended to upon Cape Cornwall, which extends out into the sea, a chief mark, but sufficiently elevated to make it diffi-cult for the foe of England to ever effect a landing. The cape, with one exception, is the nearest land to America of England's isle.

By riding all night I was able to reach London on the morning of the 26th of September, and finishing, to an extent, one part of my work in England. Have met in some measure with the discouraging side of things, and found much that gives encourage. ment and further disposition to perform faithful labor. I have been grateful, too, in passing over the field to find the lasting monuments of good which have been erected by the faithful missionaries sent out by the Reorganization from the first. It seems quite true that each is remembered by some special good that he has done, and my observations have confirmed the thought that there is no richer. field than that of the true missionary in which to plant monuments of everlasting worth.

Of the late missionaries sent by the church, Bro. James Caffall has left a lasting name as an industrious worker and an excellent preacher. Bro. F. G. Pitt was an earnest worker and teacher, and the Saints would be glad to see him back Bro. Heman C. Smith did not have so long time in the mission, but he is known by his able and forcible sermons for good. Bro. William Newton and the late Bro. A. N. Bishop are spoken of as faithful, diligent workers. Not a few speak of the preaching of Bro. Gillen as having been of great good to them. Some mistakes have been made. These were because of weakness of the parties and not of the work. When we came to examine the public work of the missionaries from the first, it is in harmony with the truth, and this confirms us in the divinity of the work and the divineness of the mission. We should elevate the good and not stumble over the weaknesses, if any, displayed in their private lives. Those who have shown these, doubtless, are much more chagrined and ashamed thereby, than others can well be, and they must also render the final account therefor. would no doubt be a fine thing, if the Lord in directing the missionary appointments would select men who were perfect in every way and who could betray no weak spots in their nature whatever. But a friend suggests: "We ought not to expect that, because there are none so perfect as to be without faults." Then why should Saints stumble and lose faith if an occasional error, or even display of the nature of old Adam, is manifested? It is very unreasonable to always expect the perfect in things some business in St. Just, and stood pertaining to the gospel work and those who bear the message, and at the same time say that no one is with. out fault. If there have been errors and evil-doings, let us be humble, and watch lest we are found in similar paths, and diligently labor, exercising implicit faith and confidence in God, if we can not in humanity. Our work is to think and speak of the good, and to refuse to be made an instrument in the hands of Satan to publish the follies of our brethren caused in great part by the evil one's own deception. lest our own condemnation be found within the same law that our weak brother has been tried by and found wanting. It devolves upon all to be consistent and honest and fair.

Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths has a memorial in his past labors, and a fine opportunity now for strengthening the lines, and this can only be accomplished by constant and patient labor in the work he has been called to perform.

When in London on a former visit, we visited a few of the special places of interest in the world's metropolis, but concluded that an attempt to set them out to the reader would require too much time and labor. The British Museum was very attractive in rich collections of ancient and modern peoples and of all countries. material gathered is simply immense, and no sketch of a few hours could unfold it to the reader. Among the antiquarian relics in the American section I noticed the following:

1. Bronze axe heads and hatchets from state of Oaxaca, district of Ejulla.

2. Embossed disc of copper about one foot in diameter, from ancient works, Ecuador.

3. Stone mold for making small gold figures, from New Granada.

- 4. Interesting copper figure three inches long, in case "D," found in New Granada.
- 5. Bronze figure of a shark from Choco, Colombia. Case "D."
- 6. Copper figure in shape of breastplate, measuring five or six inches each way, taken from ancient grave, Colombia.

7. Skull from Peru, case "F," with teeth ornamented with gold, and showing the finest dental work, with jets of gold set in each front tooth.

8. Silver figure playing the Pandean pipes. Also copper and gold figures in same case.

9. Balances for weighing, the beam made of bone and skilfully ornamented. From Lima, Peru.

10. Bronze disc and two axes from Peru. The disc eight inches in diameter; axes eight and fifteen inches long respectively, and two and one half inches broad, and ornamented at the head.

11. Case "A," Ohio, U. S. A., copper spears.

12. In the Asiatic department, the "Sacred book"—Sikh religion.

13. Grants of Indian lands, as early as the eleventh century, written on plates, or leaves, made of brass or copper, and fastened together with metal rings at the back, in the form of a book; thus permitting the leaves to be turned backward or forward at leisure. The books were from one to two inches in thickness, six to seven inches broad, and eight to ten inches

14. Stele with Phœnician inscription, set up by Arish, and extending back to time of Yathan, son of Azor.

The question as to whether the ancient Americans understood the uses of metals is fully answered in the affirmative by the evidence shown in the British Museum.

On my second visit to London I found a half day to visit Hyde Park, and had a view of the Albert Memorial, a monument that would do credit to any age or any people. At the former visit we had been to the Exchange, Guild Hall, the National Art Gallery. the Tower of London, Westminster Abbey, Madam Tussaud's, and Windsor Castle, the latter the most interesting of all to the writer, and I had thought to extend my notes on same for the benefit of the reader, but time and conveniences have not been in keeping with the thought. This time I visited Kensington Palace and will give a short outline of that.
